Though Tri-Legends did not sue under the title insurance policy itself, instead relying on the commitment, we see no reason to distinguish McDaniel on that basis when a title commitment, in fact, is nothing more than a document used by a title insurance company as a precursor to the issuance of the title insurance policy itself. for failing to record a deed. Further, a private party does not have a right to sue for a violation of a statutory duty. For example, by statute, "[n]o policy or contract of title insurance shall be written unless ...there has been made a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound title underwriting practices... ."[204] However, a court found that the statute does not create a private cause of action.[205]

Texas recognizes a cause of action for "active" or "affirmative" misrepresentation of the state of the insured title.[206] A simple omission is not an affirmative misrepresentation.[207] For example, when the insurer correctly vested title, the fact that another insurer issued a commitment showing title vested in another party did not make the first insurer's commitment a misrepresentation.[208] Rather, what is required is some positive statement in the commitment that is not true.[209] Under the "active" misrepresentation of title theory, two decisions have applied §552 of the Second Restatement of Torts as a standard.[210] The courts have adopted the Restatement concept that there can be liability to parties who are not in privity but who would foreseeably rely upon the misrepresentation.[211] There is a two-year statute of limitations on such actions.[212]

An insurer or title agent may be liable under the state Deceptive Trade Practices Act[213] (the DTPA) for an affirmative misrepresentation that a title defect does not exist.[214] The lack of an exception for a matter affecting title is not an affirmative misrepresentation under the act, however.[215] The title insurance policy is not an affirmative representation to the insureds of "good and indefeasible title." Thus, there was no misrepresentation when a policy was issued even though the insureds' deed had not been recorded.[216] An insurer was found to have liability under a State Board of Insurance rule requiring that restrictions be reported in a certain fashion, but changes in the promulgated policy forms have since negated that theory of liability.[217]

Utah has rejected the notion that a title insurer may be sued for abstractor error in the issuance of a title insurance policy.[218] There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search

[217] In First Title Co. of Waco v. Garrett, 802 S.W.2d 254 (Tex.App.-Waco 1990), an insurer was held liable under the insurance regulations for improperly reporting a recorded restriction. The court reasoned: "Ordinarily, a title insurance company does not owe a duty to the insured to discover and disclose a title defect. Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Cheatham, 764 S.W.2d 315, 319 (Tex.App.-Texarkana 1988), writ denied. However, Rule P-4 of the State Board of Insurance's rules requires a title insurer to list all restrictive covenants and where they are recorded or to affirmatively state that there are 'None of Record.' State Board of Insurance, 28 TEX.ADMIN.CODE § 9 (West 1989) (Title Insurance). This requirement places a duty on the insurer to discover and disclose restrictive covenants, and creates an exception to the general rule of no duty to disclose. … Alamo Title owed and breached a duty to the Garretts to discover and disclose the restrictive covenant." Garrett did not respect the precedent it cited stating that an insurer has no separate duty to disclose. Virginia

A circuit court has held that there is no tort liability in Virginia. In Layman v. Friedlander,[222] an insured sued a title insurer and its agent in tort for breaching an alleged duty to search title "skillfully, carefully, diligently, and in a workmanlike manner." He cited a case against an accountant as support. The court found no such duty, calling the claim "a breathtaking misstatement of the law." It also noted that Virginia follows the economic loss doctrine, which says that when there is a contract, and the plaintiff's only loss is money, the "plaintiff is relegated to his action in contract and a negligence action is not available." The insured also relied on Va. Code § 38.2-4601.1, a section of the Virginia title insurance law, as supporting his "duty to search" tort action. The court disagreed:

> The argument is baseless. First, the statute does not purport to create duties at all, rather by its plain language, it purports to define what "a title agency or agent" means. Second, that definition plainly does not apply to a title insurer such as First American, but rather it purports to apply to one who might serve First American as a

P.3d 1041 (Utah 2004), the insured argued that the policy made a representation of law that a road was not public by the way in which an exception was worded. The court disagreed: "Unlike in Culp, where the title insurance company assumed a role separate and apart from the issuance of the title insurance commitment and policy [as escrowee], … Commonwealth has not assumed any additional role and did not act as an abstractor. Thus, Commonwealth is held to the standard of care of an ordinary title insurance company and is liable only under the principles of contract." Professor Palomar cites Christenson v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 666 P.2d 302 (Utah 1983), for the proposition that the issuance of a title insurance policy "do not alone impose a duty" to conduct a reasonable search and examination of title, but that a title insurance company "can assume that duty expressly or impliedly." Joyce Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 12:3, footnote 8, p. 1048. Christensen, however, held only that a company hired to disburse a construction loan had a duty to the contractor not to misrepresent facts to it, even though there was no privity of contract with the workman. In Marcantel v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2017 WL 5991734 (D. Utah 2017) (unpublished), the court held that a title agent did not assume a separate contractual duty to search and abstract title by discussing a sewer easement with the proposed insured; therefore, the court dismissed the thinly-disguised abstractor negligence claim against the agent.

> title agency or agent. Third, there is no suggestion that what Plaintiffs contend are duties are duties that by operation of law are written into all insurance policies.[223]

One commentator cites Marandino v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.[224] as having found a duty in contract or tort to make a reasonable search and disclosure.[225] The case does state that the insurer should have discovered an ordinance affecting the dimensions of the property.[226] The case involved a claim on a policy, however, and it did not establish a search-duty cause of action in tort or contract.

Washington

In 2002, the Washington Supreme Court held in Barstad v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.[227] that Washington's statute defining the nature of a title insurance policy precludes a tort or abstractor liability claim premised on a title insurance policy.[228]

Before Barstad, the Supreme Court had issued a series of decisions in which it declined to

In Courchaine v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 6522442 (Wash.App. Div. 3) (unpublished), the court held that the modified title insurance statute also barred a claim premised on the Washington Consumer Protection Act for the failure to except a recorded easement. In Shepard v. Holmes, 185 Wash.App. 730, 345 P.3d 786 (Wash.App. Div. 3 2014), the court held that the statute of limitations for claims based on negligent misrepresentation of title and under the Consumer Protection Act began running when the policy was issued. In that case, however, the insured did not sue the insurer for the claimed failure to disclose a recorded instrument, but rather asserted that the policy represented an attached map as being accurate, despite a disclaimer in the policy. The Shepard court did not decide the issue of whether or not such a claim is viable. In Eleazer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1137215 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the court held that a title company serving as escrowee has no duty to search title or disclose a recorded easement, absent a separate title search contract.

[228] "In applying RCW 48.29.010 retroactively, we side with the narrow majority of state courts in the Ninth Circuit that have held that title insurance companies have no general disclosure duty in preliminary commitments. Among Ninth Circuit states, California, Oregon, Idaho and Nevada [footnotes omitted], have all held that there is no general duty to disclose title defects in preliminary commitments. ...Of these states California is notable because it enacted a statute similar to RCW 48.29.010 clarifying the duties associated with preliminary commitments. ...The California statute clarified the duties associated with an abstractor as contrasted with a title insurer who issues a preliminary report. ...Many states outside the Ninth Circuit have also held that an insurance company does not have a general duty to disclose."

reach the question of whether or not a title insurer is liable for abstractor liability.[229] In a 2002 unpublished decision, a Washington appeals court found that a title insurer failed to conduct a reasonable search of the title.[230] In finding such a duty, the court relied on the statement in the 1976 appeals court decision in Shotwell v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. that "a policyholder has a reasonable expectation that he will be advised of the specific impediments upon his land as revealed by a reasonable search… ."[231] In fact, the Washington Supreme Court had declined to find an abstractor search duty in Shotwell, stating "we find it unnecessary to reach the issue of whether a 'duty to search and specifically disclose' exists." Then, in 1997, the legislature adopted a title insurance act defining some title products, similar to the California statute, that says that "[a]n abstract of title is not a title policy," and a title commitment is a statement of the terms of the policy to be issued, but not "a representation as to the condition of the title."[232] Even before the abstractor liability issue was resolved, Washington courts had ruled that a title insurer could not be sued for the alleged duty to disclose as an exception a recorded instrument on a subject that was excluded from policy coverage.[233]

Wisconsin

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that the only liability assumed by the insurer in the issuance of a title insurance policy is to indemnify the insured for any covered matter. A title insurer is not obligated to search and examine title, and tort claims for negligent failure to search or examine title are barred.[234]

Wyoming

The insurer is not liable in tort for failing to make exception for a title defect in a title insurance commitment or policy.[235] There is a statutory duty to issue a title insurance policy based on adequate evidence of the current condition of title. That statute does not create a private cause of action or a tort duty.[236]

15.13 Abstracts And Title Searches

Title insurers and agents also issue various forms of non-insurance title information products. These serve many different purposes, and are known by a variety of names, including searches, abstracts, guarantees, letters, opinions, letter reports, title reports, litigation reports, and special reports. Some such products have a "look and feel" similar to that of a title insurance contract, but they are not insurance policies.[237] constitute an independent undertaking by the insurer to search the title for the benefit of the insured. Rather, the title commitment "generally constitutes no more than a statement of the terms and conditions upon which the insurer is willing to issue its title policy… . Any search done by an insurer in preparation for preparing a title commitment is done to protect itself in deciding whether to insure the property and to protect against losses covered in the policy." 492 N.W.2d at 151. Greenberg was followed in *Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. [235] In Hulse v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 WY 95, 33 P.3d 122 (Wyo. 2001), reh.den, the Supreme Court ruled that state statutes precluded a ruling that a title commitment is an abstract on which the issuer may be sued in tort. Wyoming has a statutory definition of a title insurance commitment, also called a "report" in the law. A commitment: "constitutes a statement of the terms and conditions upon which the insurer is willing to issue its policy but is not a title policy. Neither a title policy nor a report issued prior to the issuance of a title insurance policy is an abstract of title." After analyzing cases from other states falling on either side of the issue, the court said "the better analysis in determining whether to establish a title insurer's tort duty for reasonable search and disclosure recognizes that the relationship between the insured and the title insurance company is essentially contractual." Hulse was affirmed in Sonnett v. First American Title Ins. Co., 309 P.3d 799, 2013 WY 106 (Wyo. 2013).

[236] "Wyoming's underwriting standard statute § 26-23-308(a) (LexisNexis 2001) merely provides that '[n]o title insurance policy as to property in this state shall be written unless it is based upon adequate evidence of the current condition of title certified in writing as of the date of the policy... .' Even were we somehow to find that this statutory language imposed a duty on insurers to reasonably search the public record and disclose their findings, Wyoming Statute § 26-23-334(b) (LexisNexis 2001) precludes us from creating a private cause of action on this basis when it expressly states, '[t]his article is enforceable only by the commissioner and shall not create any private cause of action or other private legal recourse.'" Hulse v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 WY 95, 33 P.3d 122 (Wyo. 2001), reh.den.

[237] In United States v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 405 F.Supp. 1312 (W.D.Ark. 1975), a Certificate of Title issued to the United States government was held to be a title insurance policy, at least for purposes of applying the relevant statute of limitations. The court relied on Real Estate Title Ins. Co. v. District of Columbia, 82 U.S.App.D.C. 170, 161 F.2d 887 (D.C.Cir. 1947). That case ruled that revenues from the sale of Certificates of Title were taxable as premiums. The court classified the Certificates as insurance because the primary difference between the two products was that the insurance policy "guaranteed" title, while the Certificate "certified" title. The court reasoned, however, that if a defect existed, the insurer would indemnify under either product. In Kondaur Capital Corp. v. Fidelity Nat. Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 1908018 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), the court found the issuer of a Trustee's Sale Guarantee not to

Except the abstract, a full discussion of which is beyond the scope of this text, these products have spawned relatively few reported decisions and almost no scholarly comment.[238] The three principal issues are who may claim injury against the abstractor for a mistake in the report, and under what theory of recovery; whether or not an exculpatory clause or limitation of liability is enforceable; and what responsibility, if any, does the title searcher have to a party which uses the search to examine title and issue a policy? These issues are addressed below, in that order.

15.13.1 Parties To Whom Abstractor May Be Liable

An abstract of title is a contract, and privity has traditionally been essential to a suit for breach of that contract.[239] Many jurisdictions still hold to this view.[240] However, some courts have elected to view an error in the abstract as creating a cause of action in negligence. Under this analysis, the class of persons who may sue the abstractor is broadened to include parties who may be foreseen to reasonably rely on the abstract.[241] This approach was adopted in the landmark case of Williams v. Polgar,[242] a case of first impression in Michigan:

> Since we write on a clean slate we are free to reject traditional rule and hold that a person who is not in privity may maintain an action against an abstractor. One of the reasons given for the privity requirement is that one who is not in privity of contract should not be allowed to maintain an action on this contract. The answer to this argument is simple. This is not an action in contract, it is an action in tort. It is certainly established that a breach of contract can also be a tort and this is true of the faulty preparation of an abstract. be liable when the claimed error was a search of the "wrong" parcel. The search was of the same parcel described in the deed of trust on which the trustee's sale would be held.

For example, Ohio, has not relaxed the privity requirement. In Davis v. Montenery, 2007-Ohio-6221, 173 Ohio App.3d 740, 880 N.E.2d 488 (Ohio App. 7 Dist. 2007), a buyer was denied recovery against a title abstractor who did a search for the buyer's lender.

> Keeping in mind that this is a tort action the question is not whether or not we can find privity, but rather, it is a question of whether a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee is a member of the class to which the abstractor owes a duty. We believe that they are members of such a class. The difference between one who is in privity of contract and a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee is that the former may elect to proceed in either contract or tort while the latter is limited to a tort action.[243]

Some jurisdictions permit suit against an abstractor or title searcher based either on contract or tort.[244]

Williams v. Polgar found the negligence cause of action grounded in §552 of the Restatement of Torts, concerning misrepresentation by "one who in the course of his business or profession supplies information for the guidance of others in their business transactions." Section 552 has been applied in other jurisdictions also.[245] See a complete discussion of the Restatement above, at §15.7.

Jurisdictions that have relaxed the requirement of privity have done so in varying degrees.[246] Williams v. Polgar adopted the view that any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee might foreseeably rely on an abstract, and therefore would have a right to sue for negligence. Other states limit liability to claimants whom the abstractor knew would rely on the abstract at the time it was prepared.[247]

[246] In McCrea v. Commerce Title Co., 2009 WL 2183476 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished), when a title search was produced for a buyer that missed some liens, and the buyer settled the lien issue with the seller whose liens were missed, the court found that the buyer's attempted assignment to the seller of the claim against the title searcher was unenforceable, because the seller and searcher were both liable for the liens. However, when an abstract issued to a lender failed to note a use restriction that thwarted the building of the residence for which the loan was made, the borrowers were entitled to sue the abstractor for negligence, despite the lack of contract privity between them. Hamilton v. Trans Union Settlement Solutions, Inc., 295 S.W.3d 844 (Ky.App. 2009). In Abengoa Bioenergy U.S. Holding, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 379 S.W.3d 864 (Mo.App. E.D. 2012), the court affirmed a jury verdict that found a title insurer liable to a property owner for $48 million in damages due to the insurer's failure to identify several property owners who were entitled to notice from a municipality about the proposed rezoning of the property. The municipality apparently ordered the title searches, not the property owner. The court did not provide an opinion along with its order, and thus did not discuss the privity issue.

[247] An example of this "middle" position is First American Title Ins. Co., Inc. v. First Title Service Co. of the Florida Keys, Inc., 457 So.2d 467, 472 (Fla. 1984): "While the policy arguments put forth by the petitioner, and so well expressed in Williams v. Polgar, do not persuade us to adopt open-ended liability for negligence to any foreseeably relying persons, they do convince us that, when an abstract is prepared in the knowledge or under conditions in which an abstracter should reasonably expect that the employer is to provide it to third persons for purposes of inducing those persons to rely on the abstract as evidence of title, the abstracter's contractual duty to perform the service skillfully and diligently runs to the benefit of such known third parties." See citations in Annotation, Liability of Abstractor--Privity, 34 A.L.R.3d 1122; Annotation, Negligence in Preparing Abstract of Title as Ground of Liability to One Other Than Person

New York has stated:

> As a shorthand ruled ... it has been noted that, for defendants to be liable, reliance by plaintiff upon the representation must be "the end and aim of the transaction," rather than an "indirect or collateral" consequence of it.[248]

The different standards have caused courts to split, for example, as to whether or not a bidder at a foreclosure sale may be foreseen to rely on a title search prepared for the foreclosing lender.[249] The abstractor may be liable even when it offers a title search or report at no charge.[250]

There are numerous products other than title searches and abstracts that are issued by members of the land title industry. In each case, the court must determine the benefited parties and the standard of care undertaken by the issuing company.[251] Similarly, a law firm that gives a title certification may be liable thereunder to its client, but in most states is not liable to a party that is not a client.[252]

[250] A Colorado title company was sued when its owner issued a letter, at no charge, opining that a certain restriction in favor of the town had expired. Balkind v. Telluride Mountain Title Co., 8 P.3d 581 (Colo.App. 2000). The same agency later issued a title insurance policy excepting the restriction. The insured said at closing "I'm an attorney and I know how to handle the Town." He sued to have the restriction declared void, and lost. Then he sued the agency for misrepresentation in the free opinion letter. The court said the buyer had plenty of information about the true facts, including the restriction document, the title policy, and the seller's own opinion that the restriction could be enforced. Therefore, it concluded that the buyer did not rely on the letter from the title company. The court did not hold, however, that there could be no liability on the free opinion.

In Kondaur Capital Corp. v. Fidelity Nat. Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 1908018 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), the court found the issuer of a Trustee's Sale Guarantee was not liable when the claimed error was a search of the "wrong" parcel, because the search was of the same parcel described in the deed of trust on which the trustee's sale would be held.

Greenwald*, 11 Mass.L.Rptr. 647, 2000 WL 1273373 (Mass.Super. 2000) (unpublished). The borrowers mistakenly built a house on land they did not own. The court did not explain whether or not the title certificate showed the wrong legal description or otherwise contributed to the mistake. In any event, the borrowers failed to show that they had a right to rely on the law firm's statements or certificate, because they were not represented by the firm, and also failed to show that they in fact relied. The court also held that a title certificate is not a contract. Therefore, the borrowers had no claim for breach of warranty or breach of the covenant of good faith and fair

15.13.2 Standard Of Care And Limitations On Liability

In a state that recognizes a tort action for abstractor negligence, the plaintiff must prove that the abstractor violated its standard of care. It is commonly stated that the abstractor must examine and report title with a reasonable degree of care and skill, and is responsible for errors or omissions in the abstract that result from the abstractor's negligence.[253] One court elaborated as follows:

> An abstract of title is prepared by a skilled searcher and supposedly contains whatever appears in the records affecting the title (Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533, 23 P. 217). Whether the report was designated a preliminary title report or a litigation report, the purpose for which it was ordered and to be used was not open to doubt. Insofar as the abstracter assumes to describe instruments of record, due care and skill require that such description be accurate. The person employing the abstracter has the right to rely on the truth and accuracy of his work in regard to any essential facts of record unless a mistake is plainly apparent... .[254]

An abstractor may be liable for various errors in the abstract that result from a lack of reasonable care and skill in its preparation.[255] The abstractor is not liable if it conducted its work with due care and skill.[256] The abstractor is not liable for an inaccuracy or omission in the public records that it is asked to search.[257] Also, the choice of which parcels should be searched is not part of a search or dealing, both of which apply only to a contract. However, in JBJ Investment of South Florida, Inc. v. Southern Title Group, Inc., 251 So.3d 173 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2018), the court held that an attorney hired by a title company to draft a mortgage and note might be liable to the lender, with whom he never spoke, for failing to verify that the parcels encumbered by the mortgage were the right ones, even though the title company prepared the legal description exhibit.

[255] A Minnesota abstractor was found liable for failing to detect and report a record overlap, in Miller v. Pioneer Abst. & Title Co., 2005 WL 3470333 (Minn.App.) (unpublished). The court also affirmed an award of attorneys' fees incurred by the customer in quieting title, which it found to be "the natural and proximate consequence of" the agent's "tortious conduct or breach of contract." In Razete v. Preferred Research, Inc., 202 Ga.App. 504, 415 S.E.2d 25 (1992), the claimed negligence was in the failure to transmit all of the pages of a title search by facsimile.

[256] In Frye v. Monarch Title of Northern Missouri, 565 S.W.3d 693 (Mo.App.W.D. 2018), the court held that a title agent that prepared a legal description for land to be sold was not negligent, because it obeyed the instructions given to it by the seller and was not aware that the buyers thought they were buying 200 rather than 120 acres.

The searcher or abstractor is liable for reasonably foreseeable damages that are suffered by a party to whom a duty is owed, that are proximately caused by an error, and on which erroneous information the party relied.[259] In an often-cited decision, Williams v. Polgar,[260] the court ruled that damages are limited to those proximate caused by the error and that would be reasonably foreseeable:

> [T]here is a limit on the amount for which the abstractor may be held liable. For example, in a case where the abstractor has failed to note a deed conveying the property in fee simple absolute and the subsequent purchaser loses the property, that limit is the total value of the property. … We are aware that real property often appreciates in value and that subsequent purchasers and mortgagees may suffer damages through the loss of improvements made to the land after the date of the abstract; however, this is not sufficient reason to defeat liability.[261]

[258] In Cummings v. Stephens, 157 Idaho 348, 336 P.3d 281 (Idaho 2014), reh.den. Nov. 5, 2014, the court held that Idaho's search statute does not transform a title commitment into an abstract of title, and thus a title agent may not be sued for faulty abstracting of title for having included in a title commitment parcels not owned by the sellers and one they did own but did not intend to sell. Had the title company been an abstractor, it would likely have been liable for a faulty search of the parcels not owned by the seller. In Frye v. Monarch Title of Northern Missouri, 565 S.W.3d 693 (Mo.App.W.D. 2018), the court held that a title agent that prepared a legal description for land to be sold was not negligent, because it obeyed the instructions given to it by the seller and was not aware that the buyers thought they were buying 200 rather than 120 acres. However, in Abengoa Bioenergy U.S. Holding, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 379 S.W.3d 864 (Mo.App. E.D. 2012), an insurer provided title searches that were used to notify neighbors of hearings for a rezoning petition. It was asked to produce searches on every parcel within a certain radius of the subject parcel. It failed to include seven such nearby parcels. The court upheld a judgment for over $48 million in damages incurred by the owner of the property when the rezoning was challenged by those people. The damages represented lost profits, increased construction costs in the other state and higher production cost for the ethanol. The court rejected the insurer's argument that the rezoning could have been salvaged at a cost of $50,000. Also, in JBJ Investment of South Florida, Inc. v. Southern Title Group, Inc., 251 So.3d 173 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2018), the court held that an attorney hired by a title company to draft a mortgage and note might be liable to the lender, with whom he never spoke, for failing to verify that the parcels encumbered by the mortgage were the right ones, even though the title company prepared the legal description exhibit.

The amount of reasonably foreseeable damages that can flow from an error may be very substantial.[262] Jurisdictions that hold that an abstract of title or title search is a contract have barred tort claims based on those contracts, when the only claimed losses are economic, which also limits the type of damage that can be claimed.[263]

Almost every abstract and title search contains an exculpatory and/or liability limitation statement. Reasonable exculpatory clauses are enforced when the court treats the title search as a contract.[264] However, such a provision may be found to be unenforceable when the court analyzes liability based on negligence principles.[265] A disclaimer may not contradict or negate the standards

[262] In *Abengoa Bioenergy U.S. Holding, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. The damages represented lost profits, increased construction costs in the other state and higher production cost for the ethanol. The court rejected the insurer's argument that the rezoning could have been salvaged at a cost of $50,000. The appeals court affirmed the jury verdict without a written decision.

Preferred Research, Inc.*, 202 Ga.App. 504, 415 S.E.2d 25 (1992), Preferred Research prepared a title search that it sent in the form of a commitment to insure to Razete, by facsimile. The last page, which listed a federal tax lien, was lost in transmission. Razete foreclosed, apparently in reliance on the title search, and was forced to pay the IRS. The trial court granted summary judgment on Preferred's argument that the commitment was an offer to insure which Razete did not accept by requesting a policy. On appeal, the court ruled that the action sounded in tort rather than contract, and that there were questions of fact to be decided as to the claimed negligence in transmitting the information.

[264] A lot book guaranty containing an exculpatory clause was found to bar an action in negligence brought by a party other than the one for whom the guaranty was issued, in Harrison v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 97 Cal.App.3d 973, 159 Cal.Rptr. 209 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1979). In Fidelity Nat. Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Suburban West Abstractors, 852 A.2d 318, 2004 PA Super 179 (Pa.Super. 2004), the search report stated that liability was limited to $25. Nonetheless, a jury verdict was affirmed permitting a title insurer to collect $176,000 against a title searcher for a missed judgment. The jury ignored the liability limitation statement on the title search. Suburban West Abstractors did a last owner search for Fidelity National Title, which the insurer used to issue a $318,750 loan policy. Suburban missed a $380,000 judgment against the seller. Fidelity paid off the insured lender in full, then settled with the judgment creditor. It sued Suburban for its net loss of about $176,000.

[265] For example, in Southwind Exploration, LLC v. Street Abstract Co., Inc., 209 P.3d 728 (Kan.App. 2009), an abstractor was found liable under a title certificate prepared for a lawyer for use in obtaining an oil and gas lease because a half mineral estate, reserved in a 1949 railroad deed, was not shown on the title certificate. The lawyer had been unclear about the starting point of the search. The certificate said it was "made upon the mutual understanding that the maker thereof has not examined all instruments and proceedings in the chain of title to the above described real estate… ." However, the certificate may not have clearly recited the starting point from which the search began. The court held the abstractor liable for the cost of obtaining the half mineral estate, under Section 552 of the Restatement. In Viotti v. Giomi, 230 Cal.App.2d 730, 739, 41 Cal.Rptr. 345, 350 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1964), the court held: "The words 'Preliminary report only. No liability hereunder' printed on the litigation report are not sufficient to exculpate the title company from responsibility for its own negligent acts. An agreement insulating one from liability for his own negligence must specifically so provide and is strictly construed against the party asserting the exemption, especially or specifications for the title examination as found in the search contract.[266]

The applicable statute of limitations for suit on a title search or abstract of title depends on the way in which the court classifies the product or service provided.[267]

15.13.3 Searcher And Title Plant Liability To Title Policy Issuer

Practice differs radically from state to state as to who performs the various functions required to issue a policy: maintaining the title plant, searching, examining, commitment and policy issuing, and closing. Whenever the company issuing a policy or performing a closing did not search and/or examine title itself, there is the possibility of a claim incurred as a result of the searcher's error. The policy-issuer will naturally wish to have the searcher pay all or part of the loss. See §17.8 regarding agent liability to the underwriter.

Some claims result from errors in the title plant used for the records search. Some companies use strictly the government records and indices. However, most maintain at least some of the records and indices themselves, belong to joint title plants, or use other companies' private title plants.

It can sometimes take considerable investigation to determine exactly whose error caused the claim. Once the cause is determined, however, the insurer will normally wish to be reimbursed for all or part of its loss. The insurer should immediately give notice to the party of the claim, and keep the party advised of the progress of the matter. The insurer should consult the party during settlement discussions, and seek to work out an allocation of payment at time of settlement, rather than seeking to recoup later. Failure to give prompt, continuing notice may prejudice the right to be reimbursed. See §17.8.2 concerning notice in the context of agent contribution to claims.

A title searcher is liable to an insurer who bought the search in order to write an insurance where he is the author of the agreement." 230 Cal.App.2d at 739, 41 Cal.Rptr. at 350. Likewise, in Broser v. Royal Abstract Corp., 46 Misc.2d 717, 260 N.Y.S.2d 487 (City Ct. 1965), modified, 49 Misc.2d 882, 268 N.Y.S.2d 594 (Sup.Ct. App.Div. 1966), the court found that a limitation on liability would be applicable if the insurer had been sued on breach of contract, but was unenforceable when the plaintiff elected to sue in tort.

[266] In Alamo Title Co., Inc. v. Land Resources Corp., 2003 WL 21010605 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished), a disclaimer in the search report was not enforceable to negate the search standards stated in the customer's letter requesting the searches, when the customer said it was "ordering these [searches] on the understanding that the title report is of the same reliability and accuracy that is used in the title research for a title policy from your company."

[267] In Brooks v. Terry Abstract Co., 2014 Ark.App. 212, 2014 WL 1327760 (Ark.App. 2014) (unpublished), the court held that a lawsuit against a title searcher who missed a recorded gas pipeline easement was filed a month late, and thus barred. Arkansas has a five year statute for written contracts and a three year statute for contracts that are not in writing. The abstractor's first position was that there was no privity of contract, since the search was delivered to the title agent, not the buyer. The court held there was an implied contract. The court said that the three-year statute for implied contracts applied. The question became the start date. The court held that a title search is, in effect, an abstract of title. Under Arkansas law, the limitations period on an abstract begins running when the abstract "is compiled and delivered and not when the error is discovered." The court concluded that the clock starts ticking on the day the search was delivered, not on the closing date, and was thus filed a month late. In Calvert v. Swinford, 2016 OK 100, 382 P.3d 1028 (Okla. 2016), , the Oklahoma Supreme Court ruled that the time limit for suing an abstract company for recording a defective deed began to run on the day the deed was recorded. The court said that the discovery rule did not delay the running of the statute, because the deed was not concealed but recorded, and these days a grantor can review the real estate records "anytime from one's computer in the comfort of their own home."

policy.[268] When the insurer has paid a claim of loss to the insured, it stands in the insured's shoes for purposes of subrogation to sue the title searcher whose error caused the loss.[269] As was stated in First American Title Ins. Co., Inc. v. First Title Service Co. of the Florida Keys, Inc.,[270] the underwriter steps into the shoes of its insured to recover from the title searcher. The First Title Services decision quoted above was broadened in Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Attorneys' Title Services, Inc.,[271] which held that an insurer's "status as an intended beneficiary is not necessary where the insurer first satisfies a claim brought against its insured, so long as all the equitable prerequisites to subrogation are satisfied." Further, the Attorneys' Title Services case involved a computer plant printout which was inaccurate, not a full abstract of title. The court held that a fact question existed as to whether or not the computer plant printout was a product on which the provider had assumed the liability of an abstractor.

When a title agent further delegates search duties to third a party, the independent search company may be liable if it makes an error, to either the underwriter or the title agent, or both.[272] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Capri Title Services, Ltd., [273] a New York title agent that bought incomplete "title notes" from another company was found not to have conducted an adequate title examination, and was liable to the underwriter for the loss caused by a missed lis pendens. In The Fountainhead Title Group Corp. v. Courthouse Search of N. Virginia, [274] a searcher that failed to show a $1 million judgment on its title report was liable in full to the title agent for whom the search was performed, even though the agent's customer was paid primarily by the agent's errors and omissions carrier.

In some jurisdictions, the customer may sue the title searcher for negligent misrepresentation. The First Title Services decision was applied in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Tri-Lakes Title Co., [268] In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Accurate Title Searches, Inc., 173 Conn.App. 463, 164 A.3d 682 (Conn.App. 2017), the court found a title searcher liable to the title insurer that bought the search in order to write insurance, in the amount paid to settle the title claim plus what the insurer paid to defend the insured against the adverse title interest.

[272] In Hines v. Holland, 779 S.E.2d 63 (Ga.App. 2015), a Georgia attorney who certified title based on a defective title search had no power to sue the lay title searcher to have her substituted as defendant in the malpractice action, although the court did not decide if the searcher could be liable to the attorney for breach of the search contract. In ALR Oglethorpe, LLC v. Henderson, 783 S.E.2d 187 (Ga.App. 2016), the court held that a lawsuit filed by a law firm against an attorney title examiner was a valid claim, but was barred by the applicable four-year statute of limitations, which begins to run on the date the title examination is delivered.

Inc.,[275] in which an insurer sued its policy-issuing agent for having negligently missed two easements. The court found the agent liable both on its contractual obligations and on negligent misrepresentation of title, in the form of the title insurance commitment, under §552 of the Restatement (2nd) of Torts. The agent asserted that the insurer had neglected an important element of proof by not offering into evidence the title insurance policy, and establishing a contractual subrogation right in the shoes of the insured. The court found that the insurer's rights did not depend on subrogation:

> The parties' agreement, then, was not for Defendant to issue a title insurance policy to either Plaintiff or a third party, but, rather to make "searches" and make a "title report," similar in scope, for example, with that of an attorney making a title search. [FN4] Plaintiff was therefore not required to either produce the title insurance policy or otherwise prove that it had a subrogation right precedent to establishing liability and recovering damages under the theories alleged in its petition. "A duty to exercise care may be imposed by entering into a contractual relationship." Evinger v. McDaniel Title Co., 726 S.W.2d 468, 472 (Mo.App.1987).[276]

However, the provider of a title search used for the preparation of a policy is not directly liable to persons who hold interests in the property, but for whom the title search was not prepared.[277]

As with other types of title searches, reasonable exculpatory clauses or contractual limitations on liability are enforceable, but absurdly restrictive provisions may be ignored by the finder of fact when they are at odds with the known and intended purpose for which the search is provided.[278] All such claims are subject to a statute of limitations.[279]

When a continuing stream of search business will be done with a particular policy-issuer, the parties should sign a contract. The searcher's exposure should be established and controlled by that contract. The contract terms should override any exculpatory clause in the search itself.

Nonetheless, a jury verdict was affirmed permitting a title insurer to collect $176,000 against a title searcher for a missed judgment. The jury ignored the liability limitation statement on the title search. Suburban West Abstractors did a last owner search for Fidelity National Title, which the insurer used to issue a $318,750 loan policy. Suburban missed a $380,000 judgment against the seller. Fidelity paid off the insured lender in full, then settled with the judgment creditor. It sued Suburban for its net loss of about $176,000.

The searcher is generally an independent contractor, and not the agent of the policy-issuer. The searcher's knowledge should not be imputed to the policy-issuer.[280]

The title plant owner's liability should also be determined by the terms of the plant access agreement, if one exists. It takes considerable courage to sue the register or recorder of deeds, but such a suit has been held to be viable because misindexing is not under the sovereign immunity umbrella.[281] A violation of a joint title plant agreement may make the participant liable to the other members.[282]

16 Bad Faith and Tort Liability

Some claimants make demands for extra-contractual damages. This chapter covers the three main issues in this realm: bad faith, punitive damages, and reckless misrepresentation. Two other non-policy duties are discussed elsewhere: escrow (Chapter 13), and abstractor liability on policies and commitments--the so-called "duty to search" (Chapter 15).

16.1 Tort Of Bad Faith

In some jurisdictions, the insured may recover damages beyond the policy loss formula based on proof that the insurer acted in bad faith in handling the claim. Other states have rejected the cause of action, or have adopted a different formulation or theoretical basis for it. A complete discussion of the history and nuances of this doctrine is beyond the scope of this work, but has been thoroughly analyzed elsewhere.[1]

The modern bad faith cause of action is rooted in the judicial invention that every insurance contract contains an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.[2]

[1] A fairly comprehensive and practical analysis is found in Barbara O'Donnell, Preparing for and Defending Against Bad Faith Claims, in The Brief, American Bar Association Tort Trial & Insurance Practice Section, Summer 2016, p. 44, which discusses the advice of counsel defense, use of coverage expert witnesses, and the defenses of insured comparative bad faith and the insured's failure to cooperate. A good but outdated state-by-state analysis of the bad faith cause of action is found in Stephen S. Ashley, Bad Faith Liability: A State-by-State Review, which is now out of print. Other good sources include: Anderson, Placing a Check on an Insured's Bad-Faith Conduct: The Defense of Comparative Bad Faith, 35 South Texas L.Rev. 485-534 (1994); and Symposium on the Law of Bad Faith in Contract and Insurance, 72 Texas L.Rev. 1203-1680 (1994). Bad faith cases in the title insurance field are discussed in Hosack, Bad Faith and Related Problems: The Title Insurer's Perspective, in A.B.A. Real Property & Trust Law Section, Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role, p. 496 (1985); Homburger, Insurance Overlay on Title Insurance, in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448, p. 587 (discussion of bad faith and other insurance issues).

[2] This implied covenant was first described in Brassil v. Maryland Casualty Co., 210 N.Y. 235, 104 N.E. 622 (1914). It was first applied to the duty to settle third party claims against the insured in Hilker v. Western Auto Ins. Co., 204 Wis. 1, 231 N.W. 257 (1931). The California courts extended the covenant to permit a bad faith cause of action to the insurer's duty to indemnify and defend the insured (so-called first party bad faith). Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.App.3d 376, 89 Cal.Rptr. 78 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1970); Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co., 9 Cal.3d 566, 108 Cal.Rptr. 480,

> "There is an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in every contract that neither party will do anything which will injure the right of the other to receive the benefits of the agreement. …" (Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co., supra, 50 Cal.2d at p. 658, 328 P.2d 198.) This principle applies to insurance policies. … Stated another way, the insurer must give the interests of the insured at least as much consideration as its own interests.[3]

Bad faith melds contract and tort law. The fundamental premise of the claim is that a covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied in every insurance contract, and that an egregious breach of that covenant by the insurer can support a separate claim against the company. In most states, the suit is founded in tort. Bad faith falls into two categories: third party and first party.

16.1.1 Third Party Bad Faith

Third party bad faith is the insurer's tortious refusal to settle a lawsuit brought by a third party against the insured within policy limits, when the failure to settle exposes the insured to liability in excess of policy limits. The idea is that the insurer has a duty to give appropriate consideration to the insured's interest in having the matter settled rather than being exposed to personal liability on a judgment for more than policy limits. If the insurer rejects a settlement offer for policy limits or less in bad faith, the insurer may be sued for the excess judgment amount.[4]

Third party bad faith compensates the insured when the insurer has wrongly put its own interest ahead of that of the insured in declining to settle before trial. The standard liability policy puts the insurer in control of the litigation and settlement. A policy-limits offer to the insured from the plaintiff creates a conflict of interest between insured and insurer:

> The insured obviously wants the insurer to accept the third party's offer because the insured bears the risk of having to pay the portion of the judgment exceeding the policy limits. The insurer wants to reject the offer because by trying the case the insurer might, by some fluke, obtain a verdict in the insured's favor and avoid liability altogether and, if it loses, it will have to pay no more than the policy limits anyway.[5]

The covenant of good faith and fair dealing gives the insurer the duty to weigh the insured's peril of an excess judgment as it evaluates settlement opportunities.

States have adopted a variety of standards to which the insurer is held. Some have ruled that the insured's interest must be given "equal," "fair" or "some" consideration. Others state that the insurer must "disregard the limits" of the policy in considering whether or not the settlement offer should be accepted.[6]

16.1.2 First Party Bad Faith

First-party bad faith concerns the insurer's breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing in its conduct toward the insured. The three types of first party bad faith are for the failure to indemnify, a refusal to defend or a bad faith investigation of the claim.

The cause of action for first party bad faith does not have the same root as third party bad faith. When the insurer is asked to defend or pay the insured, there is no conflict of interest. The insured is not subject to the insurer's control, as with third-party litigation. The insured also has no risk of liability beyond policy limits over which the insurer has control. Rather, the duty to indemnify or defend may be objectively determined. If the insurer breaches its duty, the insured may recover the benefits of the policy by suit for that breach. An insurer whose denial of defense or indemnity is not wrongful, of course, has not acted in bad faith.[7]

Most states have adopted the tort of first party bad faith.[8] A few have not. In rejecting first party bad faith in the context of a refusal to defend, one court compared the two bad faith doctrines and said:

> The duty to defend, however, arises solely from the language of the insurance contract. A breach of that duty can be determined objectively, without reference to the good or bad faith of the insurer. If the insurer had an obligation to defend and failed to fulfill that obligation, then, like any other party who fails to perform its contractual obligations, it becomes liable for all foreseeable damages flowing from the breach.[9]

To be considered a bad faith act, most states say that the insurer's denial must be both incorrect and also without an objectively reasonable basis, with some states holding in addition that the insurer must be proven to have been reckless, wanton, intentional, malicious, or fraudulent.[10] One

[10] An oft-quoted formula for first party bad faith conduct comes from Anderson v. Continental Ins. Co., 85 Wis.2d 675, 271 N.W.2d 368 (1978), in which the court said: "To show a claim for bad faith, a plaintiff must show the absence of a reasonable basis for denying benefits of the policy and the defendant's knowledge or reckless disregard of the lack of a reasonable basis for denying the claim." The tort of bad faith can be alleged only if the facts pleaded would, on the basis of an objective standard, show the absence of a reasonable basis for denying the claim, i. e., would a reasonable case recited that bad faith refusal to pay or defend requires proof of the following five elements:

> 1) the existence of an insurance contract between the parties and a breach by the insurer; 2) intentional refusal to pay the claim; 3) the non-existence of any reasonably legitimate or arguable reason for the refusal (debatable reason) either in law or fact; 4) the insurer's knowledge of the absence of such a debatable reason or 5) when the plaintiff argues that the intentional failure results from the failure of the insurer to determine the existence of an insurer under the circumstances have denied or delayed payment of the claim under the facts and circumstances. 271 N.W.2d at 376-77. In Arizona, a claim of bad faith arises "when the insurance company intentionally denies, fails to process or pay a claim without a reasonable basis for such action." Noble v. Nat'l Am. Life Ins. Co., 128 Ariz. 188, 624 P.2d 866, 868 (1981). Under the Pennsylvania bad faith statute, 42 Pa.C.S.A. § 8371, the insurer acts in bad faith if it acts with "reckless disregard" for the insured's rights, which the insured must prove by clear and convincing evidence. See Morrison v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 711 F.Supp.2d 369 (M.D.Pa. 2010). Section 8371 does not define "bad faith." As was reported in Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 611802 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), Pennsylvania courts have accepted the following definition: "'Bad faith' on the part of the insurer is any frivolous or unfounded refusal to pay proceeds of policy; it is not necessary that such refusal be fraudulent. For purposes of an action against an insurer for failure to pay a claim, such conduct imports a dishonest purpose and means a breach of a known duty (i.e., good faith and fair dealing), through some motive of self-interest or ill will; mere negligence or bad judgment is not bad faith." Adamski v. Allstate Ins. Co., 738 A.2d 1033, 1036 (Pa.Super.Ct.1991) (quoting BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 139 (9th ed.1990)) (emphasis added). Thus, to establish bad faith under the statute, Pennsylvania has a two-part test, both parts of which must be established by clear and convincing evidence: "(1) the insurer lacked a reasonable basis for denying coverage; and (2) the insurer knew or recklessly disregarded its lack of a reasonable basis." Adamski, citing Terletsky v. Prudential Prop. and Cas. Ins. Co., 437 Pa.Super. 108, 649 A.2d 680, 688 (Pa.Super.Ct.1994). Under Pennsylvania law, the presence or absence of bad faith does not depend on the legal correctness of the basis for an insurer's denial of an insured's claim. Jung v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 949 F.Supp. 353, 359–60 n. 7 (E.D.Pa.1997). "If it did, the need for an independent analysis of an insured's bad faith claim would disappear, as the applicable section 8371 claim would turn specifically on the underlying coverage determination." Employers Mut. Cas. Co. v. Loos, 476 F.Supp.2d 478, 496 (W.D.Pa.2007). The Third Circuit has thus held that "[a] reasonable basis is all that is required to defeat a claim of bad faith." J.C. Penney Life Ins. Co. v. Pilosi, 393 F.3d 356, 367 (3d Cir. 2004). "[Q]uestionable conduct giving the appearance of bad faith is not sufficient to establish a bad faith refusal to provide coverage if the insurer had a reasonable basis for denying the claim." Post v. St. Paul Travelers Ins. Co., 609 F.Supp.2d 382, 385 (E.D.Pa.2009). Similarly, Connecticut requires proof of "tortious conduct which is motivated by a dishonest or sinister purpose," or allegations of facts that "reasonably infer an improper motive or reckless indifference of the interest of others." U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 1629942 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished). Another Connecticut court dismissed a claim of bad faith failure to investigate, stating that "[w]hile a jury might find that Chicago Title unreasonably delayed resolution of Bristol Heights' claim, there is no evidence submitted by Bristol Heights that it did so with a 'dishonest purpose.'" Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Bristol Heights Ass'n, LLC, 2009 WL 5698103 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished). In Arkansas, in a first party bad faith claim, the insured must prove "affirmative misconduct by the insurance company, without a good faith defense, and that the misconduct must be dishonest, malicious, or oppressive in an attempt to avoid liability under an insurance policy." Robertson Brothers Farms v. Farmers Mutual Hail Ins. Co., 2010 WL 2471911, 2 (E.D. Ark. 2010), Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Broadway Arms Corp., 281 Ark. 128, 664 S.W.2d 463 (1984); Friedeberg v. Bullard, 2019 WL 1416473 (unpublished), recommendations adopted in 2019 WL 1412106 (E.D.Ark. 2019) (unpublished), aff'd 783 Fed.Appx. 648 (8th Cir. 2019). In Banner Bank v. First American Title Ins. Co., 916 F.3d 1323 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2019), the court held that First American did not act in bad faith in denying a defense, because it "reached the correct legal conclusion that it did not owe a duty to defend or indemnify; it reached this conclusion after complying with its duty to 'diligently investigate the facts to enable it to determine whether a claim is valid,' 'fairly evaluate the claim,' and 'act promptly and reasonably in rejecting or settling the claim.' Prince v. Bear River Mut. Ins. Co., 56 P.3d 524, 533 (Utah 2002)."

> arguable basis, the plaintiff must prove the insurer's intentional failure to determine the existence of such a debatable reason.[11]

Similarly, the insurer's refusal to pay for the insured's defense in litigation is not in bad faith if that decision is based on a "reasonably legitimate or arguable reason."[12] However, in some states the fact that a claim is "fairly debatable" is not a complete bar to recovery for bad faith.[13] Many states have adopted the principle that an insurer can be guilty of conducting a bad faith claim investigation, which commonly is evidenced by efforts to steer the investigation away from coverage and toward a set of facts supporting a denial of the claim.[14]

Some states have adopted the principle that an insurance company must give due consideration to the rights of its insured in making decisions about the claim, including responding to or making settlement offers and in paying a loss to the insured.[15]

[15] In the California decision of Morris v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 109 Cal.App.4th 966, 135 Cal.Rptr.2d 718, the court gave this synopsis of that state's doctrine: "An insurer is not a fiduciary, and owes no obligation to consider the interests of its insured above its own. (Love v. Fire Ins. Exchange (1990) 221 Cal.App.3d 1136, 1148, 271 Cal.Rptr. 246.) 'An insurer ... may give its own interests consideration equal to that it gives the interests of its insured (Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co., supra, 24 Cal.3d at pp. 818–819, 169 Cal.Rptr. 691, 620 P.2d 141); it is not required to disregard the interests of its shareholders and other policyholders when evaluating claims (Austero v. National Cas. Co., supra, 84 Cal.App.3d at p. 30, 148 Cal.Rptr. 653); and it is not required to pay noncovered claims, even though payment would be in the best interests of its insured (Native Sun Investment Group v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. (1987) 189 Cal.App.3d 1265, 1278, 235 Cal.Rptr. 34.)' (Id. at pp. 1148–1149, 271 Cal.Rptr. 246.)" In Anguiano v. Allstate Ins. Co., 209 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. (Cal.) 2000), the court gave this summary of that state's equal consideration doctrine in the context of settlement offers and third party bad faith: "California law requires that an insurer 'take into account the interest of the insured and give it at least as much consideration as it does to its own interest' when evaluating settlement offers. Walbrook Ins. Co. v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 5 Cal.App.4th 1445, 7 Cal.Rptr.2d 513, 521 (1992) (quoting Comunale v. Traders & General Ins. Co., 50 Cal.2d 654, 328 P.2d 198, 201 (1958) … As a result, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing imposes a duty upon insurers to give an 'offer its intelligent and informed consideration; that the insurer advise the insured of any settlement offers, together with the results of its investigations; and that the insurer give equal consideration to the interests of its insured.' Cain v. State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co., 47 Cal.App.3d 783, 121 Cal.Rptr. 200, 205 (1975). A breach of any of these obligations coupled with a refusal to settle within policy limits may render an insurer liable for any judgment against its insured, including any portion in excess of the policy limits." In a leading Arizona case, Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Henderson, 82 Ariz. 335, 313 P.2d 404 (Ariz. 1957), the court said: "The principal difficulty experienced by the courts has been in fixing a test for the degree of consideration the insurer must give the insured's interests in order to have met its legal obligation in this respect. Different standards have been adopted.

There are a number of ways in which the insurer may signal its good faith effort and motivation in the handling of a claim. A healthy attitude toward the insured is perhaps paramount. One very good treatise offers a number of attitudinal pointers, including:

1. Respond to claims notices promptly.

2. Request information from the insured with a view toward granting coverage, not merely toward finding a basis to deny coverage.

3. Adopt a positive attitude that the claim will be paid unless there is a valid reason to deny payment.

4. Complete the investigation before making any decision on the claim.

5. Consider advancing policy benefits and/or defense even while coverage litigation is proceeding.[16]

16.1.3 Insurance Claim Penalty Statutes

A number of states have adopted unfair claims practice acts, many modeled on the NAIC model act, as more fully discussed at §2.1. The majority view is that these statutes do not create private causes of action.[17] However, the existence of such a statute, and its dictates, may be permitted as evidence of the insurer's good faith or lack thereof:

> The fact of [the regulations'] adoption, Safeco's presumed awareness of their provisions, and the specificity of their commands, all have a bearing on whether Safeco acted in good faith and, if not, the extent to which punitive damages, if any,

There is authority to the effect that the insurer may give paramount consideration to its interests. Wisconsin Zinc Co. v. Fidelity & D. Co., 162 Wis. 39, 155 N.W. 1081; Hillker v. Western Auto. Ins. Co., 204 Wis. 1, 231 N.W. 257, 235 N.W. 413. Other jurisdictions have said paramount consideration must be given to protect the insured. Tyger River Pine Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 170 S.C. 286, 170 S.E. 346. A third position is that the insurer must give equal thought to the end that both the insured and the insurer shall be protected. American Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. G. A. Nichols Co., 10 Cir., 173 F.2d 830; National Mutual Casualty Co. v. Britt, 203 Okl. 175, 200 P.2d 407, 218 P.2d 1039. The latter standard was adopted by the trial court and we approve. It occurs to us that when the insurer is defending litigation against the insured, employs attorneys to represent the interests of both and has sole power and opportunity to make a settlement which would result in the protection of the insured against excess liability, common honesty demands that it not be moved by partiality to itself nor be required to give the interests of the insured preferential consideration. A violator of this rule of equality of consideration cannot be said to have acted in good faith." 313 P.2d at 406.

Also, some states have enacted statutes making insurers liable for bad faith acts or a "vexatious refusal to pay" a covered claim. These statutes permit an insured to sue the insurer for bad faith refusal to pay a covered claim.[19] The standard by which the insurer's conduct is judged may be set by the statute or by resort to judicially-imposed "reasonable man" standards.[20] State consumer fraud acts do not support claims alleging bad faith acts in the handling of an insurance claim.[21]

[19] The Missouri vexatious refusal to pay law is Mo.Rev.Stats. §375.420. Florida has two such laws, Fla. Stats. §§624.155 and 627.727(10). The Florida statutes were construed in State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co. v. Laforet, 658 So.2d 55 (1995) and Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. The Machado Family Limited Partnership, 2017 WL 3622006 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), and discussed in Preston and Vaka, First Party Bad Faith: State Farm v. Laforet, Fla. Bar Journal July/August 1995, p. 52. Illinois has adopted an insurer bad faith statute, Section 155 of the Illinois Insurance Code. However, that statute does not apply to title insurers, as found in Azran v. Fidelity National Financial, Inc., 2016 WL 4124286 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 3, 2016) (unpublished). In Bank of America, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 2215012 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court cited Azran and went further, holding that "title insurance companies are governed by the Illinois Title Insurance Act, 215 ILCS 155/3, which contains no equivalent to § 155." Georgia has a statute on bad faith, and a similar standard. "To prevail on a claim for an insurer's bad faith under OCGA § 33-4-6, the insured must prove: (1) that the claim is covered under the policy, (2) that a demand for payment was made against the insurer within 60 days prior to filing suit, and (3) that the insurer's failure to pay was motivated by bad faith." Bayrock Mortgage Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 286 Ga.App. 18, 19, 648 S.E.2d 433 (2007). "Penalties for bad faith are not authorized where the insurance company has any reasonable ground to contest the claim and where there is a disputed question of fact." Assurance Co. v. BBB Serv. Co., 259 Ga.App. 54, 58(2), 576 S.E.2d 38 (2002). "Bad faith is shown by evidence that under the terms of the policy under which the demand is made and under the facts surrounding the response to that demand, the insurer had no 'good cause' for resisting and delaying payment." Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Griffin, 302 Ga.App. 726, 730-1, 691 S.E.2d 633, 636-7 (Ga.App. 2010). In Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. RM Kids, LLC, 337 Ga.App. 638, 788 S.E.2d 542 (Ga.App. 2016), the court ruled that OCGA § 33-4-6 (a) is a penalty statute, and therefore must be strictly construed. It said that, although generally a question of good or bad faith is for the jury to decide, the court should make the ruling when the insurer had reasonable grounds for denying the claim. The court ruled that the insurer had denied the claim based on such reasonable grounds, and therefore had not acted in bad faith as a matter of law. In Harrigan v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 6016719 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the court observed that there is no private cause of action under the Connecticut Unfair Insurance Practices Act, because that law is enforced by the insurance commissioner. However, in Mead v. Burns, 199 Conn. 651, 663, 509 A.2d 11 (1986), the court held that an insured may bring an action under the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act for violations of CUIPA. In Artie's Auto Body, Inc. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 317 Conn. 602, 623, 119 A.3d 1139 (2015), the court said that, "to sustain a CUIPA cause of action under CUTPA, a plaintiff must allege conduct that is proscribed by CUIPA."

The consumer fraud act applies to an insurer only if it misrepresents the terms of the policy in selling the insurance).

16.1.4 Damages For Bad Faith Acts

In both first- and third-party bad faith suits, the insured may recover incidental expenses and, in many cases, attorneys' fees incurred in the bad faith suit.[22]

Central to the cause of action for third-party bad faith is the premise that the insured has been found liable for a money judgment in excess of policy limits, which the insurer could have prevented had it settled the suit for policy limits. If bad faith is proven, therefore, the primary element of damage is the excess judgment.

By contrast, there is a certain straining for elements of damage under first party cases. Unlike third-party bad faith, in first-party bad faith suits the insured is not out of pocket anything more than its policy benefits. Consequently, in first-party bad faith, the two primary sources of damage in addition to the amounts payable for breach of contract are for emotional distress and punitive damages.[23] These damages are in addition to recovery for breach of policy, and the insured has not made an election of remedies by first pursuing breach of contract, and then bad faith damages.[24]

16.1.4.1 Emotional Distress

The insured bears a heavy burden of proof in establishing that the insurer's employees, such as its claim administrators, intentionally inflicted mental distress on the insured, if such a cause of action is even available in the jurisdiction.[25] A New York court ruled that, while a title company's [22] For example, in White v. Western Title Ins. Co., 710 P. 2d 309 (Cal. 1985), the court held: "'[W]hen the insurer's conduct is unreasonable, a plaintiff is allowed to recover for all detriment proximately resulting from the insurer's bad faith, which detriment ... includes those attorney's fees that were incurred to obtain the policy benefits and that would not have been incurred but for the insurer's tortious conduct.' [citation omitted] The same reasoning supports inclusion of witness fees and other litigation expenses as an element of damage." California's position was further explained in Brandt v. Superior Court, 693 P.2d 796, 798 (Cal. 1985), which permitted the insured to recover its attorney fees incurred in bringing the bad faith and coverage suit based on the idea that "[t]he attorney's fees are an economic loss--damages--proximately caused by the tort" of bad faith refusal to pay the loss. This rule has also been adopted in numerous other jurisdictions. See, for example, Hayseed's, Inc. v. State Farm Fire & Cas., 352 S.E.2d 73 (W.Va. 1986); Farmers Group, Inc. v. Trimble, 768 P.2d 1243 (Colo.App. 1988); Filasky v. Preferred Risk Mutual Ins. Co., 734 P.2d 76 (Ariz. 1987); and DeChant v. Monarch Life Ins. Co., 200 Wis.2d 559 (1996). A collection of these cases is found in Windt, Insurance Claims and Disputes, 3rd Ed., §9.24, fn. 181.

[23] In fact, the California courts adopted first party bad faith as a cause of action in part so that an insured could recover damages for emotional distress, which otherwise had not been recognized in breach of contract actions. In the seminal case of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.App.3d 376, 89 Cal.Rptr. 78 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1970), the court reasoned that allowing the insured to sue for emotional distress in a bad faith suit would simply avoid forcing the insured to sue for both breach of contract and intentional infliction of emotional distress: "A rule placing the emphasis where it belongs and permitting recovery of all proximately caused detriment in a single cause of action is more likely to engender public respect for and confidence in the judicial process than a rule which would require attorneys, litigants and judges to force square pegs into round holes." 10 Cal.App.3d at 402, 89 Cal.Rptr. at 94.

[24] Heyden v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 175 Wis.2d 508, 520, 498 N.W.2d 905 (Wis.App. 1 Dist. 1993).

[25] For example, New Jersey law allows recovery of such damages in the context of a contract action only "if the breach involves conduct that is both intentional and outrageous and proximately causes severe, foreseeable emotional distress." In Granelli v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 2072648 (D.N.J.) (unpublished), the court dismissed a claim for emotional distress because the insured had established nothing worse than delay in the handling of her claim.

failure to pay taxes on time may have been upsetting, the property owner was not entitled to damages for the emotional distress that he claimed to have suffered as a result. Damages were limited to interest and penalties owed the taxing authority.[26] Alabama permits recovery for mental anguish caused by a title insurer's bad faith acts, without requiring proof of physical impact or injury.[27] The Virginia standard for proof of emotional distress damages is as follows:

> The general rule in tort cases is that, in the absence of accompanying physical harm or wanton and willful conduct, emotional distress damages are not recoverable. [Citations omitted] There are a small number of exceptions to this rule and we have allowed recovery of emotional distress damages based on appropriately pled facts.[28]

An insured was awarded damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress in Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.[29] The insureds did not establish physical impact or injury, and based their claim on worry and aggravation caused by the title insurer's failure to take action to clear title.[30] A later decision overturned Jarchow to the extent that it suggested that an insurer could be liable for emotional distress without having acted in bad faith.[31] Another decision held that an insured may not recover for emotional distress based on the insurer's negligent bad faith, unless the insured is a foreseeable victim of trauma caused by that negligence.[32] Yet another California decision ruled that a claimed insured did not have a cause of action against the insurer for alleged infliction of emotional distress based on the fact that the lawsuit to clear title was brought on behalf of another insured.[33] Finally, Jarchow has been held not to create a duty under the implied covenant to establish title for the insured's encroaching improvements, when the policy terms do not so obligate the insurer.[34] Thus, after Jarchow, California has adopted the more conventional doctrine that an insurer may not

16.1.4.2 Punitive Damages

If an insurer has acted in bad faith toward its insured, it can be liable to the insured for punitive damages. Punitive damages are punishment for outrageous conduct. The purpose of punitive damages is to punish and deter reprehensible conduct; such an award is not considered to represent compensation to the insured:

> Punitive damages are not intended to compensate the plaintiff, but rather are awarded "to punish the wrongdoer, and to deter the wrongdoer and others from similar conduct." … "Punitive damages may properly be imposed to further a State's legitimate interests in punishing unlawful conduct and deterring its repetition."[36]

Thus, simple negligence or breach of contract is not sufficient to support punitive damages.[37] Rather, something more than a showing of bad faith conduct is required to entitle the insured to an award of punitive damages.[38] A punitive damage award may be reviewed and struck if it is so excessive as to

"Where the defendant's wrongdoing has been intentional and deliberate, and has the character of outrage frequently associated with crime, all but a few courts have permitted the jury to award in the tort action "punitive" or "exemplary" damages, or what is sometimes called "smart money." [37] See Restatement of Torts 2d, § 908, Comment d. at 466 (1977). The Restatement was cited in Enright v. Lubow, 202 N.J.Super. 58, 493 A.2d 1288 (1985); app. 215 N.J. Super. 306, 521 A.2d 1300 (1987), which held: "It is error to award punitive damages if there has been no bad motive or wanton indifference. Punitive damages are not awarded for mere inadvertence, mistake, errors of judgment and the like, which constitute ordinary negligence, nor are they permitted merely for a breach of contract."

[38] "Something more than the mere commission of a tort is always required for punitive damages. There must be circumstances of aggravation or outrage, such as spite or "malice," or a fraudulent or evil motive on the part of the defendant, or such a conscious and deliberate disregard of the interests of others that his conduct may be called wilful or wanton. Lacking this element, there is general agreement that mere negligence is not enough, even though it is so extreme in degree as to be characterized as "gross," …which occasionally…has been stretched to include the elements of conscious indifference to consequences, and so to justify punitive damages." Prosser, Law of Torts, §2, pp. 9-10 (1971) (footnotes omitted) [cited in Enright v. Lubow, 215 N.J. Super. 306, 521 A.2d 1300 (1987)]. An Indiana decision said: "Plaintiff must establish by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant acted with malice, fraud, gross negligence or oppressiveness. [citation omitted] …[W]e have required that there be evidence which is 'inconsistent with the hypothesis that the tortious conduct was the result of a mistake of law or fact, honest error of judgment, overzealousness, mere negligence, or other such noniniquitous human failing.' [citation omitted]" Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Pokraka, 595 N.E.2d 244 (Ind. 1992).

