Properties, Inc. v. National Title Co.[159]

Despite the specific coverage against impersonation in the 2006 ALTA policy, the reasoning of Brucha and Home American Credit still applies to claims made under that policy form. Covered Risk 2 is only invoked if an impersonation causes "a defect in the Title."[160] The decisions discussed above held that title to the property was not rendered defective by the type of impersonation used in those cases.

9.2.3 Undue Influence, Duress and Incapacity

The 2006 ALTA policy protects against a defect in the title caused by "undue influence, duress, incompetency, incapacity" and "failure of any person or Entity to have authorized a transfer or conveyance."[161] All or some of these issues are also covered under the 1992 and earlier ALTA policy forms.

There is a dearth of case law concerning this coverage of the policy, perhaps because there is rarely a dispute about whether or not the policy protects against such title defects. This coverage includes defects caused by the lack of capacity of a fiduciary to transfer or encumber the property.[162] One court found that an insurer that issued a policy insuring a lien granted by a trustee, without reviewing the trust agreement to see if he had such powers or to determine the identities of the trust beneficiaries, accepted the risk that the trustee might have violated his duties, and that the lien could be overturned.[163]

9.3 Trespass And Interests Evidenced By Possession

Most parties in possession are on the property with the consent of the owner. A recorded lease will typically appear as an exception in the policy because the title examiner can find the lease in the public records. The standard exception for rights of parties in possession applies to tenants whose leases are not evidenced in the public records. The application of the possession exception to leasehold interests is discussed in §12.2.1.

---

[159] 34 P.3d 587 (Nev. 2001). Opinion at 14 P.3d 507 (Nev. 2000) withdrawn and superseded on rehearing.

[160] In BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 830 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2016), the court held that there is no coverage for any of the matters listed in Covered Risk 2 unless the issue causes a defect in the title. Similarly, in New South Federal Savings Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 940 So.2d 739 (La.App. 3 Cir. 2006), the court held that none of the terms listed in the survey coverage in Covered Risk 2(c) invoked coverage unless the effect of the "survey" issue was to create a defect in the title.

[161] Covered Risks 2(a)(i) and (ii).

[162] In Carr v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 6521029 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), Mr. Carr asserted that Abel Galvez had induced him to transfer his property to an entity controlled by Galvez, presumably by undue influence. Carr did not prevail against Galvez or his lender, however, and instead sued the insurer based on the California Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act, which claim the court dismissed because California title insurers are immune from tort suits.

[163] Mercantile-Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 892103 (D.Md.) (unpublished). The court refused to find that the lien was void solely because the underlying debt was no good, which would have barred coverage because the policy does not assure the validity of the debt.

Another form of possession claim is the overlap between two deeds, in which two neighbors have at least purported record title to the land but only one is in possession of the overlap area. See §12.3.9 for a full discussion of overlaps in the context of the survey exception.

Adverse possession and prescriptive easements are also adverse claims that are typically covered by the policy unless Schedule B contains a relevant exception. The relationship between adverse possession claims and the possession exception is discussed at §12.2.4. Adverse possession may also be visible on inspection, and thus removed from coverage under the survey exception or its inspection clause. See §12.3.17.1.

Trespass is possession or use of property without permission or right. A trespass on the insured parcel does not invoke policy coverage.[164] In Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Woods,[165] involving a Texas form of policy, a company cut timber on the insured land after the insured bought it. The logger held a deed from a stranger to title. Thus, the logger was found to be a trespasser. The insured sued the insurer for the timber lost. The court said:

> The policy does not, either expressly or by implication, purport to insure against damage done to the land by a trespasser under the circumstances of this case.[166]

The court also found that there was no loss suffered as a result of the fact that the trespasser had color of title from a recorded deed. This fact did not create a defect in the insured's title, and therefore did not cause a loss, it said. The latter holding, however, is contrary to an Alabama decision that found that a recorded timber deed affected title despite a statute declaring timber rights to be personal property.[167]

The "parties in possession" exception confirms the lack of policy coverage for trespass. See

---

[164] In Murphy v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 316 Ga.App. 97, 729 S.E.2d 21 (Ga.App. 2012), the court held that a policy that insured an access easement did not protect against a neighbor's blockade of that easement path 20 years after the policy date, in part because of the post-policy exclusion and in part because the blockade was a trespass. It said that "[t]here is no allegation that, in 1987, there were any defects in the title conveyed to the Murphys and insured by Ticor as of that date." It further said "[w]e also note that there is no evidence to show that Murphy does not still have the legal right to use the easement, only that a neighbor is interfering with it." In Straily v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 6742505 (Tex.App.-Tyler) (unpublished), the court found that a sewer pipe that the city admitted had been laid without an easement or other right was a trespass and not an encumbrance on title, and thus did not invoke policy coverage. In Chorches v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 48 F.Supp.3d 151 (D.Conn. 2014), the court found that there was no coverage or duty to defend as to a dispute in which the insured claimed that easement holders were trespassing on the insured parcel by placing utility lines outside the easement path, while the easement holders claimed the insured had consented to the location of the service lines. In CH Properties, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 43 F.Supp.3d 83 (D. Puerto Rico 2014), recons.den. 2014 WL 7140507 (D. Puerto Rico, Dec. 15, 2014), the court held that the occupation of the insured land by protesters was not covered by any of the four Covered Risks of the 1992 ALTA policy "for a simple reason: the trespassers' presence does not affect title to the [insured] leasehold interest." Rather, it said, the "trespassers [did not] enjoy a legally cognizable interest in the Property affecting CH Properties' title… ."

[165] 449 S.W.2d 773 (Tex. 1970).

[166] 449 S.W.2d at 775.

[167] Parker v. Ward, 614 So.2d 975 (Ala. 1992).

§12.2.3 regarding trespass and the parties in possession exception. However, a major structure that is both a trespass and an encumbrance may be deemed to render title unmarketable.[168]

9.4 Real Estate Taxes, Assessments And Charges

All ALTA policy forms protect against real estate taxes that are liens on date of policy. Covered Risk 2(b) of the 2006 policies protects against "liens" and also "[t]he lien of real estate taxes or assessments imposed on the Title by a governmental authority due or payable, but unpaid." The 1992 ALTA policies protect against "liens." The more specific coverage found in the 2006 ALTA policy may restrict the policy tax coverage.[169] The Residential policy lists real estate taxes as Covered Title Risk 7: "There is a lien on your title because of: … a judgment, tax, or special assessment…" The ALTA Homeowner's policy provides the most extensive coverage, against both existing taxes (Covered Risk 8.b), and any post-policy assessment or supplemental tax that is triggered by construction or change in ownership (Covered Risk 24). The latter coverage indemnifies in the event that:

> A taxing authority assesses supplemental real estate taxes not previously assessed against the Land for any period before the Policy Date because of construction or a change of ownership or use that occurred before the Policy Date.

However, except as stated above concerning the Homeowner's policy, there is no coverage against tax liens that obtain their lien status after the date of policy.[170] One court explained this limitation on policy coverage as follows:

> It has been held that the mere liability as to an assessment or tax, which was levied or became a lien after the issuance of a title insurance policy, did not constitute a charge, lien, or encumbrance within the meaning and coverage of the policy… . However, an assessment which was made a lien on the property by an ordinance

---

[168] See, for example, Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67 (D.D.C. 1993), and the other cases discussed at §9.8.

[169] In Lone Star Equities, Inc. v. Dimitrouleas, 34 N.E.3d 936, 2015-Ohio-2294 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court held that the policy did not protect against real estate taxes that were reassessed after the policy date even though the reassessment process had begun before closing. The court relied in part on the fact that the 2006 ALTA policy at issue contained the statement in Covered Risk 2(b) that the policy protected against taxes "due or payable, but unpaid," because the tax had not become due before the policy date.

[170] District Title Ins. Co. v. United States, 169 F.2d 308 (D.C.Cir. 1948); Butcher v. Burton Abstract Title Co., 52 Mich.App. 98, 216 N.W.2d 434 (1974); Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 39 Colo.App. 235, 563 P.2d 979 (1977); Chudy v. William Raveis Real Estate, Inc., 2010 WL 5188445 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished) (no coverage for assessment made after policy date); Rhone v. First American Title Ins. Co., 928 N.E.2d 1185, 340 Ill.Dec. 588 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2010) (possibility on policy date of later reassessment did not bring within coverage taxes that did not become a lien until two years after policy date); Vurimindi v. LandAmerica Financial Group, Inc., 2012 WL 8700440 (Pa.Cmwlth.) (unpublished) (policy did not protect against taxes that became liens after policy date, especially when tax liens were likely invalid due to their late filing).

> approved prior to the date of a title insurance policy insuring against liens or encumbrances charging the property at the date of the policy has been held to be an encumbrance within the contemplation of the policy.[171]

State law controls as to whether or not the tax, assessment or charge was a lien on the date of policy.[172] Real estate taxes that were not excepted in a policy insuring the United States were held to be liens covered by the policy, even though the taxes could not be foreclosed against the federal government.[173]

A special assessment is a tax assessment imposed against a parcel for the cost of an improvement that confers a special benefit on the parcel, such as a sidewalk running along its boundary. Special assessments are typically levied and paid in installments that can stretch over a period of five or more years. Every state's special assessment law creates a different statutory process for the levying of special assessments and their lien status and collection, and the claim administrator must be familiar with local law in addressing a claim about a special assessment. However, typically, the policy protects against installments of special assessments that had become due and that had obtained lien status before the date of policy.[174] If all installments that had achieved lien status by the policy date were paid on the policy date, there is no policy coverage for future installments that have not yet become liens.[175] Also, the policy does not indemnify against contemplated or pending assessments that have not achieved lien status as of the policy date.[176] The special assessment process contains a number of steps, typically including an initial resolution to proceed with the project, the letting of contracts, construction of the improvements, a resolution or report fixing the cost for each property owner, public hearings, and culminating in the levy or assessment of the tax. A looming assessment is not an "encumbrance" before it becomes a lien.[177]

Some statutes or ordinances permit less formal assessment procedures for minor street and

---

[171] Annotation, What Constitutes a Charge, Encumbrance, or Lien Within Contemplation of Title Insurance Policy, 87 ALR3d 764, §2.

[172] Atlanta Title & Trust Co. v. Inman, 42 Ga.App. 191, 155 S.E. 364 (1930).

[173] United States v. City of Flint, 346 F.Supp. 1282 (E.D. Mich. 1972).

[174] Real Estate-Land Title & Trust Co. v. Real Estate-Land Title & Trust Co., 15 Pa.D.&C. 409 (1931).

[175] Ackley v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 16 Misc.2d 402, 182 N.Y.S.2d 76 (1958); Butcher v. Burton Abstract Title Co., 52 Mich. App. 98, 216 N.W.2d 434 (1974); Mayers v. Van Schaick, 268 N.Y. 320, 197 N.E. 296 (N.Y. 1935).

[176] Dokel v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 147 Misc. 72, 263 N.Y.Supp. 438 (City Ct. 1933); Shefts v. Security Title and Guar. Co. of N.Y., 22 Bucks 189, 55 Pa. D. & C.2d 616, 1972 WL 15826 (Pa.Com.Pl. 1972); Medeiros v. Guardian Title & Guar. Agency, Inc., 57 Ohio App.2d 257, 387 N.E.2d 644 (Cuyahoga Co. 1978); Cummins v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. of N.Y., 40 N.Y.2d 639, 389 N.Y.S.2d 319, 357 N.E.2d 975 (1976); Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co. of Rochester, 283 N.Y. 33, 27 N.E.2d 225 (1940); Union Realty Co. v. Ahern, 93 A.2d 84 (D.C.App. 1952); McFaw Land Co. v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co., 357 Mo. 797, 211 S.W.2d 44 (1948); Cole v. Home Title Guar. Co., 29 A.D.2d 552, 285 N.Y.S.2d 914 (A.D. 2 Dept. 1967).

[177] Strass v. District-Realty Title Ins. Corp., 31 Md.App. 690, 358 A.2d 251, 87 A.L.R.3d 752 (1976).

sidewalk repair. Again, state law or local ordinance controls as to the date on which such assessments become liens. Such an assessment is covered by the policy if it has become a lien as of the date of policy and is not excepted.[178]

The fact that property is in a special taxing district is not a lien or encumbrance that invokes a covered risk.[179] The same is true as to a developer's agreement that obligates the developer to make payments to the municipality for the subdivision improvements.[180] However, the existence of a special taxing district or a payment-in-lieu-of-tax agreement may be an encumbrance on title, even if no taxes emanating from the district were liens on the date of policy.[181]

Contested assessments may create "hidden" liens. When the seller paid under protest, then contested the assessment and won, and then the municipality levied a new tax for the same year after the insured purchased, the tax was found payable by the insurer. The court reasoned that the status of the tax payment and contest was discoverable by the insurer.[182]

An exception for the taxes owed for a particular year will typically take away policy coverage for those taxes, no matter what enforcement action the taxing district may have taken as to those taxes on the policy date.[183]

---

[178] Atlanta Title & Trust Co. v. Inman, 42 Ga.App. 191, 155 S.E. 364 (1930).

[179] Burman v. Richmond Homes Ltd., 821 P.2d 913 (Colo.App. 1991); Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 39 Colo. App. 235, 563 P.2d 979 (1977); Vestin Mortgage, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 139 P.3d 1055, 553 Utah Adv. Rep. 3, 2006 UT 34 (Utah 2006) (also finding no coverage under CLTA 104 or F.A. Form 31 endorsements, regarding taxes or other liens that can cut off or affect the priority of the insured mortgage); Luboff v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965); BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 830 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2016) (2006 ALTA policy tax Covered Risk does not alter analysis under 1992 form that policy does not protect against existence of a special taxing district under which no assessment had been made on the policy date; court adopted the reasoning of Vestin Mortgage, which construed a 1992 ALTA policy).

[180] Luboff v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965).

[181] In MBK Celamonte, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 1697703 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), reh.den. May 28, 2010, rev.den. July 21, 2010, the court held the taxing district was an encumbrance on title but that no tax lien existed on the policy date. It said: "Lawyers Title argues throughout its appellate briefs that the special tax was not a lien. Whether Lawyers Title is correct in this regard is irrelevant. The Policy covers loss or damage resulting from not only liens on title, but also encumbrances on title. The evidence supporting the trial court's finding that the special tax was an encumbrance on title is substantial." (emphasis in original) In AHF-Bay Fund, LLC v. City of Largo, 227 So.3d 740 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 2017), the court held that a recorded memorandum about a payment-in-lieu-of-tax agreement was an encumbrance on title, but did not represent a lien. In Title Resources Guar. Co. v. The Lighthouse Church & Ministries, ___ S.W.3d ___, 2019 WL 3293692 (Tex.App.-Houston 2019) (not yet released for publication), when property had been exempt from tax because it was owned by a church, the exemption was revoked because the church sold the property. The title insurer for the buyer paid the tax, and then had difficulty recovering the tax from the church.

[182] National Holding Co. v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 45 Cal.App.2d 215, 113 P.2d 906 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1941).

[183] In Heidi Associates v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 67 N.Y.2d 1041, 495 N.E.2d 350 (N.Y. 1986), rev'g, 112 App.Div.2d 844, 492 N.Y.S.2d 949 (App.Div. 1985), the policy was found not to protect against an in rem action to foreclose delinquent taxes because the policy excepted the taxes, although it did not separately recite the foreclosure action. The court said that the foreclosure action did not create a separate lien or encumbrance, and thus fell under the subject of the exception.

The policy's tax lien coverage is not negated, in most situations, by evidence that the insured contracted to take title to the property subject to existing taxes. In one case, when the policy failed to except general taxes for the year in which the policy was dated, a court rejected the argument that general taxes are automatically assumed as a burden with ownership of property, and therefore the insured suffered no loss in having to pay them.[184] However, the matter may fall under Exclusion 3(a), for matters "assumed or agreed to," if there is unequivocal evidence that the insured knew of and assumed the tax debt. See §11.2.1 regarding liens "assumed" by the insured.

In many jurisdictions, a municipality may impose various charges for the connection to municipal services or utilities, such as sewers. In at least some states, those charges are not liens against the real estate. There is no coverage against connection fees that are not liens.[185]

Also, many locales make charges for the use of municipal services or utilities, such as water, sewer or municipal electricity. State law will govern whether or not those charges become liens on the real estate and, if so, at what juncture. Some state laws provide that such charges will be added to the tax roll if they become delinquent, becoming liens some time after the date the service is provided. If the service charge is not a lien as of the date of policy, the insurer has no duty to pay the charge on behalf of either the insured owner or lender. [186] However, the insurer may become liable for such a charge if it had become a lien on or before the policy date.[187] It is common, in those jurisdictions in which utility service liens may be imposed, for the title insurance commitment to recite a special exception for the lien of utility charges, and for the purchaser to get final readings from the service provider on the day of closing and pay those charges from closing to induce the insurer to remove that exception from the policy.

---

[184] In Bragman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 421 F.Supp. 99 (E.D.Pa. 1976), the court admitted that the result was inequitable, but likened the insured's fleecing of the insurer to gambling winnings: "To pose the dilemma in extremis, if a person wins a sum of money in a dice game or a casino, we do not say that he has not suffered a loss if that money is stolen from him as he is exiting or if it is destroyed in an accident or fire." 421 F.Supp. at 103. The analogy is weak, since the insured won the jackpot without having risked a wager.

[185] TSM Development, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 3111840 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (charge for connecting to municipal water system, which is not an assessment under state law, is not a lien covered by title policy); Concepts TV Productions, LLC v. Sharpe, 2019 WL 4020197 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished) (one-time charge for connecting to municipal sewer and water service not a lien on policy date and therefore no policy coverage for charge).

[186] Van Dinter v. Orr, 2005 WL 1796965 (Wash.App. Div. 3 2005) (unpublished) (monthly sewer use charge was not a lien or encumbrance; therefore, no loss suffered under either owner's or loan policies).

[187] In Giacalone v. New York, 104 Misc.2d 405, 428 N.Y.S.2d 792 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1980), a bill and payment therefor were presented at closing. The insurer-closer wrote "omit, see bill attached" on the marked-up policy at closing. However, below that note the closer added: "Except- ... Policy will Except additional water meter and sewer rent charges since the last mailing noted herein... ." Below this typewritten exception were the words, "Water Department Violation # 52829 dated 1/29/75 Meter # 5948 not registering." The owner-insured got a substantial water bill after closing for meter 5948. She sought payment from the insurer, on the theory that the insurer either had not excepted the charges or that a certain special procedure, by which the insurer could ascertain what additional water meter charges existed at closing time, should have been followed. The court disagreed, finding the water charges "clearly excepted in Schedule B."

In most cases, a tax that is reassessed or modified after the policy date is not covered, because the new portion of the tax was first levied after the date of policy.[188] However, there is the possibility of coverage if the reassessment process had begun before the policy date, particularly if there was public notice of that fact.[189]

A taxing authority occasionally seeks to assess additional taxes for prior years, or to back-date a special assessment, often because of an error in the tax roll or the assessment process. Unlike a reassessment, which typically is a process for which notice is given, there is often no prior notice that the taxing authority will seek to impose an after-the-fact tax. If there was no notice of the levy on date of policy, such assessments are not covered by most forms of ALTA policies, because they occur post-policy.[190] As noted above, however, Covered Risk 24 of the Homeowner's policy provides a limited protection against future assessments imposed after the policy date "because of construction or a change of ownership or use that occurred before the Policy Date." A reassessment due to a mistake in the roll would not be covered by that assurance.

Title insurers incur claims due to taxing authorities' inaccurate assessment rolls or records. Sovereign immunity makes it difficult to force the taxing authority to honor its earlier incorrect information and forgive or abate the taxes. The likelihood of success in such a case often hinges on the relative solemnity of the document by which the incorrect representation was made by the taxing authority, the degree to which the insured relied thereon, and the egregiousness of the error. In Ilana

---

[188] In Lone Star Equities, Inc. v. Dimitrouleas, 34 N.E.3d 936, 2015-Ohio-2294 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court held that the policy did not protect against real estate taxes that were reassessed after the policy date even though the reassessment process had begun before closing. The court relied in part on the fact that the 2006 ALTA policy at issue contained the statement in Covered Risk 2(b) that the policy protected against taxes "due or payable, but unpaid," because the tax had not become due before the policy date. In Princeton South Investors, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 437 N.J.Super. 283, 97 A.3d 1190 (N.J.Super.A.D. 2014), cert.den. 220 N.J. 268 (Jan. 23, 2015), the court held that an appeal by the municipality asserting that property was under-assessed, pending but undecided on the policy date, did not impose a lien or encumbrance or render title unmarketable, and neither the appeal nor the possible future tax triggered policy coverage. In Rhone v. First American Title Ins. Co., 928 N.E.2d 1185, 340 Ill.Dec. 588 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2010), the policy did not cover the reassessment of a tax for a tax year before the policy date, when the reassessment did not occur until two years after the policy date. However, Rhone was distinguished in Menconi v. Stewart Title of Illinois, 2015 WL 4534148, 2015 IL App (1st) 143043-U (Ill.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), in which the court refused to dismiss a suit against the insurer for a tax levy made after the date of policy for an "omitted" tax from several years prior to the policy date, because the law gave the "omitted" tax a retroactive lien date prior to the policy date. See the separate discussion in this section of so-called omitted taxes, which differ from reassessments.

[189] In Bel-Air Motel Corp. v. Title Ins. Corp. of Pennsylvania, 183 N.J.Super. 551, 444 A.2d 1119 (1981), the court found that there was coverage as to an assessment that had been made prior to policy date, but challenged, voided and reassessed after the policy date. The court noted that the assessment had been levied before policy date, on which date it became a lien, and the only dispute after that date was the amount. All improvements had been completed, and the court found sufficient notice of the proceedings in the public records.

[190] However, see Menconi v. Stewart Title of Illinois, 2015 WL 4534148, 2015 IL App (1st) 143043-U (Ill.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), in which the court refused to dismiss a suit against the insurer for a tax levy made after the date of policy for an "omitted" tax from several years prior to the policy date, because the law gave the "omitted" tax a retroactive lien date prior to the policy date and the insured argued that the tax could have been discovered in the public records before closing.

Realty, Inc. v. Village of Haverstraw,[191] for example, a village gave a verbal report of taxes that was wrong. Two years before, the same title insurer had gotten a correct written tax statement, for another transaction involving the same property. The court was so impressed by the weight of the stale but correct written tax statement, and the presumed lack of weight to be accorded an oral statement, that it found it "would be an error of law" to "preclude [the village] from recovering its tax revenue."[192]

Insureds and others sometimes seek to make the title insurer the guarantor of the accuracy of tax information obtained from the municipality and reported in the title insurance commitment. While the title insurance policy protects against the lien of real estate taxes not excepted, it is not a guarantee of tax information obtained from the government. There are many facts about taxes that the insurer discloses in the commitment or policy as a mere courtesy, such as tax parcel numbers, the party to whom the tax bill will be sent, tax sales, redemption rights, balances owed, and installment plans. There is no loss payable if the policy contains an incorrect statement about one of the above items of information, as long as it accurately excepts those taxes which are liens against the property as of the policy date. As an example, in Corvetti v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co.,[193] the policy contained exceptions for 1993 and 1994 unpaid taxes, interest and penalties. However, the 1993 taxes had been sold at an auction, which fact was not noted. The court found that the insurer was not obligated to disclose the tax sale in the policy. It said:

> The obligations of a title insurance company are "to be determined by reference to the provisions of the policy of title insurance"… . Here, Fidelity insured against loss or damage sustained by reason of, inter alia, title being vested other than as described in the policy. The policy unequivocally states that it "does not insure against loss or damage …which arise by reason of …[the] 1993 state, town and county taxes …and any additional interest and penalties" (emphasis supplied). In our view, the instant action falls squarely within this exclusion and, accordingly, plaintiffs lack a cognizable claim against Fidelity.

Certain older Illinois decisions imposed a duty on title insurers to protect the insured from "title surprises,"[194] which the courts deemed to include the provision of accurate information concerning the status of taxes. In Oak Park Trust & Savings Bank v. Intercounty Title Co. of Illinois,[195] the title insurance commitment correctly excepted the interest of the purchaser at the tax

---

[191] 558 N.Y.S.2d 566 (Sup.Ct.A.D. 1990).

[192] Id.

[193] 258 A.D.2d 32, 691 N.Y.S.2d 645 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 1999).

[194] The "title surprise" idea, which is not an accurate paraphrase of the Covered Risks, was first announced in Pohrer v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 652 F.Supp. 348 (N.D.Ill. 1987). Although the Pohrer decision has been cited by later courts, it was vacated in 882 F.Supp. 114. The order of vacation said: "This Court's Memorandum and Order entered on January 14, 1987 is hereby vacated, and, having been vacated, has no precedential value."

[195] 287 Ill.App.3d 647, 678 N.E.2d 723 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1997).

sale for the 1982 taxes. It made no exception for the 1983 and 1984 taxes, which had been paid. The tax sale buyer had paid those taxes. Under Illinois law, in order to redeem from the 1982 tax sale, the insured was obligated to also reimburse the tax buyer for the 1983 and 1984 taxes. The insured argued that the insurer had a duty to disclose in its commitment exception the identity of the person who paid the taxes. The court held that, if the identity of the taxpayer was shown in the public records, that information would be "subject to disclosure" by the title insurer in the commitment to insure. However, since that decision was issued, Illinois has declared that a title insurance commitment is not a representation of the state of title, which overturns the "title surprise" decisions.[196]

9.5 Liens Other Than Taxes

ALTA title insurance policies also protect against liens other than real estate taxes. Covered Risk 2 of the 2006 policies protects against "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on the Title." The 1992 policy provides protection against "liens." The Residential policy contains Covered Title Risk 7, which protects against liens resulting from "a judgment, tax, or special assessment…" and charges by a homeowner's or condominium association, as well as "other defects, liens, or encumbrances" (Covered Title Risk 14). The ALTA Homeowner's policy identifies coverage against mortgages, judgments, state or federal tax liens, and charges by a homeowner's or condominium association.

The policy protects against liens that have attached to the property on the date of policy, unless excepted in Schedule B of the policy. These include judgments, construction or mechanic's liens, state and federal tax liens, mortgages, deeds of trust and similar consensual liens, and private condominium or association assessments.[197] Federal tax liens are discussed at § 3.4.7.1. Policy coverage for construction liens is discussed in Chapter 10. There is no duty to indemnify an insured against a lien that had attached to the property as of the policy date, but which has since expired as a lien without having been enforced against the insured parcel.[198]

---

[196] First Midwest Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 218 Ill.2d 326, 300 Ill.Dec. 69, 843 N.E.2d 327 (2006).

[197] Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Associates No. 73, 2010 WL 1257748 (E.D.Ky.) (unpublished) (no coverage for future homeowner's association assessments that were not liens on date of policy, although amendment to restrictions imposing the obligation was not excepted); Clairton Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 438 Pa.Super. 488, 652 A.2d 916 (1995) (claims against insurer dismissed when judgment proven not to attach to property); Weinhold v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 83 Mass.App. Ct. 1116, 83 Mass.App.Ct. 1116, 983 N.E.2d 749 (Table), 2013 WL 776685 (Mass.App. Ct.) (unpublished) (policy does not protect insured owner against mortgage foreclosure brought on by his failure to pay the note he gave that is secured by the mortgage he gave).

[198] See Alford v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 3 S.W.3d 164 (Tex.App.-Eastland 1999), in which the court held that the insurer was not obligated to remove judgments that had expired without enforcement before the coverage suit against the insurer was tried. The court declared: "[b]ecause there was never a loss of title, we find that there was no failure of the Alfords' title which would provide a basis for recovery under the Alfords' title insurance policy."

The owners' policy does not protect against a lien against the insured, as discussed at §11.2.9. However, the owner's policy does protect one insured against a lien attaching to the interest of a different insured, unless an exclusion applies.[199] The policy does not protect against a lien that attaches after the policy date.[200]

An insurer may resolve a claim concerning a covered lien in one of several ways. For example, the insurer may remove the lien or bring an action to clear title if the insurer considers the lien to be invalid or unenforceable. See §3.4.7.1 concerning the way in which the insurer defends against and removes federal tax liens. One defense to a tax lien or judgment that is discoverable in a name index only is the lien holder's failure to correctly recite the debtor's name, which is discussed at §3.4.7.6. See §3.6 regarding the right to pay an adverse claimant, and §3.4 regarding the clearing of title. An insurer may not have satisfied its duty under an owner's policy by agreeing to insure over a covered lien.[201] See §9.8.2 regarding insuring over and the marketability coverage. See §3.1 concerning the insurer's right to conduct watchful waiting as to a lien that has not been enforced and which will expire within a reasonable time after the insured submits the claim notice.

The insurer is not obligated to pay off a lien that does not attach to the property under state law. For example, a judgment docketed against the seller after he or she has delivered a deed to the insured purchaser, but before the deed is recorded, may appear to attach to the property because the seller remains the record owner, but does not attach because title has passed by equitable conversion, as further discussed at §3.4.7.1.3. Similarly, in some states, a purchase money mortgage has priority over all other liens, even those docketed or recorded before the mortgage; that doctrine is further [199] Degueyter v. First American Title Ins. Co. of Louisiana, 230 So.3d 652 (La.App. 3 Cir. 2017) (when sister and brother-in-law took title to house together, policy protected sister against liens that attached to property only because brother-in-law also took title; dissent would have ruled that Exclusion 3(a) applied based on indications that sister was put in title to defraud judgment creditor).

---

[200] In Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2062947 (D.Nev. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed June 11, 2019, the court held that there was no coverage under a loan policy or certain endorsements for a homeowner's association lien based on assessments made after the policy date, even though the Nevada statute grants an HOA lien super-priority as to recorded deeds of trust, including the insured deed of trust. Essentially the same ruling was issued in Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 5578487 (D.Nev. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed November 18, 2019 and in HSBC Bank USA, N.A. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Group, Inc., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 5596392 (D.Nev. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed December 2, 2019. These decisions emanate from the declaration by the Nevada Supreme Court in SFR Investments Pool 1 v. U.S. Bank, 334 P.3d 408 (Nev. 2014), that NRS 116.3116(2) grants a homeowner association lien that is recorded after a first deed of trust priority over that recorded first deed of trust in an amount equal to nine months of assessments. Any additional assessments have priority only as of the date the HOA lien is recorded. In Bank of America, N.A. v. SFR Investments Pool 1, LLC, 427 P.3d 113 (Nev. 2018), as amended on denial of reh'g Nov. 13, 2018, the Nevada Supreme Court held that payment by the lender of the amount of the super-priority assessments before the auction sale preserves the priority of the deed of trust and causes the buyer at auction to take title subject to the deed of trust. The high court also held that an offer to pay the super-priority amount, even if tender is rejected by the association, is a offer discharge of the super-priority portion of the HOA lien. Bank of America, N.A. v. Thomas Jessup, LLC Series VII, 435 P.3d 1217 (Nev. 2019).

[201] Shada v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 457 So.2d 553 (Fla.App. 1984); House v. First American Title Ins. Co., 883 N.E.2d 197 (Ind.App. 2008).

discussed at §3.4.7.2.

A claim about a lien is handled differently under an owner's policy than under a loan policy. Under an owner's policy, courts have stated that the loss caused by a lien is immediate, so that the insurer's obligation to remedy the lien is not subject to any further condition.[202] However, as to a loan policy, the effect of a covered lien is most often not "immediate." The lien will not cause the lender to suffer a loss if its loan is repaid and, if the borrower does default, the lender still will suffer a loss only to the extent that the lien causes the lender to recover less than the loan amount from the property. Thus, in considering a loan policy claim concerning a lien, a New Jersey court stated:

> The fee interest of an owner is immediately diminished by the presence of a lien thereon since its resale value will always reflect the cost of removing the lien. It is otherwise with a mortgage lender whose loss cannot be measured unless the underlying debt is not repaid and the security of the mortgage proves inadequate. To say that the loss here consisted of the diminution in the security misses the point that the diminished security is now supplied by the title policy, but only to the extent that there has been a debt loss which remained unsatisfied from the proceeds of the mortgaged property. By requiring the insurer to pay now for the cost of removing the lien merely creates the conditions for a windfall should the debt be repaid or should the remaining lands provide sufficient security for payment.[203]

The measure of loss under a loan policy is fully discussed at §3.2.4.

9.6 Easements, Restrictions And Other Encumbrances

Most ALTA policies indemnify the insured against the existence of encumbrances on the title to the property.[204] Under the 2006 ALTA policies, the protection against encumbrances is found in Covered Risk 2.[205]

The encumbrance covered risk of the ALTA policy is invoked by various types of encumbrances, including easements and restrictions, unless the right is excepted from coverage in Schedule B. Another type of encumbrance is the restraint on alienation, such as an option to purchase and a right of first refusal.[206] The policy's protection against encumbrances has been held to

---

[202] Shada v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 457 So.2d 553 (Fla.App. 1984).

[203] Green v. Evesham Corp., 179 N.J.Super 105, 430 A.2d 944, 946 (App.Div. 1981).

[204] The ALTA Residential Limited Liability Junior Loan policy, however, does not provide an assurance against encumbrances. See First Tennessee Bank, N.A. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 282 F.R.D. 423 (N.D.Ill. 2012).

[205] The 2006 ALTA policies indemnify against loss or damage due to "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on the Title." Earlier ALTA policy forms contain the same type of coverage.

[206] See Ryan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 959 N.E.2d 870 (Ind.App. 2011), in which the insurer acknowledged that a right of first refusal invoked policy coverage, but the court found that the right in question was a personal covenant and did not burden the land after it had been transferred.

cover various matters that are deemed to be encumbrances under state law.[207] The definitions of "encumbrance" and other terms in the policy for types of encumbrances, such as "servitude," may be deduced from state law or dictionaries, whether lay or legal, depending on the circumstance.[208]

Not every statement appearing on a deed is a covenant, condition or use restriction that rises to the level of an encumbrance on title.[209] Recorded instruments that do not create encumbrances on title do not invoke policy coverage.[210] See §9.12 for a discussion of those classes of instruments that [207] A conditional use permit was found to be an encumbrance when recorded in the chain of title pursuant to a statute whose legislative history showed the intent that such a permit would be an encumbrance on title, 1119 Delaware v. Continental Land Title Co., 20 Cal.Rptr.2d 438 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1993). See also Glyn v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 132 App.Div. 859, 117 N.Y.S. 424 (1909) (encroachment of front steps of neighbor's house); Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67 (D.D.C. 1993) (encroaching underground foundation); Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. University Creek, Inc., 767 F.Supp. 1127 (M.D.Fla. 1991) (lis pendens is an encumbrance when it gives notice of an action in which the plaintiff claims a title interest in the land). In MBK Celamonte, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 1697703 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), reh.den. May 28, 2010, rev.den. July 21, 2010, the court held the taxing district was an encumbrance on title. In AHF-Bay Fund, LLC v. City of Largo, 227 So.3d 740 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 2017), the court held that a recorded memorandum about a payment-in-lieu-of-tax agreement was an encumbrance on title. In Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. RM Kids, LLC, ___ Ga.App. ___, 835 S.E.2d 21 (Ga.App. 2019), the policy did not contain an exception for a recorded notice advising that oil had leaked into the groundwater below the surface of part of the insured property. The court found an ambiguity in the policy because the terms "defect" and "encumbrance" were not defined. The court held that title was defective and that the recorded notice was an encumbrance on title.

[208] One definition of encumbrance is "an invasion of the interest in the exclusive possession of land." Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67 (D.D.C. 1993) (District of Columbia law), quoting Carrigan v. Purkhiser, 466 A.2d 1243, 1243 (D.C. 1983), which in turn quoted from the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821D, comment (d); W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 13, at 77, 82-83 (5th ed. 1984). See Annotation, What Constitutes A Charge, Encumbrance, or Lien Within Contemplation of Title Insurance Policy, 87 A.L.R.3d 764; GC Finance, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 1408823 (M.D.Tenn.) (unpublished), affirmed 2011 WL 5966512 (6th Cir. (Tenn.)) (unpublished) (partial release of easement not an encumbrance, because it modified and reduced burden on property originally imposed by easement). An excellent discussion of matters which constitute "encumbrances" under New York law is found in Pedowitz, Title Insurance in New York Today, New York State Bar Journal, Vol. 68, No. 2, p. 12 at 16 (Feb. 1996). In Pasha v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 5510931 (Ky.App.) (unpublished), the court found an exception for "[a]ny easements or servitudes appearing in the public records" to bar coverage for a use restriction for which the policy did not contain a separate exception that identified the instrument by its recording data. It said that the use restriction was a "servitude." Because that word is not defined in the policy and the insureds were consumers, the court turned to Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, which provided this definition: "a right by which something (as a piece of land) owned by one person is subject to a specified use or enjoyment by another." The court said that definition perfectly fit the restriction. It also found that the classification of a use restriction as a servitude was consistent with Kentucky real estate law.

[209] However, the statement in a deed that "[a]ny listing of real estate should be done through Antonio Russo unless otherwise agreed upon by both the buyer and seller" was found to be a mere suggestion and not an enforceable restriction or encumbrance on title, and thus not covered by the title policy. GRPL Enterprises, Inc. v. Angelo, 2006-Ohio-7065, 2006 WL 3849859 (Ohio App. 7 Dist.) (unpublished).

[210] Veeder v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 88 Mass.App.Ct. 1104, 36 N.E.3d 79 (Table), 2015 WL 5102856 (Mass.App. 2015) (unpublished) (recorded conservation commission order of conditions "places a restriction on the use of the land," but "does not create a restriction on the title to the property," and thus is not an encumbrance on title); Yen v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 5429458 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (title to condominium unit was not encumbered by pending lawsuit about an excepted matter which later caused increase in monthly assessments but did not

are recorded in the real estate records but that do not affect title.

The insurer is not obligated to indemnify the insured for loss incurred by the insured that is related to, but not caused by, an encumbrance for which there is policy coverage.[211] Also, there may be no diminution in value due to a recorded restriction, if the use prohibited by the restriction would also be barred by a zoning or building ordinance.[212] Structures, improvements and other physical objects on the property rarely if ever are deemed to be encumbrances on title, although issues about affect unit's title); GRPL Enterprises, Inc. v. Angelo, 2006-Ohio-7065, 2006 WL 3849859 (Ohio App. 7 Dist.) (unpublished) (statement in deed that property shall be listed for sale through a certain broker not an encumbrance on title); Pavilion Park, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 43222 (W.D.Ky.) (unpublished) (recorded covenant making owners of property responsible for any future cleanup of remediated waste disposal site was a physical condition that was not an encumbrance); Chesapeake Land Development Company LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 5930295 (W.D.Okla.) (unpublished) (finding that use restriction was an encumbrance and rejecting Pavilion Park analysis of an encumbrance on title); First American Title Ins. Co. v. McGonigle, 2013 WL 1087353 (D.Kan.) (unpublished); 2013 WL 1092893 (D.Kan.) (unpublished) (recorded agreement to repair dam, though binding on subsequent owners, was not an encumbrance on title); Village Carver Phase I, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 128 So.3d 107 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2013) (insurer not liable for failing to except easement that was time-barred under Florida Marketable Record Title to Real Property Act). The existence of a special taxing district, or a developer agreement, were held not to be encumbrances in Burman v. Richmond Homes Ltd., 821 P.2d 913 (Colo.App. 1991); Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 39 Colo.App. 235, 563 P.2d 979 (1977); and Luboff v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965). Title was not deemed to be encumbered by a developer's failure to comply with a subdivision ordinance on the sale of the parcel, in Busch v. Nervik, 38 Wash.App. 541, 687 P.2d 872 (1984). An "Agreement to Retain Land in Irrigable Status" was found not to affect the title to the property, and was thus properly not excepted in Schedule B, in Lombardo v. Pierson, 852 P.2d 308 (Wash. 1993). A township record of an abandoned septic tank was not a document which affected title, and thus the insurer was not required to report it as an exception to title, in Rood v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 936 A.2d 488, 2007 PA Super 315 (Pa.Super. 2007), pet.den. Nov. 19, 2008. Likewise, a covenant not to convey or encumber the property was not a lien against its title, and the insurer did not owe a duty to the lender that held the covenant to insist that the debt be paid at the time the property was transferred, in Titan Management, L.P. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2006 WL 3732995 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished). Title was held not to be encumbered by an agreement that dictated how the proceeds from the sale of the property were to be divided, in Klickman v. Title Guar. Co. of Lewis County, 105 Wash.2d 526, 716 P.2d 840 (1986), which states: "Put simply, the agreement here is not a title defect because it does not affect title. The agreement merely gives Herman Klickman a lien on one-third of the proceeds derived from a sale of the property in question. It does not give Herman Klickman any interest in the property, nor does it give him the right to disturb the buyers in their possession of the property. In short, the buyers could not possibly be affected by the terms of the agreement." Id. at 842. In Lauritzen v. First American Title Ins. Co., 424 P.3d 1043, 2018 UT App 58 (Utah App. 2018), the court held that the language of the policy and the definitions of marketability of title in legal dictionaries established that marketability is "limited to issues regarding" the right to own or possess the property. Therefore, subdivision ordinances and conditions placed on a subdivision map did not render title to the subdivided lots unmarketable.

---

[211] In Furey v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2012 IL App (2d) 120203-U, 2012 WL 6968946 (Ill.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), flood damage to the insured's house was caused by the overflowing of a river, not a drainage easement that was not excepted in Schedule B; therefore, the insurer was not required to pay for the flood repairs.

[212] In Gibbs v. Williams, 2015 WL 5440628 (W.D.Wis. 2015) (unpublished), the court held that an attorney for the insureds did not commit malpractice by failing to submit a claim notice to the insurer concerning a recorded use restriction prohibiting use of the property for a business, because a county zoning ordinance also prohibited the property's use as a resort. The court held that, because the policy included Exclusion 1, the insureds "could not recover under the title policy."

permanent and substantial structures may affect the marketability of the title.[213]

Also, an adequate exception in Schedule B removes coverage for an encumbrance.[214] The standard exception for easements not of record is discussed at §12.4. Some policies contain exceptions for all easements of record, as discussed at §12.7.4. The policy also excludes easements granted by or to which the insured agreed at time of purchase. See §11.2.2 regarding easements, restrictions "agreed to" in the purchase agreement. An exception for "restrictions" contained in certain deeds was found insufficient notice of a condition in the deed requiring that buildings be constructed before the property could be sold.[215] An exception for a recorded restriction may not eliminate coverage as to an identical restriction contained in another instrument,[216] or for a reverter clause contained in the same document.[217]

The existence of an encumbrance on title for which there is coverage does not provoke a positive duty of the insurer to enforce the right. When the insured property was subject to a declaration of restrictions that prohibited further division of parcels in the development, the title insurance policy did not obligate the insurer to prosecute the insured's lawsuit to enforce the no-subdivision restriction against another lot owner.[218] The policy does not protect against restrictions to which the insured agreed at time of purchase, per Exclusion 3(a), as discussed in §11.2.2. See §3.2.3.1.3 for a discussion of how to measure loss due to a restriction on title.

---

[213] Thomas v. Tradesmen's Trust & Savings Fund Co., 21 Pa.C.C. 151, 7 Pa. D. 375, 1898 WL 3681 (Pa.Com.Pl. 1898) (party wall); Udell v. City Title Ins. Co., 12 App.Div.2d 78, 208 N.Y.S.2d 504 (1960) (party wall); First American Title Ins. Co. v. Dahlmann, 291 Wis.2d 156, 715 N.W.2d 609, 2006 WI 65 (Wis. 2006) (substantial parking structure encroachment into public street). In Straily v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 6742505 (Tex.App.-Tyler) (unpublished), the court found that a sewer pipe that the city admitted had been laid without an easement or other right was a trespass and not an encumbrance on title, and thus did not invoke policy coverage. Many other physical conditions, and their claimed effect on the marketability of title, are discussed in §9.8.3. Encroachments are discussed in depth at §12.3.10.

[214] Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953).

[215] Feldman v. Urban Commercial, Inc., 78 N.J.Super. 520, 189 A.2d 467 (Ch. 1963), aff'd, 87 N.J.Super 391, 209 A.2d 640 (App. Div. 1965).

[216] Endruschat v. American Title Ins. Co., 377 So.2d 738 (Fla.App. 1979).

[217] Holly Hotel Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 147 Misc. 861, 264 N.Y.S. 3 (Sup. 1932), aff'd, 239 App.Div. 773, 264 N.Y.S. 7 (1933).

[218] Heyse v. Case, 114 Conn.App. 640, 971 A.2d 699 (Conn.App. 2009), cert.den. 293 Conn. 905, 976 A.2d 705 (Conn. July 23, 2009).

9.7 Right Of Access

FORM 71, Appendix A
Access--alternate right available

FORM 90, Appendix A
Access--regulatory restriction

Covered Risk 4 of the 2006 ALTA policy indemnifies the insured if, as of the date of policy, there was "[n]o right of access to and from the Land." Covered risk 4 of the 1992 ALTA policies insured against loss caused by the "lack of a right of access to and from the land" as of the date of policy. The coverage is identical though worded slightly differently. The ALTA Residential policy coverage is also identical, though worded as: "[y]ou do not have any legal right of access to and from the land." The coverage has been found not to be ambiguous.[219]

The access coverage is invoked when it has been established that there was no right of access to the insured land on the policy date.[220] The nature of the assured access right is not further described or defined in the ALTA policies. The policy does not assure that the access right in existence on the date of policy will continue in perpetuity, or that it cannot be terminated or extinguished after the policy date.[221] See §9.7.1 for a complete discussion of the types of access rights that are deemed adequate to fulfill the policy coverage. The insured should have the burden of

---

[219] Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209, 1214 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016); Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991).

[220] See, for example, Clements v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 537 S.W.2d 126 (Tex.App. 1976); L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee Co., 421 N.Y.S.2d 232, 70 A.D.2d 455 (Sup.Ct.App.Div. 1979); 52 N.Y.2d 179, 437 N.Y.S.2d 57, 418 N.E.2d 650, 17 A.L.R.4th 1067 (1981); subsequent appeal, 97 App.Div.2d 208, 469 N.Y.S.2d 415 (2nd Dep't 1983); mod. 63 N.Y.2d 955, 483 N.Y.S.2d 984, 473 N.E.2d 234 (1984); and Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. West, 110 Md.App. 114, 676 A.2d 953 (1996). In Emmert v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2012 WL 2117036 (D.Or.) (unpublished), recommendations adopted in 2012 WL 2117632 (D. Or.) (unpublished), the court held that the coverage had not been invoked, because the insured easement had not been found to be invalid, and that a buyer's demand for a different easement did not attack the insured easement. In James v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 325, 339 P.3d 420 (Mont. 2014), the court found that the Covered Risk had not been triggered by the insureds' assertions that the access easement was deficient because it did not describe the path by a centerline or depict it on a map. No one else claimed the right was deficient, and the neighbors whose properties the insureds cross for access had signed affidavits declaring that they did not object to the use of the private drive.

[221] In Community Credit Union v. AmeriTitle & Abstract, Inc., 344 Wis.2d 519, 822 N.W.2d 737 (Table), 2012 WL 3930615 (Wis.App.) (unpublished), the policy insured a recorded access easement with a five-year term. After the easement expired, leaving the property landlocked, the court held that the access coverage was not invoked by the expiration of the easement, and that the post-policy exclusion confirmed the lack of coverage. In Buroker v. Phillips, 169 A.D.3d 992, 93 N.Y.S.3d 397, 2019 N.Y. Slip Op. 01386 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2019), the insured's sole means of access was blocked several years after the policy date, by people who took title through a post-policy tax foreclosure. The court refused to grant summary judgment to the insurer based on the post-policy exclusion, but conceded that the exclusion would apply if the insurer could prove that the neighbor's blocked the access drive on the theory that the post-policy tax sale extinguished the insured easement.

proving that it did not have a right of access as of the policy date, in order to establish that the coverage has been invoked and that there is a duty to indemnify.[222] See §3.2.3.1.5 for a discussion of how to resolve a covered claim in which the insured parcel does not have a right of access.

The policy may recite an access easement in Schedule A, which causes the policy to indemnify the insured in the event the easement is invalid or unenforceable for the benefit of the insured parcel.[223] When the policy insures an access easement in Schedule A, the fact that the property has other access does not negate the covered risk, but may significantly reduce the amount of the loss, which is measured as the diminution in value caused by the lack of the easement.[224] The subject of easements described in Schedule A of the policy is covered at §8.8.

An insured may also get enhanced access coverage in other ways. The ALTA Homeowner's policy contains a more comprehensive coverage, by indemnifying the insured if the property does "not have both actual vehicular and pedestrian access to and from the Land, based upon a legal right." Also, various endorsements exist that provide additional assurances as to access rights, particularly the California Land Title Association 103.7 and ALTA 17 series endorsements. Those assurances may include: that the adjoining street is a public road, that it is physically open, that it is publicly maintained, and that the insured has the right to use any existing curb cuts on the insured property for access onto the street. Those coverages are given explicitly by endorsement, on payment of additional premium and only if the title examiner or underwriting personnel have investigated to determine that there is a sound basis on which to provide the additional indemnification. The fact that these access endorsements provide specific additional assurances as to access rights explains by negative inference that those assurances are not implicit in the generic access coverage found in the standard ALTA policies. See §9.11.2 for a complete discussion of access endorsements.

Access to property has nothing to do with its title. Therefore, the policy access coverage is distinct from the covered risks concerning the property's title. Most courts that have considered the [222] In Guenther v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 912168 (D. Idaho) (unpublished), the insured asserted that there was no right of access created by a recorded dedication for roadway, because it was subject to a reverter in the event of a condition subsequent, which was the failure to build the roadway to government specifications by a stated date. The access right was confirmed after the policy was issued. The insureds were never cut off from the property. The insureds made the rather convenient assertion that the reverter had occurred several decades before the policy was issued, triggering policy coverage. The court put the burden on the insurer to establish that the reverter had not occurred, which incorrectly relieved the insureds of the burden to prove that policy coverage had been invoked. The court then ruled that the right had reverted, despite any documentary or witness testimony clearly establishing that the roadway had not been built to governmental specifications by the specified date. *Guenther v. Old Republic Nat. Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 5810984 (D. Idaho) (unpublished).

---

[223] In Emmert v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2012 WL 2117036 (D.Or.) (unpublished), recommendations adopted in 2012 WL 2117632 (D. Or.) (unpublished), the insured used an access route that was different from the path of the easement insured in the policy because there was a creek in the way, and there was no bridge in that location. The insured attempted to sell the property. The buyer demanded a new easement grant for the path actually used. The court found that this demand did not trigger policy coverage, particularly because the easement grant was not defective.

[224] See Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Minnesota Office Plaza, LLC, 2010 WL 155175 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (insured's inability to use insured access easement because there was a Target store built in its path caused no loss, because the other access grants to the insured provided superior access and the access actually used by the insured).

issue have held that a lack of a right of access to the property does not render its title unmarketable, although one court so found. See the discussion of this issue at §9.7.1.

Access commonly means the right to travel to a public street, directly or indirectly. In some cases, access is by water or air rather than street. State law is used to determine the existence or lack of a right of access, as discussed fully at §9.7.1.

When the policy insures two contiguous parcels, one of which has a right of access, the coverage is not triggered by a lack of a right of access to the other parcel, since the insured may pass over his or her own land to obtain access.[225] This remains true even when the physical characteristics of the property may prohibit travel from the landlocked parcel across the other parcel to the public street.[226] Similarly, if the insured has more than one means of access, coverage is not invoked unless all rights fail. Thus, when the policy had insured access via three separate easements, the insurer had no duty to assert the insured's claim to a prescriptive easement over a fourth route.[227] Likewise, when one access right failed, an alternate access was found to suffice even though it is only passable on foot or by horse and was twice the distance from the nearest highway.[228]

The sections below address the four main issues concerning the scope of the access coverage: the nature and quality of access that qualifies as a right of access, the effect of public and private restrictions on that access right, the legal status of the adjacent right of way, and the physical improvement of the roadway.[229] See §8.8 concerning the related issue of policy coverage affirmatively insuring rights in adjoining streets or access easements (so-called "abutter's rights").

9.7.1 Access That Qualifies As A "Right Of Access"

FORM 23, Appendix A
"Reasonable" access not insured

FORM 86, Appendix A
Access onto public street not insured

---

[225] Havstad v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 58 Cal.App.4th 654, 68 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 97 Cal. Daily Op.Serv. 8107 (1 Dist. 1997), mod. Oct. 20, 1997, rev.den. Dec. 10, 1997; Coles v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2006-Ohio-4802, 2006 WL 2640266 (Ohio App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished); Green v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 2249760 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2005) (unpublished).

[226] Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 104 Cal.App.4th 122, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 681 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2002) (landlocked parcel at a different grade than the street-access parcel, and enclosed by a fence).

[227] Talley v. Baker, 207 A.D.2d 967, 617 N.Y.S.2d 80 (A.D. 4 Dept. 1994).

[228] Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991).

[229] Additional sources of information on this subject include: Ellis, Title Insurance Law Handbook, pp. 235-9; Annotation, Absence of Effectual Subdivision, or of Street or Easements, as Within Title Insurance Coverage, 40 A.L.R.2d 1247; Joyce Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2014-2015 Edition, §5:8; and Barlow Burke, Law of Title Insurance, §3.2.5.

The 2006, 1992 and Residential policies assure a "right of access" to the insured property (the ALTA Homeowner's policy has a broader coverage, as discussed in §9.7). The nature of that right, and limitations on its use, vary widely, depending on the property and its locale. This generic assurance of a right of access is limited.

The quality of the "right of access" assured by the policy is not measured by a universal standard of "reasonableness." A 1979 North Carolina decision, Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc.,[230] is the sole decision to find that the policy coverage must be read to assure a "reasonable" right of access. That court found that pedestrian access only was not reasonable access to an urban parcel intended as a restaurant site. In Marriott, however, the restriction on access was due to the municipality's implicit refusal to grant a driveway permit. The court held that this post-policy municipal regulation of the property was excluded under the police power exclusion. See §11.1.5 regarding the police power exclusion. Therefore, despite its reasonable-access holding, the court found no coverage for the lack of vehicular access.

Marriott has been rejected by many other courts, and followed by none. In discussing its "reasonable" access statement, one court declared "[t]his dicta in Marriott has been roundly criticized," and held that an insured has no reasonable expectation of vehicular access based on the basic policy coverage.[231] A number of other courts have also rejected Marriott.[232] By contrast, no court has ever adopted the Marriott position, even in North Carolina. The fact that Marriott improperly adds to policy coverage may also be deduced from the fact that there are access endorsements that provide an assurance of vehicular access, including the ALTA 17. Those endorsements are available in all or most states for an additional charge, if additional underwriting requirements can be met. Such endorsements would be unnecessary if Marriott were the correct interpretation of the basic access coverage found in the policy.

Nonetheless, at least one commentator, professor Palomar, incorrectly continues to cite the "reasonable access" dicta in the 1979 Marriott decision as support for the notion that the policy affords the insured a reasonable "expectation" of vehicular access coverage, without noting the decisions that have rejected that statement.[233] Professor Palomar makes the following assertion:

> To satisfy the insurer's obligations under the title insurance policy, the legal access that exists must be adequate and reasonable in light of the insureds' expectations. The title insurer's obligation as to access is not satisfied by mere pedestrian access or by access to the insured land via only boat or seaplane. Surely, insureds reasonably

---

[230] 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975), aff'ming 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974).

[231] Riordan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 393 F.Supp.2d. 1100, 1105 (D.N.M. 2005).

[232] In addition to Riordan, see Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016); Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991) ("Marriott seems to stand alone in offering any support for plaintiff's policy claim"); Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 104 Cal.App.4th 122, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 681 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2002); and Title & Trust Co. of Fla. v. Barrows, 381 So.2d 1088 (Fla.App. 1979).

[233] See Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2014-2015 Edition, § 5:8, p. 278, West/Thomson Reuters.

> expect that insurance of a right of access means they will have access to the insured property over land by car or truck. This would seem to go without saying and one would naturally question the good faith of a title insurer who declined a claim for lack of a right of access on the basis that the insured could legally walk to the property or access it by boat or plan over a lake. Yet, a magistrate judge actually upheld such a defense by one such insurer. On appeal, the First Circuit "recoiled" at that idea and remanded the case for a determination of whether lake access was adequate in that case as a matter of fact. Unfortunately, the First Circuit let pass the better ruling—that "a right of access" in a title insurance policy means "access over land by vehicle" as a matter of law, unless the title insurer expressly indicates that its access coverage is something less.[234]

Perhaps it is true that, in a perfect world, every parcel in the United States would have access via an abutting public road or a perpetual easement that would grant a right of vehicular travel leading to a public road. However, in the world that actually exists, no matter what a buyer or lender might wish to be true, hundreds of thousands of parcels do not have access by a convenient public road, or over the path of a recorded easement, on a paved surface that supports a vehicle. Many parcels, particularly in rural areas, have limited access rights and, yes, some have access only by water, airplane or on foot. This is a fact, and one that a title insurer is powerless to change. A purchaser of property is charged with notice of what may be observed on a personal inspection of the property. The buyer should, and normally does, inquire of the neighboring owner about the right, if any, to cross that land. Many parcels have limited access because they are separated from a public road by land whose owner does not have authority to grant a recorded easement, or whose long-time practice is not to do so. Thus, a buyer of land surrounded by a national forest, the courts have recognized, has no reasonable expectation that he or she holds a perpetual easement for vehicular access running across the Forest Service land, and presumably pays accordingly.[235]

Further, despite the professor's assertions about the "title insurer's obligation as to access," a title insurer cannot bestow access rights; it can only indemnify the insured if the rights already granted to a parcel are not valid and enforceable. A title insurance policy insures the rights actually

---

[234] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 5:8, p. 278, West/Thomson Reuters.

[235] In James v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 325, 339 P.3d 420 (Mont. 2014), the Montana Supreme Court acknowledged that that state employs the doctrine, but refused to rewrite the access coverage based on it. It noted that a buyer of real estate has the duty to examine the property before purchase, and such an inspection reveals the true state of the property's access. The court held that the access rights that the insureds claimed they had "expected" to receive were not reasonable, and considerably different from the rights they got. "Courts will not act to distort policy language in the face of a reasonable interpretation of the policy provision," it said. In Riffle v. United General Title Ins. Co., 64 Ark.App. 185, 984 S.W.2d 47 (Ark.App. 1998), likewise, the court held that, if the court does not account for what the insureds observed about access before they bought and the price they paid based on the access that was readily observable, the policy would be converted from an indemnity contract to a windfall: "[a]ppellants were well aware of the access problem when they decided to move ahead and purchase the property at issue. In fact, as the trial judge found below, the purchase amount tends to reflect due regard for the problem of access. Appellants received what they bargained for and cannot now claim that they have suffered damages. Furthermore, appellants acknowledged that they do have access, though only by boat. Thus, in terms of calculating value based on access, this property does retain some value."

possessed by the insured from attack. An increase in the quality of access required to meet a higher policy standard would not cause an increase in the actual access right that exists in favor of any parcel. In fact, the recurring theme in lawsuits about access coverage is that the insured seeks to have the policy construed as assuring a higher quality of access than the actual right that appertains to the parcel. If successful, the insured obtains a court order commanding the insurer to buy the insured a better right than the property has ever enjoyed. This transmutes the title insurance contract from the assurance of existing rights to an obligation to buy better property rights than the seller held or had the power to convey. This is not the bargain the insurer believes it is making when it insures the buyer's title in exchange for a small, one-time premium.

Professor Palomar offers her opinion that a "better ruling" by a court would set the bar very high in describing the "right of access" assured by the policy.[236] She does not offer a solution for those many parcels that have more meager access rights than her proposed universal high standard for a "right of access." She tacitly admits that the insurer cannot grant access rights or issue a fiat that a parcel's access rights shall henceforth meet this high standard. Rather, she allows that, if the coverage is defined so that parcels with lesser access rights do not qualify even for the policy's basic, generic access assurance, the insurer's only option will be to "expressly indicate[] that its access coverage is something less." In other words, she recommends that the "right of access" be redefined as setting a higher standard, even for policies already issued, but that policies to be issued in the future on parcels that do not meet this higher quality access standard should contain exceptions or endorsements deleting the coverage for which they do not qualify.

A title insurer may indeed make an exception or issue an endorsement that deletes or limits the access Covered Risk. However, let the thoughtful reader consider what would occur if title insurers were to be compelled to delete the access coverage whenever the parcel does not adjoin a public road or have the benefit of a perpetual recorded easement grant that permits vehicular travel. Lenders and purchasers of mortgage loans would in turn refuse to lend money on those parcels unless and until the owner obtained a perpetual recorded easement grant that permits vehicular travel, qualifying the parcel to obtain access coverage. Even if one ignores the question of the cost and time involved in thousands of such exercises, the owners of most such parcels would simply not be able to obtain a perpetual recorded easement grant that permits vehicular travel for the benefit of a parcel that does not have that right already. The actual effect of raising the definition of a qualifying "right of access" would be to cause the owners of thousands and thousands of parcels not to be able to obtain loans secured by their real estate, and to make those parcels more difficult to sell and worth less money.

The professor's analysis ignores the considerations and deliberations actually employed in the drafting of the "right of access" Covered Risk. That coverage is intentionally very broad and inclusive, setting a low bar as to the quality or nature of the access right, so that most parcels qualify to obtain that assurance. As one court framed it, "a right of access is all that is necessary to fulfill [the insurer's] contractual obligation, even if that access is not ideal."[237] If a parcel actually possesses greater access rights, title insurers offer endorsements that permit an insured to obtain an assurance of those greater rights. The several ALTA and CLTA access endorsements, for example, assure a right of vehicular travel. Those endorsements are offered for parcels that have such a right, but of course are not available for parcels that do not have such a right.

---

[236] As is addressed below, the professor's vision of what definition should be used for the term "right of access" is contrary to the court decisions that have considered the issue, and would render most of the additional coverages given by access endorsements to be surplusage for which insureds should not be spending premium dollars.

[237] Coles v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2006-Ohio-4802, 2006 WL 2640266 (Ohio App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished).

The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals rejected the notion that a limited-term, revocable license was less than the right of access assured by the policy, and expressly rejected the position taken by the professor in her book. That court ruled that a title insurer that had obtained a revocable license for access over federal land managed by the Bureau of Land Management had satisfied the access coverage:

> Consequently, we think the Colorado Supreme Court would determine that a long-term, revocable right-of-way grant—like the one that provides Woody Creek a right to enter and pass through BLM land to access the remote parcel—constitutes a "right of access" as that phrase is used in the title insurance policy.[238]

The court relied in part on the definitions of the terms "right" and "access" as found in Black's Law Dictionary.[239] It cited and quoted from many other decisions about the access coverage, and summarized those rulings as follows:

> Other jurisdictions have narrowly and literally construed right-of-access provisions in title insurance policies, finding a right of access even when the insured lacks a practical, physical means of access to the property or when the insured lacks an established means of access in the particular legal form the insured desires.[240]

The court also rejected the "reasonable" right of access notion, saying that:

> Finally, although Woody Creek asserts that it reasonably expected the phrase "right of access" to mean a permanent right of access, that expectation doesn't defeat the plain and ordinary meaning of unambiguous policy language.[241]

Professor Palomar makes the further assertion that "[t]he majority rule is that lack of access makes title unmarketable."[242] The professor's claimed "majority rule" is supported by only one

---

[238] Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209, 1214 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016)

[239] It quoted the definition of "right" found in Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (definition 5), which is "The interest, claim, or ownership that one has in tangible or intangible property," and of "access," which is defined as "A right, opportunity, or ability to enter, approach, pass to and from, or communicate with."

[240] 830 F.3d at 1213.

[241] 830 F.3d at 1214. The court held that the doctrine of reasonable expectations did not apply, because the right of access coverage was not ambiguous.

[242] See Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 5:8, p. 280, footnote 19, West/Thomson decision and her own treatise.[243] Her "majority rule" statement was accepted as true by one court, without further analysis.[244]

Despite the professor's proclaimed "majority rule," many courts have held that a lack of a right of access to the property does not render its title unmarketable.[245]

Further, the professor's statement was rejected and refuted in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC.[246] The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals noted that the insurer questioned the "majority rule" statement, and had produced three decisions from Colorado alone holding "that even a complete lack of access doesn't render title unmarketable in Colorado."[247] The [243] The professor supports her assertion with two decisions—Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. West, 110 Md.App. 114, 676 A.2d 953 (1996), and Regan v. Lanze, 40 N.Y.2d 475, 387 N.Y.S.2d 79, 354 N.E.2d 818 (1976)—and her own treatise, Palomar and Patton on Land Titles. West held that a parcel's landlocked condition rendered title unmarketable because the owners would have to bring a lawsuit in order to establish an easement by necessity in order to gain a right of access. However, again, title is only unmarketable if the title is subject to attack by someone else in court, not if the owner of the property might have the ability to obtain a new right through a lawsuit. Also, a property owner may face the risk of a lawsuit about building code violations, but the possibility of that litigation would not render the title unmarketable because the building code violation does not affect title. Further, Regan does not say that the lack of a right of access makes title unmarketable. In that case, the buyer contended that a deed that described the parcel by a call to an adjoining road was potentially confusing, because the road had just been relocated and it was not clear if the reference was to the new or old location. However, the court concluded that it was clear which road location was intended, the description was not ambiguous, and title was marketable. The decision did not hold that the parcel was landlocked, or that if it had been that fact would have rendered its title unmarketable.

---

Reuters.

[244] In Perry v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 48 N.E.3d 1168, 2015 IL App (2d) 150168, 2015 WL 6859167 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court held that a title insurer must defend its insureds in a lawsuit brought to block the insureds from paving their easement path, despite the fact that the neighbors acknowledged that the easement grant was valid and gave a right to travel across their land. The court based its ruling on the professor's "majority rule" assertion.

[245] At least six decisions, two from state supreme courts, have held that a lack of or limitation on access does not render title unmarketable. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016), the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals held that access via a license only did not render its title unmarketable. Colorado and Utah have held that even a complete lack of access does not make title unmarketable. See Campbell v. Summit Plaza Associates, 192 P.3d 465 (Colo.App. 2008), and Mostrong v. Jackson, 866 P.2d 573 (Utah App. 1993). The Wyoming Supreme Court said that the insured's title was marketable despite her allegedly iffy access right, in Haines v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2008 WY 31, 178 P.3d 1086 (Wyo. 2008), and specifically rejected the West analysis. In Riordan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 393 F.Supp.2d. 1100 (D.N.M. 2005), a New Mexico court held that title to the property was not rendered unmarketable due to the fact that its access right was limited to hiking or horseback over a trail in a federal forest. In Sinks v. Karleskint, 130 Ill.App.3d 527, 85 Ill.Dec. 807, 474 N.E.2d 767 (Ill.App. 5 Dist. 1985), the court rejected the argument that a lack of access caused the seller to breach the covenant of quiet enjoyment, and also refused to find that a lack of access rendered title unmarketable. In Lauritzen v. First American Title Ins. Co., 424 P.3d 1043, 2018 UT App 58 (Utah App. 2018), the court approved Mostrong and Sinks and concluded that "the holding of Mostrong is entirely in line with the narrow conception of 'marketability of title' shared by the vast majority of courts to discuss the issue." The Lauritzen court said that marketability is attacked only if the owner's title or right to possess the property is challenged by another party.

[246] 830 F.3d 1209 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016).

[247] The decisions cited by Fidelity and the court were Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 39 Colo.App. 235, 563 P.2d court said that the professor had confused marketability of title with a physical condition that affects the market value of the property:

> We read these cases as strongly supporting Fidelity's position that a lack of legal access to property isn't the type of defect that renders a title unmarketable. Significantly, while both Edwards and Knight suggest that the hazard of future litigation might affect marketability, both cases also employ limiting language to explain that the litigation referred to involves challenges affecting the right of possession and quiet enjoyment of the property. This limitation is consistent with the majority view, which "emphasize[s] the differences between marketability of title and marketability of land."[248]

The court followed with a long discussion of the numerous decisions that have ruled that a title insurance policy does not protect against physical conditions and other matters that affect market value but not the marketability of the title. It noted that "at least one jurisdiction has applied the distinction between economic marketability and title marketability in the lack-of-access context."[249] The court reached this conclusion as to the marketability argument:

> As we've discussed, Fidelity's procurement of a 30-year right-of-way provided Woody Creek with a right of access to the remote parcel even if it wasn't the type of access Woody Creek desired. In essence, Woody Creek's complaint here is that the lack of permanent access lessens the economic marketability of its property. But the weight of authority recognizes that a lack of economic marketability doesn't equate to nonmarketable title.[250]

It is fortunate for property owners that the "majority rule" statement has been debunked. If it were true that a property without access had unmarketable title, the owner of property having lesser access would not be able to buy a standard title insurance policy, and any potential buyer or lender would be permitted to reject title as being unmarketable.

The following is a review of the types of access rights that different classes of property owners are customarily willing to grant. This serves as a partial guide to the nature and quality of access rights available over such classes of neighboring land.

---

979 (1977); Campbell v. Summit Plaza Associates, 192 P.3d 465 (Colo.App. 2008); and Knight v. Devonshire Co., 736 P.2d 1223 (Colo.App. 1986). The most directly applicable decision was Campbell, which ruled that a grantor had not breached the covenant against encumbrances in a general warranty deed when it conveyed a landlocked parcel of property to the purchaser. Campbell relied on Mostrong v. Jackson, 866 P.2d 573 (Utah App. 1993) and Sinks v. Karleskint, 130 Ill.App.3d 527, 85 Ill.Dec. 807, 474 N.E.2d 767 (1985) in reaching that conclusion.

[248] 830 F.3d at 1217.

[249] The court cited Riordan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 393 F.Supp.2d. 1100 (D.N.M. 2005).

[250] 830 F.3d at 1218.

Some parcels' sole means of access is across a railroad right-of-way. Railroads have the ever-present concern that a grant of the right to travel over their tracks will lead to a death or serious injury, or the loss of property. As a result, a railroad typically will grant, at most, a revocable license that is limited to a certain class of traffic. In some jurisdictions, railroads are barred by law from offering more expansive rights to cross their operational trackage, because the regulator also has a concern about public safety.[251] A railroad typically will not grant a license if by doing so there will be a significant increase in traffic over the right-of-way, particularly residential traffic and children. A parcel served by a farm crossing, which permits occasional traversing of the right-of-way by a farmer owner, may not be developed into a subdivision, but has a right of access nonetheless. If a railroad agrees to grant a new license, it typically will require the licensee to pay the full cost of installing safety equipment at the crossing, which can be quite expensive. A railroad license may require the consent of more than one railroad that has trackage rights over the right-of-way, and may also require the consent of a state office.

There are many thousands of privately-owned parcels lying inside state and national forests and parks, or that have their access over land managed by the Bureau of Land Management.[252] Many of those parcels formerly had access over private land, but the private land was bought or condemned by the government, landlocking the remaining private parcels except to the extend the government is willing to grant access rights.[253] It can be expensive and time-consuming to obtain a

---

[251] The Federal Railroad Administration keeps statistics on crossing accidents and deaths. It reports that, in 2013, there were 2,087 vehicle-train collisions that caused 251 fatalities and 929 serious injuries. See http://oli.org/about-us/news/collisions-casulties.

[252] The BLM alone manages more than 245 million acres of public land. See http://www.blm.gov/wo/st/en.html. Under the Wilderness Act, the BLM is responsible for 221 Wilderness Areas with 8.7 million acres in 10 western states. It also manages the National Conservation Lands, also known as the National Landscape Conservation System, which includes 877 federally recognized areas and approximately 30 million acres of National Monuments, National Conservation Areas, Wilderness Areas, Wilderness Study Areas, Wild and Scenic Rivers, National Scenic and Historic Trails and Conservation Lands of the California Desert. The BLM's charge is to preserve these lands, which militates against the granting of permanent driveways. The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, Public Law 94-579, is found at 43 U.S.C. §§1701 et seq., and instructs the BLM that the public lands "be managed in a manner that will protect the quality of scientific, scenic, historical, ecological, environmental, air and atmospheric, water resource, and archeological values; that, where appropriate, will preserve and protect certain public lands in their natural condition; that will provide food and habitat for fish and wildlife and domestic animals; and that will provide for outdoor recreation and human occupancy and use… ." Section 501 of the Act (43 U.S.C. §1761) describes the conditions under which a right-of-way of some kind may be granted across national forest lands (other than wilderness land).

[253] See, for example, National Ass'n of Property Owners v. U. S., 499 F.Supp. 1223 (1980), which describes the way in which Congress landlocked resorts, cabins and other privately-owned parcels in Minnesota by passage of the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness Act, Pub.L. No. 95-495, 92 Stat. 1649 (October 21, 1978). Congress thus decreed that those private parcels were to be deprived of the vehicular access that they had enjoyed before the federal government bought or condemned the encircling parcels. That law produced decades of litigation over access rights, including the claim that the Act violated the constitutional rights of handicapped persons by limiting access and travel to those parcels to walking or by boats without motors. An advocacy group was still seeking to shut down all motorized boats and vehicles within the Boundary Waters Wilderness as of 1992. See Friends of the Boundary Waters Wilderness v. Robertson, 978 F.2d 1484 (1992).

grant of a right to cross land owned by the federal government.[254] In every case, there is a significant limit to the right that can be obtained, if any.[255] The federal Park Service, Forest Service or the BLM are typically only willing (or statutorily permitted) to grant a license or permit to use trails or fire lanes they maintain.[256] In some cases, the sole right of access is created by the act of Congress that created the park or forest, in which case the private owner cannot obtain a separate recordable grant.[257]

Some parcels are surrounded by tracts of privately-owned timber or mining land, or farms, ranches or preserves. In such cases, access is typically via roads maintained by the neighboring private owner or owners. Even when those owners have given permission to cross their land, they are often unwilling to grant a written access right. In the author's experience, most owners of such land will not grant any right greater than a revocable license or permit. The policy's access coverage is satisfied if the insured land has the benefit of such a license or permit, or the insured has no reason to expect that a request for such a right would be denied.[258]

Some parcels obtain access via a road built on land owned by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in trust for a Native American tribe, or over reservation land ceded to the Native American tribe. A BIA road is typically open to the public, although a BIA road's status is sometimes hotly contested.[259] The BIA's authority in the issuance of easements is limited to 50-year grants. In most [255] As examples of litigation with the Forest Service over its decisions to issue or refuse access easements or licenses to the owners whose parcels have been landlocked by the creation of federal forests and parks, see United States v. Jenks, 22 F.3d 1513 (10th Cir. (N.M.) 1994); and Montana Wilderness Ass'n, Nine Quarter Circle Ranch v. United States, 655 F.2d 951 (9th Cir. (Mont.) 1981).

---

[254] In Grill v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 344326 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished), the title insurer obtained a ten-year access license for the insured, which later expired. The court did not affirmatively rule that the license was a qualifying right of access, because it dismissed the case based on a statute of limitations. The court observed, however, that the insured could apply for an access license under the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (16 U.S.C.A. §3210), because landlocked private holdings within the National Forest System boundaries "have a statutory right to reasonable access, subject to conditions determined by the Forest Service."

[256] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016), the court found that the insured held a qualifying access right over federal land based on a revocable license with a thirty-year term, and thus the title insurer that obtained the license had fulfilled its policy duties. The title insurer had obtained the broadest right that the federal government was willing to grant. The insured was aware when it bought the property that access ran across the federal land.

[257] In Riordan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 393 F.Supp.2d. 1100 (D.N.M. 2005), the court held that the policy coverage was not invoked when the insured was limited to hiking or horseback travel to his property via a trail in a federal forest, which "right of access was mandated by federal law." It cited 16 U.S.C. § 3210(a) as the authority for that access right, as granted to the public and owners of adjoining land. Former public roads that led to the property had been closed. Also see the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness Act, Pub.L. No. 95-495, 92 Stat. 1649 (October 21, 1978).

[258] See United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. (Me.) 1999), in which the former owners had once held licenses to travel over the logging roads that led to the parcel and, although one license had expired, the insured had never been denied the use of the roads.

[259] In Northern New Mexicans Protecting Land, Water and Rights v. United States, 704 Fed.Appx. 723, 2017 WL 3081630 (10th Cir. (N.M.)) (unpublished), the court admitted that there had been a festering dispute over the public's cases, the tribe must approve the grant, the applicant must deliver an appraisal to the BIA, the tribe may demand more money than the appraised value, and the process can take several years. A tribal road may be restricted to use by the members of the tribe, by tribal ordinance. A California court found that, when access was via a road crossing Native American reservation lands, and the parties stipulated that the BIA had not approved the road easement, the land had the same value as other similarly-affected parcels. The property was not rendered valueless, as the insured claimed.[260]

When the land lying between the insured parcel and the nearest public road is privately owned, a right of access is typically obtained, if at all, by one of three methods—a voluntary grant, the imposition of an easement as a matter of law based on a recognized legal doctrine, or by private condemnation (in those jurisdictions that so permit). Private condemnation is a creature of statute.[261] An access right may be granted voluntarily in a variety of ways, including a revocable license, a perpetual easement or an easement that expires at the end of a fixed term.[262] The policy is satisfied by a writing that grants a right of some sort, even if that right is of a lesser quality than what the insured would consider to be "legal" or "deeded" access.[263] The assurance of a right of access does right to use county roads that cross BIA land since 1965, and that the BIA brought the matter to a head by reversing positions and claiming that the roads were a trespass. However, the court ruled that members of the public were not entitled to sue to quiet title over BIA land and their claims were not "ripe" in any event.

---

[260] Kaufer v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2002 WL 1651341 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2002) (unpublished).

[261] The claim administrator must consult state law to see if this remedy is available. There is a good discussion of several state laws in John N. Iurino and Sivan R. Korn, You Can't Get There From Here (or Can You?): A Road Map to Public Access, in Probate & Property, May/June 2014, at p. 13. For example, Minnesota Statute Section 164.08, subdivision 2(a), permits a private landowner to petition a town board for an access path termed a "cartway" to be run over neighboring land to provide access to a public road. That statute was construed in Watson v. Bd. of Supervisors of Town, 239 N.W. 913 (Minn. 1931) and Cich v. Bay Lake Township, 2018 WL 5915444 (Minn.App.) (unpublished).

[262] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016), the court found that the insured held a qualifying access right over federal land based on a revocable license with a thirty-year term, and thus the title insurer that obtained the license had fulfilled its policy duties. The title insurer had obtained the broadest right that the federal government was willing to grant. The insured was aware when it bought the property that access ran across the federal land. In Community Credit Union v. AmeriTitle & Abstract, Inc., 344 Wis.2d 519, 822 N.W.2d 737 (Table), 2012 WL 3930615 (Wis.App.) (unpublished), the court held that the expiration of an insured five-year access easement after the policy date did not invoke the access coverage, and the post-policy exclusion applied, because there was a right of access to the property on the date of policy, and that limited-term grant qualified as a "right of access." In Perry v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 48 N.E.3d 1168, 2015 IL App (2d) 150168, 2015 WL 6859167 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court held that a title insurer must defend its insureds in a lawsuit brought to block the insureds from paving their easement path, despite the fact that the neighbors acknowledged that the easement grant was valid and gave a right to travel across their land.

[263] In James v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 325, 339 P.3d 420 (Mont. 2014), the insureds' attorney argued that, "[t]o have legal access to property, there needs to be some piece of paper of record that provides access." The court said this was not necessarily so in order to meet the fairly modest type of right that satisfies the policy's generic coverage. It said that the insureds were confusing "legal access" with a "right of access" as insured by the policy. In James, the insureds did have the benefit of a recorded easement (albeit one that did not describe or depict the path of the drive), which the court held to satisfy the policy coverage. In United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. (Me.) 1999), the purchaser at a private auction claimed that he had been promised "deeded access" by the owner and United Bank, which had obtained a title commitment for the sale. "Deeded access" presumably meant an easement. The court not imply that there must be a piece of paper conferring that right.[264] The standard policy access coverage does not assure a right of vehicular access.[265] An easement granted or imposed by law, such as an easement by necessity, may or may not qualify as a right of access, depending mainly on whether the right is automatic or must be established in litigation.[266]

A parcel may also abut a road used by the public but whose status is less than obvious. In all or most states, some roads are considered to be public but are maintained by the adjoining property owners. The standard policy access coverage does not contain the assurance that the property is served by a road that is publicly maintained, although the ALTA 17 access endorsement provides that assurance when it is a true statement. Thus, a right of access via a long-established road that is found that, no matter what might have been promised the bidder, the policy made no such assurance: "The Chicago Title insurance policy nowhere provides any assurance of deeded access. All that is protected is a "right of access," which could be secured in a variety of ways. No doubt deeded access--e.g., a perpetual easement granted in a deed by the owner of the intervening property--would be more valuable than, say, an easement by necessity under state law or a year to year license for a fee, such as that originally secured by Caliendo but allowed to lapse. Read according to its terms, the policy does not cover a lawsuit whose gravamen is the promise of something different from and more valuable than a generic right of access." In Coles v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2006-Ohio-4802, 2006 WL 2640266 (Ohio App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that "a right of access is all that is necessary to fulfill [the insurer's] contractual obligation, even if that access is not ideal."

---

[264] In James v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 325, 339 P.3d 420 (Mont. 2014), the insureds' attorney argued that, "[t]o have legal access to property, there needs to be some piece of paper of record that provides access." The court said this was not necessarily so in order to meet the fairly modest type of right that satisfies the policy's generic coverage. It said that the insureds were confusing "legal access" with a "right of access" as insured by the policy.

[265] See Riordan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 393 F.Supp.2d. 1100 (D.N.M. 2005), which held that the policy coverage was not invoked when the insured was limited to hiking or horseback travel to the property, and that the reasonable expectations doctrine could not be used to expand the unambiguous coverage.

[266] The claim administrator should carefully examine the statutes or case law in the jurisdiction establishing the conditions under which an access easement is imposed by law, to determine if the easement is automatically imposed and how its path is determined, and compare the law to the facts of the claim at hand. The most common form of such an easement is an easement by necessity, which in most states is imposed when land is divided, cutting one resultant parcel off from an existing access right. In Rio Mesa Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 4639103 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the insured parcels had the benefit of an easement by necessity, and that such right was sufficient to qualify under the standard access coverage granted in the policy. The appeals court remanded on the question of whether or not the easement by necessity satisfied the allegedly expanded access coverage given by "custom" access and contiguity endorsements. In BJD Properties, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2017 WL 2640777 (W.D.La.) (unpublished); findings adopted in 2017 WL 2625411 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), the court held that, although the Louisiana code imposes an easement by necessity (what that state calls a gratuitous right of passage) when a landlocked parcel is created by the division of a parcel, that access right was not so clear and definite under the facts of the particular parcel that it supported a motion to dismiss the insured's policy coverage lawsuit. The court noted that the access path is automatically set when the larger parcel is divided only if that pathway had been in use before the land division; otherwise, the parties must agree on the path or have it set by a court. In this case, it was not clear if an access path was in use before the parcel was divided. In United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. (Me.) 1999), the court referred to an easement by necessity as a means of access but did not make a determination that such an easement always satisfies the access coverage. In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. West, 110 Md.App. 114, 676 A.2d 953 (1996), the court held that title was unmarketable because, in Missouri, the court believed that an owner would have to bring a lawsuit in order to establish an easement by necessity.

not maintained by the government and that may have been established under the doctrine of highway by user qualifies as a right of access.[267] Courts disagree as to whether or not the policy assurance is met by proof that the owner has enjoyed continuous and unblocked travel to the insured parcel over a public or private right-of-way, without more.[268]

A parcel located on mainland may or may not have an access right that meets the policy standard if the sole means of travel is by water.[269] However, every parcel located on an island requires travel by bridge, tunnel, boat or airplane to get to the island. On larger islands, the secondary access question is travel from the shore, harbor or airport to the insured parcel. Manhattan is an island, yet is more accessible than many rural areas. Other islands, however, have no roads. The standard for a qualifying right of access as to an island parcel thus depends on the size of the island and its physical attributes.

The right of access coverage is not invoked if the parcel abuts a public road or has an access easement but there is a physical impediment to travel from the road to the insured parcel, such as a change in grade or a barrier, whether natural or man-made. Thus, a parcel has a right of access if it abuts a public street, even if the grade of the street is so different from that of the parcel that it is

---

[267] In Haines v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2008 WY 31, 178 P.3d 1086 (Wyo. 2008), the Wyoming Supreme Court ruled that an insurer was not required to obtain a recorded easement for the insured to give her a better access right than the property has ever enjoyed, when access was via a long-established road and the insured had not been barred from using the road to travel to her property.

[268] In United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. (Me.) 1999), the property, a resort, obtained its access via 17 miles of logging roads. The former owner had obtained a license to travel over 11 miles of the roads at a cost of $100 per year, and the logging company would have given a license over the remaining property if asked. Compare United Bank to Guenther v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 5424004 (D. Idaho) (unpublished), which held that the assurance of a "right of access" requires evidence that the insured parcel is benefited from the grant of a right of some kind, although not necessarily a public road, and is not satisfied by a showing that there is a road whose use has never been interrupted, since the insureds had asserted that a recorded road dedication might have reverted. The Guenther court said that the insurer would be required at trial to prove that some right of access had been granted to the insured parcel, and was not entitled to summary judgment based only on its proof that there had been uninterrupted access to the parcel and others along the road for decades. It said: "Alas, the Policy does not define 'right of access.' … Had the Policy insured against losses incurred by reason of, simply, 'no access' to the Property, Old Republic's argument would have more persuasive sway. But it doesn't. The Policy adds the term 'right of' to modify the word 'access' which must provide substantive meaning that Old Republic's interpretation of the Policy does not address, beyond equating it to physical access. Therefore, while Old Republic's reading of the Policy might be a reasonable one, so is Plaintiffs' retort that coverage applies when there is no legal access to the Property, identifying the term 'right of' as meaning 'legal.'… Given these conflicting interpretations, the Policy is ambiguous regarding coverage. … As a result, this Court determines that the Policy provides coverage in instances where no right of access—legal access—exists to and from the Property."

[269] In United Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 168 F.3d 37 (1st Cir. (Me.) 1999), the appeals court sent the case back on remand to determine if water access alone should be deemed sufficient to qualify as a "right of access." In Riffle v. United General Title Ins. Co., 64 Ark.App. 185, 984 S.W.2d 47 (1998), all overland access rights were invalid, but the hunting land abutted water and could be reached by boat. The court rejected the insureds' demand for policy limits, finding that the property was not valueless since the owners could get there by boat and their intended use was recreational and not commercial.

very difficult to travel from the street to the useable area in the insured parcel.[270] Likewise, the access coverage is not invoked if the insured possesses a valid access grant, but the easement path is over harsh terrain that makes travel difficult or impossible.[271] Thus, in Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[272] when one access right failed, the remaining access route was found sufficient even though it is only passable on foot or by horse (in the insured's words, a "goat path"), and was twice the distance from the nearest highway as the access route preferred by the insured. In finding that coverage was not invoked, the Gates court relied on the fact that the policy excepted matters that would be disclosed by inspection:

> It is true that the western road, the route by which plaintiff Gates had a right of access, was a difficult one and, in its present condition, of only limited usefulness, but if plaintiff had a right of access, even though over a rough and nearly impassable route, he makes no case under his title insurance policy. A title insurance company may not be expected to investigate the physical condition of a way of legal access to the insured property to determine if it is passable. In fact, the insurance policy expressly excludes from coverage "loss or damage by reason of... (3) Encroachments, overlaps, conflicts in boundary lines, shortages in area, or other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises."[273]

---

[270] In 43 Park Owners Group, LLC v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 121 A.D.3d 937, 995 N.Y.S.2d 148, 2014 N.Y. Slip Op. 07120 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2014), the policy access coverage was not triggered when the insured parcel abutted a public street, but the surface of the ground on the insured parcel was between four and 30 feet below street level, and the city owned and maintained a retaining wall running along the street boundary. The court affirmed the crucial distinction that the policy indemnifies if there is no right of access, but "does not cover claims concerning lack of an existing means of physical access." It cited a number of cases that have so held, from New York and other states. It said that Stewart Title had proven that the parcel has "a legal right of access because the subject property abuts a public street… ." In Green v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 2249760 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2005) (unpublished), the court held that the access coverage was not triggered by the fact that the property was fenced off from and not at grade with the adjoining street.

[271] In Emmert v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2012 WL 2117036 (D.Or.) (unpublished), recommendations adopted in 2012 WL 2117632 (D.Or.) (unpublished), the insured used an access route that was different from the path of the easement insured in the policy because there was a creek in the way, and there was no bridge in that location. The insured attempted to sell the property. The buyer demanded a new easement grant for the path actually used. The court found that this demand did not trigger policy coverage, particularly because the easement grant had no defect. The court said: "Emmert may question the quality of the Parcel IV easement, but that does not entitle him to pursue a claim for damages against Stewart Title based on the lack of a legal right to that easement." In Perry v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 48 N.E.3d 1168, 2015 IL App (2d) 150168, 2015 WL 6859167 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court held that a title insurer must defend its insureds in a lawsuit brought to block the insureds from paving their easement path, despite the fact that the neighbors acknowledged that the easement grant was valid and gave a right to travel across their land.

[272] Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991).

[273] 813 S.W.2d at 11-12.

9.7.2 Effect Of Private And Public Restrictions On Right Of Access

Absent a specific affirmative access coverage, the ALTA policies do not indemnify the insured against any limitation on the right of access by ordinances or permit powers regulating an adjacent street, or a private restriction on the use of the street.[274] For example, a municipality's refusal to issue a driveway permit to the insured was an exercise of the police power. The police power exclusion thus places an implicit limit on the scope of the access coverage.[275] Also, private restrictions that prevented the insured from building a driveway did not cause it to lose its right of access to the adjacent street.[276]

Despite the above, one court observed that an access easement limiting the right to travel over the encumbered land solely for "farming and ranching purposes," which limitation was not disclosed in the title policy, "may" have triggered a covered claim if the easement had been the sole means of access, which was not the case.[277] The policy may protect against restricted access to the property, if the policy fails to recite a recorded instrument imposing that restriction, but the insured must still prove that the restricted access caused a loss.[278]

The policy does not assure that the access right is exclusive or without restrictions as to its use. When an access easement is an insured parcel, the policy does not assure that the insured is the sole party entitled to use the access drive.[279] Also, the insurer is not liable if the insured merely fails

---

[274] In Chudy v. William Raveis Real Estate, Inc., 2010 WL 5188445 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), a notice approving a new subdivision's use of the same public street that provided the insured's access did not invoke the access coverage, particularly since the conditions imposed on the neighboring subdivision owner had apparently been met and the notice was excepted in the policy. The case illustrates the general principle that the government's power to regulate public streets does not invoke the access covered risk. In Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 6101016 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 204 (unpublished), the court held that any claimed interference with the insured's repairs of a public right of way was governmental action under its police powers, and did not interfere with his right of access or invoke policy coverage.

[275] Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975), aff'ming 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974).

[276] Lincoln Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 46 Cal.App.3d 493, 120 Cal.Rptr. 219 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1975).

[277] In Hulse v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 WY 95, 33 P.3d 122 (Wyo. 2001), reh.den., the court observed: "had we determined that the Neiman restricted easement provided the only access to the Tumbling T, because a restriction on use is a defect, and as this defect was well established in the public record, First American may have been liable under its policy."

[278] In Hawkins v. Oakland Title Ins. & Guar. Co., 165 Cal.App.2d 116, 331 P.2d 742 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1958), the insured alleged that the only access to the insured gas station was via a service road rather than directly to the highway. However, the insured failed to allege or prove any loss in value. The court reasoned that the fact that the highway had restricted access might actually increase the value of the insured land, by encouraging traffic and limiting competing businesses.

[279] Bailey v. State Farm Ins. Co., 810 F.Supp. 267 (N.D.Cal. 1992). In that case, the recital of the easement in Schedule A referred to it as "a right-of-way (not to be exclusive)." The insurer was found not responsible for defending against a claim by an adjoiner to use the easement area, based on prescription, estoppel and other theories. In Fekade v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 4906818 (Cal.App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the insurance of an access easement was not the assurance that the insured had exclusive use thereof.

to obtain the desired direct access onto a highway.[280] However, when a condemnation suit was pending at the policy date, the effect of which was to take away the insured's right of access, the court found that the coverage would have been breached if the policy had not excepted the action.[281]

9.7.3 Legal Status Of Adjacent Street

FORM 24, Appendix A
Adjacent street not insured as public and open

Courts have uniformly held that the policy does not assure that an adjacent street is a public road.[282] The right of access coverage also does not impliedly assure that the location of a private drive will be depicted on the land division map that created the insured parcel, or some other public map.[283] However, in one case it was found that an affirmative assurance about a survey had the effect of insuring that the roadway shown on the survey was in fact public.[284] A policy reference to a survey may also take away coverage, however. In Murray v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., the policy's affirmative assurance of "ordinary rights" in adjacent public streets was negated by the attachment to [280] Phrazer Co., Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 508 So.2d 731 (Fla.App. 1987). However, because the insurer also acted as escrowee and was aware of the purchaser's intent to obtain access onto the highway, the court remanded to allow the insured to sue for breach of escrow duties. See §13.8 regarding the escrowee's duty to close according to the terms of the purchase agreement.

---

[281] Livingston v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 373 F.Supp. 1185 (E.D.Mo. 1974), aff'd, 504 F.2d 1110 (8th Cir. 1974) (exception for condemnation action put insured on notice of restriction of access resulting from same condemnation suit).

[282] Rialto Building & Loan Ass'n v. Commonwealth Title Co., 327 Pa. 93, 192 A. 635 (1937) (street not open and dedicated as an easement, not in fee; policy made exception for "Streets not physically opened;" policy did not insure dedication to public); Shaver v. Title Guar. & Trust Co., 163 Tenn. 232, 43 S.W.2d 212 (1931) (description referring to road was not assurance that road existed or was open; in fact, abutting land was privately owned and use was later halted, but no claim payable); J & S Building Co., Inc. v. Columbian Title & Trust Co., 1 Kan.App.2d 228, 563 P.2d 1086 (1977) (attempted reservation of reversionary rights in dedicated streets was ineffective; insured's title to street on vacation not defective or unmarketable because of invalid reversion right).

[283] In James v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 325, 339 P.3d 420 (Mont. 2014), the Montana Supreme Court held that the generic access coverage was not invoked due to the fact that the access right was granted by an easement that said the path of the public roads in the subdivision would be set as the streets were laid, because of the terrain, and the subdivision plat that created the lots also did not depict the streets. The court said, despite the insureds' protests, that they "clearly had a right of access under the declaration of easements," which their neighbors had confirmed in documents the insurer recorded. The court said that the access rights that the insureds claimed they "expected" were not reasonable, and "Courts will not act to distort policy language in the face of a reasonable interpretation of the policy provision."

[284] In MacBean v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 169 N.J.Super. 502, 405 A.2d 405 (N.J.Super. A.D. 1979), the survey showed "Delaware Ave." as a public street abutting the property. In fact, "Delaware Ave." was a privately-owned lot which was later improved with a house. The court held that the notation "shows clear" was an assurance that "Delaware Ave." was a public street. The court distinguished the contrary cases because in those cases, the insurer had not given any affirmative assurances.

the policy of a map on which the adjoining street was marked "abandoned."[285]

9.7.4 Physical Status Of Adjacent Street

Courts also agree that the policy does not insure that an abutting "public" street is open, improved or at a grade which will permit the insured to build a connecting driveway.[286] In Title & Trust Co. of Fla. v. Barrows,[287] the insured land abutted a platted street which was "merely a continuation of a sandy beach" and covered by high tide in the spring and fall. However, the court ruled that the insured had a right of legal access and the policy did not insure "against physical infirmities of the platted street." The court based its decision on the fact that the "restriction" on access would be clearly visible on inspection, which is the insured's duty, but invisible from an inspection of the records, which is the limit of the insurer's duty. The court summed up that:

> title insurance does not insure against defects in the physical condition of the land or against infirmities in legal right of access not shown by the public record. See Pierson v. Bill, 138 Fla. 104, 189 So. 679 (1939). [The insurer and title association] argue that defects in the physical condition of the land such as are involved here are not covered by title insurance. We agree. Title insurance only insures against title defects.[288]

In Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co.,[289] a plat was recorded but the streets were not constructed. In fact, the entire subdivision was mere desert. The court found it "elementary" that the insured's problem was the condition of the improvements on the land, not the title to same, and thus not covered by the policy. Also, in Hulse v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[290] the insured parcel abutted a

---

[285] 250 Cal.App.2d 248, 58 Cal.Rptr. 273 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1967).

[286] Green v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 2249760 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2005) (unpublished) (access coverage not triggered by fact that property was fenced off from and not at grade with adjoining street). In Kimble v. Land Concepts, Inc., 2012 WI App 132, 345 Wis.2d 60, 823 N.W.2d 839 (Table), 2012 WL 4815574 (Wis.App.) (unpublished), the court refused to consider, as sufficiently undeveloped on appeal, the issue of whether or not a parcel lacked access when it abutted a dedicated but unbuilt public road. In Northern California Community Development Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 1397040 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished), roads were platted but never dedicated to the public or constructed. The court held nonetheless that the platted streets were available for ingress and egress by the lot owners, who held easement rights in the streets.

[287] 381 So.2d 1088 (Fla.App. 1979).

[288] Title & Trust Co. of Fla. v. Barrows, 381 So.2d at 1090. The Barrows court cited McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So.2d 852 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1976) and quoted Mafetone v. Forest Manor Homes, Inc. 34 A.D.2d 566, 310 N.Y.S.2d 17 (N.Y. 1970): "The title company is not responsible to plaintiffs for the damages incurred by reason of the change in elevating the abutting street to its legal grade, since the provisions of the standard title insurance policy here in question are concerned with matters affecting title to property and do not concern themselves with physical conditions of the abutting property absent a specific request by the person ordering a title report and policy."

[289] 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625, 40 A.L.R.2d 1238 (Cal. 1951).

[290] 2001 WY 95, 33 P.3d 122 (Wyo. 2001), reh.den.

public road that was not maintained. The insurer established that an attempted vacation of the road had not occurred. The court found that there was a right of access to the property, and no valid claim under the policy.[291] Similarly, the insured had not proven that it lacked a right of access because it would take a large amount of fill for ordinary autos to be able to drive onto the property.[292] Again the court noted that "the physical condition of the existing access was easily ascertainable by a simple inspection of the site by the purchasers."[293]

The policy does not obligate the insurer to protect the insured against disputes with other parties over the use of the easement path, its maintenance, gates, blockading of the access route and other disputes that are not challenges to the right of access.[294]

Several cases have held that the policy does not insure against a map or other action to change the grade of the adjacent street, even when such a map is filed or available for review.[295]

9.8 Marketability Of Title

Most policies indemnify the insured in the event that title is not marketable as shown.[296] If the policy does not contain a marketability coverage, it is not implied from other coverages.[297] The preamble to the Covered Risks states that coverage is invoked only if the matter is "not excluded or excepted from coverage." Thus, there is no marketability coverage for a matter excepted in the policy, no matter how grave its effect.

---

[291] "The Hulses maintained, and continue to maintain, legally enforceable unrestricted access across the Neiman property by way of this road. While its physical condition may not be satisfactory to them, the policy does not insure the physical condition of the roadway, but rather whether it provides a legal right of access. Only defects shown in the public record relating to a legal right of access are covered under the policy." 2001 WY at 14.

[292] Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805 (Fla.App. 1980).

[293] Id. at 806.

[294] In Thurlow v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 2358307 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), a title insurer was found not to be required to prosecute the insured's lawsuit against his neighbor, whom the insured claimed had "physically blocked and prevented the [p]laintiffs' free access over, to and from the premises and its use." The court ruled that the policy does not obligate the insurer to bring an action to clear title, because the neighbor had not attacked the validity of the access right. In Fekade v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 4906818 (Cal.App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished), the policy's insurance of an access easement did not obligate the insurer to protect the insured against the burdened land owner's demand that he remove a gate at the end of the drive that was located outside the easement path. In CH Properties, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 43 F.Supp.3d 83 (D. Puerto Rico 2014), recons.den. 2014 WL 7140507 (D. Puerto Rico, Dec. 15, 2014), the court held that the insurer had no duty to clear trespassing protesters off the insured land, under the guise that they were blocking the insured's "right of access." This was particularly so because the protesters first occupied the property years after the policy date, invoking the post-policy exclusion also. However, in Perry v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 48 N.E.3d 1168, 2015 IL App (2d) 150168, 2015 WL 6859167 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court held that a title insurer must defend its insureds in a lawsuit brought to block the insureds from paving their easement path, despite the fact that the neighbors acknowledged that the easement grant was valid and gave a right to travel across their land.

[295] Sperling v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 227 App. Div. 5, 236 N.Y.S. 553 (1929); Mafetone v. Forest Manor Homes, Inc., 34 App.Div.2d 566, 310 N.Y.S.2d 17 (1970).

[296] See Condition 1(k) of the 2006 ALTA policies. A very similar definition is found in Conditions & Stipulations Condition 1(k) of the 2006 ALTA policies defines "Unmarketable Title" as:

> Title affected by an alleged or apparent matter that would permit a prospective purchaser or lessee of the Title or lender on the Title to be released from the obligation to purchase, lease, or lend if there is a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title.

One must look to state law to determine whether or not the claimed defect in title would be one which would allow a purchaser to be released from the obligation to buy. State law controls and should be consulted as to the definition of marketability of title. Many states have adopted one or more of the following definitions:

> Title is marketable if it is free from reasonable doubt and is a title which a reasonable, well informed buyer would be willing to accept.[298]

> A marketable title is one which not only enables the holder to hold the land, but to hold it in peace, and if there is a wish to sell, "to be reasonably sure that no flaw or doubt will come up to disturb its marketable value."[299]

> … a title legally free from doubt, or free from the threat of potential litigation.[300]

The policy coverage is invoked only if a third party rejects title as being unmarketable. See §3.2.3.1.6 for a complete discussion of the conditions for recovery under the marketability coverage and how marketability claims are administered.

One common principle is that title is unmarketable if it is doubtful, clouded or open to dispute.[301] A South Carolina case gave that state's definition of a cloud on title: "a claim which on its

---

1(g) of the 1992 ALTA policies. The ALTA Residential policy contains a marketability assurance as Covered Risk 11. The ALTA Homeowner's policy contains a nearly-identical coverage as Covered Risk 29. Some earlier policy forms did not contain a marketability coverage, such as the 1970 ALTA Form A Owner's policy.

[297] Blessing v. American Title & Ins. Co., 121 So.2d 455 (Fla.App. 1960). However, when a policy does not include marketability coverage, that fact does not limit the other coverages of the policy. When the policy omitted a restriction, it was no defense to argue that the insured was vested in title, and the restriction claim merely affected marketability, which was not insured. Endruschat v. American Title Ins. Co., 377 So.2d 738 (Fla.App. 1979). See also Annotation, Defects Affecting Marketability of Title Within Meaning of Title Insurance Policy, 18 ALR4th 1311.

[298] Willow Ridge Ltd. Partnership v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 706 F.Supp. 477 (S.D.Miss. 1988).

[299] Davis v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 726 S.W.2d 839, 850 (Mo.App. 1987); Forty Bon, Inc. v. St. Louis Investment Properties, Inc., 965 S.W.2d 471 (Mo.App.E.D. 1998).

[300] Annotation, Defects affecting marketability of title within meaning of title insurance policy, 18 A.L.R.4th 1311.

[301] See Davis v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 726 S.W.2d 839 (Mo.App. 1987).

face appears valid, but resort to extrinsic evidence will show its invalidity."[302] The policy marketability definition corresponds to this principle, by stating that coverage can be triggered by an "alleged or apparent" defect.[303] As one court stated it:

> [T]he analysis of Willow Ridge's unmarketability claim is similar to that for its claim of a lien defect. One notable difference, however, is that as to Willow Ridge's claim that a lien defect caused its loss, an issue arises as to the validity of the liens and the policy requires a determination of validity before the duty to pay arises. With reference to unmarketability, the mere existence of the liens, whether valid or not, is sufficient to render title unmarketable.[304]

The insurer may wish to take action to clear title when it determines that there is a substantial cloud on title. However, many matters that relate to ownership of land are not even clouds on title.[305] In addition, most states have adopted laws that cure clouds on title. Statutes of limitation and marketable title acts remove, or render unenforceable, a plethora of such matters, as discussed at §3.1. Flyspeck "defects" in title are discussed at §11.4.3.

An encumbrance does not render title unmarketable, because such a holding would render the titles to millions of parcels unmarketable.[306] Invalid or doubtful claims of ownership do not make

---

[302] Wilson v. Moseley, 327 S.C. 144, 488 S.E.2d 862 (S.C. 1997).

[303] In Captiva Lake Investments, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 883 F.3d 1038 (8th Cir. (Mo.) 2018), the court noted the "alleged or apparent matter" phrase, saying that the policy "thus does not limit coverage to perfected liens, and an inchoate lien could meet the definition of 'an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land.'" However, the court said that the insured had not proven that mechanic's liens filed long after the policy date were inchoate rights on the policy date that rendered title unmarketable. Although such liens fall under the relation-back doctrine, the later filed liens were for work that was performed after the policy date, and the lien holders had not even begun work at the property on the policy date.

[304] Willow Ridge Ltd. Partnership v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 706 F.Supp. 477, 487 (S.D.Miss. 1988).

[305] For example, the fact that the seller was a debtor-in-possession under a Chapter 11 bankruptcy did not made title unmarketable. Booth v. Attorneys' Title Guar. Fund, Inc., 2001 UT 13, 20 P.3d 319 (Utah 2001). In Lauritzen v. First American Title Ins. Co., 424 P.3d 1043, 2018 UT App 58 (Utah App. 2018), the court rejected the insured's claim that title to all five subdivision lots insured in the policy was unmarketable because of an overlap of the subdivision plat with an adjoiner that affected only one of the platted lots. The court said the recorder's "rejection" of the plat when submitted for recording was not a "rejection" of the title to the lots. In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 88 N.Y.S.3d 806, 62 Misc.3d 313, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 28357 (Suffolk Cty. 2018), the court found that a limitation on the number of buildable lots in a development, adopted as a condition to the rezoning of the property, was excluded from coverage under Exclusion 1(a). The court said the zoning restriction did not render title unmarketable.

[306] See Osprey Landing, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 157 A.3d 247, 2017 ME 46 (Maine 2017). The Maine Supreme Court ruled that a claimed prescriptive easement did not render title unmarketable. It said: "If we were to hold that a title becomes unmarketable merely because there is a possibility that a claim for an easement could be brought in the future, an untold quantity of titles across the state would subsequently become unmarketable, resulting in uncertainty of ownership and a profusion of litigation." In Chesapeake Land Development Company LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 5930295 (W.D.Okla.) (unpublished), the court held that a use restriction does not make title unmarketable and that, if the restriction has outlawed under the marketable record title act, it is no longer an encumbrance. See also Fidelity title unmarketable.[307] An inchoate or potential right in property does not render title unmarketable.[308] However, a claim of title being litigated may make title unmarketable even though there has not yet been a final determination by a court adverse to the title as insured.[309]

The issue of whether or not a lack of a right of access to the parcel renders its title unmarketable is thoroughly discussed at §9.7.1. See §9.8.6 below regarding the insurer's rights, including the right to cure title. See §3.2.3.1.6 for an analysis of how to resolve a claim based on the assertion that the insured's title is unmarketable.

9.8.1 Marketable Title Versus Insurable Title

As is frequently stated, marketable title and insurable title are not the same. Insurers will ignore certain defects in title for a number of reasons, which is what title underwriting is all about. Thus, the test of marketability is not that a reputable title insurer has issued a policy free of the defect in question.[310] Title also is not rendered marketable by the insurer's willingness to issue a new

---

Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016); Pavilion Park, LLC v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 43222 (W.D.Ky. 2011); McGonagle v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 432 S.W.3d 535 (Tex.App. 2014); Camp v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 787 F.2d 1258, 1261 (8th Cir. 1986); and JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 88 N.Y.S.3d 806, 62 Misc.3d 313, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 28357 (Suffolk Cty. 2018).

[307] Native Sun Investment Group v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 189 Cal.App.3d 1265, 235 Cal.Rptr. 34 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1987). In CH Properties, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 43 F.Supp.3d 83 (D. Puerto Rico 2014), recons.den. 2014 WL 7140507 (D. Puerto Rico, Dec. 15, 2014), the court rejected the insured's mushy assertion that certain claims had "diminished" its title. The insured pulled the word "diminished" from the statement that an insured is entitled "to compensation for either a complete failure of title or a diminished title," found in Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-14 Edition, § 5:4, West/Thomson Reuters. The court said the alleged issues about title did not render it unmarketable and thus did not invoke the Covered Risk.

[308] In Captiva Lake Investments, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 883 F.3d 1038 (8th Cir. (Mo.) 2018), the court noted that the policy defined "unmarketability of title" as "an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land, not excluded or excepted from coverage, which would entitle a purchaser of the estate or interest... to be released from the obligation to purchase by virtue of a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title." It said that the policy "thus does not limit coverage to perfected liens, and an inchoate lien could meet the definition of 'an alleged or apparent matter affecting the title to the land.'" However, the court said that the insured had not proven that the liens filed long after the policy date were inchoate rights on the policy date that rendered title unmarketable. Despite the relation-back doctrine, the later filed liens were for work that was performed after the policy date, and the lien holders had not even begun work on the policy date.

[309] See §3.4.5 concerning the final determination provision. In Davis v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 726 S.W.2d 839 (Mo.App. 1987), the court noted that the provision is intended to apply in those cases where the insurer has assumed a defense or exercised its right to clear title. In the Davis case, the insurer had refused to clear title. As a result, "The insurer neither removed the defect nor was in the process of the litigation of the defect at the time Davis filed the suit on the policy--thus, neither condition limited the right of the insured to remedy under the policy."

[310] In Willow Ridge Ltd. Partnership v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 706 F.Supp. 477 (S.D.Miss. 1988), the court stated: "The court observes that the fact that a title insurance company, reputable or not, would agree to insure a title has little bearing on the marketability of that title. If this were a criterion for marketability, nothing would be gained by insuring against unmarketability since marketability would be determined by the mere issuance of the policy. The insured would need no protection against unmarketability and a provision purporting to cover unmarketability would be superfluous. See Kipahulu Inv. Co. v. Seltzer Partnership, 4 Haw.App. 625, 675 P.2d 778, 781 (1983) (existence of title insurance did policy to a purchaser from the insured.[311] However, an insurer's willingness to insure the title is often used as a litmus test of its marketability.[312]

Conversely, an insurer will not always be willing, and is not obligated, to insure every title that may be considered to be marketable. This is true even if the title's marketability has been determined by court order.[313] In some cases, the means or procedure by which the party acquired title to the property is so inherently subject to attack that prudent insurers decline to insure. An insurer's refusal to insure does not make title unmarketable.[314]

The insurer's business is a private enterprise. Title insurers are not obligated to insure the title to land which may be subject to attack. There is no constitutional right to the issuance of a title insurance policy.[315] A common example of title that an insurer is reluctant to insure is that obtained not satisfy requirement of marketable title)."

---

[311] House v. First American Title Ins. Co., 883 N.E.2d 197 (Ind.App. 2008) (insured rejected offer to insure over on new sale; court construed this as a question of mitigation of damages); Shada v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 457 So.2d 553 (Fla.App. 1984); Forty Bon, Inc. v. St. Louis Investment Properties, Inc., 965 S.W.2d 471 (Mo.App.E.D. 1998) (action on purchase contract; title was unmarketable because of encroachment; insurer's willingness to insure over not found to make title marketable). In Nebo v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 21 Cal.App. 3d 222, 98 Cal.Rptr. 237 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971), the court felt that the insurer only issued the policy in question because it wanted to avoid an immediate claim on a previous policy showing title in the same state. The court found the insurer's willingness to take yet another risk on the same property to be strictly for the insurer's own benefit. Such may have been the motivation in Nebo, but is not always so. The insurer's willingness to insure the risk again is, in the author's experience, normally to help the insured close a pending sale with the least delay and inconvenience. The insurer typically is proceeding concurrently to remove the title defect, and does not want the insured to have to wait the months it will take to resolve it before closing the sale. In Latter & Blum, Inc. v. Ditta, 223 So.3d 54 (La.App. 4 Cir. 2017), the court found that an encroaching fence made title unmarketable, excusing the buyer from the obligation to purchase, and a title insurer's willingness to issue a policy protecting against the encroachment did not cure the marketability issue. The court discussed the difference between marketable title and insurable title in some detail.

[312] See Donaghy v. Roudebush, 614 F.Supp. 585 (D.N.J. 1985).

[313] Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Rudershausen, 164 N.Y.S. 15 (Sup.Ct.App. Term 1917).

[314] Wilson v. Pacific Coast Title Ins. Co., 106 Cal.App.2d 599, 235 P.2d 431 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1951). A court may find perplexing an insurer's judgment as to what is and is not a good underwriting risk. See Mathews v. Moore, 1997 WL 241741 (Wash.App.Div. 1) (unpublished), in which the court found it a "mystery" that title insurers would rely on a private trustee's sale to remove liens against the borrower, but not a lis pendens filed in a judicial foreclosure. Nonetheless, it is exclusively within the insurer's province to decide what risks it will assume.

[315] In Hanie v. Atlanta Title & Trust Co., 45 Ga.App. 26, 163 S.E. 515 (1932), for example, the insurer refused to insure title to land which it had previously insured. The owner sued for damages. The appellate court upheld a demurrer, holding that "the policy does not obligate the title company to insure the title to the property at a later date." However, a U.S. District Court held that, in Kansas, an insurer has a duty of "reasonable performance" in its role as abstracter of title, and may not refuse to insure title if title is marketable under those standards. In In re Lisa, Inc., 224 B.R. 173 (D.C.D.Kan. 1998), the title agent had refused to remove liens from Schedule B based on a bankruptcy order for sale free and clear. The state title standards said that such an order effectively removes such liens. The court stated: "Ford [the title agent] next argues that a title insurance company is free to impose any conditions it wants in the insurance policy. The Trustee argues that only reasonable conditions consistent with general title standards may be imposed. The Trustee argued Ford violated a duty of good faith and fair dealing when it refused to issue a policy without the exception. … The Trustee cited the Kansas Title Standards Handbook as evidence that Ford's refusal was inconsistent with general title through tax foreclosure.[316] In a California suit, Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., the plaintiffs alleged that members of the title industry conspired to deny title policies to purchasers of tax titles. The Supreme Court overturned a lower court order striking causes of action based on tortious interference with contract and state unfair competition and restraint of trade laws.[317] The court held that the insurers were permitted to introduce evidence at trial that the refusal to insure was based on legitimate business concerns, including risk. See §12.7.6 for a discussion of the related topic of the insurer's lack of a duty to remove an exception for a defect, lien or encumbrance, or to explain to the proposed insured how such a matter might be resolved.

9.8.2 Effect On Marketability Of Insuring Over Defect

The title insurance policy does not assure that the title as stated in Schedules A and B will be considered acceptable to a proposed purchaser or lender. Thus, the policy does not insure that title is marketable in the absolute. Rather, it insures against unmarketability of the title as shown in the policy, subject to the exceptions contained in Schedule B.

An insurer will sometimes agree to insure over a title defect, lien or encumbrance, particularly when it is in the process of seeking to clear title, as further discussed at §3.4.4.[318] The insurer's willingness to insure against the matter does not cure or remove it, as fully discussed at §9.8.1. It is a common industry underwriting standard to disclose and insure over an item rather than to delete it as an exception in Schedule B. Certain states prohibit the insuring over of recorded liens. See §15.12.

One court found that the disclosure of a defect to the insured by a separate letter agreement was not sufficient to establish that title was marketable as shown in the policy, when the item was standards. The bankruptcy court agreed with the Trustee, and relying on the handbook as evidence of what constitutes reasonable performance, concluded Ford had breached its duties under the contract when it refused to issue a policy without the exclusion. This court agrees with the bankruptcy court's analysis." The Lisa court distinguished several cases on the basis that those cases involved claims under the policy while, in Lisa, the trustee was pursuing a tort claim for abstractor negligence. The distinguished cases were Gilchrest House, Inc. v. Guaranteed Title & Mortgage Co., 277 A.D. 788, 97 N.Y.S.2d 226 (N.Y.A.D. 1950), affirmed, 302 N.Y. 852, 100 N.E.2d 46 (1951) and Aronoff v. Lenkin Co., 618 A.2d 669 (D.C.App.1992), in which the court held: "We think a title insurer has an unqualified right to select the risks it is willing to underwrite ... . Unless it is otherwise bound by law or contract, it may refuse to insure for any reason, sound or not, or for no reason at all." 618 A.2d at 686. However, as the Lisa court pointed out, the Aronoff court had declined to decide whether or not a seller may hold a title company liable for negligence in performing a title search.

---

[316] For a good example as to why insurers are reluctant to insure title derived from a tax sale, see Nourachi v. First American Title Ins. Co., 44 So.3d 602 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2010), in which the county mistakenly sold property for non-payment of taxes although it had been conveyed to the federal government decades earlier. The insured's tax deed was thus void ab initio.

[317] Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 19 Cal.4th 26, 960 P.2d 513 (Cal. 1998).

[318] See Captiva Lake Investments, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 883 F.3d 1038 (8th Cir. (Mo.) 2018), in which the insured sought to sell property while the insurer was paying to resolve filed mechanic's liens. The insured asked the insurer to insure over those liens, despite the seeming lack of coverage for them. The insured terminated the purchase contract before the insurer made a decision on the request. The court refused to find that title was rendered unmarketable due to the fact that the insurer did not instantly agree to insure over the liens.

not excepted in the policy.[319] The insurer omitted an oil pipeline easement in hopes that it could be released. Seller, insured and insurer were equally knowledgeable of the easement's existence. The insurer agreed by letter that it would also issue future policies not showing the easement. Later, a prospective buyer objected to the easement. The insured sued on marketability. The insurer posited that the coverage had been limited by the letter so that its only obligation was to issue further policies in the same condition. The court found that the letter could not be read as part of the insurance contract, and therefore was not a limitation on coverage. Rather, it considered the letter agreement to be an additional undertaking or obligation of the insurer.

The value of insurance over a title defect sometimes hinges on the insurer's willingness to give the same coverage to a future owner or lender. On occasion, the insured obtains an endorsement by which the insurer commits to give the same assurance again in the future. The insurer has a right to put limits on such endorsements, for example to limit the coverage to the current policy amount.[320] However, a court may find that a defect in title is not cured by the insurer's present willingness to insure over the defect and its commitment to give the same coverage in the future.[321]

When a lien is excepted in the policy and insured over, the marketability coverage does not protect against any claim that the matter that is excepted renders title unmarketable. In Humphries v. West End Terrace, Inc.,[322] the insureds argued that title was unmarketable because of a blanket mortgage shown in the policy but protected against based on a letter of credit. The claim was not provoked by the lender's attempt to foreclose the lien. Rather, the unit owners sued:

> after one of the plaintiffs attempted to sell a unit. It was at this point that the plaintiffs allegedly first learned that the underlying indebtedness made the property unmarketable.[323]

The insureds argued that the marketability coverage overrode the specific assurance as to the mortgage:

---

[319] Bozeman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 470 So.2d 465 (La.App. 1 Cir. 1985). The measure of damages was derived from a sale by the insured conducted two days before trial on the coverage case. Although the sale price was greater than the purchase price, the court measured damages as the interest paid on the loan the entire time the insured was in title. One must conclude that the court was in a punishing mood.

[320] Future coverage limitations were the issue in TC X Incorporated v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 86 F.3d 1152 (Table), 1996 WL 271450 (4th Cir. (S.C.) 1996) (unpublished), discussed at §9.11.

[321] In Nelson v. Anderson, 221 Ill.Dec. 932, 676 N.E.2d 735 (Ill.App. 5 Dist. 1997), the insurer was willing to protect against the violation of a restriction setback line. The buyer still balked. The insurer then agreed to give future coverage, and the seller claimed that this cured the marketability flaw. The court disagreed, stating: "We need not discuss the degree of risk of litigation posed nor the magnitude of the decrease in market value caused by the title defect. We simply find that the title at issue was clouded by the violation of a restrictive covenant such that a reasonable person could fear both the threat of future litigation and an unfavorable effect on the market value of the property. We deem such title to be unmerchantable."

[322] 795 S.W. 2d 128 (Tenn.App. 1990).

[323] Id. at 131.

> Plaintiffs assert that Ticor's commitment to insure against loss occasioned by the enforcement or attempted enforcement of this underlying indebtedness amounted to insurance against lack of marketability. Plaintiffs assert that legal marketability was insured because Ticor did not "re-except" marketability from its commitment to affirmatively insure against loss occasioned by enforcement of the indebtedness.[324]

The court rejected the argument, saying:

> [T]he plaintiffs received the coverage of title insurance exactly as stated in the policy. Ticor insured against unmarketability except if it arose as a result of the underlying indebtedness. With respect to that indebtedness, Ticor agreed to reimburse the plaintiffs for any loss suffered by them as a result of the enforcement or attempted enforcement of the mortgages, liens and other instruments comprising it. There are no allegations in the complaint that any agent or employee of Ticor led the plaintiffs to believe they would receive anything other than what they actually did receive. The complaint makes no claim against Ticor for losses from enforcement of the indebtedness and states no claim against Ticor with respect to unmarketability of the property.[325]

Thus, while most titles can be insured, if a serious title issue exists, the insurer will commonly wish to give notice of the matter to the proposed insured, to allow that party to determine for itself if it will accept title with the defect in existence.

Older versions of the Texas policy did not contain an assurance as to marketability of title.[326] In addition, earlier versions of the Texas policy permitted the insurer to resolve a title defect by issuing a new policy without exception for the title defect, or by indemnifying another insurer to induce it to do the same.[327]

---

[324] Id.

[325] Id.

[326] The T-1 policy currently in use is modeled after the 2006 ALTA policy, and contains the same marketability coverage as does the ALTA policy. In an earlier version of the T-1 policy, the marketability coverage was replaced by an assurance against "Lack of good and indefeasible title."

[327] Paragraph 3 of the Conditions and Stipulations of the earlier version of the T-1 policy provided, in pertinent part: "If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is not covered by this policy, or was otherwise addressed in the closing of the transaction in connection with which this policy was issued, the Company shall specifically advise the insured of the reasons for its determination. If the Company concludes that the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect is valid, the Company shall take one of the following actions: ... (iii) upon payment of appropriate premium and charges therefor, issue to the insured claimant or to a subsequent owner, mortgagee or holder of the estate or interest in the land insured by this policy, a policy of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect, said policy to be in an amount equal to the current value of the property or, if a mortgagee policy, the amount of the loan; (iv) indemnify another title insurance company in connection with its issuance of a policy(ies) of title insurance without exception for the lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or defect ... ."

9.8.3 Marketable Title Versus Physical Conditions And Market Value

FORM 25, Appendix A
Marketability of title not same as "salability" of property

There are many matters that can reduce the market value of a parcel without affecting the marketability of its title. This section discusses the effect, if any, on marketability of title due to physical conditions on the property, such as contaminated material, encroaching structures, flooding, and lot size and shape. This section also discusses the various types of issues that might affect the property's market value or appeal (salability), which are often presented as if they affected the marketability of its title.

The lack of paved and graded streets was found to be a physical condition that did not make title unmarketable, in the seminal decision on the physical condition distinction, Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co.[328] The court stated:

> It is defendants' position that plaintiff confuses title with physical condition of the property she purchased and of the adjacent streets, and that one can hold perfect title to land that is valueless; one can have marketable title to land while the land itself is unmarketable. … It appears to be the condition of her land in respect to improvements related thereto (graded and paved streets), rather than the condition of her title to the land, which is different from what she expected to get.[329]

A limitation on the right of access to a parcel has been found not to trigger the marketability of title coverage, by courts that have "recognized a distinction between 'economic lack of marketability, which relates to physical conditions affecting the use of the property, and title marketability, which relates to defects affecting legally recognized rights and incidents of ownership.'"[330]

Courts have repeatedly held that a problem with a physical aspect of the property may reduce its market value, but does not render title unmarketable.[331] Thus, title to property can be marketable

---

[328] 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (Cal. 1951).

[329] Id. at 651.

[330] Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209, 1218 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016), quoting from Riordan v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 393 F.Supp.2d. 1100, 1105 (D.N.M. 2005). Those decisions are fully discussed at §9.7.1.

[331] In Farina v. Conestoga Title Ins. Co., 2006 WL 4663420 (Pa.Com.Pl.), 81 Pa. D.&C.4th 548 (2006), aff'd per curiam 945 A.2d 774 (Table) (Super.Ct. 2007), app.den. 600 Pa. 746, 964 A.2d 895 (Table) (Sup.Ct. 2008), the existence of an abandoned septic tank on the property was found to be a physical condition that did not affect title. In Hanson Business Park, L.P. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 209 S.W.3d 867 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2006), the court explained: "The cases' discussions of 'marketable title' actually address whether the property can be sold at all, not whether the property will fetch a lesser price because of some condition on the land. … The cases cited by appellant establish that the concept of 'title' speaks to ownership of rights in property, not to the condition or value of the property. Thus, a defect in, or encumbrance on, title (such as would trigger coverage under a title insurance policy) must involve a flaw in the

although the property contains a structure that violates a restriction,[332] or the lot is smaller than represented.[333] A neighbor's creation of a party wall, and subsequent refusal to pay for the privilege, does not render title to the land unmarketable.[334] The flooding of the insured property also does not affect its title.[335] Also, title was not rendered unmarketable due to the existence of an abandoned ownership rights in the property. … We conclude the flood-plain status of that property is a defect, if at all, only in the condition of the property. We refuse to equate a defect in the condition of the property with a defect in title to the property." In MGD Partners Limited Liability Co. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3962568 (5th Cir. (La.)) (unpublished), the court found that bombs dropped on the property when it was used as a bombing range during World War II, which caused the parish to refuse a residential subdivision permit, were a physical condition that did not affect title or render it unmarketable, and thus did not invoke coverage. The razing of the building on the property after closing but before the insured mortgage was recorded did not make title unmarketable. Lakeside National, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3420431 (D.Md.) (unpublished). In Trinder v. Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co., 2011 VT 46, 22 A.3d 493 (Vt. 2011), the encroachment of the insured's septic system onto neighboring land was deemed a physical condition that did not affect its title, and the court found that the insured's allegation that the encroachment made the property less valuable was not the equivalent of rendering its title unmarketable. In Furey v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2012 IL App (2d) 120203-U, 2012 WL 6968946 (Ill.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), flood damage to the insured's house was caused by the overflowing of a river, not a drainage easement that was not excepted in Schedule B; therefore, the insurer was not required to pay for the flood repairs. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Woody Creek Ventures, LLC, 830 F.3d 1209, 1218 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 2016), the court held that a limited right of access might affect market value but did not make title unmarketable, citing numerous decisions described in this passage. In Wade v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 82 N.E.3d 763, 2017 IL App (1st) 161765, 415 Ill.Dec. 559 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2017), the court held that the policy did not protect against the defects in the building that led to its condemnation and demolition, which issues did not concern the title to the land. In Sullivan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 3494216 (D.Mont.) (unpublished), the court held that "criminal activities" the insured alleged to have occurred on the property that were somehow related to an easement did not affect title to the land. In Vos v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1476148 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the court held that the fact that a parcel's physical conditions might be regulated by federal laws, such as the Antiquities Act of 1906 or the Historic Sites Act of 1953, did not affect its title. In Lauritzen v. First American Title Ins. Co., 424 P.3d 1043, 2018 UT App 58 (Utah App. 2018), the court cited with approval Woody Creek, Hocking and other decisions that have made the distinction between physical conditions affecting value and matters that render title unmarketable, in order to conclude that subdivision ordinances and conditions placed on a subdivision map did not render title to the subdivided lots unmarketable.

---

[332] Camp v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 787 F.2d 1258 (8th Cir. 1986). See further discussion in §9.8.4.

[333] In Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 Cal.App.4th 1294, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 771 (1994), various improvements built for the property were found not to be located on the insured land. The court found that title to the land insured was still marketable: "Indeed, the problem is that plaintiffs desired to obtain a greater amount of land than they purchased and which had been accurately described in their deed, albeit to satisfy their reasonable expectations at the time of purchase. Plaintiffs thus have confused title with the physical condition or value of the property they purchased." 33 Cal.Rptr.2d at 776.

[334] Thomas v. Tradesmen's Trust & Savings Fund Co., 21 Pa.C.C. 151, 7 Pa.D. 375, 1898 WL 3681 (Pa.Com.Pl. 1898).

[335] Dyer & Moody, Inc. v. Dynamic Constructors, Inc., 357 So.2d 615 (La.App. 1978) (flooding caused by blocking of nearby drainage ditch); Witkowski v. Richard W. Endlar Ins. Agency, Inc., 81 Mass.App.Ct. 785, 968 N.E.2d 922 (Mass.App. 2012) (destruction of insured condominium unit by flood and fact that insured could not get financing to rebuild because he could not get federal flood insurance was a physical condition that did not render title defective).

septic tank on the land.[336] Title was not affected by the existence of underground pits in which tree stumps had been buried, which caused newly-built houses to settle.[337] Faulty construction of recent improvements on the land do not affect its title.[338] Title was not made unmarketable due to the fact that certain equipment was permanently installed in the building that was owned by someone other than the real estate title holder.[339] An injunction requiring the property owner to disconnect from a common septic system was not a defect or encumbrance on title, and therefore the policy did not protect against its effect.[340] Title is not rendered unmarketable if the parcel or building is considered to be stigmatized as having been the scene of a serious crime, a notorious event or paranormal activity.[341] The lack of building permits or a certificate of occupancy does not affect title to the parcel.[342] Title was not rendered unmarketable by the fact that the property was part of a failed development, the only economic solution for which was to conduct a partition sale and divide the proceeds between the owners.[343]

---

[336] The court held that, "while [Rood's] property may be unmarketable due to the existence of the septic tank, the title to the property is not." Rood v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 936 A.2d 488, 2007 PA Super 315 (Pa.Super. 2007).

[337] "The waste disposal areas at issue constitute a physical condition of the property which does not affect the title of the Property. There is nothing in the Policy to support the Plaintiff's contention that the Policy insured the Plaintiff against loss resulting from undisclosed waste disposal areas or any other sub-surface condition. Indeed, it appears that coverage for such conditions is specifically excluded. The Policy at issue is a policy insuring legal title and does not purport to insure for the physical conditions of the property." Shea Homes, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3334210 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished).

[338] Culley v. Bank of America, N.A., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1430124 (D.Mass. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available).

[339] Geo Finance, LLC v. University Square 2751, LLC, 2014 WL 7369940 (E.D.Mich. 2014) (unpublished) (geothermal water system installed but still owned by the installer).

[340] House v. First American Title Ins. Co., 858 N.E.2d 640 (Ind.App. 2006).

[341] The subject of stigmatized property has received its due share of scholarly treatment. See Marc Ben-Ezra and Asher Perlin, Stigma Busters: A Primer on Selling Haunted Houses and Other Stigmatized Property, 19 Probate & Property Number 3, p. 59 (2005); Warner, Caveat Spiritus: A Jurisprudential Reflection Upon the Law of Haunted Houses and Ghosts, 28 Valparaiso U.L. Rev. 207 (1993); McEvoy, Stigmatized Property: What a Buyer Should Know, 48 J. of Missouri Bar 57 (Jan.-Feb. 1992); and Eisenberg, Ghosts, Murders, and Stigmatized Real Estate: Shall We Tell the Buyer That Freddy Lives Here on Elm Street?, The Exchange, Chicago Area Real Estate Exchangers, Volume 2, No. 3 (June-July, 1994). The reduction in property value caused by stigma, and the causes of action that have been recognized or asserted in attempts to recover for such loss of value, are analyzed in Vale and Cline, Stigma and Property Contamination--Damnum Absque Injuria, 33 ABA Tort & Insurance Law Journal 835 (1998).

[342] Culley v. Bank of America, N.A., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1430124 (D.Mass. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available) (no septic system permit and no certificate of occupancy).

[343] Northern California Community Development Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 1397040 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished) (citing and discussing Hocking in finding that the property was essentially worthless, though its title was fine).

Encroachments have been held to render title unmarketable.[344] Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co.[345] held that an encroachment was an encumbrance, and was so substantial that it rendered title unmarketable. Similarly, in Rackouski v. Dobson,[346] a barn encroached onto the neighboring property. The court held:

> We find that the encroachment in this case renders the appellants' title unmarketable in that such an encroachment brings a likelihood of litigation, and "... persons of reasonable prudence and intelligence, guided by competent legal advice, would [not] be willing to take and pay the fair value of the land ... ."[347]

However, not every encroachment makes title unmarketable.[348] In Denny's v. Security Union Title Ins. Co.,[349] the appeals court said the insured could conduct a trial on its claim that a parking lot encroachment made title unmarketable, but it gave this admonition:

> We observe, however, that although resale value is almost always detrimentally affected by unmarketability, it does not necessarily follow that when the resale value of property drops because of the physical condition of the land, the land is unmarketable. In other words, a distinction exists between marketability and merchantability. [citing Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (App. 1991) and Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951)] Under some circumstances, encroachments onto adjoining land may affect the marketability of title. Brown v. Herman, 75 Wash.2d 816, 823-24, 454 P.2d 212 (1969) (finding sidewalks encroaching 5 feet onto public way were not encroachments that would render title unmarketable because of long-standing permission to allow the encroachment and unlikelihood of future removal).[350]

The existence of hazardous materials on the property is also a physical condition that does not affect the title to the property, and therefore does not invoke policy coverage.[351] The cases

---

[344] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Arkansas Riverview Development, LLC, 573 F.Supp.2d 1152 (E.D.Ark. 2008) (building encroaching into public street above surface and without right made title unmarketable).

[345] 813 F.Supp. 67 (D.D.C. 1993).

[346] 634 N.E.2d 1229 (Ill.App. 3 Dist. 1994).

[347] Id. at 1232 (citations omitted).

[348] See First American Title Ins. Co. v. Dahlmann, 291 Wis.2d 156, 715 N.W.2d 609, 2006 WI 65 (Wis. 2006), holding that a structure on the insured parcel must encroach substantially onto adjoining property in order to render title unmarketable.

[349] 859 P.2d 619 (Wash.App.Div. 1 1993).

[350] 859 P.2d at 629.

[351] Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist.

concerning coverage for hazardous waste rely on the Hocking rationale recited above. In one such case, Lick Mill Creek Apts. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[352] the court held that an insured does not bootstrap into unmarketability coverage for hazardous waste by obtaining extended coverage (removal of the survey and possession exceptions). The insured's theory was that the coverage of certain off-record risks also extends the marketability coverage to encompass physical defects. The court rejected the argument:

> The definition of this term is not dependent upon the type of title insurance policy in which it appears. ... Because marketability of title and the market value of the land itself are separate and distinct, plaintiffs cannot claim coverage for the property's physical condition under this clause of the insurance policies.[353]

In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar, the court held:

> ...the defendant confuses economic lack of marketability, which relates to physical conditions affecting the use of the property, with title marketability, which relates to defects affecting legally recognized rights and incidents of ownership ... . The presence of hazardous material may affect the market value of the defendant's land, but, on the present record, it does not affect the title to the land.[354]

However, a jury found title to be "defective" when there was a recorded notice advising that oil had leaked into the groundwater, and the appeals court affirmed the verdict.[355] The environmental cases are further discussed in the context of the environmental lien exclusion, at §11.1.4.

A decline in the property's market value does not indicate that its title is unmarketable, without more. The title insurance policy does not insure that the land is worth the policy amount or 1991); Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar, 506 N.E.2d 154 (Mass.App. 1987); South Shore Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 688 F.Supp. 883 (D.Mass. 1988). In Pavilion Park, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 43222 (W.D. Ky.) (unpublished), the court ruled that a recorded covenant making owners of the property responsible for any future cleanup of a remediated waste disposal site was a physical condition that did not affect title, citing Somerset Savings Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 420 Mass. 422, 649 N.E.2d 1123 (1995).

---

[352] 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1991).

[353] 283 Cal.Rptr. at 236.

[354] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar, 24 Mass.App.Ct. 53, 506 N.E.2d 154 (Mass.App. 1987).

[355] Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. RM Kids, LLC, ___ Ga.App. ___, 835 S.E.2d 21 (Ga.App. 2019). The title agent testified at trial that the notice of contamination "should have been included in the coverage exceptions, but was erroneously omitted." The court found an ambiguity in the policy because the terms "defect" and "encumbrance" were not defined. The court refused to follow the numerous prior decisions holding that environmental contamination is a physical condition that does not affect title, finding this case distinguishable because of the recorded notice that was not excepted. It also observed that, in those decisions, the insured sought coverage based on the marketability coverage, whereas in this case the court had determined that the notice was a defect in title and an encumbrance.

purchase price. For example, Denny's v. Security Union Title Ins. Co.[356] involved a parking lot encroachment. The court allowed the insured to pursue a claim based on marketability of title, but said:

> We observe, however, that although resale value is almost always detrimentally affected by unmarketability, it does not necessarily follow that when the resale value of property drops because of the physical condition of the land, the land is unmarketable. In other words, a distinction exists between marketability and merchantability.[357]

Similarly, when a purchaser of timber rights was prevented by local law from cutting timber, but there was no defect in the title to its timber rights, the court rejected the insured's argument that economic loss equaled unmarketable title:

> Such an argument presumes that the inability to cut and remove timber, rendering it valueless to Haw River Timber, is the equivalent of unmarketable title. This conceptual merger of marketable title with marketable property does not, however, have support in the law.
>
> Title refers to the legal ownership of a property interest so that one having title to a property interest can withstand the assertion of others claiming a right to that ownership. But title to property does not characterize the property itself as valuable, merchantable, or even usable. ... Thus, while title to property may be unassailable, the property itself may have no value and may even constitute a burden to its owner. For these reasons, an insurance policy insuring legal title covers only the right of the owner to assert ownership against others claiming ownership or an interest in that ownership. And marketable title is one which is "'free from reasonable doubt in law or fact as to its validity.'"[358]

Similarly, a zoning ordinance was found not to render title unmarketable, and the court found that the insured was confusing marketability of title and salability of the property. [359] See §3.4.9.5 for a complete discussion of the cases in which the insured has argued that a decline in the property's market value was a compensable loss under the policy.

---

[356] 859 P.2d 619 (Wash.App.Div. 1 1993).

[357] 859 P.2d at 629 (citing Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1991) and Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (Cal. 1951)).

[358] Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. (N.C.) 1998).

[359] Notaro Homes, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 309 Ill.App.3d 246, 722 N.E.2d 208, 242 Ill.Dec. 719 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999) ("... the [zoning ordinance] does not constitute a lien upon the subject property. Nor does it constitute a defect that would cloud the title to the property. Plaintiff has confused marketability of title with marketability of land.").

However, a California court held that, when the physical condition of the property and its title are both at issue, the confluence of the two does not negate policy coverage. In Mellinger v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.,[360] Treat Boulevard was built on a portion of the insured land. The municipality, perhaps aware that it lacked a legal right on the property, demanded that the insured deed over the road in order to get a zoning variance. The insurer responded to the insured's claim by asserting that the municipality had no legal right in the property. The appeals court overturned a summary judgment in the insurer's favor based on Lick Mill and Hocking. The higher court said:

> The instant case is distinguishable from Lick Mill, in which there was no allegation of a possible third-party claim to an interest in the plaintiffs' property. Instead, the plaintiffs discovered hazardous substances on their property and incurred costs to remove them. They then sought indemnity from their title insurer for the cleanup costs. ... The Court of Appeals noted the plaintiffs had pled facts relating to marketability of the land rather than marketability of title. ... The hazardous substances merely affected the physical condition of the property and not title; therefore, there was no coverage under the insuring clause for unmarketability of title.

In Mellinger, the insurer argued that the roadway was merely a physical intrusion because the city had no valid claim of an interest in the property. The court rejected this seeming extension of Lick Mill:

> [T]he fact the City of Concord apparently did not have title to any part of plaintiffs' property does not resolve the question of marketability. ... TICOR argues and the trial court found the Treat Boulevard encroachment merely affected market value, not marketability of title. It is undisputed that there is no coverage for physical conditions of property that merely affect land value. ... The Treat Boulevard encroachment represented both a physical condition and possible interest in plaintiffs' property. To the extent it was a road that crossed a portion of plaintiffs' property, it might have affected the market value of the property. But it also had the potential to affect plaintiffs' ownership or title to a portion of the property.

The Mellinger decision seems to be internally inconsistent. In the above quote, the court first conceded that the City of Concord had no right in the property, and in effect trespassed by placing Treat Boulevard on the insured property. The city tacitly admitted as much by asking the insured to deed the right-of-way. This would support the insurer's conclusion that the only issue was the physical condition of the concrete within the boundary, not a claim of ownership. However, the court concluded that there was the possibility of coverage, by asserting that the city had a "possible interest" in the property, with the potential to "affect plaintiffs' ownership or title." Mellinger did not rule that there was coverage, but merely rejected a summary judgment that there was no coverage.

---

[360] 93 Cal.App.4th 691, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 357 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2001).

The court was concerned that the city could be found to have a right based on continued use of the road rather than a written grant.[361] The decision can be reconciled with existing law by interpreting it to mean that coverage may not be decided until there is a determination on whether or not there is an adverse claim of title to the insured property.[362] If the city was a trespasser, there would presumably be no coverage. Claims concerning trespassers are addressed at §12.2.2.

9.8.4 Effect Of Recorded Instruments On Marketability

This section discusses the claimed effect on the marketability of title caused by its location within a certain district, zone or classification; problems with its legal description; instruments that are recorded but that do not affect title; and instruments or issues that are linked in a general way to ownership, but that do not rise to the level of encumbrances, liens or defects in title.

Most districts, zones or classifications that may be imposed against a parcel do not affect its title, or render the title unmarketable. Thus, the mere fact that property was located in a special taxing zone did not make title unmarketable, when no tax lien existed on date of policy.[363] However, when such a district had assessed the property for a tax, the assessment created doubt as to the title, even though the assessment was not confirmed until after date of policy.[364] On the other hand, an exception that incorrectly stated that the property was in an irrigation district did not make title unmarketable.[365] A notice advising that a building had been placed on a registry of historic structures did not encumber its title or render it unmarketable.[366] A restriction on property's use caused by its inclusion in a specially-regulated district or zone does not render its title unmarketable.[367] Similarly, [361] "We are not inclined to find as matter of law that the Treat Boulevard encroachment was insignificant, or that the City of Concord would have had no right to assert continued use, if not ownership, of a portion of plaintiffs' property ..." [reciting authority]. ... TICOR has not shown, factually or legally, that a claim by the City of Concord to an interest in plaintiffs' property would have had no merit. Of course there are certain exceptions and exclusions in the policy that may apply unless the Treat Boulevard encroachment was reflected in the public records. [footnote omitted] Plaintiffs had an expert witness who opined the encroachment was reflected in the public records. TICOR stated it had an expert who would testify to the contrary. A jury will need to resolve the question."

---

[362] The court said "Native Sun …might be instructive once the underlying factual issues are resolved in this case… ."Native Sun was argued by the insurer as authority that the city's rights, if any, were excepted by the parties in possession and survey exceptions. See the discussion of Mellinger as to those exceptions at §12.3.17.1.

[363] Edwards v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 39 Colo.App. 235, 563 P.2d 979 (1977). Policy coverage concerning real estate taxes is fully discussed at §9.4.

[364] Bel-Air Motel Corp. v. Title Ins. Corp. of Pennsylvania, 183 N.J.Super. 551, 444 A.2d 1119 (1981).

[365] In Coleman v. Security Title Ins. Co., 218 Cal.App.2d 444, 32 Cal.Rptr. 575 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1963), the property would have had more value if it had been in an irrigation district. The court noted that the policy made no such promise of water rights. Schedule B excepted "…water rights, claims or title to water."

[366] In McGonagle v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 432 S.W.3d 535 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2014), the court found that a recorded instrument instructing the owner that a house on the property was historic and would have to be moved rather than torn down was not an encumbrance on title. Thus, the removal of an exception for restrictive covenants of record did not create coverage for the effect of that instrument. However, the policy apparently did not contain Covered Risk 5, and the court did not discuss the exception to Exclusion 1 as found in the 1992 ALTA policy.

the appointment of a building administrator to collect rent and cure building code violations was not a defect in or lien or encumbrance on title, although a lis pendens had been recorded for the action to appoint the administrator. The court noted that such an administrator or receiver might affect the salability of the property, but did not encumber its title.[368] Nonetheless, a later decision found the appointment of such an administrator to be "squarely within" the coverage of a loan policy, apparently because of some underwriting decisions made in issuing that policy.[369]

The fact that land is located in a flood plain zone is not a defect in title and does not render title unmarketable.[370] In rejecting the argument that a flood plain designation rendered title unmarketable, a Georgia court also distinguished between economic value and marketability of title: "[a]lthough location of part of the property in a flood plain may affect its market value, it does not affect the marketability of title to the property."[371] In Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[372] some of the property was within a flood plain buffer zone next to a river in which timber harvesting was prohibited, negating the insured's ability to exercise its timber rights on the land. The court acknowledged the economic effect on the insured, but found that the ordinance did not impair title:

---

[367] Dave Robbins Construction, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 158 Wash.App. 895, 249 P.3d 625 (Wash.App. Div. 1 2010) (historical district designation did not make title unmarketable; Washington heritage register records were not "public records" as defined in policy).

[368] In Zev Cohen, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 15 Misc.3d 798, 831 N.Y.S.2d 689 (N.Y.Sup. 2007), the court said that "[t]he appointment of a 7-A Administrator deals with a statutory managing agent, charged with the duty to collect rents and improve the property. It is not a judicial lien charging the land with a debt. The appointment of a 7-A Administrator is not a 'defect in or lien or encumbrance on the title.' While the appointment of a 7-A Administrator does create a special lien, it is a lien that is not required to be listed in a title report." 831 N.Y.S.2d at 694.

[369] In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 902 F.Supp.2d 1048 (N.D. Ohio 2012), the court distinguished Zev Cohen because that policy had contained a parties in possession exception, and the court had found the administrator was a party in possession. The loan policy in the FDIC case did not contain a possession exception. Also, Zev Cohen involved an owner's policy, which the court found to be different for reasons not articulated. Further, the Zev Cohen policy contained no exception for the administrator, while the FDIC title commitment issued on this property "identifies two valid lis pendens that relate directly to the appointment of the 7–A administrator, both of which were in effect at the time the policy was issued." The court said those exceptions somehow led to more coverage rather than less. The case was decided by a judge in Ohio seeking to interpret New York law, involving a loan held by the FDIC, which might explain why the decision is so difficult to reconcile with Zev Cohen.

[370] Cowart v. Northwest Title Agency of Ohio and Michigan, Inc., 2008-Ohio-9, 2008 WL 53292 (Ohio App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished) (property's designation as being within flood plain not covered by policy); Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Investguard Ltd., 449 S.E.2d 681, 683 (Ga.App. 1994) ("Although location of part of the property in a flood plain may affect its market value, it does not affect the marketability of title to the property"); Hanson Business Park, L.P. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 209 S.W.3d 867 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2006) (property's designation as being in flood plain was physical condition, not defect in title, and therefore not covered by policy); Layman v. Friedlander, 2003 WL 1958692 (Va.Cir.Ct.) (unpublished) (alleged failure to make exception for flood plain designation in commitment not actionable; title not unmarketable); Owings v. Abdelhak, 2003 WL 22438320 (Tex.App.-San Antonio 2003) (unpublished) (insurer had no duty to advise purchasers that property was located in flood plain).

[371] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Investguard Ltd., 449 S.E.2d 681, 683 (Ga.App. 1994).

[372] 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. (N.C.) 1998).

> While it is true that the ... ordinances have effectively frustrated [timbering], thereby substantially reducing the economic value of the interest purchased, Haw River Timber raises no issue about whether it received legal title to the timber from the grantors. And the Lawyers Title policy insuring marketable title under the timber deed only guarantees Haw River Timber a title that could be enforced in a suit for specific performance, not the economic value of the timber purchased. Indeed, the explicit definition of marketable title provided in the policy limits any more expansive notion by insuring against only those title defects that would entitle a purchaser "to be released from the obligation to purchase by virtue of a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title." The ordinances on which Haw River relies as a title defect do not impair the grantor's ability to convey a timber deed.[373]

The Haw River court held that the distinction between unmarketability of title and restrictions on its use is reinforced by the governmental use regulation exclusion.[374] In reaching that conclusion, the court relied on and quoted from Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc.,[375] which held that an ordinance prohibiting a curb cut onto the adjacent street did not render title unmarketable because it did not render the deed "void or voidable."

The designation of property as wetlands also does not affect its title or the marketability of title. In Bear Fritz Land Co. v. Kachemak Bay Title Agency, Inc.,[376] the Army Corps of Engineers had issued a fill permit because it considered the property to be wetlands. The permit was not recorded and the insured purchaser was not aware of it at time of purchase. The wetlands designation was found not to affect the marketability of title, even though it affected "the market value of the property."[377] The Bear Fritz court also found that the wetlands designation and permit were not an encumbrance on title.[378]

---

[373] Id. at 4 (quoting from the policy definition of marketability).

[374] Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. (N.C.) 1998).

[375] 23 N.C. App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423, 429 (1974).

[376] 920 P.2d 759 (Ala. 1996).

[377] Id. at 761.

[378] Id. at 762. The court cited Domer v. Sleeper, 533 P.2d 9 (Ala. 1975) and Hebb v. Severson, 32 Wash.2d 159, 201 P.2d 156 (1948) for the following definition of "encumbrance": "any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistent with the passing of the fee; and, also, a burden upon the land depreciative of its value, such as a lien, easement, or servitude, which, though adverse to the interest of the landowner, does not conflict with his conveyance of the land in fee." Under that definition, the court held, "the wetlands designation here is not an encumbrance: it does not give any third person a right to or interest in the property, nor does it burden the property with a lien, interest or servitude." Id. The court also cited Frimberger v. Anzellotti, 25 Conn.App. 401, 594 A.2d 1029 (Conn.App. 1991), a Connecticut decision which held that a wetlands designation does not affect marketability of title or create an encumbrance. Compare the New York decision of In re Rodolitz, 232 B.R. 573 (E.D.N.Y. 1999), in which a bulkhead projected seven feet beyond the bulkhead line set by the

A deficiency in a parcel's legal description may render its title unmarketable, but only if that defect is profound. A legal description that is so bad that the property cannot be located with certainty can render the title unmarketable.[379]

Many classes of recorded instruments do not affect title or render title unmarketable.[380] Most encumbrances do not render title unmarketable; nor is title typically rendered unmarketable due to a violation of an encumbrance. For example, the violation of a restrictive covenant setting the maximum height of the residence was found not to render title unmarketable.[381] However, under certain circumstances, use restrictions can make title unmarketable, despite the fact that such restrictions exist to benefit and protect the value of property.[382] Also, one court found that an oil pipeline easement rendered title to the burdened parcel unmarketable, although the encumbrance more accurately had an effect on market value rather than the marketability of the title.[383] See §9.12 for a complete discussion of the classes of instruments that are recorded but that do not affect title.

A pending dispute about the real estate or its title may render title unmarketable, if the controversy casts legitimate doubt on the property's ownership or would make a reasonable person believe that a purchaser would be likely to become embroiled in litigation over the title. The assertion of a meritless claim of title does not render title unmarketable.[384] A recorded notice of default of a first deed of trust did not create a lien or encumbrance on the insured third deed of trust's title, and did not make the title unmarketable.[385] Also, following an Exclusion 3(a) rationale, an

---

Army Corps of Engineers in the Dutch Kills basin adjoining the East River. The court found that the encroachment rendered title to the property unmarketable. It rejected the seller's argument that the encroachment "did not affect marketability because violations of laws do not affect marketability of title; [and] no violation of record was shown... ." The court noted that a New York commentator opined that title which was unmarketable because of an encroachment onto government property was not "rendered marketable" merely because the government had not demanded the removal of the encroachment.

[379] Hedgecock v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 676 P.2d 1208 (Colo.App. 1983); Mattson Ridge, LLC v. Clear Rock Title, LLP, 824 N.W.2d 622 (Minn. 2012).

[380] Veeder v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 88 Mass.App.Ct. 1104, 36 N.E.3d 79 (Table), 2015 WL 5102856 (Mass.App. 2015) (unpublished) (recorded conservation commission order of conditions "places a restriction on the use of the land," but "does not create a restriction on the title to the property," and thus is not an encumbrance on title and does not render title unmarketable).

[381] Camp v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 787 F.2d 1258 (8th Cir. 1986). The court stated that the fact that the house was built below the flood plain elevation "undoubtedly affects the value of the land, and interferes with its salability, it is not as a result of any doubt as to who holds title to the property." 787 F.2d at 1261.

[382] Tamiami Abstract & Title Co. v. Malanka, 185 So.2d 493 (Fla.App. 1966).

[383] Bozeman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 470 So.2d 465 (La.App. 1985). The insurer was aware of the easement when the policy was issued, but insured the title on the assumption that it would be released or extinguished. See further discussion of this case and the effect of "insuring over" defects in §9.8.2 below.

[384] Native Sun Investment Group v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 189 Cal.App.3d 1265, 235 Cal.Rptr. 34 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1987). The insurer accepted a tender of the defense, however.

[385] Glavinich v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 163 Cal.App.3d 263, 209 Cal.Rptr. 266 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1984).

insured was found to have no claim for a lender's refusal to lend when the defect was the foreclosure of a mortgage made by the insured.[386] The fact that a seller is a debtor-in-possession under a Chapter 11 bankruptcy does not, by itself, make the title to its property unmarketable.[387]

There are also many instruments and other issues that are linked in a general way to the ownership of property, but that do not rise to the level of encumbrances, liens or defects in title, or render title unmarketable. Although one court found that the lack of a right of access rendered the title to the parcel unmarketable, the great bulk of decisions on the issue have ruled to the contrary.[388] The use of an assumed name by the owner-mortgagor did not render title unmarketable.[389] The failure to obtain all permits for a subdivision of land likewise does not render title to the lots unmarketable.[390] A "Notice of Disqualification for Future Federal Disaster Assistance" recorded in the "public records" did not make title unmarketable, and therefore the lack of an exception for such a notice in a policy did not make the title insurer liable to the insured.[391]

9.8.5 Marketability Claims Affecting Condominiums

When a project or development is a condominium, cooperative or has a similar private governance structure or a sophisticated web of restrictions and easements, a party may claim that poor drafting of the governing documents renders title to a unit or parcel unmarketable. There may be numerous aspects of a condominium regime or other private governance structure that make the project undesirable. However, such issues only very rarely render title unmarketable.[392] In United

---

[386] Buffington v. Atlanta Title & Trust Co., 43 Ga.App. 444, 159 S.E. 297 (Ga.App. 1931).

[387] Booth v. Attorneys' Title Guar. Fund, Inc., 2001 UT 13, 20 P.3d 319 (Utah 2001).

[388] See the complete discussion of the issue at §9.7.1.

[389] Scott v. Pennsylvania Title Ins. Co., 48 Berks 239, 10 Pa. D. & C.2d 129, 1957 WL 6485 (Pa.Com.Pl. 1956).

[390] Dollinger DeAnza Associates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 199 Cal.App.4th 1132, 131 Cal.Rptr.3d 596 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 2011) (notice of merger of seven parcels into one recorded by city was pursuant to land division regulation powers and did not render title unmarketable even though a buyer rejected the contract due to the notice); Security Service Federal Credit Union v. First American Title Ins. Co., 585 Fed.Appx. 591, 2014 WL 5438805 (9th Cir. (Cal.) 2014) (unpublished) (lots sold without "final public report" approving subdivision did not have unmarketable title, although they might be less valuable as a result). In Whaley v. First American Title Co. of the Mid-West, 2004 WL 316978 (Tenn.App. 2004) (unpublished), the court said "[t]he lower court found that the improper subdivision does not constitute a defect in title or an unmarketable title, because those concepts concern issues of legal ownership, while an improper subdivision pertains to the value of property. We agree."

[391] Lemon-Pittman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 3498323 (E.D.La. 2014) (unpublished).

[392] See, for example, Greenberg v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 171 Wis.2d 485, 492 N.W.2d 147 (Wis. 1992), in which the condominium declaration contained numerous provisions that were found not to render title unmarketable or to trigger the marketability coverage of the policy. In Lennen v. Marriott Ownership Resorts, Inc., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1440092 (M.D.Fla. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed August 21, 2019, the insureds bought interests in timeshare condominiums. They alleged that there were numerous deficiencies in the complicated and multi-leveled ownership regime. The court disposed of a number of their complaints on a motion to dismiss, but said that other claimed deficiencies would require further analysis.

States v. Marlatt,[393] the insurer removed liens from a condominium that failed principally due to mismanagement. The insured unit owners sued under the policy marketability provision, on the theory that title must still be defective because their units still would not sell. The court rejected the argument, saying:

> The purchasers were not happy. The resort had closed, and for this and perhaps other reasons their condos were worthless, however spic and span the titles to them. ... We do not know the cause of the loss of which the purchasers complained. It may have been a collapse of the local recreational real estate market, business mistakes by the defendant, some unrelated fraud by the defendant, or a completely extraneous event. All we know for sure is that the loss in value was not caused by the defective titles. For after the defects were removed, the loss remained. The fact that the purchasers would not have purchased the time shares had it not been for the title insurance policies issued by Ticor would not make Ticor an insurer against a drop in the real estate market.[394]

In Humphries v. West End Terrace, Inc.,[395] title to condominium units was found to be marketable, despite the fact that the units had little market value due in part to the fact that the property was sold subject to a large blanket mortgage. The mortgage, however, had been excepted on Schedule B of the policies and insured over, meaning that title was marketable as shown in the policies.

Allison v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.[396] also involved a condominium regime. The court found that the insurer was not responsible for depreciation in value unrelated to a defect in title. In that case, ski lodge time-share unit owners had entered into a rental pooling agreement and management contract. The manager-developer filed bankruptcy and the trustee threatened to have the unit owners declared to be "merely either equity investors in the [ski lodge] and/or mortgage holders on said equity investment," on the theory that the unit owners' interests were not leases but investment contracts sold as unregistered securities. The trustee's theory was found to be unsound because the sale of an unregistered investment contract gives the buyer a right of rescission, but does not void the buyer's title.[397] Thus, the allegations did not make title unmarketable.[398]

---

[393] 24 F.3d 1005 (7th Cir. 1994).

[394] Id. at 1007.

[395] 795 S.W.2d 128 (Tenn.App. 1990).

[396] 907 F.2d 645 (7th Cir. 1990); later decision 979 F.2d 1187 (7th Cir. 1992).

[397] In this respect, the Allison case is very similar to Nishiyama v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 85 Cal.App.3d Supp. 1, 149 Cal.Rptr. 355 (A.D.Sup.Ct. 1978). In Nishiyama, a purchaser of a lot claimed that the subdivision plat had not been filed. This made the conveyance to the insured voidable at the purchaser's option, just as with an unregistered security. The Nishiyama court held, as in Allison, that the insured's right to void the transaction did not render the insured's title unmarketable.

[398] The Seventh Circuit confirmed that a leasehold interest may also be an investment contract under securities laws, but that fact "does not make the leasehold any less an interest in real property." The sale of unregistered securities merely

Similarly, in First United, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[399] a judgment was obtained by time share interval owners to compensate them for the loss of the right to use certain amenities when a mixed-use development failed and was split up. The judgment would be imposed against the insured lender when it took title to one of the properties through foreclosure. The judgment was found not to be a defect in title compensable under the loan policy, because it was an incident of ownership.[400]

However, defects in the regime documents can render title unmarketable when they create a dispute about the vesting of title.[401] Thus, when the declaration labeled certain land as common elements, but an amendment to the declaration later relabeled the area as expansion land and yet another amendment created units in that area and sold, the dispute between the association and the unit buyers over ownership of the building was found to render title unmarketable, and to invoke policy coverage.[402]

9.8.6 Making Title Marketable By Removing Defect or Encumbrance

The insurer usually has several possible means of solving a claim, including the right to clear title. See Chapter 3 for an explanation of the insurer's options in resolving a covered claim. The curing of title is one such option. See §3.4 regarding the insurer's right to clear title. The insurer will sometimes be willing to issue a policy to a purchaser or lender while it is in the process of seeking to clear title, as discussed at §3.4.4.

---

results in a right in the purchaser to void the sale, but does not void the title interest the purchaser obtains. Allison v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 907 F.2d 645 (7th Cir. (Wis.) 1990).

[399] 366 Ark. 508, 237 S.W.3d 15 (Ark. 2006).

[400] The court quoted from and analogized to Hocking and Kumar, saying: "Similarly, the appellant here appears to possess fee simple title to the land, whatever it might be worth, and we agree that it is possible to hold perfect title to land that is valueless. The appellant has failed to appreciate the distinction between land that is unmarketable and title that is unmarketable, and its arguments emphasize factors that relate to the lack of economic value of the land itself, rather than to a title that is unmarketable. The appellant is free to possess and control the land, or to sell it to whatever purchaser desires to buy it. Accordingly, we hold that the judgment in this case does not make title to the land unmarketable. Because we conclude that the judgment is not covered by the policy, which insures against defects in title and unmarketability of title, as opposed to the unmarketability of the property itself, we need not address the additional questions raised by the appellant of whether specific exclusions within the policy apply to the judgment."

[401] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. IDC Properties, Inc., 547 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. (R.I.) 2008), aff'g 524 F.Supp.2d 155 (D.R.I. 2007), an amendment to a condominium declaration adding expansion lands to the project was unenforceable because the statutory time period for expansion had expired. This rendered the declarations of units in the expansion areas void. Nonetheless, the risk was not assumed by the insurer, because the insured failed to disclose material facts about the expansion issue to the insurer. However, in IDC Properties, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 974 F.Supp.2d 87 (D.R.I. 2013), involving the same condominium, the court found that a different policy provided protection against the same invalid amendments.

[402] C.R.C. Unit Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Schaeffer, 1993 WL 313579, 1993 Ohio App. LEXIS 4000 (Ohio App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished), jurisdictional motion overruled by 68 Ohio St.3d 1430, 624 N.E.2d 1067 (Table).

9.9 2006 ALTA Policy Covered Risks

The American Land Title Association adopted new policy forms on June 17, 2006.[403] The 1992 ALTA policy forms were decertified on June 17, 2007. This section discusses several coverages found in the 2006 policy forms that were not contained in earlier ALTA policies.

9.9.1 Survey Matters Coverage

Covered Risk 2(c) of the 2006 ALTA policies provides indemnity as to matters that would be shown on an accurate survey, a subject otherwise found in the policy only as a standard Schedule B exception to coverage. Covered Risk 2(c) indemnifies against "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on the Title" caused by an:

> encroachment, encumbrance, violation, variation, or adverse circumstance affecting the Title that would be disclosed by an accurate and complete land survey of the Land. The term "encroachment" includes encroachments of existing improvements located on the Land onto adjoining land, and encroachments onto the Land of existing improvements located on adjoining land.

This language is lifted from the ALTA Short Form Residential Loan Policy. As ALTA's own commentary states, the insured now has "survey" coverage for the first time, "absent a survey exception in Schedule B." The drafters clearly contemplated that the survey coverage of the policy may be removed by an exception or endorsement.[404] When the policy contains a survey exception as well as Covered Risk 2(c), the Covered Risk limits the scope of the survey exception.[405]

The survey coverage uses certain words not defined in the policy: "encroachment," "encumbrance," "violation," "variation," and "adverse circumstance." Other than "encroachment," these words are rarely, if ever, made a part of the typical survey exception. The official ALTA comments do not discuss the issue. The word "encumbrance" could be read to expand the standard coverage against encumbrances to include matters which encumber title, but which would only be discoverable with a survey. There is no direct explanation as to what type of "violation" might be

---

[403] The policy forms were described in some depth in Clifford L. Morgan, ALTA Adopts New Policies, Title News, September/October 2006. Mr. Morgan then served as chair of the ALTA Forms Committee. See also J. Bushnell Nielsen, 2006 Policy Forms Analyzed, The Title Insurance Law Newsletter, September, 2006, p. 3; and Richard F. Bales, The ALTA 2006 Title Insurance Policies and the Issuance of Survey Coverage, The Title Insurance Law Newsletter, November 2006, p. 5.

[404] Comments on proposed underwriting standards are found in Richard F. Bales, The ALTA 2006 Title Insurance Policies and the Issuance of Survey Coverage, The Title Insurance Law Newsletter, November 2006, p. 5, now published by American Land Title Association.

[405] In Developer Finance Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 777460 (D.N.H.), 2012 DNH 050 (unpublished), because the Covered Risk protected against "adverse circumstances" that would be disclosed by an accurate survey, but the survey exception excluded matters that would be shown on an accurate survey "and which are not shown by the public records," the insured established coverage, and that the exception did not apply, by showing that an accurate survey would disclose the circumstance (an ancient road depicted as running through the insured parcel on a very old map) and that it was referenced in a recorded instrument (the map).

covered. It may refer to the violation of a setback line revealed by the survey which locates the improvements. The word "variation" could be construed as a reference to those situations in which the recorded distance or area is at variance with that measured in the field. Such claims are not covered under the 1992 and earlier ALTA policy forms.[406] The phrase "adverse circumstance" is not common to title and conveyancing law. A survey may reveal "adverse circumstances" that do not affect title, such as a flood plain line or the existence of a toxic waste dump on the property. Neither circumstance is protected against by the policy. See §§9.6 and 9.8.3.

However, the terms used in the Covered Risk do not create coverage for a matter that does not affect title. Covered Risk 2 begins with the statement that it indemnifies the insured against a "defect in the Title." The phrase "affecting the Title" is repeated within the coverage. This makes it clear that the Covered Risk is limited to title matters, and not issues of area, physical condition or salability.[407] In New South Federal Savings Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.,[408] the insured lender took a mortgage on a vacant parcel rather than the borrower's residence. The court found that the insured did not bootstrap into coverage through the survey risk because, while the error would have been disclosed by a survey, it did not affect title:

> A survey likely would have revealed the errors in both the mortgage and the insurance. In fact, it was a survey that ultimately revealed the error. However, the applicable affirmative assurance provides that the policy provides coverage losses/damages stemming from "any violation, variation, encroachment, or adverse circumstances affecting the title" that would have been disclosed through a survey. (Emphasis added.) While the course of events in this case is not fully explained in the record, the problems associated with the varying property descriptions do not affect the "title" of either parcel of property. Thus, per the terms of the contract, there is no coverage for the inability to foreclose on the Willis Flat Road property.[409]

A second facet of Covered Risk 2(c) has to do with the type of survey referenced by the coverage. The scope of the coverage is determined by reference to those matters that would be shown by a survey. The same principle is true of the survey exception. The Covered Risk refers to matters that would be disclosed by an "accurate and complete land survey." The phrase "land [406] See §12.3.7 regarding shortages in area and §12.3.8 regarding shortages in distance.

[407] In BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 830 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2016), the court rejected the argument that Covered Risk 2 evidenced the intent to expand policy coverage to include matters that do not affect title. It held that Covered Risk 2 did not provide an affirmative assurance against the existence of a taxing district, which was not a lien on the title. In Developer Finance Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 777460 (D.N.H.), 2012 DNH 050 (unpublished), the court found that the possible existence of an ancient road running through the insured parcel might not be an encumbrance on title, but was an "adverse circumstance" that affected the property. It did not provide the further analysis that this "adverse circumstance" affected the title to the property, although that might be a fair assessment of the issue.

[408] 940 So.2d 739 (La.App. 3 Cir. 2006).

[409] 940 So.2d at 744.

survey" may be intended to codify the holding of State Farm Ins. Co's v. Peda,[410] which held that a "survey" means a full boundary survey, not a mortgage inspection report. The phrase "accurate and complete" may also be intended as a clarification, because it is not uncommon for a survey to be accurate and yet not complete. If this phrase were inserted in a survey exception, it would take away coverage. However, because this phrase appears in a Covered Risk, its effect is likely to broaden coverage rather than to narrow it. When the policy contains a survey exception, the policy covers only those matters that would not be shown on a survey. The broader the range of survey matters, the less coverage exists. In Peda, for example, the claimant argued that an encroachment was not shown on a survey, and therefore there was coverage. The insurer defeated the argument by showing that the encroachment would be shown on a more accurate survey. By moving the exception to the Covered Risks, however, the equation is reversed: the more survey matters which would be shown on an "accurate and complete" survey, the greater the scope of the coverage.

There are also certain terms commonly used in survey exceptions that are not found in Covered Risk 2. These include "overlaps" and "shortages in area." Because these terms are not recited in the Covered Risk, there may or may not be any affirmative protection against such issues.

9.9.2 Notice Of Enforcement Coverages

The 2006 ALTA policies were the first to include Covered Risks 5 through 8. In earlier ALTA policy forms, these assurances appeared as exceptions to Exclusion 1, concerning governmental regulation of the use of the property, and Exclusion 2, for rights of eminent domain. Exclusions 1 and 2 and the evolution of the policies leading to the adoption of Covered Risks 5 through 8 are discussed in §11.1. That passage also combines a discussion of the cases that have construed these covered risks with those that have construed Exclusions 1 and 2, since they are two parts of the same subject. However, a few representative decisions are listed below.

Covered Risk 5 indemnifies against loss caused by a "violation or enforcement of any law, ordinance, permit, or governmental regulation" relating to zoning, building codes, subdivision and environmental protection, if "a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records… ." The covered risk is only invoked if a notice of enforcement of a zoning, building code, subdivision or environmental protection law or regulation has been recorded, as of the date of policy, in those records that impart notice to buyers of real estate.[411]

Designation that the property is in a special district is not a notice of enforcement.[412] Dave

---

[410] 2003-Ohio-1092, 2003 WL 943884 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished).

[411] See First American Title Ins. Co. v. McGonigle, 2013 WL 1087353 (D.Kan.) (unpublished); 2013 WL 1092893 (D.Kan.) (unpublished) (recorded agreement to repair dam, though binding on subsequent owners, was not a notice of violation of a Kansas Division of Water Resources regulation); Stockton Mortgage, Inc. v. Tope, 233 Cal.App.4th 437, 183 Cal.Rptr.3d 186 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 2014), reh.den. (Jan. 13, 2015), rev.den. (March 25, 2015) (recorded notice of abatement identifying various building code violations was not a lien or encumbrance on title, and lack of exception in policy did not obligate insurer to pay to bring property up to code; recitation of notice in preliminary title report with requirement that it be released was not a promise by insurer or its agent to obtain that release at their expense).