[39] Since the purpose is to punish rather than compensate, punitive damages are awarded only when the insurer's conduct was reprehensible, malicious, or showed intentional disregard for the rights of the insured. Most states apply a set of factors to be reviewed by the courts to determine if the amount awarded by a jury was so large as to violate the insurer's constitutional rights under the state constitution or the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. The Fourteenth Amendment imposes substantive limits on the size of a punitive damages award. The United States Supreme Court has applied a three-part test to determine whether an award of punitive damages is excessive. See BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 568, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 134 L.Ed.2d 809 (1996); State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 U.S. 408, 123 S.Ct. 1513, 155 L.Ed.2d 585 (2003). This test asks the reviewing court to weigh: "(1) the degree of egregiousness or reprehensibility of the conduct; (2) the disparity between the harm or the potential harm suffered and the punitive damages award; and (3) the difference between the punitive damages and the possible civil or criminal penalties imposed for the conduct." BMW, 517 U.S. at 575. A punitive damage award of ten times the amount of the compensatory award or more is constitutionally suspect. "[I]n practice, few awards exceeding a single-digit ratio between punitive and compensatory damages, to a significant degree, will satisfy due process." Campbell, 538 U.S. at 425. In Kimble v. Land Concepts, Inc., 353 Wis.2d 377, 845 N.W.2d 395 (Wis. 2014), cert.den., 135 S.Ct. 359, Oct. 14, 2014, the court found that an award of 33 times the compensatory damage award violated the state constitution's due process protection, which has been interpreted using the United States Supreme Court analysis under the Fourteenth Amendment.

[40] Georgia caps punitive damages at 25%. "To prevail on a claim for an insurer's bad faith under OCGA § 33-4-6, the insured must prove: (1) that the claim is covered under the policy, (2) that a demand for payment was made against the insurer within 60 days prior to filing suit, and (3) that the insurer's failure to pay was motivated by bad faith." Bayrock Mortgage Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 286 Ga.App. 18, 19, 648 S.E.2d 433 (2007). "Penalties for bad faith are not authorized where the insurance company has any reasonable ground to contest the claim and where there is a disputed question of fact." Assurance Co. v. BBB Serv. Co., 259 Ga.App. 54, 58(2), 576 S.E.2d 38 (2002). "Bad faith is shown by evidence that under the terms of the policy under which the demand is made and under the facts surrounding the response to that demand, the insurer had no 'good cause' for resisting and delaying payment." Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Griffin, 302 Ga.App. 726, 730-1, 691 S.E.2d 633, 636-7 (Ga.App. 2010). In Wilmington Plantation, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 5102622 (M.D.Tenn.) (unpublished); recommendations adopted, 2011 WL 5117765 (M.D.Tenn.) (unpublished), the insured blew Tennessee's law, Tenn. Code Ann. § 56-7-105, which says a court may impose a penalty of up to 25% plus attorney's fees when an insurer refuses in bad faith to pay a loss. As the court explained, the law is to be strictly construed, and requires the insured wait at least sixty days after making a formal demand for payment before suing for bad faith. The insured filed suit less than 60 days after it submitted its claim notice, precluding the insurer from responding to the claim and making a mockery of its allegation that the insurer had denied the claim in bad faith. Wisconsin caps punitive damage awards also. See Wis.Stat. § 895.043. For a further collection of penalty statutes, see Allan D. Windt, Insurance Claims & Disputes: Representation of Insurance Companies and Insureds, Sixth Edition, § 9:25, Thomson Reuters. Utah has declared that a claim for breach of contract does not support a demand for punitive damages. Canyon Country Store v. Bracey, 781 P.2d 414 (Utah 1989); Black v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2004 UT 66, 100 P.3d 1163 (Utah 2004). In Johnsen and Allphin Properties, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 6459579 (D. Utah 2016) (unpublished), the court held that the same principle applies to a title insurance contract.

16.1.5 Title Cases On Bad Faith Failure To Indemnify Or Clear Title

Under the bad faith doctrine, an insurer may be sued if it breaches the covenant of good faith and fair dealing as to the duty to indemnify the insured for actual loss. Several courts have found that an insurer that takes action to clear title is operating under a separate policy covenant, the breach of which is akin to bad faith. See §3.4.1 for a discussion of those cases.

The doctrine of first party bad faith failure to indemnify the insured typically requires that an insured prove that the insurer denied a claim without a reasonable basis, contrary to settled law, and exhibited conduct evidencing a malicious intent or special ill will toward the insured.[41] There is no breach of the duty to indemnify, and no bad faith conduct, when the insured has not sustained a loss.[42] Similarly, there could be no bad faith failure to indemnify when the insurer successfully defended title, because no loss is payable to an insured when title is established as being in the condition in which it was insured.[43] Also, an insurer has not acted in bad faith by failing "to attempt in good faith to effect a prompt, fair, and equitable settlement of the claim" (a phrase borrowed from the Unfair Claims Practices Act discussed at §2.1) when the amount of the loss it pays is based on a rational formula or an appraisal.[44] Further, an insurer does not act in bad faith by denying a claim [41] In REVI, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 290 Va. 203, 776 S.E.2d 808 (Va. 2015), the jury determined that the insurer acted in bad faith by denying a claim because the insured had not established that a use restriction caused any loss in value, whereas the insured put on evidence that the restrictions diminished the value of the property by $1.6 million. See also Kimble v. Land Concepts, Inc., 353 Wis.2d 377, 845 N.W.2d 395 (Wis. 2014), cert.den., 135 S.Ct. 359, Oct. 14, 2014, which affirmed a finding that a title insurer wrongly denied a claim of a lack of access to the property, based largely on the claim that the insurer knew that "there was no reasonable alternative access point" and "withheld" information from the insureds that suggested that the access right held by the insured was defective.

[42] In Youngblood v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 923 F.2d 161, 164 (11th Cir. 1991), an undisclosed easement came to light after the insured had sold the property and assigned the purchase money mortgage. The grantee from the insured did not sue for breach of warranty. The (former) insured told the insurer to "fix it or pay him." The insurer refused, on the basis that the insured had suffered no loss. The court entered a directed verdict on the breach of contract claim and an award of punitive damages was struck on appeal. The appeals court found no evidence of bad faith, ruling that the insurer had at least an arguable basis for denying the claim. Similarly, in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. The Machado Family Limited Partnership, 2017 WL 3622006 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court abated an insured's claim that a title insurer acted in bad faith by not clearing its title faster, because the insured had not yet proven either that the insurer had a duty to act or that the loss it had already paid was less than the full loss.

[43] "Under the title insurance policy, appellee was obligated to defend appellant's title against adverse claims, and in the event a court of last resort adjudicated such a claim meritorious, to indemnify appellant for his property loss. Precise language to this effect allows appellee the opportunity to defend a suit brought by an adverse claimant before having to pay the insured. Southern Title Guarantee Co. v. Prendergast, 494 S.W.2d 154, 156 (Tex. 1973). In this case, appellee successfully defended appellant's title against Piotrowski's adverse claim, thus by the terms of the policy, appellee was never obligated to pay any proceeds." Martinka v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 836 S.W.2d 773, 776 (Tex.App. 1992). In Gillard v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 345086 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the court dismissed the insured's bad faith claim because, in a prior lawsuit, the court had determined that the insured had good title.

[44] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Patriot Bank, 2015 WL 2228549 (Tex.App.-Houston 2015) (unpublished), the court affirmed the dismissal of the insured's claim of bad faith after finding no evidence that First American's loss payment was irrational. First American's appraiser found the two lots whose title had failed to be worth $205,000. The insurer tendered that amount twice. The bank then produced an appraisal saying the lots were worth $1,695,000. First American's claim handler sent the bank's appraisal report to the company's appraiser, who "concluded that the appraisal when its reason for doing so is reasonable, not contrary to controlling precedent, and not clearly motivated by ill will or reckless indifference.[45]

An insured may allege that a title insurer acted in bad faith in seeking to clear title, by acting without diligence, or by asserting a defense to the adverse claim that lacked a good faith basis in fact or law, refusing to settle the dispute for a reasonable amount when the prospect of vindicating the insured's title were bleak, or taking action that would never adequately clear the title.[46] See the cases at §3.4.1 that discuss the so-called covenant to clear title with reasonable diligence.

was not credible and based on unsupported assumptions." The bank's bad faith claim rested solely on the assertion that the insurer failed to pay the amount the bank claimed to be the value of the property. The court noted that a mere disagreement about the amount of loss owed does not rise to the level of bad faith. The court said that the claim administrator's affidavit "established that First American reasonably investigated Patriot's claim and determined that title to the Property had failed, and First American attempted to promptly effect what it reasonably considered to be a fair and equitable settlement of the claim based upon First American's understanding of the Policy and its reliance upon an independent appraisal, within a reasonable time after it collected and evaluated the necessary information."

[45] In FV-1, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1611144 (M.D.Tenn. 2015) (unpublished), the court dismissed the bad faith claim because it found that the insurer had a plausible basis for denying the claim, though its decision was incorrect, and thus Tennessee's statutory standard for a bad faith claim could not be met. Also, in BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 4647894 (D. Utah 2015) (unpublished), the court found that the insurer had not denied the claim in bad faith. Utah decisions say that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a promise not to intentionally thwart "the other party's right to receive the fruits of the contract." However, that covenant is not a device to be used to establish new rights or duties not found in the insurance contract, or to insert terms that are inconsistent with the contract's express provisions. Also, the covenant cannot compel a party to act "to its own detriment for the purpose of benefitting another party to the contract." The court said that the lack of policy coverage was clear, and the insurer's position was based on sound precedent and a fair reading of the policy's terms. To find that it had acted in bad faith, the court said, would give the insured "rights not provided for in the contract, contradict the express terms of the contract, and compel Old Republic to involuntarily benefit Plaintiffs to its own detriment." The rulings on policy coverage by the district court were affirmed on appeal, in BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 830 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2016).

[46] In Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. San Benito Bank and Trust Co., 756 S.W.2d 772 (Tex.App. 1988), when a lender was in third position instead of second as insured, and the insurer elected to clear title, the court found that the insurer breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing even though it obtained a release of the competing mortgage. It followed a convoluted path in removing the other lien, and the insured lender eventually had its lien extinguished. The court found that the insurer's pattern of inactivity and delay evidenced reckless disregard of the insured's rights. In Anastasi v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 137 Hawai'i 104, 366 P.3d 160 (Hawaii 2016), the Hawaiian Supreme Court ruled that a title insurer defending under a reservation of rights has an "enhanced" duty of good faith, which it can breach if it continues to defend the insured in litigation after it determines there is no meritorious defense, and that defense to delays payment to the insured. The court did not find that Fidelity acted in bad faith, but only that there was a genuine issue of material fact "as to whether Fidelity met the enhanced standard of good faith." Thus, it sent the case back down to the trial court. In Bar-K, Inc. v. Security Title Corp., 2010 WL 3333391 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), by contrast, the court found that the insurer acted in good faith and with great diligence in the successful clearing of the insured's title, and that the insured breached the policy by his failure to cooperate in that effort. See §3.4.1.2 concerning the insured's contractual duty to cooperate in the clearing of title.

16.1.6 Title Cases On Bad Faith Failure To Defend

An insurer's unjustified and malicious rejection of a tender of defense may make it liable to the insured for punitive damages.[47] However, when there is no duty to defend, the rejection of the defense is not wrongful, and thus cannot lead to bad faith damages. The mere assertion that the duty to defend is broader than the duty to indemnify does not create coverage.[48] Likewise, when the insurer's refusal to defend a count in the action was "reasonably legitimate," its rejection of the defense was not in bad faith.[49]

Several courts have held that the ALTA policies contain a covenant to clear title diligently, which can be violated by the insurer's failure to take action promptly or to complete the title clearance within a reasonable period of time. See §3.4.1 and §16.1.5 concerning that issue.

16.1.7 Breach Of Covenant Of Good Faith By Insured

The covenant of good faith and fair dealing is supposed to be a two-way street. An insured violates that covenant if it engages in inequitable conduct in the claim process, the underlying litigation or in coverage litigation. This is often termed "comparative bad faith."[50] However, this doctrine has gained little traction with courts since the concept was introduced.[51]

[47] Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 Mont. 1, 655 P.2d 970 (1982) awarded bad faith damages when the insurer's rejection of its insured's defense was "without justification, was willful, malicious, oppressive, and constituted bad faith." In Brown v. Guarantee Title & Trust/ARTA, the insurer's acceptance of some claims only, and apportionment of fees, was found to be a bad faith act. In Brown, the insured's experts opined that all of the action was covered by the policy, and further that the refusal to accept the full defense "was unreasonable, contrary to industry standards, and constituted bad faith." To this, the experts added that the insurer had failed to "meaningfully respond" to the insured's demand for payment. The insured was awarded the defense costs in the underlying action which the insurer had not paid, and the attorneys' fees incurred in bringing the bad faith action. In Lehman Commercial Paper Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 26741 (C.D.Cal.) (unpublished), an insurer was found not entitled to dismissal of a bad faith claim despite the fact that it was defending the insured, because it could possibly be liable for a bad faith investigation, the court said. Although on remand the district court may determine that LTIC's belief was incorrect, LTIC still had a reasonably legitimate or arguable reason for refusing to pay the defense costs." Enron Corp. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 940 F. 2d 307, 314 (8th Cir. 1991).

[50] In Peckham v. Continental Casualty Co., 895 F.2d 830 (1st Cir. 1990), the court said "Courts should not permit bad faith in the insurance milieu to become a game of cat-and-mouse between claimants and insurer, letting claimants induce damages that they then seek to recover, whilst relegating the insured to the sidelines as if only a mildly curious spectator." See also, Anderson, Placing a Check on an Insured's Bad-Faith Conduct: The Defense of Comparative Bad Faith, S. Texas L.Rev. Vol. 35, pp. 485-534 (1994). The subject of setting up the insurer for damages and a bad faith cause of action are fully discussed in Ashley, The Ethics of Setting Up Insurance Companies, Bad Faith Law Report, Vol. VI, No. 3, pp. 45-9.

[51] See Barbara O'Donnell, Preparing for and Defending Against Bad Faith Claims, in The Brief, American Bar Association Tort Trial & Insurance Practice Section, Summer 2016, p. 44, discussing more recent decisions that have rejected the doctrine of comparative bad faith, including Kransco v. American Empire Surplus Lines Ins. Co., 2 P.3d 1 (Cal. 2000) and Kim v. Allstate Ins. Co., 223 P.3d 1180 (Wash.App. 2010).

However, other doctrines bar the insured from colluding against or defrauding the insurer. A collusive settlement agreement between the insured and the plaintiff may be found to be unenforceable.[52] Also, in California and other states, the insured may not assign to the plaintiff its cause of action for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing as part of a stipulated judgment against the insured, when that assignment is coupled with a covenant not to execute against the insured.[53] See §2.14 concerning voluntary settlement by the insured, which discusses decisions involving collusive settlements.

16.1.8 Bad Faith And Closing Protection Letters

The tort of first-party bad faith does not apply to a claimed breach of a closing protection letter, because it is not an insurance policy. See the discussion of this subject at §14.6, regarding defenses that may be claimed liability under a closing protection letter.

Rep. 7 (Ariz.App. 1 Div. 2015), the insureds formed an entity to purchase the mechanics' lien claims that were the subject of the claim. They then demanded that the insurer pay more to release the liens than the insureds had paid to buy them. The court held that the insureds vitiated policy coverage by making the settlements, and that the arrangement was a collusive settlement that did not fit within an Arizona rule that allows an insured to settle a lawsuit without the insurer's consent when it is being defended under a reservation of rights. Also, see Sisco v. Nations Title Ins. Co., 278 A.D.2d 479, 718 N.Y.S.2d 82, 2000 N.Y. State Farm*, 5 Cal.App.4th 1104, 1114, 7 Cal.Rptr.2d 131 (1992)), the court said that such arrangements create "certain risks ... which override the policies of encouraging settlements and equalizing an insured's bargaining power." With such a no-pay judgment, "the insured is shielded from any liability which would trigger the duty to indemnify." Given these circumstances, the court said, it would be inequitable for the insured's cause of action for bad faith to survive the stipulated judgment.

16.1.9 Discovery In And Conduct Of Bad Faith Lawsuits

Bad faith litigation presents a number of procedural and discovery issues. In the bad faith suit, the insurer's claim file is a key element of discovery. The insurer may claim that parts of the file are privileged but, in most states, the bulk of the claim file is considered to be discoverable.[54] Some documents are entitled to either the attorney-client or the "prepared in anticipation of litigation" privileges.[55]

An insurer often defends a bad faith claim, at least in part, by asserting that it adopted its coverage position based on the advice of outside coverage counsel.[56] Coverage opinions issued to insurance companies by outside counsel are generally deemed to be privileged, and protected from discover unless the insurer-client waives the privilege.[57] The insurer does not waive the privilege by making a demand in the lawsuit with the insured for reimbursement of the fees incurred from the coverage counsel for the opinion.[58] An outside adjuster's file was found privileged, when the court

L.J. 191, 208 (1998); Medaglia, Uttrich and Love, Privilege, Work Product, and Discovery Issues in Bad Faith Litigation, 32 Tort & Insurance Law Journal 1, p. 1. In U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 1629942 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the court provided an erudite canvass of the law concerning discovery of the claim file and loss reserves. It concluded that an insurer's loss reserve information was not discoverable because the insured had not alleged bad faith conduct, but that the claim file was all or mostly discoverable despite the assertion of privilege. In Little Italy Development, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 4944259 (N.D. Ohio) (unpublished), the court followed the Ohio rule that attorney-client communication is not privileged, when the insurer is accused of bad faith, until the time the coverage determination is made; the privilege does apply after that date.

[55] See Windt, Insurance Claims and Disputes, Second Edition, §§9.19, 9.20, pp. 477-81; Medaglia, Uttrich and Love, Privilege, Work Product, and Discovery Issues in Bad Faith Litigation, 32 Tort & Insurance Law Journal 1.

[56] The advice of counsel defense to a bad faith claim has become so commonplace that plaintiffs have suggested the notion that coverage counsel can be sued for what is termed aiding and abetting insurer bad faith if coverage counsel is less than unequivocal in opining that there is no coverage. See Gena L. Sluga and Cara L. Christian, Defense of the Emerging Claim of Aiding and Abetting Bad Faith, in The Brief, American Bar Association Tort Trial & Insurance Practice Section, Fall 2016, p. 40, citing among other decisions Chalpin v. Snyder, 207 P.3d 666 (Ariz.App. 2008). In that decision, coverage counsel Snyder was sued for aiding and abetting an insurance company's claim denial and stonewalling of the insured's claim of bad faith. Snyder had written an internal memorandum admitting that the insured could prevail under the reasonable expectations doctrine, despite having opined that there was no coverage under a strict legal interpretation of the policy.

[57] In Umpqua Bank v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 997212 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished), although an outside coverage counsel had blurred the lines between claim adjuster functions and coverage advice, his primary role had been as coverage counsel, and thus his communications with the insurer were privileged. However, the attorney's communication was before litigation and thus did not fall under the separate work product doctrine. Finally, most communication between the outside coverage counsel and a coverage consultant he hired was discoverable, but not any that would disclose privileged communication between the counsel and the insurer. In Anastasi v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 134 Hawai'i 400, 341 P.3d 1200 (Haw.App. 2014), cert. granted, 2015 WL 3384471 (May 22, 2015), the court ruled that certain documents prepared by outside counsel and claims counsel were privileged, but others were not.

[58] In Mortgage Guar. & Title Co. v. Cunha, 745 A.2d 156 (R.I. 2000), the Rhode Island supreme court held that a demand for attorneys' fees is not an implicit waiver of the attorney-client privilege. In a case of first impression, it adopted the Connecticut decision of Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co., 249 Conn. 36, 730 A.2d 51 surmised that the intent in seeking the file was to get letters to the adjuster from the insurer's coverage counsel.[59] An insurer that relies on the "advice of counsel" defense to a bad faith claim does not thereby waive the attorney-client privilege. The insured is not entitled to view all communication with the attorney, even during the course of the bad faith suit, to find out if the insurer actually followed the attorney's advice. For example, a court found that disclosure of such documents would "not significantly further the Bank's case but will surely impinge on Transamerica's ability to freely and openly communicate with its attorneys matters about the ongoing lawsuit."[60]

Attorney work product of an insurer's in-house counsel should be considered privileged.[61] The in-house attorney claims adjuster is counsel to the insurer, and in most cases takes the role of coverage counsel to the insurer as well as claim investigator. California recognizes "the unique and complicated nature of title insurance, requiring, according to Chicago Title, the hiring of attorneys to perform claims handling roles." Thus, in-house counsel's legal advice to the client-employer is entitled to privilege.[62] However, California also follows the "dominant purpose" rule, looking to the person's role in preparing a document in order to determine whether or not it is entitled to claim a privilege. Thus,

> Where an attorney is hired both to investigate and to advise the client, the court may have to review the attorney's files in camera to determine which documents reflect investigative work and which reflect the rendering of legal advice.[63]

(1999), which held that the privilege is waived "only when the contents of the legal advice is integral to the outcome of the legal claims of the action."

[61] See Ruger v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 1996 WL 769793 (Del.Super.) (unpublished), in which the insured sought to discover both an opinion letter of outside coverage counsel and in-house counsel's file notes, correspondence and research materials. The discovery request was withdrawn as to the in-house counsel's material, however, so the court did not directly address the issue. Also see Young, The Work Product Doctrine: Functional Considerations and the Question of the Insurer's Claim File, 64 U. Chicago L.R. 1425 (Fall 1997).

Superior Court*, 174 Cal.App.3d 1142, 220 Cal.Rptr. 507 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1985) held that a title claim administrator's legal work is "so intertwined with activities which were wholly business or commercial that a clean distinction between the two roles became impossible to make."

The court noted with apparent agreement the statement by amicus CLTA that "due to the unusual nature of title insurance, claim administrators must make legal judgments, which is why the industry employs attorneys in the position." The California Supreme Court criticized 2,022 Ranch in Costco Wholesale Corp. v .Superior Court, 47 Cal.4th 725, 733, 101 Cal.Rptr.3d 758, 219 P.3d 736 (2009), saying that what matters is the nature of the relationship between the lawyer and the insurer, not the subject of the communication. If the relationship is as attorney-client, even non-legal communications are privileged. In Umpqua Bank v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 997212 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished), relying on both 2,022 Ranch and Costco, the court found that, although an outside coverage counsel had blurred the lines between claim adjuster functions and coverage advice, his primary role had been as coverage counsel, and thus his communications with the insurer were privileged.

Second, an insured sometimes seeks the insurer's manuals and bulletins to establish bad faith conduct by a violation of company guidelines. Courts have held that company manuals are subject to discovery.[64] For example, one court found these documents relevant to the insurer's good faith in the claim at issue:

> ...Commonwealth argues that documents pertaining to Commonwealth's internal policies are not relevant and inadmissible to show defendant's negligence in performing its responsibilities. Commonwealth cites Virginia precedent for restricting the use of internal guidelines to show negligence. Commonwealth also cites the unpublished decision of the Fourth Circuit in Strayer v. Halterman, 725 F.2d 677 (4th Cir.1984). The Strayer case deals with the admission of internal guidelines and policy at trial, and thus can be distinguished. Relevancy in discovery is to be broadly construed. See Oppenheimer Fund, Inc. v. Sanders, 437 U.S. 340, 98 S.Ct. 2380, 57 L.Ed.2d 253 (1978). Information which is not admissible at trial is not necessarily protected from discovery. See Smith v. Schlesinger, 513 F.2d 462, 473 (D.C.Cir. 1975). Accordingly, the Court does not find that the magistrate's Order is clearly erroneous or contrary to law. l28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(A). Therefore, defendant's appeal is denied.[65]

An agent's willful disregard of the insurer's form of exception as published in its manual was evidence of the agent's reckless indifference.

> Finally, Williams testified that he deliberately disregarded the recommended language in the manual provided to his company by Lawyers for writing exceptions. He testified that his title examiners were instructed not to use the language in the manual and that he thought the manual's recommended exception would "only clutter the commitment." The jury found that "exception 11" in the title commitment and policy did not inform the Vellas that the I.R.S. had an outstanding right of redemption. Moreover, Williams testified that Realty and Lawyers had actual knowledge of the I.R.S.'s right of redemption. This evidence, in light of the fact that Realty disregarded the warning and recommendation of the manual that the I.R.S.'s right of redemption be clearly excepted, supported the jury's finding that Realty and Lawyers recklessly misrepresented the facts to the Vellas.[66]

[64] In Umpqua Bank v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 997212 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the insurer was required to produce its claims manual and memos. The court addressed the insurer's objection that the manual is proprietary by saying that the parties should work out a protective order. It required the company to produce company policies involving the underwriting issue in the claim, but not to locate and produce other claim files involving similar facts.

[66] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Vella, 570 So. 2d 578 (Ala. 1990).

A third related issue is how long the covenant of good faith and fair dealing continues in effect. In California, the covenant of good faith and fair dealing has been held to continue even after suit has been filed claiming first party bad faith. In Texas, the duty of good faith and fair dealing terminates when an insured obtains a judgment against the insurer.[67] An insurer cannot be guilty of bad faith conduct in the payment of the judgment. The court noted that, once an insured has obtained a judgment against the insurer, "the disparity of bargaining power inherent in the insurer-insured relationship," which is the source of the good faith covenant, no longer exists.[68] Therefore, the insured also may not seek recovery under either the DTPA or article 21.21 of the Insurance Code for failing to pay the judgment amount to the insured when demanded.[69] Ohio has refused to find that a title insurer has a fiduciary duty to the insured in investigating a claim.[70]

16.2 Fraudulent Or Reckless Misrepresentation In Title Or Escrow

Several courts have found insurers responsible for punitive damages for intentional or reckless misrepresentation of title. For example, when a title agency conspired to defraud the purchasers of a note and mortgage by misrepresenting the status of title and of the borrower's financial condition, the agency and its successor in interest were liable for punitive damages.[71]

Punitive damages were also awarded against an agent and its underwriter when the agent misrepresented title by using a misleading exception in Schedule B. The insured bought at a foreclosure sale. Schedule B made exception for the borrower's right of redemption, but not the IRS's. The evidence of reckless misrepresentation was the agent's intentionally failure to use the promulgated exception that would have identified the IRS redemption right, plus indications that the agent purposefully held back the existence of those rights.

> Punitive damages may be awarded on proof of reckless misrepresentation. "[I]t is the finding of intent to deceive, which must be based upon the initial finding of knowledge of the falsity of the material misrepresentation, that triggers the discretionary power of the factfinder to award punitive damages." [Citation omitted] ... An intent to deceive may be found from a reckless misrepresentation. Punitive damages may be awarded where there is a misrepresentation that is made so > recklessly and heedlessly as to amount to the same thing as knowledge of its falsity.[72]

As with any other suit for punitive damages, there must be a showing that the misrepresentation of title was committed intentionally or recklessly. See the discussion at §16.1.4.2 above regarding the rule that punitive damages are awarded only to punish gross wrongdoing. Abstracting mistakes do not justify awards for punitive damages.[73] Similarly, there can be no misrepresentation by the insurer as to off-record facts that it did not know, since misrepresentation requires that the representing party know the falsity of the asserted fact.[74]

An escrowee may be liable for punitive damages when its conduct shows a wanton disregard of its duties.[75]

[75] For example, when the insurer paid off the seller's mortgage without obtaining a deed to the insureds, and the insurer failed to either cure title or return the money later, the jury awarded punitive damages for breach of escrow duties. Ford v. Guarantee Abstract and Title Co. Inc., 553 P. 2d 254 (Kan. 1976). In affirming the judgment, the court stated: "[t]he continued refusal of these substantial companies to issue a title policy or return the Fords' money, after admittedly disbursing the same in violation of their fiduciary instructions, and in violation of the cardinal rule of title practice, was, to say the least, such gross neglect of duty as to evince a reckless indifference of the rights of the Fords, which deprived them of any opportunity to buy and live out their remaining time in a modest retirement home." 553 P.2d at 268. In Schwartz v. Aracor Search & Abstract, Inc., 2014 WL 4493662 (E.D.Pa. 2014) (unpublished), the damage to the borrowers' credit rating and other harm caused by the theft of loan payoff money justified entry of a punitive damage award against the title agent that stole the payoff money, despite the agent's plea that it had used the money for payroll rather than an evil purpose.

17 Agents & Approved Attorneys

This chapter addresses the various issues concerning title insurance agents and approved attorneys.[1]

17.1 Actual, Implied And Apparent Authority, And Estoppel

The scope of the agent's authority is the recurrent issue in cases involving agents. Authority is an issue when the act in question is beyond the agent's policy-issuing role, such as with escrows; as a defense to coverage given by the agent without authority; and when the insurer seeks to recoup a loss from an agent, on the basis that the agent went beyond the scope of its authority.

The general law of agency applies to title agencies. The three forms of authority which an agent may have are actual, implied and apparent. In addition, a principal may be estopped to deny the agent's acts under certain conditions.

A title agent's actual authority is determined by the agency contract. The relationship between agent and insurer is contractual. It is almost always defined by a written agreement. The contract establishes that the agent may act for the insurer in soliciting and issuing insurance policies.[2] The contract invariably states that any escrow, attorney-client or other duties assumed are not within the scope of the agency.[3] See §17.2 below regarding escrow authority, and §17.3 below as

[1] In California, agents are identified and defined by statute as "underwritten title companies." This phrase is more accurate, given the range of activities that many underwritten title companies undertake which are not done as agent of the title insurer. For brevity's sake only, this treatise uses the term "agent." Further, for the sake of brevity and clarity, this chapter will also refer to approved attorneys as "agents," except as otherwise noted.

[2] A typical agency contract states: "Insurer appoints Agent as its representative or agent to originate and solicit applications for title insurance, to examine and issue Commitments to Insure, conduct settlements and to countersign and issue policies of title insurance in connection therewith... ." First American Title Insurance Company contract reprinted at pp. 325-32, in Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role, A.B.A. Real Property, Probate and Trust Law Section (1985).

[3] "Agent shall not, without written approval of Insurer: E. Receive nor receipt for any funds, including escrow or closing funds, in the name of the Insurer, but shall receive and receipt for same for its own account." Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role, A.B.A. Real Property, Probate and Trust Law Section (1985) at p. 327.

to special issues involving approved attorneys.

The agency contract establishes various limits to the agent's actual authority: its territory (most agents being limited to one or several counties or parishes), the maximum policy amount the agent may issue without special approval, and the extra-hazardous risks for which the agent must obtain approval before giving coverage.

The agency contract is relatively detailed. However, a number of the powers which agents hold are properly termed "implied." As stated in the Restatement of Agency 2d (1978):

> It is possible for a principal to specify minutely what the agent is to do. To the extent that he does this, the agent may be said to have express authority. But most authority is created by implication. ... These powers are all implied or inferred from the words used, from customs and from the relations of the parties. They are described as "implied authority."[4]

Apparent authority, by contrast, pertains to actions for which the agent has no actual authority. The rule of apparent authority is synopsized by the Restatement as follows:

> Apparent authority is the power to affect the legal relations of another person by transactions with third persons, professedly as agent for the other, arising from and in accordance with the other's manifestations to such third parties. Apparent authority results from a manifestation by a person that another is his agent, the manifestation being made to a third person and not, as when authority is created, to the agent. It is entirely distinct from authority, either express or implied. ... [A]pparent authority exists only with regard to those who believe and have reason to believe that there is authority; there can be no apparent authority created by an undisclosed principal.
> ... The manifestation of the principal may be made directly to a third person, or may be made to the community, by signs, by advertising, by authorizing the agent to state that he is authorized, or by continuously employing the agent.
> ... Apparent authority exists only to the extent that it is reasonable for the third person dealing with the agent to believe that the agent is authorized. Further, the third person must believe the agent to be authorized.[5]

A title insurer may not deny liability under a policy issued by an agent that had actual authority to issue policies but which lacked authority to issue the particular policy at issue, if the acts and statements of the insurer reasonably suggested that the agent had authority to issue such a policy.[6]

[6] See Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Moore, 237 Ark. 845, 376 S.W.2d 675 (1964), in which the agent's apparent authority to act state-wide came from the insurer's printing of policy forms with the agent's name on the cover, with the title "State Agent." Also, in Hutsell v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co., 157 Ga.App. 845, 278 S.E.2d 730 (1981), a letter

One title case said:

> "While actual authority is created by written or spoken words or conduct by the principal to the agent, apparent authority is created by written or spoken words or conduct by the principal to a third party." Cameron County, 819 S.W.2d at 603. One who seeks to bind a principal based on the apparent authority of its agent must show that the principal acted in such a way that a reasonably prudent person would believe that the agent had the authority to act as he did. Biggs v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 611 S.W.2d 624, 629 (Tex. 1981). A principal is bound even though the agent lacks actual authority when the agent acts within the scope of apparent authority. Id.[7]

Thus, there was no apparent authority for an agent to accept notice of a claim, when the policy itself directed the insured to submit notice to the underwriter, and there were no "manifestations" from insurer to insured suggesting that the agent had authority to act in the insurer's place.[8] Likewise, the agent's stock of policy forms did not create apparent authority to insure a transaction tainted by fraud:

> The fact that appellee had placed in the hands of its sub-agent, Gibralter Title, Inc., binder and policy forms to be used in the insuring of titles does not support appellant's contention that the subagent had indiscriminate authority to issue same modifying a policy was binding on the insurer because the agent that issued it had actual authority to modify a policy, although the method he used—the issuance of a letter rather than an endorsement—was not authorized under the agency agreement. In FV-1, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1611144 (M.D.Tenn. 2015) (unpublished), the insurer argued that a policy was void because the owner of the insured parcel was the agency principal and the agency contract prohibited the agent from insuring title to property it owned. The court said that, while the agent may have had no actual authority to issue the policy, the agent had the apparent authority to issue the policy because it had an insurance agency appointment and this limitation on its powers had not been communicated by the insurer to the agent's customers. Also see Gondeck v. A Clear Title and Escrow Exchange, LLC, 47 F.Supp.3d 729 (N.D.Ill. 2014), in which the court denied summary judgment to the insurer on a claim of respondeat superior liability for closing acts based on the insurer's confirmation to an Illinois customer that a Florida title company was its agent, and the lack of any "public pronouncements, press releases, or advertising materials alerting the public that A Clear Title was Chicago Title's agent only for the purpose of issuing title commitments, policies, endorsements, and assurances," the lack of such a disclaimer on the websites maintained by either the insurer or the agent, and certain general comments about settlement agents on the insurer's website. In North American Title Ins. Co. v. Maryland Ins. Admin., 2018 WL 4148622 (Md.App.) (unpublished), the court found that a policy was effective despite the fact that the agent that issued it was not appointed by the insurer until two days after the insured mortgage was signed and the commitment issued before closing did not name the insurer as the policy issuer. The court said that the insurer "ratified" the policy by not returning the premium to the insured after the agent reported the remittance.

> Possession of such materials does not of itself create an appearance of authority sufficient to bind the insurer to any insurance contract executed in its name by the agent, nor does such possession, though vested by the principal, clothe an agent with apparent authority to make contracts of insurance which differ in terms from such forms.[9]

Numerous other courts have also held that a title agent or approved attorney's issuance of policy forms does not create apparent authority to act as the insurer's agent for closing acts or other conduct beyond the issuance of commitments and policies.[10] An agent's business card stating that it was an agent of the insurer, and the printing of the insurer's name on certain forms, were not evidence of the conferral of apparent authority on the agent to perform construction disbursing escrows as the agent of the insurer.[11] Statements by an insurer that correctly confirm that a person or company serves as its policy-issuing agent, without more, do not give the apparent authority to the agent to act beyond the scope of its agency.[12] A title agent's statements to a purchaser at closing and disbursement of

His possession of blank title policy forms could bear only upon the authority to issue the title policy. If his endorsement of the check made payable to Southwest Title, and his conducting the closing in response to Northland's letter addressed to Southwest Title, can be said to have given appearance of wider authority, none of this was known or traceable to Southwest Title. Only the conduct of the principal, leading one to suppose that the agent has the authority he purports to exercise, may charge the principal through the apparent authority of an agent. Chastain v. Cooper & Reed, 152 Tex. 322, 257 S.W.2d 422 (1953). Nor can it be held that Southwest Title has ratified a wider exercise of authority on its behalf. The only benefit Southwest Title has received is the insurance premium, and Northland has at all times affirmed that portion of the transaction and insisted upon the performance by Southwest Title of the terms of the insurance contract." *Southwest Title Ins. The construction draw request form that Vilas Title sent in a packet to the owner had a Chicago Title logo at the top and said at the bottom "Issuing Agent of CHICAGO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY." The property owner sued Chicago Title for the alleged negligence of Vilas Title in the handling of the construction loan disbursements. The trial court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment, with the appeals court affirmed. Judge Nielsen found that the Haselows had not proven the essential element for apparent authority, which was acts or statements by the claimed principal suggesting an agency relationship for these tasks. He noted that the Haselows never spoke to anyone at Chicago Title, and the papers containing its name and emblem had been printed by Vilas Title, not the insurer. In addition, the Haselows had not proven that Chicago Title knew about the transaction. Chicago Title's underwriting counsel said in an affidavit that, to her knowledge, "Chicago Title had no notice or knowledge of any construction loan disbursing arrangement involving the Haselows until Chicago Title was sued ... in March 2013."

funds do not create apparent authority of the agent to conduct a closing as the agent of the insurer.[13]

An insurer may be estopped to deny that an agent's actions are binding on it.[14] Estoppel only applies when the agent has no actual authority, and the insurer has not given the agent apparent authority. Estoppel is a tort remedy rather than a principle of agency, and it requires proof of detrimental reliance on the part of the claimant. The principle of estoppel as applied to agents is codified in the Restatement of Agency as follows:

> (1) A person who is not otherwise liable as a party to a transaction purported to be done on his account, is nevertheless subject to liability to persons who have changed their positions because of their belief that the transaction was entered into by or for him, if
> (a) he intentionally or carelessly caused such belief, or

[12] In Stinespring v. Fidelity Nat'l Financial, Inc., 2013 WL 1626203 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the plaintiffs alleged that, at a meeting in Panama, they were told by "the International Officers" of Chicago Title that Manfred Pino Sbravatti, the CEO of LatinAmerica Title Company, "was the 'star' of the Chicago Title international agents and was a man of unquestioned integrity and skill." The court said that, if an officer of Chicago Title spoke of Pino in glowing terms, meant only that he was "an agent of Chicago Title who was authorized to act on its behalf." The statement did not invest further Pino with authority to issue policies outside of the scope of his contract, or generally invest him with an aura of trustworthiness that would make Chicago Title liable to investors whose money was allegedly stolen by Pino on later transactions that did not trigger policy liability. In Gondeck v. A Clear Title and Escrow Exchange, LLC, 47 F.Supp.3d 729 (N.D.Ill. 2014), the court denied summary judgment to the insurer on a claim of respondeat superior liability for closing acts based on the insurer's confirmation to an Illinois customer that a Florida title company was its agent, and the lack of any "public pronouncements, press releases, or advertising materials alerting the public that A Clear Title was Chicago Title's agent only for the purpose of issuing title commitments, policies, endorsements, and assurances," the lack of such a disclaimer on the websites maintained by either the insurer or the agent, and certain general comments about settlement agents on the insurer's website. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. United General Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 3611835 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) (unpublished), a title agent with actual authority to write legitimate policies issued some fake commitments and one fake policy on fake transactions as part of a loan fraud scheme. The FDIC took over the lender insured and sued the insurer on the policies and, more generally, for assisting the fraudsters in making it look like the transactions were real. The FDIC admitted that the policies were not valid and the agent had no actual authority to issue fake commitments. It urged that the insurer gave apparent authority to issue fake policies by assigning and delivering "official, sequentially numbered and countersigned insurance policies, binders, commitments, certificates, and reports bearing UGT legends and the signatures of UGT corporate officers." The court held dismissed the claims on which no fake policies were issued, since a commitment is not an indication of an insurance contract. It did not decide the issue on the fake policy on the motion to dismiss. In In DLJ Mortgage Capital, Inc. v. Kontogianis, 102 A.D.3d 489, 959 N.Y.S.2d 18 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2013), lender customers were found to have failed to prove that a title insurer had cloaked a title company with apparent authority to issue fake title commitments on its behalf.

The court refused to dismiss the claim for the alleged oral contract and estoppel, notwithstanding the fact that the alleged agreement directly contradicted the terms of the policy and the attorney-agent's testimony.

> (3) Change of position, as the phrase is used in the restatement of this subject indicates payment of money, expenditure of labor, suffering a loss or subjection to legal liability.[15]

Apparent authority would also be found in most cases in which estoppel applies, because both require an act of the principal that leads the third party to believe that the agent has actual authority. However, apparent authority does not require any proof of change of position. Also, estoppel is a defense rather than a cause of action, and thus may sometimes be pled when apparent authority is not. As the Restatement says, estoppel is a defense which acts "by preventing the one against whom it operates from pleading the truth."[16]

17.2 Escrow And Other Functions Outside Scope Of Agency

Modern title agency contracts explicitly state that escrow or closing duties assumed by the agent are outside of the scope of the agency. A title agent has no authority to enter into an escrow agreement "as agent of" its underwriter. The insurer is not bound by an agency relationship that does not exist and that is proclaimed only by the alleged agent.[17] The title agent's handling of the closing, without more, does not make the insurer liable for the agent's acts as closer. A title company can and often does have more than one role in a transaction, only one of which is as agent of the title insurer. This fact has been repeatedly acknowledged by the courts:

> [T]he fact that a closing agent such as a lawyer or title company might wear "two hats," in selling the title insurance and closing the sale, does not make the title insurance company liable for the mishandling of the real estate closing.[18]

The tie between the insurer and the title agent at many closings is a closing protection letter issued by the insurer to the customer on behalf of the title agent. However, a closing protection letter affirmatively states that the title company for which the letter is issued is not the agent of the insurer in conducting the closing.[19] The recipient of the closing protection letter thus receives a statement directly from the insurer advising him or her that the title company's agency does not include closing services. Conversely, when the insurer has not issued a closing protection letter, the parties to the closing or escrow do not even have an assurance that the title company is a policy-issuing agent of the insurer, much less that it is an agent of the insurer in conducting the closing.[20] See Chapter 14 for a complete discussion of closing protection letters.

[17] In Bodell Construction Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 945 P.2d 119 (Utah App. 1997), the agency's use of the underwriter's name on settlement statements was found to be without actual authority, and the underwriter was not liable for the agent's escrow acts. In La Candelaria East Harlem Community Center, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 146 A.D.3d 473, 46 N.Y.S.3d 14, 2017 N.Y. Slip Op. 00102 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2017), the court held that, although a title agent signed an escrow agreement as the "authorized agent" of First American Title, it did not have actual authority to conduct a non-title escrow as agent of the insurer and the insurer was not responsible for the claimed acts of the title company in conducting the escrow.

[18] Sommers v. Smith and Berman, P.A., 637 So.2d 60, 62 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 1994) [citing Cameron County Savings Ass'n v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 819 S.W.2d 600 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 1991)].

Similarly, the underwriter is not responsible for the closing acts of an approved attorney. The approved attorney's own words cannot create actual authority from the underwriter. Rather, escrow work is one of a number of services provided by title agents which are not done as part of the issuance of a title insurance policy.[21] The agent's liability to the underwriter for escrow negligence, defalcation or theft of money from the agent's escrow account is discussed at §17.8.3.

Courts in many states have held that the insurer has no respondeat superior liability for the title company's breach of escrow or closing duties, under rulings issued in California,[22] Florida,[23]

[19] Paragraph 9 of the Conditions and Exclusions in the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter says this: "The Issuing Agent is the Company's agent only for the limited purpose of issuing policies. Neither the Issuing Agent nor the Approved Attorney is the Company's agent for the purpose of providing closing or settlement services. The Company's liability for Your loss arising from closing or settlement services is strictly limited to the contractual protection expressly provided in this letter. Other than as expressly provided in this letter, the Company shall have no liability for loss resulting from the fraud, theft, dishonesty, misappropriation, or negligence of any party to the Real Estate Transaction, the lack of creditworthiness of any borrower connected with the Real Estate Transaction, or the failure of any collateral to adequately secure a loan connected with the Real Estate Transaction."

The practice of underwriters in issuing closing protection letters did not implicitly broaden the scope of the agency," and in any event the lender did not request a CPL. The court also said the agency contract was not broadened by issuance of underwriting bulletins by underwriter setting escrow standards. The agent's execution of escrow instructions "as an agent of" the underwriter does not relieve the agent of liability for closing acts.

[23] In Sussman v. First Financial Title Co. of Fla., 793 So.2d 1066, 26 Fla.L. Weekly D1883 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2001), reh.den., the agent was sued for an escrow act. The court found that the agent's execution of escrow instructions the "the agent" of the insurer was not a valid defense by the agent to its liability for the escrow error. The court noted authorities holding that an insurance agent can be the agent of the underwriter for one function and the agent of the insured for other purposes. In Bank of America, N.A. v. Zaskey, 2016 WL 2907732 (S.D.Fla. 2016) (unpublished), a title insurer took custody of loan payoff money from its agent after the lender rejected the payoff. The court dismissed the borrowers' claim against the insurer under respondeat superior for the agent's claimed negligence in the handling of the money, based on Sommers v. Smith and Berman, P.A., 637 So.2d 60, 62 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 1994). In a later decision involving the same parties, the court ruled that the insurer did not become liable in respondeat superior because the agency contract permitted it to audit the title agent's escrow accounts, and dismissed all claims against it. *BAC Home Loans Servicing LP v. [38] In In re Taneja, 2010 WL 4882826 (Bkcy.E.D.Va.) company.[40] However, an insurer can confer apparent authority on a title agent as to closing acts by specific affirmative conduct.[41] Such respondeat superior claims sometimes survive preliminary motions, however, such as motions to dismiss.[42]

Seaver Title Co., Inc*., 2015 WL 7079068 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court held that the title agent was not directly liable to the owner of the property for the work it performed as the disbursing agent for the lender on a construction loan.

[41] See Gondeck v. A Clear Title and Escrow Exchange, LLC, 47 F.Supp.3d 729 (N.D.Ill. 2014), in which the court denied summary judgment to the insurer on a claim of respondeat superior liability for closing acts based on the insurer's confirmation to an Illinois customer that a Florida title company was its agent, and the lack of any "public pronouncements, press releases, or advertising materials alerting the public that A Clear Title was Chicago Title's agent only for the purpose of issuing title commitments, policies, endorsements, and assurances," the lack of such a disclaimer on the websites maintained by either the insurer or the agent, and certain general comments about settlement agents on the insurer's website. Also see Faith Assembly v. Titledge of New York Abstract, LLC, 106 A.D.3d 47, 961 N.Y.S.2d 542 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013), in which a title agency owner stole money that was being held under a construction escrow for renovation of a church. The court ruled on a motion to dismiss that the insurer had no fiduciary duty to detect or protect against the theft, but that its agency contract was not emphatic enough to permit dismissal of the claim that the title company conducted the non-closing escrow as agent of the insurer. In Adrianne Roggenbuck Trust v. Stewart Title Co., 2017 IL App (1st) 161769-U, 2017 WL 4399974 (Ill.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the court denied a motion to dismiss a complaint seeking to make the insurer liable for its title agent's closing acts, including participation in alleged fraud, because of numerous facts suggesting that the relationship between underwriter and agent "was so intertwined that there were no boundaries delineating each company."

[42] See American Home Mortgage Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3349320 (D.N.J.) (unpublished) (alleged participation of agent in loan fraud scheme); and Lee v. Dublin Manor Corp., 2007 WL 2259190 (S.D. Ohio) (unpublished) (alleged agency as to promise to deliver occupancy permit at closing). Both decisions were issued on motions to dismiss, and thus the court did not make substantive rulings on agency. The court in Coldwell Banker Relocation Services, Inc. v. TRW Title Ins. Co., 74 F.3d 1243, 1996 WL 5156 (8th Cir. Jan. 8, 1996) (per curiam) (unpublished) also found an underwriter liable for a title agent's escrow acts, in part based on the issuance of a closing protection letter. The Eighth Circuit refused to follow the case in Bluehaven Funding, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 594 F.3d 1055 (8th Cir. 2010), noting that the opinion is unpublished, nonprecedential and per curiam. In Luan v. Advanced Title Ins. Agency, L.C., 2015 WL 4560383 (D. Utah) (unpublished), the court refused to dismiss claims against a title insurer for money stolen from a title agency's escrow account by a cyber hacker. The court held that provisions in the agency contract regulating the handling of closing money might override the contract term limiting the scope of the agency to issuance of insurance policies. Ironically, the court also held that the plaintiffs properly invoked Utah's law making an underwriter strictly liable for agent escrow account theft. It was this statutory strict liability, and not any actual agency relationship for escrow acts, that caused the insurer to impose controls in the agency contract on the handling of escrowed money.

[43] Strict liability is imposed by Neb. Rev. Stat. § 44-1993(8) and Utah Code Ann. § 31A-23-308. Fla.Stat.Ann. § 627.792 provides that a title insurer is liable for the defalcation, conversion or misappropriation of settlement funds held in escrow by a licensed title insurance agent. However, that law does not apply to attorney title agents, who are regulated by the state Supreme Court. Hechtman v. Nations Title Ins. of New York, 840 So.2d 993 (Fla. 2003). See §17.8.3 for a complete discussion of those statutes and the cases construing them.

a title company's theft of escrowed money when no title commitment was issued and the money was not held for use in a closing.[44]

Claimants have attempted to make insurers liable for acts beyond the scope of the title agent's actual authority by asserting that the insurer was negligent in the hiring and supervision of the agent. Some states do not recognize such a cause of action.[45] Other courts have rejected the claim on the basis that the insurer has no duty to a non-insured.[46] A related theory is that the principal recklessly appointed an unfit "managerial" agent, and thus may be assessed punitive damages for the agent's actions. A title agent is not a managerial agent. It does not have the supervisory authority to act for the insurer.[47] The agency is independent, and not the functional equivalent of a branch or division office of the insurer.[48] As a result, this liability theory is equally inapplicable to title agents except in

Co.*, 53 So.3d 331 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2010). Hechtman held that the liability law applied only to non-attorney agents licensed by the state insurance commissioner, not attorney agents who are regulated only by the Supreme Court. Winkler said that the liability law does not apply when the title company holds money escrowed under condo reservation agreements for units that were never scheduled for closing and on which no title commitments were issued. Cohen said the underwriter was not liable for the title company's theft of escrowed funds when the title company only acted as escrowee and a different company issued the title insurance commitment and policy.

[45] A negligent hiring and supervision claim was rejected in Stinespring v. Fidelity Nat'l Financial, Inc., 2013 WL 1626203 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), In Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Insurance Co., 992 F.2d 1231 (1st Cir. 1993), the court found: "Rhode Island does recognize the direct liability of an employer to third parties for damages caused by employees or agents who were negligently hired, trained or supervised." The court said there was no evidence that the insurer knew or should have known that the agent was unfit, however. It went on: "Focus next argues that American's failure to give Landman [the agent] person instructions or training with respect to title insurance or title searching, failure to conduct seminars or courses, and failure to audit Landman's work constituted negligence and resulted in Focus's loss ... . As we have stated already, however, American was under no duty to provide Focus with a title report, and any title search undertaken by Landman or American was for American's benefit, not Focus's. Thus, any failure on American's part to train Landman is not actionable by Focus." 992 F.2d at 1238.

The rule is based on the notion that it would be improper ordinarily to award punitive damages against one who is personally innocent and therefore liable only vicariously. … ' Since Inter-County Abstract was an independent agency, it was not a 'managerial agency.'"

[48] In Lane v. Security Title & Trust Co., 382 S.W.2d 326, 332 (Tex.App. 1964), the court said: "We do not agree with the premise that Post was acting in a managerial capacity for Security. He and Frederick operated their own business as partners under an assumed name. They were employed only as issuing agents by Security, with authority only to issue title policies and binders on printed forms furnished to them by Security and bearing the signatures of its president and secretary and its corporate seal. If they had been managers of Security's offices in Dallas, instead of their own, they doubtless would have had authority to obligate Security for overhead expenses, such as the wages of clerical employees, rent, utilities, etc., but no such authority was shown. In fact, Post and his partner were not shown to have authority to do the most unusual of circumstances.

A title insurer also does not have respondeat superior liability for a title company's search error.[49] The insurer is not responsible for the tortious or criminal conduct of a title insurance agent that participates in loan fraud, foreclosure rescue or other real estate fraud,[50] or for an agent's claimed duty to disclose information suggesting that the transaction was loan fraud, which information the agent obtained while performing escrow functions.[51] Thus, the insurer is not responsible as the agent's principal for escrow and closing acts absent some specific actual or apparent authority.[52]

Other intentional tortious conduct of the agent is also generally beyond the scope of the agency, and thus the insurer is not liable as principal. An underwriter received summary judgment

The central issue in most such cases is the agency doctrine that, "[w]here a loss is caused by the fraud of a third party, in determining the liability as between two innocent parties, the loss should fall on the one who enabled the fraud to be committed." By appointing the closing agent, the lender is deemed to be the innocent party who enabled the fraud to be committed. This doctrine is examined in Cole Taylor Bank and Proctor.

In this case, the RTC sued the underwriter, claiming that it was responsible for the agent's alleged failure to tell the lender that loan fraud was being committed. The court found, first, that the claimed knowledge of the agent was acquired in the course of closing duties, which are excluded from the agency relationship. Further, however, the court ruled that the agent "did not have a duty to disclose to River City, the lender and policy holder, irregularities, illegalities, or acts of fraud in the loan transaction." dismissing a claim that it was responsible under a deceptive trade practice act for an agent's misrepresentation made at closing.[53] Also, when the agent fraudulently misrepresented title, the insurer was not the principal of the agent in such misrepresentation and could not be sued directly for the agent's fraud.[54] The court did not reach the question of the insurer's liability on the policy, however. Likewise, an underwriter was not responsible for an attorney-agent's role in keeping a lender's construction mortgage off record, enabling the owner to sell out the development without paying off the lender. The court found that the policies issued free of the unrecorded mortgage were not fraudulent or negligent. As to the negligence claim, the court found that the insurer had no duty to the lender, because he was not an insured, and further that the issuance of the "clean" policies was not the proximate cause of the lender's damage.[55] However, a lender survived dismissal when it alleged that the insurer "materially misrepresented the terms or conditions" of the closing protection letter by not disclosing when the letters were issued that the agency contract excluded escrow activities from its scope.[56]

An insurer may be vicariously liable for a title agent's violation of state regulations.[57] Two decisions have upheld punitive damage awards against underwriters for tortious conduct of agents. However, neither case enunciated a rationale for doing so. First, when an agent intentionally disregarded the underwriter's form of exception, misleading the insured, the agent and underwriter were both found liable for punitive damages for reckless misrepresentation. The insurer was held liable although the principal evidence of the agent's misrepresentation was the insurer's instructions not to do what the agent did. The court gave no discussion of the theory on which the insurer was found liable.[58] Likewise, when an agent performed a closing, including payoffs, and failed to obtain a deed vesting the insured in title, an award was upheld for punitive damages against both the agent and the insurer. Again, the court did not discuss the basis for connecting the insurer to the agent's escrow activity.[59]

17.3 Issues Unique To Bar Fund Attorney-Agents And Approved Attorneys

Some states have domestic title insurers formed to underwrite policies issued by attorneys ("bar funds" or bar-related insurers).[60] The bar-related insurer appoints attorneys as its agents. In certain areas, the so-called commercial underwriters have also appointed attorneys as their agents. The attorney-agent has two principals in each transaction--the client and the insurer. In some states, the attorney-agent is considered to be providing legal services to the insurer.[61] In those states, claims against the attorney agent are treated as malpractice claims, with the attendant statute of limitations.[62] An approved attorney or attorney agent does not cease to be counsel to the insured, [61] In a case of first impression, a Connecticut court held that a bar-related title insurer was not liable for alleged negligence in the supervision of its attorney agent members, in part because of its member rules and also based on public policy. DeGirolomo v. Papa, 2010 WL 654388 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished). Florida has held that attorney agents are exempt from licensure and regulation by the Department of Insurance, because they fall under the state supreme court's jurisdiction. See State Dep't of Insurance v. Keys Title and Abstract Co., Inc., 741 So.2d 599 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 1999), rev.den. However, Minnesota attorney agents are not exempt from licensure by the state Department of Commerce. Wayne B. Holstad, PLC v. Commissioner of Department of Commerce, 2014 WL 802318 (Minn.App.) (unpublished). In Boone v. Quicken Loans, Inc., 803 S.E.2d 707, 420 S.C. 452 (S.C. 2017) , the South Carolina Supreme Court ruled that the procedures used by Quicken Loans' title agency did not cause it to commit the unauthorized practice of law, because attorneys licensed in the state performed all title-related tasks that are the practice of law. The court thus found that a proposed class of plaintiffs had no grounds to sue the lender and title agency.

[62] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Jones, 948 So.2d 1243 (La.App. 3 Cir. 2007), an action by a title underwriter against its attorney-agent, the Louisiana court held the lawsuit controlled (and barred) by the three-year statute of limitations for legal malpractice. The court said that, although the relationship was not attorney-client, the work performed by the agent was legal in nature. Similarly, in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Hayden & Butler, P.S.C., 2010 WL 3292931 (Ky.App.) (unpublished), because a Kentucky title agent's contract said that the relationship between underwriter and agent was client and attorney, the state's one-year statute of limitations for professional liability applied, and the underwriter's lawsuit for breach of the agency contract was filed too late. In Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 754 F.3d 1330 (11th Cir. (Ala.) 2014), the federal Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals sent to the Alabama Supreme Court the question of whether or not an attorney title insurance agent is performing a "legal service" when he or she conducts a title search. If so, the lawyer malpractice statute of limitations controls. In Hines v. Holland, 779 S.E.2d 63 (Ga.App. 2015), the certifying attorney was sued for malpractice by the insurer. The court denied the attorney's request to substitute the lay title searcher who made the searching error as the defendant, finding that the duty of care owed by the attorney to the insurer was not the equivalent of the searcher's duty of care to the attorney, and that there was no privity between the searcher and the insurer. In Loan Partners, LLC v. PTC Family Investments, LLC, 157 So.3d 771 (La.App. 4 Cir. 2014), the court held that, because a buyer's malpractice claim against a title company attorney employee had outlawed under the malpractice statute of limitations, so had the buyer's claim against the title company based on the conduct of the attorney employee. In Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 802 F.3d 1248 (11th Cir. (Ala.) 2015), the issue of whether or not a title insurer was timely in the filing of its lawsuit against an attorney for title searching mistakes depended on whether to classify him as a title agent or an attorney providing legal services, and the agency contract alone was not sufficient evidence to put his actions in either pigeonhole. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Crowley, 88 Mass.App.Ct. 1101, 35 N.E.3d 447 (Table), 2015 WL 4887598 (Mass.App.)

however, by assuming duties to the insurer.[63] The intersection of the practice of law and title searching, examination, closing and related acts is discussed further at §13.3.

In some parts of the country, notably New England and several southern states, insurers appoint approved attorneys to examine abstracts or other title evidence produced by others. In most such jurisdictions, the approved attorney is not a title agent.[64] The approved attorney's function varies somewhat from place to place.[65] The approved attorney's essential responsibility is to give opinions of title which the insurer uses to commit to insurance.[66] The attorney often also attends the closing. A description of the New York practice is illustrative:

> The approved attorney performs some of the work needed to write title insurance. The approved attorney is not compensated by the title insurance company and receives no portion of the premium for this work. The services performed by the approved attorney typically include examination of title, attendance at closing, collection and remittance of the title insurance premium, and certification of the title to the title insurance company.[67]

Thus, the approved attorney is "approved" by the insurer only in the sense that the insurer has agreed to accept his or her examination or opinion of title in issuing the policy.

(unpublished), the court held that the fact that a title agent was also an attorney does not convert the claim against him under the agency contract to a legal malpractice claim, or invoke the statute of limitations for that kind of claim.

[63] In Breck v. Moore, 910 P.2d 599 (Alaska 1996), the Moores' action was time-barred because they were charged with constructive discovery of the cause of action on the policy through the knowledge of their attorney, Breck, at the time of closing. The court rejected the Moores' argument that Breck had "switched his allegiance" before closing and become counsel for the insurer in his role as approved attorney. The court held that "Breck was the Moores' attorney at all relevant times," and that "[t]he fact that he exchanged documents with the title insurer and that his fee was channeled through the title insurer does not change his relationship to the Moores." 910 P.2d at 604.

[64] See discussion of the difference between a title agent and an approved examining attorney in Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Northland Building Corp., 542 S.W.2d 436 (Tex.App. 1976), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 552 S.W.2d 425, 20 Tex. Sup. Ct. Jour. 352 (Tex. 1977).

The Connecticut legislature adopted a law in 1996 saying that " [n]o person may act as a title agent unless he is a commissioner of the Superior Court in good standing [an attorney], except any individual who held a valid title insurance license on or before June 12, 1984." The insurance commissioner ruled that pre-1984 corporate or partnership agents must conduct their title agent functions through attorneys or grandfathered individual agents. The circuit court found, in Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co. v. Connecticut Ins. Dep't, 2000 WL 279052 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), that it did not have subject matter jurisdiction to accept an appeal of the ruling.