[412] In McGonagle v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 432 S.W.3d 535 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2014), the court found that a recorded instrument instructing the owner that a house on the property was historic and would have to be moved rather than torn down was not an encumbrance on title. Thus, the removal of an exception for restrictive covenants of record

Robbins Construction, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co.[413] held that Covered Risk 5 was not invoked by the fact that the property had been placed on a historical register, in a set of heritage registry records promulgated by law. The insured received a stop-work order when he began construction, and archeological artifacts were discovered on the property, which delayed construction. The insured argued that the covered risk was invoked because "the stop-work order amounts to enforcement of governmental regulations." The court said that interpretation would unfasten the covered risk from its mooring to matters affecting the title to the property:

> …[C]overage exists for damage from regulation enforcement only "if a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the ... intention to enforce[.]" Here, … there were no notices of violation or intent to take enforcement action recorded with the county auditor.
>
> DRC claims no such notices need be recorded with the county recorder, because the term "Public Records" as used in the policy includes all records on file with all governmental agencies, including the list of properties kept in the Washington heritage register… . We disagree. … Contrary to DRC's argument, there is nothing in RCW 27.34 declaring the purpose of the Washington heritage register is to impart constructive notice of matters relating to real property to potential purchasers… .[414]

Covered Risk 6, similarly, provides coverage for "[a]n enforcement action based on the exercise of a governmental police power" if a notice has been recorded on the policy date. Covered Risk 7 provides the identical coverage as to the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Covered Risk 8 protects against governmental takings. The 2006 policies contain exclusions for governmental regulation, police power and eminent domain. The exclusions now say that they do not modify or limit the coverages provided by the corresponding covered risks. See §11.1.5 for a discussion of the police power and eminent domain exclusions and covered risks.

9.9.3 Creditors' Rights Coverage

The 2006 ALTA policies contain an affirmative creditors' rights coverage, which is another of the former exceptions to exclusions (Exclusion 4 in the 2006 ALTA Owner's policy and Exclusion 6 in 2006 ALTA Loan policy). This assurance is found in Covered Risk 9 of the owner's policy and Covered Risk 13 of the loan policy. The coverage protects against avoidance of the insured conveyance instrument due to the overturning of a prior conveyance as a fraudulent transfer or preference.[415] It also protects against avoidance of the insured instrument as a preference, but only did not create coverage for the effect of that instrument. However, the policy apparently did not contain Covered Risk 5, and the court did not discuss the exception to Exclusion 1 as found in the 1992 ALTA policy.

---

[413] 158 Wash.App. 895, 249 P.3d 625 (Wash.App. Div. 1 2010).

[414] 158 Wash.App. at 904, 249 P.3d at 628-9.

[415] In Concept Dorssers v. Pacific Northwest Title Ins. Co., Inc., 2010 WL 1141462 (W.D.Wash.) (permanent citation not yet available), the policy was found not to obligate the insurer to protect an insured holder of a deed of trust against a if such a preference claim is based on untimely recording or the insured deed or mortgage's failure "to impart notice of its existence to a purchaser for value or to a judgment or lien creditor." The subject of creditors' rights is fully discussed at §11.8.

9.9.4 Recording Gap Coverage

The 2006 ALTA policies also contain a recording gap coverage.[416] This states that the policy protects against title interests, liens and encumbrances that are recorded in the period of time from the policy date to the date on which the insured instrument was recorded, if that deed or mortgage was recorded after the policy date.

This is truly future coverage. It essentially negates the post-policy exclusion as to any time elapsed from policy date to date of recording, which small time gap has resulted in several publicized decisions discussed at §11.5.

However, this coverage is very narrow. It is industry custom to date a policy a few minutes or hours after the recording of the insured instrument. When the policy is so dated, the coverage is not invoked, because there will be no such gap. The covered risk may only be triggered if the policy date is short of the date of recording for some reason, and an interest in the title is recorded or comes into being in that interval of time. In addition, the 2006 ALTA policy adds an exclusion for taxes and assessments imposed during this gap period (Exclusion 5 in the owner's policy and Exclusion 7 in the loan policy).

The recording gap that is typically discussed as being a concern to buyers of title insurance is that interval of time between the commitment's last effective date and the date on which the insured deed or mortgage is recorded. There are several means by which an insurer can protect the insured against matters appearing in that broader recording gap, as discussed in §6.7. An escrowee can assume a duty as to matters that fall within the recording gap, as discussed in §13.6.

---

bankruptcy trustee's claim that prior transfers were in fraud of creditors, because the trustee also asserted that the insured deed of trust was a fraud on creditors and not for value. The court found that the trustee would be unable to attack the insured deed of trust unless it, too, was a fraud on creditors. The allegations against the insured's interest triggered Exclusion 6, and negated any duty to defend or indemnify.

[416] In Lucas v. Kensington Abstract, LLC, 20 Misc.3d 1135(A), 872 N.Y.S.2d 691 (Table), 2008 WL 3823776 (N.Y.Sup.), 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. 51734(U) (unpublished), the insurer was sued in negligence because its agent took two years to record the insured mortgage. The court dismissed the claim, but noted that the 2006 ALTA policy at issue contained the gap coverage, and remarked that the lender might have a claim under that coverage as to six intervening liens recorded between the closing date and the recording of the insured mortgage.

9.10 Loan Policy Coverages

FORM 32, Appendix A
Loan policy does not insure debt, repayment of debt or value of land

FORM 87, Appendix A
Mortgage invalid for lack of debt

The American Land Title Association has produced several policy forms that insure a lender that holds a security instrument that encumbers the title to real estate.[417] Section 9.14.3 discusses the special terms of the ALTA Short Form Residential Loan Policy. Section 9.14.4 discusses the special terms of the ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Junior Loan Policy. The term loan policy is a misnomer, because the policy does not insure a loan, but a lien that secures a loan. The only sense in which the loan is related to the loan policy is in the manner in which the policy permits for successor owners of the loan to become successor insureds under the policy before the lender takes title to the property, as discussed at §7.4. The Texas T-2 Mortgagee policy thus bears a more descriptive name.

Most versions of the ALTA loan policy contain four coverages in addition to those found in the owner's policy. The Covered Risk concerning construction liens is discussed in Chapter 10. The covered risks discussed in this section are the protections against the invalidity or unenforceability of the lien of the insured mortgage (Covered Risk 9 of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy; Covered Risk 5 of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy), priority over liens and encumbrances not excepted in Schedule B (Covered Risk 10 of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy; Covered Risk 6 of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy), and against the invalidity or unenforceability of any assignment of the mortgage recited in Schedule A of the policy (Covered Risk 12 of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy; Covered Risk 8 of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy). These coverages are not found in the ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Junior Loan Policy.

The enforceability coverage indemnifies the insured in the event it is unable to obtain title to the property by foreclosure or trustee's sale. The enforceability coverage is limited by Exclusion 4 of the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy, which negates the Covered Risk if the lien cannot be enforced solely because the insured is not qualified to do business in the jurisdiction. See §11.9 regarding that exclusion. Also excluded is any claim that the insured mortgage is invalid or unenforceable "based upon usury or any consumer credit protection or truth in lending law" (Exclusion 5), discussed at §11.7. The measure of loss under a loan policy is discussed at §3.2.4.

A mortgage may be found invalid or unenforceable for a number of reasons, most of which also apply to deeds vesting title. Forgery, fraud and incapacity of the mortgagor are discussed above at §9.2. See other sections in this chapter discussing liens and encumbrances on title.

In other cases, a mortgage may be invalid or unenforceable because of a defect in the insured mortgage. A mortgage may be invalid because it was not executed by the owner of the property[418] or [417] The lender's security instrument may be denominated by state law and custom as a mortgage, deed of trust, trust deed, deed to secure debt, security deed or other name. This book refers to all such security instruments as mortgages.

---

[418] Henningsen v. Title & Trust Co., 151 Or. 318, 49 P.2d 458 (1935).

was not signed by both tenants by the entireties.[419] The policy has been held to protect against a claim that the mortgage is invalid as a bankruptcy preference.[420] However, when the bankruptcy court declared the mortgage debt extinguished because other property had been sold to satisfy the debt, the policy was extinguished and no loss was payable.[421]

The policy does not assure that the insured mortgage will impart notice to subsequent purchasers, or that the insured's loan will be paid off when the property is sold.[422] Thus, when the mortgage was a valid debt and duly recorded, but failed to impart constructive notice solely because the lender recited the borrower's name incorrectly on the instrument, the court found that this error was "created" by the insured and was not covered by the policy.[423]

The loan policy also does not insure the validity of the debt, or against the inability to enforce the lien of the mortgage if it is found not to secure a valid debt.[424] There is no coverage if the

---

[419] Narbeth Building & Loan Ass'n v. Bryn Mawr Trust Co., 126 Pa.Super. 74, 190 A.149 (1937).

[420] First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (Sup. Ct. 1939) (preference) (see further discussion of this case at §11.2.6).

[421] McClellan Realty Corp. v. Institutional Investors Trust, 714 F. Supp. 733 (M.D. Pa. 1988), aff'd without opinion at 879 F.2d 858 (3rd Cir. (Pa.) 1989).

[422] GRK Holdings, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 3940575 (D.Ariz.) (unpublished) (when issuing later policies, insurer had no affirmative duty to inform subsequent buyers of insured deed of trust or to make sure lender was paid off).

[423] First Merit Bank, NA v. Guarantee Title & Trust Co., 2006 WL 1791148, 2006-Ohio-3333 (Ohio App. 9 Dist. 2006) (unpublished).

[424] "[A] mortgage lien and a mortgage debt are two entirely different ... species ... . [A] guarantee of the validity of the mortgage lien cannot and should not be construed as guaranteeing that the insurer has made a careful investigation of the origin of the mortgage debt and guarantees its payment or validity." Bank of Miami Beach v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York., 239 So.2d 97, 99 (Fla.1970). "As has been recognized elsewhere, 'failure of consideration is not a covered loss' under the policy language at issue here." Gerrold v. Penn Title Ins. Co., 271 N.J.Super. 50, 637 A.2d 1293, 1295 (N.J.Super.Ct.A.D. 1994). Bank of Miami Beach and Gerrold were relied on in Pacific American Construction v. Security Union Title Ins. Co., 377 Utah Adv.Rep. 22, 1999 UT 87, 987 P.2d 45 (1999), which found that the policy did not protect against invalidity of the mortgage resulting from the lender's delivery of the loan funds to a party other than the borrower, causing the mortgage to be void for lack of consideration. "Generally stated, the provision [at issue here] insures against defects in the mortgage itself, but not against problems arising from or related to the underlying debt…. In conclusion, we find that the insuring clauses of the Policy do not cover losses arising, as here, from a failure of the debt underlying the mortgage." Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. JDC (America) Corp., 52 F.3d 1575, 1583 (11th Cir.1995) stated: "a title policy insuring a mortgagee insures only the title to the land securing his debt and not the debt." See also 60 A.L.R.2d 972, 976 (1958); and Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Consumer Home Mortgage, Inc., 272 A.D.2d 512, 708 N.Y.S.2d 445, 2000 N.Y. Slip.Op. 05066 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000) (when lender's closing agent stole the loan funds, the debt was invalid and the policy void and exclusion 3(a) also applied); Bank of Miami Beach v. Lawyers Title Guar. Fund, 214 So.2d 95 (Fla.App. 1968) (policy does not protect against forgery of note, and does not guarantee repayment of debt); Narberth Building & Loan Ass'n v. Bryn Mawr Trust Co., 126 Pa.Super. 74, 190 A. 149 (1937) (policy neither makes insurer "a surety for the mortgaged debt, nor a guarantor of its payment. The defendant did not undertake to insure that the property mortgaged was a sufficient security for the debt."). In Miller v. Commercial Standard Ins. Co., 248 So.2d 675 (Fla.App. 1971), when the lender discovered a title defect, it demanded that the insurer buy the loan, which was already in default. The court rejected that claimed duty, saying: "[t]he title insurance contract is not a continuing obligation to purchase a mortgage which goes sour, as plaintiffs seem to think, but rather to defend the mortgage is unenforceable because the debt is invalid due to the failure of the lender or its agent to fund the loan to the borrower,[425] the lender that funded the loan fails to obtain the promissory note and the loan is sold to a different party,[426] or the loan is unenforceable due to violation of the usury laws.[427] However, when the title insurer is the only party attacking the validity of the mortgage due to the claimed lack of a valid debt, the insurer must prove the lack of a debt.[428] When both the note and the insured mortgage are forged, the insurer may insist that the true source of the lender's loss is the lack of a valid debt, while the insured argues that the forged mortgage establishes that the loss is covered by the policy.[429] When a lender was sued under various theories, including RICO, based on title insured against a claim of its invalidity. The option to pay the owners of the mortgage and succeed to their interest is the insurer's." In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cole Taylor Bank, 878 F.Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2012), the court ruled that the policy does not insure the debt or the failure of the mortgage because there was no debt, caused by the bank's closing agent's theft of the money; therefore, there was no policy coverage. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp., 177 Cal.App.4th 106, 98 Cal.Rptr.3d 801, 09 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 11,201 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2009), the originating lender stole all of the loan funds delivered by the funding lender and failed to pay off the prior loan. The borrowers also claimed that the note secured by the insured deed of trust was forged. The court held there was no valid debt. Rather than hold simply that this voided the policy, the court ruled that the lack of a debt meant that the loan assignee did not qualify as a successor insured, because it was not a successor holder of a valid indebtedness.

---

[425] Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Consumer Home Mortgage, Inc., 272 A.D.2d 512, 708 N.Y.S.2d 445, 2000 N.Y. Slip.Op. 05066 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000) (when lender's closing agent stole the loan funds, the debt was invalid and the policy void; exclusion 3(a) also applied); Pacific American Construction v. Security Union Title Ins. Co., 377 Utah Adv.Rep. 22, 1999 UT 87, 987 P.2d 45 (1999) (policy does not cover invalidity of mortgage caused by lender's delivery of loan funds to a party other than the mortgagor, as a result of which there was no consideration given to the borrower for the mortgage).

[426] Lawyers Title Ins. Co., Inc. v. Novastar Mortg., Inc., 862 So.2d 793, 28 Fla. L. Weekly D2746 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2003), reh.den. (Jan 28, 2004) (lender funded loan, but rejected it after closing when it detected falsified paperwork; loan broker cancelled assignment of mortgage to lender, sold loan to another party, but never repaid the lender; lender was denied foreclosure, and court found no coverage under policy).

[427] For example, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Wells, 881 So.2d 668 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2004), the court held: "[b]ecause the Wellses did not have a lawful interest in the loan, they had no insurable interest. An unenforceable usurious loan cannot give rise to an insurable interest. Without an insurable interest in the loan, the Wellses could not enforce the title policy". The policy contains a specific exclusion for invalidity of the insured mortgage due to violation of usury laws, which exclusion is discussed at §11.7.

[428] In Levi v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 4542904 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished), the court held that the insurer did not prove the lack of an underlying debt, despite a number of unusual circumstances concerning the loan. No other party alleged that the debt was invalid.

[429] In M & I Marshall & Ilsley Bank v. Wright, 2011 WL 2713973 (D.Ariz.) (unpublished), the court took the lender's view that the loss was due to the forged mortgage rather than the forged note, even while admitting that the forged note limited the lender's recovery to the property, increasing its loss: "[h]ad the lien been valid, plaintiff might have collected all the money it was owed, and not suffered any damages. However, the lien was not enforceable against any party because it was obtained through forgery. Having made a loan for $171,000 and lacking a valid note, plaintiff's recourse was to sell the property for as much as it could, which resulted in a loss." In Wright, the borrower claimed that his identity had been stolen and that he was not aware that the land had been bought in his name and a deed of trust granted. He thus did not resist the trustee's sale of the property, and the lender later resold the property without incident. Most of its loss was due to plunging real estate values in Phoenix at the time. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse alleged forgeries and alterations to loan documents, the court found that the complaints "do not question either the validity or enforceability of the mortgages, and do not assert title defects."[430]

The policy does not indemnify the insured lender against the borrower's failure to repay the debt.[431] As one court explained,

> A mortgagee title insurance policy does not guarantee the mortgagee that the mortgagor will make the mortgage payments. See Narbeth Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Bryn Mawr Trust Co., 126 Pa.Super. 74, 190 A. 149, 151 (1937) ("The provisions of [a mortgagee title policy] did not constitute the [title insurance] company a surety for the mortgaged debt, nor a guarantor of its payment.") All a policy of that kind does is insure the adequacy of the title to the mortgaged property. … The lender, and not the title insurer, shoulders the credit risk in a real estate loan.[432]

The title insurance policy also does not assure that the loan can be sold.[433]

Likewise, the policy does not indemnify the insured in the event the property encumbered by the insured mortgage is worth less than the amount of the debt.[434] Rather, if the value of the property is less than the debt, loss payable under the policy is limited to the property value or the policy amount, whichever is less. See §3.2.4 regarding the measurement of loss payable under a loan policy.

Lending Corp., 177 Cal.App.4th 106, 98 Cal.Rptr.3d 801, 09 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 11,201 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2009), both mortgage and note were forged, and the court found no liability under the policy. However, its ruling was based on the fact that the claimant was an assignee of the originating lender and, without a valid debt that could be assigned, the court held that the assignee was not an insured under the policy.

[430] First Federal Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.E.2d 916, 922 (S.C.App. 1994).

[431] First Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 793 F. Supp. 265 (D. Colo. 1992); aff'd 19 F.3d 528 (10th Cir. 1994); Bank of Miami Beach v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 239 So.2d 97 (Fla. 1970); Blackhawk Production Credit Ass'n v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 144 Wis.2d 68, 423 N.W.2d 521 (1988). In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Patriot Bank, 2015 WL 2228549 (Tex.App.-Houston 2015) (unpublished), in which the court held that, because a title insurer is not a guarantor of the loan, the loss payable due to total failure of title was not the loan amount but the value of the land, up to policy limits.

[432] First Federal Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.E.2d 916, 922 (S.C.App. 1994).

[433] Glavinich v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 163 Cal.App.3d 263, 209 Cal.Rptr. 266 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1984) (notice of default affected resale value of loan, but not the validity of the lien); First Nat'l Bank of Jeanerette v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 3734056 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), findings adopted in 2010 WL 3734020 (W.D.La.) (unpublished) (no loss payable to lender because it was unable to sell loan, and no evidence that lender lost any money as a result).

[434] Demopoulos v. The Title Ins. Co., 61 N.M. 254, 298 P.2d 938 (1956); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. JDC (America) Corp., 52 F.3d 1575 (11th Cir. 1995); Couch on Insurance, §§ 57:189, 205. In Lakeside National, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3420431 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the building on the insured parcel was razed after the policy date. The court found no coverage, and held that "the fact that an intervening event may deprive the property of value, even if it means that the lien-holder may ultimately be unable to recover his debt, does not affect the legal status of the lien."

Several decisions held that, when the mortgage lien was invalid on the day it was signed, the insurer was not entitled to resolve the claim by tendering title to the property to the lender. The rationale was that the lender would not have made the loan "but for" the assurance of the lien's validity. Later cases rejected this rationale, as discussed at §3.4.6.

In almost all types of title insurance policies, the Covered Risks assure that the mortgage is prior to any lien other than those excepted in Schedule B. Real estate tax liens are analyzed at §9.4. Construction liens are discussed in Chapter 10. Other liens are discussed at §9.5.

The policy does not assure the insured that the mortgage is an enforceable lien against land that is not listed in Schedule A (or C) of the policy as an insured parcel. Thus, when the insured mortgage was also supposed to encumber real estate other than the parcels described in the policy but did not, the insurer had no liability.[435]

The covered risks also assure the validity of any assignment shown in Schedule A, and protect against any lien on or pledge of the mortgage. This coverage only applies to assignments of the insured mortgage specifically recited in Schedule A. If a party purchases the indebtedness and takes an assignment of the mortgage, that party automatically becomes an insured. However, unless the assignment is shown in Schedule A, the party must establish its ownership of the debt in order to pursue a claim on the policy.[436] An assignee named on Schedule A is not required to prove that it is an insured, but may still be required to prove that it remains the owner of the debt on the date on which the claim is made. See §7.3 regarding the definition of insured under the loan policy.

Policy exclusions may, in most cases, be asserted against a loan assignee successor insured. The assignor's acts or knowledge are imputed to the assignee on proof that a principal-agent or other relationship exists between the two entities, but not otherwise. See §7.10 for further discussion of this subject, and §11.3.5 as to the effect of under Exclusion 3(b) concerning the lender's knowledge of fraud or forgery by the borrower.

9.11 Coverages Granted By Endorsement

Coverages that augment those provided by the Covered Risks may be given by endorsement. There are hundreds of endorsements used by the industry, varying widely from state to state. They fall into two general categories: those that remove policy defenses or exceptions, and those giving affirmative assurances not found in the Covered Risks. Endorsements that remove exclusions and exceptions are discussed in connection with those provisions, in Chapters 11 and 12. This section will consider those endorsement coverages that give affirmative assurances going beyond the Covered Risks. The ALTA Homeowner's Policy incorporates a number of coverages commonly granted by endorsement. The coverage of that policy is discussed at §9.14.2.

---

[435] In Crupi v. Newell and Talarico Title Agency, Inc., 14 Misc.3d 1225(A), 2007 WL 292296 (N.Y.Sup.), 2007 N.Y. Slip Op. 50171(U) (unpublished), a title insurer was found not liable due to the failure to record an agreement "spreading" a mortgage onto a second parcel, the title to which was not insured. The insured lender was able to take title to the insured property in lieu of foreclosure. However, the court reserved the question of liability as to the title agent that had assumed the task of recording the spreader agreement.

[436] See Southern Title Ins. Co. v. Crow, 278 So.2d 294 (Fla.App. 1973), cert den. 284 So.2d 221 (Fla. 1973); First Financial Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 557 F.Supp. 654 (N.D.Ga. 1982). The issue of successor insureds under the loan policy is fully discussed at §7.4.

9.11.1 Rules Of Interpretation For Endorsements

An endorsement becomes part of the integrated insurance contract. The endorsement language must be construed together with the other provisions of the policy, except to the extent that it specifically alters those terms:

> Endorsements or riders on a policy become a part of the policy, and must be construed with it. Such provisions in the body of the policy are not to be abrogated, waived, limited, or modified by the provisions of an endorsement or rider unless expressly stated therein that such provisions are substituted for those in the body of the policy, or unless the provisions in the policy proper and in the rider or endorsement are conflicting.[437]

This principle is codified by provisions found in both the policy and the endorsement. See §9.1.3.5 for a complete discussion of the integration provisions.

An affirmative assurance in an endorsement generally shifts that risk from the insured to the insurer. When the insurer consciously assumes a risk by the granting of an affirmative coverage, it may not deny liability on the basis that the insured was equally knowledgeable of the risk, or suffered, assumed or agreed to it.[438] However, as with other policy coverages, when an insured fails to disclose material facts about the risk when seeking an endorsement, the concealment is a misrepresentation that voids coverage.[439]

A clearly-worded endorsement is interpreted as having its plain meaning.[440] For example, an

---

[437] 13A Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice, §7538, quoted with approval in Pete Lien & Sons Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 478 N.W.2d 824 (1991). See 380 Kings Highway, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 6182117 (N.Y.Sup.), 2011 N.Y. Slip Op. 52223(U) (unpublished), which held that the terms stated in an endorsement controlled as to a conflicting more general term in the policy, effectively negating an exception for the type of lien at issue, because the endorsement contained the commonly-used statement that "[t]o the extent a provision of the policy or a previous endorsement is inconsistent with an express provision of this endorsement this endorsement controls."

[438] Bozeman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 470 So.2d 465 (La.App. 1985) (easement deleted from policy); First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (Sup. Ct. 1939) (bankruptcy preference); McLoughlin v. Bridgeport Land & Title Co., 99 Conn. 134, 121 A. 175 (Conn. 1923) (straw man transaction).

[439] 1200 Ashland, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 5481800 (N.D. Ill.) (unpublished) (when insured requested zoning endorsement two years after closing and several months after receiving survey revealing that part of property was not zoned as stated on zoning endorsement issued to lender previously, insured's failure to disclose correct zoning classification to insurer voided endorsement). However, in First American Title Ins. Co. v. Columbia Harbison LLC, 2013 WL 1501702 (D.S.C.) (unpublished), in which the insured admitted that it knew of material facts about the risk of an enforced removal endorsement that it requested after closing, the court said the insured had no duty to disclose information learned after the policy date, because Exclusion 3(b) says it applies to matters known "prior to the date the Insured Claimant became an insured under this policy." The court ignored the rationale behind the duty to disclose a material risk, which is that an insured cannot obtain coverage for a risk while concealing material facts about that risk.

[440] Humphries v. West End Terrace, Inc., 795 S.W. 2d 128 (Tenn.App. 1990) (endorsement protecting against enforcement of mortgage not triggered when mortgage was not being enforced, and no claim existed that property was endorsement committing to issue "the same affirmative coverage" against a Native American tribal claim in future policies was found not to obligate the insurer to issue a future policy in a larger amount. The policy to which the endorsement was attached was in the amount of $8.4 million. Later, the insurer declined to give the same assurance on a $50 million policy. The court concluded:

> Where a contract is not ambiguous and the intent is clear, a court cannot interpolate into the agreement conditions that are not there. … Here, the contract is not ambiguous--Commonwealth is obligated only to issue subsequent policies with the same affirmative coverage, which includes a limit on the face value of $8.4 million.[441]

On the other hand, an endorsement whose language is less than precise may be interpreted broadly in favor of the party that did not draft it.[442]

The insurer should receive a premium for granting affirmative coverage. The court should consider the amount of premium paid in order to construe the endorsement as granting a coverage commensurate with the premium.[443] The policy may not be reformed to add a coverage for which an endorsement may be purchased for an additional premium, when the insured neither requested the endorsement nor paid the premium for it. See §12.3.4 for cases adopting this rule as to the purchase of "extended coverage." Another aspect of the issue is that, if the insurer is asked to given an affirmative coverage, it will often require assurances or collateral to induce it to accept the risk. The insurer should make it clear to the parties what additional assurances it will require. However, when a seller gave the insurer both a premium and an indemnity as consideration for the assumption of a risk, the court found that the premium was adequate consideration for the risk, and voided the indemnity.[444]

Endorsement coverages often make reference to the policy's final determination clause, by limiting protection to loss resulting from a "final order of a court of competent jurisdiction." See §3.4.5 for a complete discussion of that policy provision. Some take the view that this type of phrase not "salable" as insured); Pete Lien & Sons, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 478 N.W.2d 824 (S.D. 1991) (endorsement coverage against damage to surface did not require insurer to defeat mineral interest properly excepted in Schedule B).

---

[441] TC X Incorporated v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 86 F.3d 1152 (Table), 1996 WL 271450 (4th Cir. (S.C.) 1996) (unpublished).

[442] Eureka Investors Corp. N.V. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 743 F.2d 932 (1984) (endorsement protecting against tenant rights resulting in coverage for delay caused by tenants' refusal to move out of condominium conversion project).

[443] See, for example, Malkin v. Realty Title Ins. Co., Inc., 244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155 (1966), in which the court held that the small premium paid for an encroachment endorsement did not commit the insurer to file an eviction action to oust the public that was using the encroaching street: "Nor do we think it likely either Mr. Malkin or his attorney thought that the appellee, for an additional $60, would undertake the obligation of evicting Montgomery County from its occupancy of part of the lot or, in the alternative, of paying the Malkins $2,500."

[444] Jeter v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 424 S.W.2d 329 (Mo.App. 1967).

in an endorsement does not obligate the insurer to defend the insured in litigation over the risk. In BancOhio Nat'l Bank, N.A. v. Security Union Title Ins. Co.,[445] however, the court held that the "final order" assurance did not negate the duty to defend the insured. The BancOhio policy excepted an existing lawsuit affecting the property, but also contained an affirmative "note" assurance that used the "final order" wording. The court held that, while "this provision is exclusionary in part, it expressly provides coverage for any loss sustained by way of a final order" and, therefore, Security Union was obligated to defend BancOhio in the litigation.[446]

Many endorsements formerly contained the expression that they insured against loss or damage "by reason of any incorrectness in the assurance that," followed by a statement, such as "the property is zoned R-1." In Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell,[447] the policy contained a location endorsement that stated that there was a multifamily dwelling on the property, when in fact the improvement was a single family house. The California court held that this language might be considered to be a representation rather than an indemnification, which would run contrary to the fundamental premise that a title insurance policy is a contract of indemnity. The Rothwell decision was reversed on other grounds. However, as one commentator explains, "the CLTA was so concerned about the plaintiff's interpretation of [this language], that it revised this clause out of all of its endorsements."[448] The ALTA followed suit, revising a number of endorsement forms in October, 1998 to replace the "incorrectness" language.[449]

A lender is often able to obtain an affirmative assurance that the insurer will not offer on an owner's policy issued in the same overall transaction. This is because, as to many coverages, there is far greater risk in giving an assurance to the owner than to the lender.[450] However, an owner sometimes argues that the insurer either should have given the same coverage on the owner's policy as was found in the loan policy, or that he or she is a third party beneficiary of the lender's coverage. An owner is not an additional insured or beneficiary on endorsement coverages given to the lender, and the granting of such coverage to the owner would expand the insurer's risk. See §7.7. Also, this subject is discussed in the context of construction lien coverage, at §10.1.2.

---

[445] 1993 WL 524890 (Ohio App. 10 Dist.) (unpublished).

[446] Id. at 1.

[447] 28 Cal.App.4th 1764, 34 Cal.Rptr.2d 700 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1994) (unpublished), formerly published at 28 Cal.App.4th 1764, 33 Cal.App.4th 1372, later decision at 10 Cal.4th 1226, 44 Cal.Rptr.2d 352 (Cal. 1995) (1995 Supreme Court decision did not review question of endorsement interpretation).

[448] Robert Bozarth, Choosing a Title Insurance Policy Form, in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448 1999, p. 33.

[449] Id. at p. 26.

[450] A primary reason is that the mere occurrence of the risk insured against causes the owner loss immediately; the lender suffers no loss unless the debt is not paid and the security for the loan is reduced by the covered title matter, as discussed further at §3.2.4. See Marine Midland Bank v. Virginia Woods, Ltd., 151 Misc.2d 915, 574 N.Y.S.2d 485 (Putnam Cty.Sup.Ct. 1991), which stated that an affirmative coverage was given to a lender but not the owner and "represented the insurer's determination that the chance of forfeiture of title and consequent impairment of security represented an acceptable risk" to be taken on behalf of the lender only.

9.11.2 Endorsements Concerning Land, Improvements And Access

Various affirmative assurances may be given by endorsement concerning the identification of the land or improvements on it. These endorsement coverages include assurances that the land insured is the same parcel as shown on an identified survey, that the property has a certain street address or tax parcel associated with it, or that the insured parcel abuts a named street. Some endorsements protect against encroaching structures.[451]

The purpose of such endorsements is to make limited assurances that go beyond the description of the insured parcel in Schedule A of the policy. Some such endorsements were developed merely as reference pages, to allow the lender to easily match the policy to the real estate it has taken as collateral. For example, it is customary in many locales for a title insurance commitment to state on Schedule A the street address of the property and its tax parcel(s), but not to insert that same information in the policy.[452] The endorsements tie the policy to the address, tax parcel, or the survey obtained by the insured that is located in the lender's underwriting file.

The insured must prove that it relied on the assurance provided in an endorsement in order to establish a loss.[453] This is consistent with the principle that title insurance is a contract of indemnity that is invoked by "actual monetary loss or damage," as stated in Conditions 8 of the 2006 ALTA policies.

For example, when the lender did not make its decision to lend money based on the assumption that the assured matter or status was as stated in the endorsement, it does not suffer a loss if the matter or status is not accurate. In First Nat'l Bank of Northbrook, N.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.,[454] the lender obtained a mortgage on only one of two parcels it had intended to mortgage.

---

[451] In Ben-Avraham v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 5 Misc.3d 791, 786 N.Y.S.2d 272 (N.Y. 2004), an owner's policy insuring a high rise condominium unit contained an endorsement protecting against "[a]ny obligation to remove any improvements which exist at Date of Policy because of any present encroachments or because of any future unintentional encroachments of the common elements upon any unit or of any unit upon the common elements or another unit." The insured was sued by a neighbor, who alleged that flue pipes, a ladder, wiring conduits, cable boxes and other parts of the building encroached on the adjoining property. The court found a duty to defend the insured, and said that the survey exception had not been invoked because the insurer had not "demonstrated that another survey would reveal the claimed encroachment 7 inches onto the adjoining property's air rights beginning 40 feet in the air."

[452] The ALTA 22-06 Location Endorsement, for example, "loss or damage sustained by the Insured by reason of the failure of a [description of building or improvement], known as [street address], to be located on the Land at Date of Policy." The ALTA 22.1-06 Location and Map Endorsement adds an assurance against loss or damage suffered if "the map, if any, attached to this policy to correctly show the location and dimensions of the Land according to the Public Records." The ALTA 25-06 Same as Survey Endorsement ties the policy to the land depicted on a survey, providing indemnity for loss suffered "by reason of the failure of the Land as described in Schedule A to be the same as that identified on the survey made by [surveyor's name] dated [date] and designated Job No. [job number]."

[453] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Sun Valley Credit, LLC, 2015 WL 807055 (unpublished), the court held that a lender had not established a loss under a zoning endorsement merely by proving that the property was subject to a zoning overlay district's regulations that were not referenced in the endorsement. The court held that the insurer was entitled to a trial on its claim that the no loss exclusion applied, because the lender did not rest its decision to make the loan on the assurance in the zoning endorsement.

[454] 279 Ill.App.3d 188, 664 N.E.2d 310, 215 Ill.Dec. 913 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1996), rev.den. October 2, 1996 (Table, no.

Schedule A of the policy also included only the mortgaged parcel. However, a "location note" endorsement was attached to the policy. That endorsement protected against:

> loss or damage which the insured shall sustain by reason of any inaccuracies in the following assurances: (A) That, according to the plat of subdivision, the subject land has a street frontage of 160 feet, [and] a depth of 298.71 feet ... .

The dimensions listed in the endorsement encompassed both parcels. After taking title by foreclosure, the lender sued the insurer and obtained a judgment for the difference between its bid price for the one parcel and the full amount of the debt. The judgment was premised solely on the location endorsement. The appellate court reversed, finding no compensable loss. The court quoted an Illinois commentary on the purpose of the location note:

> [The endorsement] allows the lender to verify that the property insured matches the lender's appraiser's report and legal description in the mortgage. These endorsements are generally used only in metropolitan areas where it is more difficult for a lender to verify this information for itself.[455]

In Northbrook, however, the lender did not look at the endorsement until after default. The court therefore concluded:

> But First National, indisputably, did not use the endorsement to verify the size, location, or improvements on the property. First National did not look at the endorsement until Grossman defaulted. The endorsement had nothing to do with the bank's decision to refinance the loan.
>
> Stewart did not make an empty or illusory promise to the bank. Stewart promised to compensate the bank for any losses resulting from reliance on the endorsement note. The bank paid a premium for that promise. The facts of this case do not suggest the promise was broken. The bank's loss was not sustained by reason of any inaccuracies in the location endorsement.[456]

A California court also found reliance to be a predicate for recovery on an endorsement assurance, in Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co.[457] That case involved a CLTA 116 endorsement containing an assurance about "the correct location and dimensions" of the property. The endorsement had a map attached to it showing the property as 81240).

---

[455] 664 N.E.2d at 313.

[456] Id. at 314.

[457] 53 Cal.App.4th 250, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 442 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1997).

being "2.06 AC M/L." The lender, however, had an appraisal showing the property to be 1.36 acres. The court found that the lender "would have had a difficult time proving detrimental reliance on the map's inaccurate statement," given its possession of the accurate appraisal.[458]

Golden Security Thrift also presented a second issue, concerning the interpretation of the assurances in the CLTA 116 endorsement. That endorsement assures that the map attached to the endorsement "shows the correct location and dimensions of said land according to [the public] records." The lender asserted that "location and dimensions" encompassed area. The map attached to the endorsement recited acreage. The court ruled, however, that "area" is not a subset of either "location" or "dimensions." Therefore, the endorsement did not assure acreage. The court refused the insured's argument that, since the CLTA policy excepts "shortage of area," by implication the ALTA policy does not. The court said "[t]his attempt to achieve coverage through incorporation by reverse reference is an absurdity."[459]

ALTA has adopted the ALTA 19 series of endorsements to protect against any gaps or gores that might lie between parcels that the insured understands to be adjacent to each other.[460] This is commonly termed "gap or gore" coverage. The title insurance policy insures the title to the parcels described in Schedule A. If there is a parcel in between two parcels recited in the policy, the policy does not protect against an ownership claim by someone else as to that parcel. The contiguity endorsement indemnifies the insured in the event there is such a parcel, and that it is owned by someone other than the insured. The example often given to explain this endorsement is when the insured is conveyed the West 20 acres and also the East 20 acres of the same quarter-quarter-section. If the quarter-quarter-section contains 42 acres instead of the normative 40 acres, there will be a two-acre gap parcel lying between the two parcels. The contiguity endorsement indemnifies the insured in the event that some other party claims to own the gap parcel.[461] See § 12.3.6 for a discussion of [458] 61 Cal.Rptr.2d at 446.

---

[459] Id.

[460] ALTA Endorsement 19-06, adopted in 2006, is called the Contiguity - Multiple Parcels endorsement. The 19.1-06 endorsement is called the Contiguity - Single Parcel endorsement, and was also adopted in 2006. In 2015, ALTA adopted the 19.2-06 endorsement, entitled Contiguity - Specified Parcels. The ALTA 19 endorsement provides two coverages. The first is against the failure of a certain identified boundary line of one insured parcel "to be contiguous to" the identified boundary line of the second parcel insured in the policy and identified in the endorsement. The second coverage is for loss caused by "the presence of any gaps, strips, or gores separating any of the contiguous boundary lines described above." The two coverages are really simply two ways of stating the same assurance. The protection is against loss caused by ownership by someone other than the insured of any parcel lying between the two identified parcels. The ALTA 19.1 endorsement gives the same assurances, but is used when the contiguous boundary line is between an insured parcel and a parcel owned by the insured but not insured in the policy. The ALTA 19.2 endorsement simplifies the coverage given by the 19, by insuring against loss or damage caused "by reason of there being any gaps, strips, or gores lying within or between" several parcels identified by the labels given them in Schedule A or C of the policy. The 19.2 endorsement also contains a format for an exception to the coverage, "except as depicted on the survey made by __________ dated ________, and designated Job No. _________."

[461] In Rio Mesa Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 4639103 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the insured's counsel drafted a custom contiguity endorsement that he contended gave the assurance that there was "the ability to move freely among the parcels" described in the endorsement. However, there is no assurance of access from parcel to parcel in the ALTA 19 series endorsements.

gaps and gores in relation to the survey exception.

Various endorsements exist that provide additional assurances as to access rights. The most common variants are the California Land Title Association form 103.7 and the ALTA 17 series of endorsements. Those endorsements may include a number of assurances: that there is a public road adjoining the insured parcel having the name recited in the endorsement or that, if the insured parcel does not abut a public road, it has the benefit of an easement that leads to the named public street;[462] that the identified street is physically open (which typically is considered to mean that the roadway is improved to some degree, and passable); that the street will support vehicular traffic (which is not an assurance that the roadway is paved) and that vehicular travel is not banned by regulation; that the street is publicly maintained; and that the insured has the right to use any existing curb cuts on the insured property for access onto the street.[463] A title insurer gives such endorsements on payment of an additional premium, and only when the title examiner or underwriting personnel have determined that there is a sound basis on which to provide the assurances. If a particular assurance found in a standard form endorsement is not true as to the parcel to be insured, that assurance is removed from the endorsement. The additional assurances granted by an access endorsement are not fairly implied in the generic access coverage of the policy, which is discussed at §9.7.

9.11.3 Endorsements Concerning Liens And Encumbrances

A common subject of an endorsement, in many jurisdictions, is to protect against the enforcement of a lien or encumbrance. The subject of an assurance against loss caused by the forced removal of a structure is discussed at §3.2.3.1.7.

---

[462] Access by easement is termed "indirect access." ALTA Endorsement 17-06 assures "direct" abutment on a public road. ALTA Endorsement 17.1-06, called the "Indirect Access and Entry" endorsement, is used to assure access by an easement that leads to a public road.

[463] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Sun Valley Credit, LLC, 2015 WL 807055 (unpublished), the property has access via five different roads. The policy contained an access endorsement that insured access by three identified roads, including Triumph Gulch Road. The endorsement assured that the roads were "physically open" streets. Another of the roads was described as "United States Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management Road known as Courier Gulch Road (Subject to the United States Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management regulation)... ." The listing of Triumph Gulch Road did not contain any corresponding qualification. Triumph Gulch Road is closed to vehicles every year from December 1 to April 30, under a 1982 Bureau of Land Management decision. The court agreed with the insured that the endorsement indemnified against loss sustained due to the closure of the road by the BLM order, because it gave the assurance that Triumph Gulch Road was "a physically open street." The endorsement qualified that assurance as to Courier Gulch Road, by saying that the use of that road was "subject to the United States Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management regulation," but provided no corresponding qualification as to Triumph Gulch Road, which was subject to the same limitations. However, the court said this ruling did not establish coverage with finality, because the insurer asserted that the insured had actual knowledge that the road was closed seasonally, and that same fact was not evident from any real estate record examined by the title insurer. In Rio Mesa Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 4639103 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the insured's counsel drafted a "custom" access endorsement that he insisted assured not only that there was a right of access to the public streets named in the endorsement, but also the assurance that the insured or subsequent owners could travel from each of the four parcels insured in Schedule A to all other insured parcels. Two of the parcels were separated from the other two parcels by subdivided land not sold to the insured. The court held that there was a right to cross the non-insured subdivision roads for access. It remanded the case for the trial court to determine if the insured's contention about its custom access endorsement was accurate.

Endorsements protecting against liens or encumbrances do not create liability unless the triggering event occurs. When the policy protected against enforcement of a mortgage which had not been foreclosed, the insured was found not to have proven a loss.[464] When the coverage protected against "disruption of the lien" of the mortgage caused by bankruptcy proceedings, the mere imposition of the automatic stay in bankruptcy did not trigger loss.[465] Protection against disturbance of the surface by mineral owners was not invoked by assertion of mineral ownership without surface entry.[466] A CLTA 115.2 endorsement's protection against the priority of homeowner association liens was not invoked by an HOA lien with statutory super-priority over the insured deed of trust, because the lien was recorded after the policy date.[467]

Endorsements protecting against priority of taxes over the insured mortgage were found not to be invoked by the fact that the property fell within a special taxing district, when there was no specific tax assessment that was claimed to have priority over the mortgage. [468] A Standard New York Endorsement that added as a Covered Risk "[a]ny statutory lien for services, labor of materials furnished prior to the date hereof, and which has now gained or which may hereafter gain priority over the estate or interest of the insured as shown in Schedule A of this policy" was found to affirmatively protect against a municipal emergency repair lien for repairs done to a building.[469] The court reached this conclusion despite a specific exception in the policy for municipal repair liens, and even though the repairs achieved lien status only after the policy date. The court's ruling was based on the fact that the repair lien was a "statutory lien," against which the endorsement provides a form of prospective coverage.

9.11.4 Comprehensive, Zoning, Inflation And Other Endorsements

The ALTA 9 endorsement, now known as the Restrictions Encroachments Minerals endorsement, was formerly known as the comprehensive endorsement, because it includes [464] Humphries v. West End Terrace, Inc., 795 S.W. 2d 128 (Tenn.App. 1990).

---

[465] Gibraltar Savings v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 905 F. 2d 1203 (8th Cir. 1990).

[466] Pete Lien & Sons Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 478 N.W.2d 824 (S.D. 1991).

[467] Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2062947 (D.Nev. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed June 11, 2019.

[468] Vestin Mortgage, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 139 P.3d 1055, 553 Utah Adv. Rep. 3, 2006 UT 34 (Utah 2006). The policy contained two endorsements. The first was a CLTA 104, which indemnified against "loss or damage which such insured shall sustain by reason of … [t]he existence of any subsisting tax or assessment lien which is prior to the insured mortgage... [or] [t]he existence of other matters affecting the validity or priority of the lien of the insured mortgage, other than those shown in the policy... . The other endorsement was a F.A. Form 31, which protects against any loss incurred by reason of "Any incorrectness in the assurance which [First American] hereby gives: … That there are no covenants, conditions, or restrictions under which the lien of the mortgage referred to in Schedule A can be cut off, subordinated, or otherwise impaired...." The court noted that title insurance provides no future coverage, and the assessments at issue were levied after the policy date. Therefore, it held, the endorsement coverage was not invoked.

[469] 380 Kings Highway, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 6182117 (N.Y.Sup.), 2011 N.Y. Slip Op. 52223(U) (unpublished).

assurances on a number of subjects. The endorsement provides assurances against restrictions that could extinguish, divest, subordinate or impair the validity, priority or enforceability of the insured mortgage; losses due to various kinds of encroachments; and certain violations of restrictions.[470] The endorsement also indemnifies the insured against loss due to "the existence, at Date of Policy, of" certain matters "unless expressly excepted in Schedule B," which is known as the "private rights" assurance.

The private rights assurance of the ALTA 9 endorsement was the subject of Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.,[471] in which a recorded declaration of restrictions reserved in the developer the right to approve buyers in the development. The policy excepted the declaration, but did not specifically identify the approval right in the exception. The ALTA 9 endorsement protected against loss caused by the existence of purchaser approval rights in "[a]ny instrument referred to in Schedule B as containing covenants, conditions or restrictions on the land… [u]nless expressly excepted in Schedule B." The insurer argued that the exception for the declaration was sufficient. The Third Circuit reversed, holding that an exception for the purchaser approval rights in the declaration would be necessary to negate the coverage, because the endorsement protected against instruments excepted in Schedule B. On remand, the district court declared that the "plain reading" of the ALTA 9 endorsement is that it protects against any loss due to the existence of "an instrument referred to in Schedule B," if the excepted instrument contains restrictions and also includes private assessments, an option to purchase, right of first refusal or the right to approve future purchasers or occupants (the rights listed on the endorsement). The court said that "[a]ny loss arising as a result of any portion of that instrument--and not from any particular provision contained therein--falls within the scope of the ALTA 9 Endorsement coverage."[472] The insurer appealed again to the Third Circuit, which affirmed.[473] The American Land Title Association has since made considerable alterations to the ALTA 9 endorsement.[474]

---

[470] In Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2062947 (D.Nev. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed June 11, 2019, the court held that the coverage against "covenants, conditions or restrictions under which the lien of the Insured Mortgage can be cut off, subordinated, or otherwise impaired" did not protect against a homeowners' association lien filed after the policy date, merely because the association was authorized in a declaration that also contained covenants, conditions and restrictions.

[471] 579 F.3d 304 (3rd Cir. (Pa.) 2009), amended by 586 F.3d 1011 (3rd Cir. (Pa.) 2009).

[472] Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 611802 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), motion to certify appeal granted, reconsideration denied by 2011 WL 1044864 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), subsequent order certifying question for interlocutory appeal, 2011 WL 1045124 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished).

[473] Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 687 F.3d 620 (3rd Cir. (Pa.) 2012). The court said: "[w]e … hold that the ALTA 9 Endorsement provides coverage to losses arising from entire instruments that fit within its plain language, not just the ¶ 1(b)(2) restrictions within those instruments that have not been expressly excepted." The court acknowledged in a footnote that its decisions have already provoked changes to the endorsement. "Both parties address recent proposed amendments to the ALTA 9 Endorsement, which will ensure that the effect of this court's decision will be limited to title insurance policies that were issued with the older version of the ALTA 9 Endorsement. Because the amendments show only that the ALTA 9 Endorsement was changed to reflect a recent relevant court opinion, the significance of the changes can only be determined through speculation."

[474] The one endorsement has been broken down into several, as of April 2, 2012. They are the ALTA 9-06

The ALTA 3 zoning endorsement indemnifies the insured in the event the property is not within the zoning classification recited in the endorsement.[475] Some versions of the endorsement contain additional assurances. When the insured property was rezoned after the date of the policy, the endorsement was found to protect the insured against the effect of the later rezoning, in Levy Gardens Partners 2007, L.P. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.[476] The court also refused to find that the endorsement required the insured to seek a conditional use permit, despite the statement in the endorsement that the insurer would have no liability due to the insured's "[l]ack of compliance with any conditions, restrictions, or requirements contained in the zoning ordinances and amendments, including but not limited to the failure to secure necessary consents or authorizations as a prerequisite to the use or uses." However, the court rejected the insured's argument that the loss determination provision should not apply to the zoning endorsement. The insured argued that, because a zoning endorsement concerns the use of property, not its title, loss should not be measured as it would be for a title issue. The court said that "[t]his logic is misguided because the zoning endorsement insures the value of the title in the event certain use is not allowed (here, multi-family housing), therefore the word 'use' is a necessary term in describing the coverage it provides. That does not transform it into stand-alone coverage insuring against any loss related to any use of the property apart from the value of the property's title." See §9.1.3.5 concerning the integration provisions of the policy and endorsement, which both say that an endorsement becomes part of the policy and modifies its terms only to the extent expressly stated in the endorsement.

Several types of endorsements increase the amount of insurance. The inflation protection endorsement adjusts the policy amount each January 1 based on the United States Department of Commerce Composite Construction Cost Index for the month of September immediately preceding the adjustment date. The maximum amount of insurance in force can never exceed 150% of the amount of insurance. The New York Title Insurance Rate Service Association market value rider must be offered to buyers of one-to-four family residences. That endorsement says that a loss is determined based on the market value of the property at the "time of loss," which is the date on which "the homeowner shall have actual knowledge of facts giving rise to a claim under the Policy." Market value is determined by three arbitrators, one chosen by the insured, another by the insurer and the third selected by the other two arbitrators. Value is not capped at a ratio above the policy

---

Restrictions, Encroachments, Minerals – Loan Policy, the 9.1-06 Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions – Unimproved Land – Owner's Policy, the 9.2-06 Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions – Improved Land – Owner's Policy, the 9.3-06 Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions – Loan Policy, the 9.6-06 Private Rights – Loan Policy, the 9.7-06 Restrictions, Encroachments, Minerals – Land Under Development – Loan Policy, the 9.8-06 Covenants Conditions and Restrictions – Land Under Development – Owner's Policy, the 9.9-06 Private Right – Owner's Policy, and the 9.10-06 Restrictions, Encroachments, Minerals – Current Violations – Loan Policy.

[475] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Sun Valley Credit, LLC, 2015 WL 807055 (unpublished), the court held that a zoning endorsement protected the insured against the additional use limitations imposed by a zoning overlay district that was not referenced in the endorsement, although the primary zoning classifications were the ones stated in the endorsement. The overlay district was a second level of zoning regulation over the parcel.

[476] 706 F.3d 622 (5th Cir. (La.) 2013). The court's justification was that the later zoning change caused the zoning classification to revert to one that had existed before the policy date, which allowed the court to fashion a sort of relation-back coverage theory.

limit, like the inflation protection endorsement, but does "exclude the market value of any improvements made to the premises subsequent to the date of the Policy." In a case involving a policy that contained a New York market value rider, the insurer was found not entitled to summary judgment declaring that payment of policy limits would fully satisfy the claim, when the insured asserted that her diminution loss was greater than policy limits.[477] Also, the Homeowner's policy contains a form of "inflation" endorsement, because it states that the policy amount increases by 10% per year for the first five years after its issuance.

A number of endorsements indemnify against loss incurred due to the enforced removal of a structure. See the analysis of the enforced removal coverages in the ALTA Homeowner's policy at §9.14.2, and §3.2.3.1.7 for a discussion of the resolution of a claim invoking such a forced removal coverage.

An endorsement affirmatively insuring ownership of condominium declarant rights was construed in RA Southeast Land Company LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co.[478] The court held that the endorsement assured the insured that it owned those rights, which the insurer had acknowledged by defending them in litigation. The court held that the endorsement did not entitle the insured to a loss payment based on lost profit and carrying costs, but rather was subject to the final determination provision of the policy.[479]

In Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co. v. Casmat, LLC,[480] the policy excepted several utility easements, but also contained the statement that the insurer would "affirmatively insure that the [NEC easements] do not interfere with the beneficial use of the property." The insured proposed to build a driveway across the easement paths, which the utility refused to allow. The insured demanded that the insurer pay the difference in value between the land as unimproved and as developed as it proposed. The court held that the endorsement provided a much more limited indemnity:

> The unambiguous language of the Policy states that [CATIC] agrees to insure that NEC's use and operation of its easement does not harm [Casmat's] ability to effectively utilize the property. In essence, [Casmat] argues that NEC is not allowing [it] to interfere with NEC's easement. The Policy does not insure against [Casmat's] inability to interfere with NEC easements. "An exception is an uninsured interest.... It is one that has been expressly written out of the policy during the underwriting process...." Barlow Burke, Law of Title Insurance § 9.01 (2010).[481]

---

[477] Appleby v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 80 A.D.3d 546, 914 N.Y.S.2d 257, 2011 N.Y. Slip Op. 00170 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2011).

[478] 2016 WL 4591740 (D.Nev.) (unpublished).

[479] The decision is further discussed at §3.4.5, which covers the final determination provision.

[480] 2012 WL 366521 (D.R.I.) (unpublished).

[481] 2012 WL at *5.

A title insurer can issue an endorsement in which it agrees to issue a policy to another party in the future giving a coverage found in the present policy. This is sometimes known as a future coverage endorsement. In issuing such an endorsement, the insurer does not agree to give different or expanded coverage to a future insured. Thus, an endorsement committing to issue "the same affirmative coverage" against a Native American tribal claim in future policies was found not to obligate the insurer to issue a future policy in a larger amount. The policy to which the endorsement was attached was in the amount of $8.4 million. Later, the insurer declined to give the same assurance on a $50 million policy. The court concluded:

> Where a contract is not ambiguous and the intent is clear, a court cannot interpolate into the agreement conditions that are not there. … Here, the contract is not ambiguous--Commonwealth is obligated only to issue subsequent policies with the same affirmative coverage, which includes a limit on the face value of $8.4 million.[482]

A future coverage endorsement is not an assurance given to the present insured against a future event, or the granting of any assurance found in the policy for the benefit of future owners of the property.[483] Such prospective coverage would be antithetical to the retrospective nature of the policy coverages.

9.12 Scope Of Policy Definition Of "Public Records" And Recorded Instruments That Do Not Affect Title

The ALTA policies contain a definition of "public records."[484] Some covered risks refer to public records as defined in the policy, while others do not. Most covered risks, however, indemnify only against matters that affect the title to the land.[485] Certain classes of recorded instruments do not invoke any Covered Risk because they do not affect or encumber title.

The claim administrator must carefully consider whether or not an instrument bearing recording data is actually a defect in, lien or encumbrance on title, or affects the marketability of, title to the insured property, or affects or limits its right of access.

---

[482] TC X Incorporated v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 86 F.3d 1152 (Table), 1996 WL 271450 (4th Cir. (S.C.) 1996) (unpublished).

[483] In Rio Mesa Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 4639103 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the insured's position was that contiguity and access endorsements in its policy were intended to benefit future owners of the property, which the insured intended to convert to a large residential development. The appeals court made no ruling on that contention, and remanded the case to the trial court.

[484] The 2006 ALTA Owner's policy defines "Public Records" as "Records established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without Knowledge. With respect to Covered Risk 5(d), 'Public Records' shall also include environmental protection liens filed in the records of the clerk of the United States District Court for the district where the Land is located."

[485] The 2006 ALTA policies also define "Title," although that definition is somewhat limited, referring only to "[t]he estate or interest described in Schedule A."

When the policy does not make exception for an instrument in the real estate records, and it appears that the instrument may or does not invoke a Covered Risk, the claim administrator will often obtain further information from underwriting personnel for that state to determine if there is a statute or decision that declares whether or not the instrument invokes a Covered Risk. If not, the appropriate response to a claim asserting the lack of an exception for the instrument is to advise the insured that no Covered Risk is invoked, and giving the authority for that statement, such as a court decision or statute.

Conversely, the policy will sometimes make exception for an instrument that does not affect title or otherwise invoke a Covered Risk. Sometimes, even when the insurer is satisfied that a class of instruments does not affect title, underwriting personnel issue standards informing title examiners to make exception for the instruments in order to avoid a claim that the policy indemnifies against the effect or subject of the instrument.

Even if it is customary in the jurisdiction to insert exceptions for such matters, no Covered Risk is invoked, and there is no loss payable, when the policy does not except a recorded instrument that does not constitute a lien or encumbrance on title.[486] See §9.6 for a discussion of cases holding that particular matters are or are not encumbrances on title. See §9.4 regarding taxes, including the lack of coverage when the policy does not make exception for the fact that the property lies in a special taxing district. Further, recorded instruments that concern the physical condition of the property do not encumber its title, as discussed at §9.8.3.

Some other instruments relate to governmental regulation of the property's use, such as building code ordinances or zoning ordinances. These classes of instruments often fall under an exclusion. See §11.1.1 regarding the exclusion for building code ordinances and §11.1.2 about the zoning exclusion. Some policies contain limited indemnification against recoded notices of violation or enforcement of such laws or ordinances, however. The claim administrator must determine if the recorded instrument is such a notice, and if a policy coverage is invoked. See §§3.2.3.1.9 and 3.2.3.1.10 concerning the handling of claims about the notice-of-enforcement Covered Risks, and §§9.9.1, 9.14.1 and 9.14.2 for a complete discussion of the Covered Risks.

Of the many classes of instruments that are recorded but that do not constitute liens or encumbrances on title, several decisions are representative. A recorded covenant giving notice of prior disposal of waste on property and advising that future owners will be responsible for the cost of any further clean-up was found not to be an encumbrance on title because it did not limit the transfer of the property.[487] Also, the court found that there was no covered loss due to a recorded notice of a person's claim to part of the proceeds from the sale of land:

[486] Luboff v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965) (no policy coverage as to developer agreement that was not a defect, lien or encumbrance); Sala v. Security Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 693, 81 P.2d 578 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1938); (no policy coverage as to lis pendens excepted, then removed as cloud on title); Peterson v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 431 So.2d 311 (Fla.App. 1983) (no coverage as to applicability of restrictions not shown); Laurence v. Kruckmeyer, 124 Ariz. 488, 605 P.2d 466 (Ariz.App. 1979) (no coverage concerning statement that easement affected parcels it did not affect); Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Associates No. 73, 2210 WL 1257748 (E.D.Ky. March 26, 2010) (unpublished) (possible future assessments not encumbrances because they "will not affect passing of title").

[487] Pavilion Park, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 43222 (W.D.Ky.) (unpublished), which relied on Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Graoch Associates No. 73, 2010 WL 1257748 (E.D.Ky.) (unpublished).

> Put simply, the agreement here is not a title defect because it does not affect title. The agreement merely gives Herman Klickman a lien on one-third of the proceeds derived from a sale of the property in question. It does not give Herman Klickman any interest in the property, nor does it give him the right to disturb the buyers in their possession of the property. In short, the buyers could not possibly be affected by the terms of the agreement.[488]

Likewise, a covenant not to convey or encumber the property was not a lien against its title, and the insurer did not owe a duty to the lender that held the covenant to insist that the debt be paid at the time the property was transferred.[489] The appointment of a building administrator to collect rent and cure building code violations was not a defect in or lien or encumbrance on title, although a lis pendens had been recorded for the action to appoint the administrator.[490] A setback requirement imposed by a municipality on a lot in a subdivision, created in connection with a zoning variance, was found to be an excluded zoning matter, and not an "easement" under Covered Risk 2. The zoning exclusion thus applied, with the court ruling:

> The 45-foot setback was created by a resolution of a board of adjustment and was indicated on a subdivision plan that was never recorded or required to be recorded. Because this claim or loss arises out of the exercise of the police power..., the exclusion applies.[491]

Because the subdivision plat on which the setback line had been drawn had never been recorded, the restriction could only have been discovered by examining the municipality's zoning records, which is outside the scope of documents affecting title which are commonly searched. No Covered Risk is invoked by the fact that the property has been designated as wetland, even if the wetland designation appears in a recorded instrument.[492] Such a designation is not an encumbrance on title.

On occasion, a court will accept as evidence the practice of a title examiner in determining whether an instrument or class of documents affects title or the marketability of title. In Radovanov v. Land Title Co. of America,[493] the question was whether or not pending building code violation lawsuits were part of the public records ordinarily examined by purchasers of real estate. An expert

---

[488] Klickman v. Title Guar. Co. of Lewis County, 105 Wash.2d 526, 528-9, 716 P.2d 840 (1986).

[489] Titan Management, L.P. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2006 WL 3732995 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished).

[490] Zev Cohen, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 15 Misc.3d 798, 831 N.Y.S.2d 689 (N.Y.Sup. 2007).

[491] Aldrich v. Hawrylo, 656 A.2d 1304, 1309 (N.J.Super. 1995).

[492] Manley v. Cost Control Marketing & Management, Inc., 583 A. 2d 442 (Pa.Super. 1990); Bear Fritz Land Co. v. Kachemak Bay Title Agency, Inc., 920 P.2d 759 (Ala. 1996); Frimberger v. Anzellotti, 25 Conn.App. 401, 594 A.2d 1029 (1991).

[493] 545 N.E. 2d 351 (Ill.App. 1989).

testified that one title insurer routinely made exception for such lawsuits. This testimony led the court to find that such suits render title unmarketable, and that "the lawsuit in question could and should have been discovered by a routine title search." The court thus used the evidence of what a particular title insurer searches or indexes as proof of the records by which a purchaser is bound. This puts the cart before the horse. Rather, the insurer's searching practice should be dictated by the classes of records that impart constructive notice under state law. The fact that an insurer collects, indexes, searches and/or reports additional records should not have any bearing on the scope of constructive notice.

The Radovanov approach was rejected in a similar case, Somerset Savings Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co..[494] In Somerset, the insurer did not make exception for a statutory right to consent to building on former railroad land. The Supreme Court, reversing the appellate court, found that the statutory restriction was excluded as an exercise of the police power, because it concerned use of the property rather than title. The Supreme Court rejected the insured's argument that the matter would be covered if testimony showed that local title practice was to make an exception for the statutory restriction. The court stated:

> [E]ven if such a practice was accepted, the failure to include such a statute as an exclusion does not mean that coverage is available, where the express policy terms do not provide for coverage.[495]

Thus, the court properly refused to interpret the policy coverage as being dictated by an alleged local searching practice. Somerset, in turn, was relied on in Kokinis v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[496] which held that the mere fact that a municipal lien certificate produced at closing showed a sewer charge did not mean that the title insurance policy covers the cost of complying with a municipal code requirement to hook up to municipal sewer after the home's septic system failed. The court ruled that there was no defect in the title to the land.

A record does not impart constructive notice merely because it is housed in the recorder's office. Rather, an instrument or index imparts constructive notice to a purchaser of real estate only if a statute or court decision makes that declaration. For example, in Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[497] town ordinances were kept in minute books located in the register of deeds office. However, the buyer had no constructive notice of the ordinances, because North Carolina statutes do not provide that such minute books are records that impart notice.

In most states, certain records or indices contained in offices other than the recorder also impart constructive notice to purchasers of real estate. For example, in Washington, records concerning the existence of roads are kept in the county engineer's office. These records have been

[494] 420 Mass. 422, 649 N.E.2d 1123 (1995).

[495] 649 N.E.2d at 1128, n. 3.

[496] 68 Mass.App.Ct. 1106, 860 N.E.2d 978 (Table), 2007 WL 328795 (Mass.App.) (unpublished).

[497] 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. (N.C.) 1998).

found to impart constructive notice.[498] In Indiana, a 1905 act has been held to mean that orders establishing highways were to be made "of record" in the office of the county auditor, and were not required to be delivered to the county recorder in order to impart notice.[499] In Arizona, when a mechanic's lien was properly recorded, but no lis pendens was recorded within the time period for filing a foreclosure action, a purchaser was on notice of the lien claim and had a duty to search the plaintiff and defendant indices kept by the court clerk to determine if foreclosure had been commenced.[500] This is an exception to the general rule that indices of pending suits are not constructive notice to purchasers of real estate.

By contrast, the general rule is that a court record does not impart constructive notice to a buyer, unless a notice of the lawsuit, most commonly termed a lis pendens, has been recorded. A conveyance or encumbrance by order of a court does not impart notice unless a certified copy of the judgment or order is recorded in the real estate records. Thus, for example, an easement created by an Alabama circuit court judgment did not to impart constructive notice, because it was never placed in the real estate records.[501]

A few decisions have stretched the definition of matters affecting title to include non-title instruments found in the real estate records. One court found that a timber deed invoked a Covered Risk, saying:

> A title insurance company has an obligation to answer for any loss due to a defect in a title if it has not excepted that defect from its coverage. It cannot escape liability when it does not except a defect that is a matter of public record. It is generally assumed that a title defect that appears in the public records but that is not noted is covered by a title policy. … It has been said that the most common error in the title insurance industry is the negligent failure to note a title defect appearing in the public records.[502]

The court rejected the insurer's argument that the timber deed did not affect title, since it only conveyed the timber and not the land on which the trees grew. Similarly, an instrument recorded in the chain of title that appears to be strictly a zoning matter may be considered a "restriction" which affects title and must be shown. When a conditional use permit affected only the insured property was recorded in the real estate records, it was found to be a restriction rather than a zoning ordinance. The conditional use permit required that at least one occupant of each dwelling unit in the 11-unit apartment building be 62 years old or physically handicapped. The court ruled that the restriction was not made a zoning matter by the fact that the municipality created it pursuant to its

[498] Ellingsen v. Franklin County, 55 Wash.App. 532, 778 P.2d 1072 (1989).

[499] Worldcom Network Services, Inc. v. Thompson, 698 N.E.2d 1233 (Ind.App. 1998).

[500] Collins v. Stockwell, 137 Ariz. 416, 671 P.2d 394 (1983).

[501] Upton v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 469 So.2d 548 (Ala. 1985).

[502] Parker v. Ward, 614 So.2d 975, 977 (Ala. 1992).

municipal code:

> …[T]he CUP is not a law, ordinance or governmental regulation. The mere fact the San Diego Municipal Code authorizes the issuance of CUPs does not transform the instant CUP into a zoning ordinance. Accordingly, the exclusion is unavailing to Lawyers Title.[503]

The court was further influenced by the fact that the legislative history for the statute under scrutiny had been favored by the California Land Title Association because it would "enable persons dealing with real property to be apprised of the fact of any restrictions on the owner's ability to convey the real property which have been imposed by a municipality. This will be accomplished by requiring such restrictions to be recorded in a manner which will impart construction notice."[504] The court contrasted this with the fact that zoning ordinances of general application are not recorded in the chain of title, and do not affect specific named parcels of land.

In most cases, building code violation orders fall under Exclusion 1, except to the extent of a recorded notice of violation under Covered Risk 5.[505] However, a building code violation suit pending at the date of policy was held to render title unmarketable. The building code exclusion was found to be inconsistent with the affirmative coverage regarding marketability. This ambiguity was found to render the exclusion ambiguous and unenforceable.[506] See §9.8 regarding the coverage for marketability of title.

9.13 Forfeiture Of Property For Illegal Drug Activity

The general subject of forfeiture and its effect on the property owner has been thoroughly discussed elsewhere and is beyond the scope of this text.[507] However, a short review of the law may be helpful to the reader.

---

[503] 1119 Delaware v. Continental Land Title Co., 16 Cal.App. 4th 992, 20 Cal.Rptr.2d 438, 445 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1993).

[504] 20 Cal.Rptr.2d at 445.

[505] Chu v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 89 App.Div.2d 574, 452 N.Y.S.2d 229 (1982) (certificate of occupancy); Arapahoe Land Title, Inc. v. Contract Financing, Ltd., 28 Colo.App. 393, 472 P.2d 754 (1970) (code violation); Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951) (building permit refusal); 40 A.L.R.2d 1238.

[506] Radovanov v. Land Title Co. of America, 545 N.E. 2d 351 (Ill.App. 1989).

[507] See Brown, Innocent Owners' Rights to Federally Forfeited Real Property, in Current Developments in Title Insurance 1992, Practicing Law Institute N-384 1992, p. 207 (an excellent compilation of cases on the innocent owner defense); Sterling, Responding to the Risks of Forfeiture (With Form), id. at p. 445 (thorough overview of the various laws, procedural questions, and defenses); Beasley, Federal Forfeiture Under the Controlled Substance Act, id. at p. 571; Sherris, Drug Related Forfeitures: Land Title Issues, 4 A.B.A. Prob. & Prop. 33 (1990); Borden, Federal Drug Forfeitures and Third Parties, 62 Okla. Bar J. 1573 (1991); Joyce D. Palomar, Criminal and Civil Forfeitures of Real Property: Marketability of the Government's Title, 62 Okla. Bar J. 1583 (1991); Note, Civil Forfeiture--Protecting Innocent Donees under 21 U.S.C. §881(a) (6), 65 Temp. L.Rev. 245 (1992); Note, Fear and Loathing and the Forfeiture Laws, 75 Cornell L.Rev. 1151 (1990); Annotation, Effect of Forfeiture Proceedings Under Uniform Controlled Substances Act or Similar Statute on Lien Against Property Subject to Forfeiture, 1 A.L.R.5th 317; Annotation, Real

Under the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (the Act),[508] title to real estate vests in the federal government if the property was used for or facilitated the sale of illegal drugs, or was bought with money obtained by sale of illegal drugs.[509] There are other federal laws providing for forfeiture of property, but this Act is the one that has generated the most seizure activity. Prior to the 1978 amendment to the Act, only the drugs themselves were subject to forfeiture. Thus, the amendment shifted the focus of the forfeiture law from confiscation of the illegal material to seizure of the fruits of the illegal act. Many states have enacted similar laws for crimes punishable by state authorities.[510]

In United States v. Colonial National Bank, N.A.,[511] the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the United States is not required to record a lis pendens as part of a forfeiture. The effect of this ruling on the innocent owner defense is discussed below.

Forfeiture is an in rem action. Under the Act, the government files a civil suit in District Court. Since the real estate is the defendant in a forfeiture proceeding, the caption describes the land but does not name the record titleholder. Then a warrant is issued for the seizure, which is posted on the property and served on the occupant. Notice of the seizure is given to the owner or owners of the property. An interested party has ten days after service of the warrant to file a claim and establish standing to defend against the forfeiture, and must file an answer within 20 days after the filing of

---

Property as Subject of Forfeiture Under Uniform Controlled Substances Act or Similar Statutes, 86 A.L.R.4th 995; Annotation, Forfeiture of Homestead Based on Criminal Activity Conducted on Premises--State Cases, 16 A.L.R.5th 855; Annotation, Forfeitability of Property Held in Marital Estate under Uniform Controlled Substances Act or Similar Statute, 84 A.L.R.4th 620; Palomar, Title Insurance Law, §6.02[4], pp. 6-18 -24; and Burke, Law of Title Insurance, §4.5.1, p. 4:47.

[508] This Act, found at 21 U. S. C. §881(a), is the primary federal law permitting forfeitures. It states in part as follows:

"1. The following shall be subject to forfeiture to the United States and no property right shall vest in them: … (6) All moneys, negotiable instruments, securities, or other things of value furnished or intended to be furnished by any person in exchange for a controlled substance in violation of [21 U. S. C. §§801-904], all proceeds traceable to such an exchange, and all moneys, negotiable instruments, and securities used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of this subchapter, except that no property shall be forfeited under this paragraph, to the extent of the interest of an owner, by reason of any act or omission established by that owner to have been committed or omitted without the knowledge or consent of that owner. (7) All real property, including any right, title, and interest (including any leasehold interest) in the whole of any lot or tract of land and any appurtenances or improvements, which is used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, a violation of this subchapter punishable by more than one year's imprisonment, except that no property shall be forfeited under this paragraph, to the extent of an interest of an owner, by reason of any act or omission established by that owner to have been committed or omitted without the knowledge or consent of that owner." Other federal laws permitting forfeiture of property are the Money Laundering Act, 18 U.S.C. §981 et seq.; and the Racketeering and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §1963 et seq.

[509] Under certain state forfeiture laws, real estate has been found forfeitable if it can be considered a "container" of drugs. See Smith v. Mount, 45 Wash.App. 623, 726 P.2d 373 (1986); Re Forfeiture of $5,264, 432 Mich. 242, 439 N.W.2d 246 (1989); and other cases collected at 86 A.L.R.4th 995.

[510] See cases collected at 86 A.L.R.4th 995.

[511] 74 F.3d 486 (4th Cir. 1996).

the claim.[512] The time period may be extended.[513] If no claim and answer are filed, an order is entered stating that the property is forfeit. The government then typically sells the property. If a claim and answer are filed, the case proceeds to trial.

The Act does not require that the government put any notice of the forfeiture in the real estate records. Typically, however, the federal government records or files a lis pendens containing the legal description of the property. The lis pendens serves as the sole notice in the real estate records of the intended forfeiture. The problems caused by this method are discussed later in this section.

Forfeiture causes the rarest and most cataclysmic title defect: total failure of title. Worse, the forfeiture to the government relates back to the date on which the crime was committed.[514] There is no evidence in the public records before the filing of the lis pendens to suggest that property is subject to forfeiture. It is not realistic to expect the drug trafficker to answer truthfully on an affidavit. Further, the drug seller often is not the direct owner of the property. The insured may later claim not to have any knowledge of the illegal activity, which may trigger the insurer's duty to defend. Therefore, it is almost impossible for the title insurer to eliminate the risk of forfeiture.

The insurer's response to the forfeiture claim will differ markedly, depending on the insured's relationship to the alleged criminal activity. If the insured is the person charged with the criminal activity, several exclusions may apply. These include Exclusions 3(a) (created, suffered, assumed or agreed to), 3(b) (matters known to the insured and not in the public records), and 1(b) (governmental police power).

If the insured is related to or affiliated with the alleged drug trafficker, the insurer's inquiry will concern the insured's knowledge of and participation in the crime for which the property was seized. One or more of the three exclusions listed above may also apply to this class of insured.

The insured must disclose to the insurer any knowledge that the titleholder is a straw man for another. Notorious drug traffickers often have others take title to property for their benefit. In Schultz Management v. The Title Guarantee Co./Ticor Title Ins. Co.,[515] the insured granted a mortgage loan to Victor Ballestas two days before a state government notice of forfeiture was recorded. The forfeiture order was premised on a finding that Eduardo Orozco had a "substantial equitable interest" in the property. Orozco was present at the loan closing (apparently not attended by the title insurer),

---

[512] Supplemental Rules for Admiralty Claims, Rule C(6).

[513] A wife was allowed to file a late claim, based on excusable neglect, when she was never served personally or by mail, she was estranged from the accused husband, and the government showed no prejudice as a result of the delay. United States v. Borromeo, 945 F.2d 750 (4th Cir. 1991). In United States v. $175,918.00 in United States Currency, 755 F.Supp. 630 (S.D.N.Y. 1991), an owner in prison was allowed to file a claim within 60 days, under Rule C(6), on a showing that he had been attempting to obtain counsel, and there was no prejudice to the government in the delay. In United States v. One Urban Lot, 978 F.2d 776 (1st Cir. 1992), however, a claim filed 37 days after personal service on the owner was found barred, because the owner had been served in the presence of her attorney, and she had had prior experience with property forfeitures.

[514] 21 U.S.C. §881(h) was added in 1984. That section states: "All right, title and interest in property described in subsection (a) of this section shall vest in the United States upon commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section."

[515] 551 N.Y.S.2d 527 (A.D. 1990).

where he answered questions, apparently posed by the lender, about the property. Orozco also was in possession, and there were mechanics' liens filed against the property in his name. The court found the forfeiture excluded from coverage, stating:

> The District Court found that appellant [the mortgagee] had at least constructive notice of the fraudulent transfer, was not a bona fide purchaser for value and set aside the mortgage pursuant to New York Debtor and Creditor Law Section 278. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed. (March 25, 1988, Docket Nos. 87-1473, 1474).
>
> The property was sold at auction, and this action followed. The title insurance policy expressly excepts from coverage "rights of creditors under the Debtor and Creditor Law." Moreover the policy provides that the suppression of a material fact (here notice of the fraudulent transfer) voids the contract. Vaughan v. United States Title Guaranty & Indemnity Co., 137 A.D. 623 (1st Dept. 1910).[516]

The Schultz Management decision thus correctly places the burden on the insured to inform the insurer of facts that indicate a transfer in fraud of creditors, including the government.

When no exclusion applies, the insurer ordinarily accepts the insured's defense and considers what defenses may be asserted as to the forfeiture. There are several such defenses. First, the insured may have grounds to attack the forfeiture directly. The government must show that the property had a substantial connection to the drug crimes, or was purchased with income from drug sales. The use of a telephone on the property to strike a drug deal was found to create a sufficient connection to warrant forfeiture.[517] Similarly, one sale on the premises was found sufficient in United States v. One Parcel of Property Located at 200 Pennsylvania Ave.[518] If the drug money can be traced to the purchase of the property, the land may be forfeit even if it is several transactions removed from the criminal transaction.[519]

However, where no particular connection exists between the crime and the property, it is not forfeit.[520] Forfeiture was not allowed when the only connection of the property to the crime was that it was the land over which drugs were smuggled, and the smuggler had only a "quasi-easement" in the property.[521] Nor was the land forfeited when its only connection to the crime was that a single

---

[516] Id. at 530.

[517] United States v. One Parcel of Real Estate, 903 F.2d 490 (7th Cir. 1990), reh.den. 1990 U.S.App. LEXIS 11947.

[518] 786 F.Supp. 400 (D.C.Del. 1992).

[519] For example, real estate was forfeit when it was bought with the proceeds of sale of another parcel which was bought with drug money. United States v. One Parcel of Real Estate Located at 116 Villa Rella Drive, 675 F.Supp. 645 (S.D.Fla. 1987).

[520] See, for example, Rogers v. United States, 511 F.Supp. 82 (D.C.Minn. 1980).

[521] United States v. Two Tracts of Real Property with Buildings, 998 F.2d 204 (4th Cir. 1993).

sale of drugs occurred on the premises.[522]

Another question concerns the size of the piece of land which may be seized. When the parcel was more than 100 acres, the government was allowed to take the entire parcel, even though much of it was not connected to any drug transaction, because it was a single tract of land.[523] A second case also found that the entire parcel could be seized even though only a portion was involved in the drug activity, on the basis that the government does not have to prove a "substantial connection" in civil forfeitures.[524] Also, when the drug trafficker owned two residences next to each other, both were forfeit even though only one was used for drug trade.[525]

Some cases involving state forfeiture laws have held that state homestead exemptions apply to forfeitures. Other states take the opposite view. These cases are collected at 16 A.L.R.5th 855.

The most litigated and commonly-claimed shield against a forfeiture, however, is the so-called "innocent owner" defense. If the insured is a bona fide purchaser for value from the drug trafficker, without actual knowledge of the drug activity, the "innocent owner" defense created by the § 881(a) (7) of the Act should apply. The text of the innocent owner exception is quoted earlier in the footnotes of this section. The innocent owner exception is not limited to bona fide purchasers for value. For example, it was held to apply to the woman companion of a drug dealer who purchased the property with money given to her by the drug dealer.[526] It is generally held to be a question of fact for the trial court as to whether or not a spouse had knowledge of the drug trade which would negate the innocent owner defense.[527] However, when a drug dealer was himself in

---

[522] United States v. All Those Certain Lots, 657 F.Supp. 1062 (E.D.Va. 1987).

[523] United States v. One 107.9 Acre Parcel of Land Located in Warren Township, 898 F.2d 396 (3rd Cir. 1990).

[524] United States v. Certain Real Property, 943 F.2d 721 (7th Cir. 1991).

[525] United States v. Certain Real Property Located at 116 and 188 Sandy Beach Road, 711 F.Supp. 660 (D.C. Maine 1989).

[526] In United States v. 92 Buena Vista Ave., 113 S.Ct. 1126 (1993), the U.S. Supreme Court stated: "The Court of Appeals correctly concluded that the protection afforded to innocent owners is not limited to bona fide purchasers. The text of the statute is the strongest support for this conclusion. The statute authorizes the forfeiture of moneys exchanged for a controlled substance, and 'all proceeds traceable to such an exchange,' with one unequivocal exception:

"[N]o property shall be forfeited under this paragraph, to the extent of the interest of an owner, by reason of any act or omission established by that owner to have been committed or omitted without the knowledge or consent of that owner.' 21 U. S. C. §881(a) (6).

"The term 'owner' is used three times and each time it is unqualified. Such language is sufficiently unambiguous to foreclose any contention that it applies only to bona fide purchasers. Presumably that explains why the Government does not now challenge this aspect of the Court of Appeals' ruling.

"That the funds respondent used to purchase her home were a gift does not, therefore, disqualify respondent from claiming that she is an owner who had no knowledge of the alleged fact that those funds were "proceeds traceable" to illegal sales of controlled substances. Under the terms of the statute, her status would be precisely the same if, instead of having received a gift of $240,000 from Brenna, she had sold him a house for that price and used the proceeds to buy the property at issue."

[527] See United States v. Lots 12, 13, 14 & 15, Keeton Heights Subdivision, Morgan County, Ky., 869 F.2d 942 (6th Cir. 1989).

title, and purchased the land with money traceable to drug transactions, his conveyance of the property to his wife for $1 was found to be in fraud of creditors and the land forfeit.[528]

The innocent owner defense may be applied in favor of a joint owner of the property. A tenant by the entireties may preserve the entire property from forfeiture if he or she is an innocent owner.[529] The United States Supreme Court has ruled that the innocent owner defense is not limited by the relation-back provision of the forfeiture law.[530] Thus, to be an innocent owner, one is not required to prove that he or she purchased the property before the commission of the crime. In United States v. 92 Buena Vista Ave.,[531] a woman was given $240,000 with which she purchased her home. She then lived there for more than a decade before the seizure warrant was issued. The warrant declared that there was probable cause to believe that the funds given to the woman were proceeds of illegal drug trafficking. The owner swore that she had no knowledge of the money's origins. The government argued that the relation-back provision of the law applied to the money given to the woman, and thus the property was effectively forfeit the instant she bought it with the forfeit money.[532] The Court disagreed:

> Because proceeds traceable to illegal drug transactions are a species of "property described in subsection (a)," the Government argues that this provision has the effect of preventing such proceeds from becoming the property of anyone other than the United States. The argument fails.
>
> Although proceeds subject to §881(h) are "described" in the first part of subsection (a)(6), the last clause of that subsection exempts certain proceeds -- proceeds owned by one unaware of their criminal source -- from forfeiture. As the Senate Report on the 1984 amendment correctly observed, the amendment applies only to "property which is subject to civil forfeiture under section 881(a)."[footnote omitted]
>
> Under §881(a)(6), the property of one who can satisfy the innocent owner defense is not subject to civil forfeiture. Because the success of any defense available under §881(a) will necessarily determine whether §881(h) applies, §881(a)(6) must allow an assertion of the defense before §881(h) applies. [footnote omitted]
>
> *   *   *   *
>
> Our decision denies the Government no benefits of the relation back doctrine. The

---

[528] United States v. One Parcel of Real Property, 648 F.Supp. 436 (D.C.Mass. 1986).

[529] See cases collected in Burke, Law of Title Insurance, at §4.5.1.

[530] The relation-back doctrine was added to the Act in 1984, by the addition of 21 U.S.C. §881(h), which states: "All right, title and interest in property described in subsection (a) of this section shall vest in the United States upon commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section."

[531] 113 S.Ct. 1126 (1993).

[532] In the Buena Vista case, the government argued that the provision or an equivalent principle of common law should apply, although the property was purchased before the amendment took effect.

> Government cannot profit from the common-law doctrine of relation back until it has obtained a judgment of forfeiture. And it cannot profit from the statutory version of that doctrine in §881(h) until respondent has had the chance to invoke and offer evidence to support the innocent owner defense under §881(a)(6).[533]

Thus, a party asserting the innocent owner defense is not required to establish the priority in time of his or her interest as compared to the date of the commission of the crime.

The innocent owner defense grants protection to a purchaser without actual knowledge of the forfeiture. Constructive notice is not sufficient to negate the defense.

> The government's contention that the innocent owner defense is not available to a claimant having constructive notice of alleged illegal activity and possible forfeiture claims is erroneous. ... "We agree with ... [the claimant] that the application of the statutory 'innocent owner' defense turns on the claimant's actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge."[534]

The recording of the lis pendens by the government does not provide actual knowledge, therefore, except in the exceedingly rare case in which a purchaser would actually go to the public records and find that notice.

In any event, there is a real question as to the notice given by the lis pendens. Where the official real estate index is the grantor-grantee index, the lis pendens may not be sufficient notice of the government's claim of ownership. The lis pendens will be posted with the United States as "grantor" and the land as "grantee." Neither name is in the chain of title. A search forward from the last grantee will skip over the posting for the lis pendens, because the grantee of record appears nowhere on the lis pendens. As one commentator has opined,

> Unless the legislative history of §881(a)(7) shows that Congress intended to upset the customary methods of title search used in this country, there is no evidence that the innocent owner exception should be denied an owner without actual knowledge of the pending forfeiture.[footnote omitted] Constructive knowledge through records indexed only through the United States and not found in a tract index should be insufficient to deny an innocent owner defense.[535]

This issue was resolved as the commentator suggested in United States v. One Parcel of Real Estate

---

[533] 113 S.Ct. 1126 (1993).

[534] United States v. One Parcel of Real Estate Located on Fellows Tracts C, D, E, and F of Pine Island Estates, 715 F.Supp. 360 (S.D.Fla. 1989) [quoting from United States v. Four Million, Two Hundred Fifty-Five Thousand Dollars, 762 F.2d 895, 906 and n. 24 (11th Cir. 1985)].