On occasion, the approved attorney or attorney-agent represents more than one of the parties to the transaction. This makes for very complicated ethical questions and competing duties.[68] The attorney is obligated to obtain the best possible coverage for the insured-client, while also fully disclosing to the insurer-principal all risks in the transaction. For example, in a Massachusetts case, construction was halted on property because the owner-insured was not aware he needed a permit from the state transportation department. The permit was required because the property had been owned by a railroad, a fact not disclosed in the policy issued through the approved attorney. The court obviously looked askance at the role of the approved attorney, noting:

> The lawyers were entitled to compensation for their work for the Bank and would also share, by way of commissions, in the insurance premium paid by the Bank. … [I]t is plain (and becoming better understood) that the lawyers in the particular setup described are placed, or place themselves, in a conflicted situation.[FN3]
> [FN3] ...The conflict may arise initially in the lawyers' selecting a title company which they serve as agent, and again in the writing of the policy, where the interests of the insured may diverge from the company's interests and where negotiation would ordinarily be called for.[69]

The conflict of interest is magnified when a true title defect appears. Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co. shows the extreme case:

> Ables was initially retained by Collins to examine title and to draft the closing documents. He was asked by Collins to secure a policy of title insurance as part of the closing, and he secured a policy of title insurance as part of his attorney-client relationship with Collins. For whatever reason, Ables obliged his client Collins by obtaining a policy for him without an exception for the Chalupsky lawsuit by failing to mention Chalupsky's claim in the attorney's documents on title which he sent to Pioneer. Ables also obliged another client, the sellers, by obtaining a policy of title

The approved attorney or attorney-agent must proceed cautiously in order to zealously represent the client(s) without violating duties to others.[71]

An attorney title agent does not represent the parties to the transaction who are not the attorney's clients. However, the attorney's combined roles can lead to the assertion that some duty of care is owed to the non-client.[72] A buyer's claim that an attorney-agent tortiously interfered with the purchase contract by advising the seller to reject it was defeated primarily because the attorney proved that the seller was his client before he reviewed the rejected offer.[73] In a transaction involving the attorney-agent's own real estate, Tennessee holds that the attorney's special status creates a greater duty of care toward the buyer. In Continental Land Co., Inc. v. Investment Properties Co., LTE,[74] the court found that attorney Brown defrauded the buyer by his suppression of a material fact. The court noted that Tennessee holds that concealment is actionable "when it constitutes a trick or contrivance or when there is a duty to disclose."[75]

The approved attorney or attorney-agent must disclose a title defect to the insurer. In part,

The court noted with unhappiness the attorney's many roles: borrower, settlement agent for his own lender, attorney for his wife, a co-borrower, and title insurance agent.

[72] In Feingerts v. D'Anna, 237 So.3d 21 (La.App. 4 Cir. 2018), the court held that a Louisiana title agency that was related to a law firm gave legal advice on which a seller relied in deciding to sell property, and therefore was liable to the seller when the sale was rescinded. The seller was not a client of the law firm. In JBJ Investment of South Florida, Inc. v. Southern Title Group, Inc., 251 So.3d 173 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2018), the court held that an attorney hired by a title company to draft a mortgage and note might be liable to the lender, with whom he never spoke, for failing to verify that the parcels encumbered by the mortgage were the right ones, even though the title company prepared the legal description exhibit. In Gorsha v. Clark, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1071576 (S.D. Ohio 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the court held that an attorney who owned the title agency hired for a sale, and who drafted the deed given by the seller, could be found to have been the seller's attorney despite the fact that the lawyer never communicated with the seller.

[74] 1999 WL 1129025 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished).

[75] When Brown drafted the deed, he altered the legal description so that it carved out land included in the purchase agreement. The legal description was long and confusing, and the buyer was unable to understand it. The court found this to be a trick or contrivance, which amounted to fraud. Because of his special standing as a real estate lawyer and agent of a respected title insurance company, Brown was bound, "even in his private business transactions, to a higher ethical standard than a non-lawyer party and to ensure that his actions did not reflect unfavorably on the legal profession." The court emphasized that the buyer "stated that in choosing to let Mr. Brown prepare the documents necessary for closing, he primarily relied on Mr. Brown's status as an agent for Lawyer's [sic] Title." Thus, "under the limited circumstances of this case," the court found Brown to have a duty to disclose his unilateral changes to the deed.

this is the same duty owed by any other agent of the insured. Further, however, the attorney is providing the opinion and title evidence on which the insurer will issue the policy, giving the attorney a direct duty to the insurer.

The insured's duty to disclose a known title defect is not canceled by imputing the attorney's knowledge to the insurer, on the grounds that the approved attorney is the insurer's agent. For example, in the Collins case, the insured and his attorney were aware of the title defect but failed to disclose it to the insurer. The insurer issued its policy in reliance on the attorney's opinion. The court voided the policy, for failure of the insured to disclose a material risk to the insurer.

> The record shows that Collins first advised Pioneer of the Chalupsky lawsuit in May, 1973, several months after the policy was issued. It is obvious that Chalupsky's claim to the property significantly "increase(d) the risk of loss" and therefore the information not disclosed was material within the definition of the statute. The misrepresentation in the Attorney's Preliminary Report on Title filed by Ables on behalf of Collins therefore rendered the policy of title insurance void. …
> Despite the fact that Collins did not deal directly with Pioneer prior to the issuance of the policy, he knew that Pioneer was not informed of Chalupsky's claim. He admitted that he had received a copy of Ables' Preliminary Report on Title and an owner's binder from Pioneer, neither of which mentioned Chalupsky's claim. Furthermore, he knew the importance of the Chalupsky claim to the risk assumed by Pioneer. He had earlier insisted on a policy which showed no exception for the Chalupsky litigation. We simply do not believe that Collins, an attorney with experience in land dealings, expected that Pioneer would insure the title without exception for Chalupsky's claim, then being litigated, if it knew all of the facts.[76]

The same result was reached in Weir v. City Title Ins. Co.,[77] Sullivan v. Tomgil Building Corp.[78] and National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.[79] In NCUA, the attorney withheld the damaging information from both principals. The court therefore held that his knowledge could not be imputed to the insurer, based on § 279 of the Restatement (Second) of Agency, which states:

> The principal is not affected by the knowledge of an agent as to matters involved in a transaction in which the agent deals with the principal ... as, or on account of, an adverse party.

Conversely, knowledge of the attorney normally may not be imputed to the insured in order to make Exclusion 3(b) apply. When the attorney was aware of a title defect, but the insured was not, one court found that the attorney was acting adversely to his client's interest, preventing imputation of his knowledge.[80]

The insurer's mere appointment of the attorney as a policy-issuing agent does not give the attorney apparent authority to bind the insurer to his or her fraudulent acts. In Security Union Title Ins. Co. v. Citibank (Florida), N.A.,[81] the attorney-agent committed loan fraud in one loan in his own name, and represented several others who committed the same kind of fraud. The lender argued that the insurer was liable under the principle of vicarious liability of a principal for its agent's fraud, as enunciated in Restatement (Second) of Agency, §§261 and 262.[82] The court found that, while the attorney-agent was "certainly wearing at least 'two hats' with respect to these transactions," the insurer had given no apparent authority, and "did not put Turner in a position that enabled him to commit the frauds with regard to the loans. Thus, it seems clear to us that this attempt on the part of the bank to reach into Safeco's 'deep pockets' and recover its loan losses has no basis in law." In every such situation, the court must determine that the agent was acting within the scope of his or her agency authority when the person committed the fraud in order to find that the principal bears the liability for that conduct.[83]

[82] The Restatement (Second) of Agency §261 (1958) states that "A principal who puts a servant or other agent in a position which enables the agent, while apparently acting within his authority, to commit a fraud upon third persons is subject to liability to such third persons for the fraud." However, the phrase "while apparently acting within his authority" is the critical factor. Restatement (Second) of Agency §262, comment c, says that, "if a third person should know or otherwise has notice that an agent is acting for his own purposes or is otherwise violating his authority, the principal is not liable."

[83] Most states follow the rule enunciated by a Kentucky court that, for a principal to be held responsible for the misconduct of an agent, the wrongful act "must have been done, not only in the course of the servant's employment, but also with a view to the furtherance of his employer's business, and not for a purpose personal to himself." Brooks v. Gray-Von Allmen Sanitary Milk Co., 211 Ky. 462, 277 S.W. 816 (1925). In Richards v. Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund, Inc., 866 F.2d 1570 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 1989), the court held that a principal's liability for an agent's acts was based on the rule that, "when one of two innocent persons must suffer from the acts of a third, he must suffer who put it in the power of the wrongdoer to inflict the injury." 866 F.2d at 1572-73. In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Howard, 2016 WL 1255719 (E.D.Ky.) (unpublished), the court refused to impose liability on a title insurer for the fraud conducted by a title agent because the insurer did not know about the fraud, it was not conducted in the course of the agent's work for the insurer, and the parties making that claim were the borrowers on the loan and were fully aware of and participated in the misrepresentations at closing. Georgia follows the doctrine that "the acts of an agent within the scope of his authority are binding on his principal," which is effectively the same as the Restatement rule. However, when an agent is working for two principals that are aware of the dual agency, neither principal can be held liable by the other for the agent's actions unless they participated in the agent's wrong. As the Supreme Court of Georgia has said, "the misconduct of a dual agent by consent cannot be imputed to either of the principals who is not actually at fault, since each of the principals is under an equal duty to exercise ordinary care in selecting and supervising the agent to protect his own interests." Burnett v. Lewis, 40 Ga.App. 525, 150 S.E. 462 (1929); Hodges v. Mayes, 240 Ga. 643, 242 S.E.2d 160 (1978). In James B. Nutter & Co. v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 5792686 (N.D.Ga. 2016) (unpublished), the court used these principles to hold that a title insurer could not be liable for the closing acts of a title agent who also served as the lender's closing agent, because the scope of the two agencies did not intersect. The closing acts were performed solely as the

The insurer generally is not responsible for fraud or defalcation committed by the attorney against the client. Defalcation by attorney-agents surfaces as a reported decision most frequently in the form of a disciplinary ruling.[84] For example, the insurer was not responsible when the attorney representing the purchaser failed to pay off the existing mortgage. The insurer had issued a closing protection letter to the buyers' lender for the approved attorney. Closing protection letters are the subject of Chapter 14. The court found that neither the approved attorney status nor the closing protection letter made the attorney the insurer's agent. Thus, the buyers had no cause of action against the insurer.[85] However, the insurer was held liable for the fraudulent acts of its approved attorney, when the insurer referred the insured's private attorney to the approved attorney to get title insurance.[86]

17.4 Issues Unique To Affiliated Business Agents

Some title agencies are owned, in full or in part, by people or companies who also own or participate in related businesses: real estate brokers, lenders, law firms and developers.[87] The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act creates a safe harbor for the payment of title insurance premiums to a title agency that is affiliated with another party having an interest in the transaction.[88] The [87] Affiliated business agencies have generated considerable activity in legislation, regulation and litigation, which is beyond the scope of this treatise. An example is found in Guardian Title Co. v. Bell, 805 P.2d 33 (Kan. 1991), in which a statute and regulation limiting captive business were challenged as being unconstitutional.

[88] Section 8 of RESPA (12 U.S.C.A. §2607), adopted in 1973, prohibits payment of referral fees or the splitting of a settlement service fee with a party making the referral of a settlement service. The law is implemented via regulations found at 24 CFR § 3500.14. In 1983, Congress created a safe harbor for "affiliated business arrangements" at §2607(c)(4). Section 8(c) requires three things: (1) disclosure of the affiliation by the form promulgated by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau; (2) that the customer is not compelled to use the affiliated provider; and (3) the owner of the title agency does not receive a "thing of value" other than "a return on the ownership interest or franchise relationship." HUD, as the predecessor to the CFPB as the regulator for RESPA, issued a policy statement in 1996 that said that it construed the Act as meaning that "the entity receiving the referrals of settlement service business must be a ... bona fide provider of settlement services." Statement of Policy 1996–2 Regarding Sham Controlled Business Arrangements, 61 Fed.Reg. 29,258 (1996). That statement also said that HUD would consider a set of ten factors "and will weigh them in light of the specific facts" when judging whether a title agency is bona fide or a sham. The ten factors include whether the provider has "sufficient initial capital and net worth," whether it has "its own employees," and whether it is "located at the same business address as one of the parent providers." Numerous courts have refused to grant deference to the HUD policy statement. In Carter v. Welles-Bowen Realty, Inc., 736 F.3d 722 (6th Cir. (Ohio) 2013), the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals held that HUD's ten-factor test is not the law, and title agencies do not have to prove that they are "bona fide" providers of settlement services in order to meet the statutory safe harbor. In Dewrell affiliated business agency could be subject to the claim that it suppressed information from an insured at the behest or for the benefit of the affiliated business.[89]

17.5 Scope Of Agency For Title Insurance Coverage

The insurer is liable for policy risks assumed by its agent, subject to the limitations described below. The insurer is normally bound by the coverages given by its agent. However, the type of agent or employee involved may have no authority to bind the insurer as to policy coverages. Also, a policy-issuing agent may not have the authority to bind the particular coverage in question. If the agent did not have authority to bind the insurer as to the coverage, the issue becomes whether or not apparent authority or estoppel apply.

Only certain classes of agent employees may issue or amend policies. The ALTA policies state that they may only be issued or amended by an officer of the insurer or a proper signatory. Deletion of an exception by a "title closer" was not binding on the insurer because the closer had no actual authority to amend the policy and the policy informed the insured that only a "validating officer or agent" had authority to amend, negating any apparent authority or estoppel.[90]

Sacks, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 749 S.E.2d 802, 13 FCDR 3251 (Ga.App. 2013), a title agent sued by her underwriter for the premium remittances she owed failed in her inventive argument that the agency contract could not be enforced as a violation of RESPA. She argued that, because the contract was tiered, giving the agent a greater split of the premium if she met a remittance threshold, the premium split adjustment at the upper tier was an illegal inducement under Section 8. The court held that Section 8's safe harbor for agency premium payments is a blanket exemption, and that RESPA does not prescribe certain permitted and non-permitted terms in such agency contracts. In Chultem v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2015 IL App (1st) 140808, 2015 WL 8536788 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2015) (unpublished), the court held that, because attorney-agents in Chicago provide some services in exchange for their share of the premiums, they are within Section 8(c)'s safe harbor. In Edwards v. First American Corp., 798 F.3d 1172 (9th Cir. (Cal.) 2015), however, the Ninth Circuit refused to adopt a firm safe harbor approach. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau has aggressively pursued what it considers to be sham title agencies despite the repeated pronouncements from the courts that the sham versus bona fide analysis is off base. See Consumer Financial Protection Bureau v. Borders & Borders, PLC, 2015 WL 631196 (W.D.Ky.) (unpublished), and the later decision of Consumer Financial Protection Bureau v. Borders & Borders, PLC, 2018 WL 1440606 (W.D.Ky. 2018) (unpublished). In Cantrell v. New Penn Financial, LLC, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 4689226 (D.S.C. 2019) (not yet released for publication), a borrower's claim against a title company based on RESPA's Section 8 was dismissed because the agent proved that the requirements for an affiliated business arrangement had been met.

[89] A Minnesota court refused to certify a class in a much-watched action against Burnet Realty that claimed that the real estate broker had a fiduciary duty to give its customers information on the lowest-cost competitors to its own affiliated business title agency, Burnet Title. Grady v. Burnet Realty, Inc., December 14, 2007, Hennepin County, MN Case No. 27-CV-07-3336. In NRC, Inc. v. Huddleston, 886 S.W.2d 526 (Tex.App.-Austin 1994), a broker misrepresented that an earnest money deposit was being held by it as escrowee, when in fact the check was no good because it had been drawn on a closed account. The court upheld a jury verdict for actual and punitive damages, and entered judgment under the Deceptive Trade Practices Act as well. There is no indication from the NRC opinion that the broker in that case was affiliated with the title agent. However, the case illustrates the conflict of interest and possible liability that an affiliated business agency might face under similar circumstances.

[90] Van Arsdale v. Metropolitan Title Guaranty Co., 103 Misc.2d 104, 425 N.Y.S.2d 482 (1980). The court ruled: "As the policy itself set forth the scope of the agent's authority, by stating the authorized manner by which amendments thereto were to be made, plaintiff, being on notice thereof, knew or should have known of the limits upon the agent's authority and, by disregarding the clear terms of his policy, acted at his peril. ... Since the plaintiff, dealing with the Likewise, agency contracts put limitations on the types of coverages for which the agent may bind the insurer. The typical agency contract states that the agent may not commit the insurer to an "extra-hazardous risk" without the insurer's consent.[91] Some extra-hazardous risks may be defined or listed in the agency contract. Many are identified by the insurer's underwriting manuals and memoranda given to the agent. If the insurer proves a lack of actual authority, the insured must show apparent authority.[92] The agent was found to have apparent authority to bind the insurer to construction lien coverage when state insurance law distinguished between general and special agents of the insurer; the agency was a general agency; its contract covering the entire state and exclusive in all counties but one; the insurer printed policy covers with the agent's name on them, with the title "State Agent;" and the agent was permitted to use its own judgment as to which form of policy to issue.[93] Similarly, when the agent was an authorized signatory, the insurer was bound by the agent's letter stating "You will also note that the survey has been insured," although the agent had no actual authority to give such a coverage.[94] An insurer may also be estopped to assert a limitation on authority which would not be clear to the prudent third party. See §17.1 above for a discussion of estoppel in the context of agency.

A second limitation found in every agency contract is the territory in which the agent may issue policies. When an agency contract permitted the agent to issue policies in any county in the state, the insurer had no basis for denying actual authority to issue a policy covering land in two counties, including one which was not the agent's normal territory.[95] However, when the agency contract limited the agent to several counties, the agent had no authority to issue a policy outside of that territory.[96]

The agent has no apparent authority when the third party has good reason to suspect that such authority is lacking. However, the insured lender had no duty to ask if the agent was authorized to issue a policy insuring a mortgage given by the agent, even though the lender knew that the loan was to cover a shortage in the agent's escrow account just before the insurer audited.[97]

17.6 Agent Conduct In Relation To Claims

The policy states that notice of a claim is to be delivered to the insurer's home office, as further discussed at §2.3. Most if not all agency contracts are equally clear in stating that the agent has no authority to accept a claim notice, waive the insurer's right to receive notice, or adjust the insured's claim.[98] However, some states, including California, have adopted regulations that state that notice to the policy-issuing agent is adequate, and which describe the agent's obligations on receipt of such a notice, as discussed at §2.3.1.

An agent that receives a notice of claim or tender of defense should forward the notice to the insurer immediately, and instruct the insured that further communication is to be with the insurer. The agent may wish to obtain the name of the claim administrator and give it to the claimant, if the insurer's procedures permit that action. The agent may not make any comment to the insured or its representative or attorney about whether or not the claim is covered or if the allegations of the complaint invoke a duty to defend.[99] If it does, the agent may be liable to the insurer for the damages it incurs that flow from the breach of the agency contract. See §17.8.

States differ as to whether or not, in the absence of a specific statute, notice to the policy-issuing agent is adequate to meet the policy's requirement of notice. Some courts have ruled that notice to an agent alone is not sufficient.[100] For example, one court found:

> The policy provisions as to notice were not secret and undisclosed. We fail to understand what visible and apparent interpretation by the Title Company of Sedillo's authority could reasonably have been relied upon by plaintiffs for giving the notices on the policy. The insurance of an agent's own property creates the automatic possibility of a conflict of interest, and only the agent's own integrity avoids serious exposure to the insurer for misrepresentation of the status of title. See United States v. Marlatt, 24 F.3d 1005 (7th Cir. (Wis.) 1994).

The lawsuit by the insured against the agent for failing to forward the tender to the insurer was barred by the statute of limitations. The court also faulted the insured for not making the tender directly to the insurer until months after it learned that the insurer was providing a defense to another insured in the same action.

> We are not here concerned with representations made by the agent in securing plaintiffs' application for insurance, or with undisclosed restrictions upon an agent's authority, but with plaintiffs' total disregard of the plain conditions imposed upon them by the provisions of the written contract under which they seek recovery.[101]

However, other jurisdictions have found notice given only to the agent to be adequate to meet the policy's requirement of notice.[102]

A policy-issuing agent sometimes learns of a defect in title to a parcel that the agent recalls having insured, or of a lawsuit in which a party received a policy from that agent. Such knowledge of an agent is not imputed to the insurer in the ordinary course. Further, the insurer's knowledge of a possible covered matter affecting a person who received a policy, which policy may or may not still be in effect, does not excuse the insured from delivering a notice of claim or a tender of defense, except in the most extraordinary circumstances.[103]

GMFS, LLC*, 910 So.2d 787 (Ala.Civ.App. 2005), in which a statute stating that knowledge of an agent is imputed to the principal gave effect to a notice of claim that was delivered to the agent only, to excuse the insured's failure to deliver a tender of defense to the insurer until after the insured mortgage had been extinguished by a foreclosure and sale. Similarly, in Purcell v. Land Title Guarantee Co., 94 Mo.App. 5, 67 S.W. 726 (1902), when an agent told the insured to ignore a mortgage and that the claim would be handled, the insured was justified in assuming that he had given sufficient claim notice. See §17.1 regarding the application of estoppel generally in the principal-agent relationship.

Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund, Inc.*, 61 Ill.App.3d 911, 18 Ill.Dec. 891, 378 N.E.2d 355 (Ill.App. 3 Dist. 1978), the insurer's agent was also the attorney for the estate from which a lien arose. The insurer was estopped from enforcing the notice provision as a bar to recovery under the policy, based on the imputation of knowledge from agent to insurer rather than a finding that the agent had authority to accept a claim notice.

17.7 Agent Liability To Insured Under Policy

In almost every jurisdiction, an agent is not liable to the insured for losses payable under the title insurance policy.[104] This principle was well-developed in Mickam v. Joseph Louis Palace Trust, in which the insured sued the agent, Seaver Title Company, for its claimed policy loss. The court found:

> This claim is meritless, because Seaver Title is not the insurer under the policy; Seaver Title merely acted as an agent for Security Union. While an agent is liable for his own torts, an agent is not liable for the contracts it makes on behalf of a disclosed principle. [citations omitted][105]

In DAFCO LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 156 Idaho 749, 331 P.3d 491 (Idaho 2014), the court dismissed claims by the loan assignee against the title agent on the policy for lack of privity. In Cummings v. Stephens, 157 Idaho 348, 336 P.3d 281 (Idaho 2014), reh.den. Nov. 5, 2014, the Idaho high court held that Idaho's search statute does not transform a title commitment into an abstract of title, and thus a title agent may not be sued for faulty abstracting of title for having included in a title commitment parcels not owned by the sellers and one they did own but did not intend to sell. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Horn, 2014 WL 1236053 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) (unpublished), a New York court found several title companies liable to the FDIC for issuing title commitments to defunct AmTrust Bank showing borrowers in title before their deeds were signed, and failing to disclose that the properties were being flipped. The FDIC alleged that the title agents had been hired "to provide accurate information, title commitments and chain of title, and to perform other services such as filing and recording deeds and mortgages." The court held that the title agents could be liable for abstractor negligence. The FDIC did not inform the court that New York rejected negligent misrepresentation claims on title insurance policies, in Citibank, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 214 A.D.2d 212, 632 N.Y.S.2d 779 (A.D. 1 Dept. 1995), reversing 620 N.Y.S.2d 717 (S.Ct. 1994). In Brackman v. Southern Tier Abst. Corp., 289 A.D.2d 630, 734 N.Y.S.2d 282, 2001 N.Y. Slip Op. 09768 (A.D. 3 Dept. 2001), an agent was sued for alleged negligence in failing to discover a right of access from the land to be insured to a nearby lake. Framing the issue as negligence, the court found that the agent could be sued by the seller, but that the seller had not proven the search was negligent. A Florida commentator wrote: "Many practitioners fail to recognize the distinction between title insurer and title insurance agent. For instance, many lawyers file policy claims with the issuing agent even though paragraphs 3(b), 4 and 13 of the Conditions and Stipulations ... require that written notice be sent to the title insurer, not the title insurance agent. ... The title insurance agent, who is the disclosed agent of the title insurer on the face of the policy, is not a party to the contract and is not liable on the policy." Boyette, Title Insurance Liability Beyond the Policy, Florida Bar Journal, July/August, 1995, pp. 24-34, at 30. That article provides a thorough review of the Florida statutes defining title insurer and title agent, and the types of suits that may be brought against an agent, such as for escrow or closing liability and abstractor negligence. In Williams v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1112395 (D.Colo. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed April 9, 2019, when a title insurer sued a seller for her false title affidavit that failed to disclose a million dollar judgment against herself and won, the seller's lawsuit against the title agent for search negligence was dismissed on the doctrine of res judicata.

Mickam follows general insurance agency law that the agent procures coverage for the insured but does not become the insurer. In keeping with this principle, the Utah Supreme court held that, when the insurer became insolvent, the agent did not become its coinsurer or reinsurer:

> An insurance agent who acts in an authorized, nontortious manner is not personally liable to the insured for his or her acts or for any contracts which he or she makes on behalf of the disclosed principal. …
> FN. Further, "the subsequent insolvency of the insurance company has been held not to impose liability on the agent or broker, where the company was solvent when the policy was procured." 3 Couch on Insurance 2d §25:48 (rev.1984)... .[106]

However, when an insured sued the title agent after the underwriter filed bankruptcy and rendered the policy worthless, the Indiana Supreme Court held that a title agent may be directly liable to the lender insured as an abstractor of title. It rested its decision on the Restatement (Second) of Torts Section 552, which says that a party in the business of supplying information can be sued in tort if it provides "false information" and the other party justifiably relies on it. The court held that title agents are in the business of supplying information, not insurance.[107] Also, Ohio takes the stance that a title agent "may be liable for failing to disclose an encumbrance where there is privity of contract between the title examiner" and the insured.[108] See §15.12 for a state-by-state summary of the cases that have held, in the various states, whether or not a title company is liable in tort if it is negligent in the searching or examination of title records.

A title agent is also not liable to the insured for other types of claims related to the issuance of the policy, such as an alleged duty to explain the terms of the instruments excepted in Schedule B.[109] However, a title company may be directly liable to the insured for duties it undertakes outside of the scope of the policy. Thus, an agent may be liable for escrow negligence, improper preparation of documents and handling of funds,[110] errors in the recording of documents,[111] searching the title to (unpublished), the court held that, because a title commitment is just an offer of insurance under certain conditions, a seller cannot sue a title agent for alleged negligent failure or refusal to issue a policy, particularly when the seller did not satisfy the conditions for the policy's issuance. Most states would add that there is no privity of contract between the seller and the title agent for two reasons: the seller is not the proposed insured, and the title agency is merely the agent of the insurer.

[120] In Bank of America, N.A. v. Bailey, 2016 WL 3410174 (D.Nev. 2016) (unpublished), a bank sued a title insurance agent as an insurance broker, claiming that the agent "downgraded" the insured's coverage by issuing a new policy that contained lesser coverage than the original policy, to the harm of the insured bank. In this decision, issued on a motion to dismiss, the court ruled that Nevada Title was acting as an insurance broker. It looked to this definition of an insurance broker, from Appleman on Insurance Law: "Generally, the legal distinction between an 'agent' and a 'broker' is that an 'agent' transacts insurance as the agent of the insurer and a 'broker' transacts insurance as the agent of the insured with regard to a particular insurance transaction." An excellent source on the subject of insurance agent and broker liability is Harnett, Responsibilities of Insurance Agents and Brokers, Matthew Bender (1992), which states by introduction: "Areas of potential attack are quite varied, although there are certain defined trouble areas which have surfaced in court. These argued that the title agent orally committed to issuing a First American Eagle™ policy which would have given protection against survey matters, but instead issued a 1992 policy that included the survey exception, the court found a question of fact as to whether or not the agent was liable to the insured for failing to adequately inform the insured or, alternately, to bind the intended coverage.[121]

When sued, the agent may raise some of the same defenses that the insurer would raise as to the same claims, if they had been made on the policy.[122]

The title insurer is not obligated to pay the cost of defending its policy-issuing agent if it is sued. An underwriter will sometimes provide a courtesy defense to the agent if both are sued and the claims against the agent are predicated on the policy and not other acts or duties. However, the agency should not assume that it will receive such a courtesy defense, and should promptly retain counsel to defend itself. When the insured sued both the underwriter and agent on identical grounds, and the agent failed to answer because it assumed that the underwriter was providing its defense, the court refused to set aside a default judgment taken against the agent, because the agent's failure to act was based on "nothing more than a presumption," and a mistaken one at that.[123]

Likewise, in C & D Capital, L.L.C. v. Colonial Title Co., 2013 WL 2278127 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), a claim by a lender against a title agent for having issued policies free of its mortgages on several parcels was barred by the lender's full credit bid at the foreclosure sale of one parcel. 17.8 Agent Liability To Insurer

The liability of a policy-issuing agent to the insurer for risks undertaken in the policy is described in the agency contract. Thus, the essential first step in analyzing what portion, if any, of a loss paid by the insurer under a policy is to be borne or reimbursed by the issuing agent is to review the terms of the agency agreement.

17.8.1 Agency Contracts

The agency contract establishes various limits to the agent's actual authority: its territory (most agents being limited to one or several counties or parishes), the maximum policy amount the agent may issue without written approval, any right given to the agent to use the insurer's name, and the extra-hazardous risks for which the agent must obtain approval before giving coverage.[124] This book's analysis of agency contracts is limited to subjects relating to claim payments.

When there is more than one agency contract in force between the insurer and the agent, the court must determine which contract is the one that applies to the dispute before the court.[125]

17.8.2 Title Losses Payable By Agent

The agency contract makes the title agent liable to the insurer for various acts or omissions. Such loss sharing provisions have been shaped by the availability of errors and omissions coverage. An agency contract typically requires the agent to maintain errors and omissions insurance under a policy having a certain minimum dollar amount.

When errors and omissions claims rose dramatically in the 1980s, premiums took a similar hike and many carriers left the market altogether. During that time, a number of title agencies were unable to pay the premiums or were rejected for coverage. Many agency contracts were rewritten during that time to permit agents to drop errors and omissions coverage. In exchange, the agent typically became liable for a certain portion of title losses. Since that time, it has become commonplace for a title agency contract to require the agent to share in a policy loss.

Errors and omissions insurance became more available and affordable again in the 1990s, and some would attribute much of that stability to the formation of Title Insurance Assurance Company (TIAC) in 1988.[126] Many agency contracts were modified again to require the agent to [124] In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Stewart Title Latin America, Inc., 2017 WL 1078759 (S.D.Tex.) (unpublished), the court held that a title insurer had good cause to cancel its agent, and that act revoked the agent's right to use the underwriter's name.

(unpublished), later decision 2018 WL 3763001 (N.D.W.V. 2018) (unpublished), two different offices of the same law firm signed contracts with the insurer in different years. The loss provisions in the two contracts were different. Both law firm offices had some part in the issuance of the policy at issue. The court held that there was a question of fact as to which contract was applicable, precluding entry of summary judgment.

carry a specified amount of errors and omissions insurance. In many cases, the loss provisions of those contracts were again amended. Some of the agency contracts written during the E & O crisis may still be in force. Other agency contracts contain loss provisions that were introduced or modified during that time. See §17.10 below regarding errors and omissions insurance.

At present, agency contracts reflect a wide range of positions on the agent's allocable share of losses paid on policies issued by the company. The insurer typically is fully responsible for "true" title risks such as forgery, except when the agent permitted the forgery to occur.[127] Some contracts hold agents responsible only for their intentional bad acts or intentional disobedience of written underwriting standards. Also, almost all agency contracts state that the agent is responsible for losses caused by the agent's acceptance of an extra-hazardous risk without the prior written authority of the insurer, with some contracts listing the subjects that are deemed extra-hazardous and others stating that those risks are as identified in the insurer's written underwriting manual, standards or bulletins.[128] Certain other contracts make the agent liable for intentional acts, extra-hazardous risks and gross negligence.[129] A greater number of contracts make the agent liable for all losses caused by [127] The insurer had the right to pursue an agent for a forgery loss when the agency's employee acted as notary and accepted the signature from the imposter. Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Gannon, 774 P.2d 30 (Wash.App. 1989). In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Assurance Abstract Corp., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1597072 (E.D.Pa. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the agent failed to detect the impersonation and forgery. The court held that the agent had no standing to bring a claim against the people who signed the purchase contract as buyers and then assigned the contract to the insured, in its attempt to recoup the loss.

[128] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Pitkin County Title, Inc., 761 Fed.Appx. 802, 2019 WL 315328 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2019) (unpublished), the agency contract said that the agent "shall not, without the prior written approval of [Fidelity's] corporate underwriting department ..., [c]ommit [Fidelity] to insure any Extra Hazardous Risk as defined herein." The contract said that an Extra Hazardous Risk was "all risks which result in a liability not normally assumed by" the insurer. The agent removed the survey-related exceptions without a survey. Fidelity submitted an affidavit that said that the removal of the standard exceptions "exposed Fidelity to greater risk, including claims for off-record matters like easements and encroachments." The court said this was adequate proof that the agent had violated its written instructions. The contract made the agent liable for the first $5,000 of most losses, or the full loss if the cause of the claim was Pitkin's "negligent, willful, or reckless conduct" or its failure "to comply with the terms and conditions of ... the manuals, underwriting bulletins and/or instructions" issued by Fidelity. The court affirmed the judgment against the agent for the full loss, plus attorneys' fees. However, it did so based on the term negligent act rather than the disobedience of written instruction provision.

[129] The issue in First American Title Ins. Co. v. Lipmann, 67 Mass.App.Ct. 1102, 851 N.E.2d 1133 (Table), 2006 WL 2138912 (Mass.App.) (unpublished), was what constitutes gross negligence in the context of a title agency contract. In that case, an attorney agent assumed incorrectly that a federal tax lien located in the title search did not attach to the property. The court had a sympathetic view of the agent, calling his decision to ignore the lien "clearly imprudent" but not grossly negligent. Therefore, the underwriter was precluded from recouping its loss against the agent, under the gross negligence standard of the agency contract. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Crowley, 88 Mass.App.Ct. 1101, 35 N.E.3d 447 (Table), 2015 WL 4887598 (Mass.App.) (unpublished), the court held that an agency contract in which the word "gross" was hand-typed above the word "negligence" limited the agent's liability to gross negligence, even as to those duties that were described by the agreement as breach of instructions or simple negligence. Also, the fact that a title agent was also an attorney does not convert the claim against him under the agency contract to a legal malpractice claim, or invoke the statute of limitations for that kind of claim. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Bowles Rice, LLP, 2017 WL 6329953 (N.D.W.Va.) (unpublished), later decision 2018 WL 3763001 (N.D.W.V. 2018) (unpublished), there were two contracts between the law firm agent and the insurer, one with a liability cap of $1,000 search and examination errors, whether flagrant or merely mistaken.[130] Some contracts go even further, making the agent liable for all policy losses, even those that are not caused by an error or violation of underwriting standards. Often, however, such contracts limit the agent's liability by setting dollar amount caps based on different categories of losses.[131]

Because an agent is a customer to the insurer, most companies strongly encourage management participation in any decision to seek agent contribution or indemnification for a loss. The insurer's claims person must investigate the claim sufficiently to determine the exact source or with a carve-out for extra-hazardous risks and the other with no such liability cap. The court suggested that the liability cap might be enforceable, if that contract applied, even though the agent failed to disclose the enormous mechanic lien risk and broken priority when it sought approval to issue the $775 million loan policy. The court refused to find as a matter of law that the broken priority was an extra-hazardous risk.

[130] A title agency contract can make the agent liable for a blend of both contract duties and negligence. The decision in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Lewis, 2016 WL 6495416 (D.D.C.) (unpublished) offers one of the better analyses of how negligent acts can be classified as breach of the agency contract. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Closure Title & Settlement Co., LLC, 2019 WL 97045, Case No. 3:18-cv-58 (W.D. Va.) (unpublished), the court held that a title insurance company stated a claim against its policy agent for breach of the agency contract due to its insurance of two deeds of trust that named the wrong party as grantor, which cost the insured and insurer money.

[131] For many years, the sum of $5,000 was a common figure used as the agent's share of the claim loss. See American Title Ins. Co. v. Lacelaw Corp., 861 F.2d 224 (9th Cir. 1988), for an example of a dispute involving a "deductible" form of contract. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Southern Land Title, Inc., 2009 WL 5206636 (S.D.Ala.) (unpublished), one paragraph of the agency contract set a liability cap for simple negligence. Another paragraph made the agent fully liable for claims caused by intentional acts, but also contained a reference to "negligence." The court struck negligence from the second paragraph, limiting the agent's liability for a large missed mortgage to the $500 cap. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Home Equity Title Services, Inc., 2016 IL App (1st) 141098-U, 2016 WL 3249097 (Ill.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), the contract contained a provision stating that the agent was responsible for "the first $10,000" of any loss, subject to the terms of a second provision. That other provision was an indemnity of the insurer for all losses and attorneys' fees caused by an error or omission by the agent. The court said the two provisions did not conflict but were complementary. It found the agent liable for the entire $60,000 loss caused by its failure to detect and pay off a prior mortgage loan in the closing of what was declared to be a refinance loan. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Bowles Rice, LLP, 2017 WL 6329953 (N.D.W.Va.) (unpublished), later decision 2018 WL 3763001 (N.D.W.V. 2018) (unpublished), there were two contracts between the law firm agent and the insurer, one with a liability cap of $1,000 (with carve-outs) and the other with no such liability cap. The court suggested that the liability cap might be enforceable, if that contract applied, even though the agent failed to disclose the enormous mechanic lien risk and broken priority when it sought approval to issue the $775 million loan policy. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Pitkin County Title, Inc., 761 Fed.Appx. 802, 2019 WL 315328 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2019) (unpublished), the agency contract said that the agent "shall not, without the prior written approval of [Fidelity's] corporate underwriting department ..., [c]ommit [Fidelity] to insure any Extra Hazardous Risk as defined herein." The contract said that an Extra Hazardous Risk was "all risks which result in a liability not normally assumed by" the insurer. The agent removed the survey-related exceptions without a survey. Fidelity submitted an affidavit that said that the removal of the standard exceptions "exposed Fidelity to greater risk, including claims for off-record matters like easements and encroachments." The court said this was adequate proof that the agent had violated its written instructions. The contract made the agent liable for the first $5,000 of most losses, or the full loss if the cause of the claim was Pitkin's "negligent, willful, or reckless conduct" or its failure "to comply with the terms and conditions of ... the manuals, underwriting bulletins and/or instructions" issued by Fidelity. The court affirmed the judgment against the agent for the full loss, plus attorneys' fees, and rejected the agent's arguments suggesting that its loss was capped at the deductible portion. However, the court based its decision on a finding of negligence rather than that the agent disobeyed written instructions.

sources of the claimed loss, so as to give competent advice to the insurer regarding the agent's duty to contribute.

Many losses stem from errors in searching or examining of title. The agent's liability to the insurer for such an error will most often depend on the terms of the agency contract and the insurer's underwriting standards.[132] Some errors are so essential to the conduct of a proper title search or examination that the insurer is not required to prove that it gave a written standard or directive on the subject.[133] If the underwriter has not given specific underwriting standards on a subject, whether by a national manual or state bulletins or manuals, the agent's duties may be measured by the standards set by, or the custom and practice of, other insurers or examiners in that state.[134] An insurer or agent will sometimes present expert testimony to establish local industry standards for the searching or examination of title.[135] However, some errors are so obvious or blatant that no expert testimony is Pitkin County Title, Inc*., 761 Fed.Appx. 802, 2019 WL 315328 (10th Cir. [133] In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Lewis, 2016 WL 6495416 (D.D.C.) (unpublished), the court found that the title agent was not entitled to dismissal of the insurer's lawsuit for breach of contract, on the theory that the agency contract did not contain a list of negligent acts. The court held that the agent's loss of a deed of trust that it had been instructed to record was patently an error that the insurer did not need to spell out in writing. The decision offers a good analysis of how negligent acts can be classified as breach of the agency contract.

[134] In Sheils Title Company, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 184 F.3d 10 (1st Cir. (Puerto Rico) 1999), a lender's failure to pay off mortgages was not detected by the agent because it only spot-checked for discharges. The loan fraud that went undetected cost the insurer $1.8 million. The agent testified that " [i]t was impossible to check them all," and that his staff might check one in five mortgages. At trial, the "expert" on local custom was a former employee of the agent who now worked for a competitor. He also made only sample searches for discharges. The jury found the agent not liable under the contract. The lawsuit began with the agent suing the underwriter for capricious termination. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Pitkin County Title, Inc., 761 Fed.Appx. 802, 2019 WL 315328 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2019) (unpublished), the agency contract said that the agent "shall not, without the prior written approval of [Fidelity's] corporate underwriting department ..., [c]ommit [Fidelity] to insure any Extra Hazardous Risk as defined herein." The contract said that an Extra Hazardous Risk was "all risks which result in a liability not normally assumed by" the insurer. The agent removed the survey-related exceptions without a survey. Fidelity submitted an affidavit that said that the removal of the standard exceptions "exposed Fidelity to greater risk, including claims for off-record matters like easements and encroachments." The court said this was adequate proof that the agent had violated its written instructions.

[135] However, see Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 978 P.2d 956 (Mont. 1999), which held that the underwriter was not obligated to offer expert testimony as if it were proving a case of abstractor negligence, because the "due diligence" standard of care was set by the agency contract. The underwriter proved that the agent knew of an unrecorded deed, recorded survey and its own prior title file evidencing the conflicting claim of title. The court held that, "had Realty Title exercised due diligence, it would not have issued conflicting title insurance policies to the required to establish liability.[136] The fact that an agent may breach an agency contract by a negligent act does not render the negligence standard unenforceable under the economic loss doctrine.[137]

Most agency agreements make the agent liable to the insurer for the attorneys' fees and expenses it incurs due to the agent's error in the searching or examination of title, in addition to the loss amount.[138] However, when the failure to discover the title encumbrance was not the result of an same disputed 7.78-acre tract of land and, therefore, Old Republic would not have suffered a loss."

[136] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Kelley, 89 Mass.App.Ct. 1121, 49 N.E.3d 697 (Table), 2016 WL 1741537 (Mass.App. 2016) (unpublished) (attorney title agent's errors in title examination and failure to close equity loan account were so obvious and blatant that title insurer proved agent's liability for losses without expert testimony).

[137] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Pitkin County Title, Inc., 761 Fed.Appx. 802, 2019 WL 315328 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2019) (unpublished), the agency contract made the agent fully liable for a loss both when the loss was caused by the "negligent, willful, or reckless conduct" and when the loss was due to the agent's failure "to comply with the terms and conditions of ... the manuals, underwriting bulletins and/or instructions" issued by the insurer. The court affirmed the judgment against the agent for the full loss, plus attorneys' fees, based on a finding that the agent was negligent. It rejected the agent's argument that the suit was in contract, and any claim based on negligent conduct was barred under the economic loss doctrine. The court rested its ruling on the statement in A Good Time Rental, LLC v. First Am. Title Agency, Inc., 259 P.3d 534, 537 (Colo. App. 2011), that "sophisticated parties can build the anticipated cost of a breach of their respective duties into their bargain," and that a contract may measure conduct by referring to negligence.

(unpublished) (agent liable for missed use restrictions); Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Residential Title Services, Inc., 607 F.Supp.2d 959 (E.D. Braunstein & Todisco, LLC*, 2004 WL 1616441 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished) (agent liable to underwriter for loss caused by lack of exception for unrecorded contract for sale of property to party other than insured); Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Pitkin County Title, Inc., 761 Fed.Appx. 802, 2019 WL 315328 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2019) (unpublished) (agent liable for entire loss caused by removal of survey exceptions without a survey, including defense costs incurred in defending insured in boundary dispute action). In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Southern Heritage Title Ins. Agency, Inc., 257 Va. 246, 512 S.E.2d 553 (1999), an agent was found liable for a loss payment to the insured, but not the cost of defending the insured in a lawsuit, based on the language in the agent's contract. In one paragraph of the contract, loss was defined as including "the...cost of defending the claim resulting in the loss." However, the same definition did not appear in the paragraph which applied. The court held that, absent the specific definition which included defense costs, those costs were not included, because they were not "a direct and necessary consequence" of the agent's negligence. In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Rex Title Corp., 282 F.3d 292 (4th Cir. (Md.) 2002), a title agent was found liable to the underwriter in negligence because it failed to obtain a lien release before omitting the lien from the policy, causing the underwriter to suffer a significant loss. The federal appeals court affirmed judgment against the agent, based on Maryland law regarding insurance agents that says "an insurance agent must exercise reasonable care and skill in performing his duties [and] ... may become liable to those, including his principal, who are caused a loss by his failure to use standard care." In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Tri-Lakes Title Co., Inc., 968 S.W.2d 727 (Mo.App. S.D. 1998), an agent was responsible to the insurer for having missed two easements, although the measure of damages against the agent was found not necessarily to be equal to the amount paid by the insurer to settle with the insured. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Archer Land Title, LLC, 2007 WL 3231847 (M.D.Tenn.) (unpublished), a title agent was found liable to its underwriter for the cost of settling three cases in bankruptcy in which the insured deeds of trust were attacked by the trustees for defective acknowledgments and tardy error in searching or examining, the agent's liability will depend on the terms of the agency contract.[139] The contract statute of limitations is typically the applicable law setting the time limit for a suit by the insurer against the agent for breach of the agency agreement, although agency contracts often mix terms by referring to errors, negligence and gross negligence.[140] However, as to an attorney agent or approved attorney, the legal malpractice statute of limitations is controlling in a number of states, as is discussed in §17.3.

The title agent is also liable to the insurer when its conduct other than in the searching and examination of title causes a policy or other loss to the insurer. The agent's failure to perform tasks such as the prompt and accurate recording of insured instruments will also cause the agent to be recording. In Hill v. Cross Country Settlements, LLC, 402 Md. 281, 936 A.2d 343 (Md. 2007), the agent did not pay off a loan from closing because the borrower gave the wrong loan number. The title insurer paid off the loan and recovered from the agent-closer. The agent was found to be required to prove that it was really liable under the agency contract before it could collect from the borrower. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Southern Land Title, Inc., 2009 WL 5206636 (S.D.Ala.) (unpublished), one paragraph of the agency contract set a liability cap for simple negligence. Another paragraph made the agent fully liable for claims caused by intentional acts, but also contained a reference to "negligence." The court struck negligence from the second paragraph, limiting the agent's liability for a large missed mortgage to the $500 cap. In Doss & Associates v. First American Title Ins. Co., 325 Ga.App. 448, 754 S.E.2d 85 (Ga.App. 2013), the court held that the title agent was liable to First American for having failed to make exception for a mortgage of which the agent was aware as of closing. It rejected the attorney-agent's claim that suit against the agent was premature because the insurer had not yet paid the loss. In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Miller, 2014 WL 929461 (Conn.Super. 2014) (unpublished), when a title insurer cleared title through the insured lender's foreclosure action and the title clearance attorneys' fees were tacked onto the foreclosure judgment but not collected from the borrower, the insurer was not barred from collecting those fees from the attorney-title agents due to their search negligence.

[139] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Groff, 148 N.H. 333, 808 A.2d 44 (N.H. 2002) (approved attorney not liable to underwriter for searching error of abstractor he hired because contract did not require approved attorney to perform search himself and did not create vicarious liability for acts of searcher). In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. R.E. Title Services LLC, 2009 WI App 95, 769 N.W.2d 878 (Table), 2009 WL 1186810 (Wis.App.) (unpublished), an agent was found not liable to its underwriter for a mortgage posted by the register to the wrong parcel in the tract index because it contained a completely wrong legal description, although a search of the grantor-grantee index would have disclosed the lien.

(unpublished) (Illinois' two-year statute of limitations for suing agent for mistake begins on day agent refuses to reimburse insurer, not day mistake is made); Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Panella, 734 S.E.2d 523, 12 FCDR 3841 (Ga.App. 2012) (insurer's lawsuit against agent for policy claims not barred by Georgia's extended statute of limitations for breach of indemnity contract); Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. B & G Abstractors, Inc., 2015 WL 6472216 (W.D.Pa.) (unpublished) (lawsuit by insurer against agent for giving mechanic's lien coverage despite broken priority was an action for breach of contract, though contract and complaint referred to negligence; thus, the longer statute of limitations for breach of contract applied, not the tort limitations period). In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Crowley, 88 Mass.App.Ct. 1101, 35 N.E.3d 447 (Table), 2015 WL 4887598 (Mass.App.) (unpublished), the court held that the fact that a title agent was also an attorney did not convert the claim against him under the agency contract to a legal malpractice claim, or invoke the statute of limitations for that kind of claim. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. ISGN Fulfillment Services, Inc., 2017 WL 3587176 (D.Conn.) (unpublished), the Connecticut six-year statute of limitations for an insurer to sue its agent for insuring a bad mortgage was said to begin running on the policy date, not the date the insurer discovered that title was defective, and a tolling agreement had no effect because it was signed after the statute had already run.

liable to the underwriter for losses it incurs as a result.[141] The agent is also liable to the insurer if its escrow or closing acts, such as in the handling of money and loan payoffs, cause a loss under the policy.[142]

Most contracts permit a title agent to buy a search from someone else, and establish a standard of adequacy for such third-party searches. If a loss is paid because the search falls below that standard, the agent is liable to the underwriter. Under some contracts, the agent is liable for all such errors. The searcher may also be directly liable to the underwriter.[143] See §15.13.3 on that topic.

An agent breaches the contract when it acts beyond the scope of its authority as set in the contract.[144] The agency contract typically states that the agent fully indemnifies the insurer for loss

[141] In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Title Connection, Inc., 2005 WL 1279180 (S.D.Miss. 2005) (unpublished), the agent was found liable to the underwriter when a deed of trust was set aside because it was recorded after the borrowers filed for bankruptcy and the underwriter was obligated to pay off the lender on a closing protection letter issued on behalf of the agent. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Kelley, 89 Mass.App.Ct. 1121, 49 N.E.3d 697 (Table), 2016 WL 1741537 (Mass.App. 2016) (unpublished), the court found the attorney title agent liable for errors in the title examination that caused losses to the insurer, and ruled that the agent did not escape liability based on the fact that the title search error was made by a competent subcontractor searcher. The court noted that Real Estate Bar Assn. for Mass ., Inc. v. National Real Estate Information Services, 459 Mass. 512 (2011) held that, while a non-lawyer can and often does perform a title search in that state, only an attorney may make a "determination of marketable title." Thus, it said, the attorney agent could not delegate his professional liability to the non-attorney examiner.

[142] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 COA 80, 310 P.3d 272 (Colo.App. 2013), a title agent was liable to the underwriter for its failure to pay off a loan through closing, which caused policy liability, when the agency contract stated that the agent was fully responsible for "loss or damage … arising from any error, fault, or negligence by Agent in handling funds in connection with any escrow… ." In Conestoga Title Ins. Co. v. Patchell (In re Patchell), 569 B.R. 635 (Bkcy.Md. 2017), the court said that the owner of a title agent was entitled to have her debt to her underwriter discharged in bankruptcy, even though it emanated from a lien on her personal residence, because the title agent believed her lender had agreed to release its lien.

[143] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Dewrell Sacks, LLP, 2009 WL 4348684 (M.D.Tenn.) (unpublished) (agent liable to underwriter when abstractor hired by agent missed mortgage); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Groff, 148 N.H. 333, 808 A.2d 44 (N.H. 2002) (approved attorney not liable to underwriter for searching error of abstractor he hired because contract did not require approved attorney to perform search himself and did not create vicarious liability for acts of searcher). In First American Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Capri Title Services, Ltd., 19 A.D.3d 1062, 796 N.Y.S.2d 295, 2005 N.Y. Slip Op. 04777 (N.Y.A.D. 4 Dept. 2005), a New York title agent that bought incomplete "title notes" from another company was found not to have conducted an adequate title examination, and was liable to the underwriter for the loss caused by a missed lis pendens. The agency contract obligated the agent to either conduct its own search of the records or buy "an examination of an abstract of title prepared and certified by Agent or by another recognized professional abstractor whose work is accepted by prudent local title examiners, and showing all relevant public records searched…" The agent argued it had "obtained a title search from a recognized professional abstractor covering the period during which the Lis Pendens was filed... upon which it relied in issuing title," referring to the "title notes." The court ruled that the title notes were not an adequate abstract of title: "'Title notes' are not the legal equivalent of an 'abstract of title.' Capri's allegations that 'title notes' are 'merely an untyped abstract' are not compelling."

suffered by the insurer resulting from the unauthorized act of the agent. Thus, when the agent has gone beyond the limits of its authority, it may be fully liable for the insurer's loss even if the agent did not make an error in the search and exam. Unauthorized acts include the issuance of a policy outside the agent's territory.[145] Also included is use of "starter" title evidence of a lesser quality than the contract requires, such as a guarantee rather than a policy or commitment, contrary to the insurer's bulletin.[146] Similarly, when the contract required that the approved attorney tell the insurer of lawsuits against the property, an action lay against an approved attorney handling construction disbursing who failed to advise the insurer that construction liens had been filed on the project, and that a supplier had threatened to file a significant lien.[147] An agent's intentional act in violation of a fiduciary duty to the insurer, which causes a loss or expense to the insurer, will render its debt to the insurer nondischargeable in bankruptcy.[148]

Most agency agreements give the insurer the sole discretion to settle claims under the policy. The agent is required to indemnify the underwriter to the extent dictated by the agency contract.[149]

[149] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. First New York Title & Abst. Ltd., 269 A.D.2d 560, 707 N.Y.S.2d 112 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000), an agent was liable to its underwriter for the diminution paid the insured lender because the agent missed a mortgage. The agent objected to the amount of the settlement made by the insurer. The court said the agent's role was to indemnify the underwriter after it makes a good faith claim payment: "Contrary to the defendant's contention, it was obligated under the terms of the Agency Agreement to indemnify the plaintiff for the amount the plaintiff paid to settle the claim asserted against it by the Vollerthuns. 'When an indemnitor has notice of the claim against it, the general rule is that the indemnitor will be bound by any reasonable good faith settlement the indemnitee might thereafter make' … . In the instant case, there was ample evidence in the record that the defendant received such notice, that the plaintiff made a reasonable settlement in good faith, and that the plaintiff could have been held liable if it had proceeded to trial … Therefore, the defendant was obligated to indemnify the plaintiff for the settlement amount." In Chemical Bank of N.J. v. Bailey, 687 A.2d 316 (N.J.Super.A.D. 1997), a contract which made the agent responsible for "the entire amount" of a loss was objected to on the grounds that it was overreaching. This argument was rejected, and the contract found to be unambiguous and enforceable. Similarly, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. National Title Resources Corp., 261 F.3d 758 (8th Cir. Minn. 2001), the agent argued that it had no duty to pay Fidelity back on claims "without a tender of defense and without allowing National to participate in the claims resolution process." The court found that the underwriter had the sole right to administer claims, and any lack of participation did not negate the agent's duty to reimburse Fidelity: "The agency agreement specifically provided that National would be liable for all losses attributable to National's negligence and that Fidelity would have the authority to defend, settle, or dispose of any claims. Although not required to do so by the agency agreement, Fidelity did in fact offer a tender of defense to National by letter dated

One court, construing a typical contract, said this:

> This clause [giving the insurer unilateral settlement authority] is unambiguous. It provides Safeco with absolute discretion to settle disputes with policy holders. Under its terms, Charter and Attardi, as issuing agents, are required to indemnify Safeco for the settlement of any claim for which they are responsible.[150]

However, some states impose an extra-contractual duty on the insurer to prove that the settlement of the claim was reasonable, based on the premise that the loss payment provision is an indemnity contract.[151] The agent may not raise as a defense to its own liability that the curative counsel retained by the insurer should have been able to resolve the problem for some lesser expense.[152] See §17.8 for a discussion of a title agent's liability to the insurer for agency malfeasance.

An insurer seeking to recover from its agent for failure to obtain the insurer's approval to assume an insurance risk must prove that the agent was required to obtain the company's consent. Summary judgment was denied an insurer when reasonable people would disagree about whether or

January 10, 1996. The agency agreement gave Fidelity the sole authority to dispose of claims, and this authority is stated in clear and unequivocal terms and, thus, comports with public policy." The court also affirmed an award of attorney fees against the agent because the contract so provided. Essentially identical rulings on the same two issues were made in Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Runkel Abst. & Title Co., 610 F.Supp.2d 973 (W.D.Wis. 2009), clarified by 654 F.Supp.2d 926 (W.D.Wis. 2009), later decision 2009 WL 3415816 (W.D.Wis.) (unpublished). Similarly, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. First New York Title & Abst. Ltd., 269 A.D.2d 560, 707 N.Y.S.2d 112, 2000 N.Y. Slip Op. 01829 (2001), the agent argued that it should not have to reimburse the underwriter because it gave too little advance notice of its impending payout. The court disagreed: "'When an indemnitor has notice of the claim against it, the general rule is that the indemnitor will be bound by any reasonable good faith settlement the indemnitee might thereafter make.'" [citations omitted] In the instant case, there was ample evidence in the record that the defendant received such notice, that the plaintiff made a reasonable settlement in good faith, and that the plaintiff could have been held liable if it had proceeded to trial … Therefore, the defendant was obligated to indemnify the plaintiff for the settlement amount."

[151] See Colonial Title Company, LLC v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 4675535 (Tex.App.-Tyler) (unpublished), which held that Texas law on indemnity contracts imposes a duty on the indemnitee to prove that it made a reasonable and prudent settlement of its policy claim in order to recover that amount from the title agent as indemnitor. The court acknowledged that this duty was contrary to the plain terms of the agency contract, which gave the insurer the sole right to settle on terms that it found to be fair. The court did say that no expert testimony was required to prove the reasonableness of the settlement. Similarly, in First American Title Ins. Co. v. Bowles Rice, LLP, 2017 WL 6329953 (N.D.W.Va.) (unpublished), later decision 2018 WL 3763001 (N.D.W.V. 2018) (unpublished), the court accepted the principle that, under West Virginia law, an indemnitee seeking recovery of a claim settlement payment from the indemnitor must prove that the amount of the settlement was reasonable. The court held, however, that the insurer's duty to prove that fact did not support the indemnitor's demand for privileged documents that might disprove the settlement's reasonableness.

[152] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Title One, Inc., 2016 WL 3971210 (E.D.Mich. 2016) (unpublished), a title agent's failure to get a release or subordination of the existing first mortgage caused the title insurer to pay the insured lender whose lien was wiped out. The agent was not absolved of liability to the insurer on the theory that title curative counsel should have been able to resolve the priority issue but did not.

not an overlap would be apparent to the agent in its review of the public records.[153] In Alabama, which follows the rule that it is the unauthorized practice of law for a non-lawyer to issue an opinion of title, a title agent is not required to look behind the attorney's opinion in issuing the policy. To do so would cause the title agent to engage in the unauthorized practice of law, and the parties may "not create such a duty by contract... ."[154]

As a matter of courtesy, if the insurer might seek contribution or indemnification from the agent, it should promptly put the agent on notice. The insurer may wish to urge the agent to submit the matter to its errors and omissions carrier. See §17.10 for a full discussion of errors and omissions insurance. The insurer should begin to forward all relevant information regarding the claim to the agent and, if the agent has so elected, to its errors and omissions carrier.

The insurer should invite the agent and E & O carrier to contribute any facts which they feel may be pertinent. The agent frequently has information about the transaction, parties, land or dispute which are not reflected in the title file, and which he or she may not think to mention unless prompted. Further, the agent should tell the title insurer early on about any coverage defenses that the agent or its E & O carrier believe to be applicable.[155] The insurer should respond if it does not think such defenses exist.

The insurer must bring suit against the agent within the statute of limitations.[156]

Many insurers require personal guarantees from the principals of a corporate agency, thus making those principals personally liable for the agency's breach of its contract. The underwriter may seek recovery for losses from the guarantors as well as the agency.[157] When a corporate agency

[155] In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Closure Title & Settlement Co., LLC, 2019 WL 97045, Case No. 3:18-cv-58 (W.D. Va.) (unpublished), the court held that a title insurance company stated a claim against its policy agent for breach of the agency contract due to its insurance of two deeds of trust that named the wrong party as grantor, which cost the insured and insurer money. The title agent's primary defense was that the insurer should have denied the claim based on Exclusion 3(a). The court also predicted that the Supreme Court of Virginia would hold that Exclusion 3(a) applies only to intentional or knowing conduct of the insured, not mere negligence, and thus the insurer did not pay the claim as a mere volunteer.

[156] The state's contract statute of limitations normally applies to claims against agents, even if the agent is an attorney. See Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Smith, 794 S.W.2d 734 (Tenn.App. 1990). However, because the signature block on a personal guaranty was has lost its charter, the contract may be enforced against an officer of the corporation. It is no defense to argue that the terms of the contract were binding only on the agency and not on its officers and shareholders.[158] A title agency may not escape liability to the insurer by merely forming a new company and transferring the assets of the old company to the new one.[159] A title agency also does not avoid liability to the insurer for a loss that it paid the insured if the insured has also obtained a judgment against the agency for the same issue.[160]

The agent may also have a fidelity bond for escrow and funds-handling work. If the claim involves the wrongful taking of money by the agent, the insurer should also immediately notify the surety. Such bonds should be considered to inure to the benefit of the insured and the public as a whole. In a case in which the agent has disappeared or will not cooperate in collecting on the bond, the insurer may pursue the bond directly. This approach was approved when the agent was required by state law to have a fidelity bond.[161]

An arbitration provision in an agency contract is enforceable.[162]

[162] In Hawkins v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 2866352 (D.S.C. 2016) (unpublished), the court ruled that the Federal Arbitration Act applied to an agency contract between a South Carolina lawyer agent and a title insurer domiciled in Virginia, because that contract involved interstate commerce. The Lawyers Title contract at issue contained this arbitration provision: "Unless prohibited by applicable law or regulation, either [LTIC] or [Hawkins] may demand arbitration pursuant to the Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association." The court found that the agency contract crossed state lines in several ways. The agreement told Hawkins to mail his remittances to Lawyers Title's Louisville, Kentucky office. The claim on which Fidelity sought recoupment had been handled by its Jacksonville, Florida claims center. The insurer wrote its claim payment check on a California bank account, and that account was at a national bank regulated by the federal government. The claim correspondence was carried by the U.S. Postal Service. The court also held that a South Carolina law about professional negligence did not void the arbitration provision. In a separate action involving the same parties, by merger, the South Carolina federal court also ruled that Fidelity National Title was entitled to arbitrate with the agent under its own contract with him, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Wendell L. Hawkins, PA, 2016 WL 6962775 (D.S.C. 2016) (unpublished).