[535] Burke, Law of Title Insurance, §4.5.1, p. 4:56.

Located on Fellows Tract C, D, E, and F of Pine Island Estates,[536] in which the court found:

> Because Marion County utilizes a grantor-grantee system of indexing title to realty, the Clerk recorded the notice of lis pendens only under the letter "U" of the index for "United States" since no other party was listed. Since a tract index system is not used, an examination of the available grantor-grantee index would not disclose the prior recording of the government's notice of lis pendens.
>
> *　　*　　*　　*
>
> The claimants contend that the government's notice of lis pendens was a "wild deed" outside of the scope of a reasonable grantor-grantee search. Given the inherent deficiencies in such a recordation system, the claimants assert that a reasonable title searcher should be able to rely on researching the name indexes under grantor and grantee and no more. The court doubts that the claimants are correct in maintaining that a diligent title search would not have uncovered the government's notice of lis pendens. A reasonably prudent title searcher should certainly check for any adverse interest caused by liens filed by the local, state, or federal government. Nonetheless, because actual notice is the standard, the court does not reach this issue of constructive notice in this case.
>
> Even if constructive notice is the standard, the Cavanaughs still prevail as innocent owners. [The court detailed the government's failure to publish or post notices before the transfer.] The Cavanaughs actually and reasonably relied upon their absence of actual notice of any forfeiture claim, and upon the Flanagan title search in purchasing their property and building the home. In doing so they acted as would any innocent owner. The need for certainty of land title is critical to the orderly transfer of property. Surely Congress did not intend to disrupt state regulation of land transfers by enacting the forfeiture provisions in section 881 so as to place all land titles in doubt because of the "relation back" effect of that statute.[537]

See §9.12 for a discussion of public records and the chain of title.

A lender is not an "innocent owner" of the property. Thus, it may not directly assert the innocent owner defense unless the lender has become the titleholder through foreclosure.[538] However, the "innocent lender" has been held to have lien rights on the property. Some cases have found innocent lien holders entitled to their principal and interest accrued up to the date of seizure.[539]

---

[536] 715 F.Supp. 360 (S.D.Fla. 1989).

[537] Id. at 361, 362-3.

[538] An excellent survey of cases involving lienholders' rights after forfeiture is found in Brown, Innocent Owners' Rights to Federally Forfeited Real Property, in Current Developments in Title Insurance 1992, Practicing Law Institute N-384 1992, p. 207. Mr. Brown is a Trial Attorney, Asset Forfeiture Office, U.S. Department of Justice.

[539] United States v. One Piece of Real Property Described in Part as: 1314 Whiterock, 571 F.Supp. 723 (W.D.Tex. 1983); United States v. One Condominium Apartment, 636 F.Supp. 457 (S.D.Fla. 1986) (holding disapproved of in In re Metmor Financial, Inc., 819 F.2d 446 (4th Cir. 1987).

In other cases, however, the innocent lender has been found entitled to interest through the date of sale, plus reasonable attorney's fees.[540] A wide range of cases involving lenders is collected at 1 A.L.R.5th 317.

In United States v. Colonial National Bank, N.A.,[541] a forfeiture was completed without the recording of a lis pendens. Colonial National Bank recorded its deed of trust three months after the judgment of forfeiture was entered. The bank argued that the United States was obligated by 28 U.S.C. §1964 to record a lis pendens and, because it did not, the bank was an innocent owner.[542] The court avoided the issue of §1964 because, under the 92 Buena Vista Avenue case,[543] title had vested in the United States before the mortgage was recorded. The judgment of forfeiture was "as valid and effectual, as against all the world, as a recorded deed."[544] Therefore, > the judgment of forfeiture being prior in time must prevail over the bank, whose deed was not recorded until some three months later on April 29th. So the failure of the government to file a lis pendens has no effect on this case; the government was the winner in all events.[545]

The court conceded in a footnote that the decision was "bound to have a potential adverse effect on land titles," but insisted that it was up to Congress to "change this rule."[546]

The Colonial decision does not directly address the question of whether or not 28 U.S.C. §1964 requires the recording of a lis pendens. Nor does it answer whether or not the failure to record a lis pendens allows a buyer to assert the innocent owner defense if the purchase takes place before forfeiture. However, the Fourth Circuit certainly did nothing to encourage the government to give notice of an intended forfeiture. Perhaps that is why the court's characterization of the government as "winner" is distasteful--the decision creates an uneven playing field between the contestants.

Title insurers are sometimes asked to treat a forfeiture judgment as erasing real estate tax liens, most often current year taxes which are liens by statute but not yet on the tax roll or delinquent tax roll. In Town of Sanford v. United States,[547] the United States conducted its forfeiture action

---

[540] United States v. Real Property Constituting Approximately Fifty (50) Acres, 703 F.Supp. 1306 (E.D.Tenn. 1988), later proceeding 1989 U.S.Dist. LEXIS 850; United States v. Real Property Known as 708-810 West 9th St., Erie, Pa., 715 F.Supp. 1323 (W.D.Pa. 1989).

[541] 74 F.3d 486 (4th Cir. 1996).

[542] That section provides that, where state law requires notice of an action affecting real estate to be recorded in a particular manner, notice of an action pending in a U.S. district court is to be recorded so as to give constructive notice.

[543] United States v. 92 Buena Vista Avenue, 507 U.S. 111, 126 S.Ct. 1126, 122 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993).

[544] 74 F.3d at 488. quoting Caplin & Drysdale, Chtd. v. United States, 491 U.S. 617, 627, 109 S.Ct. 2646, 2653, 105 L.Ed.2d 528 (1989).

[545] 74 F.3d at 488.

[546] Id.

[547] 140 F.3d 20 (1st Cir. (Me.) 1998), aff'g 961 F.Supp. 16 (D.Me. 1997).

without giving notice to the Town because it was unaware of the tax lien which had already attached. The Town was found to qualify under the innocent owner defense, and thus entitled to notice of the proceeding. Because of the case, the Department of Justice "resolved to send written notice of all future real estate forfeiture actions to the tax collector in each Maine municipality in which the property lies." In the Town of Sanford case, the Town was not entitled to payment of the taxes because it had already discharged the lien at the time the property was sold by the United States. However, the case establishes that any similar municipality is entitled to the innocent owner defense.

Thus, given its drastic effect on title to the insured property, the secret nature of the problem, the strict time deadlines imposed, and the burgeoning volume of cases, forfeiture of property is a very serious hazard to the title insurer and its insureds.

9.14 Covered Risks Of Specialty Policies

In recent years, ALTA has adopted several title insurance policies in addition to its all-purpose owner's and loan policies. One purpose served by the owner's policies is to provide a plain-language policy that satisfies insurance regulations limiting the number of words in a sentence or syllables per word, sometimes known as the Flesch or Flesch-Kincaid readability test. ALTA has adopted two such policies, the Residential policy (§9.14.1) and the Homeowner's policy (§9.14.2). The second purpose of these policies has been to offer increased coverage, typically at a higher premium, as an alternative to the basic or standard-coverage policy.

The industry and its customers also wanted a short form loan policy that could be issued at closing or shortly thereafter, addressing the perennial complaint of lenders that the last document needed to complete their loan files is the title insurance policy issued some time after closing. The ALTA adopted the Short Form Residential Loan Policy in response to that demand, as discussed at §9.14.3. ALTA also adopted a special policy to be used only for subordinate liens, the ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Junior Loan Policy, discussed at §9.14.4.

Finally, for many years, the ALTA has provided a special policy form for use only when the United States is the insured. The ALTA United States of America Policy is discussed at §9.14.5. ALTA has adopted a Limited Pre-Foreclosure Policy, which protects a lender seeking to foreclose against certain liens and other matters not described in the policy, as discussed at §9.14.6. Finally, the ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy is discussed at §9.14.7.

This section discusses the special Covered Risks found in each of the above policies.

9.14.1 ALTA Residential Policy

The ALTA Residential policy was drafted for use in insuring owners on residential property having no more than four dwelling units.[548] It is not intended for use on vacant land or improved non-residential or multi-unit property. The coverages provided by the Residential policy are similar to those found in the California Land Title Association endorsement form 126.1.

The Residential policy states the various classes of covered defects and liens with much more detail than does the 1992 ALTA Owner's policy. The Residential policy also gives certain coverages

---

[548] The Owner's Information Sheet on the cover of the policy states: "Your Title Insurance Policy is a legal contract between you and Blank Title Insurance Company. It applies only to a one-to-four family residential lot or condominium unit. If your land is not either of these, contact us immediately."

not found in the 1992 or 2006 policies, at Covered Title Risks 12 and 13, which provide the following:

> This Policy covers the following title risks, if they affect your title on the Policy Date.
>
> *　　*　　*
>
> 12. You are forced to remove your existing structure -- other than a boundary wall or fence -- because:
>   . it extends on to adjoining land or on to any easement
>   . it violates a restriction shown in Schedule B
>   . it violates an existing zoning law
> 13. You cannot use the land because use as a single-family residence violates a restriction shown in Schedule B or an existing zoning law.

The two central coverages in these provisions are (1) protection against removal of a structure resulting from one of the three stated causes, and (2) loss of the right to use the land as a single-family residence for either of the two stated reasons.

Title Risk 12 covers loss caused by forced removal of "structures." See § 3.2.3.1.7 for a complete discussion of claim issues about forced removal coverages. Title Risk 13 protects against a restriction or zoning ordinance prohibiting the use of the property for a single-family residence. The entire subject of zoning has traditionally been completely excluded because it affects use, not title. See §11.1.2 regarding the zoning exclusion. The ALTA Homeowner's policy contains the same zoning coverage (Covered Risk 20), which is discussed at §9.14.2. The Residential policy is to be used only when the property is improved with a dwelling having not more than four units. It is not to be issued on vacant land.[549] For the coverage to be triggered, then, the zoning code would have to prohibit the use of the existing structure for a single-family residence.

The Residential policy says that it may be used on property having up to four dwelling units. Title Risk 13 does not assure that the property may be used for more than a single-family residence, however. Thus, the policy does not insure against a violation of a zoning ordinance or restriction caused by use of the property for more than one unit.

Covered Title Risk 14 protects against "Other defects, liens, or encumbrances" which "affect your title," subject to the conditions, exclusions and exceptions in the policy. The Residential policy, unlike other policy forms adopted before or since, lists separate Covered Title Risks for each type of covered defect, lien or encumbrance. This coverage is thus a catch-all provision, intended to encompass covered defects not listed in the thirteen prior Covered Title Risks. Title Risk 14 is thus no broader than Insuring Provision 2 of the 1992 policy, which protects against "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on the title... ." The 2006 policies also recite risks by type, but do so only as an [549] "Your Title Insurance Policy is a legal contract between you and Blank Title Insurance Company. It applies only to a one-to-four family residential lot or condominium unit. If your land is not either of these, contact us immediately." The insurer should be permitted to reform the policy if it issues the residential policy on land other than that specified. This would be particularly true when the proposed insured or its agent told the insurer that the property qualified for a Residential policy. See §11.3.1 regarding misrepresentation of material facts in the application for insurance.

---

itemization of some risks that fall under Covered Risk 2, for "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on Title."

The use of the word "other" in Covered Title Risk 14 was found by a New Jersey court to provide protection against the forced removal of a dock in a riparian zone between a bulkhead line and a pierhead line.[550] The court strained to find coverage, invoking the reasonable expectations doctrine to do so:

> This provision can have substantive and relevant meaning only if it is construed to refer to claims, other than those expressly articulated in the list of covered risks, that assert an interest by others in, or a limitation of an owner's rights to, the subject property. … The forced removal of the floating dock (which had been constructed before the policy was issued and was shown on the survey that Defendant insured) would have resulted from a finding in the Chancery Division that the dock was located on "adjoining land" to which Plaintiff would have had no right… Accordingly, ... I think that the "other defects" section of the covered risk provisions of the policy could be interpreted as insuring Plaintiff against the forced removal of the floating dock so long as Plaintiff had a proper legal claim to use of the "adjoining land." Bayside's claim directly attacked Plaintiffs' legal right to seek access from the State to the portion of the Inlet that abutted the Property, a claim that most certainly "affected" Plaintiffs' title to the Property because Plaintiffs' right derived directly and exclusively from, and was completely dependent upon, the validity and prerequisites associated with that title. I believe that this risk is well within the "reasonable expectations of the average insured" and is generically of the same nature as those delineated in the enumerated "covered risks" of the policy.

9.14.2 Homeowner's Policy

ALTA adopted the Homeowner's Policy of Title Insurance in 1998. The policy was revised in 2003, 2008, 2010 and 2013.[551] The policy is found at Appendix B. In some respects, the Homeowner's Policy has its roots in the Residential policy. However, it is more directly derived from the First American Eagle(TM) Protection Owner's Policy, introduced in 1996. The Eagle(TM) policy incorporated a number of coverages previously provided only by endorsement, and added a few that had never previously been offered. Other insurers adopted owner's policies providing coverages similar to, but not identical with, the Eagle(TM) policy. The result was that, for the first time in some years, most insurers offered policies with different coverages, on forms not promulgated by ALTA.[552]

---

[550] Florio v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2006 WL 1520175 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished).

[551] The Homeowner's Policy differs from the 1992 ALTA owner's policy in so many respects that all of its terms are discussed in this section, rather than throughout this treatise. The reader is directed to this section from the main topics on which the two policies vary.

[552] See the discussion of these "homegrown" policies, and the subsequent ALTA actions, in LaBelle, Enhanced Protections for Residential Homeowners: Introduction to the New ALTA Homeowner's Policy of Title Insurance for a

This interesting experiment in originality netted mixed results for insureds and the industry. In June, 1998, the California Land Title Association adopted its Homeowner's Policy of Title Insurance. The CLTA policy contained 29 coverages. A few months later, the ALTA adopted the CLTA policy, except that it made Covered Risk 29 optional.[553] One commentator suggested that companies might print the policy without Covered Risk 29, which mimics the CLTA 116 endorsement (commonly known as the location endorsement).[554] Since then, however, the Homeowner's Policy has ballooned to 32 covered risks. The Residential policy was not withdrawn when ALTA promulgated the Homeowner's policy.[555]

As with the Residential policy, ALTA intends that the Homeowner's Policy be used only for one-to-four family residences. The Homeowner's Policy Owner's Information Sheet says the policy > applies only to a one-to-four family residence and only if each insured named in Schedule A is a Natural Person. If the Land described in Schedule A of the Policy is not an improved residential lot on which there is located a one-to-four family residence, or if each insured named in Schedule A is not a Natural Person, contact Us immediately.

Implicit in this statement is the conclusion that the insurer will replace the Homeowner's Policy with another form, such as the 2006 policy, if contacted by the insured per this paragraph.

The 2010 version of the ALTA Homeowner's policy contains 32 Covered Risks. Like the Residential policy, the Homeowner's policy identifies specific types of covered title risks, rather than listing classes of risks such as defects, liens and encumbrances. This section discusses the Covered Risks in numerical sequence. Paragraph 9 of the Conditions says that the Policy Amount automatically increases by 10% each year for the first five years, on the policy anniversary date. See §3.2.3.1 for a discussion of the resolution of a claim invoking the special coverages of these policies, including forced removal, zoning and existing violations of use regulations such as the building code.

The first eleven Covered Risks, other than 5 and 7, are an itemization of traditional title insurance risks. Covered Risk 1 indemnifies if "Someone else owns an interest in Your Title," which is essentially identical to Covered Risk 1 of the 2006 and earlier policies. Covered Risk 2 protects

---

One-to-Four Family Residence (10-17-98), in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448 1999, p. 151.

[553] The policy was adopted on October 17th, 1998.

[554] James L. Gosdin, The New Homeowners Policy of Title Insurance, Virginia Land Title Association Examiner, Spring, 1999, p. 15. This article contains an excellent analysis of the new policy. Mr. Gosdin serves on the ALTA Forms Committee, and his article reflects his first-hand experience. See also LaBelle, Enhanced Protections for Residential Homeowners: Introduction to the New ALTA Homeowner's Policy of Title Insurance for a One-to-Four Family Residence (10-17-98), in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448 1999, p. 151.

[555] ALTA withdrew the 1970 and 1992 policies when it adopted later versions, but took no similar action as to the Residential policy when the Homeowner's Policy was approved.

against "rights affecting Your Title arising out of leases, contracts, or options," which is one of the risks that falls under Covered Risk 2 of the 2006 and earlier policies. Covered Risk 3, similarly, specifically covers claims by others to have rights in the property due to "forgery or impersonation." See §9.2 for a complete discussion of this covered risk. Covered Risk 4 protects against easements.[556] See §9.6. Covered Risk 6 protects the insured if "Your Title is defective." The 2010 version of Covered Risk 6 gives six illustrations of title defects, which correspond with the illustrations provided in the 2006 policy forms. One example given is that the policy indemnifies the insured if "[a] document upon which Your Title is based is invalid because it was not properly signed, sealed, acknowledged, delivered or recorded." One decision found that the 1992 policy does not assure that the insured's deed is recorded, as long as no one is challenging the insured's ownership of the land.[557] The result is the same under the Homeowner's Policy, since the coverage is invoked only if the insured's title "is invalid" due to lack of recording, delivery, etc. Covered Risks 8, 9 and 10 protect against liens, encumbrances and "rights affecting Your Title because of fraud, duress, incompetency or incapacity," all of which also fall under Covered Risk 2 of the 2006 and earlier policy forms.

Covered Risk 5 indemnifies the insured if "Someone else has a right to limit Your use of the Land."[558] This covered risk appears to be intended to protect against an adverse claim of title that would dispossess the insured from the quiet enjoyment of the land, similar to the covenant of warranty that is commonly made by a seller. However, the phrase "use of the Land" does not tie explicitly to matters affecting title. Thus, the term "use" is limited by the exclusions that remove coverage for most governmental regulation of the property's use.

Covered Risk 7 indemnifies the insured as to "[a]ny of Covered Risks 1 through 6 occurring after the Policy Date." James L. Gosdin, the long-time chair of the ALTA Forms Committee, summarized this post-policy coverage as follows:

> Covered Risk 7 insures against loss because of "Any of Covered Risks 1 through 6 occurring after the Policy Date." Those matters include adverse ownership, leases, contracts, options, rights affecting title arising out of forgery or impersonation, easements, defects in title, and rights to limit use of the land. For example, this covered Risk 7 could cover post-policy forgery, adverse possession, and prescription claims. It would not insure against post-policy eminent domain (because of the condemnation exclusion) or post-policy conveyances or contracts by the insured

---

[556] In Rouse v. North American Title Ins. Co., Northern District of Georgia federal court, Atlanta Division, Civil Action No. 1:17-CV-04709-LMM, June 29, 2018 (no Westlaw citation available), the court held that Covered Risk 4 of the Homeowner's policy could be and was negated by an exception for "[c]ovenants, conditions, restriction, easements and/or servitudes."

[557] See Alford v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 3 S.W.3d 164 (Tex.App.-Eastland), discussed in §9.5.

[558] In Wei v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2018 WL 1870400 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that only Covered Risk 18 was invoked, and not Covered Risk 5, when the neighbor sued the insureds to force the removal of the insureds' encroaching garage. The court said that the insureds had full use of the land they purchased. "What they no longer have is full use of the southern encroachment, which, again, is not their property."

> (because of the "acts of the insured" exclusion). It would not insure against post-policy liens, because Covered Risk 8, which insures against liens on the title, is not a subject of post-policy coverage.[559]

When someone forges a deed of the insured's property after the policy date, there is no protection afforded the insured under the 2006 and other policy forms. Widespread deed forgery had been publicized as a significant problem in certain large cities, including Los Angeles. The attention given to the victims of those schemes may have contributed to the development of this coverage. Mr. Gosdin notes a common issue concerning this covered risk—the assertion by the insured that it provides protection against adverse possession or a prescriptive easement that ripens after the policy date. If, for example, a person had used a driveway on the insured land for several years before the policy date, which use ripens into a prescriptive easement by continued use after the policy date, the combined pre- and post-policy use would apparently invoke Covered Risk 4 ("Someone else has an easement on the Land") as augmented by Covered Risk 7. Exclusion 4.d, for post-policy matters, would not apply. However, Exclusion 4.a, for matters "created, allowed or agreed to" by the insured may still apply. Further, the covered risk may be negated by a possession, survey or other exception.

Covered Risk 11 provides an access protection that is broader than that found in the 2006 or earlier policies. The covered risk protects the insured in the event he or she does "not have both actual vehicular and pedestrian access to and from the land, based upon a legal right." As Mr. Gosdin explains,

> This insures that 1) the insured has actual (not just legal) right of access to the land, 2) the access is both vehicular and pedestrian, and 3) the actual access is based on a legal right (e.g., located on an easement). It does not insure that the access is over a public right of way. For example, the access can be by a private easement. This provision insures "actual" access, but does not insure that the access is paved or publicly maintained.[560]

Covered Risk 12 indemnifies an insured who is "forced to correct or remove an existing violation of any covenant, condition, or restriction affecting the land," including (but apparently not limited to) those excepted on Schedule B. The covered risk applies to enforcement of a covenant, condition or restriction on the land, which includes building and use restrictions, and the term "condition" is not meant to refer to physical conditions on the land.[561] The covered risk explicitly

---

[559] James L. Gosdin, The New Homeowners Policy of Title Insurance, Virginia Land Title Association Examiner, Spring, 1999, p. 15.

[560] Id.

[561] Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 6101016 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 204 (unpublished) held that a municipality's claimed interference with the insured's attempt to lay utility lines was not a condition or an existing violation, and did not invoke this covered risk. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Silbiger, 2016 WL 5394112 (N.D.Ga.) (unpublished), the court held that this coverage paid for the cost to repair an underground storm water retention vault that caved in due to heavy rain. The court held that an indemnity agreement about maintaining the vault was a "covenant" and the municipality's letter informing the insured that it had to repair the vault was a "requirement" that he "correct" the states that there is no coverage for a violation that relates to "any obligation to perform maintenance or repair on the Land, or environmental protection of any kind, including hazardous or toxic conditions or substances, unless there is a notice recorded in the Public Records, describing any part of the Land, claiming a violation exists." The handling of claims under this Covered Risk is discussed at §3.2.3.1.10.

Covered Risk 13 indemnifies the insured if "title is lost or taken because of a violation of any covenant, condition, or restriction, which occurred before you acquired your title." This covered risk also applies even if the covenant is excepted on Schedule B. This is a protection against a reverter or right of reentry due to the violation of a restriction. The event that triggers the reverter or right of reentry must have occurred before the insured took title, rather than by the transfer to the insured. The insurer will most commonly address a claim under this covered risk by defending against the asserted reverter. A reverter of title is rare and not favored in the law. A subsequent owner has the additional protection of being a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Also, most states have laws limiting the enforcement of reversionary clauses, and statutes of limitation that prevent their enforcement, or cause them to be extinguished altogether, after a designated period of time.

Covered Risk 14 indemnifies for loss caused by the violation or enforcement of a building code, zoning, land use and similar regulation of the use of the land, if there is a notice in the public records as of the date of policy "claiming a violation exists or declaring the intention to enforce the law or regulation." This covered risk is effectively the same as Covered Risk 5 of the 2006 owner's policy, which is discussed at §9.9.2. The handling of claims under this Covered Risk is discussed at §3.2.3.1.10.

Similarly, Covered Risk 15 protects against an enforcement action based on the exercise of governmental police power if there is a notice in the public records "of the enforcement action or intention to bring an enforcement action." This coverage is the same as Covered Risk 6 of the 2006 owner's policy, discussed at §9.9.2. The handling of claims under this Covered Risk is discussed at §3.2.3.1.10.

Covered Risk 16 protects the insured if an "existing violation" of a subdivision law or regulation (a) prevents the insured from obtaining a building permit, (b) causes a buyer, lender or tenant to reject a contract, loan or lease, or (c) the insured is "required to correct or remove the violation" of the subdivision law. This covered risk is subject to a deductible and a Maximum Dollar Amount of Liability. This covered risk is not invoked if a building permit is denied the insured for any reason other than an existing violation of a subdivision law.[562] This coverage would only be invoked by an illegal land division prior to the conveyance to the insured. The covered risk is not invoked if the conveyance to the insured created the subdivision law violation, because that would not be an existing violation on date of policy. The covered risk also is invoked only if one of the three listed events occurs. The insurer will typically remedy the subdivision law violation if possible,

---

"existing violation" of the "covenant." Silbiger is discussed further at §3.2.3.1.10.

[562] In Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 6101016 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 204 (unpublished), the insured was denied a building permit, but alleged that it was due to collusion between the town board members and others. The court held that this covered risk was not invoked, because the insured "has not demonstrated that his inability to obtain the building permit at issue was due to 'an existing violation a subdivision law or regulation affecting the land.'" such as by filing a subdivision map with appropriate approvals. If a cure is not feasible or possible, the insurer will typically require the insured to establish a proof of loss, and then pay up to the maximum liability. See the discussion at §3.2.3.1.7 of how to calculate the loss using the deductible and Maximum Dollar Amount of Liability amounts.

Covered Risk 17 protects against loss of title due to condemnation, if there was a notice of the exercise in the public records on date of policy. This coverage is the same as Covered Risk 7 of the 2006 owner's policy, discussed at §9.9.2. The handling of claims under this Covered Risk is discussed at §3.2.3.1.10.

Covered Risks 18, 19 and 21 concern the forced removal or remedy of existing structures and are limited by deductibles and Maximum Dollar Amounts of Liability. Covered Risk 18 protects against the forced removal of "existing structures, or any part of them—other than boundary walls or fences—because any portion was built without obtaining a building permit" from the correct government office.[563] Covered Risk 19 protects the insured if he or she is forced to "remove or remedy" existing structures because they violate an existing zoning law or regulation. This coverage is similar to Residential policy Covered Title Risk 12. The phrase "or remedy" may broaden coverage somewhat. Covered Risk 21 protects against enforced removal of existing structures because they encroach onto a neighbor's land.[564] Covered Risk 21 says that the Deductible Amount and Maximum Dollar Limit of Liability apply to encroaching boundary walls or fences. The manner in which a claim is resolved concerning these forced removal coverages is discussed at §3.2.3.1.7.

Covered Risk 20 protects the insured if "[y]ou cannot use the land because use as a single-family residence violates an existing zoning law or zoning regulation." This coverage is essentially the same as the zoning portion of the Residential policy Covered Title Risk 13. This covered risk will rarely be invoked in areas that have adopted Euclidean zoning, in which nearly all classes of property permit use as a single-family residence.[565] Also, most zoning ordinances permit the grandfathering of an existing building even if it violates the zoning classification, and the Homeowner's Policy is intended to be issued on property that already has a residence located on it. However, a case construing the very similar coverage of the Residential policy found the covered risk invoked by an ordinance limiting the owner to the installation of a mobile home, because that was the type of residence that existed on the property when she bought. The court ruled that "the term 'single-family residence' is patently ambiguous and must be construed against the drafter so as not to include a mobile home," thus invoking coverage.[566] See §3.2.3.1.8 for a discussion of the [563] See Wei v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2018 WL 1870400 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), involving an encroaching garage, in which the insurer paid the insured the Maximum Dollar Amounts of Liability of $5,000 and waived the deductible amount of $2,500, which the court said was the company's full indemnity duty. The court found, however, that Covered Risk 18 was not actually invoked, because the trial court in the neighbor lawsuit had not ordered that the garage be removed.

---

[564] In In Wei v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2018 WL 1870400 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that only Covered Risk 18 was invoked, and not Covered Risk 21, when the neighbor sued the insureds to force the removal of the insureds' encroaching garage.

[565] See Patricia E. Salkin, American Law of Zoning (5th Ed.), Chapter 1, Introduction: Public Control of Private Land (West).

manner in which a claim is resolved concerning this coverage.

Covered Risk 22 provides the only coverage against encroachments of a neighbor's existing structures onto the insured land. That coverage is limited to a marketability claim: "[s]omeone else has a legal right to, and does, refuse to perform a contract to purchase the land, lease it, or make a mortgage loan on it because Your neighbor's existing structures encroach onto the land." This marketability coverage is limited. The insured must establish that a buyer, lender or tenant has rejected title because of the encroachment. The insurer's willingness to insure a buyer, lender or tenant against the encroaching structure may cause title to be acceptable to the buyer, lender or tenant, negating any loss. See §3.2.3.1.6 regarding measurement of loss on marketability claims. In any event, Covered Risk 22 does not obligate the insurer to remove the neighbor's existing structure. Thus, there is no coverage as to a neighbor's encroaching structures to mirror the covered risks concerning the insured's structures that encroach onto neighboring land. This is not an oversight, but an acknowledgment that the cost of ejecting a neighbor's structures from the insured's land or paying diminution in value due to adverse possession of the insured land is a far different and greater risk than the cost of cutting off and removing a structure belonging to the insured that is trespassing on neighboring land. The policy does not insure the title to structures that encroach on a neighbor's land.

Covered Risk 23 protects against the forced removal of "existing structures which encroach onto an Easement or over a building set-back line, even if the easement or building set-back line is excepted in Schedule B." There is no Maximum Dollar Amount of Liability for this covered risk. Otherwise, however, the method for calculating the loss payable under this covered risk is the same as for the other forced-removal risks. This covered risk may be negated by a possession, survey or other exception.

Covered Risk 24 indemnifies the insured in the event that the insured's structures are "damaged because of the exercise of a right to maintain or use any Easement affecting the land, even if the Easement is excepted in Schedule B." Again, there is no Maximum Dollar Amount of Liability for this covered risk. However, the nature of this risk is different from the encroaching structure covered risks. The loss is measured as the value of repairing the structures that are damaged by the easement holder's exercise of its rights.[567] An easement holder does not typically have the right to tear down the servient owner's structures in the use of the easement. Also, most easements provide for restoration and repair of damage caused by the easement holder. If such a repair provision is not explicit in the easement grant, it is often implied by law. Thus, the insurer will typically demand that the easement holder perform the repair of the structure. Only if the easement holder fails to perform that duty does the insurer have to step in and make the repairs.

---

[566] Whitlock v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 4549367 (D.S.C.) (unpublished). The Whitlock analysis was adopted wholesale in Lyons v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 415 S.C. 115, 781 S.E.2d 126 (S.C.App. 2015).

[567] In Rouse v. North American Title Ins. Co., Northern District of Georgia federal court, Atlanta Division, Civil Action No. 1:17-CV-04709-LMM, June 29, 2018 (no Westlaw citation available), the court held that the mere existence of a sewer pipe on the insured parcel did not invoke Covered Risk 24 of the ALTA Homeowner's policy. The insured argued that the sewer pipe reduced the value of his property but did not allege any loss caused by the exercise of the easement right. The court said that, even if his assertion about decreased value was true, that type of loss was not payable under this covered risk. Further, the policy contained an exception for "[c]ovenants, conditions, restriction, easements and/or servitudes," which the court said was not negated by Covered Risk 24.

Covered Risk 25 is similar to Covered Risk 24. It indemnifies the insured for damage to surface improvements caused by mineral extraction. It protects in the event that "[y]our existing improvements (or a replacement or modification made to them after the Policy Date), including lawns, shrubbery, or trees, are damaged because of the future exercise of a right to use the surface of the land for the extraction or development of minerals, water, or any other substance, even if those rights are excepted or reserved from the description of the Land or excepted in Schedule B." This is the only covered risk that refers to improvements rather than structures, and to improvements replaced or modified after the policy date. This covered risk should rarely be invoked on the one-to-four family residential property for which the Homeowner's Policy is to be issued, because such parcels are typically too small to permit surface extraction of minerals and not zoned for such use. If it is invoked, however, the party extracting the minerals will typically be required to restore the surface as described in the covered risk. Thus, the insurer will typically demand that the party that extracted the minerals perform the restoration work. Only if that party fails to perform that work does the insurer have to step in.

Covered Risk 26 is against the attempted enforcement of a discriminatory restriction based on race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status or national origin. This covered risk would obligate the insurer to assert the protection of federal law banning such restrictions on behalf of the insured. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 and later laws banned the enforcement of such restrictions. A later federal law made it illegal to record such a restriction.[568] Thus, any such attempted enforcement is itself a violation of the law.

Covered Risk 27 expands tax coverage by indemnifying the insured against the post-policy levy of "supplemental" taxes for certain limited pre-policy events. It indemnifies if "[a] taxing authority assesses supplemental real estate taxes not previously assessed against the Land for any period before the Policy Date because of construction or a change of ownership or use that occurred before the Policy Date." There are various types of charges and assessments in the various jurisdictions which are made as the result of either development or a change in ownership. By using the phrase "supplemental real estate taxes," this coverage refers only to an increase in general ad valorem taxes because of a bump in assessed value. The value increase must be caused either by a recent (but pre-policy) improvement built on the land or change of use or sale of the land. A common example is a law that mandates that agricultural land be taxed at its value for farming while so used, but which allows a change in value and sometimes a recapture of tax if the land is no longer used for farming. This coverage does not include special assessments or charges due as a result of the property's development. Such assessments represent the cost of permanent improvements that add value to the insured property. The coverage also does not apply to an increase in the general tax caused by reassessment of the property based on the sale price to the insured, or any pre-policy event other than those that are listed.

Covered Risk 28 gives future coverage if "Your neighbor builds any structures after the policy date--other than boundary walls or fences--which encroach onto the Land."[569] Risk 28 will be limited by Exclusion 4.a, for matters "created, allowed, or agreed to by You." If that exclusion does not apply, the insurer will typically resolve a claim under this covered risk by taking some action to cause the neighbor to remove the encroaching structure, which is a trespass. That action typically begins with a letter to the neighbor informing him or her that the structure must be removed if the neighbor wishes to avoid an action for trespass. Note that this covered risk does not apply to boundary walls or fences. If the insured provides tardy notice to the insurer of a post-policy encroaching structure, or grants permission to the neighbor to erect the structure, this prejudices the insurer's ability to have it removed, and likely negates coverage as to that structure.

---

[568] Under 42 U.S.C. 3604(c), recorders were prohibited from recording race and ethnicity restrictions as of April 11, 1968. See Mayers v. Ridley, 465 F.2d 630 (D.C.Cir. 1968).

[569] In Wei v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2018 WL 1870400 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that only Covered Risk 18 was invoked, and not Covered Risk 28, when the neighbor sued the insureds to force the removal of the

Covered Risk 29 is the marketability of title assurance. It protects if "Your Title is unmarketable, which allows someone else to refuse to perform a contract to purchase the Land, lease it or make a Mortgage loan on it." This covered risk is fully discussed at §9.8.

Covered Risk 30 provides a limited creditors' rights coverage which is essentially the same as is found in the 2006 owner's policy. See §9.9.3 regarding that covered risk.

Covered Risk 31 insures against loss suffered if "[t]he residence with the address shown in Schedule A is not located on the land at the policy date." Schedule A has a place at which the insurer can insert the property's street address. This coverage is essentially the same as the CLTA 116 (location) endorsement. See §9.11.1 for a discussion of the location endorsement.

Covered Risk 32 assures against loss sustained by the insured if "[t]he map, if any, attached to this policy does not show the correct location of the land according to the public records." The elements of damage that may flow from this covered risk will vary, and are dependent on the facts.[570]

9.14.3 ALTA Short Form Residential Loan Policy

The ALTA promulgated its Short Form Residential Loan Policy to meet lender customers' demands that policies be issued more quickly. The policy is typically one page long. It incorporates by reference the Covered Risks, Exclusions and Conditions of the designated policy, certain endorsements, and even the legal description for the property.[571] This format allows the closer to insureds' encroaching garage.

---

[570] In De Paz v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 2856089 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the insureds bought a house on a lot created by the combination of two tax parcels. However, the deed included only one of the parcels, and the house straddled the lot line between the parcels. The tax map attached to the policy and incorporated into Covered Risk 29 (which is Covered Risk 32 under the 2010 version of the policy) showed the combined parcel. The other parcel was eventually sold for taxes. The insureds lost a sale of the property due to the issue, although the insurer offered to insure both parcels. The insurer later obtained a curative deed. The court overturned an arbitrator's finding that the insureds had suffered no loss because the insurer cleared title promptly and diligently, and denied the insurer's motion for summary judgment. It suggested that the measure of loss for this covered risk might be the amount of value that the property lost during the time title was being cleared.

[571] In United Security Bank v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 3561618 (M.D.Ga.) (unpublished), the insured lender argued that the insurer was precluded from clearing title as permitted under the terms of the 1992 ALTA Loan Policy it had issued, because, the bank said, "it never received these additional terms, and that 'there is a question of fact as to which documents actually constitute the insuring agreement between the parties.'" The court said the bank's "argument does give this Court pause--but just barely." It quoted the incorporation by reference language in the short form policies, and concluded that it means what it says: "It is obvious from the Short Form policies that these do not issue the policy at the closing table, or send it with the loan closing package immediately after closing. This policy pioneered the check-the-box method for adding ALTA endorsement coverages.

The policy also includes certain affirmative assurances that are not found in the 2006 loan policy but which are grafted from popular loan policy endorsements. The Short Form Residential Policy also includes the same survey coverage as found in the 2006 policies, which appears as Paragraph 5 of the Exceptions from Coverage and Affirmative Insurance page of the Short Form policy.

9.14.4 ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Junior Loan Policy

The ALTA promulgated the Residential Limited Coverage Junior Loan Policy in 1996. It was revised most recently in 2013. The policy is to be issued to the holders of mortgages on residential property that are not first liens. The Junior Loan Policy indemnifies the insured lender if the party names as Grantee in the policy is not the grantee on the last recorded deed or other instrument vesting title to the parcel. The policy does not insure that the borrower is vested in title, however. It also indemnifies the insured in the event the land described in the policy is not the same as that contained in the last recorded instrument, against a "Monetary Lien" has been recorded in the public records and not excepted in Schedule B, and against real estate taxes or assessments that are "a lien on the Title and that on Date of Policy appear in the official ad valorem tax records where the Land is located." The policy defines a Monetary Lien as a mortgage, deed of trust, judgment lien or other lien affecting the title.

The Junior Loan Policy does not contain the assurances found in other ALTA loan policies concerning the validity, enforceability and priority of the insured mortgage. In fact, Exclusion 1 emphasizes the lack of coverage by stating that the policy does not protect against "[a]ny invalidity, unenforceability or ineffectiveness of the Insured's Mortgage." One court noted that a Junior loan policy "only protects against loss caused by unknown senior liens, and does not guarantee the validity or enforceability of the loan itself."[572]

Thus, the Junior Loan Policy does not insure the insured's lien or that the borrower is vested in title. Principally, it indemnifies the insured against other liens on the same parcel. The Junior Loan Policy's Conditions are nearly identical to those of the 2006 ALTA loan policy.

9.14.5 ALTA United States of America Policy

The United States of America policy was promulgated by the ALTA for issuance to agencies of the federal government for land owned by the government. The most current version of this policy was adopted on December 3, 2012, replacing a form adopted in 1991. In most respects, the 2012 USA Policy is the same as earlier versions.

The USA Policy contains a Covered Risk 5 that is not found in other ALTA policies, which indemnifies the government, when it took title by condemnation, against loss or damage caused by represent the entire agreements; for one thing, almost all of the terms are missing, for another, the policies explicitly incorporate by reference the ALTA Loan Policy. Thus, the essential terms regarding the Defendant's duty to its insured when the insured makes a claim are missing."

---

[572] First Tennessee Bank, N.A. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 282 F.R.D. 423 (N.D.Ill. 2012).

the commitment's failure to recite all parties having an interest in the property:

> In instances where the insured acquires title to the land by condemnation, failure of the commitment for title insurance, as updated to the date of the filing of the lis pendens notice or the Declaration of Taking, to disclose the parties having an interest in the land as disclosed by the public records.

However, Exclusion 4 says the insurer will not protect the United States against "the invalidity or insufficiency of any condemnation proceeding instituted by the United States of America," except to the extent of the coverage provided by Covered Risk 5.

Covered Risk 6 indemnifies against loss caused by the avoidance in bankruptcy court of a prior conveyance or of the deed to the United States, if based on the failure to timely record the deed or because the deed fails "to impart notice of its existence to a purchaser for value or to a judgment or lien creditor."

Conditions 5(e) of the USA Policy says that the insurer has a duty to defend the United States, but that either the Attorney General will appear on behalf of the government, or must give permission to the insurer to retain someone else to represent the government. If the Attorney General "shall fail to authorize and permit the Company to defend, all liability of the Company with respect to that claim shall terminate… ." The Attorney General is to give the insurer "an opportunity to suggest defenses and actions as it shall recommend should be taken, and the Attorney General shall present the defenses and take the actions of which the Company shall advise the Attorney General in writing… ."

Similarly, Conditions 6 states that the Attorney General has the right to consent to any settlement with a third party, and his or her refusal to consent to a settlement limits the government's claim under the policy only to the extent that the insurer is harmed by the refusal to settle.

Conditions 8 of the USA Policy contains an apportionment provision as found in the 1992 ALTA Owner's policy. Conditions 13(c) states that the insurer is not subrogated to the rights held by the United States. However, if the United States pursues its rights against third parties concerning the subject matter of the claim and "the Company agrees in writing to reimburse the United States for all costs, attorneys' fees and expenses," the insurer is paid first from any recovery. Finally, Conditions 14 states that "arbitrable matters shall be arbitrated only when agreed to by both the Company and the Insured." In other words, there is no mandatory arbitration provision, as is found in most other policies.

9.14.6 ALTA Limited Pre-Foreclosure Policy

ALTA adopted a new policy form on December 3, 2012, intended for lenders seeking to foreclose on mortgages or deeds of trust, known as the ALTA Limited Pre-Foreclosure Policy. Texas has also adopted a Pre-Foreclosure Policy, as policy form T-98.

The Covered Risks of the policy are very limited, and are different from those found in other policy forms, reflecting the limited purpose of the policy. The policy indemnifies the insured against loss suffered as a result of various matters that first affect the property after the date of the recording of the mortgage, except to the extent that Schedule B negates coverage for those matters. The policy indemnifies against a post-mortgage-recording instrument "purporting to change or evidencing a change in the ownership of the Title," creating "a right or interest affecting the Title," various kinds of liens, notices of judicial proceedings, bankruptcy notices under 11 U.S.C. § 549(c), or notices of condemnation. The policy also protects against a judgment or federal tax lien that affects the title and was recorded against the mortgagor prior to the recording of the mortgage, unless excepted in Schedule B. It also protects against ad valorem taxes and assessments that have been imposed and which are due and payable as of the Date of Policy.

These limited Covered Risks pick up matters that are not covered by the loan policy issued to the lender at the time its mortgage was recorded. The coverages of the two policies should thus dovetail, so that any loss payable due to a defect, lien or encumbrance will be covered under one or the other of the two policies, but not both.

The Pre-Foreclosure Policy is designed to be issued when the loan is in default and the lender is contemplating foreclosure or the acceptance of a deed in lieu of foreclosure. No commitment is issued in advance of the issuance of the policy. It may be amended to cover the date on which the lender acquires title by an endorsement.

The Limited Pre-Foreclosure Policy indemnifies only against liens and defects discoverable in a search and examination of title. Losses payable under the policy are thus limited to matters that were discoverable but not excepted. See Chapter 3 for a discussion of the resolution of covered claims.

9.14.7 ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy

ALTA adopted the Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy on October 13, 2001, and has modified the policy several times, most recently on April 2, 2015. ALTA decertified this policy form on June 9, 2016, effective ALTA has also adopted a Short Form Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy, revised most recently on April 2, 2015. As the name implies, the Short Form policy has the same terms, but incorporates by reference in the same manner as is done in the ALTA Short Form Residential Loan Policy, discussed at §9.14.3.

The Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy contains 28 Covered Risks. It splices together the Covered Risks found in the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy with some of the coverages in the Homeowner's Policy. See the discussion of the Loan Policy Covered Risks in §9.10 and the Homeowner's Policy Covered Risks, in §9.14.2. The policy contains two interesting exclusions that seem to have been inspired by the new technique of extracting oil by fracturing. Exclusion 10 negates coverage for "[c]ontamination, explosion, fire, flooding, vibration, fracturing, earthquake, or subsidence." Exclusion 11 negates coverage for "[n]egligence by a person or an Entity exercising a right to extract or develop minerals, water, or any other substances." The Conditions are the same as those found in the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy.

10 Construction Liens

In most states, a party that provides labor, services or material that becomes part of an improvement to real estate is entitled to record or file a lien against the property if not paid for the work, in recognition that the property has been increased in value as a result. Many states' laws grant such liens, commonly called either construction liens[1] or mechanic's liens, retrospective priority to some date related to project commencement. These liens have historically been one of the greatest sources of loss to the land title industry.[2] This can be attributed to the combined facts that construction liens often involve very large sums of money, and the secret nature of the liens in many states. In secret-lien states, construction liens often defy the title insurer's best efforts at risk elimination.[3]

This chapter addresses two main topics. Section 10.1 deals with the policy provisions

---

[1] In this treatise, the term construction lien is used rather than mechanic's lien, for consistency and because it is more specific and descriptive of the nature of the lien right.

[2] See O'Connor, Mechanic's Lien Coverage: Have the Policy Changes Changed the Coverage?, in Title Insurance: The New Policy Changes, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook N4-4480 (1987), at p. 14. The significant mechanic lien losses suffered in the early 1970s are recounted in John E. Jensen, Accounting Procedure Slaying the IBNR Monster, Title News, Volume 60, Number 4 (April 1981), p. 6. See also, Ray E. Sweat, Mechanics' and Materialmen's Lien Coverage, in Title News, Volume 53, Number 1 (January 1974), p. 24, which includes a very good summary of the mechanic's lien laws in all 50 states, a summary of case law up to that point, and a thorough description of mechanic lien coverage as found in the New York Board of Title Underwriters Form policy, and the 1946, 1960, 1962, 1969 and 1970 ALTA loan policy forms. Mr. Sweat was the longtime chief underwriting counsel for Pioneer National Title Insurance Company. That article is followed by the comments of Irving Morgenroth, then chief counsel for Commonwealth Land Title, on the same subject of construction loans and mechanic lien policy coverage. These articles can be retrieved by ALTA members from the Title News archives at alta.org.

[3] The enormous risks imposed by construction liens are neither fated nor immutable, however. Insurers interested in curtailing losses should consider a serious effort at changing existing law. Construction liens are creatures of statutes, not of the common law. The laws vary in the extreme, and so does loss experience. Missouri gives almost no protection to lenders (or owners), while Wisconsin gives automatic, blanket priority to almost all classes of lenders. Michigan thoroughly overhauled its law in the 1980's, with a very balanced and rational result.

concerning construction liens and construction loan disbursement. Section 10.2 addresses construction loan escrows and disbursing, as performed by title companies.

10.1 Construction Lien Policy Coverage

The loan policy contains a series of provisions which fit together to establish the scope of this coverage. The construction lien provisions of the policy have been much discussed by scholars.[4] The provisions concerning construction liens that are found in the ALTA Loan policies are the following:

1. Covered Risk 2, which indemnifies the insured against loss caused by "[a]ny defect in or lien or encumbrance on the Title."

2. A Covered Risk indemnifies the insured lender against a construction lien that obtains priority over the insured mortgage, whether recorded before of after the date of policy, if the lien is for work contracted for or commenced before the policy date, or after policy date if the work is financed at least in part by loan funds secured by the insured mortgage.[5]

3. These Covered Risks may be negated by a Schedule B exception for construction

[4] Construction lien liability is also analyzed in Jones & Maessell, Mechanic's Lien Title Insurance Coverage for Construction Projects, 16 Real Estate L.J. 291 (1988); Urban, Future Advances and Title Insurance Coverage, 15 Wake Forest L. Rev. 329 (1979); Jordan, Mechanics' Lien Coverage, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook (1988); Bohan, Mechanics' Lien Coverage in Title Insurance Policies, in Attorneys' Role in Title Insurance, A.B.A. Real Property & Trust Section, (1990); Sweat, Obligatory Advances: Mechanics' Liens and the 1987 Loan Policy, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook (1988); O'Connor, Mechanic's Lien Coverage: Have the Policy Changes Changed the Coverage?, in Title Insurance: The New Policy Changes, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook N4-4480 (1987); J. Patterson, Title Insurance and Mechanic's Liens, 5 A.B.A. Real Property Financing Newsletter 20 (1985); Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 6.12, pp. 6-78 to -83.

[5] Covered Risk 11 of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy indemnifies the insured against loss due to "[t]he lack of priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage upon the Title (a) as security for each and every advance of proceeds of the loan secured by the Insured Mortgage over any statutory lien for services, labor, or material arising from construction of an improvement or work related to the Land when the improvement or work is either (i) contracted for or commenced on or before Date of Policy; or (ii) contracted for, commenced, or continued after Date of Policy if the construction is financed, in whole or in part, by proceeds of the loan secured by the Insured Mortgage that the Insured has advanced or is obligated on Date of Policy to advance… ." A very similar provision is found in Covered Risk 7 of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy. Although the phrase "statutory lien for services, labor, or material arising from construction of an improvement" could be reasonably understood to refer only to construction or mechanic's liens, several insureds have asserted that the phrase is broader. In BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 4647894 (D. Utah 2015) (unpublished), the court rejected the insured's argument that the phrase "statutory lien" could include taxes imposed under the auspices of a special taxing district. In 380 Kings Highway, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 6182117 (N.Y.Sup.), 2011 N.Y. Slip Op. 52223(U) (unpublished), a New York form of endorsement that uses the same phrasing as Covered Risk 11 concerning "statutory liens" was found to affirmatively protect against a municipal emergency repair lien for repairs done to a building. The 380 Kings Highway decision ignored substantial evidence that the endorsement was not intended to encompass municipal repair liens, including Cole v. Home Title Guar. Co., 29 A.D.2d 552, 285 N.Y.S.2d 914 (N.Y.App.Div. 1967), which said that a tax assessment is not a construction lien and does not fall under the "statutory lien" coverage of the policy.

liens and inchoate construction lien rights.[6]

4. Liens attaching after the date of policy may be excluded from coverage under the post-policy exclusion.[7]

5. Certain actions by the insured lender may be deemed to have been created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by it, thus negating construction lien coverage.[8]

6. Construction liens arising from projects contracted for or commenced after the date of policy and not financed in whole or in part by the insured mortgage loan are excluded.[9]

7. Some versions of the ALTA Loan policy do not insure the priority of construction advances made after the date of policy for which the lender was not obligated on date of policy.[10]

8. The policy may contain one or more endorsements modifying the policy's terms as

---

[6] The ALTA-promulgated construction lien exception removes coverage as to "[a]ny lien or right to a lien, for services, labor, or material heretofore or hereafter furnished, imposed by law and not shown by the public records."

[7] Exclusion 3(d) of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy removes from coverage "[d]efects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters: … (d) attaching or created subsequent to Date of Policy (however, this does not modify or limit the coverage provided under Covered Risk 11, 13, or 14)… .

[8] Exclusion 3(a) of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy removes from coverage "[d]efects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters: … (a) created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the Insured Claimant… ." See §10.1.4 for a discussion of the application of this exclusion.

[9] The 1992 ALTA Loan policy contained Exclusion 6, for "[a]ny statutory lien for services, labor or materials (or the claim of priority of any statutory lien for services, labor or materials over the lien of the insured mortgage) arising from an improvement or work related to the land which is contracted for and commenced subsequent to Date of Policy and is not financed in whole or in part by proceeds of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage which at Date of Policy the insured has advanced or is obligated to advance." The 2006 ALTA Loan policy does not contain a corresponding exclusion.

[10] Conditions & Stipulations ¶ 8(d), which appeared in the 1987, 1990 and 1992 versions of the ALTA Loan policy, provided: "The Company shall not be liable for: ... (ii) construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy, except construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the land which at Date of Policy were secured by the insured mortgage and which the insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at and after Date of Policy." This provision is discussed at §10.1.4. The 2006 ALTA Loan policy does not contain a corresponding provision, but rather in the definition of "Indebtedness" it includes "(iii) the construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the Land or related to the Land that the Insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at Date of Policy and at the date of the advance… ."

stated above.[11]

The provisions in the loan policy concerning construction lien coverage were rewritten beginning with the 1987 version of the policy to make them more cohesive.[12]

The ALTA owner's policies contain several provisions which have a bearing on coverage: Covered Risk 2, which indemnifies against "defects, liens or encumbrances" on title; Covered Title Risk 8 of the Residential policy, which specifically applies to construction liens;[13] Exclusion 3(a), for matters "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to;" Exclusion 3(d), for matters attaching after the date of policy; and the standard mechanic lien exception.

Because these policy provisions work in concert, the discussion of construction lien coverage below is by fact situation rather than by policy provision.

10.1.1 Liens Filed After Policy Date For Work Done Before Policy Date

Most state construction lien laws adopt the relation-back principle. In such states, construction liens take their priority not from the date of filing or recording but some earlier date tied to work done on the construction project, such as the first actual physical improvement on the land or the first date of work by the lien claimant. This relation-back principle is one reason construction liens are such a large risk to the title insurer.

The covered risks of both owner's and loan ALTA policies protect against inchoate lien rights that, if perfected by filing, will take their priority from before the date of policy. Covered Risk 2 of the 2006 ALTA Owner's policy indemnifies against liens rights. Coverage under the owner's policy is further analyzed at §10.1.2. The Residential policy specifically assures against loss resulting from relation-back construction liens under Covered Title Risk 8, which protects the insured if "[t]here are liens on your title, arising now or later, for labor and material furnished before the Policy Date—unless you agreed to pay for the labor and material." This coverage is in keeping with the design of the Residential policy, which identifies numerous particular risks rather than classes of risks. However, the Residential policy coverage is no broader than that found in the standard form ALTA policy. See §9.14.1 regarding the coverages under the Residential policy form and §9.14.2 regarding the Homeowner's policy.

The ALTA Loan policies contain two construction lien coverages, which are Covered Risks 11(a)(i) and (ii) of the 2006 policy and 7(a) and 7(b) of the 1992 policy. The 2006 Covered Risks are:

11. The lack of priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage upon the Title

---

[11] See §10.1.4 for a discussion of the so-called pending disbursement endorsement.

[12] A particularly lucid analysis of this coverage as found in the 1970 and later policies is found in O'Connor, Mechanic's Lien Coverage: Have the Policy Changes Changed the Coverage?, in Title Insurance: The New Policy Changes, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook N4-4480 (1987).

[13] "8. There are liens on your title, arising now or later, for labor and material furnished before the Policy Date -- unless you agreed to pay for the labor and material."

(a) as security for each and every advance of proceeds of the loan secured by the Insured Mortgage over any statutory lien for services, labor, or material arising from construction of an improvement or work related to the Land when the improvement or work is either

(i) contracted for or commenced on or before Date of Policy; or

(ii) contracted for, commenced, or continued after Date of Policy if the construction is financed, in whole or in part, by proceeds of the loan secured by the Insured Mortgage that the Insured has advanced or is obligated on Date of Policy to advance… .

The 1992 policy had a mirroring Exclusion 6, which is not found in the 2006 policy, perhaps because the post-policy exclusion was deemed sufficient.[14]

Covered Risk 11(a)(i) of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy is invoked if a lien is filed after the date of policy for work contracted for or started before the policy date, and the lien claimant asserts priority over the insured mortgage. The covered risk protects against liens filed after the date of policy. It would be superfluous if it merely referred to liens that had already been filed on the policy date, since liens generally are protected against by other covered risks. Covered Risk 11(a)(ii) states that, if the work was contracted for, or started or continued, after the date of policy, there is coverage only if the insured lender finances the work in part or in full.

The combination of these coverages has been deemed to provide a lender with full protection against any lien claimant that asserts priority over the insured mortgage, if the loan money is used to fund the construction project.[15] However, when the loan secured by the insured mortgage did not fund the improvement, the court in Pullum Window Corp. v. Randy M. Deprez Custom Builder, Inc.[16] found that there was no coverage for liens for work performed after the date of policy. That

---

[14] Exclusion 6 of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy read: "Any statutory lien for services, labor or materials (or the claim of priority of any statutory lien for services, labor or materials over the lien of the insured mortgage) arising from an improvement or work related to the land which is contracted for and commenced subsequent to Date of Policy and is not financed in whole or in part by proceeds of the indebtedness secured by the insured mortgage which at Date of Policy the insured has advanced or is obligated to advance."

[15] The policy's construction lien coverage "unambiguously contemplates coverage if such [inchoate] liens attain priority over the deed of trust and a loss results." Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. 522, 531 (W.D.Tenn. 1993).

[16] 2010 WL 5175404 (Mich.App.) (unpublished). In that case, liens were filed for work done two years after the purchase money mortgage was recorded. The lender paid off the liens after the insurer refused to do so. The insured produced a building permit report showing that the liens might have related back to a commencement date for the project before the policy date. The court said this was "merely a smokescreen." It found the liens not to be covered by Covered Risk 7(a) of the 1992 policy, and its companion Exclusion 6. Even if the liens related back to a pre-policy date, the court said, "for purposes of negotiated title insurance coverage at issue in this case, we decline to overlay the relation back principle of the Construction Lien Act on the parties' insurance contract." The court also noted that, under Michigan's lien law, a lender can salvage "broken" priority by accurate disbursement, so that its loss of priority would not be automatic. Pullum was distinguished in Lower Town Project, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 3319710 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), which held that there was policy coverage for construction liens that clearly related back to a first actual physical improvement date prior to the policy date.

court said that the mere hypothesis that the lien claimants could assert that their liens related back to a date prior to the policy date did not invoke coverage, particularly when the lender settled the liens before waging a priority fight.

It can be difficult to establish whether or not the loan policy covered risk is invoked when the lender did not fund the improvement. The wording of the covered risk strongly suggests that the proper analysis is based on the start date for "the improvement," not the individual lien claimant's first work.

The essence of the relation-back doctrine in many states is that all construction lien claims relate back to the visible commencement of the improvement. However, in most states, the lien claimant is not required to state on the filed lien what date he believes to have been the date of visible commencement for the improvement. In most such states, the lien claimant's own first date of work, which usually is recited on the lien, is not the relation-back date. The visible commencement date usually cannot be determined until there is lien priority litigation.

Therefore, it is industry custom for the title insurer to adopt a "watchful waiting" posture in most cases when the insured submits the claim after a lien has been filed but before the priority issue has been joined in litigation. See §3.1 regarding watchful waiting. The title insurer will typically caution the lender that any resolution of the lien claim will invoke the voluntary settlement provision unless the insurer grants its prior written consent, voiding coverage. See § 2.14 regarding the voluntary settlement provision. If the lender does settle the liens without getting a priority determination, its policy rights are typically negated, as in the Pullum Window Corp. case discussed above.

The "standard" construction lien exception removes the coverage provided by the Covered Risks. The most commonly-used exception negates coverage for "[a]ny lien, or right to a lien, for services, labor, or material heretofore or hereafter furnished, imposed by law and not shown by the public records." The "right to a lien" phrase refers to the inchoate lien right. The word "heretofore" makes it clear that the exception applies to work already done on the date of policy. The phrase "and not shown by the public records" further makes plain that the exception applies to inchoate lien rights existing on date of policy, for work already done, but for which no lien has yet been filed. The exception in the form recited above does not apply to liens already filed on the date of policy.

10.1.2 Lien Coverage On Owner's Policies

In all or most states, the risk in removing the construction lien exception from the owner's policy is much greater than on a loan policy. The insured owner incurs a loss immediately when a lien is recorded. See §3.2.4 regarding the cases discussing the owner's "immediately diminished" title versus the lender's obligation to also show that the loan is in default and that the lender's security has been impaired by the lien. The only defenses ordinarily available to an owner relate to the validity or amount of the lien. By comparison, the loan policy insures only that the lender's lien has priority over the construction lien. Thus, in addition to any defenses as to the construction lien's validity, the insurer may fully protect an insured lender by establishing that the mortgage has priority over the construction lien. In many situations, a construction lien which causes a loss to the owner insured does not result in a corresponding loss to the insured lender.

Because of the difference in risk, it is not uncommon for an insurer to give protection against construction liens to a lender but not the owner in the same transaction. The insurer has no duty to notify the purchaser of the difference in coverage between the two policies. Absent active misrepresentation, the purchaser has no cause of action against the insurer for breach of contract, fraud, or similar cause of action, for not so advising the owner.[17] Also, an owner is not a beneficiary of construction lien coverage given only to the lender,[18] as is fully discussed at §7.7.

In addition, when construction lien coverage is given to an owner while a construction project is pending, liens may arise as a result of the insured's refusal to pay a lien claimant.[19] Exclusion 3(a) is often an appropriate defense if it was within the insured's power to avoid the filing of the lien, or if the lien resulted from a dispute between the insured and the lien claimant. See §11.2.9 concerning Exclusion 3(a) and owner's policies.

10.1.3 Liens For Work Done After Policy Date

FORM 43, Appendix A
Construction lien filed after policy date

The owner's policy does not protect against any construction liens for work done after the date of policy. See §11.5 regarding Exclusion 3(d), for post-policy matters.

Exclusion 6 of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy removed coverage for liens filed for work contracted for or commenced after date of policy and not fully or partially funded by the insured mortgage loan. Thus, generally, the policies do not protect against liens for work done after the date of policy.[20]

---

[17] See Clements v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 612 So.2d 1172 (Ala. 1992). The dissent in Clements would have required the insurer to advise the owners that their policy excepted construction liens while the loan policy did not. The dissent seemed to think that the insurer sought to benefit from the purchaser's ignorance: "At the closing here, everybody in the room, except the Clementses, knew that there were outstanding debts owed by the seller to subcontractors, and knew that the Clementses would be liable for liens filed against the property after the closing, but failed to tell them that the policy about to be issued would exclude coverage for those very liens. Mississippi Valley and its attorney agent had a duty to disclose those facts." 612 So.2d at 1177. The majority, however, found no support for this view.

[18] See, for example, Walters v. Marler, 83 Cal.App.3d 1, 147 Cal.Rptr. 655 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1978) and Pippin v. Kern-Ward Bldg. Co., 8 Ohio App.3d 196, 456 N.E.2d 1235 (8th Dist. 1982). However, in Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017), the court held that the borrower was a third party beneficiary of KeyBank's escrow instructions, distinguishing Pippin on a pretext.

[19] However, note that, in Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017), the court ignored an owner's policy construction lien exception, Exclusion 3(a) and the post-policy exclusion to hold that the policy might cover construction liens filed after the policy date after the owner insured refused to pay the contractors. There is a strong dissenting opinion.

[20] Wheeler v. Real-Estate Title Ins. & Trust Co. of Philadelphia, 160 Pa. 408, 28 A. 849 (1894). In a case involving very unusual facts, a mortgage was found to have priority over later-filed construction liens, but the court found the insurer liable for payment of the liens. In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Honolulu Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 900 F.2d 159 (9th Cir. 1990), the insured mortgage was a lien on a lessee's interest. The lease provided that the lessor could terminate the lease and wipe out the mortgage if construction liens were filed and foreclosed. The right to terminate the lease because of the liens was found sufficient to create a duty of the insurer to pay the liens, despite the fact that the mortgage was superior to the liens. The Honolulu Federal decision should be limited to its unique facts. In Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017), the court ignored an owner's policy

10.1.4 Pending Disbursement Endorsement And Disbursing Agreement Limitations

In certain jurisdictions, it is common for an insurer to provide construction lien coverage in connection with or dependent on a construction loan disbursement escrow. See §10.2 regarding construction loan disbursement escrows. It is also common in many jurisdictions for the title insurance policy to contain a pending disbursement clause, which is inserted in Schedule B, and which states that coverage is limited by the terms of an endorsement to be issued with each loan advance, which the industry terms a pending disbursement endorsement.[21] It is typical to have both a disbursing escrow agreement and pending disbursement endorsements on a project. In such cases, the insurer reviews draw requests, collects lien waivers, disburses the lender's funds, and increases the policy coverage against construction liens by a pending disbursement endorsement.[22]

In giving construction lien coverage by pending disbursement endorsements, the insurer limits its liability for construction liens to lien rights that have accrued on or before the date of the endorsement, and also limits the amount of its liability, either for construction liens or for all policy purposes, to the amount stated in the endorsement.[23] By so limiting the construction lien coverage, the insurer agrees to defend against only those liens that result from work done before the date of the last endorsement. If the pending disbursement endorsement extends the date of policy as to matters other than construction liens, the insurer may except from coverage all matters that first appear of record or come to the insurer's notice after the previous endorsement date. All such matters become excepted from the coverage of the policy, as so modified.[24] construction lien exception, Exclusion 3(a) and the post-policy exclusion to hold that the policy might cover construction liens filed after the policy date after the owner insured refused to pay the contractors. There is a strong dissenting opinion.

---

[21] A reference to a pending disbursement endorsement in a commitment gives evidence that the policy will contain the endorsement. First American Title Ins. Co. v. Seaboard Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 227 Va. 379, 315 S.E.2d 842 (1984). In First Federal Sav. & Loan Assn. of Beaumont v. Stewart Title Co., 732 S.W.2d 98 (Tex.App. 1987), two policies were to be issued. One commitment contained a reference to a pending disbursement endorsement and the other did not. The court found that there was a question of fact as to whether or not there was a difference in coverage under the two forms of policy.

[22] There is no industry standard pending disbursement endorsement, in large part because of the wide variation in state construction lien laws.

[23] The pending disbursement endorsement typically would explicitly alter policy coverage when issued under a 1992 ALTA Loan policy or other policy forms that contained Conditions & Stipulations 8(d), which imposed a limitation on coverage for post-policy construction advances.

[24] In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Bank of New York, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8355 (S.D.N.Y.), No. 95-7514, 12/13/95 (2nd Cir. N.Y.) (unpublished), a lawsuit was filed that attacked the validity of the leasehold estate to which the construction mortgage attached. The insurer made exception for the lawsuit in its pending disbursement endorsement, which the bank considered a breach of contract. The court found, however, that the bank misunderstood the limitations of the pending disbursement endorsement: "The … "pending disbursement" provision … insures all covered risks up to the amount already disbursed by the Bank; however, if a "defect in, or objection to, title" should arise, Lawyers Title may cap its coverage for that risk at the amount already paid out. The incremental nature of the insurance allows the insurer to

When the insurer attaches a pending disbursement endorsement to the policy or commitment, the lender must make any advances under the construction loan according to the terms of that endorsement to obtain extended coverage in future endorsements. Thus, when the commitment attached a pending disbursement clause and called for waivers and contractor's statements, but the requirements were not met and subsequent draws were not presented to the insurer, there was no coverage for liens filed for work done after date of policy.[25]

The pending disbursement endorsement system alters the provisions of Conditions & Stipulations 8(d)(ii) of the 1992 ALTA Loan policy, which states that the insurer is not liable for construction loan advances made after the date of policy except construction loan advances which finance improvements to the land which the lender was obligated to make on date of policy. Most pending disbursement endorsements issued in conjunction with the 1992 ALTA Loan policy specifically amended that provision. The 2006 ALTA Loan policy does not contain a corresponding provision.

Very often, the endorsement is written to extend the date of policy coverage through the date of disbursement, even though the last work paid for by the advance was done days or weeks prior to the disbursement date. This creates a gap period for which the lender receives coverage against lien rights for work for which the lender has not paid. The explicit or implicit agreement in disbursing escrows is that the lender will continue to advance money to pay for gap work.

Historically, the terms of pending disbursement endorsements varied considerably from company to company and state to state, due in large part to the variations in state law concerning the priority of construction liens versus mortgages under the relation-back doctrine. In February of 2011, American Land Title Association adopted several pending disbursement endorsements, with the intent of standardizing the language of such endorsements. The ALTA endorsements are the 32.0-06, 32.1-06, 32.2-06 and 33.0-06. The endorsements were modified in 2013. The names of the endorsements were changed in 2018.

The ALTA 32 endorsement is issued with the policy. Paragraph 1 of the endorsement deletes Covered Risk 11(a), the standard construction lien coverage. Paragraph 2 provides several definitions for terms used in the endorsement. In this discussion of the endorsements, the terms defined in paragraph 2 are capitalized for clarity's sake. Paragraph 3 states the coverage that replaces Covered Risk 11(a). Paragraph 4 recites limitations on the endorsement's coverage.

The ALTA 33 endorsement is issued with each subsequent advance under the construction loan. There is only one version of the ALTA 33 endorsement. Each time an ALTA 33 endorsement is issued, the Date of Coverage as to Mechanic's Liens is extended. However, the Date of Policy is limit its exposure for any sums paid out by the Bank after a defect or objection arises." The bank also argued that the pending disbursement endorsement's own terms did not allow the insurer to except the lawsuit, because the endorsement provided that the insurer could except any matter which was a "defect in, or objection to, title." The bank argued that the lawsuit was neither a defect nor an objection, under New York law on title insurance and marketability of title. The court found, however, that the cases and policy provisions cited do "not alter the District Court's plain-meaning reading of the 'pending disbursements' clause to mean that the filing of a lawsuit is an 'objection' that justifies the insurer in declining to provide coverage for any disbursements made after the objection is lodged."

---

[25] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Seaboard Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 227 Va. 379, 315 S.E.2d 842 (1984).

not altered, and no other coverage is extended forward by the ALTA 33 endorsement. The ALTA 32 endorsement supplies the defined term Date of Coverage in order to distinguish between that date and the Date of Policy.

It is necessary to understand the defined terms in order to understand the coverages of the ALTA 32 endorsement. The Date of Coverage is the later of the policy date or the date of a subsequently-issued ALTA 33 endorsement. A Construction Loan Advance is an advance made by the insured for construction purposes that becomes part of the debt secured by the insured mortgage. Mechanic's Lien is defined using the familiar phrase "any statutory lien or claim of lien, affecting the Title, that arises from services provided, labor performed, or materials or equipment furnished."

There are three versions of the ALTA 32 endorsement. All versions of the ALTA 32 endorsement provide three coverages. Paragraph 3(a) indemnifies the insured if the insured mortgage is found to be invalid or unenforceable as to a Construction Loan Advance made on or before the Date of Coverage. Paragraph 3(b) indemnifies the insured if a Construction Loan Advance made on or before the policy date lacks priority over any lien or encumbrance that existed on the policy date and that is not excepted in Schedule B.

Paragraph 3(c) provides the central construction lien priority coverage. It indemnifies the insured against the priority of certain Mechanic's Liens not filed in the Public Records on the Date of Coverage over the lien of the insured mortgage, as to specified Construction Loan Advances. The three variations in the ALTA 32 endorsement are necessary to modify the coverage in paragraph 3(c) to conform to the method that will be used to disburse the construction loan money. Each version of the ALTA 32 endorsement contains two limiting phrases. The variation in the endorsements is found in the wording of those limiting phrases.

In the ALTA 32.0-06 endorsement, the Mechanic's Lien priority coverage is limited as follows:

> … but only to the extent that the charges for the services, labor, materials or equipment for which the Mechanic's Lien is claimed were designated for payment in the documents supporting a Construction Loan Advance disbursed by or on behalf of the Insured on or before Date of Coverage.

This version of the endorsement is to be used when the insured lender reviews the draw requests, disburses the money itself, and makes payment to the general contractor and not to the subcontractors and suppliers.

In the ALTA 32.1-06 endorsement, the Mechanic's Lien priority coverage is limited as follows:

> … but only to the extent that direct payment to the Mechanic's Lien claimant for the charges for the services, labor, materials or equipment for which the Mechanic's Lien is claimed has been made by the Company or by the Insured with the Company's written approval.

This version of the endorsement is to be used when the title insurer reviews the draw requests, disburses the money on the lender's behalf, and makes payment to the subcontractors and suppliers.

It may also be used when the lender reviews the draw requests and disburses the money directly to the subcontractors and suppliers, but the insurer gives its written approval for the disbursements.

In the ALTA 32.2-06 endorsement, the Mechanic's Lien priority coverage is limited as follows:

> … but only to the extent that direct payment to the Mechanic's Lien claimant for the charges for the services, labor, materials or equipment for which the Mechanic's Lien is claimed has been made by the Insured or on the Insured's behalf on or before Date of Coverage.

This version of the endorsement is to be used when the insured lender reviews the draw requests, disburses the money itself, and makes payment directly to the subcontractors and suppliers.

Thus, some variant of the ALTA 32 endorsement may be used when the insured lender disburses the money itself, when the title insurer reviews the draws and disburses the money, when the general contractor is paid, and when payments are made directly to subcontractors and suppliers. See further discussion of direct payment to subs and suppliers in §10.2.2.

Each version of the ALTA 32 endorsement contains two other limitations, found in paragraph 4. Limitation 4(a) is the same in each version of the endorsement. It states that there is no coverage against a Mechanic's Lien that arises from services, labor, materials or equipment "furnished after Date of Coverage." This statement reiterates that the coverage provided by each ALTA 33 endorsement protects only against construction lien rights that had accrued as of the endorsement's Date of Coverage. This is a limitation common to all forms of pending disbursement endorsements.

The second limitation found in paragraph 4(b) is different in each of the three versions of the ALTA 32 endorsement. Again, each version is tailored to the disbursing method that will be used.

Paragraph 4(b) of the ALTA 32.0 endorsement says that the insurer will not indemnify against a Mechanic's Lien that arises from work that was performed but that was "not designated for payment in the documents supporting a Construction Loan Advance disbursed by or on behalf of the Insured on or before Date of Coverage." Paragraph 4(b) of the ALTA 32.1 endorsement says that the insurer will not indemnify against a Mechanic's Lien that arises from work performed "to the extent that the Mechanic's Lien claimant was not directly paid by the Company or by the Insured with the Company's written approval." Paragraph 4(b) of the ALTA 32.2 endorsement says that the insurer will not indemnify against a Mechanic's Lien that arises from work performed "to the extent that the Mechanic's Lien claimant was not directly paid by the Insured or on the Insured's behalf."

The ALTA 32.0 endorsement provides coverage to the insured against a Mechanic's Lien that is later filed for work that was performed before the Date of Coverage in an ALTA 33 endorsement, and which work was "designated for payment in the documents supporting a Construction Loan Advance" and for which the insured lender advanced payment. There is no coverage against a Mechanic's Lien, even if the work was performed before the endorsement's Date of Coverage, if the work for which the lien was filed was not "designated for payment in the documents supporting a Construction Loan Advance… ." There also is no coverage even if the work was performed before the Date of Coverage, and the work was designated for payment in the draw request, if the insured lender did not make a disbursement for that work. The ALTA 32.0 endorsement thus provides limited construction lien coverage. However, the ALTA 32.0 endorsement does protect the lender against one of the biggest risks in construction lending, that the general contractor receives payment from the lender but fails to pay the subcontractors and suppliers that it listed in its draw request as having performed the lienable work for which payment was sought.

The ALTA 32.1 endorsement is designed for use when direct payment is made to subcontractors and suppliers, and payment is made either by the insurer or the insured with the insurer's written approval. The 32.1 provides coverage to the insured against a Mechanic's Lien that is later filed for work that was performed before the Date of Coverage in the endorsement, but "only to the extent that direct payment to the Mechanic’s Lien claimant for the charges for the services, labor, materials or equipment for which the Mechanic’s Lien is claimed has been made by the Company or by the Insured with the Company's written approval." There is no coverage "to the extent that the Mechanic’s Lien claimant was not directly paid by the Company or by the Insured with the Company's written approval." In other words, for coverage to be invoked, the Mechanic's Lien must be for work performed before the endorsement's Date of Coverage; the work must have been performed by a contractor, subcontractor or supplier who was actually paid as part of that draw request; and the Mechanic's Lien must be for the same work for which the insurer made payment. There is no coverage for a Mechanic Lien filed by a party who did work before the date of the endorsement, if that party was not paid through the draw request for which the endorsement was issued. There also is no coverage against a Mechanic's Lien filed by a party that was paid with the draw request, even if the work was performed before the endorsement's Date of Coverage, if the work for which the lien was filed was not paid for through the draw request. The ALTA 32.1 endorsement thus provides limited construction lien coverage. However, the ALTA 32.1 endorsement does protect the lender against the risk that the insurer inaccurately disbursed the money. It also protects the insured if the lien claimant disputes the amount of the payment, the validity of any waiver it delivered, or asserts that its lien rights were not extinguished because it did not provide a lien waiver.

The ALTA 32.2 endorsement is designed for use when direct payment is made to subcontractors and suppliers, and payment is made by the insured lender. The 32.2 provides coverage to the insured against a Mechanic's Lien that is later filed for work that was performed before the Date of Coverage in the endorsement, but "but only to the extent that direct payment to the Mechanic’s Lien claimant for the charges for the services, labor, materials or equipment for which the Mechanic’s Lien is claimed has been made by the Insured or on the Insured’s behalf on or before Date of Coverage." There is no coverage "to the extent that the Mechanic’s Lien claimant was not directly paid by the Insured or on the Insured’s behalf." In other words, for coverage to be invoked, the Mechanic's Lien must be for work performed before the endorsement's Date of Coverage; the work must have been performed by a contractor, subcontractor or supplier who was actually paid as part of that draw request; and the Mechanic's Lien must be for the same work for which the lender made payment. There is no coverage for a Mechanic Lien filed by a party who did work before the date of the endorsement, if that party was not paid through the draw request for which the endorsement was issued. There also is no coverage against a Mechanic's Lien filed by a person who was paid with the draw request, even if the work was performed before the endorsement's Date of Coverage, if the work for which the lien was filed was not paid for through the draw request. The ALTA 32.2 endorsement thus provides limited construction lien coverage.

However, the ALTA 32.2 endorsement does protect the lender insured if the lien claimant disputes the amount of the payment, the validity of any waiver it delivered, or asserts that its lien rights were not extinguished because it did not provide a lien waiver.

The courts have interpreted pending disbursement endorsements a number of times. Several courts have held that the lender does not obtain policy coverage for liens filed for work done in the gap between the last work date for which the draw was submitted and the endorsement date. In Bankers Trust Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.,[26] the construction project was apparently short of money from the beginning. The shortage was made worse when the lender permitted the owner to use draw from the loan account for non-construction purposes. The lender eventually demanded that the owner make up the shortfall, which it failed to do. The lender declared a default, at which time there was a balance of $260,000 in the loan account. Liens of about $300,000 were then filed. The lender refused to use the loan balance to pay the liens. Instead, it demanded that the insurer pay them. The insurer refused, on the basis that it had only given coverage through the disbursement date because the lender had promised in the loan disbursement escrow agreement to continue to fund in subsequent draws. The court characterized the insurer's argument this way:

> Counsel for Transamerica argued that the contractual relationship between Transamerica and Bankers was clear, i.e., that Transamerica simply agreed to guarantee Bankers that any disbursements it made of loan funds advanced to it from Bankers would be paid on valid, proper invoices to those who performed work or services or supplied materials and that none of the disbursements would be made to other than bona fide claimants.[27]

The court agreed that the policy only covered liens for work done in the time period covered by the draw:

> Bankers characterizes the obligation of Transamerica under the disbursement agreement as a responsibility to pay the loan proceeds in such manner as would protect both the borrower and the plaintiff from mechanics' liens to the extent of the funds disbursed. That is accurate. Here, however, the difficulty is that the cost of the work performed was greater than the money made available for payment. Transamerica was obliged to protect against the possibility of plaintiff paying twice for the same work. The defendant did not assume any obligation to pay for this project itself if neither Bankers nor Breaks provided the necessary funds.[28]

Further, the court agreed that the disbursing escrow agreement "clearly contemplated that

---

[26] 594 F.2d 231 (10th Cir. 1979).

[27] Id. at 233 (emphasis added).

[28] Id. at 234 (appellate court quoting trial court with approval).

adequate funds were to be made available to Transamerica in order to satisfy claims,"[29] and that the insurer had relied on that promise. Thus, the lender was obligated to advance loan money to pay for liens arising from the "gap" period:

> In effect, it is claimed that by the issuance of a title insurance policy, Transamerica became a guarantor of payment for all work actually performed. That is more than the insurance contract calls for. Where, as here, work was performed and payment was not made up to the amount of the lender's loan commitment, the resulting mechanics' liens must be considered to have been created or suffered by the insured claimant and such liens are expressly excluded from coverage by the language of the title policy.[30]

Bankers Trust was relied on in the second case, Brown v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp.[31] In Brown, the disbursing escrow agreement required the insurer to endorse the policy through the date of each disbursement. On the ninth draw, the waivers and contractor statements were dated about two weeks prior to disbursement. The lender stopped funding after that draw, and liens were filed for work done in part during that gap period. The insurer refused to remove the liens, on the basis that the insured had "suffered" or "agreed to" them by halting funding. The court agreed, ruling that the insurer protected through the disbursement date in reliance on the lender's implicit promise to fund through that date with the next draw. The court reasoned:

> While CMIT admittedly was under no obligation to continue funding the project after the default, it seems clear that the parties contemplated that CMIT would provide adequate funds to pay for work completed prior to the default. To hold otherwise would give the insured an unwarranted windfall and would place the title insurer in the untenable position of guaranteeing payment of work for which loan funds were never advanced.[32]

Bankers Trust and Brown remain good law.[33] However, they have been distinguished in later

---

[29] 594 F.2d at 233.

[30] Id. at 234 (appellate court quoting trial court with approval) (emphasis added).

[31] 634 F.2d 1103 (8th Cir. 1980).

[32] Brown v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 634 F.2d 1103, 1110 (8th Cir. 1980).

[33] One article, Patterson, Title Insurance and Mechanic's Liens, 5 A.B.A. Real Property Financing Newsletter 20 (1985), criticized the decisions as imposing too great a limitation on coverage, opining that "if a lender must always disburse all its funds or have sufficient funds to pay all construction costs, then there is no need for insurance against prior liens because none will ever exist." However, the bulk of lien claims do not involve "gap" liens. They arise because of a host of other problems, including that a party is not shown on the contractor's statement or shown but no waivers obtained, or the waiver was forged or obtained by coercion.

cases, in which lien coverage was given without a corresponding disbursing escrow agreement.[34] These cases held that the Brown and Bankers Trust rule requiring that the lender continue funding was created by the terms of the construction escrow agreement, not the policy. Thus, the later cases found no implied duty to continue funding. For example, one court stated:

> The fact that committed funds under the loan agreement remained undisbursed has no bearing on the potential or actual lien losses under the title policy unless or until an actual or implied duty arises between the parties to the title policy to provide the funds. In Bankers Trust and Brown, this duty was impliedly created by the disbursement agreement. However, absent a contractual relationship ancillary to the insurance contract at issue, there was no implied duty between these parties that all committed loan funds must have been expended.[35]

In one later case, the parties had entered into a disbursing escrow agreement.[36] However, the court emphasized in that decision that the agreement stated that its terms did "not affect coverage under the title insurance policy." The court ruled that this phrase released the lender from the obligation to fully fund the construction loan.

In Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.,[37] the title company issued pending disbursement endorsements with each draw, but there was no separate disbursing agreement between lender and title company. The lender elected not to advance the money to pay Wilhelm, the former general contractor. Wilhelm sued to foreclose its $6 million mechanic's lien. Ticor refused to defend Home Federal. The district court ruled in Ticor's favor, based on Brown and Banker's Trust. On appeal, the Seventh Circuit found that the insurer had a duty to defend the lender in the mechanic's lien foreclosure action. Because it did not, the court held that it was estopped to deny coverage based on Exclusion 3(a). The court might have stopped there, but continued its analysis anyway. The court reversed the district court's ruling that Exclusion 3(a) barred the claim. It said the Banker's Trust ruling that the lender had suffered liens by breaching its agreement to fund the loan in full did not apply:

> In this case, there was no disbursement agreement, and it was Home Federal rather than Ticor that both secured lien waivers and disbursed the funds when due under the [34] American Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1993); Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. 522 (W.D. Tenn. 1993); Resolution Trust Corp. v. Ford Mall Associates, 819 F.Supp. 826 (D.Minn. 1991); Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Co., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 1995); and Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 695 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. (Ind.) 2012), reversing 2011 WL 4479080 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished).

---

[35] Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. at 528.

[36] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Co., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 1995).

[37] Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 695 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. (Ind.) 2012), reversing 2011 WL 4479080 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished).

> loan agreement. Unlike in Bankers Trust and Brown, nothing in the insurance policy or the course of dealings indicates that Home Federal was bound to disburse the entirety of its loan commitment to Altra even if Altra was in default.[38]

A short time after the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals issued the Home Federal decision, however, that court expressed strong reservations about a bright line test in which the insurer may assert Exclusion 3(a) only when it has entered into a separate loan disbursing agreement. In BB Syndication Services, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[39] the court held that a construction lender "created" or "suffered" mechanic's liens that piled on a project that began with no fixed budget, which the lender allowed to go further out of balance as work progressed, and on which the lender refused to disburse its entire loan amount. The title insurer and lender had entered into a loan disbursing agreement in BB Syndication, which distinguished the case from Home Federal based on the latter decision's own analysis. However, Justice Sykes noted that the liens piled on simply because the lender stopped funding without telling the contractors that it had done so:

> The liens at issue here relate to outstanding work that remained unpaid when BB Syndication cut off loan disbursements due to insufficient funds to complete the project. As such, the liens arose directly from BB Syndication's action as the insured lender, so coverage seems squarely foreclosed by Exclusion 3(a).