17.8.3 Losses Caused By Theft Of Money From Escrow Account or Defalcation

Defalcation is the word most often used in the title industry for the stealing of money, particularly from an escrow account. When an owner or employee of a title agent steals money from the agent's escrow account, the escrow shortage almost invariably but indirectly causes losses on title insurance policies issued by the agent. The shortage can cause sellers' proceeds checks to be left unfunded, mortgage payoffs not made, and even lead to transactions being unwound.[163] In such cases, the agent is liable to the underwriter for those losses.[164] If the defalcator is a principal in the agency, the company sometimes ceases to do business immediately. Sometimes, the perpetrator attempts to cover up the failure to make payoffs to mortgagees by making monthly payments for a time. These schemes normally become unglued when the defalcator is discovered or is left with insufficient cash to make the necessary monthly payments. See §17.2 for a discussion of the fact that escrow and closing acts are outside of the scope of an agency appointment to issue title insurance policies. See §13.5 regarding defalcation by escrowees other than title agents. See §5.7 for a complete discussion of the insurer's rights against bonds maintained by title agents for employee theft and statutory bonds for escrow acts.

As further discussed at §17.2, title insurance agency contracts do not grant authority to the agent to bind the insurer as to escrow matters. However, on occasion, the insurer steps in and solves [163] See, for example, Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Gulf Underwriters Ins. Co., 1998 WL 283510 (Wash.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), in which an escrow company (not a title agency) failed to pay off mortgages, then folded, leaving unsatisfied mortgage liens to be paid off by the title insurer. In Howell v. United States, 164 F.3d 523 (10th Cir. (Utah) 1998), the principal of an agency was being sued by the IRS for back taxes. His defense was that he was prevented from following his "usual practice" of paying his corporate tax debts from the escrow account when his underwriter shut down the agency and took control of all of the accounts. The court agreed with Rogers that he should have been allowed to show at trial that he had "made reasonable efforts to protect the trust fund" [i.e., the money owed for taxes], which efforts "were frustrated by events beyond his control." The court did not explain how the use of other people's money held in escrow to pay one's own tax debts could qualify as "protecting" the money. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Madison Title and Escrow, Inc., 53 Va. Cir. 116, 2000 WL 1210851 (Va.Cir.Ct. 2000), the owners of one agency funneled money to a related agency and also used the escrow account to pay for personal expenses. The underwriter got judgments against the individuals and the agency to which the cash was directed.

[164] See, for example, Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Old Dominion Title Services, Inc., 2007 WL 4303300 (Minn.App.) (unpublished). In Old Dominion, the unusual fact was that an existing title agent had been purchased by another entity, which continued to operate under the underwriter contract for the old agency. The new company was barred from denying liability to the underwriter for its alleged failure to pay off mortgages based on the lack of a contract assignment. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Eddings, 2014 WL 106691 (M.D.Ga. 2014) (unpublished); subsequent decision, 2014 WL 869553 (M.D.Ga. 2014) (unpublished), a title agent that stole closing money from his lawyer trust account was liable to the insurer for the losses caused by the theft, as was his wife. The court said that the bank that handled the escrow account might also be liable, because it discovered that the agent was covering his negative balances with false documents. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Sadek, 2017 WL 6663899 (D.N.J. 2017) (unpublished), when a person owned both a mortgage banker and a title agency and closed a refinance loan to himself but failed to pay off the old loans or record the new mortgage, the court affirmed a judgment in favor of the title insurer based on conversion. In Southern Title Ins. Corp. v. Syed Rizwan Mohiuddin (In re Mohiuddin), ___ B.R. ___, 2017 WL 2123870 (Bkcy.S.D.Tex.-Houston 2017) (permanent citation not yet available), the insurer received a judgment against the treasurer of a title agency who knew of and participated in transactions in which liens were not paid off at closing, and the court declared the $8 million debt non-dischargeable in bankruptcy.

some or all of the problems caused by the defalcation. In most cases, this is a reflection of the fact that the insurer has liability on its policies for the unpaid mortgages and other liens not excepted in the policies.

A Florida law makes the insurer liable for the "defalcation, conversion, or misappropriation" by "a licensed title insurance agent" of funds held by it in trust.[165] Based on a prior ruling that attorney-agents are not required to be licensed by the insurance department,[166] the Florida Supreme Court determined that an underwriter is not responsible for an attorney-agent's defalcation.[167] Defalcation by attorney-agents is further discussed at §17.3. However, the statute does not impose liability on a title insurer for a title company's theft of escrowed money when no title commitment was issued and the money was not held for use in a closing.[168]

Nebraska also has adopted a statute making a title insurer strictly liable for a shortage in an escrow account maintained by its policy-issuing agent.[169] That law has been held not to allow a title

[165] Fla.Stat. §627.792. If the agent has more than one underwriter, the loss is borne by the insurer on whose paper the commitment or policy was issued as to the affected transaction. The law applies to trust funds, as defined in § 626.8473(1), which is money received by a title insurance agent "from others to be subsequently disbursed by the title insurance agent in connection with real estate closing transactions involving the issuance of title insurance binders, commitments, policies of title insurance, or guarantees of title."

[166] "The fact that attorney agents have been expressly exempted from the licensure requirement (and hence regulation by the Department of Insurance) evinces a clear legislative intent that title insurers are not to be held liable for attorney agents' thefts under this statute." State Dep't of Insurance v. Co., 53 So.3d 331 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2010). Winkler said that the liability law does not apply when the title company holds money escrowed under condo reservation agreements for units that were never scheduled for closing and on which no title commitments were issued. Cohen said the underwriter was not liable for the title company's theft of escrowed funds when the title company only acted as escrowee and a different company issued the title insurance commitment and policy.

[169] Neb. Rev. Stat. § 44-1993(8), adopted in 1997, states as follows:"(a) A title insurer is liable for the defalcation, conversion, or misappropriation by a title insurance agent appointed by or under written contract with such title insurer of escrow, settlement, closing, or security deposit funds handled by such title insurance agent in contemplation of or in conjunction with the issuance of a title insurance commitment or title insurance policy by such title insurer. However, if no such title insurance commitment or title insurance policy was issued, each title insurer which appointed or maintained a written contract with such title insurance agent at the time of the discovery of the defalcation, conversion, or misappropriation shares in the liability for the defalcation, conversion, or misappropriation in the same proportion that the premium remitted to the title insurer by such title insurance agent during the twelve-month period immediately preceding the date of the discovery of the defalcation, conversion, or misappropriation bears to the total premium remitted to all title insurers by such title insurance agent during the twelve-month period immediately preceding the date of the discovery of the defalcation, conversion, or misappropriation. (b) For purposes of this subsection, title insurance agent includes (i) a person with whom a title insurer maintains a title insurance agency agreement and (ii) an employer or employee of a title insurance agent or of a person with whom a title insurer maintains a title insurance agency agreement."

insurer that has replenished an agent's escrow account from recovering the stolen money from the people who received it from the agent.[170]

Utah also has adopted a statute making a title insurer strictly liable for a shortage in an escrow account maintained by its policy-issuing agent.[171] That statute has been broadly interpreted to cause the title insurer to pay other people's losses that go far beyond theft of money from the escrow account.[172]

In New Jersey, a 1993 court decision adopted the principle that a title insurer is liable for a closing attorney's theft of closing money after the attorney has been engaged to write title insurance in a transaction.[173] However, since that decision, title insurers have developed disclaimers to be signed by clients before title is ordered, which advise them that the attorney is not the agent of the insurer and that the only form of liability the insurer will assume is by the issuance of a closing protection or closing service letter. When an attorney stole money from his clients before title was [170] In United General Title Ins. Co. v. Malone, 289 Neb. 1006, 858 N.W.2d 196 (Neb. 2015), the Nebraska Supreme Court held that the people and companies who got the $588,000 stolen from a title agent's escrow account were not required to return that money to the title insurer after it complied with its statutory duty to cover the shortage in the escrow account. The upshot of the court's reasoning was that, when the legislature made the insurer "statutorily liable" for the theft, it also barred the insurer from the right to recover from others, even though the people who got the money "received a benefit from United General's payment of the shortage in the escrow account and ... may have been unjustly enriched." The enriched recipients included the children of the embezzling title agent.

[171] Utah Code section 31A-23a-407 (2003) says: "[a] title company, represented by one or more title insurance producers, is directly and primarily liable to others dealing with the title insurance producers for the receipt and disbursement of funds deposited in escrows with the title insurance producers in all those transactions where a commitment or binder for or policy or contract of title insurance of that title insurance company has been ordered, or a preliminary report of the title insurance company has been issued or distributed. This liability does not modify, mitigate, impair, or affect the contractual obligations between the title insurance producers and the title insurance company."

[172] In Orlando Millenia, LC v. United Title Services of Utah, Inc., 355 P.3d 965, 2015 UT 55 (Utah 2015), the statute was construed by the state supreme court to make the insurer liable for the agent's simple error in the delivery of closing money, without any theft or misconduct by the agent. The court also held that the title insurer was required by the law to make a payment to a party who was not a principal to the escrow. The court said that Orlando, the party who wanted to be paid, was an "other[] dealing with" the title agent, who had a "dealing" with the title agent "for the receipt and disbursement of funds deposited in escrows," and that a title commitment had been "ordered," satisfying the prerequisites for the insurer's liability under the law. In Luan v. Advanced Title Ins. Agency, L.C., 2015 WL 4560383 (D. Utah) (unpublished), the court refused to dismiss claims against a title insurer for money stolen from a title agency's escrow account by a cyber hacker. The court held that Utah's law making an underwriter strictly liable for agent escrow account theft was invoked by the theft, even though the person who stole the money was not employed by the title agent. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. National Title Agency, LLC, 2016 WL 1092485 (D. Utah 2016) (unpublished), the court said that an agency contract was ambiguous, and did not clearly make the agency owner liable to the insurer for claims it paid to agency customers due to a shortage in the escrow account under Utah's strict liability law. Also, the agency owner is not liable to the insurer for a fraudulent transfer of the agency's assets to a new company formed by his son, which the owner freely admitted was intended to put the assets beyond the insurer's reach. However, in a later decision, First American Title Ins. Co. v. National Title Agency, LLC, 2017 WL 2222920 (D. Utah) (unpublished), the same court held that the title agency and its owner, who had personally guaranteed the agency contract, were both liable to the insurer for the losses it paid due to the shortage in the agent's escrow account.

ordered or the disclaimer form was given to the clients, the insurer was not the attorney's principal and thus not liable for the theft.[174]

The insurer has the right to seek to recoup its losses from the person who stole the money, or any insurance policy or bond that covered that person's acts.[175] The insurer may pursue an employee that steals money. It must be careful to establish the causal nexus between the employee's theft and the losses suffered by the insurer.[176] If the person accused of theft is an attorney, the attorney-client privilege does not bar the insurer from obtaining the attorney's records about the closing or the escrow account.[177]

The insurer may seek recoupment through an errors and omissions policy or fidelity bond in favor of the title agent. The insurer should immediately give notice to any such carrier.[178]

When the person who steals money is an independent contractor hired by the title agent, the underwriter is entitled to pursue the title agent for recovery, if the agency contract makes the agent responsible for theft or fraud committed by its subagents and independent contractors. In Lawyers

[175] In K2 Settlement, LLC v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, London, 2012 WL 5990038 (W.D.Pa.) (unpublished), the court held that no reasonable juror could find that the sole owner of a title agency received an "improper personal financial gain" from her theft of escrow money, and thus there was no claim payable under a Special Mortgage Bankers fidelity bond issued by Lloyd's because, the surety claimed, the money stolen by the agency owner was used to pay salaries, and the bond excluded from coverage "salary, fees, commissions, bonuses, salary increases, ... profit sharing and other ... similar benefits" paid to employees. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. National Title Agency, LLC, 2017 WL 2222920 (D. Utah) (unpublished), the court held that the title agency and its owner, who had personally guaranteed the agency contract, were both liable to the insurer for the losses it paid due to the shortage in the agent's escrow account.

[176] In Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. National Abstract Agency, Inc., 2008 WL 2157046 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the appeals court was satisfied with trial testimony making the causal link between the escrow shortage and the policy losses. However, in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Lockman, 2008 WL 820359 (W.D.Mich.) (unpublished), related decision 2008 WL 1325900 (W.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the court referred to the National Abstract decision as it denied the two insurers' motions for summary judgment, which failed to make the same connection and were based largely on facts proven in the employee's criminal embezzlement case: "While it undoubtedly had an underwriting agreement with Northern Preferred, and Northern Preferred's employee, Karla Lockman, undoubtedly embezzled funds from Northern Preferred's escrow account, Stewart Title has failed to link this defalcation to its own losses, legally speaking. It has produced neither evidence nor legal authority to demonstrate how its sundry legal claims entitle it to a remedy from the Lockmans for the damages it purportedly suffered as a result of the two failed real estate transactions. …" The court went so far as to say that the underwriter's "relationship with Karla Lockman was attenuated at best."

[177] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Harlow, Adams & Friedman, P.C., 2013 WL 3770709 (Conn. Super.) (unpublished), when a law firm held money in escrow to pay off a mortgage loan, but disbursed the money to the borrower instead, causing the title insurer to have to pay off the loan, the court held that the law firm escrowee could not protect communications about the escrow under the attorney-client privilege.

[178] In Anchor Equities, Ltd. v. Pacific Coast American, 737 P.2d 532, 105 N.M. 751 (1987), the lender in the transaction was permitted to bring a claim directly against the agent's fidelity bond surety, based on the fact that the bond was required by state law for the protection of the public.

Title Ins. Corp. v. Phillips Title Agency,[179] attorney Jay Phillips performed the closings on title orders he placed with Central Title. He created a phony loan transaction that cost the underwriter $500,000. Lawyers Title sued Central Title under the agency contract, and the court found Central Title liable for the acts of its "subagent," Phillips. The agency contract made the agent responsible for "any improper closing or attempted closing by the agent." The court denoted Phillips a subagent of Central Title, in reliance on the Restatement (Second) of Agency §5 and a web of facts that showed that Phillips was accountable to Central Title in the closings he performed.

The insurer will typically move swiftly to garner what assets it may from the agent when it learns of a theft of escrow money.[180] When an attorney-agent takes money from his or her client trust account, any funds remaining in that account may belong to the insurer as subrogee of the parties whose funds were stolen. To recover from a client trust account, the insurer must trace funds back to the account and contend with competing claims to the same money.[181]

A prime source of recovery in some cases is a theft bond. One court rejected the theft bond surety's argument that it did not have to pay until the bankrupt agency had reimbursed parties having claims to the escrowed funds.[182] The court found that the bankruptcy trustee was entitled to demand payment to the extent of valid claims against the estate. The agent that embezzled the funds is not entitled to a discharge of that liability in bankruptcy.[183]

[180] The insurer may also pursue employees for conversion and unjust enrichment, if they personally obtained funds from the escrow account. Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Kiefer, 1997 WL 626074, 984 F.Supp. 984 (E.D.La. 1997) (unpublished). In Simmons v. Lennon, 139 Md.App. 15, 773 A.2d 1064 (Md.App. 2001), an employee forged the drawer's signature on an attorney's escrow account check that she used to buy a car. The attorney sued the check payee for conversion and negligent failure to detect the forgery. The court denied recovery under either theory. As to conversion, the court found the right limited to recovery of the check itself, not the proceeds, precluding any meaningful recovery. On the issue of the payee's failure to detect the forgery, the court distinguished between a forged indorsement and a forged drawer's signature. It noted that the UCC authorizes suit only for forged indorsements, in which case the loss is passed back from the drawee bank to the bank that first accepted and failed to detect the forgery. Conversely, when a drawer's signature is forged, the drawer bank is stuck with the loss. In Simmons, the attorney was unable to identify any legal duty of a payee to detect a drawer's forgery. Thus, the drawer bank escaped liability because the time period for suit against it had passed and there was no right to recover against the car-selling payee for failure to detect the forged drawer's signature.

[181] An interesting example is found in Goldberg v. New Jersey Lawyers' Fund, 932 F.2d 273 (3rd Cir. 1991). In that case, the insurer was competing with the state Client Protection fund. The fund asserted that the insurer had no claim to the money because it was not a "client." The court found that it was not necessary under New Jersey law for the insurer to be a client in order to receive funds. Rather, " [w]ithout Chicago Title's coverage, its insureds could have become the Client Protection Fund's clients because they would no longer have had a collateral source for their claims. Indeed, the bankruptcy judge recognized that 'the payment by Chicago and other title companies had the effect of reducing claims against the Fund.'" Therefore, the insurer and the fund were given a 63/35 split of the trust account funds.

The title insurer may also pursue third parties who helped the agent perpetrate the defalcation, or benefited from the ill-gotten money. For example, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Dearborn Title Corp.,[184] after paying parties on closing protection letters, the insurer sought recovery from the bank at which the escrow account was located, under the Illinois Fiduciary Obligations Act.[185] In the above decision, the court denied the bank summary judgment and remanded to the trial court. See also Borne v. Grande,[186] in which recovery was permitted against an agent's girlfriend's limited partnership assets pledged at the time the agency contract was signed, after the escrow defalcation of the agent.

When an underwriter receives notice of a defalcation, a central question that must be answered quickly is whether or not the agency is viable and should remain open for business. The underwriter or underwriters will, in most cases, have the contractual right to cancel their agency contracts, which effectively shuts down the agency. The typical agency contract says the underwriter may cancel the agent when a principal of the agency has stolen from the escrow account, or allowed the account to be plundered, causing policy risk to the underwriter. See §17.9 concerning termination of agency contracts generally. Most contracts do not require cause for termination. The underwriter may have an obligation to notify the state insurance commissioner of the situation, in which case the commissioner may order the agency closed.[187]

The underwriter may permit the agency to remain in business, with the condition that the insurer assume control of the agent's escrow activities to protect the public and to develop information on the source of the shortage. In one situation leading to a reported decision, the

In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Sadek, 2017 WL 6663899 (D.N.J. 2017) (unpublished), when a person owned both a mortgage banker and a title agency and closed a refinance loan to himself but failed to pay off the old loans or record the new mortgage, the court affirmed a judgment in favor of the title insurer based on conversion, and the court said it would follow with a trial to determine if the debt was dischargeable in bankruptcy. In Southern Title Ins. Corp. v. Syed Rizwan Mohiuddin (In re Mohiuddin), ___ B.R. ___, 2017 WL 2123870 (Bkcy.S.D.Tex.-Houston 2017) (permanent citation not yet available), the insurer received a judgment against the treasurer of a title agency who knew of and participated in transactions in which liens were not paid off at closing, and the court declared the $8 million debt non-dischargeable in bankruptcy.

underwriter was appointed receiver for the account.[188] In another, however, the insurer assumed control without being appointed receiver. It was later precluded from certain recoveries because the court said it became primarily liable on the escrow account by assuming its control.[189] In another case, underwriters obtained an order appointing a receiver to take control of the agent's business and escrow account, and to get records from its president's home so that the underwriters could administer claims. The agent sued the underwriters and their law firm for abuse of process and related torts. It alleged that they misused the receiver "to coerce the payment of money." The court found that the actions taken by counsel were privileged and not actionable.[190]

Such concerns suggest that it is prudent for the underwriter, on discovery of a defalcation or escrow account shortage of unknown origin, to enter into a written agreement in which the agent consents to the insurer's control of the escrow account and provides free access to all records. However, such an agreement should be constructed to make clear the limits of what the underwriter commits to do thereunder.[191] In two reported decisions, agents have argued that escrow control agreements are commitments by the underwriter not to cancel the agent or close down the business on account of the shortage. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Intercounty Nat'l Title Ins. Co.,[192] agency-turned-underwriter Intercounty sued its reinsurer, Fidelity, for cancelling the treaty after accepting a collateral agreement and being appointed receiver for the underwriter's escrow account. Intercounty alleged defamation, restraint of trade and that Fidelity had agreed not to cancel the treaty. Most of Intercounty's causes of action were dismissed. In the second case, Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. National Title Resources Corp.,[193] Fidelity National discovered a shortage in National Title's escrow account. The companies signed an agreement in which National admitted the shortage and that it was in default under the agency contract, Fidelity agreed to advance money to National to replenish the account, National agreed to repay Fidelity, and National gave Fidelity

The borrowers alleged that the insurer caused damage to them by holding the money for some time before it was delivered to the lender. control over the escrow account and all of its records. Three months later, Fidelity terminated National's contract because it had not turned over escrow account control and records, and had not made up the shortage. Fidelity sued National for breach of contract, conversion and related causes of action. National countersued for breach of contract and "various torts." The jury found that Fidelity had breached the agency contract by cancelling. Fidelity got a money judgment against National of over $400,000, but National's judgment against Fidelity was for $566,000, with the result that the underwriter owed the agent. The jury award against Fidelity was thrown out, and summary judgment entered in its favor. The judgment was affirmed on appeal. The appeals court ruled that Fidelity did not waive the right to cancel the contract by signing the agreement.

> Nothing in the March agreement indicates any obligation on the part of Fidelity to refrain from terminating the agency agreement, nor does it waive Fidelity's rights to terminate the agency agreement for the defaults already admitted to by National in the March agreement. The March agreement appears to be simply an attempt to offer security to Fidelity after an acknowledgment by National that National had defaulted under the agency agreement. ... These shortages gave Fidelity cause to terminate the agency agreement immediately. ... National's admitted default of the agency agreement constituted a breach of the agreement which gave Fidelity the right to terminate. The fact that Fidelity gave National the opportunity to correct its default by entering into the March agreement did not waive Fidelity's right to terminate, nor did it waive National's default. Fidelity's termination of the agency agreement in response to National's default did not constitute a breach of contract.

If the agent files bankruptcy, the trustee may resist the underwriter's assertion of control over the escrow account. The underwriter may assert that the escrowed funds are not property of the debtor's estate. The court may impose the equitable remedy of a constructive trust to protect the victims of the theft. In the decision of In re Dameron,[194] the court ruled that the funds were held in escrow, and thus were not part of the agent's bankruptcy estate. The court said "[i]t would be grossly unfair to the plaintiffs [title insurer and lender] under the present circumstances to require them to share what are clearly their funds with other creditors in this case," since "it would be difficult to find a more flagrant case of the fraudulent mishandling of the money of another."[195]

Under either a constructive trust or escrow claim, claimants may be obligated to make a reasonable attempt to trace funds. This is made more difficult when escrow funds are commingled with operating income, or the agent's bookkeeping was bad. When tracing is impossible or extremely difficult, courts often adopt the "lowest intermediate balance" rule.

> [The rule] is grounded in the fiction that, when faced with the need to withdraw funds from a commingled account, the trustee withdraws non-trust funds first, thus > maintaining as much of the trust's funds as possible. Hence, pursuant to the lowest intermediate balance rule, if the amount on deposit in the commingled fund has at all times equaled or exceeded the amount of the trust, the trust's funds will be returned in their full amount. [citation omitted] Conversely, if the commingled fund has been depleted entirely, the trust is considered lost. ... Finally, if the commingled fund has been reduced "below the level of the trust fund but not depleted, the claimant is entitled to the lowest intermediate balance in the account." [citation omitted] In no case is the trust permitted to be replenished by deposits made subsequent to the lowest intermediate balance.[196]

An insurer that funded the shortfall in an underwritten title company's escrow account is entitled to recover from a mortgage lender for loan funds never disbursed to the agent for a closing. The underwriter is also entitled to recover money paid to the lender by the underwritten title company which constituted an illegal kickback under RESPA, if no statute of limitations applies.[197]

An insurer which has reimbursed third parties for an escrow account shortage may assert that another entity was aware of the situation and had a duty to inform the insurer or shut down the agency. In Quackenbush v. Superior Court,[198] the court found that the California insurance code did not require the insurance commissioner to stop an agency's operations immediately after it received a report showing that the agency had submitted a false financial statement. The plaintiff was an escrow party who deposited funds in the eight months between the report and the date the commissioner seized the agency.

A sensitive issue is the proper handling by an underwriter of the termination of an agent when the insurer has evidence suggesting that the agent has a shortage in its escrow account or the account from which it remits premiums. An agent might elect to take funds from its escrow account to settle up with the terminating underwriter on premium remittances. This creates or increases a shortage in the escrow account, which may in turn translate into liens not being paid off. In this way, the agent creates policy liability on policies on which liens are not paid. The agent may also cause its underwriter to incur liability under a closing protection letter.[199] If the agent has more than one underwriter, the nimble insurer may limit its liability and receive more remittances than the company which delays in terminating the agent.

These situations raise the question of whether or not an underwriter has a duty to warn a common or successor underwriter, or a governmental authority, of the risks which the first insurer has uncovered. Several decisions hold that there is no such duty. In Security Title Guar. Co. of Baltimore v. United General Title Ins. Co.,[200] Charter Title, Ltd. had three underwriters. It stopped remitting premiums. Security Title and Stewart Title sent in auditors and terminated their contracts. Security Title sent notice of the cancellation to the Commissioner of Insurance. Stewart Title sent a letter to the third underwriter, United General, "advising of potential irregularities in Charter's escrow accounts."[201] Apparently, both underwriters received some payment of premiums owed. United General, the third underwriter, did not audit until it got Stewart's letter. It then cancelled the agent, and shortly thereafter Charter filed bankruptcy. Its escrow account deficiency was reported as $1.7 million. United General sued the other underwriters for $1.3 million in escrow losses and $50 million in punitive damages. It alleged that it suffered greater losses from the escrow shortage because the other insurers failed to warn United General, and that they were unjustly enriched.

The District Court ruled that Stewart and Security had no duty to warn United General. The court also said that notice of termination, or lack of same, to the Insurance Commissioner did not inure to the benefit of United General. Rather, it found that United General's losses stemmed from its own failure to cancel the agent earlier. Finally, the court found no unjust enrichment. An essential element of unjust enrichment is "an absence of justification or cause for the enrichment... ." Because the premiums paid to Stewart and Security were pursuant to contract, there was "cause," precluding a finding of unjust enrichment.[202]

Also, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of Pa. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[203] an agent was terminated by Chicago Title and then signed by Fidelity. Within a year after signing the agent, Fidelity paid more than $600,000 to fund a shortage in the agent's escrow account caused by embezzlement. Fidelity sued Chicago on various theories, including conversion, unjust enrichment, breach of fiduciary duty and civil conspiracy. All counts were dismissed.

TRW Title Ins. Co. v. Security Union Title Ins. Co.[204] concerned Liberty National Title Insurance Company, formed by Ed Wells, a Chicago lawyer. Liberty was an exclusive agent for Security Union. It bought plant searches from Security Union, but violated that agreement. As part of the settlement of the lawsuit over back title plant fees, Wells agreed to obtain a new underwriter and Security Union conducted a partial escrow audit. Wells then contacted TRW and became its agent. TRW did not conduct a pre-signing escrow audit. Wells paid the title plant fees out of Liberty's escrow account. Wells prohibited Security Union from conducting a complete audit, but the title plant fee checks were discovered. Some years after TRW became Liberty's underwriter, it audited the escrow account and discovered a $4.1 million shortage. TRW entered into a workout agreement with Wells and Liberty, which failed. TRW funded the shortage and sold the agency, then sued Security Union on a variety of claims, including fraud, unjust enrichment, co-trustee liability and equitable subrogation. The court found that Security Union was not sufficiently aware of the escrow shortage in order to establish that it had intended to induce Liberty to defraud TRW by becoming Liberty's new underwriter. The claim of unjust enrichment was based on the fact that TRW's funding of the escrow account negated the liability Security Union would otherwise have had on closing protection letters it had issued for Liberty. The court denied the claim of unjust enrichment, because TRW had "intentionally failed to investigate Liberty in order to conceal its courtship from Security." Thus, the court held, TRW's recklessness "caused its loss."[205] The claim that TRW was equitably subrogated to the claims of closing parties was denied because the court found that TRW was itself primarily liable to those parties, and "primary liability disqualifies TRW as a subrogee."[206] Finally, the court held that TRW was not a trustee as to Liberty's escrow account, because the insurer was not a fiduciary of parties whose money was deposited.

Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Intercounty Nat'l Title Ins. Co.[207] concerned an escrow shortage of another Chicago-area company. Intercounty Title Company was an agent of Stewart Title Guaranty Company. A new underwriter was formed by employees of Intercounty, and Fidelity National Title agreed to serve as reinsurer. At about the same time, the agency relationship between Stewart Title and Intercounty was terminated, with Stewart Title claiming that it remained owed unpaid premiums and loss expenses caused by Intercounty. Several years later, a large shortage was discovered in the escrow account of Intercounty National Title Insurance (INTIC). The Illinois Department of Financial Institutions shut down INTIC. Fidelity National was appointed trustee, making it "responsible for assuring the proper distribution of [INTIC's] remaining escrow funds." Fidelity claimed to have paid out $35 million of its own money to INTIC customers because of the shortage.

Numerous suits were filed, including one by Fidelity against Stewart Title. Among other claims, Fidelity alleged that Stewart Title had fraudulently concealed from the state and other parties, including Fidelity, what it knew of Intercounty's escrow account shortage. Fidelity also alleged that Stewart Title was unjustly enriched, and that Fidelity had a right to be reimbursed by Stewart Title in its own right and as assignee of the parties paid by Fidelity.

The fraudulent concealment count was dismissed by the trial court, based primarily on the TRW decision.[208] The court also held that Stewart Title had no duty to inform Fidelity, based in part on the allegation that it was not aware of the reinsurance treaty until after it was signed. The court also ruled that, whether or not Stewart Title informed the state commissioner of a shortage, the commissioner was prohibited from disclosing that information to others such as Fidelity.[209] The trial court also dismissed the unjust enrichment claim Fidelity brought in its own name, again relying principally on TRW. The court found the claim barred by Fidelity's lack of pre-treaty due diligence.[210]

However, the trial court did not dismiss Fidelity's unjust enrichment claims as subrogee and assignee of the people it paid.[211] Stewart Title contended that Fidelity's subrogation rights were negated because it became "primarily liable" for INTIC's debts by serving as receiver for INTIC's escrow account. Stewart again based this argument on TRW, in which TRW Title was found to have operated the agent's escrow account "on the float" for several months before shutting it down and taking its lumps. The appellate court in Intercounty ordered a trial on the unjust enrichment claim.

The insurer does not become part of a conspiracy to defraud customers of the agent by paying policy claims and taking actions to protect the escrow account after discovery of a defalcation. Thus, one title insurer was found not liable to the sellers under RICO claims after resolving covered title claims caused by a title agent's theft of closing funds. Also, the underwriter's reinsurer was not the alter ego of the insurer, despite the fact that the reinsurer owned a majority of the underwriter's stock and the two had a close working relationship, and the sellers had no contractual rights against it.[212]

[210] "In TRW Title, the court determined TRW's recklessness in failing to conduct reasonable due diligence precluded an unjust enrichment claim. ... The court held Security's retention of the benefit was not unjust. Id. TRW Title instructs that a title insurer's recklessness or negligence in failing to conduct a reasonable inspection of the escrow agent precludes relief under an unjust enrichment theory. Id. Fidelity failed to engage in reasonable due diligence by neglecting to conduct a pre-signing audit; obtain Old Intercounty's financial records; investigate Old Intercounty's escrow practices; and perform credit and background checks on management. 17.9 Termination Of Agency Contract

Either insurer or agent may cancel the contract on notice, typically without cause.[213] The agent must do several tasks on cancellation: account for premiums earned;[214] return all forms, supplies and records; and deliver all indemnities and title escrows taken as collateral for insurance coverage, with any money and documents securing same.

The agent ordinarily has obligations to the insurer after the contract is terminated. An agent typically is not permitted to issue policies on behalf of the insurer after its cancellation.[215] Often, the [213] The subject of contract disputes between insurer and agent, as to matters other than liability for claim obligations, is beyond the scope of this treatise. There are several illustrative cases. In Investors Title Co. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 983 S.W.2d 533 (Mo.App.E.D. 1998), reh.den., the title agency argued successfully that the insurer violated an exclusive-territory clause by acquiring another underwriter with a branch office in the territory. The insurer, in turn, obtained a judgment against the agent for premium remittances it had withheld in protest. Another contract dispute case is Gammell v. Strategic Mortgage Services Inc., 1997 WL 797706 (Ohio App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), rev.den. 81 Ohio St.3d 1516, 692 N.E.2d 620 (1998), in which a searcher and agent fought over their shares of the premiums. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Murphy, 1998 WL 756083 (9th Cir. (Wash.)) (unpublished), the insurer sought an injunction prohibiting Pacific Northwest Title of Oregon from issuing policies on another underwriter's paper, because Pacific's parent company had signed an exclusive agency contract with Stewart. The parent company's articles of incorporation prohibited subsidiaries from writing for competitors of Stewart. The injunction was denied, however, because "PNT Oregon, though a subsidiary of PNT Holding, is a separate legal entity from its parent ... and is thus bound only by its own articles of incorporation, not those of PNT Holding." Id. at 1. In American Nat'l Title & Escrow of Fla., Inc. v. The Guar. Title & Trust Co., 784 So.2d 1054 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 1999), two underwriters had a receiver appointed for an agent after termination, and took other actions to preserve the agent's records. The agent sued for abuse of process and other torts. The court found the law firm had absolute immunity from suit for actions it took in the course of the litigation. However, in a later decision in the same lawsuit, the court found the title agency owner entitled to sue her former underwriters for allegedly giving false information to police leading to her arrest and jailing, and for interfering with customer relationships. The insurers were found not to be protected by the earlier ruling protecting their law firm under the litigation immunity. 810 So.2d 996, 27 Fla. L. Weekly D447 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2002). In Coastal Abstract Service, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 173 F.3d 725 (9th Cir. (Cal.) 1999), the agent sued the underwriter for defamation and tortious interference with contract because one of its employees told a customer that the agent was "not paying its bills." The underwriter's employee made the statement to the agent's customer, whom the underwriter was courting, in response to the customer's complaint that the agent was slow in issuing policies. The court found that the evidence supported a finding that the insurer tortiously interfered with the contract between customer and agent. The case was sent back for a damage trial. An agent was awarded actual and punitive damages when its underwriter wooed away its employees to start a competing operation, after talks on the sale of the agency to the underwriter hit an impasse. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Meehan, 107 N.E.3d 60, 2018-Ohio-491 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2018), a lawsuit by an insurer against its former agent for continuing to issue policies after termination led to counterclaims against the insurer and its lawyer for defamation, tortious interference with business relations and other claims. The court did not address the latent issue of whether or not the insurer would be obligated to honor a claim made on a policy issued by the agent after his authority was terminated.

In In re Gaskill, 480 B.R. 291 (Bkcy.W.D.Mich. 2012), the agent was permitted a bankruptcy discharge for the remittances owed.

agent and underwriter work together for some time after the termination to wind down their joint affairs.[216] This may include closing the transactions and issuing the policies on commitments issued before termination. An agent changing underwriters normally would breach the contract with the first underwriter if it attempted to shift outstanding liabilities already committed to the new underwriter's paper. If such an arrangement is desired by all three parties, of course, it could be part of a winding-up agreement.

The agency contract normally states that the insurer owns the policies after the agency contract is terminated. This includes the information contained in the schedules of the policies, which may serve as a useful "starter" title plant for the insurer or its successor agent. The agent has been held not to have property rights in the content of the policies that would prohibit the insurer from using the policies itself or handing them over to a subsequent agent.[217]

17.10 Errors And Omissions Coverage

As stated above, errors and omissions coverage became quite costly in the 1980's. The cost rose because of agent defalcations, several carriers' election to leave the market, and increased claims presented by title insurers. This prompted the American Land Title Association to form an insurer, the Title Industry Assurance Company (TIAC), so that there would always be a carrier available to provide this form of coverage. Other carriers enter and leave the market periodically.

Errors and omissions insurance gives the agent financial backing for the agent's separate liabilities in three activities: abstracting, as title agent, and closing and escrow services. Not every agent does all three functions, and an agent is not required by the errors and omissions carrier to obtain coverage for every function it performs. A second form of protection sometimes obtained by agents is a fidelity bond. The cases concerning recovery on such bonds are found in §5.7.

A title agent errors and omissions policy also protects the agent against title losses payable by the agent to its underwriter. See §17.8.1 above regarding liability provisions of agency contracts. Most agency contracts require that the agent maintain errors and omissions insurance in a stated amount. Insurers commonly view errors and omissions coverage as a means of recoupment for losses caused by agents' mistakes. Title insurers sue errors and omissions carriers directly when permitted to do so under direct-action laws when possible under the terms of those laws.[218] A title insurer may

In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Continental Cas. Co., 709 F.3d 1170 (5th Cir. (La.) 2013), the court held that, although Louisiana has a direct action statute permitting a title insurer to sue an agent's errors and omissions carrier, the insurer must still comply with the policy's claim reporting deadline. The error had occurred within the policy term, and First American had made a demand on the agent to report the claim to the E & O carrier, but the agent had failed to report the claim during the policy term. First American argued that it had "made" the claim and that should suffice, since it was a third party with a direct-action right. CNA retorted that its policy was of the claims-made-and-reported variety, and thus there was no right because of the lack of a report of the claim by the agent. The court accepted the carrier's position, saying that a relaxation of the policy would "rewrite a claims-made-and-reported policy into an be deemed a necessary party in an action between a title agent and its errors and omissions carrier, when the insurer has made it plain that it intends to hold the agent liable for any loss that it suffers due to the agent's actions in issuing the policy on which a claim has been made.[219]

17.10.1 Covered Risks

Most errors and omissions policies have as their primary covered risk the liabilities assumed by the company as a policy-issuing title agent. The policy may also protect the agent against liability for closing errors, preparing abstracts and title searches, recording of documents, construction disbursing, serving as an intermediary in tax-deferred exchanges, and other related activities. Each carrier uses its own form of policy.

There is surprising variety between the carriers as to the nature of the risks and services the policy covers. Some policies are omnibus forms used for use with all manner of insurance agents or brokers. Other policies are used with many different service providers in the real estate field, such as real estate brokers, appraisers and mortgage brokers. Perhaps only the TIAC policy is written exclusively for use with title insurance agents.

All or most title agent errors and omissions policies are of the claims-made-and-reported variety. This means that three events must all occur within the policy period: the covered act must occur, the claim must be made against the agent, and the agent must report the claim to the carrier.[220] The agent must buy coverage for acts that occurred prior to the policy commencement date. This coverage is often included for the prior term if the same carrier issues the policy for the next term, though not always. If the title agent switches carriers, however, it will have assumed the risk of claims that might be presented during the present policy period for acts that occurred before the policy term commenced unless the policy contains prior-acts coverage.[221] A title agent may also occurrence policy."

[219] The court so held, in Houston Specialty Ins. Co. v. Titleworks of Southwest Florida, Inc., 2015 WL 5599175 (M.D.Fla. 2015) (unpublished).

[220] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Continental Cas. Co., 709 F.3d 1170 (5th Cir. (La.) 2013), the court held that, although Louisiana has a direct action statute permitting a title insurer to sue an agent's errors and omissions carrier, the insurer must still comply with the policy's claim reporting deadline. The error had occurred within the policy term, and First American had made a demand on the agent to report the claim to the E & O carrier, but the agent had failed to report the claim during the policy term. First American argued that it had "made" the claim and that should suffice, since it was a third party with a direct-action right. CNA retorted that its policy was of the claims-made-and-reported variety, and thus there was no right because of the lack of a report of the claim by the agent. The court accepted the carrier's position, saying that a relaxation of the policy would "rewrite a claims-made-and-reported policy into an occurrence policy." In James River Ins. Co. v. Brick House Title, LLC, 2017 WL 5126154 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the court held that a title agent wound up with no coverage under its errors and omissions policies because it learned of the claim in the first policy period but did not report it until the second policy term.

[221] In American Guarantee & Liability Ins. Co. v. The Abram Law Group, LLC, 555 Fed.Appx. 919, 2014 WL 563618 (11th Cir. (Ga.) 2014) (unpublished), a lawyer and his title agency were sued for title examination error on a loan that closed before the professional liability policy period and also their claimed fraudulent cover-up of those errors for a second loan that closed during the policy period. The court said the law firm had no coverage for either event due to the policy's prior acts exclusion on the claims-made-and-reported professional liability policy. The exclusion for "any act or omission or any Related Act or Omission that occurred" before the policy period nixed the error claim and the "Related purchase "tail" coverage for claims received after a policy period for errors made during the policy term. This coverage is most desirable when the agent is closing down or is ceasing business operations on the sale of its assets.

17.10.2 Exclusions And Coverage Defenses

Various coverage defenses may be raised by E & O carriers. Each carrier's policy form is different, so the exclusions and other policy defenses vary by carrier.

All errors and omissions policies incorporate the sworn insurance application into the policy. The carrier may rescind the policy if the agent made a material omission or misrepresentation in the insurance application.[222]

Most policies include an exclusion for fraud or other intentional or criminal acts of the agent, which has been applied in cases involving alleged participation in loan fraud, embezzlement of escrowed funds, and other types of fraud or criminal activity.[223] Similarly, a court upheld an Act or Omission" provision cancelled liability for the second closing during the policy period.

[222] Seneca Ins. Co., Inc. v. Lexington & Concord Search and Abstract, LLC, 2008 WL 2120170 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished) (misrepresentations about pending and prior claims and omission of the agent's "financial crisis" voided policy coverage); Medmarc Cas. Ins. Co. v. The Reagan Law Group, P.C., 525 F.Supp.2d 1334 (N.D.Ga. 2007) (failure by attorney to disclose trust account shortage on application for professional liability insurance voids policy); Whitford Land Transfer Co., Inc. v. Co. v. Houston Cas. Co., 2012 WL 4523666 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished). In Tudor Ins. Co. v. Associated Land Title, LLC, 2010 WL 716309 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), a title agent survived summary judgment by the errors and omissions carrier to void its policy due to the agent's failure to disclose a pending claim in its application, based on evidence that the insurer had issued policies to 16 other title agents with pending claims, suggesting that the carrier might still have issued the policy if the claim had been disclosed. In Zurich American Ins. Co. v. Expedient Title, Inc., 2015 WL 9165875 (D.Conn.) (unpublished), a title agent's answer of "no" to the application question of whether any officer of the company was the subject of a governmental investigation was determined to be intentionally false, and thus voided coverage. In Alterra Excess & Surplus Ins. Co. v. Excel Title Agency, LLC, 742 Fed.Appx. 968 (6th Cir. (Mich.)) (unpublished), affirming 2016 WL 6432650 (E.D.Mich. 2016) (unpublished), the title agent's failure to disclose in its application that it had already received an email in which a person threatened to sue for breach of escrow instructions voided coverage for the judgment later entered against the title company in that dispute. In Aztec Abstract & Title Ins., Inc. v. Maxum Specialty Group, 302 F.Supp.3d 1274 (D.N.M. 2018), A title agent voided coverage by not disclosing an error of which it had knowledge on the application date.

Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.*, 57 Mass.App.Ct. 1107, 782 N.E.2d 557 (Mass.App. 2003) (fraud exclusion applied to intentional failure to except mortgage on title commitment, allowing attorney-agent's client to get two "first" mortgages on the same property); Northland Ins. Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 327 F.3d 448 (6th Cir. (Mich.) 2003) (embezzlement falls under exclusion for "any dishonest, fraudulent, criminal or malicious act, any damages arising out of any gain, profit or advantage to which the insured is not legally entitled, and any damages arising out of the commingling, conversion, misappropriation, or defalcation of funds"). In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Northland Ins. Co., 31 So.3d 214 (Fla.App. 4 exclusion for damages caused by escrowed money or funds "that have been stolen, converted, commingled, embezzled, or misappropriated by any person, at any time, under any circumstances."[224] However, a computer hacker's theft of title agent escrow funds does not clearly invoke a "conversion of funds" exclusion, which is more rationally be interpreted as being limited to conversion by the insured agent, not a third party fraudster.[225]

Dist. 2010), an exclusion for "damages arising out of the comingling, conversion, misappropriation or defalcation of funds or other property" was found to negate coverage when a title agent delivered money to an attorney for a mortgage payoff and the lawyer stole the money, causing a policy loss. The court drew no distinction between the stealing of money by the insured title agent and the lawyer, who was not affiliated with the agent. In Title Industry Assurance Co., R.R.G. v. Chicago Abstract Title Agency, 2015 WL 5675544 (E.D.Ill. 2015) (unpublished), a title agency was sued by two lenders and a title insurer for losses they suffered because an employee of the agency stole money from the company's escrow account. Its TIAC policy included two exclusions, one for "any dishonest, fraudulent, criminal malicious or intentional wrongful acts committed by or at the direction of the Insured" and the other for "defalcation, commingling or, or failure to pay any funds, notes, drafts, or other negotiable instruments... ." The carrier refused to defend the agency in the action and brought an action to have the court declare its duties. The court held that the carrier was required to defend the title agency, because the complaint alleged more types of conduct by the agent than the simple assertion of theft. In Title Industry Assurance Co., R.R.G. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 853 F.3d 876 (7th Cir. (Ill.) 2017), the court held that exclusions for "any dishonest, fraudulent, criminal, malicious or intentional wrongful acts committed by or at the direction of the Insured" and claims based on "any defalcation, commingling of, or failure to pay any funds, notes, drafts, or other negotiable instruments" did not clearly negate the duty to defend the insured in an action in which "[m]ost of the allegations in the tendered complaints had no obvious relationship to a fraud claim," and where "just one path toward a covered claim would have been enough to trigger the duty to defend." The court found the E & O carrier wrongly rejected the defense and was thus subject to the doctrine of estoppel to deny coverage. As a result, the insurer was "barred from asserting any policy defenses to coverage that might have applied otherwise," and "this means TIAC is on the hook for the judgment or any reasonable settlement amount that [Coastal Funding and First American] ultimately recover against TIAC's Insured." By contrast, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Maxum Indemnity Co., 2017 WL 4048162 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), the court held that an errors and omissions carrier was not required to defend the agency against a suit filed by the underwriter claiming that the agency failed to properly supervise employees in the handling of the company escrow account, leading to shortages that caused policy claims. The exclusion at issue was for claims "alleging, arising out of, based upon, relating to, or attributable to, directly or indirectly, any ... commingling of funds or accounts, inability to pay or failure to safeguard funds."

[224] The quoted conversion and commingling exclusion was found to apply to a loss suffered by the agent because it transferred escrowed funds to an account of a related title agent, although there was no allegation of embezzlement or other tortious conduct by the insured agent, in Steadfast Ins. Co. v. National Abstract Agency, Inc., 2007 WL 2874002 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished). In Hawks v. American Escrow, LLC, 2012 WL 966059 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), exclusions for "the commingling or improper use of funds or accounts" and "improper use of, or failure to properly segregate or safeguard funds" negated coverage for a class action lawsuit claiming the agent failed to pay taxes and insurance from closings. In Bethel v. Darwin Select Ins. Co., 735 F.3d 1035 (8th Cir. (Minn.) 2013), an exclusion for claims due to "loss, disappearance, pilferage or shortage of, or commingling or improper use of, or failure to segregate or safeguard, any client or customer funds, monies, or securities" was found to negate the carrier's duty to defend an action brought by a title insurer against its agent for delaying or failing to record instruments and failing to make loan payoffs, even though the allegations were couched in terms of negligence rather than intentional acts. In Cornerstone Title & Escrow, Inc. v. Evanston Ins. Co., 555 Fed.Appx. 230, 2014 WL 631098 (4th Cir. (Md.) 2014) (unpublished), the court held that a lawsuit brought by the Maryland Attorney General against a title company, accusing it of aiding a foreclosure rescue operation by failing to disclose information and delivering checks to the wrong parties, did not fall under an exclusion for claims based on "theft, conversion or misappropriation of escrowed money or negotiable instruments."

[225] In ABL Title Ins. Agency, LLC v. Maxum Indemnity Co., 2016 WL 3610163 (D.N.J.) (unpublished), a fraudster

Some policies have an exclusion for claims related to property flipping.[226] Most also exclude matters known to the insured agent[227] and violations of the insurer's underwriting standards.[228] An exclusion limiting escrow coverages to services provided "for a fee" was found to violate the public policy requiring escrowees to maintain errors and omissions coverage "as evidence of financial responsibility."[229] The court also refused to apply an "affiliate entity" exclusion, even though the impersonated the seller's attorney, sending an email that convinced the title agent to wire sale proceeds to the criminal. In ruling on a motion to dismiss brought by the E & O carrier, the court held that this activity did not clearly fall under the "conversion of funds" exclusion in the errors and omissions policy. The court noted that "conversion" is defined as the wrongful exercise of control over someone else's property without authorization and to the exclusion of the property's owner. The title agent clearly did not take control of the money entrusted to it to the exclusion of the escrow principals. Nonetheless, in Resource Real Estate Services, LLC v. Evanston Ins. Co., 2017 WL 660800 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the court held that an exclusion "insufficiency in the amount of escrow funds" negated the carrier's duty to defend or indemnify the agent for the theft of the seller's money by an email directing the title agent to send the seller's money to a fake account.

[226] In Those Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London v. GMC Land Services of Florida, Inc., 315 Fed.Appx. 785, 2009 WL 426096 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2009) (unpublished), a broad exclusion for any claim involving a property flip was found to exclude a claim caused specifically by the forgery of a deed that was connected to a land flip. However, in United Fire & Casualty Co. v. Realty Title Co., 2007 WL 428068 (W.D.Mo.) (unpublished), the errors and omissions carrier was found obligated to defend the insured agent in lawsuit by a lender claiming that the agent failed to detect a loan fraud ring, including property flipping, despite a specific exclusion for "actual or alleged improper participation by any insured in any 'flip transaction.'"

[227] In United Fire & Casualty Co. v. Fidelity Title Ins. Co., 258 F.3d 714 (8th Cir. (Minn.) 2001), the carrier successfully invoked an exclusion for "claims arising from defects in title of which the [agent] had knowledge at the date of issuance of such title insurance" to avoid liability for a mortgage that the title agent discovered and reported, then removed based on an insufficient escrow. The court's analysis was brutally simple: the mortgage was a defect in title, and the agent knew about it; therefore, there was no coverage. The agent and its underwriter also argued that the mortgage was not a defect, because its validity was unclear, and to read the term "defect" in the errors and omissions policy this broadly would render coverage illusory. The court disagreed, saying: " [T]he plain and ordinary meaning of 'defect' includes a claim against title that, regardless of validity, might force a person into litigation. … [The seller] knew that the Notice of Adverse Claim could only be removed by litigation, since he set aside $5000 in escrow to pay for attorney's fees necessary to conduct the litigation. ... The doctrine of illusory coverage applies only when 'part of the premium is specifically allocated to a particular type or period of coverage and that coverage turns out to be functionally nonexistent.' … That is not the case here. The E & O policy clearly provided coverage under many circumstances. ... But the policy was not meant to provide coverage for known defects in title, and Fidelity never paid a premium for such coverage."

[228] In Trumbull Ins. Co. v. Braunstein & Todisco, LLC, 2004 WL 1616441 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the errors and omissions carrier filed a declaratory judgment action, claiming that it was not required to defend the agent in a suit brought by the insurer, or to indemnify the agent, based on its Exclusion K, which removes coverage for any claim "arising out of any intentional breach of underwriting authority by any Insured in the Insured's capacity as a title insurance agent, or arising from defects of title not disclosed of public record and which the Insured had knowledge of at the date of issuance of such title ... " However, the complaint filed against the agent insured did not allege that the agent violated instructions. The court found a duty to defend: "The complaint in the Fidelity action neither discloses what B & T's underwriting authority was nor whether the Teamwork-First Fairfield contract was of public record. … Accordingly, exclusion K does not excuse the plaintiff from its duty to defend the defendants. The allegations in the Fidelity action state a claim that falls possibly within the coverage provided by the plaintiff to the defendants."

lender in the escrow was a company owned by the same people who owned the escrow company.[230]

Many errors and omissions policies contain what is sometimes known as a personal-profits exclusion, for illegal fees charged or overcharges of legitimate fees for services, without any attendant claim of an error or omission in the performance of the professional service.[231] Class action lawsuits claiming that title agents overcharged for closing services or failed to refund recording fee overcharges may or may not fall under such an exclusion.[232]

Most errors and omissions policies have at least one exclusion limiting the coverage for construction disbursing errors. In one case, TIAC refused to defend the agent when it was accused of taking forged or fraudulent waivers of lien in a construction escrow.[233] The TIAC policy contained [229] Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Puget Sound Escrow Closers, Inc., 96 Wash.App. 227, 979 P.2d 872 (Wash.App. 1 Div. 1999).

[230] The court found that such an exclusion was designed "in order to guard against collusion." The injured party was the borrower, and there was no evidence of collusion; hence, the exclusion as construed was not applicable.

[231] For example, in Cornerstone Title & Escrow, Inc. v. Evanston Ins. Co., 555 Fed.Appx. 230, 2014 WL 631098 (4th Cir. (Md.) 2014) (unpublished), the policy contained exclusions for claims "based upon or arising out of [the insured's] gaining any profit or advantage to which [the insured] is not legally entitled," and for claims based on a violation of RESPA "or any similar state or local legislation." The agent was accused of aiding an equity stripping foreclosure rescue business operator. The court said that the complaint did not allege that Cornerstone received any personal or illegal profit or advantage by closing the transactions, and the exclusions did not apply. In National Title Agency, LLC v. United Nat'l Ins. Co., 2016 WL 1092485 (D. Utah 2016) (unpublished), an exclusion for claims against the agent for "gaining in fact [a] profit or advantage to which [it was] not legally entitled" was broadly construed, to negate coverage for a claim that the agent allowed the garnishment of its escrow account for agency company debts. The court refused to construe the exclusion to apply only to illegal gain.

[232] Two courts reached opposite conclusions in construing the same exclusion and very similar allegations against the insureds. In Pacific Ins. Co. v. Burnet Title, Inc., 380 F.3d 1061 (8th Cir. 2004), an errors and omissions carrier was found to have a duty to defend a title agent accused of marking up settlement charges such as overnight delivery services in violation of RESPA Section 8(b). The Eighth Circuit found that the complaint alleged "professional services" covered by the E & O policy, not mere bookkeeping functions; that the complaint did not allege only intentional (excluded) acts; and that the request for attorney fees by the plaintiffs constituted "damages" within the meaning of the policy. However, in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Prairie Title Services, Inc., 2005 WL 2850121 (N.D.Ill. 2005) (unpublished), an errors and omissions carrier was found not to be required to defend a title agency in a class action suit claiming that it has a duty to refund recording and courier fee overcharges. Despite the differing results, the exclusions and policy definitions at issue were nearly identical in both cases. St. Paul argued that, even if the agent was required to pay the recording fees to the plaintiffs, it would not suffer a loss as defined in the errors and omissions policy, because the policy defines damages as "compensatory damages imposed by law." The court agreed with the carrier, saying: "According to the Illinois courts, … the repayment of a sum the party never had a right to have is not considered a 'loss' because it cannot 'create a deprivation any more so than any borrower can be said to suffer a deprivation from being required to repay an indebtedness.' … Therefore, under Illinois law, an insurance company does not have a duty to defend for loss in cases where the plaintiff is seeking restitution of the defendant's improper gains. … The Seventh Circuit has also stated that an insured party 'incurs no loss within the meaning of [an] insurance contract by being compelled to return property that it had stolen, even if a more polite word than 'stolen' is used to characterize the claim for the property's return.'"

[233] Simpson v. Title Industry Assurance Co., 590 N.W.2d 282 (Table), 224 Wis.2d 644, 1999 WL 19307 (Wis.App.) (unpublished).

Exclusion K, which removes coverage for "situations where work or materials have been supplied by subcontractors or other suppliers and the insured makes a payment without prior receipt of appropriate waivers or releases of lien from the subcontractors or other suppliers involved." The court found a duty to defend the agent, Cherryland Title, because the complaint alleged more than a failure to obtain valid waivers of lien. It found that, while the exclusion would apply if Cherryland had failed to obtain appropriate lien waivers before payment, "it does not apply to the claim that Cherryland was negligent in failing to contact the subcontractors and suppliers directly to determine if payment had been made." The agent asked for summary judgment on policy coverage also. It argued that the exclusion did not apply because the construction contract did not require waivers until the last draw, which was never disbursed, the agency collected lien waivers for all listed work and only later learned that some waivers were fraudulent. The court found the exclusion ambiguous because the word "appropriate" was not defined:

> [The policy] neither indicates from whose perspective or at what time we determine whether the lien waivers were appropriate. It is unclear whether appropriateness is determined by reference to purpose or simply form. From Cherryland's perspective at the time it obtained the waivers, the lien waivers were suitable, fit, or proper because they were indeed lien waivers from the contractor before payment. ... [T]he exclusion [must be] measured from the escrow agent's view at the time it obtains the lien waivers. Cherryland therefore obtained appropriate lien waivers from O'Brien even though the lien waivers were later found to be fraudulent.

A common coverage defense, when the agent's error has caused the title insurer to pay a loss under a title insurance policy, is that the insurer did not assert an applicable policy defense, and thus became a volunteer in settling the claim. This argument survived summary judgment in Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. of Tennessee v. Kidd,[234] in which the court held:

> The plaintiff, Fidelity National Title Insurance Company of Tennessee (formerly "Southern Title Insurance Company"), brought an action in negligence and contract against the defendants Warren Kidd; W.K. Associates, Inc.; and H. Christopher Sears. Plaintiff appeals from summary judgment entered for defendants.
> Warren Kidd through his company W.K. Associates, Inc., (Kidd) performed title abstract services for attorneys. Kidd also was Fidelity National Title Insurance Company's (National) agent for purposes of selling title insurance policies. Christopher Sears (Sears) was an attorney specializing in property matters. Sears regularly hired Kidd as his title abstractor. … The issue presented is whether National's cause of action against the defendants should fail because of a lack of proximate causation between defendants' alleged negligence or breach of contract and National's damages if National had no obligation to provide a defense or pay any loss to IA or Gortman under the terms of the policy.

> Defendants argue that even if they were negligent or breached a contractual duty to National, they have no liability to National because National had no liability to pay or defend its insureds because the matters raised by the insureds were excluded from coverage. If we determine, taking the evidence in the light most favorable to National, that the matters raised by the insureds were excluded from coverage, then National provided a defense and settlement funds to the insureds voluntarily, and the trial court correctly granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. If National was not obligated to defend the insureds, then any negligence of the defendants could not have proximately caused National any harm.[235]

A similar case is Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota v. Christian,[236] in which the insurer sought to recover from attorneys who had prepared the defective title evidence relied on by the insurer in issuing its policy. The attorneys put forth an inventive litany of policy defenses which the insurer overlooked or ignored, including that the commitment had expired, that the insured lender had actual knowledge of the missed prior lien, and that there was no evidence that the lender had funded the loan. The insurer was denied summary judgment. Similarly, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Tri-Lakes Title Co., Inc.,[237] an agent was responsible to the insurer for having missed two easements.[238] However, the court found that the amount paid by the insurer to settle with the insured was not the measure of damages against the agent. Rather the appropriate measure, the court stated, was the diminution in value to the property. Thus, the insurer was required to prove that value rather than merely assert the amount of its claim payment.[239]

The unasserted-policy-defense argument also prevented recovery against an agent in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Virginia Commonwealth Title Co.[240] In that case, the insured lender elected not to foreclose its deed of trust when it learned that the borrower's signature had been forged on a correction deed putting the mortgagor in title. There was no evidence, however, that the mortgage or a power of attorney used to sign the mortgage had been forged. The insurer paid the lender on demand. It then sought recovery against the agent, which had also notarized the forged deed. The mortgagor testified that she did not sign the power of attorney, but the court discounted that testimony because of her apparent lack of knowledge. Because the insurer could not prove that the mortgage was forged and thus unenforceable, the agent was not liable to the insurer.

[238] The court found the agent's liability properly premised both on its contractual obligations and on negligent misrepresentation of title, in the form of the title insurance commitment, under §552 of the Restatement (2nd) of Torts.

[239] The Tri-Lakes case did not overtly involve an errors and omissions policy.

[240] 1995 U.S.App. LEXIS 23947 (4th Cir. 1995) (unpublished). The Virginia Commonwealth case and many other decisions are deftly analyzed in Bradford and Flynn, Recent Developments in Title Insurance Law, 32 Tort & Insurance Law Journal 617 (1997).

A Montana decision rejected the unasserted-defense argument, however, in a case in which the loss was clearly caused by the agent's error. In Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co.,[241] the agent, Realty Title, insured the sale of land to one purchaser, then later insured a second deed from the same seller which included some of the land previously deeded and insured. The insurer settled the case by paying the second insured, Weibert. The agent raised numerous defenses, including that there was no loss because the second insured's title was good, and that the insurer had a duty to the agent to clear title rather than pay the insured. The court dealt with causation:

> With respect to Realty Title's arguments concerning Old Republic's alleged "parallel duty" under the agency agreement to assert policy exclusions against Weibert, we are in agreement with the District Court: "Such arguments beg the question that is before the Court. Had Realty Title used due diligence in its examination of its own records, conflicting policies would not have been issued." That is, Realty Title's failure to exercise due diligence in searching title records was the genesis or cause of the Weibert-Quality Seed dispute in the first instance. For this reason, we need not address Realty Title's contentions under the second issue on appeal that the real cause of the loss was Old Republic's decision to settle without first adequately investigating whether Weibert was, in fact, a bona fide purchaser with respect to the 7.78-acre parcel first insured by the Turks.

Thus, the Montana court correctly determined that the agent is not a beneficiary of the title insurance policy, and is not entitled to assert its provisions as a foil to its own liability to an underwriter which pays the insured in good faith when a claim is made.

Given the frequency with which the unasserted-defense argument is made, sometimes successfully, the insurer is well-advised to ask the agent and carrier early on if they believe any policy defenses exist, as further discussed at §17.8. If the carrier or agent thinks policy defenses exist and the insurer disagrees, it should respond immediately and seek to come to agreement. If the insurer agrees that a policy defense may exist, but believes the claim should be settled, the carrier's consent or contribution to a settlement avoids the "volunteer" defense. A complicating factor is that some E & O policies preclude the carrier from settling without the agent's written consent.[242] When such a policy is in force, the insurer may wish to verify that the agent has also given its written consent before the settlement is consummated.

Also, some errors and omissions policies are written so that the E & O insurance does not cover what the agent owes the underwriter on title claims. These policy forms are apparently written to prevent the agent or its underwriter from collecting the agent's portion of a loss covered by and paid under the title policy.[243]

[242] One version of the Title Industry Assurance Company (TIAC) policy stated, under Limits of Liability: "4. LIMIT OF LIABILITY--REDUCTION FOR REFUSAL TO SETTLE: The Company shall not settle any claim without the written consent of the Insured. If, however, the Insured shall refuse to consent to any settlement recommended by the Company and shall elect to contest the claim or continue any legal proceedings in connection with such claim, then the Company's liability for the claim shall not exceed the amount for which the claim could have been so settled plus claims expense incurred up to the date of such refusal. Such amounts are subject to the provisions of Paragraphs 1 and 2 above."

A related defense that may be raised by the E & O carrier is that its policy is not "other insurance" covering the risk of a title defect, and therefore is not a collateral source of recovery for matters covered by the title insurance policy. Generally, when two policies cover the same loss but one does not reserve rights to collect from the other, the non-reserving insurer is held to suffer the full loss. The 1970 ALTA title insurance policy did not clearly state that the insurer had a right of subrogation against another insurer whose policy might cover the same loss. In Trico Manufacturing Co., Inc. v. Penn Title Ins. Co.,[244] construing a 1970 ALTA policy, the court stated:

> The subject title insurance policy does not contain an "other insurance" clause or any language limiting coverage in the event that there was other insurance also covering the insured's loss. "It is fundamental that in the absence of some contractual provision, each insurer, where several policies are involved, is liable to the insured for the full loss up to the amount of insurance named in the particular policy. That insured is, of course, entitled to but one indemnity, but he may nevertheless look for that indemnity to any one or more of his policies in the absence of any stipulation for pro rating. 26 C.J. 361, §462... ." [T]he strict rule of construction against the insurer is applicable to 'other insurance' clauses."[245]

The title insurer was thus precluded from having the amounts paid on a credit life insurance policy offset against the insured lender's claim under the title insurance policy. The 1992 and 2006 ALTA policies contain an explicit subrogation "other insurance" provision.[246] Further, suit by the insurer against the agent has been held to be directly for a breach by the agent and not based on subrogation.[247] Thus, there is no weakness in the current form of title insurance policy precluding the title insurer to seek contribution from the errors and omissions carrier or a bond in favor of the [243] One version of the TIAC policy, for example, contained exclusions for the following: "(f) any liability assumed by the Insured under any contract or agreement whereby the Insured has agreed to participate in the payment of a loss, including attorneys' fees, court costs and expenses payable under a title insurance policy, unless such liability would have attached to the Insured even in the absence of such agreement; (g) defects in title, of which the Insured had knowledge at the date of issuance of such title insurance, but intentionally failed to disclose to the title insurance company; … (n) any liability of others assumed by the Insured under any contract or agreement, unless and only to the extent that the Insured would have had liability in the absence of the contract or agreement... ."

[246] Conditions 13(b) of the 2006 ALTA Owner's policy states: "The Company’s right of subrogation includes the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance, or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights."

agent.[248] However, in most jurisdictions, the insurer does not have a sufficient interest in the agent's errors and omissions policy to permit it to intervene in an action brought by the carrier against the agent to contest its policy coverage.[249]

17.10.3 Other Coverage Provisions

There are several other important provisions common to errors and omissions policies. One important aspect is that all such policies are of the claims-made variety. If the notice of claim is not delivered in time, the tardy notice will bar the claim.[250] In Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Gannon,[251] the agent was aware that the insurer was handling a claim, but was not aware that he would be asked to pay for his negligent notarization of a forgery until after the agent's claims-made policy terminated. The insurer's notice was even too late under the "tail" provision built into that policy. The court found that the structure and limits of the claims-made form of policy would be defeated by allowing late notice under the "no prejudice" rationale. Similarly, a claim notice sent to the broker who placed the title agent's errors and omissions policy was not sufficient to put the carrier on notice, and the lack of notice was a valid defense to coverage under the claims-made policy. The court emphasized that the rationale behind claims-made policies is to cut off policy liability after strict time limits.[252]

A related defense is alleged prejudice to the errors and omissions carrier because it received late notice of the claim. Even if the errors and omissions carrier does not agree with the insurer's coverage position or decision to settle, the insurer may avoid this issue by giving prompt and continuing notice and information to the carrier. However, early notice avoids the question. See §2.3.3 regarding the effect of tardy notice of claim under the title insurance policy. Similar arguments seeking to extend the claim-notice deadlines on an errors and omissions policy were (unpublished). In both cases, which were apparently related, the court found that the insurer did not have a "sufficient interest" in the E & O policy, because it had not yet taken a judgment against the agent. In the Lexington decision, the court also found that the agency contract did not contain an assignment of rights under the errors and omissions policy, but the errors and omissions policy contained a provision requiring the carrier's consent to an assignment.

denied in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Kiefer.[253]

If the errors and omissions carrier reserves the right to reevaluate its denial if suit is filed, the agent has been held to have a duty to give a second notice after litigation was started. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa.,[254] the carrier denied liability when the claim was presented before a lawsuit, but the carrier told the agency to notify it if suit were brought. The agent did not give notice of the suit until it was settled, which was found to violate the cooperation clause of the errors and omissions policy, voiding coverage.

The errors and omissions carrier may exercise a pay-and-walk provision in lieu of defending the agent, if state law and the policy's terms so permit.[255]

All or most errors and omissions policies have loss limits per claim or occurrence. There can be disputes over whether a certain matter represents one or more claim.[256]

The title insurer and errors and omissions carrier may vie for control over the underlying litigation. The title insurer's first duty is to its insured. The errors and omissions carrier does not share in that duty to the owner or lender insured, and seeks to control the litigation only to protect its insured, the title agent. Thus, the insurer must handle the litigation in the manner that is proper for the sake of the insured. In some cases, the insured has control over litigation strategy, not the insurer, as when the insurer is defending under a reservation of rights that presents a conflict of interest. The title insurer thus may not cede control of the litigation, including selection of defense counsel, to the title agent or its errors and omissions carrier. The title insurer may have to explain its obligations under the policy to the agent and its carrier in order to avoid the argument that the insurer has failed to take action that could have limited the agent's liability to the insurer.

[256] In ALPS Property & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Bowles Rice, LLP, 2018 WL 3639832 (N.D.W.V. 2018) (unpublished), the court held that the fact that a law firm had two agency contracts with the same insurer, signed by two different offices and having different terms, was not a sufficient basis on which to assert that a loss paid on one policy involving a single mortgage was actually two occurrences.

Dear *:

I write in response to your tender of defense in the Action to * Title Insurance Company (the Company) on behalf of the Insured. Based on my investigation, the Company hereby agrees to advance attorney's fees and costs incurred in defending your client's title to the insured property, but only to the extent coverage is afforded under the above-referenced policy.

I invite your attention to Conditions 5 of the 2006 ALTA policy, which sets forth the Company's duty of defense:

> 5. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS
> (a) Upon written request by the Insured, and subject to the options contained in Section 7 of these Conditions, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an Insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured. This obligation is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the Insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the Insured as to those stated causes of action. It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs, or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.

Conditions 5(a) states that the Company shall have a duty to defend the Insured only as to "those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy." My analysis of the complaint is that Counts * and * invoke one or more of the Covered Risks of the policy (hereafter, the Covered Matters), and counts * and * do not, because *. Therefore, the Company hereby accepts the Insured's defense as to the Covered Matters only.

If you feel that I have failed to take into consideration facts or authorities in reaching this conclusion, or you believe that certain non-accepted causes of action fall within coverage, please resubmit your request with your own analysis, and it will be reviewed again.

*[The Company does not by this letter consent to pay your fees except as stated herein, including the prosecution of any counterclaims, cross-claims or claims against third parties that may be available to the Insured in relation to the Action, except *.] The Company has not retained you to provide advice to the Insured concerning questions or issues about the coverage under the Policy.

This defense is accepted subject to a reservation of rights. The complaint makes the following allegations: * [recite allegations]. As to the Covered Matters, the Company reserves the right to assert certain defenses based on the following provisions of the title insurance policy:

*[list appropriate exclusions and exceptions]

The Company reserves any and all rights as to the above-described defenses, including but not limited to the following:

1. To continue its independent investigation of this matter;

2. To assert any defense which, though not apparent at this time, becomes apparent at a later date;

3. Upon completion of the investigation, to withdraw from advancing any and all attorney's fees and costs in defending the Insured in this action, upon reasonable notice;

4. To commence a declaratory relief action against our Insured on the issue of policy coverage; and

5. To seek reimbursement of litigation costs, attorney's fees and reasonable settlement expenses which the Company may make or incur on behalf of the Insured, if appropriate.

Issues may come to our attention in the future which have a bearing on the Company's duty to defend the Insured. I will bring any such matter to your attention and advise you as to how the Company will proceed in light of that issue. The Company retains the right to supplement this reservation of rights based on any additional facts which may become known to the Company in the future.

Since the Company has accepted the tender of defense with a reservation of rights, I direct your attention to California Civil Code § 2860, Conflict of Interest Between Insured and Insurer--Appointment of Independent Counsel. Specifically, please note paragraph (c):

> When the insured has selected independent counsel to represent him or her, the insurer may exercise his right or require that the counsel selected by the insured > possess certain minimum qualifications which may include that the selected counsel have (1) at least five (5) years of tort litigation practice which includes substantial defense experience in the subject at issue in the litigation, and (2) errors and omissions coverage. The insurer's obligation to pay fees to such independent counsel selected by the insured, is limited to rates which are actually paid by the insurer to attorneys retained by it in the ordinary course of business in the defense of similar actions in the community where the claim arose or is being defended. The provisions of this subdivision shall not validate other, different or other additional policy provisions pertaining to attorney's fees or providing for methods of settlement of disputes concerning those fees. Any dispute concerning attorney's fees not resolved by these methods shall be resolved by final and binding arbitration by a single neutral arbitrator selected by the parties to the dispute.

[emphasis added] In light of the above, please contact me so that we may discuss your qualifications and fees. Your firm resume and list of billing rates would be most appreciated in aid of our effort to verify compliance with the requisites of § 2860.

It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs, or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.

Conditions 5(a) states that the Company shall have a duty to defend the Insured only as to "those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy." My analysis of the complaint is that Counts * and * invoke one or more of the Covered Risks of the policy (hereafter, the Covered Matters), and counts * and * do not, because * (the Non-Covered Matters). Therefore, the Company hereby accepts the Insured's defense as to the Covered Matters only. If you feel that I have failed to take into consideration facts or authorities in reaching this conclusion, or you believe that certain non-accepted causes of action fall within coverage, please resubmit your request with your own analysis, and it will be reviewed again.

The Company hereby agrees to pay your attorneys' fees and costs in defending the Insured against the Covered Matters. *[The Company does not by this letter consent to pay your fees except as stated herein, including the prosecution of any counterclaims, cross-claims or claims against third parties that may be available to the Insured in relation to the Action, except *.] The Company has not retained you to provide advice to the Insured concerning questions or issues about the coverage under the Policy.

Because the Company is obligated to defend the Insured only against the Covered Matters, the Company hereby undertakes to advance attorney's fees and costs only as to those matters. We ask that you segregate your time entries and costs between the Covered Matters and the Non-Covered Matters, and send invoices to me for the Covered Matters only. We recognize that there may be instances in which your services cannot be segregated between the Covered Matters and Non-Covered Matters. However, you must make an effort to so segregate your billings.

*[If for simplicity's sake you do not want to make an allocation of time, we will be amenable to a suggestion for a reasonable percentage apportionment. For example, because there are * causes of action, * of which are Covered Matters, we are willing to pay *[fractional share] of your total fees and costs in defense of the Action. Please advise if you wish to adopt this procedure.]

I look forward to a successful conclusion of this matter. I enclose the Company's standards for outside counsel. Please carefully read and abide by those standards. *[Please also prepare a litigation budget per the enclosed standards and forward it to me for review.]

8 Reservation of rights--retender of defense to insured

Dear *:

The Insured tendered *his/her/its defense in the Action to * Title Insurance Company (the Company) on *. The Company agreed to defend the Insured under a reservation of rights, as explained in a letter dated *. In that reservation of rights letter, the Company explained that it was reserving the right to retender the defense of the Action to the Insured in the event that *.

The Company hereby exercises its right to retender the Insured's defense in the Action to the Insured, because it has determined that there is no potential for coverage under the policy for the matters alleged by the plaintiff in the Action. The basis for this retender is the following: *.

The Company will not pay the attorneys' fees, costs and expenses incurred in defending the Insured in the Action from * forward. *[Please submit your final invoice to me at your earliest convenience.] *[I have asked attorney * to submit his/her final invoice to me so that the Company may pay the last defense costs that it has agreed to pay.] *[The Company reserves the right to seek reimbursement from the Insured for all attorneys' fees and costs it has paid to date to defend the Insured in the Action.]

Please note that, although the provisions of the policy recited above provide a sufficient basis for the Company to retender the defense of the Action to the Insured, additional terms and conditions of the policy may also apply, and there may be facts not known to the Company today that would serve as a further basis for such retender. The Company does not waive the right to assert all facts and policy provisions that support its decision to retender the defense of the Action.

9 Preliminary analysis of no duty to defend

*[Addressee]

Re: * (the "Insured")
Claim no. *
Policy no. * (the "Policy")
* [Case caption] (the "Action")

Dear *:

This letter is in response to the request made by the Insured, *, to * Title Insurance Company (the Company) to provide a defense for the Insured in the Action. I have reviewed the allegations made by the plaintiff in the complaint filed in the Action, to determine if those allegations create at least the potential for coverage under the Policy. I have also compared those allegations to the terms of the Policy, particularly its Covered Risks and Exclusions. *[I have also conducted a further investigation consistent with an insurer's duty in the State of * in the analysis of a requested defense in litigation.]

Conditions 5(a) of the Policy states that, on written request by the Insured, the Company shall be obligated to defend the Insured "in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured." Conversely, it states, the Company "will not pay any fees, costs, or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy." Further, Conditions 5(a) states that this obligation "is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy."

I have made the following analysis of the allegations in the Action and the terms of the Policy. *[quotation of Covered Risks, why allegations do not invoke a Covered Risk, recitation of duty to defend standard that is applied in the jurisdiction, quotation of applicable exclusion or other policy provision]

Therefore, I conclude that the allegations in this Action against the Insured do not create the potential for coverage under the Policy, and therefore the Policy does not obligate the Company to provide a defense to the Insured in the Action. Based on my analysis, the Company hereby declines to defend the Insured in the Action. If you are aware of an interpretation of the Policy that would alter this conclusion, please provide that information to me at your earliest convenience.

Please note that, although the provisions of the Policy recited above provide a sufficient basis for the Company to decline to defend the Insured in the Action, additional terms and conditions of the Policy may also apply, and there may be facts not known to the Company today that would serve as a further basis for such declination. The Company does not waive the right to assert all facts and policy provisions that support its decision to decline to defend the Insured in the Action.

10 Preliminary analysis of no duty to defend and filing of declaratory judgment action

*[Addressee]

Re: * (the "Insured")
Claim no. *
Policy no. * (the "Policy")
* [Case caption] (the "Action")

Dear *:

This letter is in response to the request made by the Insured, *, to * Title Insurance Company (the Company) to provide a defense for the Insured in the Action. I have reviewed the allegations made by the plaintiff in the complaint filed in the Action, to determine if those allegations create at least the potential for coverage under the Policy. I have also compared those allegations to the terms of the Policy, particularly its Covered Risks and Exclusions. *[I have also conducted a further investigation consistent with an insurer's duty in the State of * in the analysis of a requested defense in litigation.]

Conditions 5(a) of the Policy states that, on written request by the Insured, the Company shall be obligated to defend the Insured "in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured." Conversely, it states, the Company "will not pay any fees, costs, or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy." Further, Conditions 5(a) states that this obligation "is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy."

I have made the following analysis of the allegations in the Action and the terms of the Policy. *[quotation of Covered Risks, why allegations do not invoke a Covered Risk, recitation of duty to defend standard that is applied in the jurisdiction, quotation of applicable exclusion or other policy provision]

Based on the above analysis, the Company has concluded that the allegations in this Action against the Insured do not create the potential for coverage under the Policy, and therefore the Policy does not obligate the Company to provide a defense to the Insured in the Action. The Company has elected to seek a court determination as to whether or not it has a duty to defend the Insured in the Action. *[That declaratory judgment action has been filed in * court.] *[The Company may move the court to stay the Action until the court has issued an order regarding the Company's duty to defend the Insured.]

*[Notwithstanding its conclusion that it has no such duty, the Company hereby agrees to pay the cost of defending the Insured in the Action until it receives an order in the declaratory judgment action determining its duties. The Company hereby accepts the defense of the Insured under a full reservation of rights for the reasons described above. The Company will retender the defense of the Action to the Insured, if so permitted, when an order is entered in the declaratory judgment action.]

*[If you are aware of an interpretation of the Policy that would alter this conclusion, please provide that information to me at your earliest convenience.]

Please note that, although the provisions of the Policy recited above provide a sufficient basis for the Company to decline to defend the Insured in the Action, additional terms and conditions of the Policy may also apply, and there may be facts not known to the Company today that would serve as a further basis for such declination. The Company does not waive the right to assert all facts and policy provisions that support its decision to decline to defend the Insured in the Action.

11 Payment of loss without release of insurer

*[Addressee]

Re: * (the "Insured")
Claim no. *
Policy no. * (the "Policy")
* [Case caption] (the "Action")

Dear *:

This letter is in response to the claim of loss submitted by the Insured under the Policy. The Company has completed its investigation of the Claim. Allow me to restate the facts as I understand them.

*[Statement of facts]

The Company's investigation indicates that the above facts invoke Covered Risk *, which indemnifies the Insured against *[quote the Covered Risk] (the Covered Matter). The Company's investigation has not revealed that the Covered Risk is negated by an exclusion or limitation in the Policy. Therefore, the Company has determined that it will consider the Claim to be covered by the Policy, subject to the Policy's Conditions and other terms.

To date, the Insured has not submitted a proof of loss. Conditions 4 of the Policy states:

> In the event the Company is unable to determine the amount of loss or damage, the Company may, at its option, require as a condition of payment that the Insured Claimant furnish a signed proof of loss. The proof of loss must describe the defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy that constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage.

The Policy explains at Conditions 8 that it indemnifies the Insured against "actual monetary loss or damage" suffered by the Insured that is caused by the Covered Matter:

> This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.
> (a) The extent of liability of the Company for loss or damage under this policy shall not exceed the lesser of
> (i) the Amount of Insurance; or
> (ii) the difference between the value of the Title as insured and the value of the Title subject to the risk insured against by this policy.

The Company has elected to make its own determination of the amount of "actual monetary loss or damage" caused by the Covered Matter, at its own expense.

Partial loss or encumbrance:
*[The Company has obtained the enclosed appraisal that opines on the "difference value" in the property due to the Covered Matter.] *[insert mathematical formula analysis from Form 16]

Complete failure of title:
*[The Company has obtained the enclosed appraisal that opines on the value of the insured property as of the date of loss, which was *.]

I enclose the Company's check in the amount of $*, which represents the Insured's actual monetary loss or damage as determined by the Company. Although the Company believes that this payment represents the full amount of loss payable for the Claim, it agrees that the Insured's acceptance and deposit of the check is not a release of the Company, but an acceptance of policy benefits.

If the Insured believes that there is any additional loss payable under this Claim, the Company hereby requests that the Insured so inform the Company and also submit a proof of loss. Any such proof of loss must conform to the measure of loss as described in the Policy.

Please note that this payment is made by the Company based on its present understanding of the facts and the Policy terms applicable to the Claim. Other terms and conditions of the Policy may apply, and there may be facts not known to the Company today that would cause the Company to reconsider its determination that the Claim is covered by the Policy. The Company does not waive the right to reconsider its coverage determination, or to assert all facts and policy provisions that would support such a reconsideration of its coverage determination.

Re: * (the "Insured")
Claim no. *
Policy no. * (the "Policy")
* [Case caption] (the "Action")

Dear *:

This letter is in response to the claim of loss submitted by the Insured under the Policy. The Company has completed its investigation of the Claim. Allow me to restate the facts as I understand them.

*[Statement of facts]

The Company's investigation indicates that the above facts invoke Covered Risk *, which indemnifies the Insured against *[quote the Covered Risk] (the Covered Matter). The Company's investigation has not revealed that the Covered Risk is negated by an exclusion or limitation in the Policy. Therefore, the Company has determined that it will consider the Claim to be covered by the Policy to the extent that it is willing to undertake certain actions, described below, subject to the Policy's Conditions and other terms as described in this letter.

The Company has determined that there is a basis on which to seek to clear title in relation to the Covered Matter. The Company hereby elects to take action to clear title. This affirmative action to clear title is taken under Conditions 5(b) of the Policy, which states:

> The Company shall have the right, in addition to the options contained in Section 7 of these Conditions, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act that in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the Insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.

The Company has retained counsel to represent the Insured in clearing title, at the Company's sole expense. The attorney we have retained is:

*[Name, address and other contact information for attorney]

The Company has retained this attorney to perform the following tasks and functions (the Title Clearance Actions): *[describe the scope of work.] The Company does not by this letter consent to pay attorney *'s fees except as stated herein. The Company has not retained attorney * to provide advice or answer questions concerning the coverage of the Policy, either on behalf of the Insured or the Company. Because the counsel employed by the Company has been retained for the limited purpose of taking the Title Clearance Actions, please communicate directly with me regarding any other aspect of this Claim.

Please note the following concerning the Company's rights in taking the Title Clearance Actions. First, the Policy states that the Company may undertake action to clear title that, if successful, will reduce the Insured's loss or damage, even if such action will not fully remove the Covered Matter. Also, the Company may exercise this right even if it takes some time to accomplish the title clearance action, as long as the Company exercises its rights diligently. Further, no loss is payable to the Insured if the Covered Matter is removed or extinguished. See Conditions 9(a), which states:

> If the Company establishes the Title, or removes the alleged defect, lien, or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the Land, or cures the claim of Unmarketable Title, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused to the Insured.

In addition, no loss is payable to the Insured if the Company is unable to clear title until there is a final determination that the Title Clearance Actions are unsuccessful, as stated in Conditions 5(c) and 9(a):

> Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal any adverse judgment or order.
> In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals, adverse to the Title, as insured.

However, Conditions 8(b) of the Policy provides two additional benefits to the Insured in the event the Company does not succeed in removing the Covered Matter by the Title Clearance Actions:

> If the Company pursues its rights under Section 5 of these Conditions and is unsuccessful in establishing the Title, as insured,
> (i) the Amount of Insurance shall be increased by 10%, and
> (ii) the Insured Claimant shall have the right to have the loss or damage determined either as of the date the claim was made by the Insured Claimant or as of the date it is settled and paid.

I ask that you cooperate with and assist the Company in taking the Title Clearance Actions so that they may be brought to a successful and expeditious conclusion. Please see Conditions 6(a) of the Policy, which states:

> In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding and any appeals, the Insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, including the right to use, at its option, the name of the Insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the Insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title or any other matter as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the Insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

Please note that Conditions 5(b) of the Policy states that "[t]he exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy." *[By its election to retain counsel to take the Title Clearance Actions, the Company does not waive the right to reconsider its determination that the Claim is covered by the Policy, or to assert all facts and policy provisions that would support such a reconsideration of its coverage determination.] *[By its election to retain counsel to take the Title Clearance Actions, the Company does not acknowledge that the Claim is covered by the Policy, or waive the right to deny the Claim or to assert all applicable policy defenses, exclusions and provisions.]

14 Appraiser retainer letter--addressed to appraiser

This is to confirm that I have retained you to perform an appraisal on the above property. Please determine the diminution in value of the property, if any, caused by the existence of *[describe the covered matter] (the Title Issue). I have enclosed the following documents that describe the real estate to be appraised: *.

Your appraisal method should be designed to calculate the insureds' actual loss as defined in the policy, which is not the standard method used by an appraiser to determine the value of real estate. Please consider this letter to be your instruction letter, authorizing you to perform valuations that are based on certain conditions that are not standard appraisal methods as described, for example, in the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice (USPAP).

The correct method for valuation of a title insurance claim involving a title defect or encumbrance is to derive two values for the property as of the same date. The first valuation is of the property in its true condition, which is subject to the Title Issue. The second valuation is with the hypothetical assumption that the Title Issue does not exist. The following is a statement by a court of the measure of loss under a title insurance policy, which I ask you to assume to be a correct statement for this valuation:

> ... liability should be measured by diminution in the value of the property caused by the defect in title as of the date of the discovery of the defect, measured by the use to which the property is then being devoted.

Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (1953).

I ask you to use the Overholtzer method in performing your appraisal. Please produce two values for the property. The first value is to be for the property in its true condition, which is as follows: *. The second value is to be under the hypothetical assumption that *. Based on the Overholtzer method, both valuations must be performed as of *, which I will ask you to assume to be the date on which the insured discovered the Title Issue.

In conducting these valuations, please do not make any extraordinary assumptions, as that term is defined in USPAP. For example, please do not assume that the property could be rezoned or subdivided, or that utility service that does not presently exist could be brought to the property. Also, the only hypothetical condition that you should assume is the one stated above, that title is not subject to the Title Issue. Further, please do not conduct a highest-and-best-use analysis. Overholtzer requires the title insurer to pay a loss based on the use to which the property [was] being devoted" on the date the insured discovered the Title Issue. That use may or may not correspond with what you would consider to be the highest and best use of the property.

Let me reiterate that I seek your objective opinion of value. Please send me your professional resume with your appraisal report. I will pay your invoice when received. Please call me if you have any questions about the method to be used or the assumptions you are to make in producing these values.

15 Appraisal method--insured obtaining appraisal

You have advised that you *[your clients] intend to obtain an appraisal of the property. Please give me the appraiser's name and resume at your earliest convenience. In order to arrive at a valuation that accurately reflects the amount of loss payable under a title insurance policy. Let me describe that method so that you may present an appraisal that the Company will consider to be a credible proof of loss.

The appraisal must be designed to establish the diminution in value of the property, if any, caused by the existence of *[describe the covered matter] (the Title Issue). The appraisal method should be designed to calculate the insureds' actual loss as defined in the policy, which is not the standard method used by an appraiser to determine the value of real estate. You should issue an instruction letter to the appraiser authorizing him or her to perform valuations that are based on certain conditions that are not standard appraisal methods as described, for example, in the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice (USPAP).

The correct method for valuation of a title insurance claim involving a title defect or encumbrance is to derive two values for the property as of the same date. The first valuation is of the property in its true condition, which is subject to the Title Issue. The second valuation is with the hypothetical assumption that the Title Issue does not exist. The following is a statement by a court of the measure of loss under a title insurance policy, which the appraiser should be instructed to assume to be a correct statement for purposes of this valuation:

> ... liability should be measured by diminution in the value of the property caused by the defect in title as of the date of the discovery of the defect, measured by the use to which the property is then being devoted.

Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (1953).

The appraiser should be instructed to use the Overholtzer method in performing the appraisal. That method requires the appraiser to produce two values for the property. The first value is to be for the property in its true condition, which is as follows: *. The second value is to be under the hypothetical assumption that *. Based on the Overholtzer method, both valuations must be performed as of *, which was the date on which the insured discovered the Title Issue.

In conducting these valuations, the appraiser should be told not to make any extraordinary assumptions, as that term is defined in USPAP. For example, he or she should be instructed not to assume that the property could be rezoned or subdivided, or that utility service that did not exist on the valuation date could be brought to the property. Also, the only hypothetical condition that the appraiser should assume is that title is not subject to the Title Issue. Further, the appraiser should be told not to conduct a highest-and-best-use analysis. Overholtzer requires that the title insurer pay a loss based on "the use to which the property [was] being devoted" on the date the insured discovered the Title Issue. That use may or may not correspond with what the appraiser would consider to be the highest and best use of the property.

16 Mathematical formula for partial loss of land or easement

This letter is in response to the claim of our Insured under the above policy. We have now completed our preliminary investigation of the matter. Allow me to restate the facts as I understand them and give you our preliminary analysis of the claim.

[Statement of facts]

Based on the above facts, it is my analysis that a loss is payable under the policy to the insured. The loss is *[state nature of loss].

The measure of loss under the policy is defined in paragraph 6 of the Conditions and Stipulations, which states:

> 6. Determination and Payment of Loss
> (a) The liability of the Company under this policy shall in no case exceed the least of:
> (i) the actual loss of the insured claimant; or
> (ii) the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A.

The courts have consistently read the measure of loss in situations of this type as follows:

> liability should be measured by diminution in the value of the property caused by the defect in title as of the date of the discovery of the defect, measured by the use to which the property is then being devoted.

Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (1953); Allison v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 907 F.2d 645, (7th Cir. 1990); 979 F.2d 1187 (7th Cir. 1992).

One method of determining amount of the reduction in value is to obtain the opinion of an appraiser. To follow the Overholtzer rule, the appraisal must be done as of the date of discovery of the defect. The appraiser produces two values: the value of the property subject to the easement, and the value assuming that no easement existed. The loss is the difference between the two figures.

It is my experience, and the Company's, that it is very difficult for an appraiser to value the diminution in value caused by the existence of a defect in title such as a *. To avoid a purely subjective valuation, we frequently employ the following mathematical formula:

1. Determine the fair market value of the property without the title defect.

2. Determine the number of square feet for the entire lot.

3. Divide the fair market value by the number of square feet, to get a value per square foot.

4. Determine the number of square feet in the affected area.

5. Multiply the number of affected square feet by the value per square foot.

*[6. Divide the number arrived at in (5) by 2, to reflect the fact that an easement is equal to about half the value of full ownership of the land.]

*[This valuation method is weighted in favor of the insured because the value of all improvements is spread out over the unimproved portion of the property.]

The above formula produces the following figures in this case:

Property value	$*
Total number of square feet (* x * feet)		*
Value per square foot	$*
Affected area (* x * feet)		*
Value of affected area in fee		$*
[Loss (fee value divided by 2)			$]

I have enclosed our check in the above amount. *[Your clients are authorized to deposit the check when they have signed the enclosed release and returned it to me in the envelope provided.]

Dear *:

This letter is in response to the claim of loss submitted by the insured under the Policy, in which the insured has asserted policy coverage for *[describe the claim] (the Claim). The Company has completed its investigation of the Claim. Allow me to restate the facts as I understand them.

*[Statement of facts]

Now allow me to give you my analysis of this claim.

*[Recitation of policy provisions]

*[Application of policy provisions to facts]

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Company has concluded that the Claim is not covered by the terms of the title insurance policy.

*[The above analysis represents the Company's analysis of policy coverage based on the facts known to it. If you are aware of facts or an interpretation of the policy which might alter the above analysis or conclusions, please provide that information to me at your earliest convenience.]

*[The Company therefore denies the Claim.]

Please note that this the above analysis is made by the Company based on its present understanding of the facts and the Policy terms applicable to the Claim. Other terms and conditions of the Policy may apply, and there may be facts not known to the Company today that would serve as further bases for a determination that the Claim is not covered by the Policy. The Company does not waive the right to assert any additional facts or policy terms or defenses.

Dear *:

You will recall that I gave you my analysis of coverage regarding this claim by my letter of *. I invited you to forward facts or an interpretation of the commitment and policy which might alter my analysis. I have not heard from you to date.

I have scheduled this file for a final review on *. If I have not heard from you by that time, I will assume that the proposed insured has elected not to contest my analysis, and I will close my file. Thank you again for your notice. *[I have enclosed a statutory notice of insureds' rights.]

19 Rights in adjacent street not insured

This dispute concerns *[description of issue concerning adjacent street]. You may have a valid claim to these rights, but they are not insured by the policy. The policy insures only the land described in Schedule A. It does not insure any appurtenant interests outside the boundaries of the described property. The policy states:

> 1. Definition of Terms
> The following terms when used in this policy mean:
> *   *   *
> (d) "land": the land described, specifically or by reference in Schedule A, and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property; provided, however, the term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area specifically described or referred to in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

Please see Offenhartz v. Heinsohn, 30 Misc.2d 693, 150 N.Y.S. 2d 78 (Sup. Ct. 1956).

The title insurance policy does not insure any rights in any street adjacent to the insured property. The insurer is not responsible for determining what rights the insured might have in a road. In Havstad v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 58 Cal.App.4th 654, 68 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 97 Cal. Daily Op.Serv. 8107 (1 Dist. 1997), mod. Oct. 20, 1997, rev.den., a policy insuring land in a subdivision was found not to insure any rights in an area on the recorded plat marked as "not a public street." The court made it clear that the policy insures only the land shown in the policy. Any reference to a map or plat does not draw into coverage any appurtenant rights which might be created by or referred to in such map.

> Thus, the written title insurance contract provisions "clearly and explicitly" insure a fee title in lots 1 and 23; "clearly and explicitly" do not cover "any property beyond the lines of the area described or referred to in schedule A, nor any right, title, interest estate or easement in abutting streets"; and "clearly and explicitly" contain no separate indorsements covering an easement in the nonabutting property known as "not a public street." An ordinary reading of the land's description indicates coverage for two pieces of property--lot 1 and lot 23. Reference to the subdivision maps is included to provide guidance as to where the graphic representation of the property can be located. In our view, the policy is completely unambiguous in its description of the land covered... .

20 Disputed improvement not located on Land

This dispute concerns *[describe improvement not located on Land]. While you may have a valid claim of ownership to these improvements, the policy does not insure that you own them. The title insurance policy insures title to the land described in the policy. It does not insure title to land not described in the policy. The policy states:

> 1. Definition of Terms
> The following terms when used in this policy mean:
> (d) "land": the land described, specifically or by reference in Schedule A, and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property; provided, however, the term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area specifically described or referred to in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

Because the improvements are not located on the insured property, title to the land on which they rest is not insured.

21 Land erroneously included in policy and deed

The insurer is not liable to indemnify the insured when the policy includes land which the insured did not intend to buy or pay for. The policy does not protect against matters agreed to by the insured, or that do not result in any loss or damage. The Exclusions from coverage state:

> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:
> *　*　*　*
> 3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:
> (a) created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the insured claimant;
> *　*　*　*
> (c) resulting in no loss or damage to the insured claimant... .

In this case, the facts recited above show that the land that the insured agreed to purchase did not include the parcel in dispute. This is similar to the situation in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Golf Links Development Corp., 87 F.Supp.2d 505 (W.D.N.C. 1999). In Golf Links, the legal description accidentally included a platted lot that had already been deeded away by the seller. The policy also mistakenly included the lot. The insured claimed to have purchased the lot and sued the insurer for its value. The court reformed the policy to take out the lot. The insured argued that the insurer should be liable because it made a mistake. The insurer said that it merely repeated the buyer's own mistake. The court agreed with the insurer:

> [N]egligence on the part of one party [which causes the mistake] does not preclude a finding of mutual mistake. In other words, the fact that the mistake arises because the party who is seeking reformation supplied the incorrect information does not make the mistake unilateral.

The insured's failure to obtain the disputed land also results in no loss or damage to the insured. A case involving very similar circumstances is Cohen v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 212 Conn. 436, 562 A.2d 510 (Conn. 1989), in which the deed and policy description included land which the insured had never intended to purchase. The court held that the insured "had suffered no compensable loss." The court reached the same result on the same facts in Aja v. Appleton, 86 Nev. 639, 472 P.2d 524 (1970) and Booth v. New Jersey Highway Authority, 60 N.J.Super. 534, 159 A.2d 460 (1960).

22 Physical barrier to access

The policy insures against the "[l]ack of a right of access to and from the land." Insuring Provision 4. This coverage assures a right of access, but not that an abutting public street is physically open and improved. This limitation on the access coverage has been recognized by a number of reported decisions construing the policy.

For example, in Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805 (Fla.App. 1980), the insureds had a right of access, but wanted the insurer to pay for the substantial fill required to make it useable by normal vehicles. The court held that the policy insures only that there is a right of access. Similarly, in Title & Trust Co. of Florida v. Barrows, 381 So.2d 1088 (Fla.App.1979), a platted "street" was only the extension of a sandy beach, and was covered by the tide in the spring and fall. The court held:

> In the case here before us, there is no dispute that the public record shows a legal right of access to appellant's property via the platted Viejo Street. The title insurance policy only insured against record title defects and not against physical infirmities of the platted street.

381 So.2d at 1090. Finally, in Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991), the insured testified that the trek from public street into his property was "indescribable" and a mere "goat path." The court held, however, that the policy insures only a right of access, not that the access right will permit convenient use. Further, it found the insurer was not responsible for inspecting the property for the insured, or for insuring that the access route was passable. Thus, the court found no coverage for the inconvenient access right.

*[The Krause policy also contained an exception for matters which would be shown on an accurate survey, as does the policy issued in this case. The Krause court found that the survey exception placed the burden on the insured to discover any deficiency in the physical condition of the street:

> The policy here specifically excepted any facts revealed by an accurate survey. The physical condition of the existing access was easily ascertainable by a simple inspection of the site by the purchasers. As the title company insured the quality of the title as shown by the record and there was access of record, it was not required to aid in the suit by appellants Krause and Beane to establish a grant of necessity.

390 So.2d at 806.]

23 "Reasonable" access not insured

The policy insures against the "[l]ack of a right of access to and from the land." Insuring Provision 4. This coverage assures a right of access. It does not assure a "reasonable" or convenient means of traveling from a public street to the property, or that the property is accessible by vehicle.

For example, in Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991), the insured testified that the trek from public street into his property was "indescribable" and a mere "goat path." There was no question, however, that there was a public street next to his property. The court held that the policy insures only the right of access, not a convenient route. The court found the insured, not the insurer, was responsible for inspecting the property and making sure that the access route was passable. Similarly, access over a logging road was found to be a sufficient means of access for property located in a forested area. United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. Me. 1999).

24 Street not insured as being public, open, unobstructed or at grade

The policy insures that the insured has a right of access to and from the property. However, it does not insure that an adjacent street has any legal or physical status. First, the policy does not assure that a street adjacent to the insured property is a public road. See Rialto Building & Loan Ass'n v. Commonwealth Title Co., 327 Pa. 93, 192 A. 635 (1937) (street was not open and was an easement, not dedicated in fee; policy made exception for "Streets not physically opened" and thus dedication to public not insured); Shaver v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 163 Tenn. 232, 43 S.W.2d 212 (1931) (description referring to road was not assurance that the road existed or was open; in fact, abutting land was privately owned and access later halted over it, but no claim was payable); J & S Building Co., Inc. v. Columbian Title & Trust Co., 1 Kan.App.2d 228, 563 P.2d 1086 (1977) (attempted reservation of reversionary rights in dedicated streets was ineffective; insured's title to street on vacation was not defective or unmarketable because of invalid reversion right).

The policy also does not assure that any abutting "public" street is open or improved. For example, in Title & Trust Co. of Fla. v. Barrows, 381 So.2d 1088 (Fla.App. 1979), the insured land abutted a platted street which was "merely a continuation of a sandy beach" and covered by high tide in the spring and fall. However, the court ruled that the insured had a right of legal access and the policy did not insure "against physical infirmities of the platted street." Similarly, in Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951), a plat was recorded but the streets were not constructed. In fact, the entire subdivision was mere desert. The court found it "elementary" that the insured's problem was the condition of the improvements on the land, not the title to same, and thus not covered by the policy.

Finally, the policy does not assure that any adjacent street is at a grade which will permit the insured to build a connecting driveway. It also does not insure against a municipal action to change the grade of the adjacent street, even when a map showing the intended changes to the street is filed or available for review. See Sperling v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 227 App. Div. 5, 236 N.Y.S. 553 (1929); Mafetone v. Forest Manor Homes, Inc., 34 App.Div.2d 566, 310 N.Y.S.2d 17 (1970).

25 Marketability of title not "salability" of property--Residential policy

The policy protects against loss caused by unmarketability of the title to the property. This coverage concerns a purchaser's willingness to accept the title to the property. It does not insure that the property itself is "salable"in the sense that a purchase can easily be found for it. The policy states:

> *[Residential policy]
> COVERED TITLE RISKS
> This Policy covers the following title risks, if they affect your title on the Policy Date.
> * * * *
> 11. Your title is unmarketable, which allows another person to refuse to perform a contract to purchase, to lease or to make a mortgage loan.
> ... * TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, a Blank corporation, herein called the Company, insures, as of Date of Policy shown in Schedule A, against loss or damage, not exceeding the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A, sustained or incurred by the insured by reason of:
> * * * *
> 3. Unmarketability of the title... .

Property can have perfectly good (marketable) title, yet have little or no value on the resale market.

Marketability of title means a title which is reasonably certain. In our state, marketability of title is measured as:

> *[state law standard for marketability of title]

The distinction between marketability of title and salability of the land is well-established in case law. Case law is also clear that the title insurance policy insures marketability of title, not salability of the land.

For example, in one case an insured bought a lot in a "subdivision" which existed only on paper and was physically just desert. The insured argued that the land had no value:

> In this connection she points out that "street improvements obviously enhance the value of subdivision lots," that "obviously the sales value of such property is a long > ways from the sum of $13,550.00 which she paid for the property, if it has any value at all," and that "Certainly no one would pay that price for two small areas of vacant, unimproved desert land."

Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951). The court disagreed, holding:

> One can hold perfect title to land that is valueless; one can have marketable title to land while the land itself is unmarketable.
> Although it is unfortunate that plaintiff has been unable to use her lots for the building purposes she contemplated, it is our view that the facts which she pleads do not affect the marketability of her title to the land, but merely impair the market value of the property. She appears to possess fee simple title to the property for whatever it may be worth... .

Similarly, an insured claimed that her house had been built at an elevation below the flood plain, making it impossible to resell. The appeals court affirmed judgment for the insurer, stating:

> Camp stated in her affidavit that she has listed the house for sale and has received no offers for it.
> The district court reasoned that under Arkansas law, Camp had a valid claim only if the breach of the restrictive covenant amounted to a cloud on the title, and thereby impaired marketability. The court concluded that the breach reduced the value of the property, but did not affect Camp's title to the property. Since the breach did not extinguish Camp's title to the property, or raise any reasonable doubt as to the validity of her title, the title was not unmarketable, the risk against which Commonwealth insured.

Camp v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 787 F.2d 1258 (8th Cir. 1986). See also: Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar, 24 Mass. App. Ct. 53, 506 N.E.2d 154 (1987) (hazardous material on premises does not make title unmarketable); Nishiyama v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 85 Cal.App.3d Supp. 1, 149 Cal. Rptr. 355 (1978) (illegal lot split does not make title unmarketable); Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 39 Colo.App. 235, 563 P.2d 979 (1977) (existence of special tax district does not make title unmarketable).

26 Commitment cancelled--lapse of effective period

You are hereby advised that the above-referenced title insurance commitment is null and void, and is hereby cancelled because it has expired by its terms. The commitment provides:

> This Commitment is preliminary to the issuance of such policy or policies of title insurance and all liability and obligations hereunder shall cease and terminate 180 days after the effective date hereof or when the policy or policies committed for shall issue, whichever first occurs, provided that the failure to issue such policy or policies is not the fault of the Company.

The last effective date of the commitment was *. More than 180 days have passed since that date. *[The transaction for which the commitment was issued is not evidenced in the public record.]

27 Commitment cancelled--failure to pay premium

You are hereby advised that the above-referenced title insurance commitment is null and void, and is hereby cancelled because the premium has not been paid. A fundamental principle of insurance is that the insurer does not undertake a risk unless it has been paid the premium.

The commitment states:

> * Title Insurance Company, a * corporation, herein called the Company, for a valuable consideration, hereby commits to issue its policy or policies of title insurance, as identified in Schedule A, in favor of the proposed Insured named in Schedule A, as owner or mortgagee of the estate or interest covered hereby in the land described or referred to in Schedule A, upon payment of the premiums and charges therefor; all subject to the provisions of Schedules A and B and to the Conditions and Stipulations hereof.

Requirement (b) on Schedule B, Part 1 is:

b. Payment to the Company of the premiums, fees and charges for the policy.

*[Insert form re: expiration of commitment if applicable]

28 Commitment cancelled--failure to disclose material fact

The commitment to insure says that the proposed insured must disclose any title defect of which he or she becomes aware.

> 2. If the proposed Insured has or acquired actual knowledge of any defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter affecting the estate or interest or mortgage thereon covered by this Commitment other than those shown in Schedule B hereof, and shall fail to disclose such knowledge to the Company in writing, the Company shall be relieved from liability for any loss or damage resulting from any act of reliance hereon to the extent the Company is prejudiced by failure to so disclose such knowledge. If the proposed Insured shall disclose such knowledge to the Company, or if the Company otherwise acquires actual knowledge of any such defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter, the Company at its option may amend Schedule B of this Commitment accordingly, but such amendment shall not relieve the Company from liability previously incurred pursuant to paragraph 3 of these Conditions and Stipulations.

Conditions paragraph 2. The United States Supreme Court stated this duty of disclosure as follows:

> Insurance policies are traditionally contracts uberrimae fidei [the most abundant good faith] and a failure by the insured to disclose conditions affecting the risk, of which he is aware, makes the contract voidable at the insurer's option.

Stipcich v. Insurance Co., 277 U.S. 311, 316, 48 Sup.Ct. 512, 72 L.Ed. 895. This is an ongoing duty to disclose.

When the proposed insured knows about the title defect before closing, but does not tell the insurer, the policy is void. For example, in Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 9 Neb.App. 372, 612 N.W.2d 515 (Neb.App. 2000), aff'd 261 Neb. 609, 624 N.W.2d 644 (2001), the court found that, when the insured failed to disclose a title defect before closing, the policy did not protect against it.

> The clear language of the commitment allows Chicago Title to exclude or limit coverage on Schedule B when the policy is issued for an adverse claim which comes to light after the commitment but before the policy is issued. However, nondisclosure results in a new and undisclosed adverse claim being excluded from coverage. By the time the Kirwans disclosed the Vanderwerfs' claim, the commitment had "evaporated" by its express terms and the policy controlled... .

The same conclusion was reached in Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Ozark Global, L.C., 1997 WL 124213 (S.D.Ala. 1997) (unpublished).

29 Commitment cancelled--failure to pay adequate consideration

You are hereby advised that the above-referenced title insurance commitment is null and void, and is hereby cancelled. The commitment to issue a policy is conditioned on satisfaction of Requirement 1 of Schedule B, Part I:

1. Payment to or for the account of the grantors or mortgagors of the full consideration for the estate or interest to be insured.

It has come to our attention through *[identify source of information] that the proposed insured has not paid full consideration for the property to be insured.

30 Commitment cancelled--failure to meet requirement

You are hereby advised that the above-referenced title insurance commitment is null and void, and is hereby cancelled, because the following requirement has not and cannot now be met:

Reported cases establish that no coverage exists until the commitment requirements have been met. A defective instrument does not satisfy the requirement that such an instrument be delivered or recorded. For example, when a forgery in a deed to be insured was alleged after closing but before the policy was issued, the court held that a forged deed does not satisfy the requirement that a warranty deed be recorded. Glass v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., 354 S.E.2d 187 (1987).

In a similar case, a closing attorney falsely represented to a loan assignee that a transaction had closed and loan funds been disbursed, when in fact the funds had not been disbursed, the deed had not been delivered and prior liens had not been paid off. The assignee's claim was rejected by the court because the requirements for policy issuance had not been met, and thus there was no policy. The misrepresentations of the closer did not create policy coverage. First Financial Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota, 557 F. Supp. 654 (1982).

31 Commitment--no loss suffered because no reliance

A proposed insured may claim loss under a commitment only to the extent that he or she has acted in reliance on the commitment. The Conditions of the commitment state:

> 3. Liability of the Company under this Commitment shall be only to the named proposed Insured and such parties included under the definition of Insured in the form of policy or policies committed for and only for actual loss incurred in reliance hereon in undertaking in good faith (a) to comply with the requirements hereof, or (b) to eliminate exceptions shown in Schedule B, or (c) to acquire or create the estate or interest or mortgage thereon covered by this Commitment. In no event shall such liability exceed the amount stated in Schedule A for the policy or policies committed for and such liability is subject to the insuring provisions and Conditions and Stipulations and the Exclusions from Coverage of the form of policy or policies committed for in favor of the proposed Insured which are hereby incorporated by reference and are made a part of this Commitment except as expressly modified herein.

[emphasis added] Under the facts stated above, it is my analysis that the proposed insured did not rely on the title insurance commitment in electing to close on the purchase of the property.

Numerous reported decisions have upheld the commitment term that loss does not occur, even if the commitment is in error, when the proposed insured does not change his or her position in dependence on the erroneous information in the commitment. For example, a lack of reliance was established conclusively when the proposed insured did not apply for title insurance until after taking title. See W.E. Erickson Const., Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 641 N.E.2d 861 (Ill.App. 1994); Manley v. Cost Control Marketing & Management., Inc., 583 A.2d 442 (Pa.Super.Ct. 1990); Driscoll v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 119 Misc. 754, 197 N.Y.S. 323 (Sup.Ct. App. Term 1922); and Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Research Loan & Invest. Corp., 361 F.2d 764 (8th Cir. 1966). Similarly, a lender failed to show reliance when it does not see the title insurance commitment before making the loan. Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 192 Cal.App. 3d 70, 237 Cal.Rptr. 264 (1987).

The fact that coverage is conditioned on reliance does not make the commitment illusory.

> Chicago Title's promise under the title commitment is neither empty nor optional. The commitment only excludes recovery for damages caused by a defect in title if the insured did not rely on the commitment to acquire the title. It clearly covers losses suffered by an insured who relies on the commitment. Such a promise is not illusory, but contingent upon the loss occurring after the insurance takes effect.

W.E. Erickson Const., Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 641 N.E.2d 861, 864 (Ill.App. 1994).

32 Loan policy does not insure repayment of debt or value of land

The loan policy does not insure the enforceability of the debt for which the insured *[mortgage] *[deed of trust] is given as security, or that the debt will be repaid. Rather, the policy insures only against the matters shown in the Insuring Provisions, all of which have to do with the title to the Land or the lien of the insured *[mortgage] *[deed of trust].

This limitation on policy coverage has been upheld in numerous reported decisions. For example, one court stated:

> A mortgagee title insurance policy does not guarantee the mortgagee that the mortgagor will make the mortgage payments. See Narbeth Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Bryn Mawr Trust Co., 126 Pa.Super. 74, 190 A. 149, 151 (1937) ("The provisions of [a mortgagee title policy] did not constitute the [title insurance] company a surety for the mortgaged debt, nor a guarantor of its payment.") All a policy of that kind does is insure the adequacy of the title to the mortgaged property. Miller v. Commercial Standard Ins. Co., 248 So.2d 675 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App. 1971). The lender, and not the title insurer, shoulders the credit risk in a real estate loan. Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens and Southern Nat'l Bank, 821 F.Supp. 1492, 1495 (N.D.Ga. 1993) (a declaratory judgment action brought by the insurer against the insured to determine coverage under a mortgagee title policy wherein the court observed "sound legal policy should dictate that the [insured] would have borne [the] risk absent specific language to the contrary.") A mortgagee title insurer is under no duty to prosecute a foreclosure action.

First Federal Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.E.2d 916, 922 (S.C.App. 1994). Similarly, when a lender was sued under various theories, including RICO, based on alleged forgeries and alterations to loan documents, the court found that the complaints "do not question either the validity or enforceability of the mortgages, and do not assert title defects." First Federal Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.E.2d 916, 922 (S.C.App. 1994).

The policy also does not assure that the loan can be sold for any particular price, or that the property is worth as much as the debt. See Glavinich v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 163 Cal.App.3d 263, 209 Cal.Rptr. 266 (1984) (notice of default affected resale value of loan, but not the validity of the lien); Demopoulos v. The Title Ins. Co., 61 N.M. 254, 298 P.2d 938 (1956); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. JDC (America) Corp., 818 F.Supp. 1543 (S.D. Fla. 1993), aff'd 52 F.3d 1575 (11th Cir. 1995); Couch on Insurance, §§ 57:189, 205. Rather, if the value of the property is less than the debt, the property value becomes the ceiling of policy liability. Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Insurance Co., 992 F.2d 1231, 1237, note 10 (1st Cir. 1993).

33 Police power matter

The policy does not protect against the government's exercise of its police power right, unless there is notice in the public records on the Date of Policy that the government is taking such action:

*[Residential policy]

EXCLUSIONS

In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from:

1. Governmental police power, and the existence or violation of any law or government regulation. This includes building and zoning ordinances and also laws and regulations concerning:
   . land use
   . improvements on the land
   . land division
   . environmental protection

This exclusion does not apply to violations or the enforcement of these matters which appear in the public records at Policy Date.

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

   (b) Any governmental police power not excluded by (a) above, except to the extent that a notice of the exercise thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

Various actions by governmental bodies under the police power have been held in reported cases to be excluded from the coverage of the policy. For example, in Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975), affirming 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974), an insured suggested that its right of access was denied because of a municipal ordinance restricting access to the property. The municipality would not issue a driveway permit. The court held that there was no notice of the claimed restriction on the right of access in the public records affecting the real estate on the Date of Policy. Thus, the matter was excluded under the police power exclusion. Similarly, in Nishiyama v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 85 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 149 Cal. Rptr. 355 (1978), lots in a subdivision were sold in violation of a law requiring governmental approval of the subdivision plat. The court held that such a law does not make title to the property unmarketable:

> It is true that it may be necessary for plaintiffs to comply with reasonable conditions with respect to their property as could have been required of the grantor as a condition of subdividing the latter's tract of land under the provisions of the Subdivision Map Act and any county ordinances ... but such conditions cannot be said to make the title unmarketable (and in the absence of clarifying amendments to the complaint which plaintiffs declined to make we do not see how the potentiality of such conditions can be said to render the real property without fair market value).

34 Environmental exclusion--pollution on property

The effect of any law regulating environmental protection is excluded from policy coverage, unless there is notice in the public records on the Date of Policy:

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

No such notice was in the public records on the Date of Policy. My analysis is, therefore, that this matter is therefore excluded from coverage under the policy.

In addition, the physical presence of hazardous waste on the insured property on the Date of Policy has been consistently held not to impair the marketability of the title to the land. See Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal. Rptr. 231 (App. 1991); Chicago Title Insurance Co. v. Kumar, 506 N.E.2d 154 (Mass. App. 1987).

35 Zoning dispute

The policy *[does not protect against (1992 policy)] *[provides only a limited protection against (Residential policy)] the effect of zoning ordinances, and their violation. Zoning laws regulate the use of, but not the title to, property. For that reason, zoning matters are generally excluded from the coverage of the title insurance policy:

*[Residential policy]

EXCLUSIONS

In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from:

1. Governmental police power, and the existence or violation of any law or government regulation. This includes building and zoning ordinances and also laws and regulations concerning:
   - land use
   - improvements on the land
   - land division
   - environmental protection

This exclusion does not apply to violations or the enforcement of these matters which appear in the public records at Policy Date.

Your policy does provide protection against zoning violations, as a result of which:

12. You are forced to remove your existing structure -- other than a boundary wall or fence -- because:
    - it extends on to adjoining land or on to any easement
    - it violates a restriction shown in Schedule B
    - it violates an existing zoning law

13. You cannot use the land because use as a single-family residence violates a restriction shown in Schedule B or an existing zoning law.

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (i) the occupancy, > use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

The exclusion has been enforced in various reported decisions. See Bronen v. New York Abstract Co., 19 A.D.2d 821, 243 N.Y.S.2d 664 (1963); and Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975), affirming 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974).

36 Building code violation

The policy does not protect against a violation of the municipal building code. Building code ordinances regulate the use of, but not the title to, property. For that reason, the effect of any violation of such ordinances is excluded from the coverage of the title insurance policy:

*[Residential policy]

EXCLUSIONS

In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from:

1. Governmental police power, and the existence or violation of any law or government regulation. This includes building and zoning ordinances and also laws and regulations concerning:
   . land use
   . improvements on the land
   . land division
   . environmental protection

This exclusion does not apply to violations or the enforcement of these matters which appear in the public records at Policy Date.

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

A number of reported decisions have enforced this exclusion from policy coverage. Chu v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 89 App.Div.2d 574, 452 N.Y.S.2d 229 (1982) (refusal to issue certificate of occupancy not covered); Arapahoe Land Title, Inc. v. Contract Financing, Ltd., 28 Colo.App. 393, 472 P.2d 754 (1970) (building code violation not protected against); Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951) (refusal to issue building permit not covered).

One reported decision found that a building code violation suit pending at the Date of Policy rendered title unmarketable. However, that decision, Radavanov v. Land Title Co. of America, 545 N.E. 2d 351 (Ill. App. 1989), was different from this situation. *[Distinguish case from present facts]

37 Subdivision law violation

The policy does not protect against a violation of the land subdivision or platting laws. These laws regulate the use of, but not the title to, property. For that reason, the effect of any violation of such law is excluded from the coverage of the title insurance policy:

*[Residential policy]

EXCLUSIONS

In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from:

1. Governmental police power, and the existence or violation of any law or government regulation. This includes building and zoning ordinances and also laws and regulations concerning:

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

A number of reported decisions have enforced this exclusion from policy coverage. For example, a decision found that it applied when the developer failed to file and obtain approval for a plat. Busch

v. Nervik, 38 Wash.App. 541, 687 P.2d 872 (1984); Nishiyama v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 85 Cal.App.3d Supp. 1, 149 Cal.Rptr. 355 (1978). The exclusion has also been held to apply when the subdivider failed to post bonds for street improvements, which in turn caused the municipality to refuse to issue a building permit. Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951).

38 Tortious conduct in obtaining title

Based on the above facts and analysis, it is my opinion that *[adverse party] is claiming that the insured obtained title by tortious conduct, including *[list allegations, such as fraud, coercion, duress]. However, there is no claim that the title to the property is defective.

The policy does not create a duty to *[indemnify] *[defend] an insured under such circumstances. This case is similar to Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 172 Cal. Rptr 248, 116 Cal.App.3d 658 (1981), in which the court said:

> The facts alleged in the Klass action pertain to the conduct of appellant and Bea in their relations with the Williamses. The Klass action relates not to appellant's title in the property, but to the manner in which he acquired title.

172 Cal. Rptr at 252.

Even if the allegations are considered to affect title, however, the matter complained of is still a matter created or agreed to by the insured, and thus excluded. The policy excludes challenges to title which are in fact caused by the insured's own acts. Exclusion 3(a) states:

> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy:
> 3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims, or other matters (a) created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the insured claimant... .

This exclusion formed a second basis for the Moskopoulos ruling.

Moskopoulos is one in a series of cases which have held that suits for fraud and unconscionable or inequitable conduct in the obtaining of title are not covered by the policy. A similar case involved an insured whose seller sued for rescission based on fraud and economic coercion involving a deed/option back transaction. The court found that the insured was not entitled to be defended in the seller's suit. Bidart v. American Title Ins. Co., 734 P.2d 732 (Nev. 1987). Likewise, when the insured was accused of having obtained title from an incompetent by fraud, there was no duty to defend. Rosenblatt v. Louisville Title Co., 218 Ky. 714, 292 S.W. 333 (App. 1927). Where an insured was accused of having an extra parcel of the seller's land added onto the deed, either by fraud or mistake, the court held that the fraud count was not covered and there was no duty to defend. Title Ins. Corp. of Penn. v. Wagner, 179 N.J.Super 234, 431 A.2d 179 (1981). A corporation insured sued for having taken title merely as the alter ego of the seller was not entitled to be defended in a suit by the seller's wife claiming a dower interest. Brick Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. & Trust Co., 161 Misc. 296, 291 N.Y.S. 637 (City Ct. 1936). The insurer was not obligated to defend an insured accused by her mother/grantor of obtaining a deed by fraud and undue influence, even though the insured later won the case. Mattson v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co. of the South, 641 S.W.2d 16 (Ark. 1982). The insurer had no duty to defend an action to set aside the insured deed as a fraud on creditors. Ginger v. American Title Ins. Co., 29 Mich. App. 279, 185 N.W.2d 54 (1970).

Similarly, the policy does not protect the insured against a claim that the insured has wrongly interfered with the neighbor's property. In Sabatino v. First American Title Ins. Co., 308 Ill.App.3d 819, 721 N.E.2d 693, 242 Ill.Dec. 414 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), the insured was sued because he cut the neighbor's underground sewer pipe, interfering with the neighbor's easement rights. The court found no duty to defend or pay, because the issue was not the easement, but the interference with it. The court said that "[s]uch claims are ancillary to the purpose of the title insurance policy."

39 Misrepresentation or concealment by insured

Based on the above facts, it appears that the applicant for insurance had knowledge of material facts regarding the matter on which claim is now made. The failure of an insurance applicant to disclose facts material to the risk to be undertaken is considered a misrepresentation or concealment which renders the policy coverage voidable. Our United States Supreme Court has stated:

> Insurance policies are traditionally contracts uberrimae fidei [the most abundant good faith] and a failure by the insured to disclose conditions affecting the risk, of which he is aware, makes the contract voidable at the insurer's option.

Stipcich v. Insurance Co., 277 U.S. 311, 316, 48 Sup.Ct. 512, 72 L.Ed. 895.