The court said that American Savings and its progeny wrongly ignore the fact that it is the lender, not the title insurer, who has the authority to make sure that the project is fully funded at the beginning, and to keep it in balance as construction progresses, and the lender also has the sole ability to inform contractors that it will not pay for work going forward. Together, the court recognized, these are the most common reasons why construction liens are filed, and thus the lender's decisions control the insurer's risk in giving lien coverage, as discussed further in §10.1.5.1. The court concluded that, given the lender's authority to control the construction lien risk, there is no sound basis for the Home Federal ruling that Exclusion 3(a) applies only when the lender also enters into a construction disbursing agreement:

> More fundamentally, placing decisive weight on the existence of a disbursement agreement produces anomalous results. Under Home Federal a title insurer that also acts as a disbursing agent would not have to cover liens arising from insufficient funds, whereas a title insurer (using the same standard-form policy) that does not act as a disbursing agent would have to cover them. The nondisbursing title insurer would thus be assuming a greater risk. But if a title company is both title insurer and disbursing agent, then it has more control over whether mechanics' liens will arise because it can ensure that loan funds are disbursed to the right people and in the proper amounts.

---

[38] 695 F.3d at 734.

[39] 780 F.3d 825 (7th Cir. (Wis.) 2015).

10.1.5 Unrestricted Lien Coverage

In many states, it is common for the title insurer to give a lender making a construction loan to obtain protection against construction liens that is not subject to the terms of pending disbursement endorsements, whether or not there is a disbursing escrow agreement. The circumstances vary widely, and change over time. In some jurisdictions, this coverage is afforded because the lien law says that a mortgage obtains priority over construction liens if it is recorded before the visible commencement of the improvement. In such states, if the lender records the mortgage after the first visible work, it is considered to have "broken" priority. Nonetheless, during times in which the real estate market is relatively healthy, a title insurer will sometimes give unrestricted lien coverage to a lender with broken priority. One court described how construction lien coverage was underwritten in Minnesota during a good real estate market:

> If work has already begun on a project, the title company must decide if it is nonetheless willing to guarantee priority. Such coverage is known as "early start" coverage, meaning that the insurer, fully aware that lien rights may have already been created, nevertheless agrees to indemnify the insured against any losses it may suffer as a result of the prior liens. A title company that agrees to cover an early start will normally protect itself against financial exposure by insisting on disbursing the loan proceeds in order to monitor the project, to ensure that the proper parties get paid and to remain fully informed on the condition of the financing and the progress on the project.[40]

The insurer sometimes gives this coverage based on the fact that it will have the ability to control the collection of lien waivers through a disbursing escrow agreement. In other cases, this "blanket" lien coverage is granted solely on the strength of an indemnity.[41] When unrestricted construction lien coverage is given, based on whatever rationale, reported decisions have admitted few limitations on the coverage given.[42] One court made this comment:

> The simple fact that is controlling in this case is that two sophisticated business entities entered into this contract—the title policy. It insured against losses due to unrecorded liens on this project. It did not exclude lien coverage until all loan funds were expended. It did not exclude liens that arose from work and materials for which loan funds had not already been advanced.[43]

[40] Resolution Trust Corp. v. Ford Mall Associates, 819 F.Supp. at 833, fn. 4.

[41] See American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. 1986).

[42] The courts rejected various arguments made by insurers to limit the lien coverage based on policy exclusions in the following decisions: American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1993); Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. 522 (W.D. Tenn. 1993); Resolution Trust Corp. v. Ford Mall Associates, 819 F.Supp. 826 (D.Minn. 1991); Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Co., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 1995); and Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 695 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. (Ind.) 2012), reversing 2011 WL 4479080 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished).

Courts have acknowledged little or no obligation of the lender, even when its disbursement practices caused the liens in full or in part, as one court admitted:

> … [T]he title company accepted the risk of unpaid labor and materialmen's liens. It did this for a fee, relying on the affidavits and guaranty [of the owner]. The fact that this risk has matured cannot now be avoided by the argument that the insured lender must accept additional losses on the loan due to exactly one of the contingencies for which the title policy was acquired—unpaid lien claimants. A smaller loss does not constitute a windfall profit… . The court agrees that the … policy placed the title company in the unenviable position of having to pay off lien claims that under different circumstances might well have been paid by the loan funds, but that is what their contract provides.[44]

Nonetheless, title insurers have consistently raised two coverage defenses, both based on Exclusion 3(a): that liens caused by a shortage in project funding were "created" or "suffered" by the lender, and that the lender will obtain an unearned windfall if the insurer is required to pay for improvements that should have been paid for with money the lender holds or held undisbursed in the loan account. These defenses are discussed in turn below.

10.1.5.1 Failure To Keep Project In Balance

Construction liens often arise because the combined equity and loan funds are not enough to pay for the whole project. The relative obligations of the lender and the escrowee to keep the project in balance are fully discussed at §10.2.3. Two modern decisions have held that, when construction liens arose because the lender failed to keep the project in balance, the lender "created" or "suffered" the risk, negating policy coverage. Earlier decisions either refused to employ this reasoning, or limited its application to situations in which the lender and title insurer entered into a disbursing agreement.

---

[43] Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. 522, 531 (W.D. Tenn. 1993).

[44] 840 F.Supp. at 528.

For many years, courts mostly rejected the project in balance argument. In American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[45] the insurer removed the construction lien exception based on an indemnity from the owners. The lender paid out its entire loan account. It then paid off lien claimants, sold the property and sued the insurer for the amount of the liens. The trial court held that the lender had created or suffered the lien claims because the lender retained "the 'business' risk that the developer would fail to obtain adequate financing in violation of the loan agreement and that material suppliers consequently would not be paid and would achieve prior liens is one that the lender typically bears."[46] The trial court relied on Brown v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp.[47] The Sixth Circuit reversed. Because American Savings had advanced all of its loan funds, unlike Brown, the court reasoned that the lender had fully performed its duties. The court said that the insurer, not the lender, was responsible for paying for work for which neither lender nor borrower had committed any funds. It reasoned:

> [A]llowing American to recover from its insurer would not make Lawyers Title the guarantor of work for which loan funds were committed but never advanced, but rather, the guarantor of work for which loan funds were never committed. ... In essence, the insurer would, among other things, be insuring against the risk that the developer would not fulfill its obligation to obtain sufficient additional financing. This is the type of risk that insurance policies typically cover, the risk that another party, beyond the insured's control would fail to perform its obligations with injury resulting to the insured.[48]

Similarly, in Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Co.,[49] the lender did various things to accommodate cost overruns, including foregoing some interest payments. Eventually, however, the project was halted and liens were filed. The lender and insurer each paid half of the liens, agreeing to adjudicate their rights later. The lender took title to the project and finished it. The insurer then sued to get back its half of the lien claims. As in American Savings, the district court held that the liens were caused by the lender's failure to keep the project in balance, invoking Exclusion 3(a). The Eighth Circuit reversed, refusing to find that the lender had caused the lien claims by not keeping the project in balance. The court emphasized that the lender had eventually paid out more than its original loan amount, and had made other loan concessions as a result of the overruns. In reliance on American Savings, the court found that the purpose of construction lien coverage was to cover liens for which the lender had not committed loan funds.

---

[45] 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1993).

[46] 793 F.2d at 785.

[47] 634 F.2d 1103 (8th Cir. 1980).

[48] 793 F.2d at 786.

[49] 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 1995).

> The insurer's attempt to interpret the language in the agreement broadly would mean the endorsement would provide no coverage unless the insured itself put up sufficient funds to complete the project. Since there would be no need for coverage under those circumstances ... this interpretation would effectively nullify the lien coverage secured by the endorsement.[50]

In the 2012 decision of Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.,[51] the insurer issued pending disbursement endorsements with each draw, but there was no separate disbursing agreement between lender and title company. The lender elected not to advance the money to pay Wilhelm, the former general contractor. Wilhelm sued to foreclose its $6 million mechanic's lien. The Seventh Circuit found that the insurer had a duty to defend the lender in the mechanic's lien foreclosure action. Because it did not, the court held that it was estopped to deny coverage based on Exclusion 3(a). It also held that the lender was not unjustly enriched even though Ticor was required to pay for the improvements the lender had refused to fund, because the lender did obtain endorsements but there was no disbursing agreement under which the lender had promised to keep funding the project.

However, the rationale of American Savings, Chicago Title v. RTC and Home Federal was thoroughly debunked in BB Syndication Services, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co.[52] In that decision by the Seventh Circuit, the court held that the construction lender "created" or "suffered" mechanic's liens due to the lack of a fixed budget, made worse when the lender allowed the project to go further out of balance as work progressed, and on which the lender refused to disburse the full loan amount. The court held that the lender has the power to make sure that the project is in balance before work begins, and to keep it that way as construction progresses:

> It was clear early on in the life of [this] project that cost overruns would put the loan out of balance. At that time BB Syndication had only disbursed $5 million in loan funding, yet it kept the spigot open, ultimately releasing more than $61 million in loan funds before declaring the project unfinishable and halting the flow of money. BB Syndication insists that its forbearance demonstrates good faith—a willingness to do everything possible to see the project through—so the fault for the liens cannot be laid at its feet. Perhaps. An alternative interpretation is that its poor business judgment precipitated the liens.
>
> Either way, BB Syndication's argument exposes a flaw in the reasoning of American Savings and Chicago Title. Contrary to the assumption underlying those decisions, construction lenders have significant ability to ensure that the projects they finance remain economically viable—both at the beginning when deciding whether to finance a project and how much money to commit, and also throughout construction. The contractual arrangements in this case are commonplace and demonstrate the lender's broad authority. As a condition to closing, BB Syndication required Trilogy to submit, for its approval, various documents that would allow it to assess the project's viability before closing the loan... .

[50] 53 F.3d at 907.

[51] Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 695 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. (Ind.) 2012), reversing 2011 WL 4479080 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished).

[52] 780 F.3d 825 (7th Cir. (Wis.) 2015).

The loan agreement also allowed BB Syndication to monitor the project throughout construction to ensure its continued viability. It could request financial reports from Trilogy and conduct monthly on-site inspections of the project. If at any point BB Syndication determined that the loan was out of balance, it could require Trilogy to supply a cash infusion. If the developer's available funds were insufficient to complete the project, BB Syndication could choose to cut off disbursements—or not. BB Syndication had the discretion to continue funding even a doomed project. ...

In short, at the first sign of trouble, BB Syndication could have used the threat of default to force the developer to supply additional funds. If Trilogy was unwilling or unable to do so, BB Syndication's losses would have been less than $5 million—and most likely zero—since the land alone was worth roughly $12 million. Instead, BB Syndication chose to continue funding the project. That was its prerogative, of course, but in the end this risky business decision resulted in $17 million in liens from unpaid work.

BB Syndication now looks to First American to cushion its losses, but this stretches title insurance too far. Finding coverage in this situation—where the insured lender has the sole discretion to either continue or cease funding a project that is or has become unfinishable—would raise a serious question of moral hazard. Most work on a construction project increases its value (and in turn the value of the lender's security interest), but if the title company has to cover the costs while the lender retains the benefit, then the lender obtains a windfall by shifting a business risk to the title insurer. ... Since the amount of unpaid work will depend on the timing of a doomed project's inevitable termination, lenders might strategically delay. That is exactly the type of problem that Exclusion 3(a) is there to prevent.

The line drawn in American Savings and Chicago Title—that Exclusion 3(a) does not apply if the insured lender has disbursed all of its loan proceeds—does not grapple with this hazard. Knowing that unpaid contractors' claims will be covered by title insurance once the loan proceeds run out may in some circumstances encourage lenders to continue to fund a project even after it becomes clear that it has no chance of succeeding.

A better interpretation is that Exclusion 3(a) excludes coverage for liens that arise as a result of insufficient funds. This interpretation makes the most sense of the respective roles of the insured lender and the title insurer in this context. Only the lender has the ability—and thus duty—to investigate and monitor the construction project's economic viability. When liens arise from insufficient funds, the insured lender has "created" them by failing to discover and prevent cost overruns—either at the beginning of the project or later. This interpretation also has the advantage of being a clear rule that parties can bargain around.[53]

BB Syndication correctly posits that a title insurer does not contract to pay for work for which no money was ever allocated, or improvements built after the lender has stopped making advances. BB Syndication also acknowledged in a footnote that the Seventh Circuit's own decision in Home Federal, issued just a few years earlier, was fundamentally flawed because it had found the existence of a disbursing agreement to be a necessary predicate for Exclusion 3(a) to apply.

In Captiva Lake Investments, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co.,[54] the court adopted the reasoning of BB Syndication and expanded on it, to hold that the insured lender suffered or created millions of dollars of mechanic's liens due to its faulty construction loan disbursing practices, reversing a ruling by the district court.

Captiva was the first decision applying Exclusion 3(a) based squarely on the premise that the lender can and ordinarily does exert much influence over the borrower during the course of a construction loan, and thus has the power to keep a project in balance. The Eighth Circuit admitted that the title insurer has no similar authority to keep a project in balance, even when there is a disbursing agreement between the lender and insurer. The court cited numerous authorities and learned treatises that explain these principles.[55] It also quoted from the loan documents for this project to establish the lender's contractual rights to require that the borrower keep the project in balance, which had been a condition to the lender's obligation to continue funding of draws. The court noted that, nonetheless, the Captiva project was not in balance when the loan was made, that the lender permitted the deficiency to grow as construction progressed, and that many liens were the result of contractors who continued to work for months after the bank had secretly halted disbursements. Also, the lender never advanced the full amount of the loan.

The Eighth Circuit applied the exclusion although there was no disbursing agreement between lender and title insurer, unlike the facts in BB Syndication. The Eighth Circuit said that the district court had construed Exclusion 3(a) too narrowly, as applying only if the lender "engaged in intentional misconduct or inequitable dealings... ." Thus, the trial court had abused its discretion "when it excluded evidence regarding Fidelity's Exclusion 3(a) defense." The court relied on its own prior decision in Brown v. St. Paul, to conclude as a matter of law that the exclusion barred coverage:

> We conclude that Exclusion 3(a) can apply under Missouri law even if the insured did not engage in intentional misconduct or inequitable dealings. ... In

---

[53] 780 F.3d at 834-836.

[54] 883 F.3d 1038 (8th Cir. (Mo.) 2018).

[55] The court cited, in particular, Michael F. Jones & Rebecca R. Messall, Mechanic's Lien Title Insurance Coverage for Construction Projects, 16 Real Estate L.J. 291 (1988). It also recited this quote from 1 Grant S. Nelson et al., Real Estate Finance Law § 12.1 (6th ed.), Westlaw: "A construction loan provides funds for the construction of improvements on land. The developer and the lender enter into a construction loan agreement, which sets forth the terms of the loan and "generally incorporates by reference the project's plans and specifications, includes a budget that the developer must follow, and specifies the project completion date."

> Brown, we held that the construction lender's cessation of disbursements following the developer's default under the construction loan agreement "created or suffered" the liens that consequently arose due to insufficient funds. 634 F.2d at 1110. "While [the lender] admittedly was under no obligation to continue funding the project after the default, it seems clear that the parties contemplated that [the lender] would provide adequate funds to pay for work completed prior to the default." Id. Requiring the insurer to indemnify the lender "would give the insured an unwarranted windfall and would place the title insurer in the untenable position of guaranteeing payment of work for which loan funds were never advanced." Id.

The court also said it believed that "the Missouri Supreme Court would adopt the well-reasoned analysis of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in BB Syndication Services" that "Exclusion 3(a) excludes coverage for liens that arise as a result of insufficient funds," as quoted above. The Eighth Circuit distinguished its own prior decision in Chicago Title v. RTC, which construed Minnesota rather than Missouri law.

Following Captiva, courts should no longer hold that Exclusion 3(a) can apply only when there was a disbursing agreement between the lender and title agent or insurer. Also, after Captiva and BB Syndication, no court should repeat the assertion of American Savings that the title insurer is "the guarantor of work for which loan funds were never committed."

10.1.5.2 Unjust Enrichment Or Windfall To Lender

In certain cases decided between 1979 and 2012, title insurers asserted that Exclusion 3(a) should prevent the lender from receiving a windfall by having the insurer pay for improvements, particularly if the lender refused to advance all of the loan money to pay for those same improvements. This argument was based on the valid premise that a construction lien is a lien, but one that has favored status because it represents the cost of the value added to the property by an improvement, and the lender gets that improvement for free when it forecloses.[56]

The windfall principle was accepted by the courts in Bankers Trust and Brown v. St. Paul.[57] In American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[58] the court twisted the principle, holding that an insured lender did not obtain a windfall unless it refused to pay out the full amount of its loan.

Two later decisions went even further, knocking down the American Savings principle that a lender must fully fund the loan in order not to receive a windfall. In Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v.

---

[56] Once a lender has foreclosed, the issue is no longer the relative priority of the liens. After foreclosure, the lender owns the property, and the insurer is being asked to pay for the improvements that the insured now owns. See Drilling Service Co. v. Baebler, 484 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1972). Every payment by the insurer to a construction lien claimant thus reduces the lender's cost in acquiring the project.

[57] Bankers Trust Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 594 F.2d 231 (10th Cir. 1979); Brown v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 634 F.2d 1103, 1110 (8th Cir. 1980).

[58] 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1993).

Resolution Trust Corp.,[59] the lender disbursed $8,028,000 of a $9,800,000 loan and then finished the project for an additional $502,000, making a total outlay of about $8,500,000. The liens in dispute totaled about $200,000. The court rejected the windfall argument because there was no disbursing agreement creating a contractual obligation to fund the entire loan. The windfall argument was also rejected in Resolution Trust Corp. v. Ford Mall Associates,[60] despite the fact that the lender did not advance the entire loan amount. The court again based its ruling on the fact that the lender had made no commitment to the insurer to advance all of the loan money, and had negotiated for full mechanic lien coverage in its policy.

In Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.,[61] the insurer issued pending disbursement endorsements with each draw, as in Brown, but there was no separate disbursing agreement between lender and title company as in Bankers Trust. The lender refused to pay the general contractor, which filed a $6 million mechanic's lien. The Seventh Circuit held that the lender was not unjustly enriched by making Ticor Title pay for the improvements the lender had refused to fund with the loan it had committed to make. The court used this rationale:

> Home Federal paid an extra premium for the mechanic's lien endorsement… . [The Wilhelm lien] would have … reduced the amount of its recovery from the proceeds of the foreclosure sale by $6 million. However dim Wilhelm's prospects of success, that was precisely what Home Federal had insured against in the mechanic's lien endorsement. … Bearing those costs is a risk against which Home Federal had already insured through its policy with Ticor by paying for the mechanic's lien endorsement. As we see the case, Home Federal was seeking only the peace of mind it had paid for, not a windfall.[62]

However, the rationale of Home Federal and the earlier decisions was found to be being fundamentally flawed in the later decision by the Seventh Circuit of BB Syndication Services, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[63] discussed above.

10.1.6 Measure Of Loss--Loan Policy

The loss resulting from a construction lien is measured in the same manner as other types of loan policy losses. A full discussion of the measure of loan policy losses is found at §3.2.4. Certain unusual fact situations warrant mention under this chapter, however.

Dueling mortgage and construction lien foreclosures can force the lender to spend money to

---

[59] 840 F.Supp. 522 (W.D. Tenn. 1993).

[60] 819 F.Supp. 826, 833 (D.Minn. 1991).

[61] Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 695 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. (Ind.) 2012), reversing 2011 WL 4479080 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished).

[62] 695 F.3d at 735.

[63] 780 F.3d 825 (7th Cir. (Wis.) 2015).

preserve its position. If the insurer is litigating the validity of the liens or otherwise clearing title, such expenses may be compensable. For example, a lender was found to have suffered a loss when it was forced to redeem the property from a superior construction lien claimant's foreclosure sale, in order to preserve the lien of the insured mortgage.[64] A second mortgagee suffered loss equal to the surplus from the first mortgagee's foreclosure sale, when that surplus was paid to intervening lien claimants.[65]

An insurer has the right to clear title by litigating the validity of the construction liens. See §3.4 for a complete discussion of the right to cure title. However, the lien claimant's foreclosure action can affect the insurer's effort to clear title.[66] There can be a tension between the lender's desire to complete or sell the unfinished project and the insurer's right to protect the insured's lien priority.[67]

10.1.7 Premature Or Voluntary Payment Of Liens By Insured Lender

As stated above, an insured lender does not prove a loss merely on showing that a prior construction lien exists. The lender must also establish that the loan is in default, and that the lender is undersecured as a result of the construction lien. A lender that pays a lien but is unable to show that the lien impaired its security has not proven a loss.[68] The insurer is not required to pay off liens on demand by the insured, or to permit the insured to do so.[69] Such a payment by the lender will ordinarily invoke the voluntary settlement provision, discussed at §2.14.

---

[64] Minnesota Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Drexel, 70 F. 194 (8th Cir. (Minn.) 1895).

[65] American-First Title & Trust Co. v. First Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n of Coffeyville, 415 P. 2d 930 (Okla. 1965).

[66] In Trigiani v. American Title Ins. Co., 392 Pa.Super 427, 573 A. 2d 230 (Pa.Super. 1990), a claimant's foreclosure sale was held while the insurer was attempting to cure title. The court found that the lender was not required to "throw good money after bad" to preserve its position by bidding at the sale.

[67] In The Tokai Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 125 F.3d 859 (Table), 1997 WL 632599 (9th Cir. (Cal.)) (unpublished), the insurer defended the lender against construction lien foreclosures under a reservation of rights. When the owner filed bankruptcy, the lender viewed its options as being to have the stay lifted and proceed with foreclosure, provide financing to complete the project, or to support a Section 363(f) sale by the trustee free of liens. The lender obtained appraisals of the unfinished project and elected to support a sale free and clear for a price that matched the appraised value. The buyer finished the project for $8 to $10 million less than the lender itself had estimated as the cost of completion. The lender then sued the insurer for the difference in value. It claimed that the coverage question raised by the reservation of rights had forced it to support a Section 363 sale rather than complete the structure or finance its completion. The court found that the lender decided to back the sale because the appraisals supported the sale price, rather than because of the coverage question. Therefore, the insurer was not liable to the lender for the claimed difference in value.

[68] Ring v. Home Title Guar. Co., 168 So.2d 580 (Fla.App. 1964).

[69] In Diversified Mortgage Investors v. U.S. Life Title Insurance Co. of New York, 544 F.2d 571 (2d Cir. 1976), a construction lender wished to settle with lien claimants before it made additional advances. It was denied an injunction prohibiting the insurer from raising the voluntary settlement defense against the lender if it settled.

10.2 Construction Loan Escrows

The second half of this chapter discusses the duties that the escrowee assumes when it disburses loan funds under a construction escrow.[70] General escrow principles are discussed in Chapter 13. As stated above, construction lien laws vary widely. As a result, the construction escrow does not exist everywhere. Such escrows are found primarily in states in which a construction lender receives little or no statutory protection against construction liens.

10.2.1 Nature Of Agreement Generally

Construction escrows vary, but a common procedure is as follows. The owner or contractor delivers to the escrowee a project breakdown, also known as a schedule of values, with or before the first request for an advance (known as a draw). With each draw request, the contractor deposits an affidavit or certificate as to the work completed to date, showing the line items for which payment is sought, together with waivers from each listed subcontractor and supplier. The owner and lender each send written consents to the draw request and direct the escrowee to disburse the loan advance. The draw package may also include an architect's certificate as to the percentage of completion, a separate inspector's statement as to workmanship, an owner's affidavit as to work for which it has separately contracted, invoices for all work for which payment is sought, and a survey (foundation or as-built).

The escrow agreement typically says that the escrowee is to review each draw "package" and notify the lender as to whether or not the insurer is prepared to extend the construction lien policy coverage forward in time through the date of draw funding, and upward in amount to include all advances made to date. This coverage is normally provided by a "pending disbursement" endorsement.[71] See §10.1.4 and following for a complete discussion of the cases construing pending disbursement endorsements. If the escrowee is prepared to issue the endorsement, the lender deposits the amount of the construction draw with the escrowee and payment is made. If the insurer is unwilling to issue an endorsement, the agreement usually provides several options.

In most jurisdictions, the escrowee is liable only to the principal or principals to the escrow or disbursing contract.[72] The construction escrowee is most commonly alleged to have duties of the [70] Construction escrows and construction lien liability are further analyzed in Jones & Maessell, Mechanic's Lien Title Insurance Coverage for Construction Projects, 16 Real Estate L.J. 291 (1988); Urban, Future Advances and Title Insurance Coverage, 15 Wake Forest L. Rev. 329 (1979); Jordan, Mechanics' Lien Coverage, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook (1988); Bohan, Mechanics' Lien Coverage in Title Insurance Policies, in Attorneys' Role in Title Insurance, A.B.A. Real Property & Trust Section, (1990); Sweat, Obligatory Advances: Mechanics' Liens and the 1987 Loan Policy, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook (1988); J. Patterson, Title Insurance and Mechanic's Liens, 5 A.B.A. Real Property Financing Newsletter 20 (1985); Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 6.12, pp. 6-78 to -83.

---

[71] The form of endorsement varies widely. One form is the ALTA Construction Loan Policy Endorsement A, designed to be used in connection with the Construction Loan Policy.

[72] In Elsebaei v. Philip R. Seaver Title Co., Inc., 2015 WL 7079068 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court found that a title company that reviewed construction draw requests and issued pending disbursement endorsements under a contract with the lender did not owe a duty to the borrower-owners, and thus could not be liable to them for the contractor's theft of loan money. The court said that the disbursing agreement was incidental to the title agent's role in giving construction lien coverage to the lender under its title insurance policy. Michigan has held that a title agent is not directly liable to following types:

1. To verify payment to all subcontractors
2. To keep the project in balance
3. To pay the proper parties
4. To inspect the property

These subjects are discussed in turn below. There is a series of published decisions from Missouri. The author's view is that the cases are indicative of the great deference Missouri statutes and courts give to construction lien claimants, at the expense of owners, lenders and insurers. The more extreme Missouri holdings should not be considered authoritative in states which give a better balance to the competing interests of the parties.

The final portion of this section discusses the escrowee's defenses to negligence claims and sources of recoupment by or against the escrowee.

10.2.2 Paying Subcontractors And Collecting Lien Waivers

Construction projects are typically disbursed in stages, known as draws, as the work progresses. The disbursing instructions tell the escrowee which person or parties to pay with each draw, and identify those documents that are to be received in exchange for payment.

The most common arrangement is for draws to be paid to the general contractor. However, the disbursing agreement sometimes orders the escrowee to pay subcontractors directly, meaning that separate payments are to be made to every person that has provided services, labor or materials during the draw period.[73] The general contractor provides the escrowee with a list of subcontractors and suppliers who have worked to date and showing the total dollar amount of work for which payment is requested. It is common for the general contractor to be required to furnish to the escrowee with each draw lien waivers from the subcontractors and suppliers who have provided services, labor or materials to date. The instructions may require those waivers to be either unconditional or conditional on payment to be received.

The escrowee is liable for losses suffered by an escrow party that were proximately caused by the escrowee's failure to follow its instructions and which were reasonably foreseeable by the escrowee. An instruction to pay subcontractors and suppliers directly was not altered by owner's authorization forms that stated that payment was to be made to the general contractor.[74] A violation third parties, including the insured, in relation to the policies that it issues. See Mickam v. Joseph Louis Palace Trust, 849 F.Supp. 516 (E.D.Mich. 1993) and Wormsbacher v. Seaver Title Co., 284 Mich.App. 1, 772 N.W.2d 827 (2009).

---

[73] See Allan R. Burke, Lien-Free Construction Through Direct Disbursement, in Title News, Volume 62, Number 8 (October 1983), p. 7, for a still-relevant and thorough description of the way in which lenders and title insurers can limit the construction lien risk by paying subcontractors and suppliers directly. ALTA members can retrieve the article from the Title News archives at alta.org.

[74] R and B Kapital Development, LLC v. North Shore Community Bank and Trust Co., 358 Ill.App.3d 912, 832 N.E.2d 246, 295 Ill.Dec. 95 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2005) (disbursing agreement controls contradictory statement in owner's authorization form).

of instructions is normally a breach unless the parties consent to the change, even if done with the sincere goal of compensating for or avoiding a potential lien problem.[75] However, the construction escrowee is not liable for minor or technical errors that do not cause a loss to the escrow principals.[76]

An escrowee may be found to have made improper disbursements by paying on a draw request that includes a contract extra, change order not approved by all parties to the escrow, or an increase from the original budget for a particular subcontract item.[77] Also, when a lien is filed for work done in the time period for a previous draw, the escrowee may not unilaterally take funds from a later draw to pay the lien claimant.[78]

A Missouri decision found the escrowee liable to a subcontractor for not making sure that he was paid when the escrowee knew that he was on the job, but no request was made for payment of that work.[79] However, Missouri stands alone in making subcontractors third party beneficiaries of the construction disbursing agreement, however, a subject discussed in full at §10.2.6.

Most escrow instructions obligate the escrowee to obtain waivers of lien from the contractor and subcontractors as payments are made. The instructions may state that the waivers are to be for all work done through the time of the payment (current waivers), or through the prior disbursement (draw delay), or some combination of the two. In most circumstances, a forged waiver is of no effect. The escrowee has a duty of reasonable care in reviewing waivers of lien. It may be liable to its principal if reasonable scrutiny of the waiver would reveal that it is a forgery. However, the escrowee is not responsible for loss suffered from a forged waiver that is facially proper and not suspicious looking.[80] In a second case, an errors and omissions carrier denied a duty to defend an

---

[75] The construction escrow agreement has been said to create "a responsibility to pay the loan proceeds in such manner as would protect both the borrower and the [lender] from mechanics' liens to the extent of the funds disbursed." Bankers Trust Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 594 F.2d 231 (10th Cir. 1979).

[76] In Meyers v. TrustTexas Bank, S.S.B., 2018 WL 6072158 (Tex.App.-Austin) (unpublished), several small communication errors by the title company escrowee and bank in disbursing a construction loan were found not to have caused any loss to the borrowers, who thus were not entitled to recover against the escrowee.

[77] H.B.I. Corp. v. Jiminez, 803 S.W.2d 100 (Mo. 1990); Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cranwell, 369 S.E.2d 678 (Va. 1988).

[78] Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cranwell, 369 S.E.2d 678 (Va. 1988).

[79] O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Allied Builders Corp., 663 S.W.2d 326 (Mo.App. 1983); Title Ins. Co. of Minn. v. Construction Escrow Service, Inc. 675 S.W.2d 881 (Mo.App. 1984). In Hoida, Inc. v. M & I Midstate Bank, 688 N.W.2d 691, 2004 WI App 191 (Wis.App. 2004), the court found that the escrowee had a duty to a subcontractor "to refrain from any act which [would] cause foreseeable harm," and that it "was foreseeable that the failure to obtain lien waivers could harm subcontractors." Nonetheless, the court found that recovery by the subcontractor against the agent should be denied on grounds of public policy. The court found that the legislature had achieved a delicate but deliberate balance in the state construction lien law between the rights of owners and contractors. It noted that the subcontractor had lien rights, which it chose not to employ, and thus it would be repugnant to give it an additional means of recovery. This holding was affirmed on appeal, and the above language cited with approval, by the state supreme court in Hoida, Inc. v. M & I Midstate Bank, 291 Wis.2d 283, 717 N.W.2d 17, 2006 WI 69 (Wis. 2006).

[80] Fantino v. Lenders Title and Guar. Co., 303 Ill.App.3d 204, 707 N.E.2d 756, 236 Ill.Dec. 629 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999).

agent against a claim based on the failure to spot a fraudulent waiver. The E & O policy excluded coverage when the agent failed to obtain "appropriate" waivers of lien. The court found the policy ambiguous because "appropriate" was not a defined term. The policy:

> … neither indicates from whose perspective or at what time we determine whether the lien waivers were appropriate. It is unclear whether appropriateness is determined by reference to purpose or simply form. From Cherryland's perspective at the time it obtained the waivers, the lien waivers were suitable, fit, or proper because they were indeed lien waivers from the contractor before payment. ... [T]he exclusion [must be] measured from the escrow agent's view at the time it obtains the lien waivers. Cherryland therefore obtained appropriate lien waivers from O'Brien even though the lien waivers were later found to be fraudulent.[81]

Insured purchasers of newly-constructed houses sometimes claim there is an implied escrow or other duty of the insurer to verify that all potential lien claimants have been paid. This claim sometimes arises when the insurer has not acted as escrowee during construction, and does not insure the purchaser against inchoate lien rights. There is no such implied duty to verify payment. See §10.1 regarding construction lien coverage and the construction lien standard exception.

The general contractor sometimes resents the escrowee's direct communication with subcontractors and suppliers, and the loss of its control over them when those parties are paid directly by the escrowee. The escrowee has the right to communicate with subs and suppliers in order to orchestrate payment in exchange for waivers. An escrowee was found not liable to the builder for disclosing information about the sale price of the home, which allegedly caused the subcontractor to refuse to accept a discounted payment for his work.[82]

Similarly, in Creative Hardwood Floors, Inc. v. Schafer,[83] the construction lender appointed a title agency to disburse its construction loan funds for a house to be built for the owners. The work was not finished when the last draw was requested. The draw was funded, but the contractor went out of business, and did not pay Creative Hardwood Floors, which filed a lien and a foreclosure action. The owners claimed that an employee of the title agency assured them that it was common practice to submit a final draw request before work was done, and that the work would be done. The employee denied making the statements. The Schafers sued the agency and lender on various theories, including negligent misrepresentation. The lender obtained summary judgment. The cause of action against the title agent was not at issue in the appeal.

In Gordon v. New Mexico Title Co.,[84] the insurer conducted the escrow for the permanent

---

[81] Simpson v. Title Industry Assurance Co., et al., 590 N.W.2d 282 (Table), 224 Wis.2d 644, 1999 WL 19307 (Wis.App.) (unpublished).

[82] Wilcher v. AmeriTitle, Inc., 212 Or.App. 498, 157 P.3d 790 (2007).

[83] 1998 WL 515783, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 1959 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished).

[84] 77 N.M. 217, 421 P.2d 433 (1966).

loan on a new house. It accepted affidavits from the purchaser and the builder to the effect that all work was complete and all laborers paid. Liens were later filed. The insurer was sued, on the theory that local custom and practice created an implied duty of the escrowee to investigate whether or not all lien claimants had really been paid, rather than to rely on affidavits. The appellate court reversed a judgment against the insurer. It found no proof of such a custom and practice, and therefore no such duty. In fact, the evidence at trial showed that the insurer had previously conducted loan escrows with the same builder in which it relied on the builder's affidavit without further investigation. The Gordon case illustrates the fact that, when a project goes awry, purchasers and lenders sometimes seek to create implied duties of the escrowee in order to obtain recovery for project debts.[85]

10.2.3 Keeping Project In Balance

FORM 73, Appendix A
Construction escrow negligence

The construction escrowee is not responsible for keeping the construction project in balance.[86] When the escrowee is also the title insurer, its policy liability can be seriously affected by the fact that the project gets out of balance. That subject is addressed in §10.1.5.

The shortage of money to pay for the project is a common source of construction lien problems. This can occur in a number of ways, including: the lack of a fixed-price contract,[87] the lender's failure to insist on an accurate and complete schedule of values based on final plans and specifications before the project commences,[88] the lack of an adequate contingency reserve,[89] the

---

[85] See §10.2.4 below discussing the alleged implied duty to inspect the premises on behalf of the homeowner, addressed in Frieberger v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 831 S.W.2d 731 (Mo.App. 1992).

[86] Nichols v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 107 Ohio App.3d 684, 669 N.E.2d 323 (Ct.App. 8 Dist. 1995).

[87] "There are several methods of fixing the cost of a construction project with the builder or contractor. The most common are the simple, fixed price contract, the cost plus fixed fee arrangement, and cost plus fixed fee with a guaranteed maximum 'upset' price. ...Even when the contractor has agreed with the owner on a fixed or maximum cost, cost control and budgeting should still concern the owner, just as it does the construction lender. The project should not be allowed to become out of balance, that is, the cost to complete must never exceed the undisbursed sum agreed to or budgeted for the project. While it is true that the economic risk of cost overruns is assumed by the contractor in a fixed or guaranteed maximum-cost arrangement, unapproved extras and probable overruns are still a serious danger sign for the owner. The contractor may not be able to sustain the economic loss, which could lead to financial failure and suspension of the work. At the very least, a general contractor that perceives that cost overruns have eliminated its profit on a job and are likely to result in a loss may lose enthusiasm to proceed diligently and competently with the work." Richard Harris, Construction and Development Financing, Warren, Gorham & Lamont, ¶ 7.1[a], pp. 7-3 -4.

[88] "To facilitate the computation of the amount to be paid under progress payments in a fixed-price contract, the contractor is generally required to submit to the design professional a schedule of values before the first application for payment. This schedule, when approved, constitutes an agreed valuation of designated portions of the work. The aggregate of the schedule should be the contract price." Justin Sweet, Legal Aspects of Architecture, Engineering, and the Construction Process, Fourth Edition, § 26.02(B), p. 478. Similarly, another construction lending text states: "The lender should require that the disbursements for the project be based upon a budget approved by both the borrower and owner's failure to obtain additional money when the project budget increases, change orders that increase the cost, construction delays, increases in the cost of materials, subcontractors who fold and whose work must be done by new parties at increased cost, contractor diversion of funds, or change of construction conditions.

The lender, not the title insurer, is responsible for analyzing the project cost before making the construction loan. A banking practices handbook states:

> The bank next determines if there are sufficient funds available to complete the development. This is critical, as one of the primary requirements is that all funds necessary to complete, including a reasonable contingency, must be available at the time the loan records.[90]

Further, it is the lender that has the obligation of keeping the loan in balance as work progresses:

> From the time administration commences with the execution and recording of the construction mortgage, the prudent construction lender will carefully monitor the project as though the lender might one day become its owner. It will have its own architect ... perform an oversight function, reviewing plans and specifications, work in progress, draw requests, and myriad other matters. It will carefully and continuously monitor the loan to confirm that it remains "in balance" at all times.[91]

The owner has the same obligation as the lender to keep the project in balance.[92] The escrowee, by the lender." John G. Cameron, Jr., A Practitioner's Guide to Construction Law, § 1.02(b)(2), p. 1-7.

---

[89] "Finally, the lender must consider that despite the most candid presentation and the most careful evaluation of projected costs, there are inherent uncertainties in the construction process that cannot be eliminated. Inclusion of an adequate contingency reserve in project costs is critical. While the amount of the reserve will depend on the type of project and the degree to which costs are fixed at the time the loan is underwritten and disbursed, a reserve of 5 percent of both hard and soft costs has been a rule of thumb." Alvin L. Arnold, Construction and Development Financing, (Second Edition), § 3.03[2][a], p. 3-13 (emphasis added).

[90] R. Harris, Construction and Development Financing, § 4.20 (Warren, Gorham & Lamont, 1982) (1987 Supp.), quoted in Jones & Maessell, Mechanic's Lien Title Insurance Coverage for Construction Projects, 16 Real Estate L.J. 291, 293 (1988).

[91] Jones & Maessell, Mechanic's Lien Title Insurance Coverage for Construction Projects, 16 Real Estate L.J. 291, 293 (1988).

[92] See Nichols v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 107 Ohio App.3d 684, 669 N.E.2d 323 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 1995). In that case, the owner took the lowest of three bids to build his house. There was a significant price differential, and the owner had reason to believe that it was not possible to build the house for the low bid amount. The owner eventually fired the contractor and paid $125,000 above the original contract price to complete the house. The owner sought to make the insurer-escrowee or lender pay the difference. The court ruled that the overruns were not "the 'natural and necessary consequence of' nor 'proximately caused by' an alleged breach of duty by Chicago Title" or the lender." Rather, the "only rational explanation for there being insufficient funds to complete construction of the house is that the construction price was incorrectly calculated by the architect or builder in the first place." Further, the insurer-escrowee did not become contrast, is not responsible for keeping track of the budget unless the agreement says so.[93] Thus, if the escrowee complies with all written instructions, and issues pending disbursement endorsements limited to dates and amounts disbursed, it is not liable as escrowee if liens are filed because the project is underfunded.[94] However, a statement in the disbursing agreement that the escrowee was not responsible for assuring that there will be sufficient funds available for completion of the project was found not to place an obligation on the lender to fund a shortage, or to "enforce" the loan agreement by obligating the owner to produce the additional money.[95] Also, when the escrow specifically required the insurer-escrowee to obtain additional owner equity funds if the contract amount changed, the escrowee violated that instruction by accepting change orders without requiring the owners to deposit funds to cover the increase in the contract amount.[96]

10.2.4 Inspection Of Property

The escrowee's duties regarding inspections of the property, if any, are derived from the disbursing agreement. The disburser has no implied duty to inspect the property or have it inspected.[97] When the construction escrow agreement stated that the escrowee "has not been employed and has no responsibility to supervise construction or determine adequacy of design and compliance with plans and specifications," the court ruled that the escrow was not ambiguous, and "Lawyers Title did not owe a duty to homeowners to inspect to insure work was proceeding in a workmanlike manner before disbursing funds."[98] If the escrowee or lender perform inspections, they liable for the cost overruns by not advising the owner that funds were being held back with draws based on the inspector's percentage-of-completion assessments. "Nothing in the loan agreement prohibited Chicago Title from disbursing less than the amount shown on the draw request." Id. at 330.

---

[93] See Jones & Maessell, Mechanic's Lien Title Insurance Coverage for Construction Projects, 16 Real Estate L.J. 291 (1988). Also, in Nichols v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 1995 Ohio App. LEXIS 5297, the owner claimed that the insurer was obligated to keep track of a builder which was running over budget on a fixed-price contract. The owner argued that, if the escrowee had warned the owner of the cost overruns, it could have scaled back the project. The court disagreed, noting that no such express duty existed under the escrow instructions, and that the escrowee had complied with instructions in making disbursement. In addition, the owner had approved draw requests, which gave it equal knowledge of the cost overruns.

[94] See Bankers Trust Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 594 F.2d 231 (10th Cir. 1979) and Brown v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 634 F.2d 1103 (8th Cir. 1980).

[95] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Co., 53 F.3d 899, 907 (8th Cir. 1995).

[96] H.B.I. Corp. v. Jiminez and Ticor Title Ins. Co., 803 S.W.2d 100 (Mo. 1990).

[97] Frieberger v. Lawyers Title Ins. Co., 831 S.W.2d 731 (Mo.App. 1992); Rosario v. Absolute Construction, 178 Wis.2d 590, 506 N.W.2d 170 (Table), 1993 WL 266240, 1993 Wis.App. LEXIS 905 (unpublished); Fantino v. Lenders Title and Guar. Co., 303 Ill.App.3d 204, 707 N.E.2d 756, 236 Ill.Dec. 629 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999); 231 W. Scott, LLC v. Lakeside Bank, 80 N.E.3d 753, 414 Ill.Dec. 610, 2017 IL App (1st) 161131 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2017) (relying on Fantino).

[98] Frieberger v. Lawyers Title Co. of Missouri, 831 S.W.2d 731, 734 (Mo.App. 1992).

are not done for the benefit of the owner unless such is the explicit agreement. [99]

The insurer-escrowee also has no duty to determine that improvements have reached the intended stage of completion, or that the improvement has been built according to plans and specifications. A Texas court, however, found an escrowee to have a general "duty of loyalty" to the lender in connection with inspections. That duty, the court suggested, might have been breached by escrowee's failure to note from a survey that construction had commenced prior to recording of the insured mortgage, rendering it subordinate to construction liens. The court did not find that the escrowee had a duty under the escrow to assure the lender that it had a first lien, however. In addition, the court found that any breach by escrowee would have to be weighed against the lender's own knowledge of its loss of priority, since the lender also received the survey.[100]

The insurer also does not have a duty to inspect the property that is implied from the title insurance policy.[101] When the insurer removed the standard exceptions for the lender and noted in its file that the property had been "inspected," the insured owner was not an intended beneficiary of the loan policy contract, and had no cause of action against the insurer for failing to inspect and discover that the building slab encroached.[102]

10.2.5 Claims By Title Insurer Against Escrowee

The construction escrowee may assert the same types of defenses to liability as it has under other forms of escrows. See §13.11 for a full discussion of an escrowee's defenses. The escrowee may also assert claims against third parties.

An insurer may recoup its policy loss from an agent-escrowee that caused the loss by its escrow negligence. In Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cranwell,[103] an insurer was found to have a cause of action against its approved attorney for negligent disbursement of escrow funds.

Frequently, one insurer disburses a construction loan but a second insurer is asked to insure the permanent financing or the purchaser of the recently-completed house. In Title Ins. Co. of Minn. v. Construction Escrow Service,[104] the construction escrow was handled by an independent escrow company, which certified that construction was complete and that full payment had been made. The [99] Zlatanov v. Bank One, N.A., 2005 WL 32952 (Cal.App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished) (bank's independent inspector owed no duty to the home owner on the theory that the inspector estimated completion percentages too generously, and owners should have contracted for their own inspections); M & I Bank of Southern Wisconsin v. Poehling, 277 Wis.2d 873, 690 N.W.2d 885 (Table), 2005 WI App 1 (Wis.App.) (unpublished) (title company inspections not performed for benefit of owners, and lender had no duty to arrange for inspections for owners' benefit).

---

[100] First Federal Sav. & Loan Assn. of Beaumont v. Stewart Title Co., 732 S.W.2d 98 (Tex.App. 1987).

[101] Walters v. Marler, 83 Cal.App.3d 1, 147 Cal.Rptr. 655 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1978); Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991); Sterling v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 822 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

[102] Walters v. Marler, 83 Cal.App.3d 1, 147 Cal.Rptr. 655 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1978).

[103] 369 S.E.2d 678 (Va. 1988).

[104] 675 S.W. 2d 881 (Mo.App. 1981).

insurer on the construction loan relied on the certification in issuing its policy giving construction lien coverage. Liens were filed, and the title insurer was permitted to recover against the escrowee. The insurer was not a party to the escrow. However, the court found that the insurer was "an intimate and essential party to the entire transaction" and therefore could sue because of the misrepresentation in the certification to recover the amount of the liens paid.

10.2.6 Escrowee's Duties To Lien Claimants

The relationship between the escrowee and the contractor and subcontractors is determined primarily by the escrow agreement. A lien claimant or general contractor is not a third party beneficiary of the agreement in most jurisdictions.[105] Similarly, in a Texas case decided in federal court, a lien claimant sought to enforce a construction lien indemnity given to the insurer, as a third party beneficiary. The court found that the claimant was not automatically barred because it was not a party to the indemnity agreement. Again, the agreement clearly stated who the intended beneficiaries were, and the claimant was not on the list, and that expression of intent was binding on the claimant. The court refused to find a third party beneficiary obligation "by implication."[106] Wisconsin has also held that, as a matter of public policy, a disburser is not liable to lien claimants even when negligent, because the lien claimants have a statutory remedy that protects them.[107]

Missouri cases, by contrast, have held that the general contractor is a third party beneficiary, and may sue for negligent disbursement.[108] However, Missouri has an extremely strong bent toward favoring lien claimants and its decisions in this area have not been followed by other courts.

There are numerous factors which militate against the general contractor as a third party beneficiary. In the typical situation, these would include that the contractor is not a signatory, that the agreement's stated purpose is to allow the insurer-escrowee sufficient control over funding for it to give construction lien coverage to the lender, that the agreement states who the intended

---

[105] Superior Construction Services, Inc. v. Moore, 2007 WL 1816096 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (bank escrowee disbursing insurance proceeds for repairs owed no duty of care to contractors to assure that they would be paid, and was not liable when they waived lien rights but owner failed to pay them); P.E.M. Construction & Development Co., Inc. v. EnCap Gold Holdings, LLC, 2011 WL 3802244 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) (subcontractor was not intended third-party beneficiary of construction project escrow, and was not entitled to be paid from it, particularly when conditions for disbursement had not been met); Christenson v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 666 P.2d 302 (Utah 1983) (contractor not in privity with construction loan disburser and disburser owes it no duty other than to refrain from misrepresenting the facts). In Bescor, Inc. v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 113 Ill.App.3d 65, 68 Ill.Dec. 812, 446 N.E.2d 1209 (Ill.App. 5 Dist. 1983), the court held that a subcontractor was not a third party beneficiary of the construction escrow, and that "a fair reading of the balance of the agreement shows that its foremost purpose was to protect the security interests of the lender against possible mechanics' lien claims." Thus, it said, "we do not believe it plausible that the subcontractors, including Bescor, were any more than mere incidental beneficiaries of the express trust." 446 N.E.2d at 1214.

[106] Goldberg v. R.J. Longo Construction Co., 54 F.3d 243 (5th Cir. 1995).

[107] Hoida, Inc. v. M & I Midstate Bank, 291 Wis.2d 283, 717 N.W.2d 17, 2006 WI 69 (Wis. 2006).

[108] O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Allied Builders Corp., 663 S.W. 2d 326 (Mo.App. 1983); H.B.I. Corp. v. Jiminez and Ticor Title Ins. Co., 803 S.W.2d 100 (Mo. 1990).

beneficiaries are, and that the contractor has not sought to be made a party to the agreement.

The escrowee has a lesser duty, if any, to subcontractors and material suppliers. It is not in privity with these claimants.[109] Subcontractors are not owed a fiduciary duty, and are not third party beneficiaries.[110] The escrowee is not a trustee holding funds for the sole benefit of the claimants.[111]

The escrowee does, however, have a duty to give accurate information to a lien claimant if the insurer might reasonably expect that the lien claimant will rely on that information. One court held that an escrowee may be liable for negligent misrepresentation to subcontractors, based on the following reasoning:

> while it was not the 'end and aim' of Arizona Title's business in its capacity as Builder's Control escrow agent to give out information as to the amount of construction funds it had on hand, it was the end and aim of its business to see to it that the contractors got paid for their work out of whatever funds were available. As the builder's disbursing agent to the contractors, Arizona Title was necessarily and intimately involved with the contractors in the most vital kind of business relationship.[112]

The escrowee told subcontractors there was enough money in its possession to finish the job, when it knew or should have known that there was not. The court explained that the escrowee:

> … did not owe the contractors the duty of making any calculations to ascertain whether sufficient funds would or would not be available to pay the contractors for their work. In other words, Arizona Title had no duty to speak or respond to the contractors' inquiries at all. But if it chose to speak, we think that under all of the circumstances its business relationship with the contractors carried with it a duty to exercise reasonable care in making representations about presently ascertainable facts.[113]

The court further held that the escrowee, because it is not in privity with subcontractors, may only be liable to the party to whom a misrepresentation is made, and not others who might also act on that information unbeknownst to the escrowee.

In a closing or post-closing escrow, a lien claimant that is to be paid from the escrow has the

---

[109] See Arizona Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. O'Malley Lumber Co., 14 Ariz.App. 486, 484 P.2d 639 (Ariz.App. 1971), and Christenson v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 666 P.2d 302 (Utah 1983), which approved the O'Malley analysis.

[110] Bescor, Inc. v. Chicago Title and Trust Co., 113 Ill.App.3d 65, 446 N.E.2d 1209, 1213 (1983).

[111] In Arizona Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. O'Malley Lumber Co., 14 Ariz.App. 486, 484 P.2d 639 (1971), the trial court granted the escrowee summary judgment on this issue, which was not the subject of the appeal.

[112] Arizona Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. O'Malley Lumber Co., 484 P.2d at 645.

[113] Id.

same status as other non-party payees. In most jurisdictions, an escrowee has no duty to non-party payees. The subject is fully discussed at §13.4. In Joe Keresztury Homes, Inc. v. Commerce Land Title of San Antonio, Inc.,[114] an escrow agreement created because of a dispute with a drywaller stated that the escrowee had the right, "at its sole election and discretion," to deliver the funds to the drywaller. The lien was not resolved, and the lien claimant sued. The escrowee then paid the drywaller. All claims were dropped except the builder's suit against the escrowee, in which it claimed attorney's fees incurred in the suit and the difference between the escrowed amount and what the builder thought it should have received. The court found that the escrow language left the "decision to the discretion of" the escrowee, and failure to release the funds sooner was not a breach of the agreement. However, when the lien claimant is a party to the escrow, the escrowee is responsible for failing to follow its instructions, as with any other principal. In a case involving escrow instructions given for the closing of a sale of the property, a New York case held an escrowee responsible to a mechanic lien claimant for "failing to follow closing instructions received from" the claimant, as a result of which the lien claimant did not get paid.[115]

10.2.7 Recovery By Escrowee Against Other Parties

Insurer-escrowees often take indemnities as security for the granting of construction lien coverage. The indemnity may specify what action the owner or contractor must take when a construction lien claim is made. In addition, insurer-escrowees almost always rely on owner and/or contractor affidavits. Owner's affidavits are used to assure the insurer that all workmen have been paid. Contractor affidavits are supplied with each draw and state that the named parties are the only ones who have done work. See §5.10.2 for a complete discussion of recovery under construction lien indemnities.

10.2.8 Punchlist And Completion Escrows

When property is sold before a newly-built structure has been completed, it is common for the parties to enter into a "punchlist" or completion escrow. The escrowee holds a certain sum to be released to the builder after the improvement is completed. Although these escrows go by many names, a punchlist escrow is commonly understood to be one in which a list of repairs (the punchlist) are to be made. The escrow provides says that the builder will receive the escrowed funds when the repairs are made. A completion escrow is used when a portion of the work is not finished when the sale from the builder closes. On residential construction, this is often landscaping or paving that cannot be performed until the ground has settled or a harsh weather season has passed. Money is also deposited on completion escrows, to pay for the remaining work as it is performed. If the escrowee is also the title insurer, it often wishes to control the escrow in order to exchange payment of the escrowed funds for construction lien waivers, especially if it has protected against inchoate construction lien rights.

The most common dispute about a punchlist or completion escrow is the conditions for the release of the escrowed money. In Maratea v. Greater Metropolitan Abst. Corp.,[116] punchlist escrow instructions contained a drop-dead date for return of the funds, but also said that the money was to be paid out in exchange for evidence that the punchlist work to be performed. The seller paid the contractors, and demanded the return of the escrowed money, only to learn that the title company escrowee had already paid out the money to settle the same claims. The court found that the plaintiff had a good cause of action, especially since the title company escrowee "proffered no explanation for the 90-day period set forth in the agreement."

---

[114] 1998 WL 130245 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished).

[115] F & C General Contractors Corp. v. Atlantic Mutual Mortgage Corp., 268 A.D.2d 556, 703 N.Y.S.2d 196 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000).

In Joe Keresztury Homes, Inc. v. Commerce Land Title of San Antonio, Inc.,[117] an escrow agreement created because of a dispute with a drywaller stated that the escrowee had the right, "at its sole election and discretion," to deliver the funds to the drywaller. The lien was not resolved, and the lien claimant sued. The escrowee then paid the drywaller. All claims were dropped except the builder's suit against the escrowee, in which it claimed attorney's fees incurred in the suit and the difference between the escrowed amount and what the builder thought it should have received. The court found that the escrow language left the "decision to the discretion of" the escrowee, and failure to release the funds sooner was not a breach of the agreement.

The damages for failure to complete a punchlist escrow have been held to be the cost of performing the work, even if that cost is greater than the amount which the parties agreed to escrow. In Cater v. Barker,[118] the parties entered into a punchlist escrow that called for the seller of an existing residence (not new construction) to deposit money into escrow, to be returned to the seller after she had made certain post-closing repairs. The seller did not make the repairs, and insisted that her sole duty was to deposit the money. The buyer sued for the cost of completing the work, which was triple the amount escrowed. The appeals court affirmed a judgment in that amount.

---

[116] 305 A.D.2d 381, 759 N.Y.S.2d 162 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2003).

[117] 1998 WL 130245 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished).

[118] 172 N.C.App. 441, 617 S.E.2d 113 (N.C.App. 2005), aff'd per curiam, 360 N.C. 357, 625 S.E.2d 778 (N.C. 2006).

11 Exclusions

Certain matters are excluded from the coverage of the title policy. The title insurance policy contains exclusions of two types. The first type of exclusion concerns matters that do not affect title, but are sufficiently related to make it desirable to affirmatively state that the policy provides no protection against those subjects. An exclusion in this class is Exclusion 1 in the 2006 ALTA policies, for governmental regulation of the use of property.

The second type of exclusion negates coverage as to matters that affect title, but that do not properly invoke a right to insurance protection. Several of these exclusions hinge on the insured's own conduct. They include, for example, defects created or agreed to by the insured (Exclusion 3(a)), off-record matters known to the insured (Exclusion 3(b)), and those that do not cause a loss (Exclusion 3(c)).

The insured bears the burden of proving that a matter falls within the covered risks of the policy. The insurer has the burden to show that the matter is excluded. See §9.1.3.1 for a discussion of the general principles employed in the interpretation of insurance contracts.

11.1 Land Use Laws, Police Power And Eminent Domain

Exclusion 1 removes coverage against various forms of governmental regulation of the use of the property.[1] Exclusion 2 eliminates coverage for the government's right to take property by

[1] "The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of: 1. (a) Any law, ordinance or governmental regulation (including but not limited to building and zoning laws, ordinances, or regulations) restricting, regulating, prohibiting or relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of any improvement now or hereafter erected on the land; (iii) a separation in ownership or a change in the dimensions or area of the land or any parcel of which the land is or was a part; or (iv) environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations, except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy. (b) Any governmental police power not excluded by (a) above, except to the extent that a notice of the exercise thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy."

condemnation or eminent domain.[2]

Exclusion 1 exists to confirm that matters of land use regulation are not covered by the policy, since they have to do with governmental control over the use of the property rather than its title. Also, most of the permits, approvals and enforcement documents pertaining to land use regulations are not found in the real estate records; they are not searched by title insurers. This is not happenstance, but evidence that the statutory scheme is to separate land title documents from land use records. Because land use records do not affect title, title insurers do not examine them. A title insurance commitment or policy is not a zoning or building code due diligence report, or a substitute for that due diligence.

Exclusion 2, for eminent domain rights, exists for a different reason than Exclusion 1. The condemnation of property causes a transfer of its title. It might seem strange to consider that a title insurance policy does not protect against the possibility that all or some of the property whose title is insured has already been condemned by the government (or by a private entity, in those jurisdictions that confer condemnation powers on private businesses such as utilities and railroads). However, as is explained below, in many states there is no public record evidencing the taking of property by condemnation. Thus, Exclusion 2 exists to limit the Covered Risks to the extent that the insurer is unable to eliminate the risk of such a title transfer by an accurate search and examination of the real estate records.

The policy forms have evolved to limit these exclusions so that there is now some coverage for the effect of recorded land use or condemnation notices.[3] The successive policy changes to Exclusion 1 reflect the tension between the fundamental principle that a title insurance policy insures only title, but various types of instruments about land use are recorded for the purpose of informing purchasers and lenders. Buyers and lenders wish to be informed of these non-title recorded notices, but the policy is not an information product, and certainly not intended to inform people about matters for which there is no coverage.

At the insistence of influential customer groups, particularly lenders and attorneys, the policy forms have been altered incrementally toward the offering of limited coverage for recorded instruments that concern non-title issues. The coverages provide the rationale for the transmittal of information, albeit in the form of exclusions (exceptions). In other words, there is coverage only in the event the insurer fails to exclude a recorded notice, of a type for which the limited coverage is provided, in Schedule B of the policy.

---

[2] "The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees or expenses which arise by reason of: … 2. Rights of eminent domain unless notice of the exercise thereof has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy, but not excluding from coverage any taking which has occurred prior to Date of Policy which would be binding on the rights of a purchaser for value without knowledge." In Property Hackers, LLC v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 96 A.D.3d 818, 949 N.Y.S.2d 70, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 04728 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2012), rev.den. 20 N.Y.3d 853, 982 N.E.2d 92, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 93255 (Table) (N.Y. Dec 11, 2012) (unpublished), the court held that the policy did not protect against the post-policy condemnation of the insured parcel.

[3] For an excellent discussion of the policy revisions since 1970, including the 1987 exclusion language changes, see Robert S. Bozarth, Choosing a Title Insurance Policy Form, in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448 1999, p. 15. See also Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2014-2015 Edition, §§ 5:9, 5:10 and 6:3, West/Thomson Reuters.

The policy evolution began with the 1984 ALTA policy forms, which added the following as subpart (d) to Exclusion 1:

> The effect of any violation of the matters excluded under (a), (b) or (c) above, unless notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation has been recorded at Date of Policy in those records in which under state statutes deeds, mortgages, lis pendens, liens or other title encumbrances must be recorded in order to impart constructive notice to purchasers of the land for value and without knowledge; provided, however, that without limitation, such records shall not be construed to include records in any of the offices of federal, state or local environmental protection, zoning, building, health or public safety authorities.

The 1987 form ALTA policies revised this term again, with the description of public records found in (d) moving from the exclusion to the definitions section.[4] Limiting language was added to Exclusion 1(c) to say that it does not apply "to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy." Exclusion 2, for eminent domain, was similarly amended in 1987.[5]

The ALTA also made a change in the definition of public records in the 1987 policies. The rather expansive phrase "records in any of the offices of federal, state or local environmental protection, zoning, building, health or public safety authorities" was replaced by a definition that referred to records "established under state statutes at Date of Policy for the purpose of imparting constructive notice of matters relating to real property to purchasers for value and without knowledge," and which excluded environmental liens.

Exclusions 1(a) and 1(b) of the 1992 ALTA policies excluded governmental regulation "except to the extent that a notice of the enforcement thereof or a notice of a defect, lien or encumbrance resulting from a violation or alleged violation affecting the land has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy." The 1992 policies contained a definition of "public records" that was slightly different from prior versions. See §9.12 for a complete discussion of that term and its definition.

The official ALTA commentary about the 2006 policy states that "[i]t was initially believed that the 1992 policy would provide "coverage by reason of the exception" to the exclusions. In fact, the Vermont Supreme Court held, in New England Federal Credit Union v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.,[6] that the exception to Exclusion 1 was an affirmative coverage, and that the lack of a permit on file at

---

[4] Id. at 30.

[5] "Rights of eminent domain unless notice of the exercise thereof has been recorded in the public records at Date of Policy, but not excluding from coverage any taking which has occurred prior to Date of Policy which would be binding on the rights of a purchaser for value without knowledge."

[6] 171 Vt. 326, 765 A.2d 450 (Vt. 2000).

a state office was "a notice" of the "enforcement" of the subdivision law that triggered that coverage. However, the 2002 California decision of Elysian Investment Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.[7] said essentially the opposite, ruling that:

> Elysian cannot rely upon an exclusion to coverage to extend coverage. … [T]he Notice of substandard dwelling did not affect title. It therefore did not give rise to coverage under the basic insuring provisions of the policy, and the exclusion does not expand that coverage to include the Notice."

The Elysian decision followed the conventional principle that an insurance policy exclusion cannot provide an affirmative coverage. A respected insurance treatise states this rule of construction:

> If there is no coverage under the terms of the insurance clause, coverage cannot be created based on the exceptions or qualifications contained in the exclusions.[8]

In reaction to Elysian, the drafters of the 2006 ALTA policies created the limited coverages found in Covered Risks 5, 6, 7 and 8 and modified Exclusions 1 and 2 to negate coverage for land use regulations and eminent domain except to the extent of those coverages. There is a general discussion of those covered risks at §9.9.2. However, the sections below combine the cases that have construed both the exclusions and the 2006 Covered Risks, which are two parts of the same subject.

11.1.1 Building Code Ordinances

FORM 36, Appendix A
Building code violation

Exclusion 1 of the 2006 ALTA policies removes coverage for violations of or non-compliance with building codes, except to the extent of the coverage provided by Covered Risk 5. That Covered Risk, new to the 2006 ALTA policies, protects against loss or damage caused by the "violation or enforcement of any law, ordinance, permit, or governmental regulation (including those relating to building and zoning) restricting, regulating, prohibiting, or relating to (a) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the Land … if a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the violation or intention to enforce, but only to the extent of the violation or enforcement referred to in that notice." The Homeowner's Policy provides affirmative assurances concerning building code violations. See a discussion of that policy's covered risks at §9.14.2, and its exclusions at §11.10. See §9.12 regarding the definition of "public records" in the policy.

[7] 105 Cal.App.4th 315, 129 Cal.Rptr.2d 372 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2002).

[8] Allan D. Windt, Insurance Claims & Disputes: Representation of Insurance Companies and Insureds, Sixth Edition, § 6:2, p. 6-87, Thomson Reuters.

Exclusions

This section discusses both the cases that have construed the exclusion and those that have construed Covered Risk 5, because they are two parts of the same subject.

Exclusion 1 removes any suggestion that the policy provides coverage for violations of or non-compliance with building codes.[9] It also establishes that there is no coverage for the effect of the lack of a building permit for an improvement located on the property, or other permits or consents that an owner is required by law to obtain in order to build a structure.[10] The exclusion also bars claims based on other types of building code violations.[11]

The protection against notices of violation or enforcement that appear in the public records provides a small limitation on the scope of the exclusion.[12] For example, in Hon Realty Corp. v. First

---

[9] Arapahoe Land Title, Inc. v. Contract Financing, Ltd., 28 Colo.App. 393, 472 P.2d 754 (1970) (code violation); Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951) (building permit refusal); Witkowski v. Richard W. Endlar Ins. Agency, Inc., 81 Mass.App.Ct. 785, 968 N.E.2d 922 (Mass.App. 2012) (exclusion applied when insured condominium unit destroyed by flood after policy date and building code prevented insured from rebuilding unit); Johnson v. Law Office of Schwartz, 145 A.D.3d 608, 46 N.Y.S.3d 1, 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 08931 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2016) (Exclusion 1 bars coverage for the lack of an occupancy permit for the property). See also, 40 A.L.R.2d 1238; Northern California Community Development Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 1397040 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished) (no coverage for failed land development, which was due in part to lack of building permits).

[10] Chu v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 89 App.Div.2d 574, 452 N.Y.S.2d 229 (1982) (lack of a certificate of occupancy); Chudy v. William Raveis Real Estate, Inc., 2010 WL 5188445 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished) (former owner's failure to obtain building permits excluded); Somerset Savings Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 420 Mass. 422, 649 N.E.2d 1123 (1995) (exclusion applies to bar coverage for claim based on insured's failure to obtain consent from the commonwealth's secretary of transportation to build on former railroad land, as required by statute); Kremer v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 177 Vt. 553, 861 A.2d 1103, 2004 VT 91 (Vt. 2004) (exclusion applied to failure to obtain plumbing permit; lack of a permit was not an encumbrance on title; court said it was not clear that permit was required, and that "it is not the duty of the title insurer to make up for the shortcomings of a town's septic regulations."); Culley v. Bank of America, N.A., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1430124 (D.Mass. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available) (no coverage for lack of septic system permit or certificate of occupancy for newly-built home).

[11] In Kokinis v. First American Title Ins. Co., 68 Mass.App.Ct. 1106, 860 N.E.2d 978, 2007 WL 328795 (Mass.App.Ct.) (unpublished), the court held that the mere delivery to closing of a municipal lien certificate showing a sewer charge did not cause the title insurance policy to cover the cost of complying with a municipal code requirement to hook up to municipal sewer after the home's septic system failed. The court held that the building code exclusion applied, and that there was no defect in the title to the land. However, in Radovanov v. Land Title Co. of America, Inc., 189 Ill.App.3d 433, 545 N.E.2d 351, 136 Ill.Dec. 827 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1989), the court held that a building code violation suit pending at the date of policy rendered title unmarketable, and found that the building code exclusion was inconsistent with the marketability coverage. See §9.8 regarding the coverage for marketability of title.

[12] In Property Hackers, LLC v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 96 A.D.3d 818, 949 N.Y.S.2d 70, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 04728 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2012), app.den. 20 N.Y.3d 853, 982 N.E.2d 92, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 93255 (Table) (N.Y. Dec 11, 2012) (unpublished), the court held that the policy did not protect against the post-policy condemnation of the insured parcel. No notice of the exercise of the condemnation power had been recorded in the real estate records as of the date of policy, and thus the exception to the exclusion did not apply. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. McGonigle, 2013 WL 1087353 (D.Kan.) (unpublished); 2013 WL 1092893 (D.Kan.) (unpublished), a recorded notice informing owners of their obligation to keep a dam in repair was found not to be a notice of violation or enforcement that would trigger Covered Risk 5 of the 2006 ALTA Owner's policy. The court also rejected the insureds' argument that "covered risk 5 applies to current violations and the language in exclusion 1 is only applicable to future violations." The court said "the language in exclusion 1 applies to violations of Kansas law that were present, but not recorded, on the date the policy went into effect." The dam was in violation of state regulations on the date of policy, but no notice of violation had been

American Title Ins. Co.,[13] a Florida court found that a building code order filed in the city records was not a notice of violation for which the exclusion's exception would provide any recovery to the insured. A notice of enforcement was recorded with the Miami-Dade County clerk of court two weeks after closing. The court held that neither the city records nor the statutory scheme permitting the recording of such notices were "public records" under the policy terms.[14]

There is a limited spectrum of recorded instruments that serve as notices of violation or the intent to enforce a building code.[15] The California case of Elysian Investment Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.[16] said that a recorded "notice of substandard dwelling" did not trigger the coverage. That notice stated that a modification to the building failed to meet building code was not a notice of violation or enforcement, and warned that the city may take action to bring the building up to code, the cost of which "would be assessed as a lien against the property." An unrecorded order had been issued pursuant to the code. The insured claimed policy coverage, based on the prior decision of 1119 Delaware v. Continental Land Title Co.[17] That court had found that Exclusion 1 did not negate coverage for a recorded conditional use permit. The insurer relied on Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[18] which found that the policy does not protect against physical conditions affecting the property but not its title. The Elysian court ruled that the building code notice was not an encumbrance on title. It also distinguished 1119 Delaware: recorded, so Covered Risk 5 was not invoked and Exclusion 1 negated coverage. In Glenn v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 1830745 (Mich.App.) (per curiam) (unpublished), a condemnation list kept at the city building department office was determined not to be a public record under the definition found in the Homeowner's policy. Therefore, the effect of the demolition order was excluded.

---

[13] 2008 WL 4078762, 291 Fed.Appx. 951 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2008) (unpublished).

[14] The court said "It is clear that the 'public records' definition contemplated only the inclusion of those records filed under a state recording statute and not those general public records that may be available from, for example, a public records request with the state or a local municipality." 2008 WL at *2.

[15] In Stockton Mortgage, Inc. v. Tope, 233 Cal.App.4th 437, 183 Cal.Rptr.3d 186 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 2014), reh.den. (Jan. 13, 2015), rev.den. (March 25, 2015), the court found that a recorded notice of abatement identifying various building code violations at the property was not a notice of violation that triggered Covered Risk 5, based principally on Elysian Investment Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 105 Cal.App.4th 315, 129 Cal.Rptr.2d 372 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2002), which found that a "notice of substandard condition" did not invoke the coverage. The Stockton court also held that the notice of abatement was not a lien or encumbrance on title, and the lack of an exception in the policy did not obligate the insurer to pay to bring the property up to code. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 902 F.Supp.2d 1048 (N.D. Ohio 2012), an Ohio court found that the lis pendens recorded in connection with an action for the appointment of a 7-A administrator to collect rent at an apartment building in New York City was a notice of violation of the city building code. The court bolstered this suspect ruling with the finding that the insurer "was aware of the appointment" of the administrator. An earlier decision by a New York court had held that the appointment of a 7-A administrator was not a defect in title and was not covered by the policy. Zev Cohen, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 15 Misc.3d 798, 831 N.Y.S.2d 689 (N.Y.Sup. 2007).

[16] 105 Cal.App.4th 315, 129 Cal.Rptr.2d 372 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2002).

[17] 16 Cal.App. 4th 992, 20 Cal.Rptr.2d 438 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1993).

[18] 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1991).

> Unlike the Notice at issue in the present case, the CUP amounted to a governmentally imposed encumbrance on title because it limited the right of the owner to convey the property. In addition, the CUP applied only to that specific property, whereas the restrictions at issue here governed all similar property.[19]

The court said the refused to find a duty to recite the notice simply because the exception to the exclusion refers to notices in the real estate records:

> Elysian cannot rely upon an exclusion to coverage to extend coverage. … Unlike an assessment lien, for example, the Notice of substandard dwelling did not affect title. It therefore did not give rise to coverage under the basic insuring provisions of the policy, and the exclusion does not expand that coverage to include the Notice.
>
> Even if the exclusion could be understood as granting coverage based upon the reasonable expectation of the insured, the Notice of substandard dwelling arguably does not fall within the exception to the exclusion.[20]

The court also found that the notice was a warning, not a notice of "enforcement":

> Enforcement … required further action on the part of the city. … Had the Department repaired the property and assessed the costs against the homeowner, the Board of Public Works could ultimately have recorded the assessment as a lien. … Title insurance does not insure against future events. …It is not enough that subsequent events might result in enforcement ultimately affecting title. … As discussed above, the Notice was not a notice of enforcement under municipal procedures. The Notice was instead a warning, preliminary to any formal enforcement action.[21]

Also, even a policy that contains Covered Risk 5 does not provide coverage against building code violations that are evidenced by municipal databases of code violations, when there is no statute granting those records the status of public records that impart notice to buyers of real estate.[22]

---

[19] 105 Cal.App.4th at 323, 129 Cal.Rptr.2d at 378.

[20] 105 Cal.App.4th at 324, 129 Cal.Rptr.2d at 379.

[21] 105 Cal.App.4th at 322, 325; 129 Cal.Rptr.2d at 377, 379-80.

[22] In Glenn v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 1830745 (Mich.App.) (per curiam) (unpublished), a condemnation list kept at the city building department office was determined not to be a public record under the definition found in the Homeowner's policy. Therefore, the effect of the demolition order was excluded. In Logan v. Barretto, 251 A.D.2d 552, 675 N.Y.S.2d 102 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1998), the seller had received two notices that sewage had been discharged onto the surface of the property in violation of the county sanitary code. The court found on summary judgment that the insurer had no duty to search for and disclose this violation, because it was not within the ambit of the policy: "Here, the appellants' standard title insurance policy afforded the plaintiffs coverage for loss

Covered Risk 5 also does not provide protection against recorded instruments that do not have to do with a building code, such as a designation that the parcel is in a special district or contains a historic structure.[23] For example, Dave Robbins Construction, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co.[24] held that Covered Risk 5 was not invoked by the fact that the property had been placed on a historical register, in a set of heritage registry records promulgated by law. The insured received a stop-work order when he began construction, and archeological artifacts were discovered on the property, which delayed construction. The insured argued that the covered risk was invoked because "the stop-work order amounts to enforcement of governmental regulations." The court said that interpretation would unfasten the covered risk from its mooring to matters affecting the title to the property:

> …coverage exists for damage from regulation enforcement only "if a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the ... intention to enforce [.]" Here, … there were no notices of violation or intent to take enforcement action recorded with the county auditor.
>
> DRC claims no such notices need be recorded with the county recorder, because the term "Public Records" as used in the policy includes all records on file with all governmental agencies, including the list of properties kept in the Washington heritage register… . We disagree. … Contrary to DRC's argument, there is nothing in RCW 27.34 declaring the purpose of the Washington heritage register is to impart constructive notice of matters relating to real property to potential purchasers… .[25]

---

occasioned by a defect in title, including liens or encumbrances on the title, or unmarketability of the title. Contrary to the plaintiffs' contention, the notices of non-compliance issued by the County Department of Health are not encumbrances on the title, and do not render title unmarketable. '[M]arketability of title is concerned with impairments on title to a property, i.e., the right to unencumbered ownership and possession, not with legal public regulation of the use of the property'... . Since the Sanitary Code provisions regulate the manner in which the property can be used and do not impair title, the damages claimed by the plaintiffs do not fall within the scope of the title insurance policy." 675 N.Y.S.2d at 103.

[23] In McGonagle v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 432 S.W.3d 535 (Tex.App. -Dallas 2014), the court found that a recorded instrument instructing the owner that a house on the property was historic and would have to be moved rather than torn down was not an encumbrance on title. Thus, the removal of an exception for restrictive covenants of record did not create coverage for the effect of that instrument. However, the policy apparently did not contain Covered Risk 5, and the court did not discuss the exception to Exclusion 1 as found in the 1992 ALTA policy.

[24] 158 Wash.App. 895, 249 P.3d 625 (Wash.App. Div. 1 2010).

[25] 158 Wash.App. at 904, 249 P.3d at 628-9.

11.1.2 Zoning And Other Use Regulation

FORM 35, Appendix A
Zoning ordinance violation

Exclusion 1 of the 1992 and 2006 ALTA policies removes coverage for violations of zoning ordinances, which regulate the use of the property, not its title.[26] Covered Risk 5 of the 2006 ALTA policies protects against loss or damage caused by the "violation or enforcement of any law, ordinance, permit, or governmental regulation (including those relating to building and zoning) restricting, regulating, prohibiting, or relating to (a) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the Land; [or] (b) the character, dimensions, or location of any improvement erected on the Land… if a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the violation or intention to enforce, but only to the extent of the violation or enforcement referred to in that notice." Exclusion 1 in the 2006 ALTA policies is correspondingly limited so as not to negate Covered Risk 5. See §9.12 regarding the definition of "public records" in the policy. The ALTA Homeowner's Policy provides limited assurances as to certain zoning matters. See a discussion of that policy's covered risks at §9.14.2, and its exclusions at §11.10.

This section discusses both the cases that have construed the exclusion and those that have construed Covered Risk 5, because they are two parts of the same subject.

Exclusion 1 negates coverage for restrictions on use of the property that are imposed by zoning ordinances.[27] For example, a setback requirement imposed by a municipality on a subdivision

---

[26] Exclusion 1 of the 2006 ALTA policies excludes from coverage any loss caused by "(a) Any law, ordinance, permit, or governmental regulation (including those relating to building and zoning) restricting, regulating, prohibiting, or relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the Land… ." The ALTA Homeowner's Policy excludes zoning matters at Exclusion 1(b). Exclusion 1 of the ALTA Residential Policy negates coverage for governmental regulation of "land use," which includes zoning.

[27] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Grafton Partners, LLC, 2009 WL 792263 (D.Mass.) (unpublished); Bronen v. New York Abstract Co., 19 A.D.2d 821, 243 N.Y.S.2d 664 (1963); Marine Midland Bank v. Virginia Woods, Ltd., 151 Misc.2d 915, 574 N.Y.S.2d 485 (Putnam Cty.Sup.Ct. 1991); Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975), affirming 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974); Dickins v. Stiles, 81 Wash.App. 670, 916 P.2d 435 (1996). In Notaro Homes, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 309 Ill.App.3d 246, 722 N.E.2d 208, 242 Ill.Dec. 719 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), the court found a zoning matter excluded, and held: "The title insurance policy insures against defects or clouds in the title to the land, not the land itself." 722 N.E.2d at 213, 242 Ill.Dec. at 724. In Batra v. Electronic Land Services, Inc., 41 Misc.3d 1211(A), 2013 WL 5607243 (N.Y.Sup.), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 51644 (U) (unpublished), the court also dismissed a claim by the insured due to a change in zoning that occurred just before closing, saying that zoning is removed from coverage under Exclusion 1, and thus there could be no duty to disclose a fact about a subject that is excluded from coverage. Similarly, the violation of a zoning setback line by a deck was found to be excluded in Wolf v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 690 N.Y.S.2d 880, 180 Misc.2d 307, 1999 N.Y. Slip Op. 99238 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1999). The court said that, "[s]ince zoning laws regulate the manner in which the property can be used and do not impair title, the damages claimed by plaintiffs do not fall within the scope of the title insurance policy… ." Also, in Manor Healthcare Corp. v. Guzzo-Greco, 1988 U.S.Dist. LEXIS 11965 (N.D.Ill.), aff'd on other grounds, 894 F.2d 919 (7th Cir. 1990), an annexation fee imposed by a zoning ordinance was found to be excluded, even if evidence of the fee was obtainable as a public record. Further, because the fee was excluded from policy coverage, the insurer was not negligent in tort liability for not disclosing it. In Gibbs v. Williams, 2015 WL 5440628 (W.D.Wis. 2015) (unpublished), the court held that an attorney for the insureds did not commit malpractice by failing to submit a claim

lot in connection with a zoning variance was found to be an excluded zoning matter, and not an "easement," invoking the exclusion:

> The 45-foot setback was created by a resolution of a board of adjustment and was indicated on a subdivision plan that was never recorded or required to be recorded. Because this claim of loss arises out of the exercise of the police power..., the exclusion applies.[28]

The zoning exclusion has been found to be a reasonable limitation on policy coverage.[29]

Various other use restrictions imposed by ordinance have also been found to fall under the zoning exclusion.[30] Exclusion 1 also negates coverage for the effect of a wetlands designation[31] and rights that are imposed on the use of the property based on the common law.[32] However, the exclusion does not encompass regulations that affect the vesting of title to real estate, and which do notice to the insurer concerning a recorded use restriction prohibiting use of the property for a business, because a county zoning ordinance also prohibited the property's use as a resort. The court held that, because the policy included Exclusion 1, the insureds "could not recover under the title policy." In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 88 N.Y.S.3d 806, 62 Misc.3d 313, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 28357 (Suffolk Cty. 2018), the court found that a limitation on the number of buildable lots in a development, adopted as a condition to the rezoning of the property, was excluded from coverage under Exclusion 1(a), and that the lack of coverage was not affected by the fact that a document had been recorded that recited the limitation.

---

[28] Aldrich v. Hawrylo, 656 A.2d 1304, 1309 (N.J. Super. 1995).

[29] In Notaro Homes, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 309 Ill.App.3d 246, 722 N.E.2d 208, 242 Ill.Dec. 719 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), the court said: "[The title insurer] was entitled to exclude coverage of zoning ordinances from the title policy. Plaintiff has not cited a case that holds that a title insurer is prohibited from excluding certain recorded instruments such as zoning ordinances from coverage." 722 N.E.2d at 214, 242 Ill.Dec. at 725.

[30] In Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. N.C. 1998), ordinances which prohibited certain uses of property within a designated distance from the shore of a river were found not to affect title and to be excluded by Exclusion 1. In Sonnett v. First American Title Ins. Co., 309 P.3d 799, 2013 WY 106 (Wyo. 2013), the court found that a "master plan" of use restrictions that an owner imposed on his own property in order to get a zoning change were part of the zoning use conditions, not a declaration of restrictions, and therefore were excluded from coverage.

[31] Manley v. Cost Control Marketing & Management, Inc., 583 A.2d 442 (Pa.Super.Ct. 1990).

[32] In Kahama VI, LLC v. HJH, LLC, 2016 WL 7104175 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court held that the public's right to use the beaches along the Atlantic Ocean fell under Exclusion 1, for governmental regulation of the use of the land. In City of Daytona Beach v. Tona-Rama, Inc., 294 So.2d 73 (Fla. 1974), the Florida high court recognized the public's rights in beaches along the ocean but held that "[t]his right of customary use of the dry sand area of the beaches by the public does not create any interest in the land itself." The Kahama court said that the public's rights have been labeled by Florida courts as emanating from the "law of custom," the "common law" or a "source of law" but, whatever the source of those rights, they are not a title interest in the property and are a regulation on the property's use. This ruling is similar to the holding in R.W. Docks & Slips v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2001 WL 856431 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) that the state's authority to regulate the use of the bed of Lake Superior, based on the public trust doctrine, was excluded from coverage.

not merely regulate the property's use.[33]

A zoning ordinance does not spill out of the exclusion just because the insured labels its violation as rendering title unmarketable.[34] In Notaro Homes, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[35] the court conducted a painstaking analysis, after which it concluded that a zoning ordinance limiting the number of dwelling units on the property was not a lien or encumbrance. Thus, the ordinance would not release a purchaser from the obligation to buy, and the policy definition of marketability was not met. Rather, the court found that the insured had "confused marketability of title with marketability of land."[36] The court distinguished Radovanov v. Land Title Company of America, Inc.,[37] which had found that a lawsuit for violation of building code orders made title unmarketable, thus allowing an end-run around the building code ordinance exclusion. See §9.8.2 for a complete discussion of the difference between marketability of title and the salability of the property.

Covered Risk 5 is not invoked by zoning documents that are not recorded.[38] Therefore, as explained in Haw River Land & Timber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[39] > in order to be contained in the "public records," as used in the ALTA title policy, a notice of enforcement or of an encumbrance would have to be recorded in one of these public records designed to put purchasers of real property on constructive

---

[33] In 212 Marin Boulevard, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 8849641 (N.J.A.D. 2015) (unpublished), cert.den. 223 N.J. 280 (Oct. 5, 2015), the insured took title to a parcel by a deed issued by a railroad. Later, the deed was attacked as failing to grant good title because the railroad did not get authority to abandon the rail line from the Surface Transportation Board, and certain governmental bodies had rails-to-trails rights in the land. The insurer said that the STB abandonment rules merely regulated the property's use, invoking Exclusion 1, but the court disagreed, because the lack of an abandonment order divests the grantee of the title passed by the railroad's deed.

[34] In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 88 N.Y.S.3d 806, 62 Misc.3d 313, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 28357 (Suffolk Cty. 2018), the court found that a limitation on the number of buildable lots in a development, adopted as a condition to the rezoning of the property, was excluded from coverage under Exclusion 1(a). The court said the zoning restriction did not render title unmarketable.

[35] 309 Ill.App.3d 246, 722 N.W.2d 208, 242 Ill.Dec. 719 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), reh.den., app.den. 189 Ill.2d 661, 731 N.E.2d 765, 246 Ill.Dec. 916 (2000).

[36] 309 Ill.App.3d at 253, 722 N.W.2d at 213, 242 Ill.Dec. at 724.

[37] 189 Ill.App.3d 433, 545 N.E.2d 351, 136 Ill.Dec. 827 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1989).