The title insurer's right to void policy coverage for misrepresentation or concealment has been repeatedly upheld. Lesamiz v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 51 Wash.2d 835, 322 P.2d 351 (1958); Parker v. Title & Trust Co., 233 F.2d 505 (9th Cir. 1956); Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 155 N.J. Super. 332, 382 A.2d 933 (App.Div. 1978); Vaughn v. United States Title Guaranty & Indemnity Co., 137 App.Div. 623, 122 N.Y.S. 393 (1910); and Conway v. Title Ins. Co., 277 So.2d 890 (Ala. 1973); Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation v. Research Loan and Investment Corporation, 361 F.2d 764 (8th Cir.1966); Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 18 Cal.App.3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (1971); rule approved in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, Inc., 544 So. 2d 1070 (Fla.App. 1989).

Therefore, please be advised that the above-referenced policy is hereby cancelled and declared null and void. Enclosed is our check in the amount of *[amount], which was the full premium paid by the applicant for this policy.

40 No loss--Exclusion 3(c)

Based on the above facts and analysis, it is my opinion that the insured has not sustained a loss, and therefore the Company is not obligated to indemnify. No loss is payable unless there is proof that the insured has suffered a loss as a result of a covered claim. The policy states:

*[Residential policy]

EXCLUSIONS

In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from:

* * * *

3. Title Risks:

* * * *

. that result in no loss to you

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

* * * *

3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:

* * * *

(c) resulting in no loss or damage to the insured claimant... .

This exclusion has been applied in various circumstances. For example, when a loan application was rejected because of a claimed title defect which did not actually exist, title was not defective, and no loss was payable. Graham v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 20 App.Div. 440, 46 N.Y.S. 1055 (1897). Also, when the policy included a parcel of land which the insured did not intend to purchase and did not pay for, the insured suffered no loss when it was found that he did not own the land. Cohen v. Security Title & Guaranty Co., 212 Conn. 436, 562 A.2d 510 (Conn. 1989). A title matter discovered shortly before closing did not cause a loss when the purchaser completed the sale without adjusting the purchase price as a result of the defect. Second Benton Harbor v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 126 Mich.App. 580, 337 N.W.2d 585 (1983).

41 Post-policy matter--Residential policy

No loss is payable under the policy for matters which first affect the insured land after the Policy Date. The policy provides:

EXCLUSIONS

In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from:

* * * *

3. Title Risks:

* * * *

. that first affect your title after the Policy Date -- this does not limit the labor and material lien coverage in Item 8 of Covered Title Risks

Title insurance is unique in that it insures against problems which were created in the past, not those which might come into being in the future. The policy's purpose is to insure you that, at the time you purchase, no liens or defects affect the property. Anything which occurs after that date is either caused by you as owner or happens because you are the owner.

Your policy insures your title as of *[date]. You do not pay any renewal premium for the policy. It remains in effect as long as you own the property. However, it does not insure against anything which affects the property after the policy date.

*[Claim matter] arose *[was recorded] on *[date]. That matter did not exist on the Policy Date, and therefore is excluded under the policy provision recited above.

42 Post-policy matter--1992 policy

No loss is payable under the policy for matters which first affect the insured land after the Date of Policy. The policy provides:

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

* * * *

3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:

(d) attaching or created subsequent to Date of Policy... .

43 Construction liens after policy date--owner's 1992 policy

No loss is payable under the policy for matters which first affect the insured land after the Date of Policy. The policy provides:

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

* * * *

3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:

Your policy insures your title as of *[date]. You do not pay any renewal premium for the policy. It remains in effect as long as you own the property. However, it does not insure against anything which affects the property after the policy date.

The *[construction] *[mechanic's] lien was filed on *[date]. The Date of Policy is *. Thus, the lien was filed after the Date of Policy, and is excluded under the policy provision recited above.

44 Lack of adequate consideration--Exclusion 3(e)

The policy does not protect against claims which would not have arisen if the insured had paid adequate value for the property. The policy states:

>
> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:
> *   *   *   *
> 3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:
> (e) resulting in loss or damage which would not have been sustained if the insured claimant had paid value for the estate or interest insured by this policy.

One commentator has explained the purpose of the exclusion as follows:

> This exclusion fits in the category of those that prevent coverage of matters that the insurer cannot discover via a title search and for which the insured bears some responsibility. It prevents coverage where an insured owner or lender is deemed not to have been a purchaser for value. Such an insured will not be protected by state recording laws against claims of subsequent bona fide purchasers. The effect of the exclusion is that insureds who are not protected by state recording laws also will not be protected by their title insurance policies.
> Thus, under state recording statutes that give priority to subsequent bona fide purchasers for value, insured donees and devisees of real property may not only lose their priority, but also may not be indemnified for their losses because of this exclusion in their title insurance policies.

Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 6.08, p. 6-69.

45 Delay damages--Residential policy

The policy states that, except for actual rent paid by the insured, no loss is payable if the title defect is corrected within a reasonable time:

6. Limitation Of The Company's Liability

a. We will pay up to your actual loss or the Policy Amount in force when the claim is made--whichever is less.

b. If we remove the claim against your title within a reasonable time after receiving notice of it, we will have no further liability for it.
If you cannot use any of your land because of a claim against your title, and you rent reasonable substitute land or facilities, we will repay you for your actual rent until:
- the cause of the claim is removed or
- we settle your claim

A court decision and leading commentator both confirm that no loss is payable for costs incurred because of construction delay, if the title matter is resolved in a reasonable time:

> We agree with appellant and hold that only paragraph 7(b) [the equivalent of 6(b) in this policy] applies to the facts of this case. A title policy indemnifies rather than guarantees the state of the insured title. The policy does not guarantee that litigation will not occur, but, in fact, assumes the opposite, that many types of title defect litigation can occur. The insured's claim must await an adverse title determination by a court. "The claim only lies once a court speaks, and not before, and not if the court's judgment is favorable." D. Burke, Law on Title Insurance (1986 & 1988 Supp.), section 9.4.3., titled Staying the Claim for Pending Litigation.

Lawyers Title Ins. Co. v. Synergism One Corp., 572 So.2d 517 (Fla.App. 1990). In the Synergism case, the court found that a period of 33 months was not unreasonable for the clearing of title.

46 Parties in possession exception generally

The policy contains an exception removing coverage for:

Rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records.

The legitimate purpose of the parties in possession exception was well explained in Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 216 So.2d 255, 257 (Fla.App. 1968):

> The rationale for including an actual possession exclusion in a title insurance policy stems from the fact that possession of the land is notice of an interest in it. Blackburn v. Venice Inlet Co., Fla.1948, 38 So.2d 43. When a person, who does not appear in the chain of title, is found in possession of property it may indicate, for example, that he is making claim to the property by adverse possession, or that he is claiming under an unrecorded deed. A title examiner, however, seldom visits the land the title to which he is concerned with. J. McBrayer, Examination of Florida Titles Section 275 (1958). Thus, both to protect themselves and to put their client on notice of this state of affairs, title examiners and title insurance companies generally exclude from their title opinions and policies claims of parties in actual possession of the land insured.

47 Adverse possession or prescriptive easement

The policy contains exceptions for:

Rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records.

Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

Easements or claims of easements not shown by the public records.

Reported cases have uniformly held that *[adverse possession][prescriptive easement] claims are removed from coverage by one or all of the above exceptions. These exceptions exist because the title insurer has no way of protecting itself against such risks. In Louisville Title Ins. Co. v. Guerard, 409 So.2d 514 (Fla. App. 1982), the Florida Appeals Court said:

> In the instant case, the only causes of action alleged in the Ropers' complaint were for a prescriptive easement and statutory way of necessity. Unrecorded easements, however, were not within the coverage of the title insurance policy. Even if the Ropers proved their case and got a judgment against appellee, appellant would have been under no duty to indemnify appellee. Therefore, applying the rationale in Capoferri, appellant had no duty to defend.

Also, in Brenner v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 397 S.E.2d 100, 104 (1990), the Virginia Supreme Court said:

> ...any claim relating solely to the driveway portion was excluded from coverage under the Survey Exception [(c)] because it is undisputed that the driveway and its use "would have been disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises," in the language of the Exception. ...Thus, the insurer had no duty to defend because it appears clearly that it would not be liable under its contract for any judgment based upon the allegations of the Preshlock complaint.

48 Tenant in possession

The policy contains an exception removing coverage for:

Rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records.

The exception excludes coverage against the rights of tenants in the property whose possession would be apparent on inspection, but whose interests are not disclosed by recorded instruments. Carefree Villages, Inc. v Keating Properties, Inc., 489 So 2d 99, 11 FLW 1095 (Dist. 2 1986); Alabama Title & Trust Co. v. Millsap, 71 F.2d 518 (5th Cir. 1934). In the Millsap case, the court stated:

> Rights of parties in actual possession of land are properly excepted from the coverage of title insurance policies where the circumstances reflecting possession should be apparent to one who visits and inspects the property.

As another court said:

> coverage will not be extended for conditions that are physically observable by an inspection of the premises. An example would be a tenant in obvious possession of the real property.

Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Ent., 544 So. 2d 1070, 1072 (Fla. App. 1989).

49 Trespasser

The policy contains an exception removing coverage for:

Rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records.

A trespasser is a party occupying property without right or permission. The policy does not insure against the possibility of someone possessing the land without any right to do so. Thus, a claim concerning a trespasser is not within the ambit of the policy's coverage.

For example, in Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Woods, 449 S.W.2d 773 (Tex. 1970), a company cut timber on the insured land after the insured bought it. The logger had a deed, but the party who gave it the deed had never been conveyed the timber rights. Thus, the logger was found to be a trespasser. The insured sued the insurer for the timber lost. The court said:

> The policy does not, either expressly or by implication, purport to insure against damage done to the land by a trespasser under the circumstances of this case.

The Woods court also found that there was no loss suffered as a result of the fact that the trespasser had color of title from a recorded deed. This fact did not create a defect in the insured's title, and therefore did not cause a loss:

> A party is not charged with constructive notice of a recorded instrument which is not in his chain of title. The conveyance from Darnell Lumber Company to Gross & Janes is not connected in any way with the title under which plaintiff claims, because the deed from Massey to Darnell is not on record. Plaintiff is not charged with constructive knowledge of either instrument. [citations] Having purchased and paid value for the land without actual or constructive knowledge of either conveyance, plaintiff took the property free and clear of any rights or claims that Gross & Janes might otherwise have been entitled to assert. The two timber deeds did not, therefore, prevent plaintiff's having "good and indefeasible title" as guaranteed by his title insurance policy.

Thus, the parties in possession exception merely restates the fact that "loss" caused by a party having no right to possess the property is outside the ambit of the policy.

50 Shortage in acreage

The policy contains an exception for:

> Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

This "survey" exception removes any assurance as to the quantity of acreage being conveyed. Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257 (1974); Banas v. Heiney, 66 Pa.D. & C. 286 (1973); Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A.2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

For example, in the Walker Rogge case cited above, the insured walked the land with the seller and was shown a 1975 survey describing the land as about 18.3 acres. The purchase contract set the price at "$16,000 per acre" and referred to the property as "19 acres more or less." The policy used the description from the 1975 survey. Later, the insured discovered that the 1975 survey was inaccurate, and that the parcel had always contained about 12 acres, not 19. The New Jersey Supreme Court held that the policy did not insure the acreage of the parcel. The court stated:

> In the absence of a recital of acreage, a title company does not insure the quantity of land. Title companies are in the business of guaranteeing title, not acreage. [citations omitted] To obtain such insurance, an insured should provide the title company with an acceptable survey that recites the quantity of land described or obtain from the company an express guaranty of the quantity of land insured in the policy.
> Whatever else the phrase "other matters" might mean in a survey exception, it clearly refers to the dimensions of the lot lines and the size of the lot. The size of a tract simply cannot be ascertained with any certainty from a search of public records alone. The reason is that land exists on the ground, not on paper. When a description refers to a point in the line of another, only a survey can reveal the actual size of a piece of property and the amount of land included in a deed. A shortage in acreage is one of the facts that an accurate survey and inspection would disclose.

51 Shortage in distance

The policy does not assure that distances found on plats or in metes and bounds descriptions are accurate. For example, in Lynburn Enterprises, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 191 Ga.App. 710, 382 S.E. 2d 599 (1989), the insured property was described by courses and distances. The property was bounded by public streets or alleys on all sides. A survey was obtained and the survey exception removed. Later, the insured discovered that the insured property was actually about 15% smaller than as measured in the survey. The court found that the shortage was not the title insurer's responsibility:

> It follows that plaintiff purchased exactly what it bargained for--property lying between Bancroft Circle, Second Street and the public alley. The mere fact that the length of the call lines did not meet plaintiff's expectations is of no consequence. Plaintiff received good title to the land in question. See Land Trust Co. v. Morgan, 22 Ga.App. 388, 95 S.E. 1006. This action to recover title insurance proceeds cannot, therefore, be permitted to stand. See Shaver v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., 163 Tenn. 232, 43 S.W.2d 212, 213, wherein it was held: "It is true ... that the object of a purchaser in procuring an abstract of title, or a guaranty of title, is to secure himself additionally in the performance of the obligations of the grantor, but we think his security, while so increased, is thus limited; that is, it indemnifies only as to the title which the grantor has undertaken to convey and for which he has made himself responsible.

382 S.E. 2d 599, 600 (1989). Therefore, the policy does not insure the accuracy of distances recited in the Schedule A legal.

52 Overlap

The policy contains an exception for:

> Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

This exception removes coverage against legal description overlaps which are not clearly evident from the public records. An overlap of descriptions occurs "where [one] deed covers a portion of the land described in a prior deed held by [another]." RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W.2d 607 (Tenn. App. 1989).

In the RLB case, the competing deeds each contained metes and bounds descriptions. In 1943, when the TVA bought to the south, its northerly boundary line was the north line of a road. The road was later moved south. When the insured purchased, its deed conveyed to the north line of the existing road, which the county surveyor had incorrectly assumed was in its former location. Thus, the insured description contained land owned by the TVA between the new roadway and the true boundary. The court held that the overlap was excepted even though it was created by instruments in the public records. It held that, while the competing deeds were recorded, the existence of the overlap could only be discovered in the field because it depended on the location of the roadway.

Similarly, in Downing v. Eubanks, 557 N.E.2d 1027 (Ind. App. 1990), an overlap was created by two deeds from a common grantor. The insured deed was the second conveyance. The court denied the insured's claim to the land. As to the policy claim, the court stated: "[a]n accurate survey of Tract 1 would have resulted in the overlap being covered by the policy." The Downing court came to this conclusion because a survey of the overlapping Tract 2 did indeed show the overlap area.

53 Matters visible on inspection

The policy contains an exception for:

> Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

This exception removes coverage for matters which would be discoverable on an inspection of the property by a prospective purchaser. The purpose of the inspection clause of the above exception has been described as follows:

> A survey and inspection serve related but different purposes. The purpose of an inspection, which is performed by merely visiting the property, is to disclose such matters as physical encroachments, evidence of adverse use, and monuments. By comparison, a survey, as this case demonstrates, can involve extensive research and field work. Unlike a mere inspection, a survey relates the property as described in recorded instruments to the land as it exists.

Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992). In other words, the inspection is a duty of the purchaser as a part of a good faith purchaser's duty to investigate the property. An inspection of the property shows visible possession by another. As stated by one court:

> All the authorities agree that possession, in order to constitute notice, must be actual possession of the party, or his agent or tenant, consisting of acts of occupancy which are open, visible and unequivocal, and in nature sufficient upon the observation of a subsequent purchaser to put him on inquiry as to rights of the possessor.

54 Unrecorded easement

The policy contains a standard exception for "easements or claims of easements not shown by the public records." This exception removes coverage against easements which are written but unrecorded. See Daniel v. Coastal Bonded Title Co., 539 So. 2d 567 (Fla. App. 1989). Also excepted are claims of easements by necessity. In Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660 (Va. 1994), the court stated:

> The easement by necessity at issue in this case clearly was unrecorded at the time the policies were issued. Furthermore, this exclusion reinforces the nature of a title insurance company's business, which is to provide insurance coverage for the validity of the title to the extent diligent examination could or should have discovered defects at the time of policy issuance. Title insurance indemnifies the policyholder for those discoverable, but undiscovered, defects in the title, not for every claim which ultimately might affect the title.

442 S.E.2d at 663. Similarly, the exception removes coverage for easements claimed by prescription and implication. Bailey v. State Farm Ins. Co. held:

> Schedule B of the policy excludes, "easements, liens, encumbrances, or claims thereof, which are not shown by the public records." The Flagg litigation asserted a right to the easement by prescription, implication, balancing of hardships, and estoppel. None of these would appear in the public records. Strictly construing the policy exclusion against Fidelity, the claims in the litigation are plainly excluded from coverage under the policy.

810 F.Supp. 267 (N.D. Cal. 1992). See also Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 888 P.2d 83 (Or.App. 1995) (claim of prescriptive or implied easement).

55 Exception not required for matters not affecting title

Based on the above facts and analysis, it is my opinion that the *[subject of claim] is not a matter affecting title for which the Company had a duty to make an exception.

Under the title insurance policy, the insurer is not liable if it fails to disclose matters which do not constitute liens or encumbrances on title. Numerous cases have so held. See, for example: Luboff v. Security Title & Guaranty Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965) (no duty to show developer agreement which was not a defect, lien or encumbrance); Sala v. Security Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 693, 81 P.2d 578 (1938); (no duty when lis pendens not shown, then removed as cloud on title); Peterson v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 431 So.2d 311 (Fla.App. 1983) (no duty to show or resolve applicability of restrictions not shown); Laurence v. Kruckmeyer, 124 Ariz. 488, 605 P.2d 466 (App. 1979) (no duty to show easement as affecting parcels which it did not affect).

56 Exception gives adequate notice of defect

Based on the above facts and analysis, it is my opinion that the *[commitment or policy] gives adequate notice of the existence and character of the *[subject of claim]. An exception is adequate if it gives effective notice of the title matter:

> It is generally acknowledged that a title insurer's duty of disclosure regarding an instrument affecting title is satisfied by a statement of the nature of the document, recording information, etc. The underwriter is not required to set forth its contents [citation omitted], nor to provide an explanation as to its legal effect or implications [citation omitted]. An exception to coverage that is "plain and understandable" in its statement of the subject will be effective [citation omitted].

Ellis, Title Insurance Law Handbook, p. 270.

The insurer is not required to highlight an item for an exception to be considered valid. For example, when an easement was shown only as being set forth in a mortgage on the property, and no exception was made for the easement itself, such notice was sufficient when the insured also had actual knowledge of the easement from the seller. The court stated:

> Granted the company did not indicate the easement in bold face or red letters, the fact remains that the information was made available. The effect of an easement, valid or not, was a factor to be resolved as between vendor and purchaser depending upon the terms of their contract. It was not for Inter-County, as Tomgil quietly intimates, to negotiate, re-negotiate or bear the brunt of any disabilities of Tomgil's contract.

Sullivan v. Tomgil Building Corp., 260 N.Y.S. 2d 465 (Sup. Ct. 1965).

The insurer also does not have a duty to identify the parties to an instrument, its nature, terms or significance. For example, the insurer has no duty to explain the effect of wetlands designation, when the fact of such designation is disclosed. Manley v. Cost Control Mktg & Man., Inc., 583 A.2d 442 (Pa.Super.Ct. 1990). The insurer also was found not to have a duty to explain the risk of subsidence from mining operations, when the fact of a mineral reservation was properly noted. Holmes v. Alabama Title Co., 507 So.2d 922 (Ala. 1987).

57 Special terms contained in exception

Based on the above facts and analysis, it is my opinion that the Company was not required to highlight or identify the terms of the *[name of instrument] in the *[commitment or policy]. The exception for the *[name of instrument] gave the insured notice of its existence. The insured had a duty to evaluate the significance of all of the matters reported in the title commitment.

The insured's independent duty to investigate the matters reported in the title commitment is confirmed by numerous reported decisions. For example, in Roscoe v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. of Dallas, 105 N.M. 589, 734 P.2d 1272 (1987), the title insurer was found not to have a duty to advise that a mortgage had a balloon payment term. The court said:

> It is well-settled that a person entering into a contract has a duty to read and familiarize himself with its contents before he signs and delivers it. ...Roscoe's failure to read and familiarize himself with the terms of the mortgage he agreed to assume, when that information was readily available, clearly indicates a lack of reasonable diligence. Had Roscoe made reasonable inquiry or examined the original mortgage, he would have discovered the balloon payment. ...Here, USLife's policy insures against loss or damages due to "[a]ny defect or lien or encumbrance on such title." Schedule B of the policy specially excludes from coverage any loss or damage resulting from the mortgage in question. This exception is clear and unambiguous.

Similarly, the insurer was not required to indicate in its exception for a deed of trust that it contained a due-on-sale clause.

> It is not the purpose of a title policy to set forth in full detail a detailed explanation of the full terms and provisions of each instrument affecting the property, but give only sufficient information to put them on notice of the existence of such instruments. If every title exception in a title policy set forth the full details of every instrument involved, it would more resemble an abstract of title than a title policy. Under Lyon's theory, if the property was subject to an oil gas and mineral lease, it would be necessary to set forth in minute detail the many things that are involved in this type of lease, such as the length of the primary term, the amount of delay rentals, the amount of royalty payable, etc. See Jernigan v. Page, ... where it was pointed out that the purpose of the recording statutes in Texas was to provide notice to all persons of the existence of recorded material and the effect of same, so that a person interested in the property could look at the full instrument by examining the record.

Lyons v. Montgomery, 685 S.W.2d 390 (Tex.App. 1985); aff'd in relevant part, 701 S.W.2d 641 (Tex. 1985).

62 Request for proof of loss

The insured has asked the Company to resolve its claim by payment of a loss. The title insurance policy allows the insurer to resolve covered matters in several different ways. The insurer may:

1. Pay the insured his or her actual loss [Conditions and Stipulations 6].

2. Defend an insured who has been sued [Conditions and Stipulations 4(a)].

3. Prosecute an action on behalf of the insured to establish or clear title [Conditions and Stipulations 4(b) and 9(a)].

4. Pay the insured policy limits [Conditions and Stipulations 6(a)].

5. Pay the party adverse to the insured [Conditions and Stipulations 4(b) and 6(b)].

6. Cure the insured's title by obtaining a deed, easement, release or other instrument [Conditions and Stipulations 4(b) and 6(b)].

The insurer never has all six options in a particular claim, but when there is more than one option, the insurer has the right to choose which one it will exercise.

Payment of a loss may be appropriate if a loss exists. Let me remind you that the policy requires the insured to submit a proof of loss. Paragraph 5 of the Conditions & Stipulations states:

> In addition to and after the notices required under Section 3 of these Conditions and Stipulations have been provided the Company, a proof of loss or damage signed and sworn to by the insured claimant shall be furnished to the Company within 90 days after the insured claimant shall ascertain the facts giving rise to the loss or damage. The proof of loss or damage shall describe the defect in, or lien or encumbrance on the title, or other matter insured against by this policy which constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured claimant to provide the required proof of loss or damage, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such proof of loss or damage.
> In addition, the insured claimant may reasonably be required to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and shall > produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by any authorized representative of the Company, all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda, whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the insured claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda in the custody or control of a third party, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the insured claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the insured claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce other reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this paragraph shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

Thus, the insureds have a duty to provide information regarding the facts concerning the loss, plus evidence of the claimed damages. If the insureds wish to have the Company consider payment of loss as an option in resolving the claim, assuming it is determined that the claim is covered, please forward a proof of loss.

63 No present challenge to title - "watchful waiting"

The Company has no obligation to clear title unless and until title as insured is challenged. See Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 Cal.App.4th 1294, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 771, 777 (1994), in which the policy protected against the enforced removal of certain structures, and the insurer was found not to have a duty to act until someone sought to remove those structures. Similarly, in Eliopoulos v. Nations Title Ins. Of New York, 1996 U.S.Dist. LEXIS 515 (N.D.N.Y. 1996), the title insurer was found to have no "affirmative duty to clear title" when there were "perceived" challenges to title, but no direct attack had yet been made by an adverse party.

In this situation, the Company recognizes that it will have an obligation to resolve a challenge to title which is covered by the policy. Although no action is required or advisable at present, the Company stands prepared to fulfill its duties when and if required.

64 Measure of loss payable if title clearance unsuccessful

[notice of intent to clear title]

We have undertaken action to clear title based on our analysis that there is a likelihood of success. However, as with any litigation, there is no guarantee that the court will establish title as insured.

If the action is resolved in favor of the insured, the Company will have established title as shown in the policy and there will be no loss payable. The policy provides:

> (a) If the Company establishes the title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the land, or cures the claim of unmarketability of title, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals therefrom, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused thereby.

Conditions & Stipulations paragraph 9. If the action is not resolved in your favor, it is our present opinion that the Company will be obligated to compensate the insured. The measure of loss under the policy is as follows:

> (i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A; or,
> (ii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy.

Condition & Stipulations paragraph 7.

65 Tender of policy limits

The title insurance policy provides that the insurer may "pay or tender payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant, which were authorized by the Company, up to the time of payment or tender of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay." Conditions & Stipulations, paragraph 6(a)(i). After the amount of policy has been paid or tendered, the insurer has no more liability under the policy.

> Upon the exercise by the Company of this option, all liability and obligations to the insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, and the policy shall be surrendered to the Company for cancellation.

Conditions & Stipulations, paragraph 6(a)(ii). The duty to defend any litigation covered by the policy ceases when the policy limits have been paid or tendered. See Batdorf v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 41 Wash.App. 254, 702 P.2d 1211 (1985); Crocker & Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 313 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1994).

The amount of insurance is $*. The Company hereby tenders to the insured the amount of insurance. [Our check in that amount is enclosed.] By this tender, all of the Company's obligations under the policy are terminated.

66 Apportionment of fees--covered and non-covered causes

The Company is obligated to pay for the insured's attorney's fees and expenses only as to those causes of action which are covered or potentially covered by the policy. The ALTA 1992 form of policy issued to the insured provides that:

> [T]he Company...shall provide for the defense of an insured in litigation..., but only as to those stated causes of action alleging a defect, lien or encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy. ...The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the insured in the defense of those causes of action which allege matters not insured against by this policy.

Conditions & Stipulations 4(a).

One accepted means of providing defense of covered causes of action is for the insurer to retain one counsel to represent the insured, and agree upon an equitable division of fees and expenses. The insurer pays the portion attributed to covered claims, and the insured pays for the portion allocated to non-covered claims. See Enron Corp. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 940 F.2d 307 (8th Cir. 1991).

In this matter, the Company agrees to pay *% of fees and expenses. This percentage appears at this time to represent an equitable division of costs. The Company agrees, and reserves the right, to reevaluate this decision as the case progresses.

67 Recoupment against seller who created defect

The insurer's failure to report an encumbrance created by the seller is not a bar to recovery against the seller. Here is a sample of the courts' pronouncements on that issue:

> In Harvey v. J & H Holdings Inc., 310 So.2d 371 (Ct.App. 1975), the court reasoned: "There is no question that the sellers should have had knowledge of the easement. The record shows it was the sellers who granted the easement... . The sellers also contend that the easement in issue was duly recorded among the public records and, therefore, the title insurer had constructive knowledge of its existence. It is apparent that the title insurer was put on constructive notice of the easement. As a consequence, it was negligent in not disclosing the existence of the said encumbrance to the buyer after it had examined the title.
> "It cannot be said, however, that the title insurer owed the same duty to the sellers that it did to the buyer. Put another way, the sellers do not stand in the shoes of the buyer. We can find absolutely nothing in the record to indicate that the encumbrance, i.e., easement, supra, should be excluded from the operation of the covenant of the sellers to convey title by general warranty deed free and clear of all encumbrances. The sellers simply did not convey title to the property as they had agreed to do."
> "There is no showing, on this record, of reliance, damage or an expectation of a search and disclosure. This defendant knew of the assessments long before the plaintiff ever issued a preliminary commitment. When the defendant's agent ordered title insurance, the defendant had already listed the property subject to the buyer assuming the sewer assessment. The defendant's awareness and knowledge are evidenced by the deletion of the assumption requirement from the listing. Again, long before asking the plaintiff to insure title, the defendant had contractually agreed with its purchasers (the only insureds) to convey title free of the assessments. There is no showing that this defendant expected an 'abstract' of title or that even if it had, that it relied thereon in any manner. In fact, had the assessments been disclosed, the defendant would have had to pay them from the closing proceeds. The defendant is merely paying, through subrogation, that which it had knowledge of and had agreed to pay long before the plaintiff became involved." Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 103 Wash.2d 409 693 P.2d 697, 700-1 (1985).
> In Kenny v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 113 Cal.App.3d 557, 169 Cal.Rptr. 808, 810 (1980), the court stated: "There is a contention by appellants that because they agreed to pay the premium on the policy of title insurance in the escrow as consideration for the sale that this would bootstrap their position and create a 'duty of care' on the part of the title insurer or render the agreement between the buyer and the title insurer a third party beneficiary contract for benefit of appellant. Appellant would still be an incidental beneficiary and, as such, have no cause of action against respondents."

68 Demand on indemnitor

You will recall that you gave this company your personal indemnity as an inducement for the Company to protect its insureds against [*nature of title defect]. That coverage has been provided and the Company has assumed its obligations.

The Company hereby demands that you immediately take action to [*specify]. In the event that you do not comply, we will immediately take legal action against you based on your obligations under the indemnity.

In addition, in the event the Company is required to pay any lien claim, or incur any expense in this matter, it will stand in the shoes of its insureds and may take all legal action the insureds have the right to take against you. This would include [*specify].

We trust that you are taking this situation very seriously. Only prompt and decisive action by you will cause our Company to pause for even the slightest time before taking all appropriate action. I must receive your written plan of action not later than [*specify].

69 Voluntary conveyance terminating coverage

When the insured voluntarily conveys the property, the policy terminates, except as discussed below. The grantee from the insured is not an insured under the policy. "Insured" is defined in the policy as the named insured and parties who take from the named insured "by operation of law." The policy states:

> "insured": the insured named in Schedule A, and, subject to any rights or defenses the Company would have had against the named insured, those who succeed to the interest of the named insured by operation of law as distinguished from purchase including, but not limited to, heirs, distributees, devisees, survivors, personal representatives, next of kin, or corporate or fiduciary successors.

Conditions & Stipulations 1(a). After a voluntary conveyance, the policy remains in effect for the limited purpose of protecting the insured against liability for covenants of warranty it has given in that conveyance. This is stated in paragraph 2 of the Conditions and Stipulations of the policy:

> 2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE AFTER CONVEYANCE OF TITLE.
> The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured only so long as the insured retains an estate or interest in the land, or holds an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given by a purchaser from the insured, or only so long as the insured shall have liability by reason of covenants of warranty made by the insured in any transfer or conveyance of the estate or interest. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the land, or (ii) an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to the insured.

Numerous examples of voluntary transfers are discussed in case law.

When the insured conveys to the trustee of his own trust, the insured ceases to be covered by the policy and the trustee is not an insured. Covalt, Trustee, v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1997 WL 4273 (10th Cir. Wyoming 1997) (unpublished). A transfer from the insureds to their family limited liability company was found to terminate the policy in Gebhardt Family Investment, L.L.C. v. Nations Title Ins. Co., 132 Md.App. 457, 752 A.2d 1222 (Md.App. 2000). The court said that the insureds no longer had a policy, and the LLC was not an insured.

> The problem of the cloud on title is now the problem of the L.L.C. and not the Gebhardts. If any loss is suffered because of the cloud on title, it will be suffered by the L.L.C., which was not an insured under the policy either before or after the conveyance.

Similarly, the transfer of title from one affiliated corporation to another terminates the policy. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Child, Inc., 401 A.2d 68 (Del. 1979); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Cae-Link Corp., 45 F.3d 426 (4th Cir. 1995) (unpublished).

70 Road, waterbody not "Land"

The policy does not insure any right or title in any road or waterway abutting the land as described on Schedule A. The definition of Land in the policy is:

> "land": the land described, specifically or by reference in Schedule A, and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property; provided, however, the term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area specifically described or referred to in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

Conditions & Stipulations 1(d). The policy has been found not to insure the insured's title to an easement appurtenant to the Land but not described on Schedule A. Offenhartz v. Heinsohn, 30 Misc.2d 693, 150 N.Y.S. 2d 78 (Sup. Ct. 1956). Similarly, the policy has been held not to insure any right in an adjacent street or alley. J & S Building Co., Inc. v. Columbian Title & Trust Co., 1 Kan.App.2d 228, 563 P.2d 1086 (1977); Schaible v. Louisville Title Ins. Co., 118 Ohio App. 328, 194 N.E.2d 588 (1963); Havstad v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 58 Cal.App.4th 654, 68 Cal.Rptr.2d 487 (1 Dist. 1997), mod. Oct. 20, 1997, rev.den. Dec. 10, 1997.

71 Access--alternate right available

The policy insures that the insured has "a right of access to and from the land." There is no coverage under the policy as long as the insured has one legal access route to the property. For example, when property had access via three separate easements, the insurer had no duty to assert the insured's claim to a prescriptive easement over a fourth route. Talley v. Baker, 617 N.Y.S.2d 80 (A.D. 4 Dept. 1994). Similarly, when one access right failed, there was no coverage because an alternate access existed, even though it was only passable on foot or by horse (in the insured's words, a "goat path"), and was twice the distance from the nearest highway.

> It is true that the western road, the route by which plaintiff Gates had a right of access, was a difficult one and, in its present condition, of only limited usefulness, but if plaintiff had a right of access, even though over a rough and nearly impassable route, he makes no case under his title insurance policy. A title insurance company may not be expected to investigate the physical condition of a way of legal access to the insured property to determine if it is passable. In fact, the insurance policy expressly excludes from coverage "loss or damage by reason of ... (3) Encroachments, overlaps, conflicts in boundary lines, shortages in area, or other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises."

Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10, 11-2 (Mo.App. 1991).

72 Police power--denial of permit

The policy does not protect the insured against the denial of a permit for the use of the property. Such matters do not affect the title to the land. The exclusions of the policy provide as follows:

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:

1. (a) Governmental police power.

   (c) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning ordinances) restricting or regulating or prohibiting the occupancy, use or enjoyment of the land, or regulating the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land, or regulating the character, dimensions or location of any improvements now or hereafter erected on the land, or prohibiting a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part.

The denial of a permit is based on governmental regulation of the use of the property, and is an exercise of the government's police power, and is thus excluded from coverage. See Aldrich v. Hawrylo, 656 A.2d 1304, 1309 (N.J. Super. 1995); and Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951). Similarly, when the government restricts the use of property to protect environmental features on the property, that restriction on use is excluded. Manley v. Cost Control Marketing and Management Inc., 583 A.2d 442, 444 (Sup.Ct.Pa. 1990).

73 Construction escrow negligence

A construction escrowee is not obligated to determine the identity of all of the parties providing labor or material to the project. The escrowee does not visit the job site, and has no first-hand contact with any contractor other than those identified. The escrowee relies on the owner and general contractor to accurately inform the escrowee as to who has worked on the job.

This principle has been established by case law. For example, in Gordon v. New Mexico Title Co., 77 N.M. 217, 421 P.2d 433 (1966), the insurer conducted the escrow for the permanent loan on a new house. It accepted affidavits from the purchaser and builder to the effect that all work was complete and all laborers paid. Later, liens were filed. The insurer was sued, on the theory that local custom and practice created an implied duty of the escrowee to investigate whether or not all lien claimants had really been paid, not merely rely on the affidavits submitted. The court found no proof of such a custom and practice, and therefore no duty had been proven.

74 Easement abandonment--post-policy matter

The policy insures the insured's rights in the access easement shown on Schedule A of the policy. The policy also contains the following exceptions from coverage:

> Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.
> * * * *
> Rights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records.

The fee owner of the land over which the easement runs does not deny that the easement was valid when created. Rather, the fee owner alleges that the easement has been abandoned by lack of use. Use or lack of use of an easement is a matter of possession which is not disclosed by the public records.

The primary purpose of the "standard" exceptions for survey matters, unrecorded easements, parties in possession and similar rights is to remove from coverage various matters which affect title but which cannot be found in the public records. See Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 7.02[3], 7-12. This rationale has been endorsed repeatedly by the courts as being fair and enforceable. For example:

> The exceptions set forth in Schedule B refer generally to situations which may affect the title but which would not be reflected by an examination of the public records. A title insurance company has no other feasible method of protecting itself from these circumstances... .

McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852, 855 (Fla.App. 1976). Or, as a later Florida opinion stated even more succinctly:

> Absent a specific undertaking to that effect, [the policy] does not presume to insure against infirmities not of record.

Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805, 806 (Fla.App. 1980). See also Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A.2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893 (1984); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Knopf, 109 Md.App. 134, 674 A.2d 65, 72 (1996) (the survey exception applies if "the problem was something not susceptible of ascertainment through title examination but only through an accurate survey.").

Further, the policy does not protect against failure of the insured's title caused by the insured's own lack of use of the easement after the Date of Policy. No loss is payable under the policy for matters which first affect the insured land after the Date of Policy. The policy provides:

> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:
> * * * *
> 3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:
> (d) attaching or created subsequent to Date of Policy... .

Title insurance is unique in that it insures against problems created before the insured takes its interest in the property, not while the insured has title.

75 Off record risks excepted by standard exceptions

The primary purpose of the "standard" exceptions for survey matters, unrecorded easements, parties in possession and similar rights is to remove from coverage various matters which affect title but which cannot be found in the public records. See Palomar, Title Insurance Law, Clark Boardman Callaghan, § 7.02[3], 7-12. This rationale has been endorsed repeatedly by the courts as being fair and enforceable. For example:

> The exceptions set forth in Schedule B refer generally to situations which may affect the title but which would not be reflected by an examination of the public records. A title insurance company has no other feasible method of protecting itself from these circumstances... .

McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852, 855 (Fla.App. 1976). Or, as a later Florida opinion stated even more succinctly:

> Absent a specific undertaking to that effect, [the policy] does not presume to insure against infirmities not of record.

Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805, 806 (Fla.App. 1980). See also Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A.2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893 (1984); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Knopf, 109 Md.App. 134, 674 A.2d 65, 72 (1996) (the survey exception applies if "the problem was something not susceptible of ascertainment through title examination but only through an accurate survey.").

For example, reported cases have uniformly held that adverse possession claims are removed from coverage by one or all of the above exceptions. These exceptions exist because the title insurer has no way of protecting itself against such risks. In Louisville Title Ins. Co. v. Guerard, 409 So.2d 514 (Fla. App. 1982), the Florida Appeals Court said:

> In the instant case, the only causes of action alleged in the Ropers' complaint were for a prescriptive easement and statutory way of necessity. Unrecorded easements, however, were not within the coverage of the title insurance policy. Even if the Ropers proved their case and got a judgment against appellee, appellant would have been under no duty to indemnify appellee. Therefore, applying the rationale in Capoferri, appellant had no duty to defend.

Also, in Brenner v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 397 S.E.2d 100, 104 (1990), the Virginia Supreme Court said:

...any claim relating solely to the driveway portion was excluded from coverage under the Survey Exception [(c)] because it is undisputed that the driveway and its use "would have been disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises," in the language of the Exception. ...Thus, the insurer had no duty to defend because it appears clearly that it would not be liable under its contract for any judgment based upon the allegations of the Preshlock complaint.

76 No survey "coverage" unless exceptions removed

Courts have refused to nullify the survey exception after the fact on the theory that it should have been removed when the policy was issued, or that it would have been removed if a survey had been delivered at closing. The insurer has no obligation to get a survey for the insured or prompt the insured to get one. Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 177 F.Supp. 925 (W.D. Mo. 1959). Also, when the insured does not request or pay for "survey" coverage, liability may not be created by interpreting the exception to render it null.

> As Mr. Witkin puts it, '(f)or a premium of about double the usual sum, the company makes a survey and inspection, and the policy covers a great many of such off-record defects as would thereby be discovered.' (3 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law, 8th ed., Real Property, s 168, p. 1906; see C.E.B., Cal. Real Estate Sales Transactions, s 17.17, p. 620.)
> What appellants are arguing is that the Western Title Insurance Company's policy of title insurance, although a standard policy of title insurance, protected appellants against the loss of acreage Edgardo Contini thought he was getting even though he admitted knowing the land he was buying had three government lots and the significance of the designation 'government lot.' What appellants are seeking from the Western Title Insurance Company policy is extended coverage without having requested that type of coverage and without having paid the additional premium. The court properly granted respondent Western Title Insurance Company's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257, 261 (1974). A buyer does not have a "reasonable expectation" of survey coverage which would estop the insurer from denying such coverage.

> We reject plaintiff's contention that the exclusion should be deemed void as against public policy; we perceive no unconscionability in permitting, or public policy basis for prohibiting, title insurers from excluding from coverage, if clearly expressed, matters which would be revealed by an accurate survey. Such an exclusion is not so broad that it renders the insurance policy a meaningless sham, but rather merely places on the insured the burden of obtaining an accurate survey of the property the insured is purchasing and the responsibility for any defects which that survey discloses.

Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893, 896 (1984). See also Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 637, 584 P.2d 939 (Wash. 1978). The exception also is not removed de facto by an allegation in negligence that the insurer has a duty to examine a survey and tell the insured what it contains. Ely v. Munshower, 4 Pa.D. & C.3d 430 (1977).

Further, even the removal of the survey exception has been held not to shift the risk of a survey-type question from the insured to the insurer, when there is no suggestion that the parties intended or understood that such a risk-shifting was intended. In Malkin v. Realty Title Ins. Co. Inc.,244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155, 157 (1966), a former owner of the property had deeded a 10-foot strip of the property, a platted lot, for public street. The insured obtained a survey, which mistakenly described the full lot, but showed that the 10-foot strip was part of the paved roadway. The policy issued to Malkin used the survey legal description. Although the survey exception was removed, the court held that the insureds had "assumed" the risk that the strip was not owned by their grantor. As to the insureds' claim that they had paid an additional premium to get the survey exception removed, the court relied on the inspection clause. It said:

> we [do not] think it likely [that] either Mr. Malkin or his attorney thought that the appellee, for an additional $60, would undertake the obligation of evicting Montgomery County from its occupancy of part of the lot or, in the alternative, of paying the Malkins $2,500.

244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155, 157 (1966).

In this case, the insured did not take the measures required to obtain the removal of the survey exception, and paid no premium for such coverage. The Company did not agree to, nor did it, give such coverage.

77 Boundary line dispute

The policy contains an exception removing coverage for:

Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

The issue in this claim is the location of the boundary line. This is a "boundary line dispute" excepted from the policy. The dispute is not disclosed in the real estate records. It could only be discovered by an inspection of the property or an accurate survey.

This exception from coverage has been held to apply to boundary line disputes. See American Title Ins. Co. v. Carter, 670 So.2d 1115 (Ct.App.Fla. 1996) (when both deeds called to the same line, the problem was not an overlap but a question of "where 'on the ground' that line should be drawn," and thus a boundary line dispute); Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 18 Cal.App.3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (1971); and Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 177 F.Supp. 925 (W.D. Mo. 1959).

78 Voluntary settlement

There is no loss payable under the policy if the insured voluntarily settles the claim matter without prior written consent of the insurer. I direct your attention to paragraph 8(c) of the Conditions & Stipulations:

> 8. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.
> (c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to any insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

Voluntary settlement has been found to negate policy coverage. See Chrysler First Financial Corp. of America v. Chicago Title Insurance Co., 595 N.Y.S.2d 302, 307 (Sup.Ct. 1993); aff'd 641 N.Y.S.2d 13 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1996); Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Lunt Land Corp., 162 Tex. 435, 347 S.W.2d 584 (1961); and Worthey v. Sedillo Title Guar., Inc., 85 N.M. 339, 512 P.2d 667 (1973).

79 Encroachment

The survey exception removes coverage against encroachments of improvements from neighboring property onto the insured property, and vice versa.

> "To encroach" may be defined in ordinary terms as "to enter by gradual steps or by stealth into the possessions or rights of another." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 747 (1976). The same source defines "encroachment" as "an instance of encroaching (as in the building of a structure in a public park or a fence that projects over a neighbor's land)." Id.

Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67, 76, note 8 (D.D.C. 1993).

The survey exception has been found unambiguous in the context of encroachments. Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W.2d 893 (1984). The exception has been found to apply to the encroachment of the insured's house onto the neighbor's property. The survey exception negates any assurance of title to buildings encroaching onto neighboring land. Walters v. Marler, 83 Cal.App.3d 1, 147 Cal.Rptr. 655 (1978); Cook Consultants, Inc. v. Larson, 677 S.W.2d 718 (Tex.App. 1984), aff'd in relevant part in Larson v. Cook Consultants, Inc., 690 S.W.2d 567 (1986); Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984).

80 Exception conspicuous, plain and clear

The matter at issue was removed from coverage by an exception in Schedule B of the policy. An exception negates coverage if it gives effective notice of the matter disclosed.

> It is generally acknowledged that a title insurer's duty of disclosure regarding an instrument affecting title is satisfied by a statement of the nature of the document, recording information, etc. The underwriter is not required to set forth its contents [citation omitted], nor to provide an explanation as to its legal effect or implications [citation omitted]. An exception to coverage that is "plain and understandable" in its statement of the subject will be effective [citation omitted].

Ellis, Title Insurance Law Handbook, p. 270. An exception is "conspicuous, plain and clear" when it is not capable of two or more constructions, and is not buried in affirmative assuring provisions but is listed as an exception to coverage. Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. v. National Westminster Bank, U.S.A., 1998 WL 31512, 134 F.3d 377 (Table) (9th Cir. Cal.) (unpublished). When an exclusion from coverage is plain, "the insurer is under no duty to advise the insured of the effect of the exclusion on coverage." Id. at 4.

81 Escrow--Escrowee owes no duty to third parties

The Company did not owe you a duty to *[recite alleged duties]. An escrowee is a neutral party in the transaction.

> The escrow relationship is a stakeholder relationship that carries special duties. ...An escrow agent acts as a neutral third party.

Bell v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 830 S.W.2d 157 (Tex.App. 1992). See also Citizens National Bank of Roswell v. Davisson, 229 U.S. 213, 223 (1913); Wilson v. Carver Fed. Savings & Loan Ass'n, 774 S.W.2d 106 (Tex.App.--Beaumont 1989); and Bowles v. Key Title Co., 163 Or.App. 9, 986 P.2d 1236 (Or.App. 1999) (escrowee's duty is "to hold and dispose of 'stakes,' pursuant to the parties' instructions... .").

The escrowee is a limited agent of the parties to the escrow.

> [T]he escrow holder is generally considered the agent of both parties to the escrow, and he owes an obligation to each party measured by an application of the ordinary principles of agency. Such agency has been held to be for the limited purpose of the escrow, and to continue until the escrow is closed.

30A C.J.S. Escrows § 10 (footnotes omitted). See also Blackburn v. McCoy, 1 Cal.App.2d 648, 654, 37 P.2d 155 (1935); Gurley v. Bank of Huntsville, 349 So.2d 43 (Ala. 1977); Shaheen v. American Title Ins. Co., 120 Ariz. 505, 508, 586 P.2d 1317, 1320 (Ct.App. 1978); Fretz v. First American Title Ins. Co., 161 Ariz. 174, 777 P.2d 672 (App. 1989); Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 260 Cal. Rptr. 21, 23 (App. 1989); Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., 183 Cal.App.3d 57, 64-65, 227 Cal.Rptr. 785 (1986)]; and Spaziani v. Millar, 215 Cal.App.2d 667, 682--683, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658. The escrowee's agency "is limited because the escrow agent only represents his principals insofar as he carries out the escrow instructions... ." Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 260 Cal. Rptr. 21, 23 (App. 1989).

The escrowee owes no duty of care to persons who are not parties to the escrow. For example, in Rove v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1998 WL 696880 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished), the Stephen Moses consortium contributed earnest money used by a housing coalition to purchase property. The earnest money group was not a party to the escrow agreement. The deal stalled, and the individuals notified the escrowee that they wanted their money back. It was not returned because the escrow principals told the escrowee not to give it back. The trial court held that the escrowee owed the Moses consortium no duty of care because it was not a party to the escrow. It also noted that the escrowee did have a duty of care as to the buyer and seller, both of whom had given contrary instructions. It said:

> First American would have breached both its duty to exercise a high degree of care in holding the earnest money and its duty to carry out the terms of the real estate contract if it had released the funds to the [Stephen Moses group] over the objections of RTC and the Coalition.

Similarly, when the escrow agreement states that the escrowee is acting solely for the benefit of a lender, the borrowers' signatures on the agreement are their assent to the fact that the escrowee owes them no duty. The borrowers may not circumvent this by claiming to be third party beneficiaries of the escrow. The escrowee was not the fiduciary of the borrowers in disbursing the loan funds, since a fiduciary duty is owed only to the party who makes the deposit. Fantino v. Lenders Title and Guar. Co., 303 Ill.App.3d 204, 707 N.E.2d 756, 236 Ill.Dec. 629 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999).

82 Escrow--No duty to give legal advice

> An escrowee is not the legal advisor to any party to the escrow.
> An escrow holder, by definition, is a neutral party with no obligation to either party to the transaction except to carry out the terms of the escrow instructions. "They owe no duty to advise the parties on their legal rights...[and] [t]hey have no reason to protect the rights of any one party as against another." State Bar v. Security Escrows, Inc., 233 Or. 80. 82. 377 P.2d 334 (1962).

McDonald v. Title Ins. Co. of Oregon, 49 Or.App. 1055, 621 P.2d 654, 657 (1980). The escrowee is not an attorney or advisor to the parties to the escrow. State Bar v. Security Escrows. Inc., 233 Or. 80, 377 P.2d 334 (1962).

The insurer/escrowee does not assume the role of attorney just because a party to the escrow is used to dealing with settlement agents who are attorneys, or because certain documents refer to the escrowee as "approved attorney."

> ...First American is a title insurance company, not a professional corporation qualified to render the professional services of an attorney pursuant to Code §§ 13.1-542 through -556. An attorney-client relationship cannot be created by a non-attorney acting as an attorney. If the non-attorney employees of First American engaged in acts reserved to attorneys, charges of unauthorized practice of law may lie, as noted by the trial court, but not claims for legal malpractice.

Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660, 669 (Va. 1994). An escrowee does not have a duty to explain the legal effect of a document, even when the escrowee drafted the instrument. National Bank of Washington v. Equity Investors, 81 Wash.2d 886, 506 P.2d 20 (1973), rev'd other grounds 86 Wash.2d 545, 546 P.2d 440 (1976) (escrowee not bound to explain terms of subordination agreement). Similarly, the escrowee is not required to explain the effect of amendments to a closing document. Bell v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 830 S.W.2d 157 (Tex.App. 1992) said:

> While Metro had a duty to point out the interlineations, it did not have a duty to explain the signing of the interlineations because to do so would have breached its duty to both parties to remain a neutral third party at the closing. Despite his advanced years, Bell, Sr., was an attorney who was mentally competent at the time he signed the interlineations. Metro owed no duty to give him legal advice on the consequences of initialing the interlineations and signing the deed.

Finally, the escrowee has no duty to warn a party that it may be taking an imprudent risk. Axley v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 88 Cal.App.3d 1, 151 Cal.Rptr. 570 (1978) (no duty of "reasonable care and diligence" requiring escrowee to advise lender not to take fourth position deed of trust).

Thus, courts have uniformly held that an escrowee is not the legal advisor to the escrow parties.

83 Escrow--Lender bound by payoff letter

You are obligated to release the above-described *[deed of trust] *[mortgage] based on the payment you received which was delivered in reliance on your payoff statement. You are legally bound to honor your payoff statement even if it contains an inaccurate payoff amount, loan number or other information.

In one recent decision, the court found a lender bound by its payoff figure when the lender gave the amount for the wrong loan to the same borrower. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. F.D.I.C., 936 S.W.2d 266 (Ct.App.Tenn. 1996), the closer called for a payoff amount, giving the borrower's name and the address of the property. The lender gave a payoff figure for a different loan to the same borrower. That amount was sent to the lender after closing, with reference to the property on the check. The lender deposited the check, but the deed of trust was never released. The court declared the deed of trust released, because the lender was bound by its payoff figure. The court held that this was "a classic case for the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel."

A lender is also bound by the acts of its appointed loan servicer. An escrowee may deal with the servicing agent until it receives notice that the servicing contract has been terminated, or has good reason to know that the servicer is no longer appointed. The lender is obligated to *[discharge its mortgage lien] *[order a reconveyance deed] if the loan balance is paid to the servicer, even if the servicing agreement has been revoked and the lender does not receive the funds from the servicer. See Banco Santander Puerto Rico v. Select Title Service Inc., 692 So.2d 950 (Fla.Ct.App. 1997).

84 Assumed or agreed to in purchase contract

The policy excludes matters "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to" by the insureds. Exclusion 3(a). When the insured agrees in the purchase contract to take the property subject to an encumbrance or lien, the matter is excluded from policy coverage as a matter "agreed to" by the insured.

The exclusion was held to apply when the purchaser was made aware of restrictions before the purchase agreement was signed, and the restrictions were indirectly referenced in the commitment. The buyer's own attorney acted as closer for the insurer, stating in his "closing report" that the restrictions should be shown in the policy, which they were. Sullivan v. Tomgil Building Corp., 46 Misc.2d 613, 260 N.Y.S.2d 465 (Sup. Ct. 1965).

Similarly, the insurer was held not liable for any loss for the apparently accidental characterization of a condominium unit title as being in fee simple rather than a lease. The court noted that the insured accepted the lease and had received the condominium declaration and other documents, all of which accurately showed the interest as a leasehold. Rudolph v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 402 So.2d 1275 (Fla.App. 1981). Likewise, there was no policy coverage when the insured's purchase agreement said that "[t]he property is also sold subject to easements, if any created, or to be created, prior to or after conveyance of title...which may be placed on record by the Seller after execution hereof for the benefit of this property and/or community of which it is a part." Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660, 664 (Va. 1994). See also Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Ozark Global, L.C., 1997 WL 124213 (S.D.Ala. 1997) (unpublished).

85 Reservation of right to recoup attorney's fees

The Company hereby reserves the right to retender the defense of this action to the insured, and/or to deny liability for any judgment rendered against the insured or the cost of any settlement obtained by the insured. The Company also reserves the right to demand payment from the insured for its cost in defending the insured in this action, in the event that the court rules, or the facts disclose, that there is no potential for coverage under the policy for any matter alleged in the complaint.

86 Access onto public street not insured

The policy insures against the "[l]ack of a right of access to and from the land." Insuring Provision 4. This coverage assures a right of access. It does not assure that the property abuts a public road.

For example, in United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. Me. 1999), a resort in Maine sat at the end of 17 miles of logging roads. The former owner had gotten a license to travel over 11 miles of the roads at a cost of $100 per year, and the logging company would have given a license over the rest of the property if asked. The purchaser at a private auction claimed that he had been promised "deeded access," which presumably meant an easement. No matter what might have been promised the buyer, however, the court found that the title insurance policy did not say that the property would have an easement.

> The Chicago Title insurance policy nowhere provides any assurance of deeded access. All that is protected is a "right of access," which could be secured in a variety of ways. No doubt deeded access--e.g., a perpetual easement granted in a deed by the owner of the intervening property--would be more valuable than, say, an easement by necessity under state law or a year to year license... . [T]he policy does not cover... something different from and more valuable than a generic right of access.

Similarly, when the only means of access to the property was by water, the court found that may be a sufficient right of access for hunting land. See Riffle v. United General Title Ins. Co., 64 Ark.App. 185, 984 S.W.2d 47 (1998).

87 Loan policy--Mortgage invalid for lack of debt

The title insurance policy does not protect the insured if the mortgage is defective because the lender failed to give the loan funds to the borrower. For example, in Pacific American Construction v. Security Union Title Ins. Co., 377 Utah Adv.Rep. 22, 1999 UT 87, 987 P.2d 45 (1999), the policy was found not to protect against invalidity of the mortgage resulting from the lender's delivery of the loan funds to a party other than the borrower. The mortgage was found void for lack of consideration. The court said:

> As has been recognized elsewhere, "failure of consideration is not a covered loss" under the policy language at issue here. Gerrold v. Penn Title Ins. Co., 271 N.J.Super. 50, 637 A.2d 1293, 1295 (N.J.Super.Ct.App.Div.1994) (interpreting the same language).
> Our holding is necessitated by the rule that "a mortgage lien and a mortgage debt are two entirely different ... species.... [A] guarantee of the validity of the mortgage lien cannot and should not be construed as guaranteeing that the insurer has made a careful investigation of the origin of the mortgage debt and guarantees its payment or validity." Bank of Miami Beach v. Fidelity & Cas. Co., 239 So.2d 97, 99 (Fla.1970). "Generally stated, the provision [at issue here] insures against defects in the mortgage itself, but not against problems arising from or related to the underlying debt." Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. JDC (America) Corp., 52 F.3d 1575, 1583 (11th Cir.1995); see also 60 A.L.R.2d 972, 976 (1958) (stating "a title policy insuring a mortgagee insures only the title to the land securing his debt and not the debt"). In other words, the losses Pacific sustained did not result from a failure of the insured lien; they resulted instead from the failure of the underlying debt claim against Bodenvest. This is demonstrated by the fact that if Bodenvest had received funds from the loan at issue, the trust deed would have been enforceable against it.
> It would be unreasonable to expect a title company to insure a debt about which it typically would have only limited knowledge and over which the lender would have sole control. A lender--not a title company--is in the best position to insure that the debt underlying a mortgage is valid. Thus, absent specific policy language to the contrary, the lender bears the risk that the mortgage debt is invalid.
> In conclusion, we find that the insuring clauses of the Policy do not cover losses arising, as here, from a failure of the debt underlying the mortgage.

Also, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Consumer Home Mortgage, Inc., 272 A.D.2d 512, 708 N.Y.S.2d 445, 2000 N.Y. Slip.Op. 05066 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000), the lender's closing agent stole the loan funds. The mortgage was found to be void because the borrowers never received the loan funds. The court found no coverage under the title insurance policy.

88 Loan policy does not protect against impersonation

The title insurance policy does not protect against a borrower's impersonation of another person, as long as the insured mortgage can be foreclosed. Impersonation is a person's assumption of a different name. The true owner of the property may assume another's identity in taking title and mortgaging. This does not make title defective. Rather, an instrument signed by the true owner is binding and valid, no matter what name the owner assumed.

The company recognizes that the adoption of an assumed name or the stealing of someone else's identity is a significant credit risk for a lender. However, the title insurance policy does not make any assurance that the owner has taken title in his or her true legal name. In Brucha Mortgage Bankers Corp. v. Nations Title Ins. of New York, Inc., 712 N.Y.S.2d 151, 2000 N.Y. Slip Op. 07395 (A.D. 2 Dept. 2000), the lender gave a mortgage loan to a borrower who "falsely represented his identity." The court did not explain whether the borrower assumed a fictitious name or impersonated a real person with good credit. The loan went into default, and then the lender discovered that the property had also been appraised for more than value. The lender foreclosed and took title without protest from the borrower.

Brucha then sued Nations Title on the theory that the policy protected the lender against the borrower's use of a false identity. The appeals court gave the insurer summary judgment. The court noted cases holding that a lender has a title policy claim only to the extent that its security is impaired and to the extent of the resulting loss which it sustains. Therefore,

> [I]nasmuch as a valid title was transferred, and [Brucha] received a valid and enforceable first mortgage lien on the property, as evidenced by its ability to successfully foreclose, the defendant satisfied its obligations under the policy...

712 N.Y.S.2d at 152. The only person who may challenge the validity of the mortgage is the borrower. In this case, you have not presented any evidence that the borrower has challenged the validity of the insured mortgage. As in the Brucha case, the successful foreclosure of the mortgage will be evidence that the validity of the mortgage is not disputed.

89 Tortious conduct--trespass, interference with property rights

The title insurance policy does not protect against a claim that the insured has violated another property owner's rights in property, without raising a dispute about title. Thus, the policy does not protect the insured for trespassing, interfering with another person's easement rights, or similar conduct.

This principle is illustrated by Sabatino v. First American Title Ins. Co., 308 Ill.App.3d 819, 721 N.E.2d 693, 242 Ill.Dec. 414 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999). In that case, the insureds built an addition to their home. They were sued by their neighbor, Mr. Hershenhorn, for cutting, rerouting and generally playing havoc with his sanitary sewer line, which ran under the surface of the Sabatino property, to make room for the addition. He sough an injunction against the Sabatinos' "deliberate, wrongful and intentional" disruption of the easement, but not a declaration of the easement itself.

The court held that the lawsuit concerned the insured's interference with the claimed easement, rather than seeking a judicial determination of its existence, and therefore did not trigger policy coverage. In addition, it found that the tortious conduct complained of all occurred after the date of policy was excluded by the post-policy exclusion:

> First, the underlying complaint does not seek a judicial determination of the existence of an implied easement. Rather, Hershenhorn seeks injunctive relief due to plaintiffs' intentional interference with his easement. Moreover, the purpose of title insurance is to protect a transfer of real estate from the possibilities of loss through defects that may cloud title. ... In this case, Hershenhorn's claims are not made against plaintiffs because defendant failed to find an unrecorded easement. Hershenhorn's claims against plaintiffs have arisen because of plaintiffs' allegedly tortious conduct in interfering with Hershenhorn's easement. Such claims are ancillary to the purpose of the title insurance policy. ...
> In sum, the gravamen of the complaint is not the allegation of an unrecorded easement, but the redress for plaintiffs' intentional and wrongful conduct that occurred after the date of the policy. The complaint in the underlying action presumes the existence of an unrecorded easement by implication and only seeks injunctive relief due to intentional actions that occurred after the policy was issued. Because the policy excludes the type of conduct complained of and provides defendant with the option of establishing a value reflecting the impact of the unrecorded easement on plaintiffs' property, defendant's rejection of plaintiffs' tender of defense was proper. Accordingly, we find that defendant has no duty to defend... .