[38] See Aldrich v. Hawrylo, 656 A.2d 1304, 1309 (N.Y. Super. 1995), which acknowledged that general-application police power regulations are excluded because they "cannot be ascertained from an examination of the title records." However, in Whitlock v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 4549367 (D.S.C.) (unpublished), the court held that zoning records were in fact "public records," which term the court found "patently ambiguous" despite the policy definition. It relied on New England Federal Credit Union v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 171 Vt. 326, 765 A.2d 450 (Vt. 2000) as authority for the notion that the policy definition was ambiguous. See §9.12 for a complete discussion of that definition. Whitlock was followed in a second decision involving the same zoning ordinances and nearly identical facts, in Lyons v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 415 S.C. 115, 781 S.E.2d 126 (S.C.App. 2015).

[39] 152 F.3d 275 (4th Cir. (N.C.) 1998).

notice about matters affecting title to the property which they are purchasing.[40]

The Haw River court stated:

> [I]n North Carolina, as elsewhere, zoning or environmental laws of general application, which are not recorded against specific parcels of property, are generally excluded from standard-form ALTA title insurance policies.

Thus, even though the ordinances in question in Haw River were filed in a book in the office of the register of deeds, they did not impart constructive notice as to the title to the land, and were excluded from coverage. See §9.12 for a discussion of "public records" as defined in the policies.

The assurance of Covered Risk 5 is limited to recorded instruments that inform the purchaser of the intent to enforce a zoning ordinance violation, which does not encompass records evidencing a property's zoning classification or a conditional use permit.[41] The court found that the mere recording of a zoning ordinance was not an act of enforcement, in Notaro Homes, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.[42] That court declared:

> Moreover, Black's Law Dictionary defines "enforcement" thusly: "The act of putting something such as a law into effect; the execution of a law; the carrying out of a mandate or command." Black's Law Dictionary 528 (6th ed.1990). We find nothing in that definition that supports the view that recording the amendment is an act of enforcement. Further, the subject zoning ordinance expressly states that the ordinance shall be "in full force and effect from and after its passage and approval according to law." Thus, the recording of the amendment adds nothing in terms of its enforcement.[43]

The court distinguished 1119 Delaware v. Continental Land Title Co.,[44] which held that a conditional use permit was a restriction affecting title, because that conditional use permit was recorded pursuant to a law that provided that such a notice would impart constructive notice. The [40] The phrase "one of these public records" referred to the dockets and indices that North Carolina statutes declare as imparting constructive notice to purchasers: the Registration of Titles book, lien book, Record of Lis Pendens, judgment docket and Book of Wills.

---

[41] In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 88 N.Y.S.3d 806, 62 Misc.3d 313, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 28357 (Suffolk Cty. 2018), the court found that a limitation on the number of buildable lots in a development, adopted as a condition to the rezoning of the property, was excluded from coverage under Exclusion 1(a). It also said that the lack of coverage was not affected by the fact that a document had been recorded that recited the limitation, because the recorded instrument did not affect title.

[42] 309 Ill.App.3d 246, 722 N.E.2d 208, 242 Ill.Dec. 719 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999).

[43] 309 Ill.App.3d at 255, 722 N.E.2d at 214, 242 Ill.Dec. at 724.

[44] 16 Cal.App. 4th 992, 20 Cal.Rptr.2d 438 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1993).

1119 Delaware court had apparently been strongly influenced by the fact that the legislative history for the statute it was construing had been supported by the California Land Title Association, and that organization had stated in support of its passage that the law would:

> ...enable persons dealing with real property to be apprised of the fact of any restrictions on the owner's ability to convey the real property which have been imposed by a municipality. This will be accomplished by requiring such restrictions to be recorded in a manner which will impart construction notice.[45]

The Notaro Homes court contrasted that unusual circumstance with the fact that zoning ordinances of general application are not recorded in the chain of title, and do not affect specific named parcels of land.

Finally, although Exclusion 1 specifically includes building and zoning ordinances, its greater subject is "laws and regulations ... restricting or regulating ... the ... use or enjoyment of the land." This applies to non-zoning laws of general application that restrict or regulate the property's use. In Security Union Title Ins. Co. v. Usnick,[46] the court found that treaty provisions allowing Native Americans to take shellfish from tidelands in the State of Washington were excluded:

> The insurers note that treaties between the United States government and American Indian tribes are part of the "supreme Law of the Land." U.S. Const. Art. VI. They say that the purpose of the "law" exclusion is to protect the insurers from defects in title which cannot be discovered in the public records for a particular parcel, since they have general application, and because legal interpretation is by nature unpredictable. This, they say, is as true for rights based in treaties as in laws or regulations.

In response, the insureds who claimed coverage argued that the treaties created private rather than governmental rights. However, the court said, "many governmental restrictions on land and land use inure to third parties." The Usnick court relied on Dyer & Moody, Inc. v. Dynamic Constructors, Inc.[47] That decision also involved a law that did not fit neatly under the heading of either building code or zoning, but which regulated the use of land. In Dyer, the insured filled in a drainage ditch on his property. Judgment was entered against him for the cost of a drain pipe to be built on his land to replace the ditch, because Louisiana law prohibits tampering with a natural servitude. The seller's title insurer asserted that state civil code that imposed the burden on the owner did not affect title and was excluded under Exclusion 1. The court agreed on both counts:

> It is clear from the nature of the present lawsuit that "title" is in no way involved. The

---

[45] 20 Cal.Rptr.2d at 445.

[46] Dec. 15, 1998, case no's C97-1986L and C98-1445L, U.S.Dist.Ct. W.D.Wash. (unpublished).

[47] 357 So.2d 615 (La. 1978).

> fact that an owner of the subject property obstructed a natural servitude of drainage did not create a defect in the title to the subject property. … Louisiana Civil Code Article 660 restricts the building of any work that would prevent the natural running or flow of water; and, consequently, restricts the use or enjoyment of the land within the express exclusionary clause of the subject title insurance policy.[48]

11.1.3 Subdivision Laws

FORM 37, Appendix A
Subdivision law violation

Exclusion 1 of the 1992 and 2006 ALTA policies removes coverage for the effect or a violation of a subdivision law or ordinance, which regulates the use of the property, not its title. Covered Risk 5 of the 2006 ALTA policies protects against loss or damage caused by the "violation or enforcement of any law, ordinance, permit, or governmental regulation (including those relating to building and zoning) restricting, regulating, prohibiting, or relating to … (c) the subdivision of land… if a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the violation or intention to enforce, but only to the extent of the violation or enforcement referred to in that notice." Exclusion 1 in the 2006 ALTA policies is correspondingly limited so as not to negate Covered Risk 5. The ALTA Homeowner's Policy provides a limited assurance as to violations of subdivision laws. See a discussion of that policy's covered risks at §9.14.2, and its exclusions at §11.10.

This section discusses both the cases that have construed the exclusion and those that have construed Covered Risk 5, because they are two parts of the same subject.

Exclusion 1 removes coverage for loss or damage due to the fact that the insured parcel was created by an illegal land division, whether by a deed,[49] mortgage[50] or a subdivision plat for which the necessary approvals and permits were not obtained.[51] The exclusion applies even if the effect of

---

[48] 357 So.2d at 619.

[49] Whaley v. First American Title Co. of the Mid-West, 2004 WL 316978 (Tenn.App. 2004) (unpublished) (policy does not protect against effect of illegal land division effected by a deed).

[50] C & G Farms Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 1281847 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished) (no policy coverage when insured lenders each received deeds of trust on different parts of a 40-acre tract without the benefit of a subdivision plat or any governmental approval for the land division); Security Service Federal Credit Union v. First American Title Ins. Co., 585 Fed.Appx. 591, 2014 WL 5438805 (9th Cir. (Cal.) 2014) (unpublished) (loan policy did not protect lender against seller's failure to obtain permission to subdivide parcel, especially since lender had taken back all subdivided on foreclosure land and could sell it as one parcel). However, in First Alliance Bank v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co. (In re Evans), 2012 WL 2374237 (Bkcy.S.D.Miss.) (unpublished), an insurer that cleared title for a lender on parcels that were created by an illegal subdivision was found to be obligated to obtain approval for the subdivision; the policy exclusion was not applicable, because the insurer was taking action under its separate covenant to clear title diligently..

[51] Busch v. Nervik, 38 Wash.App. 541, 687 P.2d 872 (1984); Nishiyama v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 85 Cal.App.3d Supp. 1, 149 Cal.Rptr. 355 (1978); Northern California Community Development Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2019

the subdivision law violation is to render the conveyance to the insured void.[52] The exclusion also applies to negate coverage for loss or damage suffered by the insured due to the owner's lack of a right to further divide the insured parcel, which lack of right was evidenced by a recorded instrument.[53]

Exclusion 1 also negates coverage for the claimed diminution in the value of the land due to its failure to comply with a subdivision law or ordinance, including the effect of that violation on the owner's ability to obtain other permits for its use.[54] However, under a 2006 ALTA policy that contains Covered Risk 5 or a 1992 ALTA policy with the exception to the exclusion, the insurer is responsible for diminution or the cost to cure if a notice of violation or the intent to enforce the subdivision regulation was in the public records on the date of policy.[55] Vermont has held that the

---

WL 1397040 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished) (no coverage for failed land development, which was due in part to lack of compliance with subdivision ordinances).

[52] Whaley v. First American Title Co. of the Mid-West, 2004 WL 316978 (Tenn.App. 2004) (unpublished) (policy does not protect against effect of illegal land division); Yellowstone II Development Group, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 Mont. 223, 20 P.3d 755 (Mont. 2001) (policy does not assure compliance with subdivision laws or right to make further subdivisions). In Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 275 Mont. 111, 911 P.2d 209 (1996), Ownership of America received a deed describing land as a lot in a plat which was never recorded. The "platted" land was thus never divided on the tax roll. The insured, McDonald, obtained a deed from Ownership to the entire parcel, by capitalizing on the lack of a valid description for the unplatted lot. The court ruled that the deed to Ownership was void because it violated the state subdivision law, and thus Ownership had no title to transfer to McDonald. In McDonald's suit on the policy, the court found that Exclusion 1 negated coverage against the defect in the deed.

[53] Yellowstone II Development Group, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 Mont. 223, 20 P.3d 755 (Mont. 2001) (policy does not assure compliance with subdivision laws or right to make further subdivisions, even though title agent was aware that right to divide property was important factor to insured); Dollinger DeAnza Associates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 199 Cal.App.4th 1132, 131 Cal.Rptr.3d 596 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 2011) (exclusion applied to recorded notice of intent to merge parcels, not excepted in the policy, which the court found was pursuant to subdivision ordinances and did not affect title).

[54] In Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 234 P.2d 625 (1951), the policy was found not to cover claimed diminution in value caused by the subdivider's failure to post bonds for street improvements, which in turn caused the municipality to refuse to issue a building permit. In Lauritzen v. First American Title Ins. Co., 424 P.3d 1043, 2018 UT App 58 (Utah App. 2018), a subdivision plat was amended to correct a boundary line. The court held that a modified setback line imposed on the amended plat did not affect title or create a loss payable under the policy.

[55] Yellowstone II Development Group, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 Mont. 223, 20 P.3d 755 (Mont. 2001) (policy does not assure compliance with subdivision laws or right to make further subdivisions, even though title agent was aware that right to divide property was important factor to insured); Whaley v. First American Title Co. of the Mid-West, 2004 WL 316978 (Tenn.App. 2004) (unpublished) (policy does not protect against effect of illegal land division); Dollinger DeAnza Associates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 199 Cal.App.4th 1132, 131 Cal.Rptr.3d 596 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 2011) (exclusion applied to recorded notice of intent to merge parcels, not excepted in the policy, which the court found was pursuant to subdivision ordinances and did not affect title); Security Service Fed. Credit Union v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 5954815 (C.D.Cal.) (unpublished) (loan policy did not protect lender against seller's failure to obtain permission to subdivide parcel, especially since lender had taken back all subdivided on foreclosure land and could sell it as one parcel, relying on Dollinger). However, in First Alliance Bank v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co. (In re Evans), 2012 WL 2374237 (Bkcy.S.D.Miss.) (unpublished), when the policy insured a mortgage on a parcel created by an illegal subdivision, and the insurer resolved a covered lien problem by conveying the property to the insured lender, the court found that the obligation to clear title diligently was a separate contractual lack of a subdivision permit issued by a state agency is "a notice" of violation in the "public records" (meaning the records in Montpelier of permits issued), and thus that the coverage was invoked.[56]

When the insured owns all of the parcels that were created by an unpermitted land division, the insurer has the further argument that the insured may cure the subdivision regulation violation, and has incurred no loss, which courts have found to support the finding that the insured has not suffered "actual monetary loss or damage" due to the land division.[57] The policy does not give the undertaking, and that the insurer violated that duty and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by delivering title without first obtaining approval for the subdivision. The court held that the policy exclusion was not applicable, because the insurer was taking action under its separate covenant to clear title diligently. In New England Federal Credit Union v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 171 Vt. 326, 765 A.2d 450 (Vt. 2000), the land was divided by the sale of part of the parcel. The owners got a deferral of the subdivision permit requirement because they retained a vacant parcel of less than ten acres. Later, however, they sold the retained parcel, and a remote grantee built a house on it. He got a building permit, but no subdivision permit. A policy was issued to his lender, New England Federal, which took title on foreclosure. New England Federal then sold the property "at a decreased value of $10,734" because of the lack of a permit. The court found that the exception to Exclusion as recited in the lender's 1992 ALTA Loan policy applied, affording coverage for the diminution in value.

---

[56] New England Federal Credit Union v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 171 Vt. 326, 765 A.2d 450 (Vt. 2000). The court highlighted the tug of war over the policy's definition of "public records" by asserting that it would not have reached the same result had the 1992 ALTA policy retained the definition found in the 1984 policy, which read "those records in which under state statutes, deeds, mortgages, lis pendens, liens or other title encumbrances must be recorded in order to impart constructive notice to purchasers of the land...[but that,] without limitation, such records shall not be construed to include records in any of the offices of federal, state or local environmental protection, zoning, building, health or public safety authorities." The court noted that the last phrase, which was dropped from the 1992 definition, had been the basis for the decision in Somerset Savings Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 420 Mass. 422, 649 N.E.2d 1123, 1126 (Mass. 1995), that held that Exclusion 1 negated coverage for the failure to obtain a permit from the commonwealth's secretary of transportation to build on former railroad land, as required by statute. The Vermont legislature later amended the subdivision law to require recording of subdivision permits in the real estate records, and declaring that the failure to obtain or record a permit does not affect the marketability of title. 18 V.S.A. §§ 1218(d)(1), 1221a(a), which should render the ruling in New England Federal a historical anomaly. In addition, the Vermont high court refused to extend New England Federal, however, in Kremer v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 177 Vt. 553, 861 A.2d 1103, 2004 VT 91 (Vt. 2004). In Kremer, the sellers to the insureds failed to get a plumbing permit for an addition that overloaded the septic system, causing it to fail. The insureds sued under the policy, on the theory that the failure to get a septic permit was an encumbrance that should have been shown on the title policy. The Kremers invoked the toxic logic of New England Federal that there is coverage for the lack of a permit unless there is an exception in the policy. The only real distinction from New England Federal was the type of permit and where the permit records were located (at the town rather than the state). Rather than revisit the coverage issue, however, the court concluded that it was not clear that a septic permit was required, and that "it is not the duty of the title insurer to make up for the shortcomings of a town's septic regulations." 177 Vt. at 556, 861 A.2d at 1107.

[57] Dollinger DeAnza Associates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 199 Cal.App.4th 1132, 131 Cal.Rptr.3d 596 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 2011) (exclusion applied to recorded notice of intent to merge parcels, not excepted in the policy, which the court found was pursuant to subdivision ordinances and did not affect title); Security Service Fed. Credit Union v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 5954815 (C.D.Cal.) (unpublished) (loan policy did not protect lender against seller's failure to obtain permission to subdivide parcel, especially since lender had taken back all subdivided on foreclosure land and could sell it as one parcel, relying on Dollinger). However, in Burgess v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 65 Va. Cir. 311, 2004 WL 1713732 (Va.Cir.Ct. 2004), when the policy described the property as being two separate lots, but the municipality took the position that there was only one parcel, the trial court refused to dismiss an insured's claim of unmarketable title. It said that "the number of lots to be conveyed is a core issue relating to the legally recognized rights assurance that land may be divided, or that an existing division is valid and permitted. If the policy contains Covered Risk 5, it protects only against the loss caused by a recorded notice of violation, which is the negative obverse of such an assurance of compliance. Further, since in most jurisdictions even a permit that has been granted is not a vested property right, a property owner can have no vested right in a land division for which the necessary permits were not obtained.

If the insured is unable to record the conveyance to be insured because the recorder identified the land as being described as an illegal parcel, the issue is usually more about escrow or closing duties. The exclusion may or may not apply.[58]

Many state laws provide rescission as a remedy for a person who buys land that has already been subdivided without the necessary permits. A borrower's threat to rescind the purchase due to an alleged illegal subdivision did not invoke the coverage of a policy issued to the borrower's lender, in large part because the borrower did not actually rescind.[59] When the insured rescinds and is repaid the purchase price in exchange for a reconveyance, the policy terminates and the insured does not suffer a loss compensable under the policy. Thus, when an insured owner submits a claim based on an illegal subdivision of land, in addition to raising the exclusion, the insurer will typically explain to the insured that no loss would be payable in any event, because the insured may exercise his or her remedy of rescission.

---

of the parties." The insurer correctly argued on demurrer that it used the existing legal descriptions, the issue of one parcel versus two does not make title unmarketable, and that the policy does not assure the existence of more than one parcel. The court did not rest its decision on Exclusion 1.

[58] In Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 666188 (W.D.Pa.) (unpublished), a deed and the insured mortgage were rejected for recording because they conveyed a parcel created by a land division map that has not been approved and filed. The court did not directly reach the issue of the exclusion's applicability, but did find a duty to defend the insured lender in a quiet title action premised on the defect in the land division. The court said the subdivision exclusion may not apply.

[59] Security Service Fed. Credit Union v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 5954815 (C.D.Cal.) (unpublished).

11.1.4 Environmental Liens

FORM 34, Appendix A
Presence of hazardous material not an encumbrance

Exclusion 1(a) of the ALTA policies excludes regulation "relating to ... environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations," unless "a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the violation or intention to enforce, but only to the extent of the violation or enforcement referred to in that notice." Covered Risk 5 of the 2006 ALTA policies protects against loss or damage caused by the "violation or enforcement of any law, ordinance, permit, or governmental regulation (including those relating to building and zoning) restricting, regulating, prohibiting, or relating to … (d) environmental protection… if a notice, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records setting forth the violation or intention to enforce, but only to the extent of the violation or enforcement referred to in that notice." Before the 1987 form of the ALTA policy, no such exclusion existed specifically for environmental matters.[60] Until the 2006 ALTA policy, there was no Covered Risk pertaining to "environmental protection."

This section discusses both the cases that have construed the exclusion and those that have construed Covered Risk 5, because they are two parts of the same subject.

Even before there was any affirmative assurance about "environmental protection," insureds advanced several arguments as to why the policy should provide coverage against environmental contamination or possible inchoate liens.

The first assertion was that the physical presence of hazardous substances on the property renders its title unmarketable. In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar,[61] the hazardous material was discovered shortly after purchase, and the insured ordered to clean it up. The insured argued that the clean-up order rendered title unmarketable. The court held that, while the property may not have much market value, its title was not unmarketable as of policy date. The same ruling was made in Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.[62] See the discussion in §9.8.2 of the marketability argument raised by these cases.

Another argument advanced by insureds was that a super-priority environmental clean-up law rendered the presence of hazardous waste on the property a latent "encumbrance" or "cloud" on title. The insureds asserted that the waste itself was on the property on the policy date, and the waste was what led to the possibility of a lien being filed. In each case, the court rejected this argument, holding that no lien existed on policy date, and the physical presence of a substance is not an "encumbrance" or "cloud" on title.[63]

---

[60] For a complete history of the exclusion, see Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2014-2015 Edition, Chapter 16 (written by Robert S. Bozarth), West/Thomson Reuters.

[61] 24 Mass.App.Ct. 53, 506 N.E.2d 154 (Mass.App. 1987).

[62] 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1991).

[63] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Kumar, 24 Mass.App.Ct. 53, 506 N.E.2d 154 (1987); Lick Mill Creek Apartments v.

In Lick Mill Creek Apartments v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[64] an endorsement issued to a lender was found to insure the lender only that its lien had priority over any lien for environmental clean-up expense. The lender had come into title after foreclosure, and then received notice of the state's intent to clean up the property. The lender sued for payment of the cleanup expense. The court held that no lien had been filed, and thus the coverage of the endorsement could not have been triggered. It also rejected an argument, couched in terms of public policy, that the endorsement should be read broadly to assist in the statute's stated purpose of ensuring immediate response to pollution.

Because the mere presence of hazardous material is not considered to be a defect in title under the policy, the Lick Mill court specifically held that it was not necessary to determine whether or not Exclusion 1(a) of the 1970 form ALTA policy applied. It ruled that the insured had no reasonable expectation of coverage against environmental cleanup charges based on the fact that it obtained a 1970 form policy and two 1987 form policies in the same transaction, containing different exclusions.

No decision has been issued that interprets the "environmental protection" assurance found in Covered Risk 5 of the 2006 ALTA policies.[65]

Chicago Title Ins. Co., 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1991); South Shore Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 688 F.Supp. 803 (D.Mass. 1988). See also Holly Hill Holdings v. Lowman, 30 Conn.App. 204, 619 A.2d 853 (Conn.App. 1993), also finding that hazardous waste does not render title unmarketable, but in the context of a suit between buyer and seller. See also, Gosfield, Environmental Contamination and Title Conveyance, 25 Real Estate Review 55, No. 2, Summer, 1994.

[64] 231 Cal.App.3d 1654, 283 Cal.Rptr. 231 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1991).

[65] A New Jersey case concerned a recorded notice that fill (not contaminated property) had improperly been dumped on protected wetlands. The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection recorded the notice of violation with the Somerset County Clerk. The First American policy did not except the recorded notice of violation. The notice was not discovered in the title search because it "did not name the property owner, and was not attached to or noted on the deed to the property…" The NJDEP sued the insured, an operator and the former owners to require them to restore the wetlands. The sellers and operator jointly agreed to do so, an estimated cost of $2.3 million. First American was sued for policy limits of $300,000. The trial court held that the notice of violation was a "public record." First American appealed certain issues, but voluntarily dismissed its appeal about that ruling. Thus, the appeals court did not rule on the scope of the covered risk or the exclusion. New Jersey Dep't of Environmental Protection v. DiFlorio, 2007 WL 4553046 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished).

11.1.5 Police Power And Eminent Domain

FORM 33, Appendix A
Police power exclusion

FORM 72, Appendix A
Police power--denial of permit

Exclusions 1(b) and 2 of the 2006 ALTA policies negate coverage for "any governmental police power" and "rights of eminent domain." The police power exclusion, 1(b), states that it "does not modify or limit the coverage provided under Covered Risk 6." The eminent domain exclusion, 2, makes the same statement in relation to Covered Risks 7 and 8.

In the 2006 ALTA policies, Covered Risk 6, conversely, indemnifies the insured against loss caused by "[a]n enforcement action based on the exercise of a governmental police power not covered by Covered Risk 5 if a notice of the enforcement action, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records, but only to the extent of the enforcement referred to in that notice." Covered Risk 7 protects against an exercise of the right of eminent domain "if a notice of the exercise, describing any part of the Land, is recorded in the Public Records." Covered Risk 8 protects against "[a]ny taking by a governmental body that has occurred and is binding on the rights of a purchaser for value without Knowledge." See §9.9.2 for a discussion of these Covered Risks.

The 1992 ALTA policies contained very similar language, except that the Covered Risks appeared as exceptions to the exclusions.

This section discusses both the cases that have construed Exclusion 1(a) and those that have construed Covered Risk 6, because they are two parts of the same subject.

The police power exclusion applies to government's right to exercise control over real estate for public purposes or needs, on subjects other than building code, zoning, subdivision and other ordinances and laws listed in Exclusion 1(a).[66] The police power exclusion applied to a resolution

---

[66] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. OMG Americas, Inc., 2012 WL 4856391 (D. Utah) (unpublished), the court held that the exclusion was not invoked when the Bureau of Indian Affairs asserted that a lease that it had signed only five years before was invalid because the signers lacked the authority to bind the agency. The court said the BIA's termination of the lease "was based on procedural defects and not an exercise of police power." In R.W. Docks & Slips v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2001 WL 856431 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), rev.den., the insurer had issued policies on marina condominium units. The policy contained exceptions for rights of the public in submerged lands, and governmental rights to regulate the surface. The court found that the policy did not have a duty to prosecute an appeal from the denial of a dredging permit in which the state DNR had threatened to claim that the condominium regime violated the public trust doctrine. The court found that the insurer was not obligated to defend "Docks's title in or use of Lake Superior's bed against Wisconsin's right to regulate" because the policy did not claim to assure that Docks owned the bed of Lake Superior. Further, Chicago Title could not have warranted that Docks owned title to Lake Superior's bed because Wisconsin law does not allow private citizens to own any part of Lake Superior's bed. Under its public trust doctrine, the state holds the beds of navigable waters, including Lake Superior, in trust for all of its citizens." Similarly, in Kahama VI, LLC v. HJH, LLC, 2016 WL 7104175 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court held that the public's right to use the beaches along the Atlantic Ocean fell under Exclusion 1, for governmental regulation of the use of the land. In City of Daytona Beach v. Tona-Rama, Inc., 294 So.2d 73 (Fla. 1974), the Florida high court recognized the public's rights in beaches along the ocean but held that "[t]his right of customary use of the dry sand area of the beaches by the public does not create any interest in the land itself." The Kahama court said that the public's rights have been labeled by Florida prohibiting vehicular access to the insured property, when such access was found to be "contrary to the public peace, safety and welfare" of the local citizenry.[67] The exclusion also negates any coverage against loss claimed because the insured property has been designated a wetland.[68] The police power exclusion may also defeat liability for loss of title because of a drug forfeiture. Forfeitures are discussed in detail in §9.13. However, the policy power exclusion does not bar coverage for governmental action that attacks the validity of the title conveyed to the insured.[69]

Exclusion 2 is for "[r]ights of eminent domain," with the important caveat that the exclusion "does not modify or limit the coverage provided under Covered Risk 7 or 8." The eminent domain exclusion negates coverage for a taking of all or some of the insured parcel that has already occurred as of the policy date.[70] A condemnation is an involuntary transfer of title. If Exclusion 2 were not modified by Covered Risks 7 and 8, the policy would provide no indemnity for the loss of the insured land on condemnation. This exclusion has existed for decades because, in many jurisdictions, condemnation actions are conducted by administrative agencies without the filing of any document in the real estate records. A title insurer has no way of limiting the risk of this type of failure of title by the searching of real estate records.

Exclusion 2 is limited, however, by Covered Risks 7 and 8. Covered Risk 7 is for eminent courts as emanating from the "law of custom," the "common law" or a "source of law" but, whatever the source those rights, they are not a title interest in the property and are a regulation on the property's use.

---

[67] Marriott Financial Services, Inc. v. Capitol Funds, Inc., 288 N.C. 122, 217 S.E.2d 551 (1975); aff'g 23 N.C.App. 377, 209 S.E.2d 423 (1974).

[68] In Manley v. Cost Control Marketing and Managements Inc., the court stated: "The [trial] court ... acknowledged that a wetland designation is a governmental regulation restricting the use and enjoyment of the land and regulating the character, dimension and location of improvements erected on the land, a matter not disputed by Appellant. ... Appellant's allegation regarding [the title agent's] knowledge or ability to learn of the wetlands designation is irrelevant in view of the policy language." 583 A.2d 442, 444 (Sup.Ct.Pa. 1990).

[69] In 212 Marin Boulevard, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 8849641 (N.J.A.D. 2015) (unpublished), cert.den. 223 N.J. 280 (Oct. 5, 2015), the insured took title to a parcel by a deed issued by a railroad. Later, the deed was attacked as failing to grant good title because the railroad did not get authority to abandon the rail line from the Surface Transportation Board, and certain governmental bodies had rails-to-trails rights in the land. The insurer said that the assertion of the lack of an STB abandonment order invoked the police power exclusion. The court disagreed. It said that, "in essence, the intent of this exclusion was to preclude coverage when governmental police power has been exercised or threatened with regard to the property or its structures; it places the burden on the recipient of title to investigate the effect of local ordinances and land resolutions on the property." The court said that "Jersey City claims the conveyances to plaintiffs were void; it is not seeking or attempting to exercise its police power regarding plaintiffs' anticipated use of the property."

[70] See Raymond J. Werner, The Basics of Title Insurance, in Title Insurance: The Lawyer's Expanding Role, ABA Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, at p. 3. Mr. Werner states: "The policy also excludes coverage for the loss resulting from the exercise of eminent domain rights unless notice of the exercise of such rights appears in the public records at the date of policy. Again, the exclusion recognizes the fact that real estate is by nature subject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain and there is no way to protect against the exercise of that right. However, this exclusion would not apply if a document such as a lis pendens relating to a pending eminent domain proceeding has been filed in the public records at the date of policy."

domain, and Covered Risk 8 is for "takings." In most contexts, those terms are used interchangeably. Further, the two covered risks are both tied to the one exclusion, for "rights of eminent domain." This could be interpreted as a suggestion that the policy drafters viewed eminent domain and takings as two different subjects. The reality is more mundane. Exclusion 2 of the 1970 ALTA policies was for rights of eminent domain "unless notice of the exercise of such rights appears in the public records at Date of Policy." The exclusion was modified in 1987 to append to that phrase the additional phrase "but not excluding from coverage any taking which has occurred prior to Date of Policy which would be binding on the rights of a purchaser for value without knowledge." The "unless…" phrase and the "but not excluding…" phrase both limited the exclusion for "rights of eminent domain," making a very ungainly policy term. When the exceptions to the exclusion were excised and converted to covered risks, they were simply turned into two coverages instead of one.

Covered Risk 7 refers to a recorded notice of the "exercise" of eminent domain, which may include notices about an intended condemnation that has not yet occurred. The 1970 policy that incorporated that language followed a New York decision from 1962, one of the few that has ever discussed policy coverage and condemnations. In that case, Ascot Homes, Inc. v. Lawyers Mortgage & Title Co.,[71] the insured home builder discovered after it had bought a lot in 1960 that the town had adopted an acquisition map in 1950 that showed its intent to acquire the front 14 feet of the parcel. The town refused to include that strip in setting the setback line as part of Ascot's request for a building permit, even though it had not paid for the land yet. Ascot said that it lost the home buyer as a result. Although Ascot was premised on the zoning exclusion, it has always been discussed in relation to the eminent domain exclusion, because that was the true subject of the acquisition map. Thus, it seems likely that the carve-out for "notice of the exercise of" eminent domain in the public records was prompted by Ascot. Still, the acquisition map in Ascot Homes was not what would normally be considered a notice of exercise, and thus would likely not invoke Covered Risk 7. That map did not "exercise" the condemnation power. It was common practice in the mid-twentieth century for a city to adopt a resolution or map notifying owners that it intended to widen certain roads some day and to record or file the resolution or map. Many of those roads were never widened to the stated widths. However, as in Ascot, those resolutions served to force owners to build their houses far enough away from the right-of-way so that the municipality would not have to buy the buildings or pay large condemnation awards if they condemned the widened street path. Such resolutions are not the exercise of condemnation powers, which require payment of awards.

Covered Risk 8, by contrast, refers to takings that have already occurred on the policy date. The coverage protects the insured only if there was adequate notice of the condemnation to bind a bona fide purchaser but the land was still included in the policy (and thus the sale). This would presumably occur only if the insurer failed to discover the condemnation notice in its title search. Covered Risk 8 also followed a New York decision on condemnation, the 1981 chapter of the Smirlock litigation saga.[72] In that decision, the court held that the insured was protected against the effect of the condemnation of adjoining streets that had occurred two years before the purchase. The court said that the insurer's "title searchers failed to check the master card on file at the Nassau County Clerk's office covering the applicable section and block which would have revealed these condemnations." [The policy did not insure the title to the streets, which were not owned by the insured. It assured "the ordinary rights of access and egress belonging to abutting owners."] The streets were blocked off, the insured's lucrative tenant left, and the insured lost the property in foreclosure. The Smirlock court held that the insured was entitled to indemnity due to the insurer's failure to locate the evidence of the prior condemnation. ALTA modified the exclusion six years later, in 1987. Again, however, the language change is unremarkable, since the Smirlock decision found coverage under the older New York Bureau of Title Underwriters form of policy.

---

[71] Ascot Homes, Inc. v. Lawyers Mortgage & Title Co., 37 Misc.2d 41, 237 N.Y.S.2d 179 (1962).

[72] L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee Co., 52 N.Y.2d 179, 437 N.Y.S.2d 57, 418 N.E.2d 650, 17 A.L.R. 4th 1067 (1981).

Thus, there is nothing to suggest that Covered Risks 7 and 8 have increased the scope of policy coverage for either notices of the exercise of condemnation powers or of completed condemnations, compared to the coverage that existed under earlier policy forms. Rather, it appears that the covered risks serve to confirm the existence of those limited coverages.

The eminent domain coverages are limited to condemnation rights or actions that had occurred before the policy date. There is no coverage for a post-policy condemnation of the property.[73] However, if a post-policy condemnation action causes or reveals a dispute about the ownership of the property, and thus the right to the condemnation award, the adverse claim of title may invoke a duty to defend or indemnify.[74] See §11.5 for a discussion of the post-policy exclusion.

---

[73] In Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 6101016 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 204 (unpublished), the insured sued the insurer in part because the town took actions to assert title to, condemn and lay out a public road on the insured's property after the date of policy. The court said that those actions fell under the condemnation and post-policy exclusions. Although the subject of the claim was condemnation, the most applicable exclusion was for post-policy matters.

[74] In San Jancinto Z, L.L.C. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2014 WL 1317696 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), modified on denial of rehearing (April 24, 2014), rev.den. June 18, 2014, the holder of a deed of trust that was not excepted in the policy was made a defendant in a post-policy condemnation action. The condemnor alleged that the lender might be entitled to all or part of the award. When the lender filed an answer asserting that it should get all of the money based on its deeds of trust, and denied that the insured had "any superior right, title, or interest in the real property," the court found that the insurer had a duty to defend the insured from the attack on its title. The court also found that the post-policy exclusion did not apply, because the lender claimed an interest based on a deed of trust that existed before the policy date. This decision was based on the reasoning that the issue of whether or not there is a duty to defend the insured may depend not on the nature of the lawsuit but on a claim in the action by an adverse party that attacks title as insured. It said: "[t]rue, exclusion No. 2 provides there is no coverage for eminent domain actions, and certainly, we see no reason why a title company should have to defend against a public entity’s statutory right to take property. It is a different matter altogether, however, to suggest that, once an eminent domain action has been initiated, there is no coverage with respect to title claims asserted by another defendant to that action."

11.2 Created, Suffered, Assumed Or Agreed To

Exclusion 3(a) of the standard ALTA policies states that the insurer is not liable for matters that the insured has caused ("created"),[75] permitted ("suffered"), taken subject to ("assumed")[76] or to which it has consented to be bound ("agreed to"). This exclusion covers both unrecorded rights and instruments and matters appearing in the public records.[77] The exclusion has been found to be unambiguous, and therefore not susceptible to modification under the doctrine of reasonable expectations.[78] This provision is often referred to as the "own acts," "acts of the insured" or even the "your own darned fault" exclusion. It makes plain that there is no coverage for those matters that affect title due to the insured's actions, such as an easement granted by the insured.

The word "create" means to "bring into being; to cause to exist."[79] The word is not laden with connotations about the intent of the creator, or the nature of the created thing as being good or bad. Nonetheless, "created" in this context has been interpreted in three ways, the descriptions varying by the layers of intent that are assumed.

The most straightforward definition of the word "created" is that the insured took some conscious and deliberate action, resulting in the fact, contract, instrument or event that is or gave rise to the defect in title, encumbrance, lien or other matter for which he or she seeks indemnity or defense. Many jurisdictions have adopted this view, including many of the states that have considered the issue recently.[80]

---

[75] See Interpreting the Term "Created" in Policy Exclusion 3(a), by Leopold Z. Sher and Kerry J. Miller, in the 1998 edition of the Real Estate Law and Practice Course Handbook Series by Practicing Law Institute, PLI Order No. N0-001G.

[76] In American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1986), the words "assume" and "agreed" were illustrated as follows: "'Assume', under the definition requires knowledge of the specific title defect assumed ... And 'agreed to' carries connotations of 'contracted', requiring knowledge by the insured of the extent and amount of the claim against the insured's title." 793 F.2d at 784 [quoted with approval in Inavest Enterprises v. TRW Title Ins. of New York, Inc., 189 A.D. 2d 111, 595 N.Y.S. 2d 837 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 1993)].

[77] In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 38 Misc.3d 1213(A), 966 N.Y.S.2d 346 (Table), 2013 WL 221480 (N.Y.Sup.), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 50089(U) (unpublished), the court rejected the insured's argument that Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b) should be spliced together, causing Exclusion 3(a) to apply only to matters that are not recorded. The court said: "Exclusion 3(a), unlike exclusion 3(b), does not contain any language indicating that it does not apply if the defect, lien, or encumbrance is recorded in public records." See the later decision at 88 N.Y.S.3d 806, 62 Misc.3d 313, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 28357 (Suffolk Cty. 2018).

[78] Dickins v. Stiles, 81 Wash.App. 670, 916 P.2d 435 (1996); LJW Land, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 4370052 (W.D.N.C. 2016) (unpublished).

[79] First American Title Ins. Co. v. DJ Mortgage, LLC, 328 Ga.App. 249, 761 S.E.2d 811 (Ga.App. 2014). In LJW Land, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 4370052 (W.D.N.C. 2016) (unpublished), the court used the Merriam-Webster dictionary definition of "create," which is "to bring into being, to cause to exist, to produce."

[80] The most widely cited modern decision adopting this view is American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1986). That court held that the exclusion applies when "the insured either expressly or impliedly assumed or agreed to the defects or encumbrances," quoting from Brown v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 634 F.2d 1103, 1107-8, n. 8 (8th Cir. 1980). Keown v. W. Jersey Title and Guar. Co., 161 N.J.Super. 19, 25, 390 A.2d 715 (App.Div.1978) stated: "..the word 'create' connotes 'the idea of knowledge, the performance of some affirmative act by the insured, a conscious or deliberate causation,'" quoting Feldman v. Urban Commercial, Inc., 87 N.J.Super. 520, 532 (App.Div. 1965). In Mark Twain Kansas City Bank v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 807 F.Supp. 84 (E.D.Mo. 1992), the court said the lender had "created" the circumstance that rendered its lien void, by delivering the loan money to a party other than the borrower. The court refused to impose the intentional misconduct standard, finding the exclusion triggered by proof of the fact that "the Bank knew or should have known that this transfer was not proper." In Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co., 56 Cal.App.4th 1489, 66 Cal.Rptr.2d 714 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1997), under similar facts, the court held that the insured "created" the subordination of its lien by delivering its loan funds to a party other than as directed by the bankruptcy court order that authorized the loan. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Action Acquisitions, LLC, 218 Ariz. 394, 187 P.3d 1107 (2008), the court explained why it adopted the lower standard of proof this way: "Some hold the insured must merely have intended the act that caused the title defect; others require the insured to have intended the defect itself. …[T]he exclusion is not ambiguous and …it applies whenever the insured intended the act causing the defect, not only when the insured intended the defect or when the insured engaged in misconduct. Title insurance principally protects against unknown and unknowable risks caused by third-party conduct, not intentional acts of the policyholder. Otherwise, the insured would be able to use title insurance to make windfall profits. … We also reject the purchasers' proposed rule that the exclusion applies only when the insured's conduct was unknown to the title insurer. That rule would undesirably deny title insurers the power to define the scope of coverage by excluding recognized risks." In Action Acquisitions, the court rejected the notion that "created" applies only when the insured is guilty of deliberate wrongful conduct. In that case, the insured bought the insured property by bidding $3,500 at auction. The sale was set aside because the bid was too low. The court held that the bid "was an intentional, affirmative act that resulted in the sale being set aside." Further, if the exclusion were not applicable, "the policy would effectively guarantee the purchasers a windfall profit of possibly more than $200,000, even though they paid only $3,500 and later lost title for paying a grossly inadequate price." The court said that, although an insurer could conceivably agree to give such a coverage, "it is not consistent with the 'created risk' exception, the other policy language, or the general nature of title insurance." In City of East Providence v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 5527604 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), adopting findings of 2011 WL 5521246 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), the title insurer was not required to defend a breach of contract action brought by the seller. The court rejected the city's argument that it was not guilty of misconduct or fraud, and thus the exclusion should not apply. Citing East West Financial, the court rejected that narrow view of the exclusion, because that decision says that the exclusion applies both to misconduct and when "the insured either expressly or impliedly assumed or agreed to the defects or encumbrances." California also follows the rule that an insured has "created" a title defect by intentional and deliberate conduct, and that the insurer is not required to establish that the insured intended to have defective title as a result. See Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 116 Cal.App. 3d 658, 172 Cal.Rptr. 248 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1981) ("We believe the word 'created' means conscious, deliberate causation [which may be] susceptible of the significance of bringing out a result inadvertently or negligently"); Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Alaska Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 833 F.2d 775 (9th Cir. 1987); Liberty National Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 217 Cal.App.4th 62, 157 Cal.Rptr.3d 664 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2013) (exclusion applied when insured was accused of deliberate but legal conduct that wrongly forced a co-owner out of title). In RNT Holdings, LLC v. United General Title Ins. Co., 230 Cal.App.4th 1289, 179 Cal.Rptr.3d 175 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2014), the court said the exclusion was invoked by the insured's attorney's intentional and deliberate acts that caused the defect. It said: "[t]hat she may not had intended to bring about a defect through her conduct, or may not have known that any defect might occur, is immaterial to the application of exclusion 3(a), as there was no suggestion in Safeco Title that the broker intended his pre-sale conduct to provoke the owners' tort action against him, or knew that the action would occur." RNT distinguished the older case of Hansen v. Western Title Ins. Co., 220 Cal.App.2d 531, 33 Cal.Rptr. 668, 98 A.L.R.2d 520 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1963), which refused to apply the exclusion as to a matter the insured had contracted to accept, because the insurer drafted the contract and it was ambiguous. Hansen had said: "we limit our ruling to a case in which the insured did not intentionally produce the claim and in which the insurer itself had opportunity to know of the defect." In LJW Land, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 4370052 (W.D.N.C. 2016) (unpublished), the court held that the insured lender had "created" and "suffered" the attack on the insured deed of trust by a junior lien holder asserting that the insured entity was controlled by the borrower property owner, and that the lien was a strategic device intended to frustrate the junior lender's ability to foreclose on the property. The court refused to find that the term "created" required evidence of evil motive or tortious conduct.

Other courts state that the term "created" requires evidence not only that the insured acted consciously and deliberately, but also that he or she actually intended to cause the resulting adverse claim or defect in title.[81] Some courts that use either the first or second definition of "created" have made the contrast that a person cannot be said to have acted consciously and deliberately if the person's actions were merely inadvertent, careless or negligent, which would take away the element of intentionality.[82]

Under the third position about what the insurer must prove to establish that an insured "created" a title defect, the courts say that the actions must have been conscious, deliberate and intentional, and also that "the insured is guilty of some misconduct or breach of its obligations which give rise to the defect, lien, or encumbrance."[83] Misconduct or breach of obligations is not found in [81] In Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 72 Wis.2d 503, 241 N.W.2d 434 (1976), the court accepted the definition of "created" as referring to "a conscious, deliberate causation or an affirmative act which actually results in the adverse claim or defect." 72 Wis.2d at 512. The court found the exclusion inapplicable because the insured had intentionally misplaced a fence, but had not intended to create a boundary dispute by doing so. First American Title Ins. Co. v. Kessler, 452 So.2d 35, 39 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 1984) also defined "created" as "a conscious, deliberate causation or an affirmative action which actually results in the adverse claim or defect." In Regions Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 977 F.Supp.2d 1237, 24 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. D 192 (S.D.Fla. 2013), the court cited Kessler and other cases as support for its finding that a lender did not "create" an instrument merely by knowing about it. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Alaska Fed. Savings and Loan Ass'n, 833 F.2d 775 (9th Cir. 1987) applied the exclusion when the insured's deed was recharacterized as an equitable lien, since such a claim fails without proof of intent. In Sims v. Sperry, 835 P.2d 565 (Colo.App. 1992), the court acknowledged that some states require proof that the insured intended to cause the title defect, while others require only a deliberate act but no proof that the insured intended to cause the defect. It found the exclusion ambiguous because there are two interpretations of it that have been advanced, and therefore adopted the view most favorable to the insured. In First Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 320 P.3d 406 (Colo.App. 1 Div. 2014), the Colorado court refused to hold that the insured "created" a competing deed of trust based solely on the other lender's assertion that the insured had knowledge of the lien, because Colorado requires proof of a conscious, deliberate act that was "intended to bring about the conflicting claim," not merely an inadvertent or negligent act. Older cases include Feldman v. Urban Commercial, Inc., 78 N.J.Super. 520, 189 A.2d 467 (Ch. 1963), aff'd, 87 N.J.Super 391, 209 A.2d 640 (App. Div. 1965); and First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (Sup.Ct. 1939).

[82] Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 116 Cal.App. 3d 658, 172 Cal.Rptr. 248 (Cal.App. 1981) ("We believe the word 'created' means conscious, deliberate causation [which may be] susceptible of the significance of bringing out a result inadvertently or negligently"); Resolution Trust Corp v. Ford Mall Associates, 819 F Supp 826 (D.Minn. 1991); Griffin v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 1141205 (D.Md.) (unpublished). In First Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 320 P.3d 406 (Colo.App. 1 Div. 2014), the court refused to hold that the insured "created" a competing deed of trust based solely on the other lender's assertion that the insured had knowledge of the lien, because Colorado interprets the word "created" as requiring proof that the insured took a conscious, deliberate, and affirmative act and "intended to bring about the conflicting claim," and that his or her actions were not merely inadvertent or negligent.

[83] American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780, 785 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1986), quoted with approval in Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 758 F.Supp.2d 476 (S.D. Ohio 2010), later decision 692 F.3d 507 (6th Cir. (Ohio) 2012); Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. 522 (W.D.Tenn. 1993); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. First Federal Savings Bank & Trust, 744 F. Supp. 778 (E.D.Mich. 1990); Mercantile-Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 892103 (D.Md. 2007) (unpublished); Dare Investments, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 2600594 (D.N.J.) (unpublished); Home Federal Savings Bank v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 695 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. (Ind.) 2012) (reciting this standard for "created" but applying the term "agreed to"); First any definition of "created," whether lay or legal. The decisions that have added this misconduct element do so based on faulty logic. They posit that, because the "created" exclusion has been applied to bar coverage when the insured is guilty of misconduct or a criminal act, the term may only be invoked by that type of conduct.[84] Some courts have even used this heightened definition of the word "created" to cancel the exclusion even as to the insured's own debts. For example, in Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp,[85] a lien for federal taxes owed by the individual insured was found not to be excluded because the insured had not been accused of misconduct in allowing the lien to be filed.

The other terms in Exclusion 3(a) do not carry with them the connotation that the insured must be guilty of deliberate misconduct, or that he or she deliberately did something that was intended to create the title defect, even in those jurisdictions that apply the misconduct standard to the term "created."[86]

Assembly Church of West Plains v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 872 S.W.2d 577 (Mo.App. S.D. 1994); and Shamrock Bank of Florida v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 1304694 (S.D.Ill. 2014) (unpublished). The intentional misconduct standard was labeled the "majority" view in Griffin v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 1141205 (D.Md.) (unpublished). The Griffin court drew a line between "knowing and intentional conduct by the insured that results in a title defect or encumbrance" and "mere negligence," without accounting for the broad spectrum of deliberate conduct that lies between those poles. Griffin was decided on a motion to dismiss, and the court did not enter judgment in the insured's favor. In Associated Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 881 F.Supp.2d 1058 (D.Minn. 2012), the borrower asserted that various people were guilty of fraud or misrepresentation, but did not single out the insured. The court found that the exclusion did not clearly negate a duty to defend the insured. See also Joel E. Smith, Annotation, Title Insurance: Exclusion of Liability for Defects, Liens, or Encumbrances Created, Suffered, Assumed, or Agreed to by the Insured, 87 A.L.R.3d 515 (1978).

[84] This misconception appears to have emanated from a predecessor to the present A.L.R. article on the subject. It is repeated in a more current version. See Joel E. Smith, Annotation, Title Insurance: Exclusion of Liability for Defects, Liens, or Encumbrances Created, Suffered, Assumed, or Agreed to by the Insured, 87 A.L.R.3d 515 (1978). The most widely cited decision that adopted this definition is American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1986). Missouri appeared to adopt the American Savings rationale in First Assembly Church of West Plains v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 872 S.W.2d 577 (Mo.App. S.D. 1994). However, in Captiva Lake Investments, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 883 F.3d 1038 (8th Cir. (Mo.) 2018), the court overturned a trial court ruling that the exclusion could not be triggered by negligence, mismanagement, "downright stupidity or recklessness," saying that this would create too narrow a definition. The court said that, in fact, First Assembly had rejected that narrow interpretation of the word "created." The court said that "[w]hen [mechanic's] liens arise from insufficient funds, the insured lender has 'created' them by failing to discover and prevent cost overruns—either at the beginning of the project or later." The Captiva court said the insurer was not required to prove either intentional misconduct or inequitable dealings.

[85] Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 646 N.W.2d 170 (Mich. 2002). A later Michigan case, CDJ Builders, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 6150208 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), held that Exclusion 3(a) did not remove coverage for a construction lien that had been incurred by two of the three members of the insured LLC before they contributed the land to the new entity, and on which they had paid to defend the lien foreclosure action, because the members claimed not to "remember" the lien at the time they ordered the new policy. The court cited American Savings to support its ruling that Exclusion 3(a) applies only to "intentional misconduct or inequitable dealings by the insured." However, it did not cite to Archambo.

[86] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Lane Powell PC, 764 F.3d 114 (1st Cir. (Mass.) 2014), the court found that although American Savings and Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 1995) said that an assertion that a matter was "created" by the insured requires proof of "inequitable conduct," those same courts did not attach that standard to any of the other terms in Exclusion 3(a). The court said "…contrary to Lane Powell's rather Courts have interpreted the term "suffered" by use of the definition of "suffer" from Black's Law Dictionary, which is "to allow, to admit, or to permit."[87] One court built on that definition by stating that "[t]he word 'suffered'... has been deemed to be synonymous with the word 'permit' and to imply [the] power to prohibit or prevent."[88] The term "suffered" is often applied to a nonconsensual lien and other matter that attaches to the property because of the insured's own interest in it, such as a judgment or federal tax lien. An insured may also "suffer" a title defect by electing to close on the transaction knowing that the matter very likely attaches or will attach to the property.[89]

There is considerable overlap between the terms "suffered" and "assumed." One court said that "assumed" requires proof that the insured "had actual, subjective knowledge of the ... issue and appreciated its effect."[90] Other courts have also said that the insured must have a certain level of nearsighted reading, Chicago Title does not stand for the proposition that, in order for Exclusion 3(a) to apply, the insurer must show intentional misconduct on the part of the insured. Though our sister circuit recognized that other courts have taken slightly varying views on the matter, it squarely held that Exclusion 3(a) 'bars coverage where there has been misconduct or inequitable behavior on the part of the lender' as well as 'where the lender assumes or agrees to liens, or where the lender stands to receive an inequitable windfall.'" Similarly, in Beneficial Mutual Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 36 F.Supp.3d 537 (E.D.Pa. 2014), the court rejected the insured's suggestion that a misconduct element be grafted onto the phrase "agreed to" based on American Savings. That court also found that American Savings added the misconduct element only to its definition of "created."

---

[87] In LJW Land, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 4370052 (W.D.N.C. 2016) (unpublished), the court applied that definition and the further comment in Black's that to "suffer an act to be done by a person who can prevent it, is to permit or consent to it; to approve it and not hinder it... ." The court ruled that the insured had "suffered" the claim that its lien was a sham, intended to frustrate a junior lien holder's ability to foreclose on the property.

[88] Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2002 WL 31013194 (Mich.App.) (unpublished); later decision, Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 646 N.W.2d 170 (Mich. 2002). The Archambo court found that the insured had not "suffered" a federal tax lien against himself because he had no power to prohibit or prevent it from attaching (ignoring the fact that every person has the power to avoid a tax lien by paying the tax when due). In Regions Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 977 F.Supp.2d 1237, 24 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. D 192 (S.D.Fla. 2013), the court defined "suffers" as "the power to prohibit or prevent [the defect] which has not been exercised although the insured has full knowledge of what is to be done with the intention that it be done," and finding that an insured's knowledge of certain facts did not cause it to suffer a risk that its lien would lose its priority. The court in Keown v. West Jersey Title and Guaranty Co. found that "[t]he term 'suffer' implies the power to prevent or hinder, and includes knowledge of what is to be done under the sufferance and permission, and the intention that what is done is to be done." 161 N.J.Super. 19, 26, 390 A.2d 715 (App.Div. 1978). Keown was quoted with approval in Dare Investments, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 2600594 (D.N.J.) (unpublished).

[89] First Nat'l Bank of Jeanerette v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 3734056 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), findings adopted in 2010 WL 3734020 (W.D.La.) (unpublished) (lender "suffered" federal tax lien against property by closing on loan with knowledge from credit report and automated loan underwriting report that the tax lien existed, although not shown in title commitment). Note, however, that Duncan v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1994 WL 2010 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.)) (unpublished) found that an insured "assumed" or "agreed to" and encumbrance by taking title subject to it.

[90] Cynergy, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 706 F.3d 1321 (11th Cir. (Ga.) 2013). The court supplied this further definition of "assumed" from state law: "In its simplest and primary sense, assumption of the risk means that the plaintiff, in advance, has given his consent to relieve the defendant of an obligation of conduct toward him, and to take his chance of injury from a known risk arising from what the defendant is to do or leave undone."

knowledge about a title issue and some affirmative act in order to be deemed to have "assumed" the matter.[91] Other courts have supplied similar definitions of "suffered" and "assumed."[92] Most courts and real estate attorneys would consider "assumed" rather than "suffered" to be the most descriptive term when an insured takes title subject to an existing lien granted by or imposed against a former owner.[93] However, the term "suffered" may also be applied in such a circumstance.[94]

The phrase "agreed to" has been more often described than defined by the courts. Perhaps the most common statement is the following:

---

[91] In 3 West 16th Street, LLC v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1397135 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the court held that an insured had not "assumed" a contract under which it had agreed to convey part of its building to a synagogue after the structure was renovated, even though it had "agreed to" do so, invoking the latter term in Exclusion 3(a). The court said that New York follows the rule that "knowledge of an encumbrance, by itself, does not constitute an assumption of that encumbrance or an agreement to it," citing Glickman v. Home Title Guar. Co., 178 N.Y.S.2d 281 (Sup. Ct. 1958), aff'd, 185 N.Y.S.2d 756 (2d Dep't 1959). The court also quoted a non-title insurance decision that held that "an assumption of an obligation or an agreement to an obligation in connection with the purchase of real estate generally requires some affirmative act by the party to be charged."

[92] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Doubletree Partners, L.P., 739 F.3d 848 (5th Cir. (Tex.) 2014), the court found that an insured buyer, Doubletree, had not contracted to take title subject to a flowage easement despite the fact that its purchase contract, deed and policy all said the buyer would take title subject to the easement, because the insured obtained a survey that put the boundary of the easement in the wrong place. The court said that the sales agreement and other documents described the flowage easement as qualified by the phrase "and shown on survey." Thus, it concluded, Doubletree did not agree to buy the property subject to the flowage easement wherever it might actually be. Thus, Doubletree "did not have the requisite intent" for the exclusion to apply. It said that, "if Doubletree intended to acquire the property with the flowage easement as a title defect, it only intended to do so to the extent that the easement was shown on the survey." The court distinguished Duncan v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1994 WL 2010 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.)) (unpublished), which held that an insured assumed or agreed to an encumbrance by taking title subject to it. In Citigroup Global Markets Realty Corp. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 417 S.W.3d 592 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.) 2013), when the officers of the insured owner were aware of a decree by Mexico's president declaring the insured property to be within a national park, the jury properly found that the insured "knew and assumed or agreed to the effects of" the decree.

[93] Marr v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 5125624 (W.D.Ky.) (unpublished) (by taking his interest with full knowledge of prior liens, insured "assumed the risk that those liens would be superior to his, and … Commonwealth was therefore under no duty to indemnify him").

[94] In Murnan v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 585 F.Supp.2d 825 (E.D.Va. 2008), vacated in part and replaced by 607 F.Supp.2d 745 (E.D.Va. 2009), aff'd by 2010 WL 1227268, 374 Fed.Appx. 459, 105 A.F.T.R.2d 2010-1756 (4th Cir. (Va.) 2010) (unpublished), the court found that an insured "suffered" rather than "assumed" a federal tax lien against herself individually when she conveyed to herself as trustee of a revocable trust, and thus Exclusion 3(a) negated coverage for the lien. The tax lien was against Alexandra Murnan individually. She obtained a policy when she conveyed to herself as trustee of a trust. In the later decision, the court reversed its earlier finding that 3(a) did not apply. The later decision held that "when, acting as Trustee, [Murnan] purchased the Property, she essentially 'permit[ted]' the liens to attach to the Property and thus suffered the liens on the Property." 607 F.Supp.2d at 746. See also Moser v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 1413346 (E.D.Tex. 2018) (unpublished) (insured allowed judgment lien against him to attach to insured parcel). See §11.2.1 for a full discussion of Exclusion 3(a) as applied to liens against the insured or that the insured assumes by contract.

> And "agreed to" carries connotations of "contracted," requiring full knowledge by the insured of the extent and amount of the claim against the insured's title. As with the other terms, this definition implies some degree of intent.[95]

Other courts have developed similar statements, with the primary differentiation between them being in the exact phrasing of the amount and type of knowledge the insured must have had at the time it agreed to or contracted for the matter.[96]

---

[95] American Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 793 F.2d 780, 784 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1986). That statement has been quoted in many decisions, including by the following: Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. FFCA/IIP 1988 Property Co., 898 F.Supp. 633 (N.D.Ind. 1995); JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 38 Misc.3d 1213(A), 966 N.Y.S.2d 346 (Table), 2013 WL 221480 (N.Y.Sup.), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 50089(U) (unpublished); First Nat'l Bank of Minneapolis v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 572 F.2d 155 (8th Cir. (Minn.) 1978); National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 873 F.Supp. 718 (D.Mass. 1995); Nationwide Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 611802 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished); and Northwest Savings Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 253080 (Pa.Super.) (unpublished).

[96] In Beneficial Mutual Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 36 F.Supp.3d 537 (E.D.Pa. 2014), the court said that it "construes the term 'agreed' as carrying connotations of contracted and requiring full knowledge by the insured of the extent and amount of the claim against the insured's title." The bank argued, based on the "full knowledge" phrase from American Savings, that the exclusion should not apply because there were a number of smaller facts that it did not know, such as the correct name of the senior lender. The court said the bank sought to interpret the exclusion too finely: "[a]ssuming arguendo that Lender actually was mistaken as to whether it was First Cornerstone Bank or Prior Lender that held the Prior Mortgage, this lack of knowledge would not change the outcome. For Exclusion 3(a) to apply, Lender did not need to know every detail of the Defect." In First Nat'l Bank of Minneapolis v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 572 F.2d 155 (8th Cir. (Minn.) 1978), the court said that the insurer must show knowledge and agreement by the insured: "[t]he resolution of that issue is one of fact, not law. First National's knowledge that prior encumbrances existed will not absolve the insurer from liability for them unless the insurer also establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that the bank agreed that its mortgage would occupy a secondary position to the purchase money mortgages." 572 F.2d at 162-3. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Lane Powell PC, 764 F.3d 114 (1st Cir. (Mass.) 2014), the court held that knowledge is sufficient: "[a]n insured party 'assumes' or 'agrees' to a lien pursuant to Exclusion 3(a) when it takes property that is subject to an existing encumbrance it has knowledge of. It based its decision largely on National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 873 F.Supp. 718 (D.Mass. 1995), which applied the exclusion when the insured lender's officers were fully aware of the competing lien and agreed that the new lien would be subordinate. The Lane Powell court also emphasized the important point that Exclusion 3(a) exists to bar an inequitable windfall. If the court raises the proof burden too high, the insured will be able to collect insurance even "where the lender assumes or agrees to liens, or where the lender stands to receive an inequitable windfall." For that proposition, it relied on Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir.1995). In Bank of America, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 2215012 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court held on a motion to dismiss that the insured may have "agreed to" having its mortgage be subordinate to a development agreement by acquiescing in recording instructions that told the insurer to record the development agreement before the mortgage.

11.2.1 Liens Agreed To Or Assumed In Purchase Agreement

FORM 84, Appendix A
Assumed or agreed to in purchase contract

An insured obtains no coverage against a non-consensual lien that attaches to the insured property solely due to the fact that the insured became its owner, which lien is considered to have been suffered or allowed by the insured.[97] The principle that one may not purchase insurance that obligates the insurer to pay one's own valid debts is buttressed by the doctrine that an insurance policy is intended to protect against a fortuity—a peril or risk that results from accident, chance or an Act of God. An existing lien representing a valid debt owed by the insured is not a fortuity for which title insurance was designed to afford protection.[98]

When an insured purchaser intentionally contracts to take title subject to a particular lien or encumbrance, a claim against the insurer based on that lien is barred by Exclusion 3(a) because the insured "assumed" or "agreed to" take title subject to the lien.[99] New York courts have been

---

[97] Moser v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 1413346 (E.D.Tex. 2018) (unpublished) (judgment lien against the insured that attached to the property when the insured took title was allowed by the insured and excluded, despite insured's fond hope that property would be exempt homestead); Murnan v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 585 F.Supp.2d 825 (E.D.Va. 2008), vacated in part and replaced by 607 F.Supp.2d 745 (E.D.Va. 2009), aff'd in 2010 WL 1227268, 374 Fed.Appx. 459, 105 A.F.T.R.2d 2010-1756 (4th Cir.(Va.) 2010) (unpublished) (insured suffered federal tax lien against herself, invoking Exclusion 3(a), despite fact that exception for lien was removed from policy). One seriously muddled decision refused to employ the exclusion, on the premise that the insured had not created the federal tax lien because his business partner was in charge of paying the bills, which entitled him to have his tax debt paid by the title insurer, in Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2002 WL 31013194 (Mich.App.) (unpublished). In Cole-Parker v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 3340474 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished), a judgment became a lien against property when the insured owner took title. The commitment excepted the judgment and the debt was paid from closing, but not released. The insured sued the insurer because of the unreleased lien. The insurer sought summary judgment based on Exclusion 3(a), but the court dismissed the case based on the statute of limitations without reaching the issue.

[98] The court applied the fortuity doctrine in Moser v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 1413346 (E.D.Tex. 2018) (unpublished), saying: "'The fortuity doctrine relieves insurers from covering certain behaviors that the insured undertook prior to purchasing the policy.' RLI Ins. Co. v. Maxxon Sw. Inc., 108 F.App'x. 194, 198 (5th Cir. 2004). 'Under the fortuity doctrine, an insured cannot obtain coverage for something that has already begun and which is known (or should have been known) to have begun.' ... The fortuity doctrine bars coverage for 'known losses' and 'losses in progress.' Warrantech Corp. v. Steadfast Ins. Co., 210 S.W.3d 760, 766 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 2006, pet. denied) ... A 'known loss' is a loss the insured knew had occurred before the insured entered into the contract for insurance. ... A 'loss in progress' is a progressive loss the insured knew or should have known was ongoing when the insured entered into the contract for insurance." The court labeled the judgment lien against the insured as a known loss. One of the few other title insurance decisions to refer to the concept of fortuity was Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 9 Neb.App. 372, 612 N.W.2d 515 (2000), in which the insureds concealed from the insurer the fact that a person claimed a part interest in the property before closing, and then made a claim under the policy based on that claim. The court said that the insureds' demand for coverage was "tantamount to a driver buying automobile insurance on Monday and complaining because the insurance company will not cover the accident occurring 2 days before on Saturday."

[99] Marr v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 5125624 (W.D.Ky.) (unpublished) (by taking his interest with full knowledge of prior liens, insured "assumed the risk that those liens would be superior to his, and … Commonwealth was therefore under no duty to indemnify him"). In Bradford v. Thompson, 460 S.W.2d 932

especially stringent about the evidence that the insured consciously assumed the debt or lien before the exclusion applies.[100] The exclusion does not bar coverage for a lien when the insured agreed to accept title without warranties or representations, but also without having consciously assumed any known liens.[101]

When the insured contracts to take title subject to a particular lien, the insured does not suffer a loss due to the lien, because the court may presume that the insured took the lien into account in setting the purchase price. Thus, the no-loss exclusion, 3(c), also applies, as is discussed at §11.4.1.

A court may refuse to apply the exclusion unless the insurer can prove a close relationship between the liens assumed and a reduction in the purchase price.[102] Similarly, the statement in an exchange agreement that the purchaser agreed to take title "subject to" all "assessments" did not establish that the insured had the requisite knowledge to have "agreed to" a special assessment that was not excepted in the commitment.[103] The insurer also attempted to show conscious assumption of

---

(Tex.App. Tyler, 1970); aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 470 S.W.2d 633 (Tex. 1971), Exclusion 3(a) applied when the insured was aware of a second deed of trust before he purchased, his deed recited that title was taken subject to the mortgage, and he had made post-closing payments on the loan. The court said the insured had "assumed" the obligation of the lien and debt. Also, in Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Ozark Global, L.C., 956 F.Supp. 989 (S.D.Ala. 1997), the deed recited six state tax liens to which the property was subject and the insured ordered the title insurance policy after the deed was delivered. The commitment did not except the liens. The court applied the exclusion, saying: "Common sense dictates that Global 'assumed or agreed to' such defects in title by taking the land subject to the tax liens." In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Research Loan & Invest. Corp., 361 F.2d 764, 769 (8th Cir. 1966), an insured was found to have "assumed" mortgages not excepted in the commitment when it purchased the property before getting title evidence, the principals of the insured were sophisticated real estate developers, no cash consideration was paid, the property was in foreclosure (suggesting that it was encumbered), and the purchase contract said that "Grantee accepts property described above subject to mortgages, liens, and indebtedness of all nature, and agrees to make payment on same, without any recourse against Grantors."

[100] In Empire Development Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 225 N.Y. 53, 121 N.E. 468 (1918), construing a policy long since out of use, the insured's knowledge of an assessment before closing was found not to be equivalent to the deliberate assumption of a tax lien. New York courts have also refused to apply the exclusion when the purchase agreement said the buyer would take title subject to assessments that were not specifically identified. See Ackley v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corp., 16 Misc.2d 402, 182 N.Y.S.2d 76 (1958); Glickman v. Home Title Guaranty Co., 8 Misc.2d 303, 167 N.Y.S.2d 793 (1957); 15 Misc.2d 167, 178 N.Y.S.2d 281 (Sup. 1958), aff'd 8 A.D.2d 629, 185 N.Y.S.2d 756 (Sup.Ct.App.Div. 1959). Contra: Palliser v. Title Ins. Co. of New York, 61 Misc. 490, 115 N.Y.S. 545 (Sup. Ct. 1908).

[101] In Bragman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 421 F.Supp. 99 (E.D.Pa. 1976), the insured purchased the property at a sheriff's sale. The deed was issued subject to real estate taxes. The court held that the purchaser did not "suffer" or "assume" the tax liability as a normal incident of ownership in an auction purchase. However, the court held that the policy did not protect the insured against the portion of the taxes accrued after the insured purchased the property.

[102] In Inavest Enterprises v. TRW Title Ins. of New York, Inc., 189 A.D. 2d 111, 595 N.Y.S. 2d 837 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 1993), the insured partnership obligated itself in the purchase agreement to "pay all arrears in taxes," and the court duly noted that several of the partners were real estate brokers and the partners paid a reduced price in part because they knew that there were delinquent taxes. However, the court said the insurer was required to prove that the partners had actual knowledge of the exact tax amounts that they were agreeing to pay in order for the exclusion to apply.

[103] Arizona Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Smith, 21 Ariz.App. 371, 519 P.2d 860 (1974).

the assessment by the seller's testimony that he had informed the insured, that a listing sheet referred to the assessment, and by imputing the buyer's agent's actual knowledge to the insured. The court refused to apply the exclusion, saying:

> The company relies heavily upon the fact that the exchange contract mentioned the word "assessments" three times--once in typewriting and twice in the printed form. We cannot say as a matter of law that the insured had knowledge of the assessment merely because he signed this agreement when the document contained neither the total amount due on the assessment nor the yearly payment on it, but only the word "assessments."[104]

When the title insurance commitment excepts a lien but that exception is removed from the policy, the insurer must establish that the insured expected to take title subject to the lien and that the removal of the exception was merely accidental. In Hilliard Properties, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.,[105] the commitment excepted a special assessment but the exception did not appear in the policy. The court refused to apply Exclusion 3(a) based on this circular analysis:

> Although Commonwealth argues that Hilliard, through its purchase agreements buying and selling the property, assumed the obligation to pay the assessment, the policy stated that no special assessments were attached to the property. In construing contracts, specific provisions are generally read to negate conflicting general provisions. [citation omitted] Here, the policy specifically provided coverage against the special assessments, where the exclusion terms were of a general nature. Accordingly, the assessment was insured against.[106]

11.2.2 Other Title Issues Assumed or Agreed To In Purchase Agreement

When the owner insured agrees in the purchase contract to take the property subject to a certain easement, restriction or other matter affecting title, the issue is excluded from policy coverage as a matter "assume" or "agreed to" by the insured.[107] To invoke the exclusion as to a recorded easement or restriction not shown on the policy, the insurer must show that the insured had the requisite level of intent in the particular jurisdiction in contracting to take title subject to the encumbrance.[108]

---

[104] 21 Ariz.App. at 374, 519 P.2d at 863.

[105] 1997 WL 781727 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished), app.den., 81 Ohio St.3d 1503, 691 N.E.2d 1062 (Table).

[106] Id. at 4.

[107] In 3 West 16th Street, LLC v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1397135 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the court found that the title insurer was not required to defend the insured in a lawsuit brought by a synagogue to enforce an agreement to donate part of the insured building to it after the building was renovated. The insured had signed that contract. The court said the contract fell under the term "agreed to" in Exclusion 3(a). The court cited a venerable New York decision construing a policy that predated the ALTA forms, Brick Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 291 N.Y.S. 637 (City Ct. 1936), which said that the policy "did not insure

The exclusion was held to apply when the purchaser was made aware of restrictions before the purchase agreement was signed, and the restrictions were indirectly referenced in the commitment. The buyer's own attorney acted as closer for the insurer, stating in his "closing report" that the restrictions should be shown in the policy, which they were.[109] Similarly, the insurer was held not liable for any loss for the apparently accidental characterization of a condominium unit title as being in fee simple rather than a lease. The court noted that the insured accepted the lease and had received the condominium declaration and other documents, all of which accurately showed the interest as a leasehold. In addition, the policy was only ordered after the sale was closed; thus, the insured did not rely on the inadvertent reference to fee simple when he closed the sale.[110] Likewise, plaintiff against the consequences of its own acts ... and [the insurer] was not obliged to defend any suit attacking plaintiff's title ... if based upon acts claimed to have been committed by plaintiff." However, the court said that the plaintiff's claim was not a matter "assumed" by the insured, saying that the insured had not "assumed the risk" of the synagogue's claims "simply because it acquired the Building with knowledge of their claims." The court said that New York follows the rule that "knowledge of an encumbrance, by itself, does not constitute an assumption of that encumbrance or an agreement to it." It said that rule emanates from Glickman v. Home Title Guar. Co., 178 N.Y.S.2d 281 (Sup. Ct. 1958), aff'd, 185 N.Y.S.2d 756 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dep't 1959). In In re Pazzo Pazzo, Inc., ___ B.R. ___, 2019 WL 6699694 (Bkcy.N.J. 2019) (not yet released for publication), the court held that the insured had both assumed and agreed to take title subject to a lease and option because, in an amendment to the purchase contract, the insured had negotiated substantial concessions from the seller concerning those possible rights in the property. The court said that, although the insured convinced the insurer to remove exceptions for the lease and option based on recorded instruments and representations that they had been terminated, it was not entitled to receive insurance coverage against the same risks for which it had received a $300,000 discount in the purchase price, plus other protections. In construing the exclusion, the court looked to the American Savings & Loan Association decision, which said that the term "assume" requires "knowledge of the specific title defect assumed" and "agreed to" carries "connotations of 'contracted,' requiring full knowledge by the insured of the extent and amount of the claim against the insured's title," with "some degree of intent." 793 F.2d 780, 784-5 (6th Cir. 1986). The court said the amended purchase contract invoked both terms.

---

[108] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Doubletree Partners, L.P., 739 F.3d 848 (5th Cir. (Tex.) 2014), the court found that an insured buyer, Doubletree, had not contracted to take title subject to a flowage easement despite the fact that its purchase contract, deed and policy all said the buyer would take title subject to the easement, because the insured obtained a survey that put the boundary of the easement in the wrong place. The court said that the sales agreement and other documents described the flowage easement as qualified by the phrase "and shown on survey." Thus, it concluded, Doubletree did not agree to buy the property subject to the flowage easement wherever it might actually be. Thus, Doubletree "did not have the requisite intent" for the exclusion to apply. It said that, "if Doubletree intended to acquire the property with the flowage easement as a title defect, it only intended to do so to the extent that the easement was shown on the survey." The court imposed a higher burden of intent than had been imposed in the case it distinguished, Duncan v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1994 WL 2010 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.)) (unpublished), which held that an insured assumed or agreed to an encumbrance by contracting to take title subject to it. In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 38 Misc.3d 1213(A), 966 N.Y.S.2d 346 (Table), 2013 WL 221480 (N.Y.Sup.), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 50089(U) (unpublished), the court found, on a motion to dismiss, that the exclusion applies when "the insured either expressly or impliedly assumed or agreed to the defects or encumbrances in the course of purchasing the property," and may apply to the declaration of restrictions at issue in the case. In Eleazer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1137215 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), insureds who signed a purchase contract in which they agreed to grant an easement to the seller for a septic system built on the land being sold "agreed to" that encumbrance and the recorded instrument that disclosed the septic system's existence.

[109] Sullivan v. Tomgil Building Corp., 46 Misc.2d 613, 260 N.Y.S.2d 465 (Sup. Ct. 1965).

[110] Rudolph v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 402 So.2d 1275 (Fla.App. 1981).

an insured's purchase agreement said that "[t]he property is also sold subject to easements, if any created, or to be created, prior to or after conveyance of title ... which may be placed on record by the Seller after execution hereof for the benefit of this property and/or community of which it is a part."[111] The seller recorded an easement over the insured property after policy date. At trial, the insured argued that the insurer was responsible if the easement was binding. On appeal that argument was dropped, with the insured conceding that, if the easement was binding on it, the matter was "agreed to" by the insured and thus excluded.[112] Also, in Riffle v. United General Title Ins. Co.,[113] there was no loss payable when the insured bought the property with knowledge of the title defect, the purchase price was adjusted accordingly, and the insured did not establish diminution in value beyond the reduction in sale price. The insured claimed policy limits when its access easement was found to be invalid. The trial court found, however, that "the access problem was taken into account when negotiating the sale price." Further, the property was not valueless, since the partners could get there by boat, and their intended use was recreational and not commercial. It noted that damage evidence must "allow findings from established facts and not by conjecture." Thus, the court was unwilling to award policy limits as a default measure of loss without proof of actual damage suffered. Further, the court impliedly invoked Exclusion 3(a) by hold that "[a]ppellants received what they bargained for and cannot now claim that they have suffered damages."

However, a general or boilerplate reference to restrictions or easements is not enough to establish the required conscious assumption of a matter. The mere fact that the seller's deed excepted "restrictive covenants" was found not to show the required intent. "The exceptions in the deed run in favor of the grantor. They are not for the benefit of the title company."[114] Also, there was found not to be sufficient intent to purchase subject to a mineral reservation based solely on the fact that it was noted in the title opinion letter prepared by the purchaser's attorney. The insured was assisted by testimony that a later purchaser rejected title because of the reservation. In addition, an unsigned endorsement setting out the reservation was found in the insurer's file, which apparently reinforced for the court that the insurer could have disclosed the matter but for its own negligence.[115]

---

[111] Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 247 Va. 433, 442 S.E.2d 660, 664 (Va. 1994).

[112] Id. at 665, n. 2.

[113] 64 Ark.App. 185, 984 S.W.2d 47 (1998).

[114] Holly Hotel Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 147 Misc. 861, 264 N.Y.S. 3 (Sup. 1932), aff'd, 239 App.Div. 773, 264 N.Y.S. 7 (1933).

[115] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, Inc., 544 So. 2d 1070 (Fla.App. 1989).

11.2.3 Reformation Of Policy To Remove Parcel Or Alter Terms

FORM 21, Appendix A
Land erroneously included in policy and deed

An insurance policy may be reformed like other types of contracts. The party seeking reformation must present clear and convincing evidence that there was a mutual mistake made by the parties in drafting the contract and that the parties had a meeting of the minds on a definite intention before the contract was drafted.[116]

A title insurance policy may be reformed to excise from Schedule A or C a parcel of land that was included in the policy by mutual mistake.[117]

The mistaken inclusion of land in the policy which the parties did not intend to make part of the transaction also invokes Exclusions 3(a) and 3(c), as a matter "agreed to" by the insured and one for which the insured suffers no loss.[118] In Cohen v. Security Title & Guaranty Co.,[119] for example, Schedule A of the policy was incorrect because it "included more property than the plaintiffs had intended to buy and the sellers had intended to sell." The insureds had discovered the error the day before closing and failed to inform either seller or insurer. Then, shortly after closing, they demanded compensation for their "loss." The court held that the insureds had "agreed to" accept title without the extra land, and that coverage was negated due to the "insured's own intentional misconduct or inequitable dealings." Also, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Golf Links Development Corp.,[120] the legal description was reformed in both the deed and the policy to remove a parcel [116] BAPCO LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 5576863 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), citing A.I.D. Ins. Services v. Riley, 25 Ariz. App. 132, 135 (1975).

---

[117] In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Golf Links Development Corp., 87 F.Supp.2d 505 (W.D.N.C. 1999), the legal description was reformed in both the deed and the policy to remove a parcel accidentally conveyed to the insured. The court found the mistake to be mutual because the insured also erred, by failing to notice and correct the error during its due diligence period. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Wooden, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 175134 (N.D.Ala. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the court said it would need to hear trial testimony to decide if the insureds "agreed to" receive title to a large parcel with or without the one lot that had been previously sold, on which there is located a house. The seller bank sought to reform the deed to remove the lot and the title insurer sought, in the same lawsuit, to reform the policy. The insurer asserted that the insureds agreed to buy the property without the lot, and had not suffered a loss because they do not own the house.

[118] Campbell v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 166 Wash.2d 466, 209 P.3d 859 (Wash. 2009); Knispel v. Transnation Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 5334083 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (policy reformed to remove parcel that seller had sold the prior year, when contract included many parcels and the one at issue was not indicated on map attached to purchase agreement and was included by accident in title commitment and deed). In Demetrio v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 124 A.D.3d 824, 3 N.Y.S.3d 75 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2015), app.den. 25 N.Y.3d 906 (May 12, 2015), when the policy described the insured property as one lot, but incorporated by reference a metes and bounds description that encompassed seven lots, the policy insured only the one lot that the insured purchased, and the insured suffered no damage due to the "loss" of the land for which it paid nothing.

[119] Cohen v. Security Title & Guaranty Co., 212 Conn. 436, 562 A.2d 510 (Conn. 1989).

[120] 87 F.Supp.2d 505 (W.D.N.C. 1999).

accidentally conveyed to the insured. The court held that Exclusions 3(a) and 3(c) also applied.

See §8.3 concerning claims in which the insured asserts that it intended to take title to a parcel or interest not conveyed or insured, §8.4 for a discussion of policy reformation to remove a parcel conveyed by mutual mistake, and §11.4 for similar cases decided under the "no loss" exclusion.

An insurer is also entitled to reform the policy to remove a parcel that was conveyed to the insured due to the tortious act of the insured, such as the insured's alteration of the deed to include property the seller did not intend to convey.[121] For example, in Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald,[122] the insured prepared the quit claim deed used to confirm a tax title. He intentionally included more land than the then-owner had been conveyed, increasing the land conveyed from two acres to more than 12. The appeals court upheld the ruling of the trial court that "McDonald's alteration of the legal description illustrated his knowledge of the discrepancy regarding the size of the parcel and demonstrated that the defect in the description was one 'created, ... or agreed to by the insured claimant.'"[123]

However, when the grantor sues to reform the deed to the insured to remove a parcel, but the insured denies that the parties made a mutual mistake and alleges that he or she intended to purchase the disputed parcel, the insurer may have a duty to defend the insured, although it will not have a duty to indemnify if the seller proves reformation.[124] For example, in Penney v. Capitol City Transfer, Inc.,[125] the insurer was not entitled to deny the insured's defense based on extrinsic evidence that the land in dispute was only mistakenly included in the policy. However, the exclusion typically does not apply when the seller makes a unilateral mistake in selling land he or she does not own.[126]

---

[121] In Queens Organization, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 172 A.D.3d 932, 99 N.Y.S.3d 411 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2019), the court held that the title insurer was not required to defend its insured in a lawsuit claiming that the insured altered the deed to add itself as the grantee of a half interest in the property.

[122] 275 Mont. 111, 911 P.2d 209 (1996).

[123] 911 P.2d at 213.

[124] In Summer Pond Properties, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 1998 WL 283052 (Wash.App.Div. 1) (unpublished), the deed and policy both included an extra parcel by mistake. The insurer denied coverage based on mutual mistake. It withdrew that defense when the insured and seller settled shortly before trial, and admitted liability under the policy. The issue of mutual mistake and the exclusion was not litigated on appeal. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. MacLaren, L.L.C., 2012 WL 769601 (D.Del.) (unpublished), the court ruled that the title insurer was required to defend an insured owner in a reformation action despite rather striking evidence that it did not intend to buy the land. The court acknowledged that Exclusion 3(a) would negate coverage if the deed were reformed. Other decisions, such as Golf Links, have held that there is no duty to defend such an action. In Jurney v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 1073160 (N.D.Ga.) (unpublished), a Georgia federal court said there is no definitive answer from Georgia state courts as to whether or not a seller's lawsuit to reform the insured's deed to remove parcels is a matter "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to" by the insured. The seller asserted the land was conveyed by accident but the insured asserted that he intended to buy the land.

[125] 707 A.2d 387 (Me. 1998).

[126] In Polsfoot v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 47 Or.App. 261, 614 P.2d 1173 (1980), an insured sought to buy land

The insurer is also entitled to reform a policy that fails to make exception for a matter that attaches to the title to the property due to the act of the insured, including an encumbrance granted by the insured or a non-consensual lien against the insured that attaches to the property by operation of law.[127] The policy may also be reformed when the insurer and insured have made a mutual mistake regarding its other terms, including exceptions, exclusions or endorsements.[128]

When a title matter is excepted in the commitment but the exception is not carried forward into the policy due to an error, the insurer may be entitled to reform the policy on the grounds of mutual mistake. Under those facts, the insured cannot prove that both parties intended that the exception not appear in the policy. An insurer should prove not only its own policy-issuing mistake, but also that the insured contracted to assume the liability for the defect in question. However, if the error is deemed to be unilateral rather than mutual, the court may refuse to reform the policy.[129] Even which had been divided in a divorce decree. When he sued the sellers, he was permitted only a portion of the land, on a finding of mutual mistake. The insurer raised the finding of mutual mistake as collateral estoppel. The court rejected the argument, however, after finding that the mistake was unilateral by the seller. Similarly, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. McKee, 354 S.W.2d 401 (Tex.App. 1962), the policy insured "all of Lot 9 ... fronting on U.S. 183 Expressway," and the court held that the policy insured all of Lot 9, despite the fact that 7/8ths of that parcel had previously been taken for the highway, because the insured professed not to know that, and the insurer did not establish the intent of seller and buyer.

---

[127] See Edwards v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 575953 (Ariz.App. 1 Div. 2014) (unpublished), in which the insured owner sued the insurer for having failed to make exceptions in his policy for two judgments against him that attached to the property as liens when he became the owner. The insurer did not seek reformation, but the court found that the owner's claim was barred.

[128] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Doubletree Partners, L.P., 739 F.3d 848 (5th Cir. (Tex.) 2014), the court reformed the policy, which was accidentally issued without a number of exceptions that had been contained in the commitment. In Texas, a "unilateral mistake by one party, and knowledge of that mistake by the other party, is equivalent to mutual mistake." Givens v. Ward, 272 S.W.3d 63, 67 (Tex.App.-Waco 2008, no pet.). The court found that the agreement between the insured and insurer was represented by the title commitment. In Regions Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 977 F.Supp.2d 1237, 24 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. D 192 (S.D.Fla. 2013), the court refused to reform endorsements that gave specific coverage against the subject matter of the claim, the priority of a lien evidenced by a memorandum. The court said that "Regions did not execute a single document acknowledging or agreeing to subordinate its mortgage to the Memorandum. Instead, exactly the opposite occurred." Thus, there was no mutual mistake. The court also there was "no evidence whatever" that the lender's counsel "attempted to 'snooker' [the title agent] or trick him into issuing" the endorsement. In BAPCO LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 5576863 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the court reformed a policy to add exceptions for the two senior deeds of trust that the lender knew to exist. The insurer was not barred from enforcing the policy as reformed against the successor holder of the loan, BAPCO, because reformation alters the policy as originally written. The court said: "…Fidelity only sought reformation of the Policy to reflect the existence of the two liens. BAPCO's lack of actual knowledge has no bearing on whether a mutual mistake occurred in the drafting of the Policy—a process in which BAPCO had no role. BAPCO, as assignee, stands in the shoes of Diversified." The court also rejected the argument that reformation was prohibited by the policy's own terms, because the policy said that it could be amended only by an endorsement. The court said this argument failed "because amendment and endorsement are not the same thing as reformation." In Queens Organization, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 172 A.D.3d 932, 99 N.Y.S.3d 411 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2019), the court held that the title insurer was not required to defend its insured in a lawsuit claiming that the insured altered the deed to add itself as the grantee of a half interest in the property.