The Sabatino decision is equally applicable to similar lawsuits alleging tortious conduct by the insureds and not the title to the property.

90 Regulatory restriction on access

The policy insures that the insured has a right of access to and from the property. However, the policy does not protect against the government's exercise of its police power right, unless there is notice in the public records on the Date of Policy that the government is taking such action:

EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE

> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of:
> 1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (I) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.
> (b) Any governmental police power not excluded by (a) above, except to the extent that a notice of the exercise thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy.

The above exclusion was found to negate the access coverage in a case strongly similar to this claim. In Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975), affirming 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974), the municipality refused a subdivision application, in the course of which it clearly indicated that it would also refuse to issue a driveway permit. The insured claimed that the access coverage was invoked by the denial. The court held that, because there was no notice of the permit issue in the real estate records on the Date of Policy, the matter was excluded under the police power exclusion.

> The City Council's 18 August 1969 resolution rejecting Marriott's application for subdivision approval, in part, stated that "it would be contrary to the public peace, safety and welfare of the inhabitants of the City of Raleigh to approve any subdivision allowing access to Wake Forest Road within 200 feet of Crabtree Creek Bridge." This unequivocal language makes it clear that the City Council would exercise its police power to deny any application for a driveway permit from Wake Forest Road to the Marriott property, or any other property within 200 feet of Crabtree Creek Bridge.

> The provisions of Subsection (b) of the exclusions from coverage in subject policy in plain and unambiguous language exclude from coverage any loss or damage by reason of exercise of governmental police power unless notice of the exercise of such police power appears in the public records on 29 March 1969, the effective date of the policy. According to this record, such notice could not appear in the public records on the effective date of the policy.

A California decision followed the same principle. In Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2002 WL 31555360 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that the access coverage was not invoked although a rear lot owned by the insured did not abut the street, was at a grade two and a half feet below the frontage lot, was partly barricaded by a fence and building, and the insured claimed that the municipality would refuse to issue the permits necessary to change the grade to make access from back to front possible.

The court adopted this quote from a California treatise:

> A right of access can be different from practical or physical access. … If the insured property is landlocked, it has no right of access. If the insured property is contiguous to a public road but so steeply sloped as to make physical access impractical or extremely expensive, it still has a right of access.

(quoting Title Insurance Practice (Cont.Ed.Bar 2d ed.1999) § 6.27, p. 140). The court also pointed to several recent decisions limiting the scope of the access coverage: Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.Ct.App.1991) ("goat path" access sufficient); Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805 (Fla.Ct.App.1980) (abutting road not at grade); and Title & Trust Co. of Florida v. Barrows, 381 So.2d 1088 (Fla.Ct.App.1979) (access cut off by flooding of roads).

As to the possible permit refusal, the Magna court said:

> Magna notes it believed the City would not approve such access and the City wanted a five foot tall wall between the repair center and the shopping center as a condition of approval of the shopping center redevelopment. This was inadequate to show Magna lacked legal access to the repair center property, especially since no evidence showed the City could or would prohibit such access if it were Magna's only possible access.

91 Prejudice by tardy notice of claim

The policy states that the insurer's duties are terminated to the extent that the insurer is prejudiced by tardy notice of a policy claim. Paragraph 3 of the Conditions & Stipulations of the policy states, in relevant part:

> If prompt notice shall not be given to the Company, then as to the insured all liability of the Company shall terminate with regard to the matter or matters for which prompt notice is required; provided, however, that failure to notify the Company shall in no case prejudice the rights of any insured under this policy unless the Company shall be prejudiced by the failure and then only to the extent of the prejudice.

The termination-on-prejudice provision is repeated concerning tenders of defense, in Paragraph 4(d) of the Conditions & Stipulations:

> Whenever requested by the Company, the insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in any action or proceeding, securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act which in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

Thus, when the insured gives the insurer late notice of a claim or tender of defense, it loses all coverage as to the matter if the insurer is harmed by the tardiness of the notice. Several courts have found prejudice under exactly the facts in this case. In one case, the court found that tender of a defense after judgment was entered in a foreclosure prejudiced the insurer:

> The delay of plaintiff in giving defendant notice of this foreclosure action prejudiced defendant as a matter of law since defendant was improperly deprived under condition 2(b) of the policy, of its right to defend said foreclosure action, and of its right to prevent or reduce any loss. Under the circumstances, the defendant is relieved of any liability in the second cause of action.

Chrysler First Financial Services Corp. of America v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 595 N.Y.S.2d 302, 307 (Sup. Ct. 1993). Similarly, in Wainco Funding v. First American Title Ins. Co., 219 A.D.2d 598, 631 N.Y.S.2d 81 (A.D. 2 Dept. 1995), an insurer was found to have been prejudiced when the insured lender did not notify it of a tax lien foreclosure until after an unsuccessful appeal of the judgment, which apparently divested the insured lien. The Wainco court held:

> By depriving the defendant of the opportunity to participate in the tax lien proceeding in any way, the plaintiff's failure to give notice actually prejudiced the defendant [citation omitted].

631 N.Y.S.2d at 82.

The insured prejudiced the insurer's rights, and its ability to protect the insured from the subject of this claim, by its tardy tender of notice of claim. The coverage of the title insurance policy terminated for this matter due to this harm. The Company respectfully declines to indemnify the insured as to this matter.

92 No duty to bring lawsuit to clear title

The policy does not obligate a title insurer to bring an action to clear title. The policy contains a provision for defense of the insured, but that provision likewise does not obligate the insurer to prosecute a lawsuit. For example, in Schwartz v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 1999 WL 475850 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished), the insured sued the developer-declarant, claiming, among other things, that the condominium declaration was defective because it was not signed by the record owner. The title insurer cured the defect with an affidavit and deed. No third party challenged the validity of the declaration. The insured sued the insurer for attorney fees in the prosecution of the action. The court found that there was no duty to clear title, because no one was attacking it, and any defect was cured.

Further, the Company has no obligation to clear title unless and until title as insured is challenged. See Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 Cal.App.4th 1294, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 771, 777 (1994), in which the policy protected against the enforced removal of certain structures, and the insurer was found not to have a duty to act until someone sought to remove those structures. Similarly, in Eliopoulos v. Nations Title Ins. Of New York, 912 F.Supp. 28 (N.D.N.Y. 1996), the title insurer was found to have no "affirmative duty to clear title" when there were "perceived" challenges to title, but no direct attack had yet been made by an adverse party.

Therefore, the Company had no duty to prosecute an action on behalf of the insured.

4. The land referred to in this policy is described as follows:

SCHEDULE B

This policy does not insure against loss or damage by reason of the following:

CONDITIONS AND STIPULATIONS

1. Definition of Terms

The following terms when used in this policy mean:

(a) "insured": the insured named in Schedule A, and, subject to any rights or defenses the Company may have had against the named insured, those who succeed to the interest of such insured by operation of law as distinguished from purchase, including, but not limited to, heirs, distributees, devisees, survivors, personal representatives, next of kin, or corporate or fiduciary successors.

(b) "insured claimant": an insured claiming loss or damage hereunder.

(c) "knowledge": actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of any public records.

(d) "land": the land described, specifically or by reference in Schedule A, and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property; provided, however, the term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area specifically described or referred to in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

(e) "mortgage": mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument.

(f) "public records": those records which by law impart constructive notice of matters relating to said land.

2. Continuation of Insurance after Conveyance of Title

This coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured so long as such insured retains an estate or interest in the land, or holds an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given by a purchaser from such insured, or so long as such insured shall have liability by reason of covenants of warranty made by such insured in any transfer or conveyance or such estate or interest; provided, however, this policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from such insured of either said estate or interest or the indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to such insured.

3. Defense and Prosecution of Actions - Notice of Claim to be given by an Insured Claimant

(a) The Company, at its own cost and without undue delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in all litigation consisting of actions or proceedings commenced against such insured in an action to enforce a contract for a sale of the estate or interest in said land, to the extent that such litigation is founded upon an alleged defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy.

(b) The insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case any action or proceeding is begun or defense is interposed as set forth in (a) above, (ii) in case knowledge shall come to an insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest which is adverse to the title to the estate or interest, as insured, and which might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy, or (iii) if title to the estate or interest, as insured, is rejected as unmarketable. If such prompt notice shall not be given to the Company, then as to such insured all liability of the Company shall cease and terminate in regard to the matter or matters for which such prompt notice is required; provided, however, that failure to notify shall in no case prejudice the rights of any such insured under this policy unless the Company shall be prejudiced by such failure and then only to the extent of such prejudice.

(c) The Company shall have the right at its own cost to institute and without undue delay prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act which in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest, as insured, and the Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable thereunder, and shall not thereby concede liability or waive any provision of this policy.

(d) Whenever the Company shall have brought any action or interposed a defense as required by the provisions of this policy, the Company may pursue any such litigation to final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

(e) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding, the insured hereunder shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in such action or proceeding, and all appeals therein, and permit the Company to use, at its option, the name of such insured for such purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, such insured shall give the Company all reasonable aid in any such action or proceeding, in effecting settlement, securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, or prosecuting or defending such action or proceeding, and the Company shall reimburse such insured for any expenses so incurred.

4. Notice of Loss - Limitation of Action

In addition to the notices required under paragraph 3(b) of these Conditions and Stipulations, a statement in writing of any loss or damage for which it is claimed the Company is liable under this policy shall be furnished to the Company within 90 days after such loss or damage shall have been determined and no right of action shall accrue to an insured claimant until 30 days after such statement shall have been furnished. Failure to furnish such statement of loss or damage shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to such loss or damage.

5. Options to Pay or Otherwise Settle Claims

The Company shall have the option to pay or otherwise settle for or in the name of an insured claimant any claim insured against or to terminate all liability and obligations of the Company hereunder by paying or tendering payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred up to the time of such payment or tender of payment by the insured claimant and authorized by the Company.

6. Determination and Payment of Loss

(a) The liability of the Company under this policy shall in no case exceed the least of:

(i) the actual loss of the insured claimant; or

(ii) the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A.

(b) The Company will pay, in addition to any loss insured against by this policy, all costs imposed upon an insured in litigation carried on by the Company for such insured, and all costs, attorneys' fees and expenses in litigation carried on by such insure with the written authorization of the Company.

(c) When liability has been definitely fixed in accordance with the conditions of this policy, the loss or damage shall be payable within 30 days thereafter.

7. Limitation of Liability

No claim shall arise or be maintainable under this policy (a) if the Company, after having received notice of an alleged defect, lien or encumbrance insured against hereunder, by litigation or otherwise, removes such defect, lien or encumbrance or establishes the title, as insured, within a reasonable time after receipt of such notice; (b) in the event of litigation until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals therefrom, adverse to the title, as insured, as provided in paragraph 3 hereof; or (c) for liability voluntarily assumed by an insured in settling any claim or suit without prior written consent of the Company.

8. Reduction of Liability

All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the amount of the insurance pro tanto. No payment shall be made without producing this policy for endorsement of such payment unless the policy be lost or destroyed, in which case proof of loss or destruction shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Company.

9. Liability Noncumulative

It is expressly understood that the amount of insurance under this policy shall be reduced by any amount the Company may pay under any policy insuring either (a) a mortgage shown or referred to in Schedule B hereof which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest covered by this policy, or (b) a mortgage hereafter executed by an insured which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest described or referred to in Schedule A, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment under this policy. The Company shall have the option to apply to the payment of any such mortgages any amount that otherwise would be payable hereunder to the insured owner of the estate or interest covered by this policy and the amount so paid shall be deemed payment under this policy.

10. Apportionment

If the land described in Schedule A consists of two or more parcels which are not used as a single site, and a loss is established affecting one or more of the parcels but not all, the loss shall be computed and settled on a pro rata basis as if the amount of insurance under this policy was divided pro rata as to the value on Date of Policy of each separate parcel to the whole, exclusive of any improvements made subsequent to Date of Policy, unless a liability or value has otherwise been agreed upon as to each parcel by the Company and the insured at the time of the issuance of this policy and shown by an express statement herein or by an endorsement attached hereto.

11. Subrogation Upon Payment or Settlement

Whenever the Company shall have settled a claim under this policy, all right of subrogation shall vest in the Company unaffected by any act of the insured claimant. The Company shall be subrogated to and be entitled to all rights and remedies which such insured claimant would have had against any person or property in respect to such claim had this policy not been issued, and if requested by the Company, such insured claimant shall transfer to the Company all rights and remedies against any person or property necessary in order to perfect such right of subrogation and shall permit the Company to use the name of such insured claimant in any transaction or litigation involving such rights and remedies. If the payment does not cover the loss of such insured claimant, the Company shall be subrogated to such rights and remedies in the proportion which said payment bears to the amount of said loss. If loss should result from any act of such insured claimant, such act shall not void this policy, but the Company, in that event, shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against hereunder which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment of the right of subrogation.

12. Liability Limited to this Policy

This instrument together with all endorsements and other instruments, if any, attached hereto by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the insured and the Company.

Any claim of loss or damage, whether or not based on negligence, and which arises out of the status of the title to the estate or interest covered hereby or any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to the provisions and conditions and stipulations of this policy.

No amendment of or endorsement to this policy can be made except by writing endorsed hereon or attached hereto signed by either the President, a Vice President, the Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, or validating officer or authorized signatory of the Company.

13. Notices, Where Sent

All notices require to be given to the Company and any statement in writing required to be furnished the Company shall be addressed to it at ___________________________.

CONDITIONS AND STIPULATIONS

1. DEFINITION OF TERMS.

The following terms when used in this policy mean:

(a) "insured": the insured named in Schedule A, and, subject to any rights or defenses the Company would have had against the named insured, those who succeed to the interest of the named insured by operation of law as distinguished from purchase including, but not limited to, heirs, distributees, devisees, survivors, personal representatives, next of kin, or corporate or fiduciary successors.

(b) "insured claimant": an insured claiming loss or damage.

(c) "knowledge" or "known": actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of the public records as defined in this policy or any other records which impart constructive notice of matters affecting the land.

(d) "land": the land described or referred to in Schedule [A][C], and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property. The term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described or referred to in Schedule [A][C], nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

(e) "mortgage": mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument.

(f) "public records": records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without knowledge. With respect to Section 1(a)(iv) of the Exclusions From Coverage, "public records" shall also include environmental protection liens filed in the records of the clerk of the United States district court for the district in which the land is located.

(g) "unmarketability of the title": an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land, not excluded or excepted from coverage, which would entitle a purchaser of the estate or interest described in Schedule A to be released from the obligation to purchase by virtue of a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE AFTER CONVEYANCE OF TITLE.

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured only so long as the insured retains an estate or interest in the land, or holds an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given by a purchaser from the insured, or only so long as the insured shall have liability by reason of covenants of warranty made by the insured in any transfer or conveyance of the estate or interest. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the land, or (ii) an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to the insured.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT.

The insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 4(a) below, (ii) in case knowledge shall come to an insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest which is adverse to the title to the estate or interest, as insured, and which might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy, or (iii) if title to the estate or interest, as insured, is rejected as unmarketable. If prompt notice shall not be given to the Company, then as to the insured all liability of the Company shall terminate with regard to the matter or matters for which prompt notice is required; provided, however, that failure to notify the Company shall in no case prejudice the rights of any insured under this policy unless the Company shall be prejudiced by the failure and then only to the extent of the prejudice.

4. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS; DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.

(a) Upon written request by the insured and subject to the options contained in Section 6 of these Conditions and Stipulations, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim adverse to the title or interest as insured, but only as to those stated causes of action alleging a defect, lien or encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the insured as to those stated causes of action and shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the insured in the defense of those causes of action which allege matters not insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act which in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable hereunder, and shall not thereby concede liability or waive any provision of this policy. If the Company shall exercise its rights under this paragraph, it shall do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company shall have brought an action or interposed a defense as required or permitted by the provisions of this policy, the Company may pursue any litigation to final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

(d) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding, the insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, and all appeals therein, and permit the Company to use, at its option, the name of the insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in any action or proceeding, securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act which in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest as insured.
If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

5. PROOF OF LOSS OR DAMAGE.

In addition to and after the notices required under Section 3 of these Conditions and Stipulations have been provided the Company, a proof of loss or damage signed and sworn to by the insured claimant shall be furnished to the Company within 90 days after the insured claimant shall ascertain the facts giving rise to the loss or damage. The proof of loss or damage shall describe the defect in, or lien or encumbrance on the title, or other matter insured against by this policy which constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured claimant to provide the required proof of loss or damage, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such proof of loss or damage.

In addition, the insured claimant may reasonably be required to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and shall produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by any authorized representative of the Company, all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda, whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the insured claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda in the custody or control of a third party, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the insured claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the insured claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce other reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this paragraph shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

6. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance.

(i) To pay or tender payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant, which were authorized by the Company, up to the time of payment or tender of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay.

(ii) Upon the exercise by the Company of this option, all liability and obligations to the insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, and the policy shall be surrendered to the Company for cancellation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an insured claimant any claim insured against under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the insured claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in paragraphs (b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

7. DETERMINATION, EXTENT OF LIABILITY AND COINSURANCE.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the insured claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy and only to the extent herein described.

(a) The liability of the Company under this policy shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A; or,

(ii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy.

(b) In the event the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A at the Date of Policy is less than 80 percent of the value of the insured estate or interest or the full consideration paid for the land, whichever is less, or if subsequent to the Date of Policy an improvement is erected on the land which increases the value of the insured estate or interest by at least 20 percent over the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A, then this Policy is subject to the following:

(i) where no subsequent improvement has been made, as to any partial loss, the Company shall only pay the loss pro rata in the proportion that the amount of insurance at Date of Policy bears to the total value of the insured estate or interest at Date of Policy; or

(ii) where a subsequent improvement has been made, as to any partial loss, the Company shall only pay the loss pro rata in the proportion that 120 percent of the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A bears to the sum of the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A and the amount expended for the improvement.

The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to costs, attorneys' fees and expenses for which the Company is liable under this policy, and shall only apply to that portion of any loss which exceeds, in the aggregate, 10 percent of the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A.

(c) The Company will pay only those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Section 4 of these Conditions and Stipulations.

8. APPORTIONMENT.

If the land described in Schedule [A][C] consists of two or more parcels which are not used as a single site, and a loss is established affecting one or more of the parcels but not all, the loss shall be computed and settled on a pro rata basis as if the amount of insurance under this policy was divided pro rata as to the value on Date of Policy of each separate parcel to the whole, exclusive of any improvements made subsequent to Date of Policy, unless a liability or value has otherwise been agreed upon as to each parcel by the Company and the insured at the time of the issuance of this policy and shown by an express statement or by an endorsement attached to this policy.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) If the Company establishes the title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the land, or cures the claim of unmarketability of title, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals therefrom, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused thereby.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals therefrom, adverse to the title as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to any insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the amount of the insurance pro tanto.

11. LIABILITY NONCUMULATIVE.

It is expressly understood that the amount of insurance under this policy shall be reduced by any amount the Company may pay under any policy insuring a mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject, or which is hereafter executed by an insured and which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest described or referred to in Schedule A, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment under this policy to the insured owner.

12. PAYMENT OF LOSS.

(a) No payment shall be made without producing this policy for endorsement of the payment unless the policy has been lost or destroyed, in which case proof of loss or destruction shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Company.

(b) When liability and the extent of loss or damage has been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions and Stipulations, the loss or damage shall be payable within 30 days thereafter.

13. SUBROGATION UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT.

(a) The Company's Right of Subrogation.

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, all right of subrogation shall vest in the Company unaffected by any act of the insured claimant.

The Company shall be subrogated to and be entitled to all rights and remedies which the insured claimant would have had against any person or property in respect to the claim had this policy not been issued. If requested by the Company, the insured claimant shall transfer to the Company all rights and remedies against any person or property necessary in order to perfect this right of subrogation. The insured claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise or settle in the name of the insured claimant and to use the name of the insured claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights or remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the insured claimant, the Company shall be subrogated to these rights and remedies in the proportion which the Company's payment bears to the whole amount of the loss.

If loss should result from any act of the insured claimant, as stated above, that act shall not void this policy, but the Company, in that event, shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the insured claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(b) The Company's Rights Against Non-insured Obligors.

The Company's right of subrogation against non-insured obligors shall exist and shall include, without limitation, the rights of the insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments which provide for subrogation rights by reason of this policy.

14. ARBITRATION

Unless prohibited by applicable law, either the Company or the insured may demand arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service of the Company in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision or other obligation. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $1,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the insured. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $1,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules in effect on the date the demand for arbitration is made or, at the option of the insured, the Rules in effect at Date of Policy shall be binding upon the parties. The award may include attorneys' fees only if the laws of the state in which the land is located permit a court to award attorneys' fees to a prevailing party. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court having jurisdiction thereof.

The law of the situs of the land shall apply to an arbitration under the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules.

15. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT.

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached hereto by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage, whether or not based on negligence, and which arises out of the status of the title to the estate or interest covered hereby or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) No amendment of or endorsement to this policy can be made except by a writing endorsed hereon or attached hereto signed by either the President, a Vice President, the Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, or validating officer or authorized signatory of the Company.

16. SEVERABILITY.

In the event any provision of the policy is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

17. NOTICES, WHERE SENT.

All notices required to be given the Company and any statement in writing required to be furnished the Company shall include the number of this policy and shall be addressed to the Company at (fill in).

The amount of Your insurance for this Covered Risk is subject to Your Deductible Amount and Our Maximum Dollar Limit of Liability shown in Schedule A.
19. You are forced to remove or remedy Your existing structures, or any part of them, because they violate an existing zoning law or zoning regulation. If You are required to remedy any portion of Your existing structures, the amount of Your insurance for this Covered Risk is subject to Your Deductible Amount and Our Maximum Dollar Limit of Liability shown in Schedule A.
20. You cannot use the Land because use as a single-family residence violates an existing zoning law or zoning regulation.
21. You are forced to remove Your existing structures because they encroach onto Your neighbor's land. 23. You are forced to remove Your existing structures which encroach onto an Easement or over a building set-back line, even if the Easement or building set-back line is excepted in Schedule B.
24. Your existing structures are damaged because of the exercise of a right to maintain or use any Easement affecting the Land, even if the Easement is excepted in Schedule B.
25. Your existing improvements (or a replacement or modification made to them after the Policy Date), including lawns, shrubbery or trees, are damaged because of the future exercise of a right to use the surface of the Land for the extraction or development of minerals, water or any other substance, even if those rights are excepted or reserved from the description of the Land or excepted in Schedule B.
26. Someone else tries to enforce a discriminatory covenant, condition or restriction that they claim affects Your Title which is based upon race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin.

28. Your neighbor builds any structures after the Policy Date -- other than boundary walls or fences -- which encroach onto the Land.
29. Your Title is unmarketable, which allows someone else to refuse to perform a contract to purchase the Land, lease it or make a Mortgage loan on it.

(b) "Date of Policy": The date designated as "Date of Policy" in Schedule A.

(c) "Entity": A corporation, partnership, trust, limited liability company, or other similar legal entity.

(d) "Insured": The Insured named in Schedule A.

(4) if the grantee is a trustee or beneficiary of a trust created by a written instrument established by the Insured named in Schedule A for estate planning purposes.

The term "Land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate, or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways, or waterways, but this does not modify or limit the extent that a right of access to and from the Land is insured by this policy.

(h) "Mortgage": Mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument, including one evidenced by electronic means authorized by law.

(i) "Public Records": Records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without Knowledge. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured Claimant to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to the Insured Claimant under the policy shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice.

4. PROOF OF LOSS

5. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS

(a) Upon written request by the Insured, and subject to the options contained in Section 7 of these Conditions, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an Insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured. This obligation is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the Insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the Insured as to those stated causes of action. It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs, or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, in addition to the options contained in Section 7 of these Conditions, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act that in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the Insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal any adverse judgment or order.

6. DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE

(a) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding and any appeals, the Insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, including the right to use, at its option, the name of the Insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the Insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title or any other matter as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the Insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

(b) The Company may reasonably require the Insured Claimant to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and to produce for examination, inspection, and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by the authorized representative of the Company, all records, in whatever medium maintained, including books, ledgers, checks, memoranda, correspondence, reports, e-mails, disks, tapes, and videos whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the Insured Claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect, and copy all of these records in the custody or control of a third party that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the Insured Claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the Insured Claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce any reasonably requested information, or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this subsection, unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

7. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance.

(i) To pay or tender payment of the Amount of Insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment or tender of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

(ii) Upon the exercise by the Company of this option, all liability and obligations of the Company to the Insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in this subsection, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other Than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an Insured Claimant any claim insured against under this policy. In addition, the Company will pay any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the Insured Claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the Insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

8. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.

(a) The extent of liability of the Company for loss or damage under this policy shall not exceed the lesser of

(i) the Amount of Insurance; or

(ii) the difference between the value of the Title as insured and the value of the Title subject to the risk insured against by this policy.

(b) If the Company pursues its rights under Section 5 of these Conditions and is unsuccessful in establishing the Title, as insured,

(i) the Amount of Insurance shall be increased by 10%, and

(ii) the Insured Claimant shall have the right to have the loss or damage determined either as of the date the claim was made by the Insured Claimant or as of the date it is settled and paid.

(c) In addition to the extent of liability under (a) and (b), the Company will also pay those costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred in accordance with Sections 5 and 7 of these Conditions.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

(a) If the Company establishes the Title, or removes the alleged defect, lien, or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the Land, or cures the claim of Unmarketable Title, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused to the Insured.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals, adverse to the Title, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to the Insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the Insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY

All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses, shall reduce the Amount of Insurance by the amount of the payment.

11. LIABILITY NONCUMULATIVE

The Amount of Insurance shall be reduced by any amount the Company pays under any policy insuring a Mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the Insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject, or which is executed by an Insured after Date of Policy and which is a charge or lien on the Title, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment to the Insured under this policy.

12. PAYMENT OF LOSS

When liability and the extent of loss or damage have been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions, the payment shall be made within 30 days.

13. RIGHTS OF RECOVERY UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT

(a) Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, it shall be subrogated and entitled to the rights of the Insured Claimant in the Title and all other rights and remedies in respect to the claim that the Insured Claimant has against any person or property, to the extent of the amount of any loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses paid by the Company. If requested by the Company, the Insured Claimant shall execute documents to evidence the transfer to the Company of these rights and remedies. The Insured Claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise, or settle in the name of the Insured Claimant and to use the name of the Insured Claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights and remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the Insured Claimant, the Company shall defer the exercise of its right to recover until after the Insured Claimant shall have recovered its loss.

(b) The Company's right of subrogation includes the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance, or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights.

14. ARBITRATION

Either the Company or the Insured may demand that the claim or controversy shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association ("Rules"). Except as provided in the Rules, there shall be no joinder or consolidation with claims or controversies of other persons. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $2,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the Insured. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $2,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules shall be binding upon the parties. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

15. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or by any action asserting such claim shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) Any amendment of or endorsement to this policy must be in writing and authenticated by an authorized person, or expressly incorporated by Schedule A of this policy.

(d) Each endorsement to this policy issued at any time is made a part of this policy and is subject to all of its terms and provisions. Except as the endorsement expressly states, it does not (i) modify any of the terms and provisions of the policy, (ii) modify any prior endorsement, (iii) extend the Date of Policy, or (iv) increase the Amount of Insurance.

In the event any provision of this policy, in whole or in part, is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision or such part held to be invalid, but all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

17. CHOICE OF LAW; FORUM

(a) Choice of Law: The Insured acknowledges the Company has underwritten the risks covered by this policy and determined the premium charged therefor in reliance upon the law affecting interests in real property and applicable to the interpretation, rights, remedies, or enforcement of policies of title insurance of the jurisdiction where the Land is located.

Therefore, the court or an arbitrator shall apply the law of the jurisdiction where the Land is located to determine the validity of claims against the Title that are adverse to the Insured and to interpret and enforce the terms of this policy. In neither case shall the court or arbitrator apply its conflicts of law principles to determine the applicable law.

(b) Choice of Forum: Any litigation or other proceeding brought by the Insured against the Company must be filed only in a state or federal court within the United States of America or its territories having appropriate jurisdiction.

18. NOTICES, WHERE SENT

CONDITIONS AND STIPULATIONS

1. Definition of Terms

The following terms when used in this policy mean:

(a) "insured": The insured named in Schedule A. The term "insured" also includes (i) the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage and each successor in ownership of such indebtedness (reserving, however, all rights and defenses as to any such successor who acquires the indebtedness by operation of law as distinguished from purchase including, but not limited to, heirs, distributees, devisees, survivors, personal representatives, next to kin or corporate or fiduciary successors that the Company would have had against the successor's transferor), and further includes (ii) any governmental agency or instrumentality which is an insurer or guarantor under an insurance contract or guaranty insuring or guaranteeing said indebtedness, or any part thereof, whether named as an insured herein or not, and (iii) the parties designated in paragraph 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

(b) "insured claimant": an insured claiming loss or damage hereunder.

(c) "knowledge": actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of any public records.

(d) "land": the land described, specifically or by reference in Schedule A, and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property; provided, however, the term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area specifically described or referred to in schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

(e) "mortgage": mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument.

(f) "public records": those records which by law impart constructive notice of matters relating to said land.

2. (a) Continuation of Insurance after Acquisition of Title

This policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured who acquires all or any part of the estate or interest in the land described in Schedele A by foreclosure, trustee's sale, conveyance in lieu of foreclosure, or other legal manner which discharges the lien of the insured mortgage, and if the insured is a corporation, its transferee of the estate or interest so acquired, provided the transferee is the parent or wholly owned subsidiary of the insured; and in favor of any governmental agency or instrumentality which acquires all or any part of the estate or interest pursuant to a contract of insurance or guaranty insuring or guaranteeing the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage; provided that the amount of insurance hereunder after such acquisition, exclusive of costs, attorneys' fees and expenses which the Company may become obligated to pay, shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A;

(ii) the amount of the unpaid principal of the indebtedness as defined in paragraph 8 hereof, plus interest thereon, expenses of foreclosure and amounts advanced to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured by said insured mortgage at the time of acquisition of such estate or interest in the land; or

(iii) the amount paid by any governmental agency or instrumentality, if such agency or instrumentality is the insured claimant, in the acquisition of such estate or interest in satisfaction of its insurance contract or guaranty.

(b) Continuation of Insurance after Conveyance of Title

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured so long as such insured retains an estate or interest in the land, or holds an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given by a purchaser from such insured, or so long as such insured shall have liability by reason of covenants of warranty made by such insured in any transfer or conveyance of such state or interest; provided, however, this policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from such insured of either said estate or interest or the indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to such insured.

3. Defense and Prosecution of Actions - Notice of Claim to be given by an Insured Claimant

(a) The Company, at its own cost and without undue delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in all litigation consisting of actions or proceedings commenced against such insured, or defenses, restraining orders injunctions interposed against a foreclosure of the insured mortgage or a defense interposed against an insured in an action to enforce a contract for a sale of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage, or a sale of the estate or interest in said land, to the extent that such litigation is founded upon an alleged defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy.

(b) The insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case any action or proceeding is begun or defense or restraining order or injunction is interposed as set forth in (a) above, (ii) in case knowledge shall come to an insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest which is adverse to the title to the estate or interest which is adverse to the title of the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, and which might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy, or (iii) if title to the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, is rejected as unmarketable. If such prompt notice shall not be given to the Company, then as to such insured all liability of the insured shall cease and terminate in regard to the matter or matters for which prompt notice is required; provided, however, that failure to notify shall in no case prejudice the rights of any such insured under this policy unless the Company shall be prejudiced by such failure and then only to the extent of such prejudice.

(c) The Company shall have the right at its own cost to institute and without undue delay prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act which in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, and the Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable thereunder, and shall not thereby concede liability or waive any provisions of this policy.

(d) Whenever the Company shall have brought any action or interposed a defense as required or permitted by the provisions of this policy, the Company may pursue any such litigation to final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

(e) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding, the insured hereunder shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in such action or proceeding, and all appeals therein, and permit the Company to use, at its option, the name of such insured for that purpose. Whenever bequested by the Company, such insured shall give the Company all reasonable aid in any such action or proceeding, in effecting settlement, securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, or prosecuting or defending such action or proceeding, and the Company shall reimburse such insured for any expense so incurred.

4. Notice of Loss - Limitation of Action

In addition to the notices required under paragraph 3(b) of these Conditions and Stipulations, a statement in writing of any loss or damage for which it is claimed the Company is liable under this policy shall be furnished to the Company within 90 days after such loss or damage shall have been determined and no right of action shall accrue to an insured claimant until 30 days after such statement shall have been furnished. Failure to furnish such statement of loss or damage shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to such loss or damage.

5. Options to Pay or Otherwise Settle Claims

The Company shall have the option to pay or otherwise settle for or in the name of an insured claimant any claim insured against or to terminate all liability and obligations of the Company hereunder by paying or tendering payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred up to the time of such payment or tender of payment by the insured claimant under this policy by an insured, the Company shall have the further option to purchase such indebtedness for the amount owing thereon together with all costs, attorneys' fees and expenses which the Company is obligated hereunder to pay. If the Company offers to purchase said indebtedness as herein provided, the owner of such indebtedness shall transfer and assign said indebtedness and the mortgage and any collateral securing the same to the Company upon payment therefor as herein provided.

6. Determination and Payment of Loss

(a) The liability of the Company under this policy shall in no case exceed the least of:

(i) the actual loss of the insured claimant; or

(ii) the amount of insurance stated in Schedule A, or, if applicable, the amount of insurance as defined in paragraph 2(a) hereof; or

(iii) the amount of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage as determined under paragraph 8 hereof, at the time the loss or damage insured against hereunder occurs, together with interest thereon.

(b) The Company will pay, in addition to any loss insured against by this policy, all costs imposed upon an insured in litigation carried on by the Company for such insured, and all costs, attorneys' fees and expenses in litigation carried on by such with the written authorization of the Company.

(c) When liability has been definitely fixed in accordance with the conditions of this policy, the loss or damage shall be payable within 30 days thereafter.

7. Limitation of Liability

No claim shall arise or be maintainable under this policy (a) if the Company, after having received notice of an alleged defect, lien or encumbrance insured against hereunder, by litigation or otherwise, removes such defect, lien or encumbrance or establishes the title, or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, within a reasonable time after receipt of such notice; (b) in the event of litigation until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals therefrom, adverse to the title or to the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, as provided in paragraph 3 hereof; or (c) for liability voluntarily assumed by an insured in settling any claim or suit without prior written consent of the Company.

8. Reduction of Liability

(a) All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the amount of the insurance pro tanto; provided, however, such payments, prior to the acquisition of title to said estate or interest as provided in paragraph 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations, shall not reduce pro tanto the amount of the insurance afforded hereunder except to the extent that such payments reduce the amount of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage.

Payment in full by any person or voluntary satisfaction or release of the insured mortgage shall terminate all liability of the Company except as provided in paragraph 2(a) hereof.

(b) The liability of the Company shall not be increased by additional principal indebtedness created subsequent to Date of Policy, except as to amounts advanced to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured thereby.

No payment shall be made without producing this policy for endorsement of such payment unless the policy be lost or destroyed, in which case proof of loss or destruction shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Company.

9. Liability Noncumulative

If the insured acquires title to the estate or interest in satisfaction of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage, or any part thereof, it is expressly understood that the amount of insurance under this policy shall be reduced by any amount the Company may pay under any policy insuring a mortgage hereafter executed by an insured which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest described or referred to in Schedule A, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment under this policy.

10. Subrogation Upon Payment or Settlement

Whenever the Company shall have settled a claim under this policy, all right of subrogation shall vest in the Company unaffected by any act of the insured claimant, except that the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage may release or substitute the personal liability of any debtor or guarantor, or extend or otherwise modify the terms of payment, or release a portion of the estate or interest from the lien of the insured mortgage, or release any collateral security for the indebtedness, provided such act occurs prior to receipt by the insured of notice of any claim of title or interest adverse to the title to the estate or interest or the priority of the lien of the insured mortgage and does not result in any loss of priority of the lien of the insured mortgage. The Company shall be subrogated to and be entitled to all rights and remedies which such insured claimant would have had against any person or property in respect to such claim had this policy not been issued, and if requested by the Company, such insured claimant shall transfer to the Company all rights and remedies against any person or property necessary in order to perfect such right of subrogation and shall permit the Company to use the name of such insured claimant in any transaction or litigation involving such rights or remedies. If the payment does not cover the loss of such insured claimant, the Company shall be subrogated to such rights and remedies in the proportion which said payment bears to the amount of said loss, but such subrogation shall be in subordination to the insured mortgage. If loss or priority should result from any act of such insured claimant, such act shall not void this policy, but the Company, in that event, shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against hereunder which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment of the right of subrogation.

11. Liability Limited to this Policy

This instrument together with all endorsements and other instruments, if any, attached hereto by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the insured and the Company. Any claim of loss or damage, whether or not based on negligence, and which arises out of the status of the lien of the insured mortgage or of the title to the estate or interest covered hereby or any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to the provisions and conditions and stipulations of this policy. No amendment of or endorsement to this policy can be made except by writing endorsed hereon or attached hereto signed by either the President, a Vice President, the Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, or validating officer or authorized signatory of the Company.

12. Notices, Where Sent

All notices required to be given the Company and any statement in writing required to be furnished the Company shall be addressed to it at ________________________.

   (c) resulting in no loss or damage to the insured claimant;

   (d) attaching or created subsequent to Date of Policy (except to the extent that this policy insures the priority of the lien of the insured mortgage over any statutory lien for services, labor or material); or

   (e) resulting in loss or damage which would not have been sustained if the insured claimant had paid value for the insured mortgage.

4. Unenforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage because of the inability or failure of the insured at Date of Policy, or the inability or failure of any subsequent owner of the indebtedness, to comply with applicable doing business laws of the state in which the land is situated.

5. Invalidity or unenforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage, or claim thereof, which arises out of the transaction evidenced by the insured mortgage and is based upon usury or any consumer credit protection or truth in lending law.

6. Any statutory lien for services, labor or materials (or the claim of priority of any statutory lien for services, labor or materials over the lien of the insured mortgage) arising from an improvement or work related to the land which is contracted for and commenced subsequent to Date of Policy and is not financed in whole or in part by proceeds of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage which at Date of Policy the insured has advanced or is obligated to advance.

7. Any claim, which arises out of the transaction creating the interest of the mortgagee insured by this policy, by reason of the operation of federal bankruptcy, state insolvency, or similar creditors' rights laws, that is based on:

(a) the transaction creating the interest of the insured mortgagee being deemed a fraudulent conveyance or fraudulent transfer; or

(b) the subordination of the interest of the insured mortgagee as a result of the application of the doctrine of equitable subordination; or

(c) the transaction creating the interest of the insured mortgagee being deemed a preferential transfer except where the preferential transfer results from the failure:

(i) to timely record the instrument of transfer; or

(ii) of such recordation to impart notice to a purchaser for value or a judgment or lien creditor.

1992 ALTA Loan Policy

CONDITIONS AND STIPULATIONS

1. DEFINITION OF TERMS.

The following terms when used in this policy mean:

(a) "insured": the insured named in Schedule A. The term "insured" also includes

(i) the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage and each successor in ownership of the indebtedness except a successor who is an obligor under the provisions of Section 12(c) of these Conditions and Stipulations (reserving, however, all rights and defenses as to any successor that the Company would have had against any predecessor insured, unless the successor acquired the indebtedness as a purchaser for value without knowledge of the asserted defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter insured against by this policy as affecting title to the estate or interest in the land);

(ii) any governmental agency or governmental instrumentality which is an insurer or guarantor under an insurance contract or guaranty insuring or guaranteeing the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage, or any part thereof, whether named as an insured herein or not;

(iii) the parties designated in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

(b) "insured claimant": an insured claiming loss or damage.

(c) "knowledge" or "known": actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of the public records as defined in this policy or any other records which impart constructive notice of matters affecting the land.

(d) "land": the land described or referred to in Schedule [A][C], and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property. The term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described or referred to in Schedule [A][C], nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

(e) "mortgage": mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument.

(f) "public records": records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without knowledge. With respect to Section 1(a)(iv) of the Exclusions From Coverage, "public records" shall also include environmental protection liens filed in the records of the clerk of the United States district court for the district in which the land is located.

(g) "unmarketability of the title": an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land, not excluded or excepted from coverage, which would entitle a purchaser of the estate or interest described in Schedule A or the insured mortgage to be released from the obligation to purchase by virtue of a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE.

(a) After Acquisition of Title. The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of (i) an insured who acquires all or any part of the estate or interest in the land by foreclosure, trustee's sale, conveyance in lieu of foreclosure, or other legal manner which discharges the lien of the insured mortgage; (ii) a transferee of the estate or interest so acquired from an insured corporation, provided the transferee is the parent or wholly-owned subsidiary of the insured corporation, and their corporate successors by operation of law and not by purchase, subject to any rights or defenses the Company may have against any predecessor insureds; and (iii) any governmental agency or governmental instrumentality which acquires all or any part of the estate or interest pursuant to a contract of insurance or guaranty insuring or guaranteeing the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage.

(b) After Conveyance of Title. The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured only so long as the insured retains an estate or interest in the land, or holds an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given by a purchaser from the insured, or only so long as the insured shall have liability by reason of covenants of warranty made by the insured in any transfer or conveyance of the estate or interest. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the land, or (ii) an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to the insured.

(c) Amount of Insurance. The amount of insurance after the acquisition or after the conveyance shall in neither event exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A;

(ii) the amount of the principal of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage as of Date of Policy, interest thereon, expenses of foreclosure, amounts advanced pursuant to the insured mortgage to assure compliance with laws or to protect the lien of the insured mortgage prior to the time of acquisition of the estate or interest in the land and secured thereby and reasonable amounts expended to prevent deterioration of improvements, but reduced by the amount of all payments made; or

(iii) the amount paid by any governmental agency or governmental instrumentality, if the agency or instrumentality is the insured claimant, in the acquisition of the estate or interest in satisfaction of its insurance contract or guaranty.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT.

The insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 4(a) below, (ii) in case knowledge shall come to an insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest which is adverse to the title to the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, and which might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy, or (iii) if title to the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, is rejected as unmarketable. If prompt notice shall not be given to the Company, then as to the insured all liability of the Company shall terminate with regard to the matter or matters for which prompt notice is required; provided, however, that failure to notify the Company shall in no case prejudice the rights of any insured under this policy unless the Company shall be prejudiced by the failure and then only to the extent of the prejudice.

4. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS; DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.

(a) Upon written request by the insured and subject to the options contained in Section 6 of these Conditions and Stipulations, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim adverse to the title or interest as insured, but only as to those stated causes of action alleging a defect, lien or encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the insured as to those stated causes of action and shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the insured in the defense of those causes of action which allege matters not insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act which in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable hereunder, and shall not thereby concede liability or waive any provision of this policy. If the Company shall exercise its rights under this paragraph, it shall do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company shall have brought an action or interposed a defense as required or permitted by the provisions of this policy, the Company may pursue any litigation to final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

(d) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding, the insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, and all appeals therein, and permit the Company to use, at its option, the name of the insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in any action or proceeding, securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act which in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest or the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

5. PROOF OF LOSS OR DAMAGE.

In addition to and after the notices required under Section 3 of these Conditions and Stipulations have been provided the Company, a proof of loss or damage signed and sworn to by the insured claimant shall be furnished to the Company within 90 days after the insured claimant shall ascertain the facts giving rise to the loss or damage. The proof of loss or damage shall describe the defect in, or lien or encumbrance on the title, or other matter insured against by this policy which constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured claimant to provide the required proof of loss or damage, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such proof of loss or damage.

In addition, the insured claimant may reasonably be required to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and shall produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by any authorized representative of the Company, all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda, whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the insured claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda in the custody or control of a third party, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the insured claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the insured claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce other reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this paragraph, unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

6. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance or to Purchase the Indebtedness.

(i) to pay or tender payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant, which were authorized by the Company, up to the time of payment or tender of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to purchase the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage for the amount owing thereon together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of purchase and which the Company is obligated to pay.

If the Company offers to purchase the indebtedness as herein provided, the owner of the indebtedness shall transfer, assign, and convey the indebtedness and the insured mortgage, together with any collateral security, to the Company upon payment therefor.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in paragraphs a(i) or (ii), all liability and obligations to the insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in those paragraphs, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, and the policy shall be surrendered to the Company for cancellation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an insured claimant any claim insured against under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the insured claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in paragraphs b(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

7. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the insured claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy and only to the extent herein described.

(a) The liability of the Company under this policy shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A, or, if applicable, the amount of insurance as defined in Section 2 (c) of these Conditions and Stipulations;

(ii) the amount of the unpaid principal indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage as limited or provided under Section 8 of these Conditions and Stipulations or as reduced under Section 9 of these Conditions and Stipulations, at the time the loss or damage insured against by this policy occurs, together with interest thereon; or

(iii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy.

(b) In the event the insured has acquired the estate or interest in the manner described in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations or has conveyed the title, then the liability of the Company shall continue as set forth in Section 7(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

(c) The Company will pay only those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Section 4 of these Conditions and Stipulations.

8. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) If the Company establishes the title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the land, or cures the claim of unmarketability of title, or otherwise establishes the lien of the insured mortgage, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals therefrom, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused thereby.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals therefrom, adverse to the title or to the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to any insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

(d) The Company shall not be liable for: (i) any indebtedness created subsequent to Date of Policy except for advances made to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured thereby and reasonable amounts expended to prevent deterioration of improvements; or (ii) construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy, except construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the land which at Date of Policy were secured by the insured mortgage and which the insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at and after Date of Policy.

9. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the amount of the insurance pro tanto. However, any payments made prior to the acquisition of title to the estate or interest as provided in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations shall not reduce pro tanto the amount of the insurance afforded under this policy except to the extent that the payments reduce the amount of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage.

(b) Payment in part by any person of the principal of the indebtedness, or any other obligation secured by the insured mortgage, or any voluntary partial satisfaction or release of the insured mortgage, to the extent of the payment, satisfaction or release, shall reduce the amount of insurance pro tanto. The amount of insurance may thereafter be increased by accruing interest and advances made to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured thereby, with interest thereon, provided in no event shall the amount of insurance be greater than the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A.

(c) Payment in full by any person or the voluntary satisfaction or release of the insured mortgage shall terminate all liability of the Company except as provided in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

10. LIABILITY NONCUMULATIVE.

If the insured acquires title to the estate or interest in satisfaction of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage, or any part thereof, it is expressly understood that the amount of insurance under this policy shall be reduced by any amount the Company may pay under any policy insuring a mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject, or which is hereafter executed by an insured and which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest described or referred to in Schedule A, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment under this policy.

11. PAYMENT OF LOSS.

(a) No payment shall be made without producing this policy for endorsement of the payment unless the policy has been lost or destroyed, in which case proof of loss or destruction shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Company.

(b) When liability and the extent of loss or damage has been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions and Stipulations, the loss or damage shall be payable within 30 days thereafter.

12. SUBROGATION UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT.

(a) The Company's Right of Subrogation.

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, all right of subrogation shall vest in the Company unaffected by any act of the insured claimant.

The Company shall be subrogated to and be entitled to all rights and remedies which the insured claimant would have had against any person or property in respect to the claim had this policy not been issued. If requested by the Company, the insured claimant shall transfer to the Company all rights and remedies against any person or property necessary in order to perfect this right of subrogation. The insured claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise or settle in the name of the insured claimant and to use the name of the insured claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights or remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the insured claimant, the Company shall be subrogated to all rights and remedies of the insured claimant after the insured claimant shall have recovered its principal, interest, and costs of collection.

(b) The Insured's Rights and Limitations.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage, provided the priority of the lien of the insured mortgage or its enforceability is not affected, may release or substitute the personal liability of any debtor or guarantor, or extend or otherwise modify the terms of payment, or release a portion of the estate or interest from the lien of the insured mortgage, or release any collateral security for the indebtedness.

When the permitted acts of the insured claimant occur and the insured has knowledge of any claim of title or interest adverse to the title to the estate or interest or the priority or enforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured, the Company shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the insured claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(c) The Company's Rights Against Non-insured Obligors.

The Company's right of subrogation against non-insured obligors shall exist and shall include, without limitation, the rights of the insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments which provide for subrogation rights by reason of this policy.

The Company's right of subrogation shall not be avoided by acquisition of the insured mortgage by an obligor (except an obligor described in Section 1(a)(ii) of these Conditions and Stipulations) who acquires the insured mortgage as a result of an indemnity, guarantee, other policy of insurance, or bond and the obligor will not be an insured under this policy, notwithstanding Section 1(a)(i) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

13. ARBITRATION.

Unless prohibited by applicable law, either the Company or the insured may demand arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service of the Company in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision or other obligation. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $1,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the insured. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $1,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules in effect on the date the demand for arbitration is made or, at the option of the insured, the Rules in effect at Date of Policy shall be binding upon the parties. The award may include attorneys' fees only if the laws of the state in which the land is located permit a court to award attorneys' fees to a prevailing party. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court having jurisdiction thereof.

The law of the situs of the land shall apply to an arbitration under the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules.

14. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT.

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached hereto by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage, whether or not based on negligence, and which arises out of the status of the lien of the insured mortgage or of the title to the estate or interest covered hereby or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) No amendment of or endorsement to this policy can be made except by a writing endorsed hereon or attached hereto signed by either the President, a Vice President, the Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, or validating officer or authorized signatory of the Company.

15. SEVERABILITY.

In the event any provision of this policy is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

16. NOTICES, WHERE SENT.

All notices required to be given the Company and any statement in writing required to be furnished the Company shall include the number of this policy and shall be addressed to the Company at (fill in).

2006 ALTA Loan Policy

CONDITIONS

1. DEFINITION OF TERMS

The following terms when used in this policy mean:

(a) “Amount of Insurance”: The amount stated in Schedule A, as may be increased or decreased by endorsement to this policy, increased by Section 8(b) or decreased by Section 10 of these Conditions.

(b) “Date of Policy”: The date designated as “Date of Policy” in Schedule A.

(c) “Entity”: A corporation, partnership, trust, limited liability company, or other similar legal entity.

(d) “Indebtedness”: The obligation secured by the Insured Mortgage including one evidenced by electronic means authorized by law, and if that obligation is the payment of a debt, the Indebtedness is the sum of

(i) the amount of the principal disbursed as of Date of Policy;

(ii) the amount of the principal disbursed subsequent to Date of Policy;

(iii) the construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the Land or related to the Land that the Insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at Date of Policy and at the date of the advance;

(iv) interest on the loan;

(v) the prepayment premiums, exit fees, and other similar fees or penalties allowed by law;

(vi) the expenses of foreclosure and any other costs of enforcement;

(vii) the amounts advanced to assure compliance with laws or to protect the lien or the priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage before the acquisition of the estate or interest in the Title;

(viii) the amounts to pay taxes and insurance; and

(ix) the reasonable amounts expended to prevent deterioration of improvements;

but the Indebtedness is reduced by the total of all payments and by any amount forgiven by an Insured.

(e) “Insured”: The Insured named in Schedule A.

(i) The term "Insured" also includes

(A) the owner of the Indebtedness and each successor in ownership of the Indebtedness, whether the owner or successor owns the Indebtedness for its own account or as a trustee or other fiduciary, except a successor who is an obligor under the provisions of Section 12(c) of these Conditions;

(B) the person or Entity who has “control” of the “transferable record,” if the Indebtedness is evidenced by a “transferable record,” as these terms are defined by applicable electronic transactions law;

(C) successors to an Insured by dissolution, merger, consolidation, distribution, or reorganization;

(D) successors to an Insured by its conversion to another kind of Entity;

(E) a grantee of an Insured under a deed delivered without payment of actual valuable consideration conveying the Title

(1) if the stock, shares, memberships, or other equity interests of the grantee are wholly-owned by the named Insured,

(2) if the grantee wholly owns the named Insured, or

(3) if the grantee is wholly-owned by an affiliated Entity of the named Insured, provided the affiliated Entity and the named Insured are both wholly-owned by the same person or Entity;

(F) any government agency or instrumentality that is an insurer or guarantor under an insurance contract or guaranty insuring or guaranteeing the Indebtedness secured by the Insured Mortgage, or any part of it, whether named as an Insured or not;

(ii) With regard to (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E) reserving, however, all rights and defenses as to any successor that the Company would have had against any predecessor Insured, unless the successor acquired the Indebtedness as a purchaser for value without Knowledge of the asserted defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy.

(f) "Insured Claimant": An Insured claiming loss or damage.

(g) "Insured Mortgage": The Mortgage described in paragraph 4 of Schedule A.

(h) "Knowledge" or "Known": Actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice that may be imputed to an Insured by reason of the Public Records or any other records that impart constructive notice of matters affecting the Title.

(i) "Land": The land described in Schedule A, and affixed improvements that by law constitute real property. The term "Land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate, or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways, or waterways, but this does not modify or limit the extent that a right of access to and from the Land is insured by this policy.

(j) "Mortgage": Mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument, including one evidenced by electronic means authorized by law.

(k) "Public Records": Records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without Knowledge. With respect to Covered Risk 5(d), "Public Records" shall also include environmental protection liens filed in the records of the clerk of the United States District Court for the district where the Land is located.

(l) "Title": The estate or interest described in Schedule A.

(m) "Unmarketable Title": Title affected by an alleged or apparent matter that would permit a prospective purchaser or lessee of the Title or lender on the Title or a prospective purchaser of the Insured Mortgage to be released from the obligation to purchase, lease, or lend if there is a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an Insured after acquisition of the Title by an Insured or after conveyance by an Insured, but only so long as the Insured retains an estate or interest in the Land, or holds an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given by a purchaser from the Insured, or only so long as the Insured shall have liability by reason of warranties in any transfer or conveyance of the Title. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the Insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the Land, or (ii) an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given to the Insured.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT

The Insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 5(a) of these Conditions, (ii) in case Knowledge shall come to an Insured of any claim of title or interest that is adverse to the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured, and that might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy, or (iii) if the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured, is rejected as Unmarketable Title. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured Claimant to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to the Insured Claimant under the policy shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice.

4. PROOF OF LOSS

In the event the Company is unable to determine the amount of loss or damage, the Company may, at its option, require as a condition of payment that the Insured Claimant furnish a signed proof of loss. The proof of loss must describe the defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against by this policy that constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage.

5. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS

(a) Upon written request by the Insured, and subject to the options contained in Section 7 of these Conditions, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an Insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured. This obligation is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the Insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the Insured as to those stated causes of action. It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs, or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, in addition to the options contained in Section 7 of these Conditions, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act that in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the Insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal any adverse judgment or order.

6. DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE

(a) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding and any appeals, the Insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, including the right to use, at its option, the name of the Insured for this purpose.

Whenever requested by the Company, the Insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title, the lien of the Insured Mortgage, or any other matter as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the Insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

(b) The Company may reasonably require the Insured Claimant to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and to produce for examination, inspection, and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by the authorized representative of the Company, all records, in whatever medium maintained, including books, ledgers, checks, memoranda, correspondence, reports, e-mails, disks, tapes, and videos whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the Insured Claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect, and copy all of these records in the custody or control of a third party that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the Insured Claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the Insured Claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce any reasonably requested information, or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this subsection, unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

7. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance or to Purchase the Indebtedness.

(i) To pay or tender payment of the Amount of Insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment or tender of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) To purchase the Indebtedness for the amount of the Indebtedness on the date of purchase, together with any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of purchase and that the Company is obligated to pay.

When the Company purchases the Indebtedness, the Insured shall transfer, assign, and convey to the Company the Indebtedness and the Insured Mortgage, together with any collateral security.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (a)(i) or (ii), all liability and obligations of the Company to the Insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in those subsections, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other Than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an Insured Claimant any claim insured against under this policy. In addition, the Company will pay any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the Insured Claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the Insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

8. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.

(a) The extent of liability of the Company for loss or damage under this policy shall not exceed the least of

(i) the Amount of Insurance,

(ii) the Indebtedness,

(iii) the difference between the value of the Title as insured and the value of the Title subject to the risk insured against by this policy, or

(iv) if a government agency or instrumentality is the Insured Claimant, the amount it paid in the acquisition of the Title or the Insured Mortgage in satisfaction of its insurance contract or guaranty.

(b) If the Company pursues its rights under Section 5 of these Conditions and is unsuccessful in establishing the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured,

(i) the Amount of Insurance shall be increased by 10%, and

(ii) the Insured Claimant shall have the right to have the loss or damage determined either as of the date the claim was made by the Insured Claimant or as of the date it is settled and paid.

(c) In the event the Insured has acquired the Title in the manner described in Section 2 of these Conditions or has conveyed the Title, then the extent of liability of the Company shall continue as set forth in Section 8(a) of these Conditions.

(d) In addition to the extent of liability under (a), (b), and (c), the Company will also pay those costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred in accordance with Sections 5 and 7 of these Conditions.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

(a) If the Company establishes the Title, or removes the alleged defect, lien, or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the Land, or cures the claim of Unmarketable Title, or establishes the lien of the Insured Mortgage, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused to the Insured.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals, adverse to the Title or to the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to the Insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the Insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY

(a) All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses, shall reduce the Amount of Insurance by the amount of the payment. However, any payments made prior to the acquisition of Title as provided in Section 2 of these Conditions shall not reduce the Amount of Insurance afforded under this policy except to the extent that the payments reduce the Indebtedness.

(b) The voluntary satisfaction or release of the Insured Mortgage shall terminate all liability of the Company except as provided in Section 2 of these Conditions.

11. PAYMENT OF LOSS

When liability and the extent of loss or damage have been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions, the payment shall be made within 30 days.

12. RIGHTS OF RECOVERY UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT

(a) The Company's Right to Recover

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, it shall be subrogated and entitled to the rights of the Insured Claimant in the Title or Insured Mortgage and all other rights and remedies in respect to the claim that the Insured Claimant has against any person or property, to the extent of the amount of any loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses paid by the Company. If requested by the Company, the Insured Claimant shall execute documents to evidence the transfer to the Company of these rights and remedies. The Insured Claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise, or settle in the name of the Insured Claimant and to use the name of the Insured Claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights and remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the Insured Claimant, the Company shall defer the exercise of its right to recover until after the Insured Claimant shall have recovered its loss.

(b) The Insured's Rights and Limitations

(i) The owner of the Indebtedness may release or substitute the personal liability of any debtor or guarantor, extend or otherwise modify the terms of payment, release a portion of the Title from the lien of the Insured Mortgage, or release any collateral security for the Indebtedness, if it does not affect the enforceability or priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage.

(ii) If the Insured exercises a right provided in (b)(i), but has Knowledge of any claim adverse to the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage insured against by this policy, the Company shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy that shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the Insured Claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(c) The Company's Rights Against Noninsured Obligors

The Company’s right of subrogation includes the Insured’s rights against non-insured obligors including the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance, or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights.

The Company's right of subrogation shall not be avoided by acquisition of the Insured Mortgage by an obligor (except an obligor described in Section 1(e)(i)(F) of these Conditions) who acquires the Insured Mortgage as a result of an indemnity, guarantee, other policy of insurance, or bond, and the obligor will not be an Insured under this policy.

Either the Company or the Insured may demand that the claim or controversy shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association (“Rules”). Except as provided in the Rules, there shall be no joinder or consolidation with claims or controversies of other persons. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $2,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the Insured. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $2,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules shall be binding upon the parties. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

14. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or lien of the Insured Mortgage or by any action asserting such claim shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) Any amendment of or endorsement to this policy must be in writing and authenticated by an authorized person, or expressly incorporated by Schedule A of this policy.

(d) Each endorsement to this policy issued at any time is made a part of this policy and is subject to all of its terms and provisions. Except as the endorsement expressly states, it does not (i) modify any of the terms and provisions of the policy, (ii) modify any prior endorsement, (iii) extend the Date of Policy, or (iv) increase the Amount of Insurance.

15. SEVERABILITY

In the event any provision of this policy, in whole or in part, is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision or such part held to be invalid, but all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

16. CHOICE OF LAW; FORUM

(a) Choice of Law: The Insured acknowledges the Company has underwritten the risks covered by this policy and determined the premium charged therefor in reliance upon the law affecting interests in real property and applicable to the interpretation, rights, remedies, or enforcement of policies of title insurance of the jurisdiction where the Land is located.

Therefore, the court or an arbitrator shall apply the law of the jurisdiction where the Land is located to determine the validity of claims against the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage that are adverse to the Insured and to interpret and enforce the terms of this policy. In neither case shall the court or arbitrator apply its conflicts of law principles to determine the applicable law.

(b) Choice of Forum: Any litigation or other proceeding brought by the Insured against the Company must be filed only in a state or federal court within the United States of America or its territories having appropriate jurisdiction.

17. NOTICES, WHERE SENT

4. PROOF OF LOSS

The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal any adverse judgment or order.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an Insured Claimant any claim insured against under this policy. (ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the Insured Claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

(ii) the Indebtedness, or

(iii) the difference between the value of the Title without the matter insured against and the value of the Title subject to the matter insured against by this policy.

(b) In the event the Insured has acquired the Title in the manner described in Section 2 of these Conditions then the extent of liability of the Company shall continue as set forth in Section 7(a) of these Conditions.

(b) The voluntary satisfaction or release of the Insured's Mortgage shall terminate all liability of the Company except as provided in Section 2 of these Conditions.