[129] In Hilliard Properties, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 1997 WL 781727 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished), app. not allowed, 81 Ohio St.3d 1503, 691 N.E.2d 1062 (Table), an insurer was denied the right to reform

if the court refuses to reform the policy, however, Exclusion 3(a) or the "no loss" exclusion may apply. See §§11.2 and 11.4.

11.2.4 Matters Discoverable By Inspection Of Property

FORM 53, Appendix A
Matters discoverable by inspection

Most matters that would be plainly visible on an inspection of the property are excluded from coverage by Exclusion 3(a). For example, a public road built partially on the insured property was excluded even though no exception was made for it in the policy. The court emphasized that the insured was a lawyer and CPA, was represented by an attorney at closing, had inspected the property, and had examined a survey showing the roadway as being within the boundary of the insured lot.[130] The cases under Exclusion 3(a) overlap with cases at §12.3 construing the inspection clause of the survey exception.

However, in some cases, the exclusion may be held not to bar coverage for an adverse claim of title or encumbrance in the public records despite evidence that would be obvious on inspection that a person claims a right of some kind in the property.[131] For example, in McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund,[132] the policy did not except a power line easement running along one boundary line. The insureds testified that they saw the utility line, but did not know it was on their property until they tried to sell the property. In Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[133] the insured had owned the property for a number of years before getting a title policy. The title defect was a record overlap. One week before getting the policy, the insured allegedly told her neighbor that his deed included land she owned. The prior neighbor had torn down a fence built by the insured before the policy was ordered, because of a dispute as to who owned the land. The court rejected the 3(a) defense primarily on the insured's own testimony that she thought she owned the land. In addition, the court noted that a policy that was accidentally issued without an exception for special assessments that had appeared in the commitment. See also Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Ozark Global, L.C., 956 F.Supp. 989 (S.D.Ala. 1997), in which the insurer was denied a request to reform a policy which failed to except tax liens, and Rivera v. TRW Title Ins. of New York, Inc., 309 A.D.2d 740, 765 N.Y.S.2d 257 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2003), in which the insurer produced no evidence as to why it should be permitted to reform a policy to except a mortgage and tax lien, and was therefore denied that request. In Geo Finance, LLC v. University Square 2751, LLC, 2014 WL 7369940 (E.D.Mich. 2014) (unpublished), the court said that there was insufficient evidence of a mutual mistake to support reformation, although it applied policy exclusions to bar coverage.

---

[130] Malkin v. Realty Title Ins. Co., Inc., 244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155 (1966).

[131] In C 1031 Properties, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 175 Wash.App. 27, 301 P.3d 500 (Wash.App. Div. 3 2013), the court held that Exclusion 3(b) did not apply when power poles were visible, but the insured did not actually know there was a recorded easement allowing their placement on the property.

[132] 327 So.2d 852 (Fla.App. 1976).

[133] 72 Wis.2d 503, 241 N.W.2d 434 (1976).

the insurer could have protected itself from loss because it was "at least arguable" that the overlap was discoverable in the public records. Similarly, in Fohn v. Title Ins. Corp. of St. Louis,[134] the insured got a policy long after purchasing the property, and was already aware of signs on the property suggesting that a neighbor claimed to own some of the land, but the court found that knowledge of signs was not the equivalent of knowledge that the neighbor had a better claim of record ownership to the disputed area.

11.2.5 Prior Liens Created By Lender Or Of Which It Had Knowledge

A lender insured is precluded from recovering under a title insurance policy as to a paramount lien that was created by the insured, or of which it had knowledge or had agreed to be subordinate.[135] Thus, the insured was not entitled to recover due to a determination that its lien was junior to another mortgage when the insured had sign an agreement subordinating its lien to the other mortgage.[136] Likewise, a bank "created" the defect when the prior trust deed omitted from its policy

---

[134] 529 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1975). In Fohn, the insurer asserted Exclusion 3(c) rather than Exclusion 3(a).

[135] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Lane Powell PC, 764 F.3d 114 (1st Cir. (Mass.) 2014), the court held that a law firm that fully understood that its mortgages on two properties would be junior to existing liens had "assumed" those liens or "agreed to" take subject to them. The court based its decision largely on National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 873 F.Supp. 718 (D.Mass. 1995), which applied the exclusion when the insured lender's officers were fully aware of the competing lien and agreed that the new lien would be subordinate. The Lane Powell court also emphasized the important point that Exclusion 3(a) exists to bar an inequitable windfall. If the court raises the proof burden too high, the insured will be able to collect insurance even "where the lender assumes or agrees to liens, or where the lender stands to receive an inequitable windfall." For that proposition, it relied on Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 53 F.3d 899 (8th Cir.1995). Similarly, in Beneficial Mutual Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 36 F.Supp.3d 537 (E.D.Pa. 2014), when a bank's loan documents all stated that it was taking a second lien and the commitment excepted a first mortgage, but the policy did not contain the same exception, Exclusion 3(a) was applied to negate coverage against the first lien. The New Jersey court distinguished between the standard of proof for a matter "agreed to" versus one "created" by the insured. The court described "the term 'agreed' as carrying connotations of contracted and requiring full knowledge by the insured of the extent and amount of the claim against the insured's title." The bank argued that the exclusion should not apply because there were a number of smaller facts that it did not know, such as the correct name of the senior lender. The court said the bank sought to interpret the exclusion too finely: "[a]ssuming arguendo that Lender actually was mistaken as to whether it was First Cornerstone Bank or Prior Lender that held the Prior Mortgage, this lack of knowledge would not change the outcome. For Exclusion 3(a) to apply, Lender did not need to know every detail of the Defect." Also, in First American Title Ins. Co. v. DJ Mortgage, LLC, 328 Ga.App. 249, 761 S.E.2d 811 (Ga.App. 2014), the lender reluctantly agreed to permit the seller to take back first-position liens of $10,000 on each of fourteen condominium units, ahead of the bank's lien. The bank instructed its closer to "withhold" $10,000 per unit from the bank's loan, and that all of the parties agreed that both lenders would be paid on all sales. The policies issued to the bank inexplicably did not except the seller carry-back liens. The court refused summary judgment to either side, although it said Exclusion 3(a) did not apply to a later loan and policy as to the same lender, which had no contemporaneous side agreement about priority. In Metropolitan Nat'l Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 456 S.W.3d 61 (Mo.App.S.D. 2015), the court held that a trial was needed to determine if the insured lender actually knew that a lender was not paid any consideration for the subordination of its superior deed of trust, in which case Exclusion 3(a) would void coverage for the lien priority assured by the policy based on the subordination. In Bank of America, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 2215012 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court held on a motion to dismiss that the insured may have "agreed to" having its mortgage be subordinate to a development agreement by acquiescing in recording instructions that told the insurer to record the development agreement before the mortgage.

[136] Schuman v. Investors Title Ins. Co., 78 N.C.App. 783, 338 S.E.2d 611 (1986). In Schuman, the lender argued that was also in favor of the insured bank, on a separate loan made several weeks earlier. The fact that the bank officers making the insured loan had no actual knowledge of the prior loan was "of no consequence," because the creation of the prior trust deed itself was a conscious and deliberate act by the lender.[137] A lender "suffered" a federal tax lien against its borrower that was disclosed on the credit report and automated loan underwriting report obtained by the lender, although it was not shown on the title commitment, when it elected to close the loan despite its knowledge of the lien.[138] Also, when the lender's own officers were secret partners in the borrower partnership, the lender and its successor were bound by the knowledge of its officers that the mortgage was a second lien rather than a first, as shown on the policy. The court held:

> Given the extensive involvement of the officers in arranging for the two mortgages, the undisputed evidence supports Ticor's position that [the lender's] officers intentionally "suffered, assumed, or agreed to" the first mortgage. Any other result would be inequitable here, because it would give [the lender] a windfall as a result of the fraudulent conduct of its agents, albeit unknown to it, at the expense here of an innocent insuring party.[139]

However, an adverse party's assertion that the insured lender had "knowledge" of its title interest or lien, by itself, does not establish that the exclusion applies, particularly when the insured denies the allegation.[140]

The exclusion has also been held not to have been invoked when the lender had more general

---

there were intrinsic advantages in being the first lien of which it was deprived, including the right to challenge the subordination it had signed. The court rejected these claims as being unrealistic. This argument is somewhat analogous to the reasoning accepted in several cases as to why tender of a deed is not as good as the valid and enforceable debt for which the lender bargained. See §3.4.6 regarding those cases.

[137] Valley Bank & Trust. Co. v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. of Dallas, 776 P. 2d 933 (Utah App. 1989).

[138] First Nat'l Bank of Jeanerette v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 3734056 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), findings adopted in 2010 WL 3734020 (W.D.La.) (unpublished). The court said the insured did not detrimentally rely on the title commitment in the face of the credit report. Rather, the bank should have asked the insurer if the lien still attached, and noted that the insurer is permitted to amend the commitment to except a lien after it is disclosed.

[139] National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 873 F.Supp. 718, 728 (D.Mass. 1995).

[140] In Colonial Mortgage Service Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 6237852 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), the insured lender, Colonial Mortgage, was sued by another lender that closed its loan after Colonial's loan but before the Colonial mortgage was recorded. The other lender, Customers Bank, made claims for constructive fraud, negligence and civil conspiracy, hinged on the allegation that Colonial "was aware of Customers' equitable lien" at the time Colonial recorded its mortgage. Commonwealth said that allegation invoked either Exclusion 3(a) or 3(b) or both. However, Customers also alleged that Commonwealth had knowledge of its claimed lien. The court mashed concepts by holding that neither exclusion applied because Customers had alleged that Commonwealth had knowledge of the purported lien, and was "negligent" in the closing conducted by its policy-issuing agent. In Shamrock Bank of Florida v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 1304694 (S.D.Ill. 2014) (unpublished), the court found that evidence of what the insured lender knew about a reverter before making the loan was too equivocal to negate coverage, although witnesses testified that the bank officers had been informed of it and consented to it.

knowledge that the property may be subject to a prior lien, or the lender might have prevented the lien by greater diligence. For example, the general knowledge within the industry that a lender-assignor was under investigation for loan fraud was found not enough to prohibit the insured assignee from indemnity for the assignor's failure to pay off prior mortgages.[141] A lender did not "assume" a prior mortgage lien because it was aware that the mortgage existed at the time it took an assignment of the insured mortgage. Rather, the court said, the bank was "a bona fide assignee [that] acquired all of the rights … under the title policy" and the policy made the insurer "liable for matters affecting title unless the particular defect is specifically excepted from coverage, even if the matter affecting title consists of a hidden defect…"[142] Similarly, a lender's knowledge that loans had been closed in a highly unusual manner was not sufficient to conclude that the insured had assumed the risk that prior mortgages would not be paid off.[143]

When the lender closes the loan through its own employees or an appointed closing agent, and the employee or closing agent makes a mistake that affects title or the insured lien, Exclusion 3(a) may apply to bar the claim as a matter "created" or "assumed" by the insured.[144]

When the insured lender has negotiated for protection against a title risk, by that very fact it has not "agreed to" the risk. Thus, a lender that got a policy intentionally omitting a prior mortgage was found not to have "agreed to" second position, even though the insurer gave its assurance on the condition that the insured hold funds sufficient to pay off the first mortgage. The lender did hold the funds, but the loan agreement did not require that the lender use the money to pay off the mortgage. The court held that the insurer had assumed the risk of its own failure to determine the terms of the

---

[141] International Charter Mortgage Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 538 F.Supp. 1154 (D.P.R. 1982). The insurer argued, in essence, that the exclusion created a duty to take assignments in a commercially reasonable manner, with ordinary diligent inquiry. The insurer argued that the insured was not a holder in due course of the mortgages and notes, and therefore was subject to the defenses that could be raised against the original lender. The court found the UCC analysis inapplicable as between insurer and insured. It chose not to interject any standard of reasonable or prudent business practice as an element of the 3(a) analysis.

[142] U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 37 A.D.3d 822, 832 N.Y.S.2d 223 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2007).

[143] American Title Ins. Co. v. East West Financial, 16 F.3d 449 (1st Cir. 1994). See further discussion of the case at §11.3.5.

[144] In Plaza Home Mortgage, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 145 A.D.3d 1048, 42 N.Y.S.3d 854, 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 08890 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2016), when the lender appointed a closing agent who failed to use the loan money to pay off the existing mortgage loan, the insured lender's agent "created" the title problem, invoking Exclusion 3(a) and negating policy coverage. However, in First Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 320 P.3d 406 (Colo.App. 1 Div. 2014), the title insurance commitment for a loan required the recording of a deed putting the borrower in title as well as the recording of the deed of trust by that borrower. The lender closed the loan itself and failed to obtain and record the deed. The court found that Exclusion 3(a) did not apply because the insurer accepted the risk of the defective lien by issuing the policy with knowledge of its own requirement. The insurer could have refused to issue the policy until the requirement was met. The court's analysis was heavily influenced by the fact that Colorado is one of the states that interprets the word "created" as requiring proof that the insured was guilty of a conscious, deliberate, and affirmative act "intended to bring about the conflicting claim," not merely an inadvertent or negligent act. The word "assumed," however, has never carried that heightened burden of proof.

loan agreement before giving the coverage.[145]

A lender was held not to have "agreed to" second position when it took a second mortgage, lost its policy, and obtained a new one a year later that incorrectly omitted the first mortgage. The court accepted the lender's assertion that nothing as of the date the replacement policy showed the lender's intent to remain in second position.[146] The court also refused to require that the lender show it relied on the policy as a predicate to asserting a loss.[147]

11.2.6 Bankruptcy Preference Or Recharacterization Of Interest

When a borrower files bankruptcy during the preference period after the insured mortgage loan is made, and the trustee seeks to set aside the mortgage as a result, such claims are excluded by a creditors' rights exclusion, on policies containing such a provision. On policies issued before the creditors' rights exclusion was added, the same type of claim was decided based on Exclusions 3(a) or the post-policy exclusion. All cases involving creditors' rights are discussed at §11.8.

11.2.7 Fraud Or Other Tort In Obtaining Title

FORM 38, Appendix A
Tortious conduct in obtaining title

Exclusion 3(a) applies when the insured is accused of having obtained title by fraud. Such

---

[145] First Nat'l Bank of Minneapolis v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 572 F.2d 155 (8th Cir. 1978). The First National court sagely points out that, when the insured creates or assumes the defect, but the insurer insures against it, the insurer cannot deny its coverage unless it can prove that the insured intended to assume the risk without relying on the policy assurance. The question is which party assumed the risk. For cases in which the 3(a) exclusion was negated on an owner's policy because the insurer "insured over" the defect created by the insured, see Hansen v. Western Title Ins. Co., 220 Cal.App.2d 531, 33 Cal.Rptr. 668 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1963) and Bozeman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 470 So.2d 465 (La.App. 1 Cir. 1985), discussed at §11.2.9.

[146] This argument was echoed in Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. American Resources, Ltd., 859 F.2d 772 (9th Cir. (Hawaii) 1988), in which the insured mortgaged the property, then later got the mortgage released. At date of policy, the mortgage was released of record. Then the lender sued, claiming that the release had been obtained by fraud. The court held that the giving of the mortgage and the obtaining of the release were not "created" by the insured, since both acts were prior to the policy date. Thus, as in Tumwater State Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 51 Wash.App. 166, 752 P.2d 930 (1988), the court found that the insured's conscious intent to "create" or "suffer" had to have existed on the date of policy.

[147] Tumwater State Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 51 Wash.App. 166, 752 P.2d 930 (1988). The Tumwater court also asserted that the lender did rely on the erroneous policy because it read the policy to mean that it had moved into first position. "In addition to using the policy to make the initial loan determination, a commercial lender also tailors its continuing relationship with the debtor according to the protection afforded by the policy. In this case, Tumwater took a hands off approach with the Burkharts on the assumption that it was protected by the Commonwealth policy. Such reliance on the policy meant that Tumwater lost its opportunity to intervene into the Burkharts' failing business and possibly minimize its losses. Therefore, there has been reliance on the part of Tumwater." The court, however, does not point to any facts in the record showing that the lender actually made the above analysis. In any similar case, a lender should have to give concrete evidence that it acted in reliance on the policy.

allegations are not based on defects in title, but rather the tortious manner in which the insured obtained title.[148] Such allegations are outside of the scope of the policy and do not invoke any covered risk. The lack of coverage is merely confirmed by the exclusion. Because it is beyond the ambit of the policy, the insurer is not obligated to defend the insured when it is accused of fraudulent procurement of the property, even when the fraud claim is groundless.[149] Thus, claims that an insured has obtained title by fraud, undue influence, coercion, deceit or other tortious conduct have been uniformly deemed excluded under Exclusion 3(a).[150] See the companion discussion of these

---

[148] The leading cases on the subject are Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 116 Cal.App. 3d 658, 172 Cal.Rptr. 248 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1981); and Barczewski v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 210 Cal.App.3d 406, 258 Cal.Rptr. 386 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1989). See further discussion at §4.5.1. Moskopoulos was extended in Liberty National Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 217 Cal.App.4th 62, 157 Cal.Rptr.3d 664 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2013), in which the insured was accused of forcing out a former co-owner by legal but devious methods, which was the sole basis to attack the insured's title. The insured argued that the plaintiff did not make tort claims, but couched the complaint as an action to quiet title. The court analyzed the case based on substance over form. It said: "[a]s in Moskopoulos, the Partielly Action did not allege a defect in Liberty's title, but tortious conduct in the manner in which Liberty acquired title. … The Partiellys alleged that they had a 9.5 percent interest in title to the BTC property by virtue of the loan participation agreement, but they were deprived of that interest when the defendants excluded them from “downstream transactions” in violation of a purported partnership agreement, and fraudulently represented that the BTC property was “no good” and that the defendants “intended to walk away and take no additional or active part” in it. … This situation is no different than Moskopoulos, in which the insured held legal title to the subject property, but the sellers sought to regain title (through a constructive trust or rescission) because the insured's alleged tortious conduct deprived them of it."

[149] Brick Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 161 Misc. 296, 291 N.Y.S. 637 (N.Y.City Ct. 1936). In Queens Organization, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 172 A.D.3d 932, 99 N.Y.S.3d 411 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2019), the court held that the title insurer was not required to defend its insured in a lawsuit claiming that the insured altered the deed to add itself as the grantee of a half interest in the property.

[150] Taussig v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 171 F.2d 553 (7th Cir. 1948); Rosenblatt v. Louisville Title Co., 218 Ky. 714, 292 S.W. 333 (Ky.App. 1927); Ginger v. American Title Ins. Co., 29 Mich.App. 279, 185 N.W.2d 54 (1970); Mattson v. St. Paul Title Co. of the South, 641 S.W.2d 16 (Ark. 1982); Brick Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 161 Misc. 296, 291 N.Y.S. 637 (City Ct. 1936); Farrington v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 86 Wash.App. 399, 936 P.2d 1157 (1997) (transfer into corporation in fraud of creditors); Mattson v. St. Paul Title Co. of the South, 641 S.W.2d 16 (Ark. 1982); Conway v. Title Ins. Co., 277 So.2d 890 (Ala. 1973); Feldman v. Urban Commercial, Inc., 78 N.J.Super. 520, 189 A.2d 467 (Ch. 1963), aff'd, 87 N.J.Super 391, 209 A.2d 640 (App. Div. 1965); Kachel v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 1999 WL 123807 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished), aff'd 2001 WL 527480 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished) (no duty to defend suit based on off-record agreement between insured owners; no claim of fraud or tort); Szelc v. Stanger, 2009 WL 4573425 (D.N.J.) (unpublished) (fraudulent conspiracy to strip seller's equity in a foreclosure rescue scam excluded because of deliberate nature of conduct, citing Feldman, but insurer required to defend unconscionability claim, which was not premised on fraud). In San Jancinto Z, L.L.C. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2014 WL 1317696 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), modified on denial of rehearing (April 24, 2014), rev.den. June 18, 2014, the court found no duty to defend a lender against tort claims concerning the making of the loan, following the Moskopoulos and Liberty National reasoning. In RNT Holdings, LLC v. United General Title Ins. Co., 230 Cal.App.4th 1289, 179 Cal.Rptr.3d 175 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2014), the court held that the insured lender had invoked Exclusion 3(a) by its attorney's conduct in recording a deed in the gap that took the borrower out of title and in failing to disclose the title problems that caused a serious dispute, which conduct it said was "intentional and deliberate and not inadvertent or mistaken." In Howard v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 5021768 (E.D.Mo. 2015) (unpublished), Howard was accused by his lender of having committed loan fraud when he purchased some property, to which he asserted that someone else had impersonated him in the loan application and closing because he was doing time when the loan closed. Later, Howard sued under the owner's policy issued in his name, claiming he had "lost" title due to fraud. The court found that subjects in relation to the duty to defend the insured, in §4.5.1.

Similarly, the policy does not protect the insured against a claim that the insured conveyance was a fraud on the seller's creditors, even if the deed is voided, causing a complete title failure.[151] Thus, a local church and its District Council each claimed title to the church building, and the local church took steps to induce the insurer to issue a policy naming the local church as owner of the property. The court found that the local church had "created" the defect on which the claim was based, and thus the matter was excluded.[152] It held further that the claims "do not flow from a defect in the title to the properties which existed on the date of the policy, but rather, from intentional actions of the insured ..., [which] will be considered as having been 'created' and therefore excluded under the policy."[153] Exclusion 3(a) also applies to claims that the insured has slandered or disparaged another person's title, because such claims require allegations of intentional conduct antithetical to valid rights in property.[154] The exclusion also applies to claims that the insured defrauded the seller to strip him of his equity in the property or by conducting a foreclosure rescue scam.[155]

Exclusion 3(a) negates coverage for a claim that the insured deed should be recharacterized as a mortgage.[156] The insurer is not obligated to defend one insured in a lawsuit brought by a co-owner to recharacterize their interests in the property based on an unrecorded agreement.[157] Such a dispute presents essentially the same coverage issue as a fraud perpetrated in procuring title, the court said:

Exclusion 3(a) barred Howard's policy claim because he "cannot now argue that Defendant owes him money on title insurance for real estate transactions which he repeatedly argued were fraudulent based on his claimed inability to transact them from prison." In Queens Organization, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 172 A.D.3d 932, 99 N.Y.S.3d 411 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2019), the court held that the title insurer was not required to defend its insured in a lawsuit claiming that the insured altered the deed to add itself as the grantee of a half interest in the property.

[151] Ginger v. American Title Ins. Co., 29 Mich.App. 279, 185 N.W.2d 54 (1970).

[152] First Assembly Church of West Plains v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 872 S.W.2d 577 (Mo.App. S.D. 1994).

[153] Id. at 583.

[154] Royale Westminster Retirement, LLC v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 2582101 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (no duty to defend slander of title claim; disparagement of title cause of action requires proof of intentional actions, not mere negligence, invoking Exclusion 3(a)).

[155] Bankruptcy Estate of Ketterling v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 3926254 (D.Minn.) (unpublished) (no coverage for lawsuit accusing insureds of having defrauded sellers in foreclosure rescue arrangement); Szelc v. Stanger, 2009 WL 4573425 (D.N.J.) (unpublished) (rescue scam claims excluded under the Residential policy equivalent of Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b), which the court termed the "created-or-known" exclusion); 266 Summit, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 3020301 (D.Minn.) (unpublished) (lawsuit by seller to unwind complicated double sale with seller financing and lease-option excluded).

[156] Spurgeon v. Coan & Elliott, 180 S.W.3d 593 (Tex.App.-Eastland 2005). Also see Marr v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 307 Fed.Appx. 952, 2009 WL 211809 (6th Cir. (Ky.)) (unpublished).

[157] Kachel v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 1999 WL 123807 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished) aff'd 2001 WL 527480 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished).

> No matter what the respective rights are among the insureds, none of the insureds obtained insurance against title claims by their co-owners. Rather, they, as do all title insurance purchasers, sought to insure that the property they bought had free and clear title.

The court found that the use of Exclusion 3(a) advanced the interest of the public, by thwarting collusive lawsuits between co-owners.

Similarly, the policy does not protect the insured against claims based on the breach of the insured's own contract for the purchase of the property. In Stevens v. United General Title Ins. Co.,[158] the insured, Stevens, contracted to buy property from 1438 E Street, S.E. L.L.C., which was not yet in title but had a contract to buy the property from a Mr. Moy. There was a substantial difference in the two sale prices. Stevens learned that Moy was not even the owner. He signed a second contract with the real owners. 1438 E Street sued Stevens for intentional interference with contract and fraudulent conveyance. Stevens tendered his defense to the insurer. The insurer argued that Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b) precluded a duty to defend or indemnify. The court found both exclusions applicable.

One decision stands somewhat at odds with this line of cases. In Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. American Resources, Ltd.,[159] the claimed insured[160] had obtained a release of its own mortgage on the property. The lender later sued, claiming the release was obtained by fraud. The court found a duty to defend, because the lender asserted a lien on the property. The court refused to apply the exclusion, because the lien claim invoked a covered risk. Moskopoulos was also distinguished in Wheeler v. Reese,[161] in which it was claimed that the seller to the insured, rather than the insured himself, obtained title by fraud. The insurer claimed that the insured knew of his grantor's fraud, or could have discovered it. The court found that such allegations did not establish the requisite conscious act by the insured to invoke the exclusion.[162]

---

[158] 801 A.2d 61 (D.C. 2002).

[159] 859 F.2d 772 (9th Cir. (Hawaii) 1988).

[160] In fact, the claimant, American Resources, was not the named insured but a member of the insured joint venture. It had deeded the property to the joint venture at the same time the disputed mortgage release was obtained.

[161] 835 P.2d 572 (Colo.App. 1992).

[162] In addition, the policy apparently had Exclusion 3(a) deleted from it by unilateral mistake of the insurer, which the court refused to reverse. While this case did not find Exclusion 3(a) invoked by knowledge that a party would obtain by normal inquiry into a transaction, at least one case did deny recovery on the basis of such knowledge, relying instead on Exclusion 3(b). In Applefield v. Commercial Standard Ins. Co., 176 So.2d 366 (Fla.App. 1965), the purchaser of mortgages knew or should have known that the mortgages were not first liens, and the title commitments showing them as such were false. The court found no liability.

11.2.8 Construction Loan Disbursement

Exclusion 3(a) has been invoked in a series of cases involving construction loans and liens. These cases are discussed beginning at §10.1.4.

11.2.9 Other Matters Involving Owner Insureds

Various other kinds of actions are deemed to have been created,[163] suffered,[164] assumed or agreed to[165] by the owner-insured, invoking Exclusion 3(a). Disputes about the contracts under which the insured purchased the property are matters "created," "suffered" or "agreed to" by the insured.[166] Also, it is commonly accepted that the exclusion applies to any claim that the insured entity has not been validly formed.[167] However, the exclusion may not apply if the insurer was equally aware of the possible infirmity in the insured entity.[168]

---

[163] In Edwards v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 575953 (Ariz.App. 1 Div. 2014) (unpublished), the court dismissed an action brought by an insured owner against the insurer for fraud, due to its failure to include exceptions in the commitment or policy for two judgments that had been entered against the insured and which automatically attached to the property when he took title. Also, the insurer was not liable when the insured corporation's charter was revoked because it was found to have been improperly reinstated before the policy date, in Peachtree Management & Invest. Co. v. Pioneer Nat. Title Ins. Co., 541 F.Supp. 51 (N.D.Ga. 1981).

[164] A judgment against the insured was found to have been "suffered" by the insured, in Smith v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 76 Pa. D. & C. 88 (1951); Buffington v. Atlanta Title & Trust Co., 43 Ga.App. 444, 159 S.E. 297 (1931).

[165] In Beck v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 189847 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), when the title insurer defended its insured in a lawsuit by a neighbor over a disputed boundary and the insured signed a settlement agreement, a subsequent lawsuit by the neighbor to compel the insured to perform under the settlement agreement was a matter "agreed to" by the insured, and thus the insurer had no duty to defend.

[166] In Kramer v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 69 Ill.App. 3d 1015, 387 N.E.2d 1105 (1979), the insured was in default on the purchase contract on the date of policy and was later ordered to reconvey the property to the sellers. The court found the matter to have been "created" or "suffered" by the insured. In City of East Providence v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 5527604 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), adopting findings of 2011 WL 5521246 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), the title insurer was not required to defend the city against the business's lawsuit for breach of a contract to develop the property, which the business owner claimed gave it beneficial ownership of the property. The court said the lawsuit was about a contract, not title; concerned post-policy breaches; and that the city created or agreed to the contracts. The court rejected the city's argument that it was not guilty of misconduct or fraud, and thus the exclusion should not apply, citing American Title Ins. Co. v. East West Financial, 16 F.3d 449 (1st Cir.1994). The court rejected that narrow view of the exclusion, because the East West decision goes on to say that the exclusion also applies when "the insured either expressly or impliedly assumed or agreed to the defects or encumbrances." In Carrington v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 6758365 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished), the court held that an insured "created" the title issue asserted in a lawsuit brought by the insured's four siblings, in which they said the sister broke an agreement to give them each one-fifth interests in the property after their credit scores had improved.

[167] See, for example, Peachtree Management & Invest. Co. v. Pioneer Nat. Title Ins. Co., 541 F.Supp. 51 (N.D.Ga. 1981), in which the policy was found not to provide coverage as to a dispute over the insured corporation's charter revocation and later reinstatement by strangers to the company.

[168] In Sisco v. Nations Title Ins. Co., 278 A.D.2d 479, 718 N.Y.S.2d 82, 2000 N.Y. Slip Op. 11841 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000), land was conveyed to a trustee. An heir of the settlor attacked the deed as being void because no trust agreement was executed. The insurer obtained summary judgment at trial court based on Exclusion 3(a), but the appellate court reversed and remanded for trial. The appeals court noted that the insurer was aware of the lack of a trust agreement at the

The exclusion can apply to actions taken by the insured after the date of policy.[169] A claim caused by the insured's use of the land after the policy date, in violation of the encumbrances excepted in the policy, is excluded as a matter "agreed to" by the insured.[170] However, the exclusion does not apply to all post-policy actions by the insured.[171]

Some acts of the insured create title defects, but do not show sufficient intent to fall under the exclusion.[172] In McLaughlin v. Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund, Inc.,[173] a lien that attached to the property for inheritance tax payable by the insured was found not to be excluded, on the slender premise that the insured did not affirmatively act to have the lien imposed on the property. Similarly, a court found that the claim that the insured trustee lacked authority to purchase the land was found not to be an "affirmative" act that would invoke the exclusion.[174]

When the insured has a close relationship to the party responsible for the defect in title, the "bad" act may be imputed to the insured and the matter excluded. Thus, in First American Title Ins. Co. v. Kessler,[175] the insured was not entitled to summary judgment when the nature of the time it insured. The policy "contains no specific exception for the claims relating to the purported trust." The court recited Herbil Holding Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 183 A.D.2d 219, 226, for the proposition that "a defect arising from the rights of a person whose interest appears in the chain of title must be covered unless specifically excepted." The court stopped short of ruling as a matter of law that Exclusion 3(a) is not applicable to a title defect of which the insurer is aware as of the policy date.

---

[169] See Nourachi v. First American Title Ins. Co., 44 So.3d 602 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2010), in which the insured discovered or confirmed after the date of the policy that his title was defective, and the court held that the exclusion barred coverage.

[170] For example, in Dickins v. Stiles, 81 Wash.App. 670, 916 P.2d 435 (1996), the insured property was subject to a disclosed restrictive covenant limiting the use of the property to "agricultural and residential purposes." The insured was sued by his neighbors for having used the property for commercial purposes. The insurer was found to have no duty either to defend or indemnify, because the policy had excepted the instrument. The insured was also alleged to have overburdened the easements benefiting the land by his commercial use. The overburdening claim was found to be excluded by Exclusions 3(a) and/or 3(d), since it concerned use of the property by the insured after purchase.

[171] In Plantation Bay, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2016 WL 4508228 (D.N.J. 2016) (unpublished), when an insurer agreed to remove an exception for a 1927 use restriction on the underwriting theory that it was too old to be enforced, but a court later held the restriction was enforceable, the insured's agreement to impose a lesser restriction on the property was found not to fall under Exclusion 3(a), as a matter "agreed to" by the insured. The court held that the modified restriction "would not have existed" but for the 1927 restriction, and the insured "may have" agreed to the modified restriction as a means of mitigating its loss.

[172] In Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017), the court ignored an owner's policy construction lien exception, Exclusion 3(a) and the post-policy exclusion to hold that the policy might cover construction liens filed after the policy date after the owner insured refused to pay the contractors. There is a strong dissenting opinion.

[173] 61 Ill.App.3d 911, 18 Ill.Dec. 891, 378 N.E.2d 355 (3d Dist. 1978).

[174] Keown v. West Jersey Title & Guaranty Co., 161 N.J.Super. 19, 390 A.2d 715 (N.J.A.D. 1978).

[175] 452 So.2d 35 (Fla.App. 1984).

relationship was not yet known. The court stated that the exclusion would apply if the insured and the person creating the title defect were partners. However, in Bourland v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn.,[176] the fact that the insured and the adverse titleholder both took title from the insured's mother did not, by itself, mean that knowledge of the defect should be imputed to the insured. The adverse deed was of record, and the insured knew that litigation over the deeds had been completed. In fact, the lawsuit did not remove the adverse claim, a fact apparently unknown to the insured. The insured thus was not shown to have the requisite intent to take subject to the adverse claim of title.

The exclusionary effect of the insured's knowledge of the title issue may be cancelled by the insurer's conscious assumption of the risk. Thus, an insurer may be precluded from asserting the exclusion when it considered the title issue before closing and agreed to give the insured affirmative coverage against it.[177] As one court explained, the conscious assumption of risk can bar the use of the exclusion:

> [A]n exclusion may not be used to defeat coverage where the insurer was informed of the "defect" in the title and agreed to insure against loss occasioned by such defect. Here, the company's agent issued the policy with full knowledge of the servitude, accepted the risk, and agreed to insure "over" the servitude in future policies as well. As this term, "insured over," is used in the title insurance industry, it means insuring the title to property in spite of and without exception to a known defect. In such cases, it is presumed that the reason the insured accepted the defect was because of the insurance over.[178]

---

[176] 4 Ark.App. 68, 627 S.W.2d 567 (1982).

[177] For example, in Dare Investments, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 2600594 (D.N.J.) (unpublished), the insured bought a loan as to which there was a serious concern about whether or not there was a valid debt still owed. It negotiated for a highly unusual statement in the form of an exception in the title commitment: that the insurer, "through its due diligence, can verify that the amount currently due and owing on the said mortgage being insured hereunder, at the date of this Commitment, is no less than $15,000,000.00." After the borrower denied that the mortgage was enforceable because there was no valid debt, the insurer denied the claim based on Exclusion 3(a). The court ruled that the insurer was not entitled to summary judgment, because the court would have to weigh whether or not the insured was entitled to rely on the statement, which might negate the exclusion.

[178] Bozeman v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 470 So.2d 465, 467 (La.App. 1985). See also Hansen v. Western Title Ins. Co., 220 Cal.App.2d 531, 33 Cal.Rptr. 668 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1963) and First National Bank of Minn. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 572 F.2d 155 (8th Cir. 1978), discussed further at §11.2.5.

11.2.10 Other Matters Involving Lender Insureds

FORM 87, Appendix A
Mortgage invalid for lack of debt

FORM 32, Appendix A
Loan policy does not insure debt, repayment of debt or value of secured land

Courts have held that a wide variety of lender acts invoke Exclusion 3(a), as matter created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the insured. This includes defects or infirmities in the insured mortgage that are the result of matters created, assumed or agreed to by the insured lender.[179] For example, the lender insured "created" the risk that it would not be able to foreclose its mortgage by becoming a partner in the owner partnership. The insurer was not responsible for defending or paying a loss when the partnership raised the claim in an attempted foreclosure.[180] The district court held that "the harm to JDC [the lender] is not defective title, but the difficulty in collecting the partnership's indebtedness. Lawyers Title did not have a duty to protect JDC from such a risk. A title insurance policy does not guarantee that the insured will be able to collect its debts."[181] The Eleventh Circuit affirmed, saying:

> In issuing the policy, Lawyers Title did not insure the validity or collectability of the debt underlying the mortgages; nor did Lawyers Title make itself responsible for discovering the existence of, much less predicting the ramifications of the collapse of, the partnership relationship between [the lender and borrower]. …A finding that [179] In LJW Land, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 4370052 (W.D.N.C. 2016) (unpublished), the court held that the insured lender had "created" and "suffered" the attack on the insured deed of trust by a junior lien holder, which asserted that the lender was controlled by the borrower property owner, and that the lien was a strategic device intended to frustrate the junior lender's ability to foreclose on the property. The court refused to find that the term "created" required evidence of evil motive or tortious conduct. Similarly, in NPH Realty, Ltd. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23648 (D.Mass. 1997), NPH held a first mortgage on property owned by Daejan, Inc. The owner had also granted a second purchase money mortgage to Larken Realty Trust. Daejan defaulted on both loans. NPH was the high bidder at its own foreclosure sale, wiping out Larken's take-back purchase money lien. Larken sued NPH and Dajean, alleging that "NPH was an entity created and controlled by Daejan and that Daejan and NPH were colluding to squeeze out Larken's second mortgage." Ticor Title refused to defend its insured, NPH, in that suit. NPH settled and sued Ticor. The court held that Exclusion 3(a) negated any duty to defend or indemnify because Larken had alleged that NPH created the defect by its tortious deal with Daejan. In Investors Warranty of America, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 3992147 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the insurer relied on a subordination agreement to insure that a deed of trust had priority over an existing deed of trust. When the existing lender asserted that the insured had violated the subordination agreement, the court said Exclusion 3(a) did not negate coverage or a duty to defend.

---

[180] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. JDC (America) Corp., 818 F.Supp. 1543 (S.D. Fla. 1993), aff'd 52 F.3d 1575 (11th Cir. 1995).

[181] Id. at 1546.

> Lawyers Title had a duty to wade into this partnership morass ... would force insurers to underwrite risks not bargained for by either party.[182]

The exclusion also applies to actions by the lender in the drafting of the insured mortgage or its intentional and unpermitted alteration of that instrument. When a lender was sued for having allegedly altered the interest rate and forged the borrowers' signatures on the loan documents, the documents' unenforceability was found to have been "created" by the insured, barring any duty of the insurer to defend or indemnify the insured.[183] A lender was found to have created the defect in its mortgage that caused it not to impart constructive notice, when it drafted the mortgage using an incorrect spelling of the borrower's name.[184]

The exclusion applies when the lender makes an error in taking a mortgage on the wrong parcel, or not all of the parcels that it says it anticipated as having as collateral.[185] In a common situation, the lender obtains a valid lien against one parcel owned by its borrower, but does not receive a lien against other parcels also owned by the borrower. The insurer typically denies such a claim, because the insured has a valid lien against a parcel owned by its borrower, the policy insures the only parcel recited in the insured mortgage, and no Covered Risk is invoked by the lender's failure to obtain a lien on additional land. A lender sometimes argues that the insurer or its agent selected the legal description to be included in the title insurance commitment and chose the wrong parcel or not all of the intended parcels. A careful comparison of the title application, title commitment, purchase contract (if applicable), loan application, appraisal, mortgage, policy and real estate tax records, and an interview of the loan officer and title examiner, may be required to determine if a mistake was made and by whom in the selection of the parcel(s). If the title examiner misunderstood the title application and selected the wrong parcel or not all of the parcels, in most cases a reasonably prudent lender would have discovered the error. The lender, like any other proposed insured, has the right and obligation to review the title commitment to verify that it accurately identifies the land to be insured, and to instruct the title examiner to include other parcels

---

[182] 52 F.3d at 1584.

[183] First Federal Savings Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.E.2d 916, 922 (S.C.App. 1994).

[184] First Merit Bank, NA v. Guarantee Title & Trust Co., 2006 WL 1791148, 2006-Ohio-3333 (Ohio App. 9 Dist. 2006) (unpublished). The title insurer had given the lender the borrower's name by which he took title. The lender moved his first initial to a middle initial on the mortgage. The lender was not paid off when the borrower sold the property, because a subsequent title searcher did not discover the mortgage. The borrower later filed bankruptcy, preventing the lender from recovering the debt from the borrower personally. The court found that the lender had a duty to draft the instrument to impart notice, and its failure to do so fell under the exclusion:

"Upon review, we find that [First Merit] failed to meet its burden of demonstrating entitlement to coverage under the Lender's Policy. … Further, [First Merit] had the duty to confirm the validity of his lien and failed to do so. Therefore, we find that [First Merit] "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to" a defect in the title when it failed to reconcile the names listed on the deed and mortgage."

[185] Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. Fadili, 2011 WL 4703707 (D.N.H.) (unpublished). The policy correctly recited the legal description for the vacant parcel to which the insured mortgage attached. It recited on Schedule A the street address assigned to the adjoining parcel with a home on it. The lender had the wrong parcel appraised and selected the legal description to be used on the mortgage, invoking the exclusion.

in the commitment if necessary.

In any event, the policy does not insure a lien on a parcel when no such lien exists, and the policy cannot be reformed unless the mortgage is first reformed. A title insurer sometimes informs the insured that, if the lender obtains a new mortgage from the borrower encumbering additional land or a judgment reforming the mortgage to encompass such land, the insurer will endorse the policy to include the additional land. It is not uncommon for a lender to assert, after the borrower has defaulted, that it believed that it would receive additional collateral for its loan, while the borrower steadfastly disagrees. There are several objective indicators concerning a possible mutual mistake that would support reformation. If the loan was a refinance, a review of the parcel(s) described in the mortgage paid off by the insured mortgage loan is a strong indicator as to whether or not the insured reasonably expected to hold a lien on additional parcels. The appraisal is also a good but not foolproof indication of what collateral the lender believed it was taking.

The exclusion also applies to other encumbrances or covered matters created, suffered, assumed or agreed to by the insured lender.[186]

The exclusion also applies to claims against the lender for tortious conduct in the making of the loan, including fraud, tortious interference with contract, negligence, undue influence and other variants on fraud and tortious conduct.[187]

When a mortgage is void because the loan proceeds were improperly disbursed by the lender, the matter is excluded as having been "created" by the insured. In Mark Twain Kansas City Bank v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., the lender disbursed almost the entire loan to a party other than the owner, with the effect that the owner partnership received only $45,000 of the $3.1 million loan. The mortgage and note were held void for lack of consideration. The court found that the lender caused the defect, and did so after the policy date (less than an hour later).[188] Mark Twain was relied on, in [186] In Harvey v. J & H Holdings, Inc., 310 So.2d 371 (Fla.App. 1975), a seller that took back a purchase-money mortgage was not permitted to block the insurer's recovery against it as subrogee by asserting that the seller's loan policy also omitted the easement in dispute. The seller had granted the easement while it was the property owner. The court found that the easement was a matter created by the insured. In Cynergy, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 706 F.3d 1321 (11th Cir. (Ga.) 2013), a lender that made a loan with full knowledge that the property securing the debt had no right of access "assumed" that risk, despite the fact that the policy included a standard access coverage. In Northwest Savings Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 253080 (Pa.Super.) (unpublished), the court found that an insured lender suffered, assumed or agreed to two prior mortgages when those loans were not paid off by the bank's closing agent, because the lender knew about the liens and failed in its duty to pay off the loans. The closing agent was also the policy-issuing agent, but its malfeasance was within the scope of its agency for the lender, not as the title agent.

---

[187] In Colonial Mortgage Service Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 6237852 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), the court held that claims against the lender by the holder of a competing lien for tortious interference with contract and fraud did not invoke policy coverage or a duty to defend, because they are tort claims that do not affect title. However, it found that the insurer had a duty to defend the insured lender against claims of constructive fraud, negligence and civil conspiracy, brought by the same competing lien holder, because the relief sought for those claims was to subordinate the insured lien. In San Jancinto Z, L.L.C. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2014 WL 1317696 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), modified on denial of rehearing (April 24, 2014), rev.den. June 18, 2014, the insured withdrew its demand for a defense of tort claims including fraud, avoidance of fraudulent or preferential transfers after bringing suit, after the insurer the recent decision of Liberty National Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 217 Cal.App.4th 62, 157 Cal.Rptr.3d 664 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2013) on the same issue.

[188] 807 F.Supp. 84 (E.D.Mo. 1992). The disbursement was made less than an hour after the time of coverage shown part, in Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co.[189] In that case, the priority of the insured deeds of trust was challenged on the grounds that the lender had disbursed the loan funds contrary to the bankruptcy court order which gave the lender its priority, thus working a subordination of the lender's interest. The court found the claim excluded under 3(a) and the post-policy exclusion.

Mark Twain cites National Mortgage Corp. v. American Title Ins. Co.,[190] which did not invoke Exclusion 3(a), but used the same reasoning. In National Mortgage, the fee owner subordinated to the insured loan, which subordination was premised on the loan being used for construction of improvements. The lender allowed the funds to be diverted, and the subordination was voided as a result. The court pointed out that there was no defect in the mortgage instrument or the title as of policy date. The subordination was voided because of what the insured did with the loan proceeds after policy date, a matter entirely within the insured's control. Thus, the matter was excluded. The court declined to address 3(a) because it found Exclusion 3(c) dispositive. Neither decision was premised on a finding of fraud or intentional misconduct by the lender. The Mark Twain court was satisfied with finding merely that "the Bank knew or should have known that this transfer was not proper." It rejected the lender's argument that the exclusion could apply only on a showing of intentional misconduct.

The policy is also void when the lender's closing agent absconds with the funds, allowing the borrower to set aside the mortgage for lack of consideration.[191] One court addressing the issue stated that this defect was not within the ambit of policy coverage and, further, Exclusion 3(a) buttressed its finding of no coverage:

> Furthermore, coverage was properly denied pursuant to the exclusionary provision in the loan policy in which Fidelity expressly excluded coverage for any loss which Consumer "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to." Here, Consumer admittedly designated Ferrara as its settlement service provider by directing the funds earmarked for the mortgage loans to an escrow account maintained by Ferrara, and by authorizing Ferrara to perform certain duties on Consumer's behalf at the closings. Where a loss is caused by the fraud of a third party, in determining the liability as between two innocent parties, the loss should fall on the one who enabled the fraud to be committed [citation omitted]. Thus, the actions of Ferrara were properly on the policy.

---

[189] 56 Cal.App.4th 1489, 66 Cal.Rptr.2d 714 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1997).

[190] 299 N.C. 369, 261 S.E.2d 844 (1980).

[191] Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York v. Consumer Home Mortgage, Inc., 272 A.D.2d 512, 708 N.Y.S.2d 445, 2000 N.Y. Slip.Op. 05066 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000); Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cole Taylor Bank, 878 F.Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2012). In Plaza Home Mortgage, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 145 A.D.3d 1048, 42 N.Y.S.3d 854, 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 08890 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2016), the court held: "The plaintiff [lender] wired the funds for the mortgage loans to the escrow account of the attorney for the borrowers with closing instructions to perform certain duties on its behalf as the settlement agent, thereby designating that attorney as its agent. Therefore, the act of the settlement agent in misappropriating the funds he had been directed to use to pay off a prior mortgage was properly imputed to the plaintiff, and therefore, the plaintiff created the loss at issue... ."

imputed to Consumer. As such, Consumer created the loss which is excluded from coverage.

Several courts have held that a lender does not create or suffer a defective title because of its own lax loan underwriting.[192]

A mortgage assignee's knowledge of a defect in title or to the mortgage does not invoke Exclusion 3(a).[193] The exclusion applies to defects assumed by the named insured at the time the policy is issued. The loan policy preserves this defense as to successors to the loan who take with knowledge of the defect, by reserving:

---

[192] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Matrix Financial Services Corp., 255 Ga.App. 874, 567 S.E.2d 96 (Ga.App. 2002), the borrower obtained satisfactions of two prior mortgages by signing replacement liens to the lenders which were recorded in the gap, and thus were not detected by the insured lender. The court agreed that the borrower had committed nefarious acts, but refused to find that the lender had created or suffered the result by its sloppy loan underwriting:

"The parties agree that Jones made various misrepresentations in the loan transaction. According to Fidelity, if Matrix had properly investigated Jones' representations and performed an adequate property title search, Matrix would not have closed the loan. It thus contends that Matrix negligently created its own title problems and cannot legally or equitably seek coverage under the policy.

"Once again, we find no merit in Fidelity's argument. Fidelity has pointed to no policy provision excluding from coverage a mortgage transaction that, in its view, should not have closed. Regardless of the circumstances underlying the loan transaction, Fidelity agreed to insure the priority of Matrix's interest in the property. By issuing the title insurance, Fidelity gave its opinion "'concerning the validity of title, backed by an agreement to make that opinion good if it should prove to be mistaken and a loss should result in consequence.'" … It cannot avoid its policy obligations simply by second-guessing Matrix's decision to close the loan. Regardless of whether Jones was an appropriate loan risk, Fidelity insured the title."

An Ohio court relied heavily on Matrix in making nearly identical rulings, in Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 692 F.3d 507 (6th Cir. (Ohio) 2012). The Fifth Third court said that the lender's loan underwriting was "immaterial" to the title risk of several prior mortgages fraudulently concealed and not paid off at closing and that the title agent had arranged for a straw buyer to mortgage a house he did not own. The court said that "the insurance policy says nothing about Fifth Third's underwriting obligations. … Nothing in the policy makes that obligation conditional upon the quality of Fifth Third's underwriting with respect to the Buford loan. Chicago Title insured against a risk of title defects, not a risk of default." A second Ohio decision contains a similar ruling in a different context. In Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Title Assurance & Indemnity Corp., LLC, 2009 WL 5096806 (N.D.Ohio) (unpublished), the insurer argued that a purchaser invoked Exclusion 3(a) by committing loan fraud. The court found no causal connection between any loan fraud by the borrower and the title defect, which was the failure to pay off the seller's mortgage. In First Alliance Bank v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co. (In re Evans), 2012 WL 2374237 (Bkcy.S.D.Miss.) (unpublished), the borrower obtained many fraudulent loans that were rife with problems, some of which the insurer later said would have been obvious if the lender had cared. The court rejected the argument that the shoddy loan underwriting could negate policy coverage for prior liens, saying "even if the Woodgreen Banks were negligent in their loan negotiations with Chris Evans, in their dealings with Charles Evans, or in their acceptance of the Evans Plat, none of these actions relieved the Title Companies of their duty to act in good faith in performing their obligations." Contrast the above decisions with Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC v. Radian Guaranty, Inc., 2018 WL 684838 (E.D.Pa. 2018) (unpublished), which was a coverage lawsuit about mortgage insurance (not title insurance) covering 7,000 loans, the court said that the mortgage insurer, Radian, could rescind some but not all coverage based on the lender's failure to detect borrower loan fraud.

[193] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. National Enterprises, Inc., 133 F.3d 929 (Table), 1997 WL 800294, p. 1 (9th Cir. Cal.) (unpublished); Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Matrix Financial Services Corp., 255 Ga.App. 874, 567 S.E.2d 96 (Ga.App. 2002).

> all rights and defenses as to any successor that the Company would have had against any predecessor insured, unless the successor acquired the indebtedness as a purchaser for value without knowledge of the asserted defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter insured against by this policy as affecting title to the estate or interest in the land ... .[194]

Also, in a pair of decisions, a New York court held that the acts and possible fraud of the originating lender may not be imputed to the successor insured, because there was no agency relationship between the two entities. In the first decision in GreenPoint Mortgage Funding Inc. v. Stewart Title Ins. Co.,[195] Exclusion 3(a) was found not to apply to the successor insured. The named insured was Royal Mortgage Bankers, which made a loan to Royal's owner, Louis Crispino. After Crispino died, his wife sued to set aside the mortgage because Crispino had forged her signature. Royal had sold the loan to GreenPoint Mortgage. The insurer accused Royal of sloppy lending practices and sought to impute Crispino's acts to Royal, then assert Royal's negligence as a defense to GreenPoint under the successor provision. The court refused to employ Exclusion 3(a) to negate coverage because, it found, there was no evidence that either Royal or GreenPoint actually knew about the forgery, despite the lax lending practices. In the second GreenPoint decision,[196] however, the court held that there were triable questions of fact as to whether or not the acts of the closing attorney should be imputed to GreenPoint. The GreenPoint decision was relied on by another court which held that a lender did not assume the risk of prior liens by taking an assignment of the loan.[197] See §7.4 for a further discussion of the successor insured provision.

11.2.11 Effect Of D'Oench, Duhme Doctrine

With the large number of bank failures in recent years, an increasing number of claims involve the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and its relatives, the Resolution Trust Corporation and National Credit Union Administration (NCUA). Because these entities are governmental bodies, they enjoy special protections against other parties.

One such governmental shield affects the application of Exclusion 3(a). This protection was first enunciated in the U.S. Supreme Court case of D'Oench, Duhme & Co., Inc. v. FDIC.[198] In that case, the Supreme Court held that the FDIC was not bound by "secret agreements" between a third party and a bank whose assets are being administered by the FDIC. The court stated:

> Plainly one who gives such a note to a bank with a secret agreement that it

---

[194] Conditions & Stipulations 1(a)(i), 1992 ALTA loan policy; Condition 1(e)(ii), 2006 ALTA loan policy.

[195] 12 Misc.3d 1194(A), 2006 WL 2337967, 2006 N.Y. Slip Op. 51568 (N.Y.Sup. 2006) (unpublished).

[196] 49 A.D.3d 687, 854 N.Y.S.2d 185, 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. 02552 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2008).

[197] U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 37 A.D.3d 822, 832 N.Y.S.2d 223 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2007).

[198] 315 U.S. 447, 62 S.Ct. 676, 86 L.Ed. 956 (1942).

will not be enforced must be presumed to know that it will conceal the truth from the vigilant eyes of the bank examiners... . The test is whether the note was designed to deceive the creditors or the public authority or would tend to have that effect. It would be sufficient in this type of case that the maker lent himself to a scheme or arrangement whereby the banking authority on which [the FDIC] relied in insuring the bank was or was likely to be misled.[199]

The purpose of the D'Oench, Duhme doctrine is to allow the FDIC to rely on the face value of instruments in the bank's possession, rather than having to "retain linguists and cryptologists to tease out the meaning of facially-unencumbered notes."[200] D'Oench, Duhme also applies to the NCUA[201] and the RTC.[202]

The D'Oench, Duhme doctrine is essentially codified in 12 U.S.C. 1823(e), which states:

(e) Agreements against interests of Corporation.

(1) In general. No agreement which tends to diminish or defeat the interest of the Corporation in any asset acquired by it under this section or section 11 [12 USC §1821], either as security for a loan or by purchase or as receiver of any insured depository institution, shall be valid against the Corporation unless such agreement--

(A) is in writing,

(B) was executed by the depository institution and any person claiming an adverse interest thereunder, including the obligor, contemporaneously with the acquisition of the asset by the depository institution,

(C) was approved by the board of directors of the depository institution or its loan committee, which approval shall be reflected in the minutes of said board or committee, and

(D) has been, continuously, from the time of its execution, an official record of the depository institution.

(2) Public deposits. An agreement to provide for the lawful collateralization of deposits of a Federal, State, or local governmental entity or of any depositor referred to in section 11(a)(2) [12 USC §1821(a)(2)] shall not be deemed to be invalid pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) solely because such agreement was not executed contemporaneously with the acquisition of the collateral or with any changes in the collateral made in accordance with such agreement.

The case and the statute are often treated as being interchangeable. However, as one court

---

[199] 315 U.S. at 460, 62 S.Ct. at 681.

[200] FDIC v. Hamilton, 939 F.2d 1225, 1230 (5th Cir. 1991) (quoting Bowen v. FDIC, 915 F.2d 1013, 1016 (5th Cir. 1990).

[201] Savoy v. White, 788 F.Supp. 69, 72 (D.Mass. 1992).

[202] Resolution Trust Co. v. Feldman, 3 F.3d 5 (1st Cir. 1993).

noted, there are differences. Section 1823(e) is:

> broader in that it applies to any agreement, whether or not it was secret and regardless of the maker's participation in a scheme; it is narrower in that it applies only to agreements and not to other defenses the borrower might raise.[203]

Thus, using either D'Oench or the statute, the FDIC may avoid the consequences of almost any kind of secret agreement that would otherwise hinder enforcement of a debt instrument. The protection of this section is waived if not pled and asserted at trial.[204]

The clash between the D'Oench, Duhme doctrine and the policy exclusion is illustrated in National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.[205] In that case, a credit union made a loan that was understood at that time to be secured by a second mortgage on the real estate collateral. A year later, the credit union agreed to refinance that debt. At the second closing, however, the insurer's agent issued a policy that incorrectly insured the mortgage as a first lien. Officers of the credit union knew that the mortgage was actually a second lien, as did the attorney-agent, who also represented the credit union. Further, several credit union officers were secret partners in the owner partnership, and the credit union's Treasurer approved the acceptance of a second lien rather than a first as approved by its board.

The first mortgage was foreclosed, wiping out the insured mortgage. The NCUA as liquidating successor to the credit union made demand for the policy limits, and the insurer defended based on Exclusion 3(a). The NCUA argued that the exclusion could not apply because, under D'Oench, Duhme, the NCUA was not bound by the credit union officers' secret knowledge and acts.

The court disagreed, relying on the Howell exception to the D'Oench, Duhme doctrine. Howell v. Continental Credit Corp.[206] carved out the following exception to D'Oench, Duhme and the statute:

> When ... the asset upon which the FDIC is attempting to recover is the very same agreement that the makers allege has been breached by the FDIC's [predecessor], § 1823(e) does not apply. None of the policies that favor the invocation of the statute are present in such cases because the terms of the agreement that tend to diminish the rights of the FDIC appear in writing on the face of the agreement that the FDIC seeks to enforce.[207]

The National Credit Union court found that the title insurance policy was "an asset for

---

[203] Tuxedo Beach Club Corp. v. City Federal Savings Bank, 749 F.Supp. 635, 642 (D.N.J. 1990).

[204] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 936 S.W.2d 266 (Tenn.App. 1996).

[205] 873 F.Supp. 718 (D.Mass. 1995).

[206] 655 F.2d 743 (7th Cir. 1981).

[207] Id. at 747.

purposes of the statute," and the NCUA took the policy subject to all of its limitations, despite the statute.[208] The court then concluded that the exclusion barred recovery under the circumstances.[209] The National Credit Union case should be equally applicable as to any assertion of Exclusion 3(a).

The D'Oench, Duhme doctrine has been found applicable as to Exclusion 3(a). In Title Ins. Co. of Minn. v. Smith, Debnan, Hibbert and Pahl,[210] an insurer sued a law firm on a title certification which incorrectly stated that two prior mortgages had been discharged. The firm defended by arguing that its lender client had "agreed to" the liens, and thus the insurer was not liable on its policy. The lender had been taken over by the RTC. The court agreed with the insurer that Exclusion 3(a) could not be asserted against the RTC, because there was no evidence in the loan file that the lender had agreed to the prior liens. Without such a written agreement in the loan file, the D'Oench, Duhme doctrine and 12 U.S.C. 1823(e) would preclude the insurer from binding the RTC to the insolvent lender's agreement.

11.3 Known To Insured

Exclusion 3(b) of the policy excludes those matters which are (1) not recorded in the public records on date of policy but (2) known to the insured, (3) not known to the insurer and (4) not disclosed by the insured to the insurer in writing before the insured takes title or consummates its mortgage loan.[211] See §7.10 for a discussion of knowledge of a successor insured under a loan policy.

---

[208] "Exclusion 3(a) appears in writing on the face of the title insurance policy. The FDIC cannot seek to enforce the policy while disclaiming its exceptions. Cf. FDIC v. Panelfab Puerto Rico Inc., 739 F.2d 26, 30 ("[W]e will not consider the [policy] as a whole to be valid for the purpose of collecting ... only to invalidate under [§1787(p)(2)] a particular option contained in the agreement that, when exercised according to its terms, is a defense to that collection."). Ticor's defense falls within the exception to D'Oench and ' 1787(p)(2) for claims that are premised on a breach of an agreement or warranty that is itself contained in the bank's records." 873 F.Supp. at 725.

[209] Id. at 728.

[210] 459 S.E.2d 801 (N.C.App. 1995).

[211] Exclusion 3(b) of the 2006 ALTA policies reads: "Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters: … not Known to the Company, not recorded in the Public Records at Date of Policy, but Known to the Insured Claimant and not disclosed in writing to the Company by the Insured Claimant prior to the date the Insured Claimant became an Insured under this policy... ."

11.3.1 Misrepresentation By Proposed Insured

FORM 39, Appendix A
Misrepresentation or concealment voiding coverage

Exclusion 3(b) excludes from coverage risks known to the insured and not known to the insurer, which are not evidenced by an instrument in the public records, and which the insured does not disclose in writing to the insurer in advance of the closing of the sale, loan or lease to be insured. In many lines of insurance, such as health and life insurance, a proposed insured submits an application for insurance and is asked to make representations about the risks for which coverage is given. In extending coverage, the insurer relies primarily or exclusively on the representations made by the proposed insured in the application. The application is ordinarily attached to and made a part of the policy. If an applicant misrepresents on the application, causing the insurer to accept an undisclosed material risk, the policy is void.[212]

A title insurer does its own risk investigation in each transaction when it examines the public records.[213] Also, title insurance policies do not incorporate by reference an insurance application in which the insurance applicant is asked to disclose his or her knowledge of title risks, with a provision stating that the policy is void if the application contains a misrepresentation of fact.[214] In some jurisdictions, title insurers do not require any formal statement from the proposed insured regarding its knowledge of the state of title.[215] This fact received comment in Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co.:

> In the ordinary practice the duty of disclosure has been relaxed. Most insurers require an applicant for insurance to answer questions prepared by it; "information not asked for is presumably deemed immaterial." Stipcich, supra, at 316, 48 S.Ct. at 513. Most applications for insurance are prepared by or with the assistance of an agent for the insurer. As a result, an applicant for insurance wishing to conceal information from

---

[212] See Allan D. Windt, Insurance Claims & Disputes: Representation of Insurance Companies and Insureds, Sixth Edition, § 3:6, Thomson Reuters (collecting cases and statutes from various states).

[213] "Instead of relying on the representations of the insured to evaluate the risk, title insurers undertake an independent professional search of the public records relating to the subject property in order to protect itself [sic]." Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. First Federal Savings Bank & Trust, 744 F. Supp. 778, 784 (E.D. Mich. 1990).

[214] Earlier forms of title insurance policies contained more traditional provisions rendering the policy void for any misrepresentation in the application for insurance. See Glickman v. Home Title Guaranty Co., 8 Misc.2d 303, 167 N.Y.S.2d 793 (1957); 15 Misc.2d 167, 178 N.Y.S.2d 281 (Sup. 1958), aff'd 8 A.D.2d 629, 185 N.Y.S.2d 756 (Sup.Ct.App.Div. 1959); First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (Sup. Ct. 1939); and Stensgaard v. St. Paul Real Estate Title Ins. Co., 50 Minn. 429, 52 N.W. 910 (1892).

[215] In many states, insurers routinely require affidavits from sellers of property, but not from the proposed insured. In some states, insurers also regularly require ALTA Statements from buyers. Unlike medical or life insurance, however, the ALTA Statement is not an application, does not ask questions directly, and is not incorporated physically or by reference in the policy.

> an insurer must in most cases give a false or misleading statement. In contrast, Collins was not required to answer questions prepared by Pioneer; Pioneer relied on the certificates of title prepared by Ables [Collins' attorney]. While Collins did not make a false statement on an insurance application, Collins through his agent, Ables, failed to disclose Chalupsky's claim to Pioneer.[216]

Despite this lack of formal application, however, the applicant for title insurance must disclose his or her knowledge of a material risk. The insured's failure to disclose a material risk voids coverage, even as to matters appearing in the real estate records.[217] This duty is tempered in California by law, as to certain matters.[218] This duty to disclose is a continuing duty through the date of policy.[219] See §11.3.4 below for cases upholding the continuing duty.

---

[216] 629 F.2d 429, 433-4 (6th Cir. 1980).

[217] Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 629 F.2d 429 (6th Cir. 1980); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Research Loan & Invest. Corp., 361 F.2d 764 (8th Cir. 1966); 1200 Ashland, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 5481800 (N.D. Ill.) (unpublished) (when insured requested zoning endorsement two years after closing and several months after receiving survey revealing that part of property was not zoned as stated on zoning endorsement issued to lender previously, insured's failure to disclose correct zoning classification to insurer voided endorsement). In Nourachi v. First American Title Ins. Co., 44 So.3d 602 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2010), a person who got a tax deed and then learned that the United States was the true owner of the land, then asked for title insurance without disclosing the government's ownership, voided coverage by concealment. The court said that to permit a person to shop for coverage in this fashion "would promote unsavory gamesmanship." It rejected the insured's argument that concealment should not apply because the title insurer had equal access to the facts, since the deed to the United States was recorded.

[218] Under Cal.Ins. Code §§ 333, 335, the insured is not required to tell the insurer the following, except in response to specific inquiries: (1) facts the insurer knows or should know, (2) facts for which the insurer has waived communication, (3) facts proving that a risk is excluded, (4) facts equally available to the insurer, and (5) general trade usages. The insured also does not have to disclose his or her opinion about a matter, even if asked. § 339.

[219] Conditions 2 of the 2006 ALTA commitment states: "If the proposed Insured has or acquired actual knowledge of any defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter affecting the estate or interest or mortgage thereon covered by this Commitment other than those shown in Schedule B hereof, and shall fail to disclose such knowledge to the Company in writing, the Company shall be relieved from liability for any loss or damage resulting from any act of reliance hereon to the extent the Company is prejudiced by failure to so disclose such knowledge. If the proposed Insured shall disclose such knowledge to the Company, or if the Company otherwise acquires actual knowledge of any such defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim or other matter, the Company at its option may amend Schedule B of this Commitment accordingly, but such amendment shall not relieve the Company from liability previously incurred pursuant to paragraph 3 of these Conditions." When the insured seeks an endorsement after the date of policy, the application of the exclusion and the commitment's terms to the insured's knowledge is less obvious. One court found that the duty does not apply to information learned by the insured after the policy date but before the insured requested an endorsement to the policy, even though that information was material to the endorsement coverage, because the policy exclusion referred to knowledge obtained before the policy date and the endorsement stated that it did not alter the terms of the policy. First American Title Ins. Co. v. Columbia Harbison LLC, 2013 WL 1501702 (D.S.C.) (unpublished). In 1200 Ashland, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 5481800 (N.D. Ill.) (unpublished), an insured sought and obtained a zoning endorsement two years after purchasing the property, but coverage was voided due to the insured's concealment of a new survey it obtained, after the policy was issued but shortly before the endorsement was requested, that showed that part of the property was not zoned as stated on the survey the lender and insurer saw at closing. Because the insured discovered the zoning issue after the policy date, the court did not rely on Exclusion 3(b), but rather based its ruling on 215 ILCS

This duty to speak is based partly on the language of the insurance contract and partly on the common law. As was stated in Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co.:

> Under Tennessee law Collins had a duty "to make a fair disclosure of the facts (of the risk involved) to the insurer." [citations omitted] The common law duty of disclosure was recognized by the United States Supreme Court in Stipcich v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., 277 U.S. 311, at 316, 48 S.Ct. 512, at 513, 72 L.Ed. 895 (1927):
>
> Insurance policies are traditionally contracts uberrimae fidei ["Complete good faith, with no concealment"] and a failure by the insured to disclose conditions affecting the risk, of which he is aware, makes the contract voidable at the insurer's option.

The proposed insured has a duty to make a fair disclosure of all material facts. The applicant may not lie, misrepresent or make selective disclosure.[220] Silence in the face of a duty to speak is a breach of this duty. It is not sufficient for the applicant merely to refrain from making an affirmative misrepresentation.[221] In some jurisdictions at least, the insurer does not have to prove that the applicant intended to deceive the insurer by his or her silence.[222] Rather, the insurer need only show that the facts withheld were material and that the insured was, or should have been, aware of their materiality.

5/154 of the Illinois Insurance Code and case law holding that "a misrepresentation in an application for insurance avoids a policy when it materially affects either the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by a company."

[220] Parker v. Title & Trust Co., 233 F.2d 505 (9th Cir. 1956); Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 155 N.J. Super. 332, 382 A.2d 933 (App.Div. 1978). As the court stated it in Parker: "[s]urely a person thus led into a trap owes no duty to the one who did the trapping." 382 A.2d at 938. In Lee v. Farnell, 1997 WL 711352 (Conn.Super.Ct.) (unpublished), the dispute concerned an option to purchase. Dicta in the case provides an illustration of a form of subtle misrepresentation intended to induce an insurer to grant coverage. The seller's attorney gave the title insurer a copy of a letter dated February 15th in which the attorney declared to the optionee that the option had not been timely exercised. The closing took place on February 22nd. The insurer agreed to protect against the optionee's rights, based largely on the optionee's failure to respond to the letter. In fact, however, there was no response as of closing because the letter was not mailed until after closing, 11 days after it was dated. The court rightly stated that the failure to mail the letter, coupled with the implication to the contrary, "would not seem consistent with good faith dealing. Not only does it mislead [the purchaser], but it also could have the effect of materially misleading the title insurance company. ... [T]he company, thinking that the letter had been sent a week before the closing, may have had some reason to believe that the absence of objection from [the optionee] prior to the closing showed, to some degree, acquiescence in the contents of the letter."

[221] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Research Loan & Invest. Corp., 361 F.2d 764 (8th Cir. 1966); Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 629 F.2d 429 (6th Cir. 1980). In Investors Title Ins. Co. v. Bair, 296 Fed.Appx. 332, 2008 WL 4570478 (4th Cir.(S.C.) 2008) (unpublished), the insured had quieted title to property but did not join certain easement holders in the suit. She then asked to have her title insured but failed to disclose the facts about the suit until the easement holders she had not joined to the action stepped forward. The court found the exclusion negated coverage.

[222] "It is well-established that actual intent to deceive need not be shown. … Commonwealth was entitled to rescind the policies whether the Bank's concealment of a material fact was intentional or unintentional (Ins.Code, 330-331) provided, as was established here, the Bank appreciated the importance of the facts preceding its acceptance of the trust deeds." Bank of San Diego v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal.Rptr. 1 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1991) (unpublished), previously published at 231 Cal.App.3d 1265 and withdrawn from publication.

In other states, the insurer must prove that the insured intentionally withheld or misrepresented information to the insurer in order for the misrepresentation defense to apply. In L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guar. Co.,[223] the insurer argued that the title defect should have been disclosed by the proposed insured, and this misrepresentation voided coverage. The policy was an NYBTU form containing a specific misrepresentation provision.[224] The court reviewed the cases, and concluded that the policy is only voided by intentional misrepresentation, and then only as to matters which the insurer should not be expected to discover in the public records. It found that earlier New York cases had held that:

> … [T]he policy was voided by the insured's failure to disclose only in instances where there was evidence of intentional concealment on the part of the insured and the undisclosed information concerned a matter not of public record….
>
> One Federal court, addressing a provision identical to that found in the defendant's policy, stated that the clause "must be given a common sense application and, considering the nature of title insurance transactions, a duty to speak could be found only if the insurance applicant had actual knowledge of certain defects or encumbrances. Further, misrepresentation could be found only if one charged with such a duty to speak intentionally failed to disclose the information." (Lawyers Tit. Ins. Corp. v. Research Loan & Inv. Corp., 361 F.2d 764, 768.) … Moreover, these cases indicated, either expressly or by implication, that the title policy would only be voided in instances where the undisclosed information was not discoverable by the insurer by reference to publicly filed records. … We agree with the view expressed by these cases. Therefore, we hold that a policy of title insurance will not be rendered void pursuant to a misrepresentation clause absent some showing of intentional concealment on the part of the insured tantamount to fraud. Moreover, because record information of a title defect is available to the title insurer and because the title insurer is presumed to have made itself aware of such information, we hold that an insured under a policy of title insurance such as is involved herein is under no duty to disclose to the insurer a fact which is readily ascertainable by reference to the public records. Thus, even an intentional failure to disclose a matter of public record will not result in a loss of title insurance protection. … Of course, an intentional failure by the insured to disclose material information not readily discernible from the public records will render the policy void.[225]

[223] 418 N.E.2d 650, 52 N.Y.2d 179 (1981), later appeals 469 N.Y.S.2d 415 (1983) and 473 N.E.2d 984 (Ct.App. 1984).

[224] In New York, the New York Board of Title Underwriters Owner's Policy Form 100-D was issued from 1984 until 1991, when New York insurers began issuing ALTA policy forms.

[225] 418 N.E.2d at 654-5.

In accord with Smirlock is Bourland v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota,[226] which held that the exclusion applies only if the insurer proves that the insured intentionally withheld information.

The exclusion does not bar coverage when the applicant has made written disclosure to the insurer of the material facts concerning the matter for which coverage is asserted. Rather, the insurer, armed with the facts, is considered to have assumed the risk disclosed to it.[227] Disclosure of the material facts by the insured to the insurer's policy-issuing agent is binding on the insurer.[228]

11.3.2 Types Of Knowledge And Notice

Exclusion 3(b) applies to matters "known" to the insured. The definition of "known" in the policy is "actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to an insured by reason of the public records as defined in this policy or any other records which impart constructive notice of matters affecting the land."[229]

Thus, there are several categories of knowledge encompassed in the exclusion, not including constructive notice from public records. The phrase "actual knowledge" is not further defined. One court found this lack of definition created an ambiguity in the policy precluding any imputation of knowledge to the insured.[230] As will be discussed below, case law has otherwise been quite uniform in establishing that "knowledge" includes the following:

1. Matters of which the insured was personally cognizant as of the date of policy. This includes information disclosed by people and documents to the insured. It also includes facts about the title to or physical condition of the property that would tell

---

[226] 4 Ark.App. 68, 627 S.W.2d 567 (1982).

[227] Thus, when the insured and insurer together concocted a straw-man sale and mortgage to get around a trust prohibition on mortgaging, the insurer assumed the risk that the scheme could be attacked. McLoughlin v. Bridgeport Land & Title Co., 99 Conn. 134, 121 A. 175 (Conn. 1923). Also, in Stewart Title Ins. Co. v. Credit Suisse, 2013 WL 4710264 (D. Idaho) (unpublished), the court said that the insured disclosed enough information to "put Stewart on inquiry notice," and that a "diligent inquiry" would have revealed the risk of inchoate construction lien rights. Therefore, "Stewart must be held to knowledge of these facts, and thus cannot claim that Credit Suisse committed fraud by failing to reveal the same facts." In In re Pazzo Pazzo, Inc., ___ B.R. ___, 2019 WL 6699694 (Bkcy.N.J. 2019) (not yet released for publication), the insured signed a purchase contract that both disclosed and protected the insured against the risk that the holders of an option and lease could assert those rights, which had been terminated of record. The court found that Exclusion 3(a) barred coverage for those rights. The insurer also asserted Exclusion 3(b). The court said that, on summary judgment, it could not rule in the insurer's favor on that exclusion because "[t]he question was what knowledge, if any, Stewart Title had of the same risk, and whether it was disclosed to the insurer in writing." While Stewart Title denied that it saw the sale contracts before the policy was issued, the insured insisted that it did see the contracts, and that it had assumed the risk of the option and lease rights.

[228] McDonald v. Title Ins. Co., 49 Or.App. 1055, 621 P.2d 654 (1980); Mocco v. Licata, 2018 WL 2923483 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished).

[229] Conditions & Stipulations 1(c), 1992 ALTA policies; Conditions 1(h), 2006 ALTA policies.

[230] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Kessler, 452 So.2d 35 (Fla.App. 1984), further discussed in §11.3.2.

the average person of common sense that a title defect exists.[231]

2. As to an insured that is not a natural person, matters known by an officer, employee, member, partner or other person in a position of authority.[232]

3. Knowledge of the insured's agent, principal, representative, attorney, spouse or affiliate, and imputed to the insured under general agency law. A common limitation to imputation is that the agent must have obtained his or her knowledge during the course of his or her employment by the insured.[233]

---

[231] See, for example, Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co. v. Casmat, LLC, 2012 WL 366521 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), in which the court found the insured had actual knowledge, through its manager and counsel, of a lawsuit in which the insured had appeared.

[232] Peachtree Management & Inv. Co., Inc. v. Pioneer Nat. Title Ins. Co., 541 F.Supp. 51 (N.D.Ga. 1981) (sole shareholder of corporation found to be an insured under policy naming corporation as insured, with all policy defenses which insurer could assert against corporation imputed against shareholder); Carefree Living of America (Minnetonka), Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2000 WL 290411 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (knowledge of past president imputed to corporation insured); Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co. v. Casmat, LLC, 2012 WL 366521 (D.R.I.) (unpublished) (knowledge of limited liability company's manager imputed to the company).

[233] The knowledge of a lender's closing agent was held to be imputable to the insured lender in Greenpoint Mortgage Funding, Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 49 A.D.3d 687, 854 N.Y.S.2d 185, 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. 02552 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2008) (construing Exclusion 3(a) rather than 3(b)). In Fleishour v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 743 F.Supp.2d 1060 (E.D.Mo. 2010), the court held that the insured's real estate broker's knowledge of adverse possession rights was imputed to the insured. In Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 629 F.2d 429 (6th Cir. 1980), the court imputed the knowledge of the insured's attorney to the insured. In Arizona Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Smith, 21 Ariz.App. 371, 519 P.2d 860 (1974), the court accepted the argument that a real estate broker's knowledge may be imputed to an insured owner, but did not impute knowledge under the facts of that case. In Lower Town Project, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 3319710 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the court held that the property manager's knowledge may be imputed to the insured if the insurer establishes that the property manager was engaged by both the seller and the purchaser-insured. The court also held that a non-imputation endorsement was not applicable, because the endorsement negated the seller's knowledge but not that of the property manager, who served as agent of the seller in contracting for work and who signed the false lien affidavit on which the insurer gave construction lien coverage. In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cole Taylor Bank, 878 F.Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2012), the court imputed the acts and knowledge of the bank's closing agent to the bank to find that the lender had "created" the risk that the closer and others would steal the loan money, leaving the bank with a mortgage that failed for want of consideration and no policy coverage. In Sher v. Luxury Mortg. Corp., 2012 WL 5869303 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the insurer relied on Cole Taylor to make the same argument on very similar facts. The court did not address the merits of the issue. In Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co. v. Casmat, LLC, 2012 WL 366521 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), the court imputed to a limited liability company the knowledge of its attorney in the lawsuit that was the subject of the claim to the company. In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 38 Misc.3d 1213(A), 966 N.Y.S.2d 346 (Table), 2013 WL 221480 (N.Y.Sup.), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 50089(U) (unpublished), the court said that the knowledge of a member of the insured company could be imputed to it based on what he had done as a partner in the partnership that formerly owned the property. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. DJ Mortgage, LLC, 328 Ga.App. 249, 761 S.E.2d 811 (Ga.App. 2014), attorney Jones served as both the lender's closing agent and the title agent. He knew as the lender's agent that the lender had agreed to subordinate its security deeds to seller take-back purchase money liens. As title agent, Jones issued policies to the lender that did not except the seller liens. The court agreed that Jones' knowledge, gained in the course of his duties as closing attorney, could be imputed to the insured for purposes of Exclusion 3(b). However, Jones was not a general agent of the lender, and thus whatever he did that did not serve his client's interest or follow its instructions was not done as its agent. Second, Jones was a dual agent. The knowledge of a

4. Matters which the insured may have forgotten as of the date of policy, but which were the insured's own act or with which the insured had been so intimately involved that the insured could not deny being bound by the act or the knowledge of it. This includes encumbrances executed by the insured, and matters disclosed as exceptions on a prior title insurance policy in favor of the insured.[234]

The following matters have been found to be outside the scope of "actual knowledge":

1. Physical evidence on the property that provides a clue that title is defective or encumbered, but that would admit more than one possible explanation. This includes equivocal evidence of other parties' possession.[235]

2. Information generally known in the community about a person's business reputation dual agent is imputable to both principals, the court said, quoting from Herron v. Interstate Life & Acc. Co., 55 Ga.App. 534, 190 S.E. 631 (1937). Thus, what Jones knew could also be imputed to the insurer, First American, to the extent that it was within the scope of that agency relationship. The court denied summary judgment. It concluded that the lender might prove that Jones acted without authority, and that the lender did not suffer or agreed to the loss of priority of its security deeds. In Emigrant Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 4286335 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished), the court said that "knowledge" as defined in the policy includes all types of knowledge except as carved out in the definition, which encompasses knowledge imputed to the insured from its attorney. In Northwest Savings Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 253080 (Pa.Super.) (unpublished), the court imputed the knowledge and acts of the insured lender's closing agent to the insured. The closing agent was also the policy-issuing agent, but the court said its acts and knowledge were within the scope of its agency for the lender, not as the title agent. In Immobiliare, LLC v. Westcor Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 6828304 (E.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication), the insurer's claim that the insured's agent committed fraud in the inducement by ordering a policy and two endorsements increasing the policy amount by concealing facts about the infirmities in title was dismissed as to the insured's agent, because the insurer did not plead specifically that the insured's agent knew about the title problems. The court did not dismiss the same claims brought directly against the insured.

---

[234] However, in CDJ Builders, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 6150208 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the knowledge and acts of two of the LLC insured's three members in incurring a debt to a construction lien claimant and in defending the lien foreclosure suit were not charged to the LLC because the members claimed not to "remember" the lien or the debt, and also that they thought the lien had been resolved. The court refused to impute knowledge as the court had done in Lower Town Project, discussed in this section. In JBGR LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 38 Misc.3d 1213(A), 966 N.Y.S.2d 346 (Table), 2013 WL 221480 (N.Y.Sup.), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 50089(U) (unpublished), the court said that the knowledge of a member of the insured company could be imputed to it based on what he had done as a partner in the partnership that formerly owned the property.

[235] In Eller Media Co. v. DGE, Ltd., 2004 WL 2002449, 2004-Ohio-4748 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2004) (unpublished), there was a large billboard attached to the insured building. The real estate sales agent told the insured that the billboard was being leased from month to month, and could be a real moneymaker, but did not disclose an off-record lease that stated that the billboard was owned by the lessee. The insured also received a survey which showed a billboard. The court ruled that these facts did not give sufficient knowledge to the insured for the exclusion to apply: "Whether Eller's name was on the billboard at the time Daniels toured the property, or [the sales agent's] statement that the billboard was on a month-to-month lease are each and both insufficient to charge DGE with actual knowledge of Eller's purported adverse interest." or past business dealings that might suggest that the person would commit a forgery or otherwise create a title defect, but not coupled with the knowledge or reasonable suspicion that any such activity took place in the insured transaction.

3. Facts that might have been discovered if the insured had made a diligent inquiry.[236]

The knowledge of an entity insured is the actual knowledge is its officers, directors, members, partners and employees that is, under state law, deemed to be imputed to such an entity. In Carefree Living of America (Minnetonka), Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[237] the knowledge of a former president was imputed to the corporate insured, negating coverage for the title defects caused by that officer. The insured argued that the policy definition of "knowledge," which includes actual knowledge but not matters of which the insured has constructive notice, does not encompass imputed knowledge. The court rejected this reading of the definition.

> The definition excluding implied knowledge must be read as a whole; only that knowledge imputed by reason of a public or other record is excluded. The knowledge here, while imputed to Carefree because of Selbak's status as an officer, is not based on public or other record, but rather on Selbak's actual knowledge.
>
> When opposing the grant of summary judgment, a party must show something more than "some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." [citation omitted] Carefree's claim that corporate knowledge can somehow be isolated from the actual knowledge of a corporate officer or director is such a metaphysical doubt.

Some courts, however, have refused to impute knowledge, particularly when the person with [236] In C 1031 Properties, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 175 Wash.App. 27, 301 P.3d 500 (Wash.App. Div. 3 2013), the court held that Exclusion 3(b) did not apply when power poles were visible, but the insured did not actually know there was a recorded easement allowing their placement on the property. It said "the policy definition unambiguously defines knowledge as 'actual knowledge' of an easement, not 'constructive knowledge or notice that may be imputed [to C 1031]' constructively. … When C 1031 saw the power lines on the property, it acquired at best inquiry notice, not actual knowledge of a recorded easement. Thus, First American's argument fails." In Johnsen and Allphin Properties v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 6230344 (D. Utah) (unpublished), the court found that a successor insured under a loan policy did not have a duty to inquire further as to the state of title so as to invoke Exclusion 3(b). In a later decision, the court made few new rulings other than that there was a question of fact about what the insured knew that would require a trial. Johnsen and Allphin Properties, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 6459579 (D. Utah 2016) (unpublished). In Stewart Title Ins. Co. v. Credit Suisse, 2013 WL 4710264 (D. Idaho) (unpublished), the court turned the issue around and held that Exclusion 3(b) did not apply if the insurer had "knowledge of those facts that 'an inquiry pursued with ordinary diligence and understanding would have disclosed.'" However, in BAPCO LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 5576863 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the court reformed a loan policy to add exceptions for two deeds of trust known to the named insured. In finding the reformed policy binding on the successor insured, the court said that the insured was bound by inquiry notice. The court thus impliedly found that inquiry notice is a subset of actual knowledge. Other courts have also found inquiry notice to be a subset of actual knowledge. See Mann v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 975 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App.-Hous. 14 Dist. 1998); Applefield v. Commercial Standard Ins. Co., 176 So.2d 366 (Fla.App. 1965).