10. PAYMENT OF LOSS

When liability and the extent of loss or damage have been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions, the payment shall be made within 30 days.

11. RIGHTS OF RECOVERY UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT

(a) The Company's Right to Recover

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, it shall be subrogated and entitled to all rights and remedies of the Insured Claimant in respect to the claim that the Insured Claimant has against any person or property to the extent of the amount of any loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses paid by the Company. If requested by the Company, the Insured Claimant shall execute documents to evidence the transfer to the Company of these rights and remedies. The Insured Claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise, or settle in the name of the Insured Claimant and to use the name of the Insured Claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights and remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the Insured Claimant, the Company shall defer the exercise of its right to recover until after the Insured Claimant shall have recovered its loss.

(b) The Company's Rights Against Noninsured Obligors

The Company's right of subrogation includes the Insured's rights against non-insured obligors including the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance, or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights.

The Company's right of subrogation shall not be avoided by acquisition of the Insured Mortgage by an obligor who acquires the Insured Mortgage as a result of an indemnity, guarantee, other policy of insurance, or bond, and the obligor will not be an Insured under this policy.

12. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

CONDITIONS AND STIPULATIONS

1. DEFINITION OF TERMS.
The following terms when used in this policy mean:

(a) "insured": the insured named in Schedule A, and, subject to any rights or defenses the Company would have had against the named insured, those who succeed to the interest of the named insured by operation of law as distinguished from purchase including, but not limited to, heirs, distributees, devisees, survivors, personal representatives, next of kin, or corporate or fiduciary successors.

(b) "insured claimant": an insured claiming loss or damage.

(c) "knowledge" or "known": actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of the public records as defined in this policy or any other records which impart constructive notice of matters affecting the land.

(d) "land": the land described or referred to in Schedule [A][C], and improvements affixed thereto which by law constitute real property. The term "land" does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described or referred to in Schedule [A][C], nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but nothing herein shall modify or limit the extent to which a right of access to and from the land is insured by this policy.

(e) "mortgage": mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument.

(f) "public records": records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without knowledge. With respect to Section 1(a)(iv) of the Exclusions From Coverage, "public records" shall also include environmental protection liens filed in the records of the clerk of the United States district court for the district in which the land is located.

(g) "unmarketability of the title": an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land, not excluded or excepted from coverage, which would entitle a purchaser of the estate or interest described in Schedule A to be released from the obligation to purchase by virtue of a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE AFTER CONVEYANCE OF TITLE.

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an insured only so long as the insured retains an estate or interest in the land, or holds an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given by a purchaser from the insured, or only so long as the insured shall have liability by reason of covenants of warranty made by the insured in any transfer or conveyance of the estate or interest. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the land, or (ii) an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to the insured.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT.

The insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 4(a) below, (ii) in case knowledge shall come to an insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest which is adverse to the title to the estate or interest, as insured, and which might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy, or (iii) if title to the estate or interest, as insured, is rejected as unmarketable. If prompt notice shall not be given to the Company, then as to the insured all liability of the Company shall terminate with regard to the matter or matters for which prompt notice is required; provided, however, that failure to notify the Company shall in no case prejudice the rights of any insured under this policy unless the Company shall be prejudiced by the failure and then only to the extent of the prejudice.

4. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS; DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.

(a) Upon written request by the insured and subject to the options contained in Section 6 of these Conditions and Stipulations, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim adverse to the title or interest as insured, but only as to those stated causes of action alleging a defect, lien or encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the insured as to those stated causes of action and shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the insured in the defense of those causes of action which allege matters not insured by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act which in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable hereunder, and shall not thereby concede liability or waive any provision of this policy. If the Company shall exercise its rights under this paragraph, it shall do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company shall have brought an action or interposed a defense as required or permitted by the provisions of this policy, the Company may pursue any litigation to final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

(d) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding, the insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, and all appeals therein, and permit the Company to use, at its option, the name of the insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in any action or proceeding, securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act which in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the title to the estate or interest as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

(e) Notwithstanding Conditions and Stipulations Section 4(a-d), the Attorney General of the United States shall have the sole right to authorize or to undertake the defense of any matter which would constitute a claim under the policy, and the Company may not represent the insured without authorization. If the Attorney General elects to defend at the Government's expense, the Company shall, upon request, cooperate and render all reasonable assistance in the prosecution or defense of the proceeding and in prosecuting any related appeals. If the Attorney General shall fail to authorize and permit the Company to defend, all liability of the Company with respect to that claim shall terminate; provided, however, that if the Attorney General shall give the Company timely notice of all proceedings and an opportunity to suggest defenses and actions as it shall recommend should be taken, and the Attorney General shall present the defenses and take the actions of which the Company shall advise the Attorney General in writing, the liability of the Company shall continue and, in any event, the Company shall cooperate and render all reasonable assistance in the prosecution or defense of the claim and any related appeals.

5. PROOF OF LOSS OR DAMAGE.

In addition to and after the notices required under Section 3 of these Conditions and Stipulations have been provided the Company, a proof of loss or damage signed and sworn to by the insured claimant shall be furnished to the Company within 90 days after the insured claimant shall ascertain the facts giving rise to the loss or damage. The proof of loss or damage shall describe the defect in, or lien or encumbrance on the title, or other matter insured against by this policy which constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the insured claimant to provide the required proof of loss or damage, the Company's obligations to the insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such proof of loss or damage.

In addition, the insured claimant may reasonably be required to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and shall produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by any authorized representative of the Company, all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda, whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the insured claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda in the custody or control of a third party, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the insured claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, failure of the insured claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce other reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this paragraph shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

6. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance.

To pay or tender payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant, which were authorized by the Company, up to the time of payment or tender of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of this option, all liability and obligations to the insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, and the policy shall be surrendered to the Company for cancellation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) Subject to the prior written approval of the Attorney General, to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an insured claimant any claim insured against under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the insured claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in paragraphs 6(b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation. Failure of the Attorney General to give the approval called for in 6(b)(i) shall not prejudice the rights of the insured unless the Company is prejudiced thereby, and then only to the extent of the prejudice.

7. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the insured claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy and only to the extent herein described.

(a) The liability of the Company under this policy shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A; or

(ii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company will pay only those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Section 4 of these Conditions and Stipulations.

8. APPORTIONMENT.

If the land described in Schedule [A][C] consists of two or more parcels which are not used as a single site, and a loss is established affecting one or more of the parcels but not all, the loss shall be computed and settled on a pro rata basis as if the amount of insurance under this policy was divided pro rata as to the value on Date of Policy of each separate parcel to the whole, exclusive of any improvements made subsequent to Date of Policy, unless a liability or value has otherwise been agreed upon as to each parcel by the Company and the insured at the time of the issuance of this policy and shown by an express statement or by an endorsement attached to this policy.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) If the Company establishes the title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the land, or cures the claim of unmarketability of title, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals therefrom, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused thereby.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals therefrom, adverse to the title as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to any insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the amount of the insurance pro tanto.

11. LIABILITY NONCUMULATIVE.

It is expressly understood that the amount of insurance under this policy shall be reduced by any amount the Company may pay under any policy insuring a mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject, or which is hereafter executed by an insured and which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest described or referred to in Schedule A, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment under this policy to the insured owner.

12. PAYMENT OF LOSS.

(a) No payment shall be made without producing this policy or an accurate facsimile for endorsement of the payment unless the policy has been lost or destroyed, in which case proof of loss or destruction shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Company.

(b) When liability and the extent of loss or damage has been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions and Stipulations, the loss or damage shall be payable within 30 days thereafter.

13. SUBROGATION UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT.

(a) The Company's Right of Subrogation.

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, all right of subrogation shall vest in the Company unaffected by any act of the insured claimant.

The Company shall be subrogated to and be entitled to all rights and remedies which the insured claimant would have had against any person or property in respect to the claim had this policy not been issued. If requested by the Company, the insured claimant shall transfer to the Company all rights and remedies against any person or property necessary in order to perfect this right of subrogation. The insured claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise or settle in the name of the insured claimant and to use the name of the insured claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights or remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the insured claimant, the Company shall be subrogated to these rights and remedies in the proportion which the Company's payment bears to the whole amount of the loss.

If loss should result from any act of the insured claimant, as stated above, that act shall not void this policy, but the Company, in that event, shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the insured claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(b) The Company's Rights Against Non-insured Obligors.

The Company's right of subrogation against non-insured obligors shall exist and shall include, without limitation, the rights of the insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments which provide for subrogation rights by reason of this policy.

(c) No Subrogation to the Rights of the United States.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Conditions and Stipulations Section 13(a) and (b), whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, the Company shall not be subrogated to the rights of the United States. The Attorney General may elect to pursue any additional remedies which may exist, and the Company may be consulted. If the Company agrees in writing to reimburse the United States for all costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, to the extent that funds are recovered they shall be applied first to reimbursing the Company for the amount paid to satisfy the claim, and then to the United States.

14. ARBITRATION ONLY BY AGREEMENT.

Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service of the Company in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision or other obligation. All arbitrable matters shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured.

The law of the United States, or if there be no applicable federal law, the law of the situs of the land shall apply to an arbitration under the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules.

A copy of the Rules may be obtained from the Company upon request.

15. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT.

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached hereto by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage, whether or not based on negligence, and which arises out of the status of the title to the estate or interest covered hereby or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) No amendment of or endorsement to this policy can be made except by a writing endorsed hereon or attached hereto signed by either the President, a Vice President, the Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, or validating officer or authorized signatory of the Company.

In the event any provision of the policy is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

17. NOTICES, WHERE SENT.

All notices required to be given the Company and any statement in writing required to be furnished the Company shall include the number of this policy and shall be addressed to the Company at (fill in).

(a) After Acquisition of Title by Insured Lender. If this policy insures the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured. mortgage, the coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of (i) such insured lender who acquires all or any part of the estate or interest in the land by foreclosure, trustee's sale, conveyance in lieu of foreclosure, or other legal manner which discharges the lien of the insured mortgage; (ii) a transferee of the estate or interest so acquired from an insured corporation, provided the transferee is the parent or wholly-owned subsidiary of the insured corporation, their corporate successors by operation of law and not by purchase, subject to any rights or defenses the Company may have against any predecessor insureds; and (iii) any governmental agency or governmental instrumentality which acquires all or any part of the estate or interest pursuant to a contract of insurance or guaranty insuring or guaranteeing the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage.

This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from an insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the land, or (ii) an indebtedness secured by a purchase money mortgage given to an insured.

If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of an insured claimant to provide the required proof of loss or damage, the Company's obligations to such insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such proof of loss or damage.

In addition, an insured claimant may reasonably be required to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and shall produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by any authorized representative of the Company, all records, books, ledgers, checks, correspondence and memoranda, whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, which reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. (a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance or to Purchase the Indebtedness.

(i) to pay or tender payment of the amount of insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant, which were authorized by the Company, up to the time of payment or tender of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) in case loss or damage is claimed under this policy by the owner of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage, to purchase the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage for the amount owing thereon together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of purchase and which the Company is obligated to pay.

If the Company offers to purchase the indebtedness as herein provided, the owner of the indebtedness shall transfer, assign, and convey the indebtedness and the insured mortgage, together with any collateral security, to the Company upon payment therefor.

Upon the exercise by the Company of the option provided for in paragraph a(i), all liability and obligations to the insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in that paragraph, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, and the policy shall be surrendered to the Company for cancellation.

Upon the exercise by the Company of the option provided for in paragraph a(ii) the Company's obligation to an insured Lender under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payment required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an insured claimant any claim insured against under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the insured claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the insured claimant which were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and which the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in paragraphs b(i) or b(ii), the Company's obligations to the insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

7. Determination and Extent of Liability.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the insured claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy and only to the extent herein described.

(a) The liability of the Company under this policy to an insured lender shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A, or, if applicable, the amount of insurance as defined in Section 2 (c) of these Conditions and Stipulations;

(ii) the amount of the unpaid principal indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage as limited or provided under Section 8 of these Conditions and Stipulations or as reduced under Section 9 of these Conditions and Stipulations, at the time the loss or damage insured against by this policy occurs, together with interest thereon; or

(iii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy.

(b) In the event the insured lender has acquired the estate or interest in the manner described in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations or has conveyed the title, then the liability of the Company shall continue as set forth in Section 7(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

(c) The liability of the Company under this policy to an insured described in Schedule A shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A; or,

(ii) the difference between the value of the insured estate or interest as insured and the value of the insured estate or interest subject to the defect, lien or encumbrance insured against by this policy.

(d) The Company will pay only those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Section 4 of these Conditions and Stipulations.

8. Limitation of Liability.

(a) If the Company establishes the title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the land, or cures the claim of unmarketability of title, or otherwise establishes the lien of the insured mortgage, all as insured, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals therefrom, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused thereby.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals therefrom, adverse to the title, or, if applicable to the lien of the insured mortgage, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to any insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

(d) The Company shall not be liable to an insured lender for: (i) any indebtedness created subsequent to Date of Policy except for advances made to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured thereby and reasonable amounts expended to prevent deterioration of improvements; or (ii) construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy, except construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the land which at Date of Policy were secured by the insured mortgage and which the insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at and after Date of Policy.

9. Reduction of Insurance; Reduction or Termination of Liability.

(a) All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the amount of insurance pro tanto. However, as to an insured lender, any payments made prior to the acquisition of title to the estate or interest as provided in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations shall not reduce pro tanto the amount of insurance afforded under this policy as to any such insured, except to the extent that the payments reduce the amount of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage.

(b) Payment in part by any person of the principal of the indebtedness, or any other obligation secured by the insured mortgage, or any voluntary partial satisfaction or release of the insured mortgage, to the extent of the payment, satisfaction or release, shall reduce the amount of insurance pro tanto. The amount of insurance may thereafter be increased by accruing interest and advances made to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured thereby, with interest thereon, provided in no event shall the amount of insurance be greater than the Amount of Insurance stated in Schedule A.

(c) Payment in full by any person or the voluntary satisfaction or release of the insured mortgage shall terminate all liability of the Company to an insured lender except as provided in Section 2(a) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

10. Liability Noncumulative.

It is expressly understood that the amount of insurance under this policy shall be reduced by any amount the Company may pay under any policy insuring a mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject, or which is hereafter executed by an insured and which is a charge or lien on the estate or interest described or referred to in Schedule A, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment under this policy to the insured owner.

The provisions of this Section shall not apply to an insured lender, unless such insured acquires title to said estate or interest in satisfaction of the indebtedness secured by an insured mortgage.

11. Payment of Loss.

(a) No payment shall be made without producing this policy for endorsement of the payment unless the policy has been lost or destroyed, in which case proof of loss or destruction shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Company.

(b) When liability and the extent of loss or damage has been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions and Stipulations, the loss or damage shall be payable within 30 days thereafter.

12. Subrogation Upon Payment or Settlement

(a) The Company's Right of Subrogation

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, all right of subrogation shall vest in the Company unaffected by any act of the insured claimant.

The Company shall be subrogated to and be entitled to all rights and remedies which the insured claimant would have had against any person or property in respect to the claim had this policy not been issued. If requested by the Company, the insured claimant shall transfer to the Company all rights and remedies against any person or property necessary in order to perfect this right of subrogation. The insured claimant shall permit the Company to compromise or settle in the name of the insured claimant and to use the name of the insured claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights or remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the insured claimant, the Company shall be subrogated (i) as to an insured owner, to all rights and remedies in the proportion which the Company's payment bears to the whole amount of the loss ; and (ii) as to an insured lender, to all rights and remedies of the insured claimant after the insured claimant shall have recovered its principal, interest and costs of collection.

If loss should result from any act of the insured claimant, as stated above, that act shall not void this policy, but the Company, in that event, shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the insured claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(b) The Insured's Rights and Limitations.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the owner of the indebtedness secured by an insured mortgage, provided the priority of the lien of the insured mortgage or its enforceability is not affected , may release or substitute the personal liability of any debtor or guarantor, or extend or otherwise modify the terms of payment, or release a portion of the estate or interest from the lien of the insured mortgage, or release any collateral security for the indebtedness.

When the permitted acts of the insured claimant occur and the insured has knowledge of any claim of title or interest adverse to the title to the estate or interest or the priority or enforceability of the lien of an insured mortgage, as insured, the Company shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy which shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the insured claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(c) The Company's Rights Against Non-insured Obligors.

The Company's right of subrogation against non-insured obligors shall exist and shall include, without limitation, the rights of the insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments which provide for subrogation rights by reason of this policy.

The Company's right of subrogation shall not be avoided by acquisition of an insured mortgage by an obligor (except an obligor described in Section 1(a)(ii) of these Conditions and Stipulations) who acquires the insured mortgage as a result of an indemnity, guarantee, other policy of insurance, or bond and the obligor will not be an insured under this policy, notwithstanding Section 1(a)(i) of these Conditions and Stipulations.

13. Arbitration.

Unless prohibited by applicable law, either the Company or the insured may demand arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service of the Company in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision or other obligation. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $1,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the insured. All arbitrable: matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $1,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules in effect on the date the demand for arbitration is made or, at the option of the insured, the Rules in effect at Date of Policy shall be binding upon the parties. The award may include attorneys' fees only if the laws of the state in which the land is located permit a court to award attorneys' fees to a prevailing party. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court having jurisdiction thereof.

The law of the situs of the land shall apply to an arbitration under the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules.

14. Liability Limited to This Policy; Policy Entire Contract.

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached hereto by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage, whether or not based on negligence, and which arises out of the status of the lien of the insured mortgage or of the title to the estate or interest covered hereby or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) No amendment of or endorsement to this policy can be made except by a writing endorsed hereon or attached hereto signed by either the President, a Vice President, the Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, or validating officer or authorized signatory of the Company.

15. Severability.

In the event any provision of the policy is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

16. Notices, Where Sent.

All notices required to be given the Company and any statement in writing required to be furnished the Company shall include the number of this policy and shall be addressed to the Company at [fill in].

Texas T-7 Commitment for Title Insurance

Title insurance insures you against loss resulting from certain risks to your title. The commitment for Title Insurance is the title insurance company's promise to issue the title insurance policy. The commitment is a legal document. You should review it carefully to completely understand it before your closing date.	El seguro de título le asegura en relación a perdidas resultantes de ciertos riesgos que pueden afectar el título de su propriedad. El Compromiso para Seguro de Título es la promesa de la compañía aseguradora de títulos de emitir la póliza de seguro de título. El Compromiso es un documento legal. Usted debe leerlo cuidadosamente y endenterlo complemente antes de la fecha para finalizar su transacción.

Your Commitment of Title insurance is a legal contract between you and us. The Commitment is not an opinion or report of your title. It is a contract to issue you a policy subject to the Commitment's terms and requirements.

Before issuing a Commitment for Title insurance (the Commitment) or a Title Insurance Policy (the Policy), the title insurance Company (the Company) determines whether the title is insurable. This determination has already been made. Part of that determination involves the Company's decision to insure the title except for certain risks that will not be covered by the Policy. Some of these risks are listed in Schedule B of the attached Commitment as Exceptions. Other risks are stated in the Policy as Exclusions. These risks will not be covered by the Policy. The Policy is not an abstract of title nor does a Company have an obligation to determine the ownership of any mineral interest.

--MINERALS AND MINERAL RIGHTS may not be covered by the Policy. The Company may be unwilling to insure title unless there is an exclusion or an exception as to Minerals and Mineral Rights in the Policy. Optional endorsements insuring certain risks involving minerals, and the use of improvements (excluding lawns, shrubbery and trees) and permanent buildings may be available for purchase. If the title insurer issues the title policy with an exclusion or exception to the minerals and mineral rights, neither this Policy, nor the optional endorsements, ensure that the purchaser has title to the mineral rights related to the surface estate.

Another part of the determination involves whether the promise to insure is conditioned upon certain requirements being met. Schedule C of the Commitment lists these requirements that must be satisfied or the Company will refuse to cover them. You may want to discuss any matters shown in Schedules B and C of the Commitment with an attorney. These matters will affect your title and your use of the land.

When your policy is issued, the covererage will be limited by the Policy's Exceptions, Exclusions and Conditions, defined below.

--EXCEPTIONS are title risks that a Policy generally covers but does not cover in a particular instance. Exceptions are shown on Schedule B or discussed in Schedule C of the Commitment. They can also be added if you do not comply with the Conditions section of the Commitment. When the policy is issued, all Exceptions will be on Schedule B of the Policy.

--EXCLUSIONS are title risks that a Policy generally does not cover. Exclusions are contained in the Policy but not shown or discussed in the Commitment.

--CONDITIONS are additional provisions that qualify or limit you coverage. Conditions include your responsibilities and those of the Company. They are contained in the Policy but not shown or discussed in the Commitment. The Policy Conditions are not the same as the Commitment Conditions.

You can get a copy of the policy form approved by the Texas Department of Insurance by calling the Title Insurance Company at 1-800-_______ or by calling the title insurance agent that issued the Commitment. The Texas Department of Insurance may revise the policy form from time to time.

You can also get a brochure that explains the policy from the Texas Department of Insurance by calling 1-800-252-3439.

Texas T-7 Commitment

Before the Policy is issued, you may request changes in the Policy. Some of the changes to consider are:

--Request amendment of the "area and boundary" exception (Schedule B, paragraph 2). To get this amendment, you must furnish a survey and comply with other requirements of the Company. On the Owner Policy, you must pay an additional premium for the amendment. If the survey is acceptable to the Company and if the Company's other requirements are met, your Policy will insure you against loss because of discrepancies or conflicts in boundary lines, encroachments or protrusions, or overlapping of improvements. The Company may then decide not to insure against specific boundary or survey problems by making special exceptions in the Policy. Whether or not you request amendment of the "area and boundary" exception, you should determine whether you want to purchase and review a survey if a survey is not being provided to you.

--Allow the Company to add an exception to "rights of parties in possession." If you refuse this exception, the Company or the title insurance agent may inspect the property. The Company may except to and not insure you against the rights of specific persons, such as renters, adverse owners or easement holders who occupy the land. The Company may charge you for the inspection. If you want to make your own inspection, you must sign a Waiver of Inspection form and allow the Company to add this exception to your Policy.

The entire premium for a Policy must be paid when the Policy is issued. You will not owe any additional premiums unless you want to increase your coverage at a later date and the Company agrees to add an Increased Value Endorsement.

DELETION OF ARBITRATION PROVISIONS

(Not applicable to the Texas Residential Owner Policy)

Arbitration is a common form of alternative dispute resolution. It can be a quicker and cheaper means to settle a dispute with your Title Insurance Company. However, if you agree to arbitrate, you give up your right to take the Title Company to court and your rights to discovery of evidence may be limited in the arbitration process. In addition, you cannot usually appeal an arbitrator's award.

Your policy contains an arbitration provision (shown below). It allows you or the Company to require arbitration if the amount of insurance is $2,000,000 or less. If you want to retain your right to sue the Company in case of a dispute over a claim, you must request deletion of the arbitration provision before the policy is issued. You can do this by signing this form and returning it to the Company at or before the closing of your real estate transaction or by writing to the Company.

The arbitration provision in the Policy is as follows:

> “Either the Company or the Insured may demand that the claim or controversy shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association (“Rules”). Except as provided in the Rules, there shall be no joinder or consolidation with claims or controversies of other persons. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $2,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the Insured, unless the Insured is an individual person (as distinguished from an Entity). All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $2,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules shall be binding upon the parties. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction.”

I request deletion of the Arbitration provision.

(C) successors to an Insured by its conversion to another kind of Entity;

(D) a grantee of an Insured under a deed delivered without payment of actual valuable consideration conveying the Title;

(i) "Public Records": records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without Knowledge. (j) “Title”: the estate or interest described in Schedule A.

(k) "Unmarketable Title”: Title affected by an alleged or apparent matter that would permit a prospective purchaser or lessee of the Title or lender on the Title to be released from the obligation to purchase, lease or lend if there is a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE.

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an Insured, but only so long as the Insured retains an estate or interest in the Land, or holds an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given by a purchaser from the Insured, or only so long as the Insured shall have liability by reason of warranties in any transfer or conveyance of the Title. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the Insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the Land, or (ii) an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given to the Insured.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT.

The Insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 5(a) below, or (ii) in case Knowledge shall come to an Insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest that is adverse to the Title, as insured, and that might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured Claimant to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to the Insured Claimant under the policy shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice.

When, after the Date of the Policy, the Insured notifies the Company as required herein of a lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other defect in Title insured by this policy that is not excluded or excepted from the coverage of this policy, the Company shall promptly investigate the charge to determine whether the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect or other matter is valid and not barred by law or statute. The Company shall notify the Insured in writing, within a reasonable time, of its determination as to the validity or invalidity of the Insured's claim or charge under the policy. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is not covered by this policy, or was otherwise addressed in the closing of the transaction in connection with which this policy was issued, the Company shall specifically advise the Insured of the reasons for its determination. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is valid, the Company shall take one of the following actions: (i) institute the necessary proceedings to clear the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect from the Title as insured; (ii) indemnify the Insured as provided in this policy; (iii) upon payment of appropriate premium and charges therefor, issue to the Insured Claimant or to a subsequent owner, mortgagee or holder of the estate or interest in the Land insured by this policy, a policy of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect, said policy to be in an amount equal to the current value of the Land or, if a mortgagee policy, the amount of the loan; (iv) indemnify another title insurance company in connection with its issuance of a policy(ies) of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect; (v) secure a release or other document discharging the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect; or (vi) undertake a combination of (i) through (v) herein.

4. PROOF OF LOSS.
In the event the Company is unable to determine the amount of loss or damage, the Company may, at its option, require as a condition of payment that the Insured Claimant furnish a signed proof of loss. The proof of loss must describe the defect, lien, encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy that constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage.

5. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS.
(a) Upon written request by the Insured, and subject to the options contained in Sections 3 and 7 of these Conditions, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an Insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured. This obligation is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the Insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the Insured as to those stated causes of action. It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.
(b) The Company shall have the right, in addition to the options contained in Sections 3 and 7, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act that in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the Insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.
(c) Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order. When the Company has reasonable grounds to dispute coverage under this policy, the Company may reserve its rights to pay the claim and the costs of defense and seek reimbursement from the Insured for all amounts paid for which there was no coverage.

6. DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.
(a) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding and any appeals, the Insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, including the right to use, at its option, the name of the Insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the Insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title or any other matter as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the Insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.
(b) The Company may reasonably require the Insured Claimant to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and to produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by the authorized representative of the Company, all records, in whatever medium maintained, including books, ledgers, checks, memoranda, correspondence, reports, e-mails, disks, tapes, and videos whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the Insured Claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all of these records in the custody or control of a third party that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the Insured Claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the Insured Claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce any reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this subsection, unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

(c) If the Insured demands that the Company accept a settlement offer that is not greater than the Amount of Insurance or if the Insured expressly agrees that a settlement offer should be accepted, the Company has a right to be reimbursed if it has timely asserted its reservation of rights and notified the Insured that it intends to seek reimbursement if it pays to settle or defend a claim that is not covered by the policy.

7. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance.

To pay or tender payment of the Amount of Insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment or tender of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of this option, all liability and obligations of the Company to the Insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in this subsection, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an Insured Claimant any claim insured against under this policy. In addition, the Company will pay any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the Insured Claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay. Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the Insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

8. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.

(a) The extent of liability of the Company for loss or damage under this policy shall not exceed the lesser of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance; or

(ii) the difference between the value of the Title as insured and the value of the Title subject to the risk insured against by this policy.

(b) If the Company pursues its rights under Section 3 or 5 and is unsuccessful in establishing the Title, as insured,

(i) the Amount of Insurance shall be increased by 10%, and

(ii) the Insured Claimant shall have the right to have the loss or damage determined either as of the date the claim was made by the Insured Claimant or as of the date it is settled and paid.

(c) In addition to the extent of liability under (a) and (b), the Company will also pay those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Sections 5 and 7 of these Conditions.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) If the Company establishes the Title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the Land, all as insured, or takes action in accordance with Section 3 or 7, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused to the Insured.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals, adverse to the Title, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to the Insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the Insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the Amount of Insurance by the amount of the payment.

11. LIABILITY NONCUMULATIVE.
The Amount of Insurance shall be reduced by any amount the Company pays under any policy insuring a Mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the Insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject or which is executed by an Insured after Date of Policy and which is a charge or lien on the Title, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment to the Insured under this policy.

12. PAYMENT OF LOSS.
When liability and the extent of loss or damage have been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions, the payment shall be made within 30 days.

13. RIGHTS OF RECOVERY UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT.
(a) Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, it shall be subrogated and entitled to the rights of the Insured Claimant in the Title and all other rights and remedies in respect to the claim that the Insured Claimant has against any person or property, to the extent of the amount of any loss, costs, attorneys' fees and expenses paid by the Company. If requested by the Company, the Insured Claimant shall execute documents to evidence the transfer to the Company of these rights and remedies. The Insured Claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise or settle in the name of the Insured Claimant and to use the name of the Insured Claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights and remedies.
If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the Insured Claimant, the Company shall defer the exercise of its right to recover until after the Insured Claimant shall have recovered its loss.
(b) The Company's right of subrogation includes the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights.

14. ARBITRATION.
Either the Company or the Insured may demand that the claim or controversy shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association ("Rules"). Except as provided in the Rules, there shall be no joinder or consolidation with claims or controversies of other persons. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $2,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the Insured, unless the Insured is an individual person (as distinguished from an Entity). All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $2,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules shall be binding upon the parties. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

15. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT.
(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.
(b) Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.
(c) Any amendment of or endorsement to this policy must be in writing and authenticated by an authorized person, or expressly incorporated by Schedule A of this policy.
(d) Each endorsement to this policy issued at any time is made a part of this policy and is subject to all of its terms and provisions. Except as the endorsement expressly states, it does not (i) modify any of the terms and provisions of the policy, (ii) modify any prior endorsement, (iii) extend the Date of Policy or (iv) increase the Amount of Insurance. Each Commitment, endorsement or other form, or provision in the Schedules to this policy that refers to a term defined in Section 1 of the Conditions shall be deemed to refer to the term regardless of whether the term is capitalized in the Commitment, endorsement or other form, or Schedule. Each Commitment, endorsement or other form, or provision in the Schedules that refers to the Conditions and Stipulations shall be deemed to refer to the Conditions of this policy.

In the event any provision of this policy, in whole or in part, is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision or such part held to be invalid and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

17. CHOICE OF LAW; FORUM.

(a) Choice of Law: The Insured acknowledges the Company has underwritten the risks covered by this policy and determined the premium charged therefor in reliance upon the law affecting interests in real property and applicable to the interpretation, rights, remedies or enforcement of policies of title insurance of the jurisdiction where the Land is located.

Therefore, the court or an arbitrator shall apply the law of the jurisdiction where the Land is located to determine the validity of claims against the Title that are adverse to the Insured, and in interpreting and enforcing the terms of this policy. (i) "Public Records": records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without Knowledge. (j) “Title”: the estate or interest described in Schedule A.

(k) "Unmarketable Title”: Title affected by an alleged or apparent matter that would permit a prospective purchaser or lessee of the Title or lender on the Title to be released from the obligation to purchase, lease or lend if there is a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE.

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an Insured, but only so long as the Insured retains an estate or interest in the Land, or holds an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given by a purchaser from the Insured, or only so long as the Insured shall have liability by reason of warranties in any transfer or conveyance of the Title. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the Insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the Land, or (ii) an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given to the Insured.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT.

The Insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 5(a) below, or (ii) in case Knowledge shall come to an Insured hereunder of any claim of title or interest that is adverse to the Title, as insured, and that might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured Claimant to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to the Insured Claimant under the policy shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice.

When, after the Date of the Policy, the Insured notifies the Company as required herein of a lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other defect in Title insured by this policy that is not excluded or excepted from the coverage of this policy, the Company shall promptly investigate the charge to determine whether the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect or other matter is valid and not barred by law or statute. The Company shall notify the Insured in writing, within a reasonable time, of its determination as to the validity or invalidity of the Insured's claim or charge under the policy. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is not covered by this policy, or was otherwise addressed in the closing of the transaction in connection with which this policy was issued, the Company shall specifically advise the Insured of the reasons for its determination. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is valid, the Company shall take one of the following actions: (i) institute the necessary proceedings to clear the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect from the Title as insured; (ii) indemnify the Insured as provided in this policy; (iii) upon payment of appropriate premium and charges therefore, issue to the Insured

Claimant or to a subsequent owner, mortgagee or holder of the estate or interest in the Land insured by this policy, a policy of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect, said policy to be in an amount equal to the current value of the Land or, if a loan policy, the amount of the loan; (iv) indemnify another title insurance company in connection with its issuance of a policy(ies) of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect; (v) secure a release or other document discharging the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect; or (vi) undertake a combination of (i) through (v) herein.

4. PROOF OF LOSS.

In the event the Company is unable to determine the amount of loss or damage, the Company may, at its option, require as a condition of payment that the Insured Claimant furnish a signed proof of loss. The proof of loss must describe the defect, lien, encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy that constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage.

5. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS.

(a) Upon written request by the Insured, and subject to the options contained in Sections 3 and 7 of these Conditions, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an Insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured. This obligation is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the Insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the Insured as to those stated causes of action. It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, in addition to the options contained in Sections 3 and 7, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act that in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the Insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

6. DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.

(a) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding and any appeals, the Insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, including the right to use, at its option, the name of the Insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the Insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title or any other matter as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the Insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

(b) The Company may reasonably require the Insured Claimant to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and to produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by the authorized representative of the Company, all records, in whatever medium maintained, including books, ledgers, checks, memoranda, correspondence, reports, e-mails, disks, tapes, and videos whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the Insured Claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all of these records in the custody or control of a third party that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the Insured Claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the Insured Claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce any reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this subsection, unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

7. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance.

To pay or tender payment of the Amount of Insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment or tender of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of this option, all liability and obligations of the Company to the Insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in this subsection, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an Insured Claimant any claim insured against under this policy. In addition, the Company will pay any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the Insured Claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay. Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the Insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

8. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.

(a) The extent of liability of the Company for loss or damage under this policy shall not exceed the lesser of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance; or

(ii) the difference between the value of the Title as insured and the value of the Title subject to the risk insured against by this policy.

(b) If the Company pursues its rights under Section 3 or 5 and is unsuccessful in establishing the Title, as insured,

(i) the Amount of Insurance shall be increased by 10%, and

(ii) the Insured Claimant shall have the right to have the loss or damage determined either as of the date the claim was made by the Insured Claimant or as of the date it is settled and paid.

(c) In addition to the extent of liability under (a) and (b), the Company will also pay those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Sections 5 and 7 of these Conditions.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) If the Company establishes the Title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the Land, all as insured, or takes action in accordance with Section 3 or 7, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused to the Insured.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals, adverse to the Title, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to the Insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the Insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.
All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the Amount of Insurance by the amount of the payment.

11. LIABILITY NONCUMULATIVE.
The Amount of Insurance shall be reduced by any amount the Company pays under any policy insuring a Mortgage to which exception is taken in Schedule B or to which the Insured has agreed, assumed, or taken subject or which is executed by an Insured after Date of Policy and which is a charge or lien on the Title, and the amount so paid shall be deemed a payment to the Insured under this policy.

12. PAYMENT OF LOSS.
When liability and the extent of loss or damage have been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions, the payment shall be made within 30 days.

13. RIGHTS OF RECOVERY UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT.

(a) Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, it shall be subrogated and entitled to the rights of the Insured Claimant in the Title and all other rights and remedies in respect to the claim that the Insured Claimant has against any person or property, to the extent of the amount of any loss, costs, attorneys' fees and expenses paid by the Company. If requested by the Company, the Insured Claimant shall execute documents to evidence the transfer to the Company of these rights and remedies. The Insured Claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise or settle in the name of the Insured Claimant and to use the name of the Insured Claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights and remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the Insured Claimant, the Company shall defer the exercise of its right to recover until after the Insured Claimant shall have recovered its loss.

(b) The Company's right of subrogation includes the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights.

14. ARBITRATION.

Either the Company or the Insured may demand that the claim or controversy shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association ("Rules"). Except as provided in the Rules, there shall be no joinder or consolidation with claims or controversies of other persons. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $2,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the Insured, unless the Insured is an individual person (as distinguished from an Entity). All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $2,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules shall be binding upon the parties. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

15. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT.

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) Any amendment of or endorsement to this policy must be in writing and authenticated by an authorized person, or expressly incorporated by Schedule A of this policy.

(d) Each endorsement to this policy issued at any time is made a part of this policy and is subject to all of its terms and provisions. Except as the endorsement expressly states, it does not (i) modify any of the terms and provisions of the policy, (ii) modify any prior endorsement, (iii) extend the Date of Policy or (iv) increase the Amount of Insurance. Each Commitment, endorsement or other form, or provision in the Schedules to this policy that refers to a term defined in Section 1 of the Conditions shall be deemed to refer to the term regardless of whether the term is capitalized in the Commitment, endorsement or other form, or Schedule.

Each Commitment, endorsement or other form, or provision in the Schedules that refers to the Conditions and Stipulations shall be deemed to refer to the Conditions of this policy.

16. SEVERABILITY.

In the event any provision of this policy, in whole or in part, is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision or such part held to be invalid and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

17. CHOICE OF LAW; FORUM.

(a) Choice of Law: The Insured acknowledges the Company has underwritten the risks covered by this policy and determined the premium charged therefor in reliance upon the law affecting interests in real property and applicable to the interpretation, rights, remedies or enforcement of policies of title insurance of the jurisdiction where the Land is located.

Therefore, the court or an arbitrator shall apply the law of the jurisdiction where the Land is located to determine the validity of claims against the Title that are adverse to the Insured, and in interpreting and enforcing the terms of this policy. In neither case shall the court or arbitrator apply its conflicts of laws principles to determine the applicable law.

(b) Choice of Forum: Any litigation or other proceeding brought by the Insured against the Company must be filed only in a state or federal court within the United States of America or its territories having appropriate jurisdiction.

(6) Cancel this policy by paying the Policy Amount, then in force, and only those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred up to that time that we are obligated to pay.

We can choose which of these to do.

b. If you report to us that a covered title risk exists, we will promptly investigate to determine if that covered title risk is valid and not barred by law or statute. A covered title risk is a title risk that this Policy does not exclude or except.
If we conclude that your claim, or any part of your claim, is covered by the policy, we will take one or more of the following actions to the extent that it is covered:
(1) Institute all necessary legal proceedings to clear the title to the property.
(2) Indemnify you pursuant to the terms of the policy;
(3) Issue a new title policy without making exception to the covered title risk. If another insurer issues the new title policy to your purchaser, lender or other transferee without making exception to the covered title risk, we will indemnify the other insurer.
(4) Secure a release of the covered title risk.

c. If we deny your claim, or any part of your claim, not more than 15 days after we deny the claim, we will:
(1) notify you in writing, and
(2) give you the reasons for denial of your claim in writing.

5. HANDLING A CLAIM OR COURT CASE

You must cooperate with us in handling any claim or court case and give us all relevant information.
We must repay you only for those settlement costs, attorneys' fees and expenses that we approve in advance.
When we defend or sue to clear your title, we have a right to choose the attorney. You have the right to disapprove our choice of attorney for reasonable cause. We can appeal any decision to the highest court. We do not have to pay your claim until your case is finally decided. We do not agree that the matter is a covered title risk by defending.

6. LIMITATIONS OF OUR LIABILITY

Our liability is limited by the following:

a. We will pay up to your actual loss of the Policy Amount in force when the claim is made - whichever is less.

b. If we remove the claim against your title with reasonable diligence or take other action under this policy after receiving notice of it, we will have no further liability for it.

c. All payments we make under this policy - except for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses - will be subtracted from your Policy Amount.

d. If the Covered Title Risk is an easement, we may pay an insured mortgage holder instead of paying you when a written agreement between you and the mortgage holder allows. If the claim involves another Covered Title Risk, we may pay the mortgage holder instead of paying you. The amount paid to the mortgage holder is considered a payment to you under your policy and will be subtracted from your policy amount.

e. If you do anything to affect any right of recovery or defense you may have, we can subtract from our liability the amount by which you reduced the value of that right or defense. But we must add back to our liability any amount by which our expenses are reduced as a result of your action.

7. TRANSFER OF YOUR RIGHTS
When we settle a claim, we have all the rights you had against any person or property related to the claim. You must transfer these rights to us when we ask, and you must not do anything to affect these rights. You must let us use your name in enforcing these rights.
We will not be liable to you if we do not pursue these rights or if we do not recover any amount that might be recoverable.
With the money we recover from enforcing these rights, we will pay whatever part of your loss we have not paid. We have a right to keep what is left.

8. ARBITRATION
If it is permitted under Texas or federal law, you and we may agree to arbitration when you file a claim. The arbitration may decide any matter in dispute between you and us.
Arbitration is one means of alternative dispute resolution. It may lessen the time and cost of claims settlement. You may wish to consider another form of mediation or use the court system. If you choose arbitration, you may give up some discovery rights and your right to sue.
The arbitration award may:

a. include attorneys' fees if allowed by state law, and/or
b. be entered as a judgment in the proper court.

The arbitration shall be under the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. You may choose current Rules or Rules in existence on Policy Date.
The law used in the arbitration is the law of the place where the property is located.
You can get a copy of the Rules from us.

9. ENTIRE CONTRACT PROVISION
This policy and any endorsements we attach are the entire contract between you and us. Any claim you make against us must be under this Policy and is subject to its terms.

10. COMPLAINT NOTICE
Should any dispute arise about your premium or about a claim that you have filed, contact the agent or write to us. OUR TOLL-FREE NUMBER IS __________________. If we do not resolve the problem, you also may write the Texas Department of Insurance, P.O. Box 149091, Austin, TX 78714-9091, FAX No. (512) 475-1771. 1. DEFINITION OF TERMS.

(b) "Date of Policy": The date designated as "Date of Policy" in Schedule A.

(c) "Entity": A corporation, partnership, trust, limited liability company or other similar legal entity.

(d) "Indebtedness": The obligation secured by the Insured Mortgage including one evidenced by electronic means authorized by law, and if that obligation is the payment of a debt, the Indebtedness is the sum of:

(i) the amount of the principal disbursed as of Date of Policy;

(ii) the amount of the principal disbursed subsequent to Date of Policy;

(iii) construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the Land or related to the Land that the Insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at Date of Policy and at the date of the advance;

(iv) interest on the loan;

(v) prepayment premiums, exit fees and other similar fees or penalties allowed by law;

(vi) expenses of foreclosure and any other costs of enforcement;

but reduced by the total of all payments and by any amount forgiven by an Insured.

(e) "Insured": the Insured named in Schedule A.

(i) The term "Insured" also includes:

(A) the owner of the Indebtedness and each successor in ownership of the Indebtedness, whether the owner or successor owns the Indebtedness for its own account or as a trustee or other fiduciary, except a successor

(ii) With regard to (A), (B), (C), (D) and (E) reserving, however, all rights and defenses as to any successor that the Company would have had against any predecessor Insured, unless the successor acquired the Indebtedness as a purchaser for value without Knowledge of the asserted defect, lien, encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy.

(f) "Insured Claimant": an Insured claiming loss or damage.

(g) “Insured Mortgage”: the Mortgage described in paragraph 4 of Schedule A.

The term "Land” does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways or waterways, but this does not modify or limit the extent that a right of access to and from the Land is insured by this policy.

(j) "Mortgage": mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, or other security instrument, including one evidenced by electronic means authorized by law.

(k) "Public Records": records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without Knowledge. (l) “Title”: the estate or interest described in Schedule A.

(m) "Unmarketable Title”: Title affected by an alleged or apparent matter that would permit a prospective purchaser or lessee of the Title or lender on the Title or a prospective purchaser of the Insured Mortgage to be released from the obligation to purchase, lease or lend if there is a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

2. CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE.

The coverage of this policy shall continue in force as of Date of Policy in favor of an Insured after acquisition of the Title by an Insured or after conveyance by an Insured, but only so long as the Insured retains an estate or interest in the Land, or holds an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given by a purchaser from the Insured, or only so long as the Insured shall have liability by reason of warranties in any transfer or conveyance of the Title. This policy shall not continue in force in favor of any purchaser from the Insured of either (i) an estate or interest in the Land, or (ii) an obligation secured by a purchase money Mortgage given to the Insured.

3. NOTICE OF CLAIM TO BE GIVEN BY INSURED CLAIMANT.

The Insured shall notify the Company promptly in writing (i) in case of any litigation as set forth in Section 5(a) below, or (ii) in case Knowledge shall come to an Insured of any claim of title or interest that is adverse to the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured, and that might cause loss or damage for which the Company may be liable by virtue of this policy. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured Claimant to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to the Insured Claimant under the policy shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice.

Subject to the provisions of this policy, upon acquisition of all or any part of the Title pursuant to the provisions of Section 2 of these Conditions, when, after the Date of the Policy, the Insured notifies the Company as required herein of a lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other defect in Title insured by this policy that is not excluded or excepted from the coverage of this policy, the Company shall promptly investigate the charge to determine whether the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect or other matter is valid and not barred by law or statute. The Company shall notify the Insured in writing, within a reasonable time, of its determination as to the validity or invalidity of the Insured's claim or charge under the policy. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is not covered by this policy, or was otherwise addressed in the closing of the transaction in connection with which this policy was issued, the Company shall specifically advise the Insured of the reasons for its determination. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is valid, the Company shall take one of the following actions: (i) institute the necessary proceedings to clear the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect from the Title as insured; (ii) indemnify the Insured as provided in this policy; (iii) upon payment of appropriate premium and charges therefor, issue to the Insured Claimant or to a subsequent owner, mortgagee or holder of the estate or interest in the Land insured by this policy, a policy of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect, said policy to be in an amount equal to the current value of the Land or, if a mortgagee policy, the amount of the loan; (iv) indemnify another title insurance company in connection with its issuance of a policy(ies) of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect; (v) secure a release or other document discharging the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect; or (vi) undertake a combination of (i) through (v) herein.

4. PROOF OF LOSS.

In the event the Company is unable to determine the amount of loss or damage, the Company may, at its option, require as a condition of payment that the Insured Claimant furnish a signed proof of loss. The proof of loss must describe the defect, lien, encumbrance or other matter insured against by this policy that constitutes the basis of loss or damage and shall state, to the extent possible, the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage.

5. DEFENSE AND PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS.

(a) Upon written request by the Insured, and subject to the options contained in Sections 3 and 7 of these Conditions, the Company, at its own cost and without unreasonable delay, shall provide for the defense of an Insured in litigation in which any third party asserts a claim covered by this policy adverse to the Insured. This obligation is limited to only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by this policy. The Company shall have the right to select counsel of its choice (subject to the right of the Insured to object for reasonable cause) to represent the Insured as to those stated causes of action. It shall not be liable for and will not pay the fees of any other counsel. The Company will not pay any fees, costs or expenses incurred by the Insured in the defense of those causes of action that allege matters not insured against by this policy.

(b) The Company shall have the right, in addition to the options contained in Sections 3 and 7, at its own cost, to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding or to do any other act that in its opinion may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured, or to prevent or reduce loss or damage to the Insured. The Company may take any appropriate action under the terms of this policy, whether or not it shall be liable to the Insured. The exercise of these rights shall not be an admission of liability or waiver of any provision of this policy. If the Company exercises its rights under this subsection, it must do so diligently.

(c) Whenever the Company brings an action or asserts a defense as required or permitted by this policy, the Company may pursue the litigation to a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction and it expressly reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to appeal from any adverse judgment or order.

6. DUTY OF INSURED CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.

(a) In all cases where this policy permits or requires the Company to prosecute or provide for the defense of any action or proceeding and any appeals, the Insured shall secure to the Company the right to so prosecute or provide defense in the action or proceeding, including the right to use, at its option, the name of the Insured for this purpose. Whenever requested by the Company, the Insured, at the Company's expense, shall give the Company all reasonable aid (i) in securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending the action or proceeding, or effecting settlement, and (ii) in any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary or desirable to establish the Title, the lien of the Insured Mortgage, or any other matter as insured. If the Company is prejudiced by the failure of the Insured to furnish the required cooperation, the Company's obligations to the Insured under the policy shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation, with regard to the matter or matters requiring such cooperation.

(b) The Company may reasonably require the Insured Claimant to submit to examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company and to produce for examination, inspection and copying, at such reasonable times and places as may be designated by the authorized representative of the Company, all records, in whatever medium maintained, including books, ledgers, checks, memoranda, correspondence, reports, e-mails, disks, tapes, and videos whether bearing a date before or after Date of Policy, that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. Further, if requested by any authorized representative of the Company, the Insured Claimant shall grant its permission, in writing, for any authorized representative of the Company to examine, inspect and copy all of these records in the custody or control of a third party that reasonably pertain to the loss or damage. All information designated as confidential by the Insured Claimant provided to the Company pursuant to this Section shall not be disclosed to others unless, in the reasonable judgment of the Company, it is necessary in the administration of the claim. Failure of the Insured Claimant to submit for examination under oath, produce any reasonably requested information or grant permission to secure reasonably necessary information from third parties as required in this subsection, unless prohibited by law or governmental regulation, shall terminate any liability of the Company under this policy as to that claim.

7. OPTIONS TO PAY OR OTHERWISE SETTLE CLAIMS; TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

In case of a claim under this policy, the Company shall have the following additional options:

(a) To Pay or Tender Payment of the Amount of Insurance or to Purchase the Indebtedness.

(i) to pay or tender payment of the Amount of Insurance under this policy together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment or tender of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to purchase the Indebtedness for the amount of the Indebtedness on the date of purchase, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of purchase and that the Company is obligated to pay.

When the Company purchases the Indebtedness, the Insured shall transfer, assign, and convey to the Company the Indebtedness and the Insured Mortgage, together with any collateral security.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (a)(i) or (ii), all liability and obligations of the Company to the Insured under this policy, other than to make the payment required in those subsections, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute, or continue any litigation.

(b) To Pay or Otherwise Settle With Parties Other than the Insured or With the Insured Claimant.

(i) to pay or otherwise settle with other parties for or in the name of an Insured Claimant any claim insured against under this policy. In addition, the Company will pay any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay; or

(ii) to pay or otherwise settle with the Insured Claimant the loss or damage provided for under this policy, together with any costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred by the Insured Claimant that were authorized by the Company up to the time of payment and that the Company is obligated to pay.

Upon the exercise by the Company of either of the options provided for in subsections (b)(i) or (ii), the Company's obligations to the Insured under this policy for the claimed loss or damage, other than the payments required to be made, shall terminate, including any liability or obligation to defend, prosecute or continue any litigation.

8. DETERMINATION AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.

(a) The extent of liability of the Company for loss or damage under this policy shall not exceed the least of:

(i) the Amount of Insurance;

(ii) the Indebtedness;

(iii) the difference between the value of the Title as insured and the value of the Title subject to the risk insured against by this policy; or

(iv) if a government agency or instrumentality is the Insured Claimant, the amount it paid in the acquisition of the Title or the Insured Mortgage in satisfaction of its insurance contract or guaranty.

(b) If the Company pursues its rights under Section 3 or 5 and is unsuccessful in establishing the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured,

(i) the Amount of Insurance shall be increased by 10%, and

(ii) the Insured Claimant shall have the right to have the loss or damage determined either as of the date the claim was made by the Insured Claimant or as of the date it is settled and paid.

(c) In the event the Insured has acquired the Title in the manner described in Section 2 of these Conditions or has conveyed the Title, then the extent of liability of the Company shall continue as set forth in Section 8(a) of these Conditions.

(d) In addition to the extent of liability under (a), (b) and (c), the Company will also pay those costs, attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in accordance with Sections 5 and 7 of these Conditions.

9. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) If the Company establishes the Title, or removes the alleged defect, lien or encumbrance, or cures the lack of a right of access to or from the Land, or establishes the lien of the Insured Mortgage, all as insured, or takes action in accordance with Section 3 or 7, in a reasonably diligent manner by any method, including litigation and the completion of any appeals, it shall have fully performed its obligations with respect to that matter and shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused to the Insured.

(b) In the event of any litigation, including litigation by the Company or with the Company's consent, the Company shall have no liability for loss or damage until there has been a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, and disposition of all appeals, adverse to the Title or to the lien of the Insured Mortgage, as insured.

(c) The Company shall not be liable for loss or damage to the Insured for liability voluntarily assumed by the Insured in settling any claim or suit without the prior written consent of the Company.

10. REDUCTION OF INSURANCE; REDUCTION OR TERMINATION OF LIABILITY.

(a) All payments under this policy, except payments made for costs, attorneys' fees and expenses, shall reduce the Amount of Insurance by the amount of the payment. However, any payments made prior to the acquisition of Title as provided in Section 2 of these Conditions shall not reduce the Amount of Insurance afforded under this policy except to the extent that the payments reduce the Indebtedness.

(b) The voluntary satisfaction or release of the Insured Mortgage shall terminate all liability of the Company except as provided in Section 2 of these Conditions.

11. PAYMENT OF LOSS.

When liability and the extent of loss or damage have been definitely fixed in accordance with these Conditions, the payment shall be made within 30 days.

12. RIGHTS OF RECOVERY UPON PAYMENT OR SETTLEMENT.

(a) The Company's Right to Recover.

Whenever the Company shall have settled and paid a claim under this policy, it shall be subrogated and entitled to the rights of the Insured Claimant in the Title or Insured Mortgage and all other rights and remedies in respect to the claim that the Insured Claimant has against any person or property, to the extent of the amount of any loss, costs, attorneys' fees and expenses paid by the Company. If requested by the Company, the Insured Claimant shall execute documents to evidence the transfer to the Company of these rights and remedies. The Insured Claimant shall permit the Company to sue, compromise or settle in the name of the Insured Claimant and to use the name of the Insured Claimant in any transaction or litigation involving these rights and remedies.

If a payment on account of a claim does not fully cover the loss of the Insured Claimant, the Company shall defer the exercise of its right to recover until after the Insured Claimant shall have recovered its loss.

(b) The Insured's Rights and Limitations.

(i) The owner of the Indebtedness may release or substitute the personal liability of any debtor or guarantor, extend or otherwise modify the terms of payment, release a portion of the Title from the lien of the Insured Mortgage, or release any collateral security for the Indebtedness, if it does not affect the enforceability or priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage.

(ii) If the Insured exercises a right provided in (b)(i), but has Knowledge of any claim adverse to the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage insured against by this policy, the Company shall be required to pay only that part of any losses insured against by this policy that shall exceed the amount, if any, lost to the Company by reason of the impairment by the Insured Claimant of the Company's right of subrogation.

(c) The Company's Rights Against Non-insured Obligors.

The Company's right of subrogation includes the Insured's rights against non-insured obligors including the rights of the Insured to indemnities, guaranties, other policies of insurance or bonds, notwithstanding any terms or conditions contained in those instruments that address subrogation rights. The Company's right of subrogation shall not be avoided by acquisition of the Insured Mortgage by an obligor (except an obligor described in Section 1(e)(i)(F) of these Conditions) who acquires the Insured Mortgage as a result of an indemnity, guarantee, other policy of insurance, or bond and the obligor will not be an Insured under this policy.

13. ARBITRATION.

Either the Company or the Insured may demand that the claim or controversy shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association ("Rules"). Except as provided in the Rules, there shall be no joinder or consolidation with claims or controversies of other persons. Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy. All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is $2,000,000 or less shall be arbitrated at the option of either the Company or the Insured, unless the Insured is an individual person (as distinguished from an Entity). All arbitrable matters when the Amount of Insurance is in excess of $2,000,000 shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured. Arbitration pursuant to this policy and under the Rules shall be binding upon the parties. Judgment upon the award rendered by the Arbitrator(s) may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

14. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT.

(a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.

(b) Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or lien of the Insured Mortgage or by any action asserting such claim, shall be restricted to this policy.

(c) Any amendment of or endorsement to this policy must be in writing and authenticated by an authorized person, or expressly incorporated by Schedule A of this policy.

(d) Each endorsement to this policy issued at any time is made a part of this policy and is subject to all of its terms and provisions. Except as the endorsement expressly states, it does not (i) modify any of the terms and provisions of the policy, (ii) modify any prior endorsement, (iii) extend the Date of Policy or (iv) increase the Amount of Insurance. Each Commitment, endorsement or other form, or provision in the Schedules to this policy that refers to a term defined in Section 1 of the Conditions shall be deemed to refer to the term regardless of whether the term is capitalized in the Commitment, endorsement or other form, or Schedule. Each Commitment, endorsement or other form, or provision in the Schedules that refers to the Conditions and Stipulations shall be deemed to refer to the Conditions of this policy.

15. SEVERABILITY.

In the event any provision of this policy, in whole or in part, is held invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, the policy shall be deemed not to include that provision or such part held to be invalid and all other provisions shall remain in full force and effect.

16. CHOICE OF LAW; FORUM.

(a) Choice of Law: The Insured acknowledges the Company has underwritten the risks covered by this policy and determined the premium charged therefore in reliance upon the law affecting interests in real property and applicable to the interpretation, rights, remedies or enforcement of policies of title insurance of the jurisdiction where the Land is located.

Therefore, the court or an arbitrator shall apply the law of the jurisdiction where the Land is located to determine the validity of claims against the Title or the lien of the Insured Mortgage that are adverse to the Insured, and in interpreting and enforcing the terms of this policy. In neither case shall the court or arbitrator apply its conflicts of laws principles to determine the applicable law.

(b) Choice of Forum: Any litigation or other proceeding brought by the Insured against the Company must be filed only in a state or federal court within the United States of America or its territories having appropriate jurisdiction.

5. When the Company shall have indemnified You pursuant to this letter, it shall be subrogated to all rights and remedies You have against any person or property had You not been indemnified. The Company's liability for indemnification shall be reduced to the extent that You have impaired the value of this right of subrogation.

6. The Company's liability for loss under this letter shall not exceed the least of:

f. the amount of Your Funds;

g. the Company's liability under the Policy at the time written notice of a claim is made under this letter;

h. the value of the lien of the Insured Mortgage;

i. the value of the Title to the Land insured or to be insured under the Policy at the time written notice of a claim is made under this letter; or

j. the amount stated in Section 3 of the Requirements.

7. The Company will be liable only to the holder of the Indebtedness at the time that payment is made. This Section 7 does not apply to a purchaser, borrower, or lessee.

8. Payment to You or to the owner of the Indebtedness under either the Policy or from any other source shall reduce liability under this letter by the same amount. Payment in accordance with the terms of this letter shall constitute a payment pursuant to the Conditions of the Policy.

9. The Issuing Agent is the Company's agent only for the limited purpose of issuing policies. Neither the Issuing Agent nor the Approved Attorney is the Company's agent for the purpose of providing closing or settlement services. The Company's liability for Your loss arising from closing or settlement services is strictly limited to the contractual protection expressly provided in this letter. Other than as expressly provided in this letter, the Company shall have no liability for loss resulting from the fraud, theft, dishonesty, misappropriation, or negligence of any party to the Real Estate Transaction, the lack of creditworthiness of any borrower connected with the Real Estate Transaction, or the failure of any collateral to adequately secure a loan connected with the Real Estate Transaction.

10. In no event shall the Company be liable for a loss if the written notice of a claim is not received by the Company within one year from the date of the transmittal of Funds. The condition that the Company must be provided with written notice under this Section 10 shall not be excused by lack of prejudice to the Company.

11. You must promptly send written notice of a claim under this letter to the Company at its principal office at ___________________________________. If the Company is prejudiced by Your failure to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to You under this letter shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice.

12. Whenever requested by the Company, You, at the Company's expense, shall:

   (a) give the Company all reasonable aid in

      (i) securing evidence, obtaining witnesses, prosecuting or defending any action or proceeding, or effecting any settlement, and

      (ii) any other lawful act that in the opinion of the Company may be necessary to enable the Company's investigation and determination of its liability under this letter;

   (b) deliver to the Company any records, in whatever medium maintained, that pertain to the Real Estate Transaction or any claim under this letter; and

   (c) submit to an examination under oath by any authorized representative of the Company with respect to any such records, the Real Estate Transaction, any claim under this letter or any other matter reasonably deemed relevant by the Company.

13. The Company shall have no liability under this letter if:

   (a) the Real Estate Transaction has not closed within one year from the date of this letter; or

   (b) at any time after the date of this letter, but before the Real Estate Transaction closes, the Company provides written notice of termination of this letter to the Addressee at the address set forth above.

14. The protection of this letter extends only to real estate in [State], and any court or arbitrator shall apply the law of the jurisdiction where the Land is located to interpret and enforce the terms of this letter. In neither case shall the court or arbitrator apply its conflicts of law principles to determine the applicable law. Any litigation or other proceeding under this letter must be filed only in a state or federal court within the United States of America or its territories having appropriate jurisdiction.

[15. Either the Company or You may demand that any claim arising under this letter be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the Title Insurance Arbitration Rules of the American Land Title Association, unless You have a Policy for the Real Estate Transaction with an Amount of Insurance greater than $2,000,000. There shall be no right for any claim under this letter to be arbitrated or litigated on a class action basis. If You have a Policy for the Real Estate Transaction with an Amount of Insurance greater than $2,000,000, a claim arising under this letter may be submitted to arbitration only when agreed to by both the Company and You. If the Real Estate Transaction solely involves a one-to-four family residence and You are the purchaser or borrower, the Company will pay the costs of arbitration.]

This letter supersedes and cancels any previous letter or similar agreement for closing protection that applies to the Real Estate Transaction and may not be modified by the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney.