[237] 2000 WL 290411 (Minn.App.) (unpublished).

knowledge claims not to remember the lien or encumbrance.[238] The insurer must first establish that the party whose knowledge it seeks to impute against the insured was in fact an officer, director, member, partner or employee whose knowledge is deemed by law to bind the entity.[239]

Actual knowledge is not limited to matters that the proposed insured was consciously considering on date of policy. For example, the insurer was not liable on a seller's purchase-money mortgage policy for having failed to show a recorded easement which the insured-seller had created some years before.[240] Also, when the insured's own policy had disclosed restrictions, but a later policy failed to report them, the insured-seller's knowledge of its own title records was characterized as actual, not constructive; that knowledge negated any defense to a subrogation suit on warranties.[241] However, when the insured lender lost its policy showing two prior trust deeds, and later ordered a new one which omitted the trust deeds, the exclusion was found inapplicable because the insured had lost its knowledge of the prior encumbrances.[242]

The knowledge of the insured's attorney is imputed to the insured when that knowledge was obtained in the course of the lawyer's representation of the insured.[243] When the insured's attorney

---

[238] Both such decisions emanate from Michigan. In CDJ Builders, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 6150208 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the knowledge and acts of two of the LLC insured's three members in incurring a debt to a construction lien claimant and in defending the lien foreclosure suit were not charged to the LLC. The members claimed in the alternative that they thought the lien had been resolved, and that they did not "remember" the lien or the debt to the contractor. The court refused to impute their knowledge or prior actions to the new entity, which had a third member with no knowledge of the lien. Similarly, in Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 646 N.W.2d 170 (Mich. 2002), a federal tax lien was recorded against a corporation and its officers. One of the officers later took title to some property. The insurer failed to disclose the tax lien on the officer's policy. The court found that Exclusion 3(b) did not apply, because the lien was of record. The court did not base its ruling on the issue of the officer's actual versus imputed knowledge. However, in a later decision concerning the same policy and Exclusion 3(a), the court also ruled that that exclusion did not apply, because the officer was not responsible for the company's books and did not induce the company to fail to pay its taxes. The latter decision suggested (erroneously) that the acts of the corporation and its other officers should not be imputed to the insured.

[239] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Kessler, 452 So.2d 35 (Fla.App. 1984), the court reversed a summary judgment ruling and remanded for trial on the question of whether or not the person with knowledge was in fact the partner of the insured in the transaction. If he was a partner, his knowledge would be imputed; if not, the court held that there was no basis on which to impute his knowledge to the insured.

[240] Harvey v. J & H Holdings Inc., 310 So.2d 371 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1975).

[241] Fairmont-Tillett, Ltd. v. First Memphis Realty, 691 F.2d 991 (11th Cir. 1982). In Fairmont-Tillett, the insured seller was not making a claim, however. Rather, the insurer was pursuing the seller on its warranties of title by subrogation. The seller raised the failure to except the easement as a defense to the insurer's subrogation right. The court rejected the defense, stating: "The seller is a business entity. Perhaps the individuals involved on behalf of the seller did not remember the papers received at purchase, or did not bother to look at them. Nevertheless, the entity can be held to know what is or should be in its own files concerning the property sold. This is not constructive knowledge, as argued in the brief for the seller, but actual knowledge." 691 F.2d at 991. Fairmont-Tillett relied on Harvey v. J & H Holdings Inc., 310 So.2d 371 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1975).

[242] Tumwater State Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 51 Wash.App. 166, 752 P.2d 930 (1988).

[243] In Vernon v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 7 Cal.App. 2d 171, 46 P.2d 191 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1935), a foreclosure sale was voided due to the improprieties of the foreclosing attorney, whose acts were imputed to the insured purchaser at

had examined the real estate records and told the insured that liens existed, the insured had a duty to inform the insurer of the falsity of affidavits to the contrary on which the insurer relied in removing the liens as exceptions from the policy.[244] The attorney's knowledge was also ascribed to the insured when the insured was aware that the attorney had misrepresented the status of title to the insurer in a title report used to issue the policy.[245] However, an insured's attorney's knowledge of a misindexed judgment, obtained before he represented the insured, was not imputed to the insured.[246] When the title commitment did not except mineral rights held by another party, but the purchaser's attorney issued an opinion letter noting those rights, the letter was found not to give "such actual, express knowledge as would" overcome the omission in the policy.[247] Knowledge may be imputed from an attorney to the insured only when the lawyer represented the insured in the transaction.[248]

The actual knowledge of a title defect may also be imputed to the insured from a party with whom it has a contractual relationship in regard to the transaction on which the policy is issued.[249]

The ALTA loan policies state that policy defenses that would apply to the named insured may be asserted against a successor insured only if the successor had knowledge of the title defect at the time it purchased the loan. That provision is discussed at §7.10.

---

the sheriff's sale, who was the lawyer's spouse.

[244] Applefield v. Commercial Standard Ins. Co., 176 So.2d 366 (Fla.App. 1965).

[245] Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 629 F.2d 429 (6th Cir. 1980).

[246] "Our cases hold that for knowledge of the attorney to be imputed to the client, the knowledge must have come to the attorney while engaged in a service for his client after the attorney-client relationship began." Ball v. Vogtner, 362 So.2d 894, 898 (Ala. 1978).

[247] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, Inc., 544 So. 2d 1070 (Fla.App. 1989). In such a case, the exclusion is clearly not applicable because the matter was in the public records. The court clearly was bothered by permitting recovery, since "the courts have been loath to impose liability on a title insurer for a condition of which the insured had actual, express knowledge." Id. at 1073. In such a case, the insured's knowledge would be better employed as evidence that the insured assumed or agreed to the matter, or had not suffered loss, since it closed on the purchase with full knowledge. See §11.3.6.

[248] In First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank v. New York Title & Mortgage Co., 172 S.C. 435, 174 S.E. 402 (1934), the knowledge of an attorney who prepared an abstract reporting title defects not excepted in the policy was not imputed to the insured, because there was no proof that the attorney was the insured's counsel.

[249] In Great American Mortgage Investors v. Louisville Title Ins. Co., 597 S.W.2d 425 (Tex.App. 1980), when a title search prepared for the lead lender reported restrictions that were not excepted in the policy, the knowledge of the lead lender obtained from the title search was imputed to the other participating lenders also. In Lower Town Project, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 3319710 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the court held that the knowledge of a property manager would be imputed to the insured if the insurer established that the insured signed a contract appointing the property manager as its agent.

11.3.3 Policy Obtained By Fraud Or Concealment

FORM 39, Appendix A
Misrepresentation or concealment voiding coverage

When an owner or purchaser becomes aware of a defect in title before closing, but conceals the information from the insurer, the applicant is committing fraud in the inducement to insure. Exclusion 3(b) applies as to such concealed defects.

In some cases, a person purchases title insurance precisely because he or she has discovered a title defect, and seeks coverage by concealing the defect from the insurer. Such cases follow a predictable pattern. The applicant usually already owns the property. The insurance is not requested in connection with any transaction. The dispute involves a matter which is either not of record or which the applicant had reason to believe will not be discovered by the insurer in its title examination. Shortly after the policy is issued, the insured submits a claim for the concealed title defect. The first clue of the concealment is normally the fact that the owner bought title insurance for no apparent reason. It ordinarily takes considerable investigation, however, to verify that the insured fraudulently concealed his or her knowledge to induce the issuance of the policy.[250]

---

[250] The exclusion was enforced in the following cases which fit the fraud-in-the-inducement pattern: Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. IDC Properties, Inc., 547 F.3d 15 (1st Cir.(R.I.) 2008), aff'g 524 F.Supp.2d 155 (D.R.I. 2007) (insured concealed other insurer's refusal to insure, tolling agreement with parties who later sued, private legal opinion that amendment to condominium regime was invalid); Lesamiz v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 51 Wash.2d 835, 322 P.2d 351 (1958); Parker v. Title & Trust Co., 233 F.2d 505 (9th Cir. 1956); Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 155 N.J. Super. 332, 382 A.2d 933 (App.Div. 1978); Vaughn v. United States Title Guaranty & Indemnity Co., 137 App.Div. 623, 122 N.Y.S. 393 (1910); Conway v. Title Ins. Co., 277 So.2d 890 (Ala. 1973); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Research Loan and Investment Corp., 361 F.2d 764 (8th Cir.1966); Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 18 Cal.App.3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, Inc., 544 So. 2d 1070 (Fla.App. 1989); Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Ozark Global, L.C., 956 F.Supp. 989 (S.D.Ala. 1997); Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 261 Neb. 609, 624 N.W.2d 644 (2001) (policy void because proposed insured did not disclose letter saying seller's deed had been obtained by fraud); and Guilford v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 3030250 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) (policy void under common law doctrine of equitable fraud because insured did not disclose falsehoods in mortgage and note and owner's dispute over validity of debt).

The exclusion was not found to apply in Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 72 Wis.2d 503, 241 N.W.2d 434 (1976). In that case, the insureds explained a request for insurance long after they had bought the house by claiming that they wanted insurance in anticipation of a later sale. In Jesko v. American-First Title & Trust Co., 603 F.2d 815 (10th Cir. 1979), the insured trustee had been advised by an attorney that his title may be defective. Later, his title was challenged. However, at the time the policy was requested, the applicant said he assumed that the party had decided not to attack title. The court found this position reasonable. It held that, while the applicant "may have had some premonition" that title would be attacked, there was no fact in existence on date of application which the trustee had a duty to disclose. In IDC Properties, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 974 F.Supp.2d 87 (D.R.I. 2013), the court said the insurer had not proved on summary judgment that the insured knew very much more than what could be discerned by reading recorded documents about the possible invalidity of amendments to a condominium declaration, and therefore the insured's failure to disclose that additional information did not invoke the exclusion. See also, Kratovil, Fraud and Misrepresentation in Real Estate Transactions, The Guarantor, May/June 1986. In Immobiliare, LLC v. Westcor Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 6828304 (E.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication), the insurer's claim that the insured's agent committed fraud in the inducement by ordering a policy and two endorsements increasing the policy amount by concealing facts about the infirmities in title was dismissed as to the insured's agent, because the insurer did not plead specifically that the insured's agent knew about the title problems. The court did not dismiss the same claims Fraudulent inducement to insure not only renders the specific defect excluded; the entire policy is void.[251] In rejecting such claims, the prudent insurer will normally notify the insured that the policy is canceled, give the basis therefor, and return the premium, if paid. Also, fraudulent inducement of an insurer is a crime in many states.

11.3.4 Matters Which Applicant Must Disclose

The applicant must disclose both its knowledge of a potential defect, lien or encumbrance and its own actions in regard to the matter.[252] The applicant has a continuing duty to disclose any matter and information of which it obtains knowledge before the policy risk is bound by the insurer.[253] In an applicant withholds information from the insurer about a title risk out of concern that the insurer will not protect against the risk, that concealment of the material risk is emphatic proof that the applicant obtained insurance by the concealment. As one commentator counsels:

> An applicant for title insurance should not withhold knowledge of a title problem out of fear that title insurance will be denied. Almost no title is uninsurable. ... If the applicant does withhold information about a title defect, the applicant will lose coverage as to that defect anyway because of this policy exclusion.[254]

The proposed insured voids policy coverage by failing to disclose to the insurer his or her own intentional or fraudulent acts in obtaining title. For example, in Peachtree Management & Investment Co. v. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co.,[255] the proposed insureds discovered land owned by a defunct corporation, had the corporate charter reinstated by falsely claiming to be shareholders, and then purchased title insurance on the land. Their title was later revoked. The court found that the proposed insureds' failure to disclose their own chicanery voided the policy. Similarly, in Insured brought directly against the insured.

---

[251] New Jersey states that equitable fraud in the inducement to insure "requires proof of (1) a material misrepresentation of a presently existing or past fact; (2) the maker's intent that the other party rely on it; and (3) detrimental reliance by the other party." First American Title Ins. Co. v. Lawson, 177 N.J. 125, 827 A.2d 230, 236 (N.J. 2003). See also Guilford v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 3030250 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) (policy void under common law doctrine of equitable fraud).

[252] Guilford v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 3030250 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) (insured lender voided policy by concealing from insurer fact that insured mortgage and underlying loan were questionable or fraudulent and that true owner of property had refused to leave the premises).

[253] See Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 261 Neb. 609, 624 N.W.2d 644 (2001), in which the proposed insured was found obligated to inform the insurer that he had received a letter just before closing from a former owner who said that his co-owners had obtained a deed from him under the false pretense that they needed it in order to obtain financing, when in fact they intended to sell it and not pay him any of the sale proceeds.

[254] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 6.16, p. 412, West/Thomson Reuters.

[255] 541 F.Supp. 51 (N.D.Ga. 1981).

Titles, Inc. v. McDonald,[256] the insured prepared the quit claim deed used to confirm a tax title, and altered the legal description from the grantor's own deed. The alteration increased the land conveyed from two acres to more than 12. However, the insured knew that the grantor's deed contained only two acres. Further, the insured paid no consideration for the deed. The court ruled that the failure of title to the additional acreage fell under Exclusion 3(b) because the insured was not a bona fide purchaser for value. The exclusion also applied when a mortgage foreclosure was voided because of the insured lender's unconscionable failure to release the mortgage for a nominal sum.[257]

The exclusion also applies when the insured is accused of having committed a fraud on a third party that affects title as insured. For example, when the holder of a second trust deed sought to have the first trust deed subordinated, because it was part of an alleged scheme to defraud the second lender, the court found no duty to defend the insured. It said:

> [Policy coverage] cannot include matters involving personal dealings between individuals even though those dealings may involve the development of real property when those dealings are not part of the public record. If we were to accept [the insured's] blanket assertion of coverage in this case, we would dramatically change the function and purpose of title insurance with enormous social and financial repercussions. We refuse to do so.[258]

Likewise, an insurer was not required to defend a suit seeking to set aside the insured deed as a fraud on creditors.[259]

The proposed insured also has a duty to disclose its knowledge of defects in the title.[260] The exclusion barred recovery for a boundary dispute of which the insured was aware for seven years before obtaining insurance.[261] The exclusion also negates coverage when the insured is aware of and does not disclose the contract rights of parties whose interests do not appear in the public records.[262]

---

[256] 275 Mont. 111, 911 P.2d 209 (1996).

[257] Conway v. Title Ins. Co., 277 So.2d 890 (Ala. 1973).

[258] Barczewski v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 210 Cal.App.3d 406, 410, 258 Cal.Rptr. 386 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1989).

[259] Ginger v. American Title Ins. Co., 29 Mich.App. 279, 185 N.W.2d 54 (1970).

[260] Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co. v. Casmat, LLC, 2012 WL 366521 (D.R.I.) (unpublished) (insured's concealment of lawsuit about title to property in which it had been a defendant for years, for which there was no notice in public records, invoked Exclusion 3(b)).

[261] Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 18 Cal.App.3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971).

[262] In Stevens v. United General Title Ins. Co., 801 A.2d 61 (D.C. 2002), the insured, Stevens, contracted to buy property from 1438 E Street, S.E. L.L.C., which was not yet in title but had a contract to buy the property from a Mr. Moy. There was a substantial difference in the two sale prices. Stevens learned that Moy was not even the owner. He signed a second contract with the real owners. He was sued by 1438 for intentional interference with contract and fraudulent conveyance. Stevens tendered his defense to the insurer. The insurer argued that Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b) precluded a duty to defend or indemnify. The court found both exclusions applicable:

The applicant must also disclose claims of ownership or other rights in the property of which the proposed insured obtains knowledge prior to closing.[263] The exclusion applied to negate liability for the failure of title when the insured had no contact with the owner and knew that he had left the vicinity years earlier, the land was not being taxed, he paid nominal consideration, and the deed was delivered "no questions asked."[264]

Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.[265] is illustrative of the proposed insured's duty to disclose information suggesting a material risk to the insurer in the issuance of the policy. The insureds, the Kirwans, were found to have a duty to disclose an attorney's letter delivered before closing that claimed that a prior deed to the seller was invalid. The Kirwans argued that the claims made in the letter were too vague to require disclosure, calling it "a vague, threatening letter from a South Dakota lawyer claiming his client had an interest in the land." The court found that, no matter how the insureds might downplay the significance of the letter, the insurer was entitled to determine if the risk was material, and the failure to reveal it invoked the exclusion:

> The letter to the Kirwans was from an attorney and clearly asserted that the Vanderwerfs had either a right to the sale proceeds or an interest in title to the land. That is all the Kirwans needed to know in order to alert Chicago Title to this "adverse claim." Whether they believed it to be meritorious and serious is completely beside the point. Once the Kirwans got notice, they were dutybound to give notice to

---

"[T]he words 'created ... by the insured claimant' generally have been defined to reflect conscious and deliberate or intentional conduct. … The allegations of the 1438 E Street complaint clearly specify intentional, conscious and deliberate conduct by Mr. Stevens. … Only by going outside the four corners of the complaint, and considering extrinsic evidence, is it possible to interpret the complaint in a manner favorable to Mr. Stevens. However, since the ordinary meaning of the words of the complaint show intentional and deliberate conduct on Mr. Stevens' part, extrinsic evidence is not permitted.

"With respect to Paragraph 3(b) of the policy exclusions, relating to matters 'not known to [United General], nor recorded in the public records at Date of Policy…,'the details of Mr. Stevens' efforts to acquire the 538 3rd Street, N.E. property are not recorded in the public records. The fact that there was information in the public records (specifically the deed of trust which secured the promissory note held by Mr. Moy and his wife) which, with additional investigation, would have enabled United General to reconstruct details about Mr. Stevens' acquisition of the Third Street property is irrelevant to the application of an unmodified 'eight corners' rule."

However, in Cocco v. Hamilton, 2010 WL 2011003 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished), the court found that an insurer that asked no questions about the rights of a contract purchaser and a filed lawsuit that the insured was excused from any duty to disclose information.

[263] Ditmore v. Lochner, 2005 WL 678180 (Mich.App.) (unpublished) (insured not protected against rights of neighbors to use property confirmed in court judgment that was not recorded but of which insured was alleged to have had knowledge).

[264] Vaughn v. United States Title Guaranty & Indemnity Co., 137 App.Div. 623, 122 N.Y.S. 393 (1910). These facts led the court to the "irresistible" inference "that, when the plaintiff applied for the insurance, he had knowledge of all the facts upon which it was adjudicated in the condemnation proceedings that he did not have title." The insured only applied for insurance after he heard rumor that his deed was no good, and the village president told him "I don't think much of your title."

[265] 9 Neb.App. 372, 612 N.W.2d 515 (Neb.App. 2000), aff'd 261 Neb. 609, 624 N.W.2d 644 (2001).

> Chicago Title, and since they failed to do so, the policy, which was issued and superseded the binder, excluded the Vanderwerfs' claim from coverage.

An insured lender's failure to disclose the borrower's poor financial condition will cause the exclusion to negate coverage if the borrower files for bankruptcy and the transaction is rescinded as a preference. Thus, in two cases, when the insured mortgage was set aside as a preference, the lender breached a duty to disclose the borrower's poor financial condition, because it had a material effect on the risk that the loan would be challenged as a preference.[266] Preference claims have also been found excluded under Exclusions 3(a) (see §11.2.6) and 3(d) (see §11.5). When the insured deed was set aside by a bankruptcy trustee because it was given three days after the seller filed bankruptcy, the insured breached its duty to inform the insurer of the seller's known financial difficulties.[267]

The applicant has a duty to disclose another party's opinion that title is defective, when that opinion has substance or is based on an examination of title. Thus, the insured was found to have voided coverage by concealing the fact that another title insurer had refused to insure the title, as well as that the refusal had been based on off-record information indicating that there was a strong likelihood of litigation over the title.[268] Also, when one title commitment disclosed the possibility that a prior deed was a fraudulent conveyance, the proposed insured was not excused from inquiry into the issue because a second title commitment did not raise it, and his failure to inquire erased his claim of bona fide purchaser status.[269] However, an attorney's opinion that a party might challenge the applicant's title was found to be a mere "premonition" of trouble that the applicant had no duty to disclose, since no actual claim of title had been pressed at time of application.[270] The applicant also [268] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. IDC Properties, Inc., 524 F.Supp.2d 155 (D.R.I. 2007), the court said: "Michael Mellion, who made the decision to issue the Policy, testified that Commonwealth would not have issued the Policy if those facts had been known. He explained that, because the Policy required Commonwealth to defend against any claims challenging IDC's insured interests; and, because the policy premium of approximately $5,000 would have covered only a fraction of the cost of defending against litigation brought by the individual unit owners, Commonwealth would have declined to issue the Policy since it was not interested in 'buying a lawsuit.' That appears to be the decision that Chicago Title made in declining to issue a policy after learning of the threatened litigation.

---

[266] Bank of San Diego v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal.Rptr. 1 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1991) (unpublished), previously published at 231 Cal.App.3d 1265 and withdrawn from publication; First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (Sup. Ct. 1939).

[267] National Heat & Power Corp. v. City Title Ins. Co., 57 App.Div.2d 611, 394 N.Y.S.2d 29 (1977). The court found a duty to defend, however, since the trustee was plainly attacking title.

"The evidence also shows that Commonwealth was unaware of the unit owners' threat of suit; the Tolling Agreement or the fact that the threat of suit was one of the reasons cited by Chicago Title for refusing to issue a policy. None of these facts were matters of public record and IDC did not disclose them.

* * * *

"… [T]he threat of litigation was real and it directly related to a risk covered by the Policy. Furthermore, the threat of litigation, alone, was material to Commonwealth's decision because Commonwealth did not want to 'buy a lawsuit' even if it had a good chance of prevailing."

[269] City of Arkansas City v. Anderson, 15 Kan.App.2d 174, 804 P.2d 1026 (1991).

[270] Jesko v. American-First Title & Trust Co., 603 F.2d 815 (10th Cir. 1979).

was found not to have a duty to warn the insurer that another insurer has refused to issue a policy, when that refusal was not based on a fact that materially affected the risk.[271]

As stated above, the exclusion also applies to defects or title interests which attach or of which the applicant becomes aware after the title insurance order is placed but before the policy is issued. For example, the insurer had no duty to defend a suit brought by another buyer on an outstanding purchase contract which the applicant knew had not been terminated.[272] Similarly, in Weir v. City Title Ins. Co.,[273] the insured learned not later than two days after a request for policy was made that a significant portion of the insured property was claimed by a neighbor. The court found that the failure to disclose the risk negated coverage for it:

> In such circumstances it was the obligation of plaintiff and his attorney to forthwith bring the matter to the attention of and make full disclosure to defendant. The defect was manifestly material to the risk that plaintiff sought to have defendant undertake and fair dealing demanded no less. Instead, plaintiff and his attorney procrastinated for one month--whether to avoid arousing suspicion on the part of defendant of prior awareness of the defect by plaintiff and his attorney, or for some other reason, is not clear from the record. What is plain is that the delay in notification resulted in the issuance and delivery of the policy by defendant, without the slightest suspicion that the risk being assumed by it had been materially increased.[274]

When the insured seeks a new coverage after the policy is issued, the insured has a duty to disclose material facts that it has learned after the date of policy but before the new coverage was sought or bound, although Exclusion 3(b) is limited to the insured's knowledge obtained "prior to the date the Insured Claimant became an Insured under this policy."[275]

---

[271] Bush v. Coult, 594 P.2d 865 (Utah 1979); First American Title Ins. Co. v. Kessler, 452 So.2d 35 (Fla.App. 1984).

[272] Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 629 F.2d 429 (6th Cir. 1980).

[273] 125 N.J.Super. 23, 308 A.2d 357 (App.Div. 1973).

[274] 308 A.2d at 361-2. In both Weir and Collins, the insured's attorney was also the insurer's approved attorney. As such, they personally certified to the insurer that title was clear when policies were requested. In each case, the court found these certifications to have been misrepresentations made by the insured's agent. A similar case is Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 155 N.J. Super. 332, 382 A.2d 933 (App.Div. 1978), in which the insured's attorney was aware of a very old title defect, and avoided its detection by the insurer by requesting a limited title search. In Lucas, the court again ruled that the attorney misrepresented and concealed as agent of the insured.

[275] In 1200 Ashland, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 5481800 (N.D. Ill.) (unpublished), an insured sought and obtained a zoning endorsement two years after purchasing the property, but coverage was voided due to the insured's concealment of a new survey it obtained, after the policy was issued but shortly before the endorsement was requested, that showed that part of the property was not zoned as stated on the survey the lender and insurer saw at closing. Because the insured discovered the zoning issue after the policy date, the court did not rely on Exclusion 3(b), but rather based its ruling on 215 ILCS 5/154 of the Illinois Insurance Code and case law holding that "a misrepresentation in an application for insurance avoids a policy when it materially affects either the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by a company." Likewise, in Nourachi v. First American Title Ins. Co., 44 So.3d 602 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2010), the court

Finally, the applicant's duty to disclose is not limited to facts regarding valid adverse title claims. An owner of property who becomes aware of a competing claim of title may not then purchase a policy for the obvious purpose of having the insurer pay for the defense against the spurious claim of title, without disclosing the fact of the claim of title.[276]

11.3.5 Loan Fraud And Forgery

Both Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b) may also apply as to loan policies when the borrower commits forgery or fraud that renders the insured mortgage void or causes prior liens not to be paid off. The exclusion typically applies when the lender knew or should have known that a fraud was being perpetrated. In such cases, the insured may be deemed to have "created" or "suffered" the risk, or have had a duty to disclose its knowledge of off-record matters to the insurer under Exclusion 3(b). When the lender's own officers or agents participated in the fraud, their acts and knowledge are usually imputed to the lender, negating coverage.[277] When the lender's officers were secret partners in the borrower partnership, the lender and its successor were bound by the officers' knowledge that the mortgage was a second lien rather than a first as shown on the policy. The court held:

> Given the extensive involvement of the officers in arranging for the two mortgages, the undisputed evidence supports Ticor's position that [the lender's] officers intentionally "suffered, assumed, or agreed to" the first mortgage. Any other result would be inequitable here, because it would give [the lender] a windfall as a result of the fraudulent conduct of its agents, albeit unknown to it, at the expense here of an innocent insuring party.[278]

The court also found that Exclusion 3(b) applied.

Courts have divided as to coverage, however, when the lender did not participate in the fraud voided a policy and endorsement based on the insured's knowledge that he obtained after he bought the property, some of which he learned after the policy was issued. However, in First American Title Ins. Co. v. Columbia Harbison LLC, 2013 WL 1501702 (D.S.C.) (unpublished), in which the insured also sought and received an endorsement after the date of policy, and concealed from the insurer important facts about the risk for which it sought protection, the court said the exclusion did not require the insured to disclose the facts that it learned after the date of policy. The court refused to acknowledge that this narrow reading of the exclusion gives an insured permission to conceal material facts when seeking endorsement coverage after the date of policy, which the common law of fraudulent inducement to insure precludes.

---

[276] Lesamiz v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 51 Wash.2d 835, 322 P.2d 351 (1958).

[277] In Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cole Taylor Bank, 878 F.Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2012), the bank's closing agent and others stole the loan money and did not pay off existing creditors. The mortgage was void for want of consideration. The court held that, although no policy had been issued and none was owed, if it had been issued, Exclusion 3(a) would bar the lender's claim. The acts of the closer were imputed to the lender, and the lender "created" the defect in the mortgage. In Sher v. Luxury Mortg. Corp., 2012 WL 5869303 (D.Md.) (unpublished), under very similar facts, the insurer asserted Cole Taylor, but the court did not reach the merits on the motion to dismiss.

[278] National Credit Union Administration v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 873 F.Supp. 718, 728 (D.Mass. 1995) (further discussed at §11.2.11).

but had reason to suspect it. In Enterprise Timber Inc. v. Washington Title Ins. Co.,[279] the lender's knowledge of its borrower's past forgeries, fraud conviction, NSF checks and various civil suits, all concerning timber sales, was found to give the lender a duty to inquire about the terms of the purchase of the timber land on which the insured mortgage was recorded. Its failure to either inquire or divulge its knowledge to the insurer meant that the policy did not cover the borrower's forgery of the deed to the property.

Similarly, in Applefield v. Commercial Standard Insurance Company,[280] the insured and his lawyer had sufficient knowledge that a borrower was perpetrating a fraud regarding prior liens not paid off to put them on a duty to inquire about the liens, rather than encourage the insurer to rely on fraudulent affidavits that the liens had been removed. Further, the insured had a duty to inquire further about the title agent's authority to issue policies free of the mortgages without examining title to verify that the liens had been removed. The court held:

> The master's finding that appellant did not 'consciously' participate in the fraud perpetrated upon appellant by The Theo. Rosengarten Co., Inc., and Gibraltar Title, Inc., does not operate to excuse appellant from the responsibilities devolving upon him in consequence of the fact, as the master found, that 'he was in a position to have discovered the fraud and was in possession of information sufficient to put him on inquiry which would have disclosed the fraud.'[281]

Therefore, the court upheld the master's conclusion that the insured's failure to disclose its knowledge "rendered the binders null and void." A later Florida decision rather broadly paraphrased Applefield as holding that there is no coverage under a title insurance policy as to "a condition which results from the fraud of the insured."[282] A third Florida case refused to deny coverage based on Applefield, however, when it found the lender to be more of a "white knight" than a co-conspirator, despite a strong dissent.[283]

Other courts have narrowly construed "knowledge" to mean that the lender must actually have known that a forgery had been committed in order for it to have a duty to disclose to the title insurer, not merely that it knew enough that a prudent person would have inquired further.[284] Such [279] 76 Wash.2d 479, 457 P.2d 600 (Wash. 1969). Courts have also applied the duty-to-inquire standard concerning parties in possession of the property. In general real estate law, a purchaser has inquiry notice of all parties in actual possession of the property. The purchaser has a duty to inquire further as to the nature and tenure of the party's rights in the property. Knowledge of possession sufficient to trigger the duty to inquire has been found to except the matter, under the parties in possession exception. See Jupe v. City of Schertz, 604 S.W.2d 405 (Tex.App. 1980).

---

[280] 176 So.2d 366 (Fla.App. 1965).

[281] 176 So.2d at 378.

[282] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, Inc., 544 So.2d 1070 (Fla.App. 1989).

[283] Rondinelli v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 544 So.2d 326 (Fla.App. 1989).

[284] People's Building & Loan Co. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., No. 10569, 1988 Ohio App. LEXIS 2782 (Ohio App. July 5, 1988) (unpublished); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. First Federal Savings Bank & Trust, 744 F. Supp. 778 (E.D. Mich.

reasoning, however, creates a public policy concern, in that it encourages the lender to maintain willfully ignorance in the face of suspicious circumstances rather than to conduct ordinary due diligence in the making of the loan. This is a particular risk to the insurer when the lender closes the loan and assumes the responsibility of obtaining genuine signatures on the loan documents and insured mortgage.

In People's Building & Loan Co. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., the lender had made a series of bad loans based on very questionable and unorthodox collateral. The lender wished to convert its collateral into a piece of real estate. The loan officer impliedly invited the borrower to forge documents which the insurer then relied on to clear title. When the forgeries were discovered, the insurer pointed to the rather sordid history between the borrower and lender as evidence that the lender knew or should have known that the forgeries would take place. The court disagreed, stating that the insured would only have a duty to report a forgery which it actually witnessed.

In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. First Federal Savings Bank & Trust, similarly, the borrower, Henry Ewald, initially asked for a loan with which to purchase a large office complex. While the loan application was being considered, Ewald announced that he had already bought the property with his own funds, but still wanted a loan for $6.5 million. Ewald then recorded a forged deed to his corporation, and forged discharges of the two mortgages on the property. The lender closed the Ewald loan without receiving a title insurance commitment. It made its check payable to Ewald, although the borrower and "owner" were Ewald's corporation.

The insurer argued that the insured lender knew or should have known that the borrower had forged documents putting himself in title. The court disagreed. It focused on the difference in language between the Michigan-form commitment and the ALTA policy. The commitment required disclosure of any "personal knowledge or intimation" of a title defect, which the court said "may well impose" the duty-to-inquire standard. However, the court found that the commitment language was merged into and superseded by the policy language, and therefore the more stringent "actual knowledge" standard applied. The court found that the lender had no actual knowledge of the forgeries, and thus Exclusion 3(b) did not apply. The merger provision of the policy is fully discussed at §6.2.

The problem with the People's/First Federal "actual knowledge" rule is that it rewards a lender for not performing due diligence in loan-making. The People's court admitted that the lender had everything to gain and nothing to lose if the borrower committed the forgery, since the bank was merely trying to recast an existing bad loan. The First Federal court explained its ruling on the need for certainty of coverage, saying: "In this area, more than perhaps any other, bright line rules are required to protect both the title insurance industry and those who depend on it."[285] However, neither the title industry nor lenders are protected by absolving lenders of the responsibility to follow prudent lending practices on large loans.

The imputed notice/actual knowledge distinction made in the People's and First Federal decisions work from the premise that inquiry notice is an extension of constructive notice rather than of actual knowledge. Inquiry notice is in a sense the middle ground between constructive notice and actual knowledge. As Corpus Juris Secundum states it:

---

1990).

[285] 744 F. Supp. 778, 786 (E.D. Mich. 1990).

> One kind of constructive notice is notice which results from a record or which is imputed by the recording statutes; and the other is notice which is presumed because of the fact that a person has knowledge of certain facts which should impart to him, or lead him to, knowledge of the ultimate fact.[286]

Thus, inquiry notice springs from knowledge, and is more properly considered a subset of knowledge than of notice. In Mann v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co.,[287] an unrecorded easement was found binding on the insured based on inquiry notice. The court found the easement excepted from coverage under both Exclusion 3(b) and the inspection clause of the survey exception, because the insured had knowledge of facts which required him to investigate further:

> To avoid collateral estoppel, Mann attempts to create a distinction between the knowledge imputed to him in the federal court judgment, and knowledge as defined in the Old Republic title insurance policy. That policy defined knowledge as "actual knowledge, not constructive knowledge or notice which may be imputed to the insured by reason of any public records." (emphasis added) The policy also defines "public records" as "records which impart constructive notice of matters relating to the land." Actual notice exists when a person actually knows the facts charged to him, or should have known them if he had inquired about them, after learning of facts which put him on inquiry. ... Because the federal court judgment was not based on Mann's constructive knowledge imputed from public records, but rather on actual knowledge imputed to Mann for failure to make even a minimal investigation after learning facts which put him on inquiry, Mann's asserted distinction is untenable.[288]

In First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc.,[289] the insured asserted that inquiry notice should be considered equivalent to, or a subset of, constructive notice. The court refused to be confused: "inquiry notice arises from knowledge of certain facts and circumstances, not from records."[290]

---

[286] 66 C.J.S. Notice § 6 (1950) (footnotes omitted) [quoted in First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 343 Utah Adv.Rep. 6, 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998)].

[287] 975 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App.-Houston 14 Dist. 1998).

[288] Id. at fn. 4.

[289] 343 Utah Adv.Rep. 6, 966 P.2d 834 (1998).

[290] In J.B. Ranch, at issue was whether or not public roads disclosed only on road maps in the county clerk's office were excepted from coverage by an exception for " [e]asements, claims of easements or encumbrances which are not shown by the public records." The court found that "'coverage depends only on whether the easement is disclosed by those records which impart constructive notice under Utah law.'" This is so because the policy defines 'public records' as 'those records which by law impart constructive notice.' (Emphasis added.) Thus constructive notice must arise from the record itself in order for it to be a 'public record' as defined in the policy. We conclude that inquiry notice does not arise

In International Charter Mortgage Corp. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.,[291] a similarly rigorous definition of knowledge was applied against the insurer. In that case, a loan assignee did not disclose that the maker of the loans was the subject of a HUD loan fraud investigation. The court decided that the loan fraud investigation was not connected closely enough to the possibility of a title defect to obligate the insured to tell the insurer, even though the loan maker forged releases of prior mortgages.

American Title Ins. Co. v. East West Financial[292] was decided on Exclusion 3(a), but is sufficiently similar to be discussed here. In East West, a condominium developer's attorney, Marderosian, was also the insurer's agent on a block of condominium unit loans. The project had existing financing and the developer was unable to obtain partial releases of units. It had to sell a number of the units to collect enough money to pay off the liens in full. Thus, Marderosian closed the sales of a large block of units, including new loans by East West Financial to the unit owners. Marderosian sent policies which omitted the existing mortgages. East West sold the loans to Bay Loan. When the policies and loan documents were received by Bay Loan, it funded the loans on the understanding that Marderosian would pay off the existing mortgages. However, Marderosian funneled the payoff money to the developer and the mortgages were not removed. The insurer argued that Bay Loan's claim was excluded because it knew of and permitted several highly unusual practices, including the facts given above. The court disagreed, finding simply that "[t]he continued existence of the prior mortgages was unintended by Bay Loan."[293] Thus, the exclusion did not apply.

GreenPoint Mortgage Funding Inc. v. Stewart Title Ins. Co.[294] was also decided under Exclusions 3(a), but concerned the insurer's claim that the lender's careless lending practices should preclude coverage for the title defect that resulted. In that case, Royal Mortgage Bankers, which made a loan to its owner, Louis Crispino. Royal sold the loan to GreenPoint Mortgage. After Crispino died, his wife sued to set aside the mortgage because Crispino had forged her signature. The insurer accused Royal of sloppy lending practices and sought to impute Crispino's acts to Royal, and asserted Royal's negligence as a defense to GreenPoint under the policy's successor-insured provision. Stewart argued that the lender's negligence "enabled the fraud to be committed." Stewart asserted that, in lieu of actual knowledge, GreenPoint "should have known that there was a problem at closing for various reasons." Stewart listed a number of facts in support of its argument, including that a GreenPoint loan underwriter had originally instructed that Mrs. Crispino sign the mortgage at closing. GreenPoint responded that there was no evidence that it had agreed to the forgery, took part in it, or knew about it. The court sided with the lender, citing First Federal: from records, and therefore, is not included in the policy's definition of public records." Based, in turn, on this conclusion, the court ruled that the road maps were not public records, and the exception applied.

---

[291] 538 F.Supp. 1154 (D.P.R. 1982).

[292] 16 F.3d 449 (1st Cir. 1994).

[293] Id. at 456.

[294] 12 Misc.3d 1194(A), 2006 WL 2337967, 2006 N.Y. Slip Op. 51568 (N.Y.Sup. 2006) (unpublished).

> On this record, there can be no doubt that it was the conduct of title closer, Barry Rosen, in failing to verify the authenticity of the signature of Linda Crispino at the closing, that enabled the fraud to be committed. … Overall, the Court finds that Stewart was paid to insure against any defect in title, not to second guess the wisdom of making the loan (see, Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. First Federal Sav. Bank & Trust, 744 F.Supp. 778 [E.D.Mich.1990]), as it has on this record. Stewart's title policy insured against the possibility of defects in the title held by Louis Crispino, and now it must make good on its promise.

Stewart also claimed that GreenPoint should be charged with the knowledge of Royal because it was GreenPoint's agent. The court found that no agency existed. It concluded:

> Accordingly, Stewart has failed to raise a triable issue of fact as to why GreenPoint is not a "purchaser for value and without knowledge" such as to fall within the definition of an insured in Stewart's title policy.

In a later decision, however, the GreenPoint court held that there were triable questions of fact as to whether or not the acts of the closing attorney should be imputed to GreenPoint.[295] The first GreenPoint decision was relied on by another court which held that a lender did not assume the risk of prior liens by taking an assignment of the loan.[296]

A Florida decision found on summary judgment, without further comment, that "there was no basis to sustain ... the defense[] ... that the plaintiff [lender] had 'assumed or agreed to' the defect" of a forged mortgage.[297]

11.3.6 Recorded Matters

Exclusion 3(b) states that it applies only to matters "not shown by the public records." Thus, a matter is not excluded under 3(b) based solely on evidence that the insured knew of a recorded matter not disclosed in the policy.[298] Nonetheless, an insured's deliberate decision not to disclose a

---

[295] 49 A.D.3d 687, 854 N.Y.S.2d 185, 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. 02552 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2008).

[296] U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 37 A.D.3d 822, 832 N.Y.S.2d 223 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2007).

[297] Personal Finance Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 678 So.2d 463 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 1996).

[298] Bourland v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 4 Ark.App. 68, 627 S.W.2d 567 (1982); Cameron v. Benson, 57 Or.App. 169, 643 P.2d 1360 (1982), rev'd on other grounds, 295 Or. 98, 664 P.2d 412 (1983); Empire Development Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 225 N.Y. 53, 121 N.E. 468 (1918); First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank v. New York Title & Mortgage Co., 172 S.C. 435, 174 S.E. 402 (1934); Foremost Construction Co. v. Killam, 399 S.W.2d 593 (Mo.App. 1966); Glickman v. Home Title Guaranty Co., 8 Misc.2d 303, 167 N.Y.S.2d 793 (1957); 15 Misc.2d 167, 178 N.Y.S.2d 281 (Sup.Ct. 1958), aff'd 8 A.D.2d 629, 185 N.Y.S.2d 756 (Sup.Ct.App.Div. 1959); Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 Mont. 1, 655 P.2d 970 (1982); Maggio v. Abstract Title & Mortgage Corp., 277 App. Div. 940, 98 N.Y.S.2d 1011 (1950); Marandino v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 156 Va. 696, 159 S.E. 181 (1931); McLoughlin v. Bridgeport Land & Title Co., 99 Conn. 134, 121 A. 175 (Conn. 1923); Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953); L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee Co., 52 N.Y.2d 179, 437 N.Y.S.2d 57, 418 N.E.2d 650, 17 A.L.R. 4th 1067 (1981); subsequent appeal, 97 App.Div.2d 208, 469 N.Y.S.2d 415 (2nd Dep't 1983); matter in the public records, and which the insured knows has not been discovered by the insurer, borders on fraud in the inducement. See §11.3.3 for a complete discussion of concealment or silence that voids policy coverage. The insured may not obtain coverage by precluding the insurer from making an informed decision to accept a risk.[299]

Also, the exclusion applies to documents that are recorded, but which fail to impart constructive notice. This is because the exclusion uses the phrase "public records," and the policy limits public records to those that impart constructive notice under state law. In Manchester Fund, Ltd. v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[300] counsel for the proposed insured became aware of a lis pendens before closing giving notice of an action by the United States to enforce a forfeiture of the property. The attorney "chose not to advise the insurance company of this critical information" because he read the exclusion to mean that the policy would cover the insured even if it did not disclose. The lis pendens had not been discovered by the title insurer because it was misindexed. When coverage was contested, the insurer argued both that the insured had fraudulently concealed, and that the misindexed document was not in the public records.

The Manchester court decided that the insured's silence was not misrepresentation. It found that disclosure "was not required," and the withholding of the information was not done in bad faith. Other courts would disagree.[301] Nonetheless, the Manchester court concluded that the defect was excluded from coverage precisely because it was not discoverable in the public records:

> this court finds that the grantor-grantee indices are part of the public record. Furthermore, since the Notice of Lis Pendens was mis-indexed, the Court finds that the Notice of Lis Pendens was not part of the public records for purposes of providing constructive notice under the Recording Act. Nor does the mis-indexed Notice qualify as a "Public Record" as defined in the AGREEMENT TO ISSUE POLICY provided to Manchester Fund... .[302]

Nor does a physical feature of the land, or a man-made improvement, necessarily indicate to an insured that a record title interest exists.[303] For example, awareness of an irrigation ditch was

---

J.H. Trisdale, Inc. v. Shasta County Title Co., 146 Cal.App.2d 831, 304 P.2d 832 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1956); Archambo v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 646 N.W.2d 170 (Mich. 2002) (insured was aware of IRS lien against him, but thought it had expired; because it was recorded, exclusion did not apply; court thus instructed insurer to pay insured's tax debt).

[299] Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 9 Neb.App. 372, 612 N.W.2d 515 (Neb.App. 2000), aff'd 261 Neb. 609, 624 N.W.2d 644 (2001).

[300] 332 N.J.Super. 336, 753 A.2d 740 (1999).

[301] See Kirwan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 9 Neb.App. 372, 612 N.W.2d 515 (Neb.App. 2000) and the case cited by the insurer in Manchester, Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 155 N.J.Super. 332, 382 A.2d 933 (App.Div. 1978), aff'd o.b., 78 N.J. 320, 394 A.2d 360 (1978).

[302] 753 A.2d at 744.

[303] A related subject is matters disclosed by an inspection of the premises. Under that exception, there is also a series of cases holding that notice by inspection does not negate liability for recorded encumbrances. See §11.2.4. In Jupe v.

found not to be knowledge of a ditch easement.[304] The fact that the applicant saw two signs on the insured property was not knowledge that the land on which the signs were placed was not owned by the seller.[305] A fence dispute between the insureds and their neighbors before the insureds sought insurance was not knowledge of a record overlap.[306] Knowledge of a utility line along the boundary line of the property did not give notice that there was an easement inside the property.[307]

A proposed insured's knowledge of a record title defect may, however, be a factor in considering whether or not another exclusion or exception applies. For example, when the buyer had seen a paved road on the insured property, inspected a survey showing the road, and reviewed a title commitment excepting the roadway, the insurer was not liable to the insured.[308] The insured's knowledge was not a defense in itself, but evidence that the insured "agreed to" the encumbrance and suffered no loss because of its existence:

> We are satisfied [the insureds] understood that Sangamore Road occupies a part of the lot, that this made no difference to them since they were getting precisely what they saw when they inspected the property, that they freely elected to complete the transaction and that this step was taken with the knowledge and advice of counsel.[309]

The insured's knowledge of the matter may also bolster a reference in Schedule B that would otherwise be too oblique to properly except the defect.[310] Similarly, the insured's knowledge of tax assessments negated the insured's claim that it had been induced to purchase by the policy's lack of exception for same. The court found the assessments excluded based on Exclusion 3(d), for matters after the policy date.[311]

City of Schertz, 604 S.W.2d 405 (Tex.App. San Antonio 1980), writ ref n.r.e. Dec 17, 1980 (Tex.App. San Antonio 1980), the policy characterized the adjacent street as an easement. However, the insureds were aware before they purchased that the road was being used by the public. This knowledge was found to create a duty to inquire, which would have disclosed that the roadway was public. The matter was thus excepted by the parties in possession exception. See §12.2 for further cases regarding that exception.

[304] Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 Mont. 1, 655 P.2d 970 (1982).

[305] Fohn v. Title Ins. Corp. of St. Louis, 529 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1975).

[306] Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 72 Wis.2d 503, 241 N.W.2d 434 (1976).

[307] McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guar. Fund, 327 So.2d 852 (Fla.App. 1976).

[308] Malkin v. Realty Title Ins. Co., Inc., 244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155 (1966).

[309] Id. at 158. To the same effect is Luboff v. Security Title & Guaranty Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965).

[310] "It should be pointed out that the third-party action is resolved basically upon Tomgil's knowledge and awareness of the easement question. This scienter coupled with the title policy exception as to easements is sufficient." Sullivan v. Tomgil Building Corp., 46 Misc.2d 613, 260 N.Y.S.2d 465, 467-8 (Sup. Ct. 1965).

[311] Luboff v. Security Title & Guaranty Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965).

Exclusion 3(b) does not typically apply to knowledge of a title matter as imparted by an exception in the policy. Thus, a Schedule B exception for an ordinance may have informed the insured that some of the land described in Schedule A was not owned by him, but the insurer had equal knowledge of the excepted instrument, and the exclusion did not apply.[312] The adequacy of notice given by exceptions to title is discussed at §12.7.1.

11.3.7 Effect Of Alleged Knowledge On Duty To Defend

No general rules may be stated as to the effect of an insured's prior knowledge on the insurer's duty to defend, since that duty always turns on the particular facts pled. However, if all theories of recovery against the insured depend on an allegation that the insured had actual knowledge of the title defect, the exclusion may negate a duty to defend the insured. Courts have found that the insurer is not required to defend an insured against claims of fraud,[313] that the insured was not a bona fide purchaser for value, [314] or that the insured was aware of an off-record title encumbrance as of the policy date. [315] See Chapter 4 for a discussion of the duty to defend.

An allegation in a lawsuit that the insured knew or should have known of the adverse claim of title, as opposed to a categorical allegation that the insured had actual knowledge before the policy date, will ordinarily not invoke Exclusion 3(b).[316] The exclusion also does not negate a duty to defend when the insured is alleged to be bound by the effect of a matter that imparted constructive notice.[317]

---

[312] See Marandino v. Lawyers' Title Ins. Corp., 156 Va. 696, 159 S.E. 181 (1931).

[313] See Ginger v. American Title Ins. Co., 29 Mich.App. 279, 185 N.W.2d 54 (1970).

[314] Collins v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 629 F.2d 429 (6th Cir. 1980). In Hauck Holdings Columbia SC, LLC v. Target Corp., 2010 WL 1258103 (S.D. Ohio) (unpublished), the court said there was no duty to defend or indemnify the insured as to a supplement to a declaration of restrictions, because it was unrecorded and thus not effective, by law and by the terms of the original declaration. The court said the supplement could only be enforced against the insured if the plaintiff alleged and proved actual knowledge of the document, which would invoke Exclusion 3(b). It thus rejected the insured's assertion that the insurer should have to defend the action, because the complaint did not invoke a covered risk and would have to invoke an exclusion to succeed. In Fogg v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 89 A.3d 510 (D.C.App. 2014), the court found, based on Exclusion 3(b), that the insurer had no duty to defend an insured owner sued by a lender who alleged that the insured knew about the lender's unrecorded lien.

[315] Ditmore v. Lochner, 2005 WL 678180 (Mich.App.) (unpublished) (no duty to defend against claim by neighbor to use property based on old court judgment of which insured was alleged to have had knowledge but which was not in the public records).

[316] In Sims v. Sperry, 835 P.2d 565 (Colo.App. 1992), the court held that the insurer had a duty to defend the insured when the plaintiff alleged that the insured "knew or should have known" that his deed was defective or had been procured by fraud.

[317] In National Heat & Power Corp. v. City Title Ins. Co., 57 App.Div.2d 611, 394 N.Y.S.2d 29 (1977), the court held that Exclusion 3(b) did not negate the duty to defend the insured whose title was attacked by a bankruptcy trustee in an adversary alleging that the deed was void as a post-petition transfer. That claim was not based on an allegation that the insured had actual knowledge of the filing of the petition, but rather that the Bankruptcy Code imposes constructive notice of the filing of a petition on all persons who deal with the debtor.

11.4 No Loss Suffered

Exclusion 3(c) of the standard ALTA policies removes coverage as to matters for which the insured has not suffered a loss. This exclusion restates the basic premise that, with a policy of indemnity, the insured must prove both that a covered risk has been invoked and that he or she has suffered actual monetary loss or damage.[318] By asserting the "no loss" exclusion, the insurer does not assume the duty to prove that no loss has occurred, and thus relieve the insured of the burden to prove the loss. Rather,

> Exclusion 3(c) is ... nothing more than the flip side of [insurer's] primary obligation under the contract: to compensate [insured] for any "loss or damage by reason of loss of priority." Thus, [insured] bears the burden of proving its loss by establishing that the value of the project exceeded the obligations under the first two deeds of trust.[319]

The various contexts in which the exclusion has been applied are discussed below.

11.4.1 Liens And Encumbrances

FORM 40, Appendix A
No loss
FORM 89, Appendix A
Tortious interference with property rights

If the policy fails to except a lien or encumbrance, the insured must establish that he or she has suffered actual monetary loss or damage due to its existence in order to receive an indemnity payment from the insurer. In some situations, there is an identifiable and covered lien or encumbrance on title that does not cause a loss, most typically because it does not reduce the value of the property.[320]

---

[318] Exclusion 3(c) of the 2006 ALTA policies states that the policy does not indemnify against "[d]efects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims, or other matters … (c) resulting in no loss or damage to the Insured Claimant… ."

[319] Marble Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 914 F.Supp. 1252, 1254 (E.D.N.C. 1996).

[320] Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 889 S.W.2d 312 (Tex.App.-Houston 1994) (insured suffered no loss because it held valid first lien as insured): Ky v. GOB Construction, Inc., 136 So.3d 1020 (Table), 2014 WL 1717454 (La.App. 3 Cir.) (unpublished) (fact that insured's house encroached slightly into setback line imposed by private restrictions and zoning code had not caused him to suffer loss; lawsuit demanding that insurer indemnify was properly dismissed); Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. McClain, 2016 WL 1436613 (Penn.Super. 2016) (unpublished), reargument denied June 16, 2016, 145 A.3d 777 (Table) (insured owners did not suffer a loss due to lender's action to reform its mortgage to grant a lien on an additional parcel owned by the insureds and mistakenly omitted); Osprey Landing, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 157 A.3d 247, 2017 ME 46 (Maine 2017) (affidavit claiming that members of public might have easement across property did not diminish value of property); Chesapeake Land Development Company LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 5930295 (W.D.Okla.) (unpublished) (insured had proven no loss caused by possible implied easement for jogging path, not a recorded grant and not formally asserted by city, so claim dismissed); First

Exclusions

When an insured purchases the property with knowledge of and subject to the encumbrance, he or she is deemed to have set the purchase price after factoring in the effect on value of the encumbrance; the insurer's failure to except the encumbrance in the policy does not cause the insured to suffer a loss.[321] However, when an insured purchaser knew of the encumbrance, but believed that it was unenforceable, the fact that he did not reduce the purchase price due to the encumbrance did not invoke the exclusion.[322] An insured owner suffers no loss due to the existence of a mortgage that the lender has failed to release, despite its obligation to do so after receiving payment in full.[323]

In most cases, an insured owner establishes actual monetary loss due to an unexcepted encumbrance by proving that it decreases the value of the property.[324] Encumbrances such as restrictive covenants frequently benefit the property as much as they burden it. As a result, the insured is often unable to establish that a restrictive covenant reduces the value of the land, and the no-loss exclusion is applicable.[325] Also, there may be no diminution in value due to a recorded restriction, if the use prohibited by the restriction would also be barred by a zoning or building ordinance.[326]

Bank Texas, SSB v. W.D. Welch, P.C., 2017 WL 2443132 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished) (lender insured whose deed of trust had priority over tax lien by equitable subrogation suffered no loss payable under policy; insurer not required to reimburse lender payment it made to buy subordination of lien).

[321] In Cavil v. Trendmaker Homes, Inc., 2012 WL 32377 (S.D.Tex.) (unpublished), the insured's purchase contract stated that the mineral rights had been reserved, as did the title insurance commitment. The policy failed to except the mineral reservation. The court found that the insured had not suffered a loss due to the mineral reservation.

[322] Endruschat v. American Title Ins. Co., 377 So.2d 738 (Fla.App. 1979).

[323] Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Bowman, 2012 WL 474167, 2012 -Ohio- 576 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished).

[324] Sala v. Security Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 693, 81 P.2d 578 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1938); Metropolitan Title Guarantee Co. v. Gildenhorn, 102 App. D.C. 28, 249 F.2d 933 (D.C. Cir. 1957). In Security Union Title Ins. Co. v. RC Acres, Inc., 269 Ga.App. 359, 604 S.E.2d 547 (Ga.App. 2004), recon.den. (Aug 31, 2004), cert.den. (Nov 22, 2004), a flowage easement encumbered the property. The Rives Corporation had a survey recorded for its property, which it then conveyed to Helen Liggett, describing the property by reference to the survey. The survey was revised shortly before the sale to show the flowage easement. Liggett conveyed immediately to RC Acres, a company owned by Liggett's son, again using a description referencing the survey. Safeco Title insured RC Acres, and the policy description also referred to the survey. However, no exception for the easement appeared on Schedule B. RC Acres submitted a claim seventeen years later. The appeals court found that there was no loss, because the purchase price reflected the value of the property subject to the easement. In Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Minnesota Office Plaza, LLC, 2010 WL 155175 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), the fact that an access easement had been terminated before the insured purchased caused the insured no loss when it already had superior access, the terminated easement path ran through the middle of a large Target store, and the insured paid nothing extra for the benefit of the easement.

[325] In Nastasi v. County of Suffolk, 106 A.D.3d 1064, 966 N.Y.S.2d 172 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013), the court held that the insurer had established a prima facie case that the insured did not suffer a loss due to an agreement about a beach area and, in fact, the agreement "resulted in a benefit to the plaintiffs and added significant value to their property due to the government's maintenance and nourishment of the beach." Because the insureds filed an opposing affidavit, the court said there was a question of fact that required a trial.

[326] In Gibbs v. Williams, 2015 WL 5440628 (W.D.Wis. 2015) (unpublished), the court held that an attorney for the insureds did not commit malpractice by failing to submit a claim notice to the insurer concerning a recorded use

An insured lender must also establish that the title defect, lien or encumbrance caused it to suffer a loss. An insured lender must prove both a diminution in the value of its security in the real estate due to the encumbrance, and that the encumbrance has caused it to recover less money from the borrower than it would have if the encumbrance had not existed.[327] This subject is fully discussed at §3.2.4.1.

Also, the insured suffers no loss as to certain types of defects unless the adverse party takes some action to enforce its rights. Thus, the fact that a wall "bulged out" onto the adjacent street did not result in loss, when the municipality had taken no action as a result.[328] When the asserted lien was a judgment in favor of the same party who claimed to be an assignee of the policy, the party sustained no compensable loss.[329]

When a defect is discovered as the property is being sold, a change in the sale price as a result of the title matter can establish the amount of a loss. Conversely, the lack of a reduction in sale price can invoke the exclusion. Thus, when a sale price was not reduced after a title defect was discovered, the insured did not suffer a loss.[330]

When the policy omits a senior lien, unlike an encumbrance, the measure of loss is typically the amount of that lien.[331] Two cases, Blessing v. American Title & Ins. Co.[332] and Atlanta Title & restriction prohibiting use of the property for a business, because a county zoning ordinance also prohibited the property's use as a resort. The court held that, because the policy included Exclusion 1, the insureds "could not recover under the title policy."

---

[327] The lender suffered no loss as a result of the fact that the property was not owned by the mortgagor, when the lender had not parted with any of the loan funds, in Pilot Title Ins. Co. v. Northwestern Bank, 11 N.C.App. 444, 181 S.E.2d 799 (1971). The insured lender did not prove a loss due to a prior encumbrance when it received payment from the borrower of all the money the borrower had to give, and then voluntarily released its deed of trust, with no discount in payment attributable to the prior lien. Wedgewood Square Center Ltd. Ptnshp. v. Lincoln Land Title Co., Inc., 347 S.W.3d 582 (Mo.App. S.D. 2011). In Associated Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 881 F.Supp.2d 1058 (D.Minn. 2012), a bank that received from the borrower as a settlement more than the value of the insured parcel on the date of the settlement did not suffer a loss due to the alleged defect in title. In Twin Cities Metro-Certified Development Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 868 N.W.2d 713 (Minn.App. 2015), the court held that, in order for an insured junior mortgagee to be entitled to be reimbursed by the insurer for mechanics' liens it had paid off, the lender was required to prove that the property had a value greater than the first mortgage excepted in the policy. If it did not, the mechanics' liens could not have caused a loss to the insured because the insured mortgage did not attach to any equity in the property.

[328] Kenrich Properties, Inc. v. City Title Ins. Co., 25 App.Div.2d 520, 267 N.Y.S.2d 258 (1966).

[329] Ruby Drilling Co. v. Title Guaranty Co. of Wyoming, 750 P.2d 674 (Wyo. 1988). The court declined to rule on whether or not a policy may be assigned, since it found no loss payable.

[330] Second Benton Harbor v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 126 Mich.App. 580, 337 N.W.2d 585 (1983); Youngblood v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 923 F.2d 161 (11th Cir. 1991).

[331] This subject is fully discussed in §3.2.3.1. One anomalous case is Ferrell v. Inter-County Title Guaranty & Mortgage Co., 213 So.2d 518 (Fla.App. 1968). In that case, a court imposed an equitable lien superior to the insured mortgage. Separately, the insured mortgage had been defectively executed. All parties, including the court, agreed that the equitable lien was not covered by the policy, apparently because it was imposed post-policy. The insurer argued that the equitable lien was the source of the insured's loss, not the defective execution of the insured mortgage. The court disagreed, holding that "[h]ad the second mortgage not been defective, the appellants would still have had an interest in the property despite the fact that the first mortgagee possessed an equitable lien on the property."

Trust Co. v. Allied Mortgage Co.,[333] held that the insured was required to prove harm due to the existence of the lien. The Blessing case has since been criticized and overturned, at least in part.[334]

The "no loss" defense may be negated by a finding that the insurer had a special, extra-contractual duty to disclose all title matters.[335] The exclusion was specifically held not to apply to construction liens when such liens were otherwise protected against, even though the lender had failed to pay out available and committed loan funds to remove the liens.[336] In another case, the insurer argued that the insured did not suffer a loss because of an omitted judgment because it was insolvent and thus "uncollectible." The insurer made its argument not to the insured but the judgment creditor directly, which sought to collect from the insurer. The court rejected the argument, based on a statute which permitted attachment of insurance proceeds directly without proof that the insured has paid anything to the claimant.[337]

In California, when a lender makes a full credit bid for the property on foreclosure, the debt is considered satisfied.[338] Except in the rare circumstance in which the insurer-escrowee participates in a fraud against the insured,[339] if the lender obtains title free of defects, the full credit bid also operates to extinguish any policy claim. See §7.9 on the subject of a full credit bid as a payment that terminates a loan policy.

The holder of a mortgage does not suffer a loss if the debt is repaid, whether by the borrower, a guarantor or a third party. If the loan is not fully repaid, any loss is limited to the principal debt minus payments.[340] In this context, the no-loss exclusion is an extension of Conditions & Stipulations 9(c) of the 1992 ALTA Loan Policy, which states that full payment of the debt terminates all liability under the policy. Thus, a senior lien caused the insured mortgagee no loss when the insured received payments from the borrower, FSLIC and a loan assignee. Together, the payments totaled more than either the policy amount or the value of the property.[341]

---

[332] 121 So.2d 455 (Fla.App. 1960).

[333] 60 Ga.App. 114, 3 S.E.2d 127 (1939); aff'd 64 Ga.App. 38, 12 S.E.2d 147 (1940).

[334] Summonte v. First American Title Ins. Co., 180 N.J.Super. 605, 436 A.2d 110 (1981), aff'd 184 N.J.Super. 96, 445 A.2d 409 (1981).

[335] Summonte v. First American Title Ins. Co., 180 N.J.Super. 605, 436 A.2d 110 (1981), aff'd 184 N.J.Super. 96, 445 A.2d 409 (1981); Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 48 Cal.App.3d 917, 122 Cal.Rptr. 470 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1975); Caravan Products Co. v. Ritchie, 55 N.J. 71, 259 A.2d 223 (N.J. 1969); and Burks v. Louisville Title Ins. Co., 95 Ohio App. 509, 121 N.E.2d 94 (1953).

[336] Mid-South Title Ins. Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 840 F.Supp. 522, 531 (W.D. Tenn. 1993).

[337] Griffith v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 812 P.2d 420 (Or.App. 1991).

[338] Cornelison v. Kornbluth, 15 Cal.3d 590, 125 Cal.Rptr. 557, 542 P.2d 981 (1975).

[339] See Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, 10 Cal.4th 1226, 44 Cal.Rptr. 352, 900 P.2d 601 (1995).

[340] See §3.2.4.4 for a discussion of the policy provisions regarding reduction in policy amount on repayment of debt as part of the formula for determining a loan policy loss.

[341] The Cadle Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 1999 WL 623464 (6th Cir. Ohio) (unpublished); affirming D.C. decision

11.4.2 Land Insured By Mistake

FORM 21, Appendix A
Land erroneously included in policy and deed

The insured suffers no loss when the policy erroneously includes property that the insured did not contract to purchase.[342] For example, in Cohen v. Security Title & Guar. Co.,[343] the deed and policy description included land that the insured had never intended to purchase. The court held that the insured "had suffered no compensable loss." Similarly, when the insureds bought a townhome with garage but their parcel also included the land on which their neighbor's garage sat, the insureds would not suffer a loss by conveying the neighbors' garage to them, because the insureds would still own exactly what they thought they had bought.[344]

Reformation is the most common remedy when the policy includes a parcel in Schedule A that was conveyed to the insured by mutual mistake. See §8.4 concerning reformation of the policy to remove a parcel conveyed to the insured by mutual mistake, and §8.3 for a discussion of claims in which the insured later claims that it expected to obtain title to land not conveyed to it and that was not insured in the policy. Both the no-loss exclusion and Exclusion 3(a) support an insurer's request to reform the policy to exclude a parcel conveyed to the insured by mutual mistake, although such an action does not depend on the existence of an exclusion. Exclusion 3(a) and reformation are discussed at §11.2.3.

The no-loss exclusion does not apply if the policy includes land that the insured believed it was purchasing and for which it paid money, but the seller contends that it did not intend to sell that land.[345] The insured must establish that it believed it was buying the land, believed the seller owned it, and parted with consideration for the property. One court cited the following passage from C.J.S.:

> a present owner who insures his own title, which subsequently proves to be defective, although in fact he has lost nothing because he never did have the interest

---

11/13/97 (unpublished).

[342] Aja v. Appleton, 86 Nev. 639, P.2d 524 (1970); Booth v. New Jersey Highway Authority, 60 N.J.Super. 534, 159 A.2d 460 (1960). In Demetrio v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 124 A.D.3d 824, 3 N.Y.S.3d 75 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2015), app.den. 25 N.Y.3d 906 (May 12, 2015), when the policy described the insured property as one lot, but incorporated by reference a metes and bounds description that encompassed seven lots, the policy insured only the one lot that the insured purchased, and the insured suffered no loss due to the "loss" of the land for which it paid nothing.

[343] 212 Conn. 436, 562 A.2d 510 (Conn. 1989).

[344] Jordshaugen v. Port Ludlow Associates, LLC, 149 Wash.App. 1066, 2009 WL 1133450 (Wash.App. Div. 2) (unpublished). The court concluded: "[s]imply stated, the Jordshaugens' suffered no loss or damage to the property they believed they were purchasing."

[345] Kentucky Title Co. v. Hail, 219 Ky. 256, 292 S.W. 817 (App. 1927); Fohn v. Title Ins. Corp. of St. Louis, 529 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1975); Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 72 Wis.2d 503, 241 N.W.2d 434 (1976).

> he supposed he had, may recover for the loss of what he supposedly had ... .[346]

Another oft-cited case on this issue is Empire Development Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co.:

> … the existence and lien of these assessments has been declared. Because under their contract the plaintiffs are compelled to pay them their loss is no less. … Failure to keep what a man has or thinks he has is a loss. What the word means is to be measured by the standard accepted between the parties. … To say that when a defect subsequently develops he has lost nothing and, therefore, can recover nothing, is to misinterpret the intention both of the insured and the insurer.[347]

Thus, in Cohen and similar cases, the insured was found not to have suffered a loss because he paid nothing for it. In the cases that found the exclusion did not apply, the insured paid for the land and would suffer a loss by not receiving uncontested title to the land.

11.4.3 Negligible Title Defect Causing No Loss Or Damage

The insured does not suffer a loss because of title "defects" which are purely technical only, or that do not represent valid or enforceable encumbrances or liens.[348] In Sattler v. Philadelphia Title Ins. Co.,[349] a judgment and lawsuit were omitted from the policy, but the insurer obtained a release of the judgment and settled the suit. The court held that the insured suffered no loss because the encumbrances were invalid and had been removed. In Graham v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[350] the insured's loan application was rejected because of a purported defect that did not actually exist. The court held that title was not unmarketable and there was no loss. Similarly, in American Savings &

---

[346] 529 S.W.2d 1, 3. However, in Knispel v. Transnation Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 5334083 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the seller did not own one of the many parcels it contracted to sell. The court held that, because the insured did not obtain an insurable interest in the one parcel, the policy was void. The court said "if Golden Gate never had an actual right, contractual or otherwise, to the Knox parcel, then Golden Gate never held an insurable interest in that parcel, and the title insurance policy was void insofar as it purported to apply to that parcel."

[347] 225 N.Y. 53, 121 N.E. 468, 470 (1918). This passage from Empire was quoted with approval in Glickman v. Home Title Guaranty Co., 8 Misc.2d 303, 167 N.Y.S.2d 793 (1957); 15 Misc.2d 167, 178 N.Y.S.2d 281 (Sup. 1958), aff'd 8 A.D.2d 629, 185 N.Y.S.2d 756 (Sup.Ct.App.Div. 1959).

[348] For example, when a member of an LLC sold its property by wrongly claiming to be the managing member, but the LLC ratified the sale after taking an assignment of the buyer's claim against its title insurance policy, title was not defective and there was no loss payable. Reflection Townhomes, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 445521 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished). In Ky v. GOB Construction, Inc., 136 So.3d 1020 (Table), 2014 WL 1717454 (La.App. 3 Cir.) (unpublished), the court found that the fact that the insured's house encroached slightly into a setback line imposed by private restrictions and the zoning code had not caused him to suffer a loss, and dismissed his lawsuit demanding that the insurer indemnify him. The court noted: "Ky testified in his deposition that he hasn't suffered any loss at this time, but his fear is that he will suffer a loss in the future. This fear is not evidence of an actual loss."

[349] 192 Pa. Super. 337, 162 A.2d 22 (1960).

[350] 20 App.Div. 440, 46 N.Y.S. 1055 (1897).

Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[351] a tax foreclosure brought in error, and later abandoned because the taxes had been paid, the insurer-escrowee was not negligent as escrowee and there was no defect in the mortgage lien.

When a court does not know if a particular defect would be raised by future title examiners, it sometimes characterizes the matter as a "cloud" on title that a buyer has a right to have cleared. Courts are often imprecise in identifying why something "clouds" title.[352] However, the policy does not give an assurance against "clouds" on title. The proper reading of the policy is that a cloud on title does not invoke a covered risk unless it is a defect, lien or encumbrance on title, or renders title unmarketable.

It is essential that the insured establish that title is being attacked by a third party, or that an identifiable right, lien or encumbrance on title is held by another. A covered risk is not invoked solely based on the insured's own opinion that his or her title is or may be defective.[353] In Prestwood v. City of Andalusia,[354] which did not involve title insurance, the sole basis on which the City of Andalusia as purchaser claimed that title was unmarketable was the offhand opinion of a person who had not examined the title. The court concluded that "the city itself, rather than a third party, has undertaken to attack its own title." The court found no evidence establishing that title was defective. Similarly, in Schwartz v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.,[355] the insured sued the developer-declarant and advised the insurer by letter that the condominium declaration was defective because it was signed by a different entity than the record owner of the property. The title insurer cured the identity issue by affidavit. No third party ever challenged the validity of the declaration. The insured obtained a large settlement from the developer, but sued the insurer for attorney fees in the prosecution of the action. The court found that there was no duty to prosecute, because no one was attacking title except the insured himself.[356]

---

[351] 78 A.D. 624, 432 N.Y.S.2d 706 (1980).

[352] "A cloud on title, described in Novogroder v. Di Paola (1919), 11 Ohio App. 374, 378, 30 Ohio C.A. 421, 424, ... 'is but an apparent defect …; the density of the cloud can make no difference in the right to have it removed. Anything of this kind that has a tendency, even in a slight degree, to cast doubt upon the owner's title, and to stand in the way of a full and free exercise of his ownership, is … a cloud upon his title.'" Meerhoff v. Huntington Mortgage Co., 103 Ohio App.3d 164, 658 N.E.2d 1109 (1995).

[353] In Lennen v. Marriott Ownership Resorts, Inc., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1440092 (M.D.Fla. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed August 21, 2019, the owners of interests in Florida timeshare condominiums sued the developer, asserting a multitude of claimed defects in the ownership regime. The court dismissed most of those claims. Although the title insurer was also a party to the action, the court did not address, in the motion to dismiss, the issue that no other party had attacked the insureds' titles.

[354] 709 So.2d 1173 (Ala. 1997).

[355] 134 Ohio App.3d 601, 731 N.E.2d 1159 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 1999).

[356] "Although the plaintiff argues his title was made unmarketable because of the defect, this is not a loss suffered by the adverse action or claim asserted by a third party. Without an adverse claim contending the title is unmarketable, the defendant has no duty to provide the plaintiff's attorney fees and costs. The wording is important--the policy's coverage here is not of the marketability of title, but of an "unmarketable" one. The negative wording is consistent with the indemnity nature of the policy. To cover marketability of the title insured would be to guarantee the title; to cover its

The no loss exclusion also applies when the insured proves that title is defective or encumbered, but does not demonstrate that he or she has lost anything, or that the land has a diminished value as a result.[357] The exclusion would apply if the insured is restored to his or her original position, for example. In a very unusual case, a trial court found as a matter of law that the insured was put back in her original position even though she lost the lien of the insured mortgage, but the appeals court held that the insured deserved a trial.[358]

11.4.4 Matters Assumed Or Agreed To By Insured

When the insured has created a defect or deliberately agrees to take title subject to or assuming a title matter, the insured suffers no loss. For example, an insured lender suffered no loss when its loan was found void because it was usurious.[359] Similarly, in Riffle v. United General Title

---

unmarketability is to provide an indemnity against adverse claims asserted against it. A marketable title is one that a vendor, through judicial action, can compel a purchaser to take; an unmarketable title is one that a purchaser, in the course of a transaction, is justified in rejecting at the closing table. Between these two poles, it is possible to find a good title for many purposes, but unmarketable." 134 Ohio App.3d. at 614, 731 N.E.2d at 1168.

[357] See, for example, Clark v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2002 WL 15955 (Wash.App.Div. 3) (unpublished), in which the court found no coverage when the insured mistakenly believed that two recorded deeds conveyed part of the land it owned, when in fact the deeds merely granted an easement that was excepted in the policy. The court concluded: "The title policy indicated [the Clarks] purchased 40.1 acres of property subject to an easement. This is exactly what they now own. Therefore, the Clarks have not suffered any damages from the breach by Chicago Title." In Zeiger v. Shons, 2001 WL 470175 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished), the court said the insured had not suffered a loss due to the fact that the insured parcel was smaller than the insured had thought when his own appraiser put the value of the property actually owned by the insured at more than policy limits. In First Nat'l Bank of Jeanerette v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2010 WL 3734056 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), findings adopted in 2010 WL 3734020 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), the court found that an insured lender had not suffered a loss just because it was unable to sell the loan. The bank said that it would have received a service fee of about $5,700 on the sale, and would not incur servicing expenses if the loan was sold. The judge said these items were not "actual monetary loss" for which the title policy provides indemnity, labeling the servicing a bookkeeping function and the fee at best a lost profit opportunity and not "an actual loss of money." He noted that the bank "has profited by over $60,000 to date," the amount of interest paid by the borrowers.

[358] In Stevenson v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2000 WL 873492 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), Mary Ann Stevenson's boyfriend (later husband) James gave her a $35,000 note secured by a mortgage. However, Mary Ann did not give James any money. James, a lawyer, represented a client in a divorce and did not get paid. James sued the client, got a $1,250 judgment against him, and levied on a $14,000 note and mortgage from the client's wife to the client. The sheriff sold the note and mortgage to James at auction for $50. James assigned the $14,000 note and mortgage to Mary Ann, who gave him a credit of $12,000 against his unfunded note to her. Mary Ann then got a $25,000 title insurance policy on the $14,000 mortgage that James had bought for $50. The client sued Mary Ann to get back his note and mortgage, and won. The trial court said that Mary Ann would not have lost anything if she simply took back the $12,000 credit she had given her husband on the nonexistent debt. The appeals court said that there may be no loss payable in the end, but that it could not find that there was no loss as a matter of law. It said: "We find there is a legitimate difference between having an asset which permits a credit on an outstanding debt, and merely reinstating or debiting the original debt. … [The client's] note and mortgage was worth more on its face, than a $12,000 debit, and may have been more collectable. … This is not to say [Mary Ann] might not fail under the express terms of the policy of the title insurance."

[359] Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., 992 F.2d 1231 (1st Cir. 1993). The effect of usury is specifically excluded under Exclusion 5 of the loan policy. See §11.7 for a discussion of that exclusion.

Ins. Co.,[360] the "no loss" exclusion was found to apply when the insured bought the property with knowledge of the title defect, the purchase price was adjusted accordingly, and the insured did not establish diminution in value beyond the reduction in sale price. In Riffle, the insured knew that the property had a questionable right of access. It obtained a discount in the purchase price and got a title policy, but dropped its efforts to get access resolved before closing. After the purchase, the insured access easement was ruled invalid. The insured sued the insurer for policy limits. The insurer raised Exclusions 3(a), 3(b) and 3(c). The court never got to the first two exclusions, because it found that the insured had not proven a loss. The appeals court noted that the partners proceeded with closing without having actually resolved the issue that had hung them up. The only valuation testimony at trial was from Mr. Riffle, who opined simply that, without a right of access, the property was "useless" and had a zero value. The trial court found, however, that "the access problem was taken into account when negotiating the sale price." The appeals court found that the property was not valueless, since the partners could get there by boat, and their intended use was recreational and not commercial. It noted that damage evidence must "allow findings from established facts and not by conjecture." Thus, the court was unwilling to award policy limits as a default measure of loss without proof of actual damage suffered. Further, the court impliedly invoked Exclusion 3(a) by hold that "[a]ppellants received what they bargained for and cannot now claim that they have suffered damages." See the discussion of Riffle and similar decisions in relation to Exclusion 3(a) at §11.2.1.

11.5 Post-Policy Matters

FORM 42, Appendix A
Defect arising after Date of Policy--1992 Policy

FORM 41, Appendix A
Defect arising after Date of Policy--Residential Policy

FORM 74, Appendix A
Easement abandonment--post-policy matter

The coverages in the title insurance policy are limited to matters that already exist on the date of policy. Title defects arising after that date are not covered by the policy.[361] This limitation is stated in the preamble to the Covered Risks in the 2006 ALTA policies:

> SUBJECT TO THE EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE, THE EXCEPTIONS FROM COVERAGE CONTAINED IN SCHEDULE B, AND THE CONDITIONS, BLANK TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, a Blank corporation (the "Company") insures, as of Date of Policy and, to the extent stated in Covered Risks 9 and 10, after Date of Policy, against loss or damage, not exceeding the Amount of

[360] 64 Ark.App. 185, 984 S.W.2d 47 (1998).

[361] The ALTA Homeowner's Policy provides certain assurances as to post-policy matters, as discussed in §9.14.2.

> Insurance, sustained or incurred by the Insured by reason of… .

(emphasis added) This coverage limitation is confirmed by an exclusion in the 2006 and prior ALTA policies:

> The following matters are expressly excluded from the coverage of this policy, and the Company will not pay loss or damage, costs, attorneys' fees, or expenses that arise by reason of:
>
> 3. Defects, liens, encumbrances, adverse claims or other matters:
>
> * * * *
>
> (d) attaching or created subsequent to Date of Policy (however, this does not modify or limit the coverage provided under Covered Risk 9 and 10)... .[362]

In addition, the 1992 ALTA Loan policy states that the insurer has no liability for advances made after the date of policy, including non-obligatory construction loan advances.[363] There is no corresponding provision in the 2006 ALTA Loan policy, but that policy does retain the post-policy exclusion.

The post-policy exclusion is at the heart of the nature of title insurance coverage. The policy remains in effect as long as the insured owns the property. The insured pays no renewal premium. However, anything that happens that affects title after the insured obtains his or her interest in the property is not covered by the policy, as confirmed by Exclusion 3(d).[364] Almost all such matters

---

[362] The referenced Covered Risks 9 and 10 are the limited creditors' rights and gap coverages. The Residential policy exclusion reads as follows: "In addition to the Exceptions in Schedule B, you are not insured against loss, costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses resulting from: … 3. Title Risks: … that first affect your title after the Policy Date -- this does not limit the labor and material lien coverage in Item 8 of Covered Title Risks... ." The Residential policy exclusion is thus identical in substance to the 1992 policy, except that it does not limit the construction lien coverage of Covered Title Risk 8.

[363] Conditions & Stipulations 8(d) of the 1992 ALTA loan policy states that the policy does not include any liability for advances made under the insured mortgage after date of policy, except those made to protect the mortgage lien:

"The Company shall not be liable for: (i) any indebtedness created subsequent to Date of Policy except for advances made to protect the lien of the insured mortgage and secured thereby and reasonable amounts expended to prevent deterioration of improvements; or (ii) construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy, except construction loan advances made subsequent to Date of Policy for the purpose of financing in whole or in part the construction of an improvement to the land which at Date of Policy were secured by the insured mortgage and which the insured was and continued to be obligated to advance at and after Date of Policy."

On construction loans, "pending disbursement" endorsements are issued with each draw in certain areas of the country. Such endorsements extend the Date of Policy as to construction lien coverage through the date of each draw. See §10.2.1 regarding the pending disbursement endorsement. Other endorsements are also sometimes used to effectively eliminate this exclusion as to construction disbursements made after the date of policy.

[364] In Dickins v. Stiles, 81 Wash.App. 670, 916 P.2d 435 (1996), the insured property was subject to a disclosed restrictive covenant limiting the use of the property to "agricultural and residential purposes." The insured was sued by neighbors for making commercial use of the property. The insurer was found to have no duty either to defend or indemnify, because the policy had excepted the instrument. Further, the insured was sued for overburdening the easements benefitting the land, as a result of the commercial use. The overburdening claim was found excluded by Exclusions 3(a) and/or 3(d), since it concerned use of the property by the insured after purchase. In Sabatino v. First American Title Ins. Co., 308 Ill.App.3d 819, 721 N.E.2d 693, 242 Ill.Dec. 414 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), the title insurer was found not to be obligated to defend insureds' alleged "deliberate, wrongful and intentional" disruption of an easement by necessity over the insured's land. The court held that the lawsuit concerned the insured's interference with the claimed easement, not the title to the land, and that all of the tortious conduct occurred after the date of policy. Also, in Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 6101016 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 204 (unpublished), a municipality's actions to condemn and lay out a public road on the insured's property were all found to have occurred after the date of policy, and thus were excluded. Herr v. Forghani, 2011 WL 1833829 (Wash.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) held that the insurer had no duty to prosecute a lawsuit or pay a loss due to the insured's claim that his neighbors overburdened the access easement that ran across the insured's land, because the use was post-policy and the easement was excepted. In City of East Providence v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 5527604 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), adopting findings of 2011 WL 5521246 (D.R.I.) (unpublished), the title insurer was not required to defend the city against the business's lawsuit for breach of a contract the city signed to develop the property, which the business owner claimed gave it beneficial ownership of the property. The court said the lawsuit was about a contract, not title; concerned post-policy breaches; and that the city created or agreed to the contracts. In Ruisi v. Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 3854407 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the court found that the policy did not protect against the fact that a mortgage on the insured parcel was not paid off because the lawyers entrusted with the money stole it and recorded a forged mortgage release, since the lender delivered the money after the policy date, invoking the post-policy exclusion. In Witkowski v. Richard W. Endlar Ins. Agency, Inc., 81 Mass.App.Ct. 785, 968 N.E.2d 922 (Mass.App.Ct. 2012), when the insured condominium unit was destroyed by a flood after the policy date, and the building code prevented the insured from rebuilding the unit, neither the flood nor the insured's inability to rebuild triggered policy coverage. In Property Hackers, LLC v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 96 A.D.3d 818, 949 N.Y.S.2d 70, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 04728 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2012), app.den. 20 N.Y.3d 853, 982 N.E.2d 92, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 93255 (Table) (N.Y. Dec 11, 2012) (unpublished), the court held that the policy did not protect against the post-policy condemnation of the insured parcel. In Murphy v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 729 S.E.2d 21, 12 FCDR 1657 (Ga.App. 2012), the court ruled that a neighbor's erection of a locked gate and other obstructions 20 years after the policy date, which blocked the use of the insured access easement, was a post-policy event and thus excluded from coverage. In Cavender Enterprise Leasing Family, LLC v. First States Investors 4200, LLC, 2013 WL 495650 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), a right of first refusal granted before the policy date was excluded because the instrument evidencing the right was recorded after the policy date, and the policy contained an exception for "[r]ights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records." The court said the combination of the exclusion and the exception barred coverage. Conversely, in Nastasi v. County of Suffolk, 106 A.D.3d 1064, 966 N.Y.S.2d 172 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013), which concerned a conveyance of some of the insured parcel signed years before the policy date but not recorded until a few months afterward, the court held that the conveyance was not excluded as a matter "attaching or created" after the date of the policy. The distinction between Cavender and Nastasi lay in the fact that, in the former case, the policy also contained the parties in possession exception. In Back Creek Partners, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 213 Md.App. 703, 75 A.3d 394 (Md.App. 2013), the insurer was found not to be obligated to defend a lawsuit brought against insureds after they sold the property, about matters that occurred after the policy date. In Moreno v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2013 WL 1395629 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), the borrowers' claim that their lender was not supposed to get a lien on all of their four parcels, in a 2004 refinance, could not invoke any coverage under their 2003 owner's policy, and any statement by the title agent about policy coverage did not alter the plain language of the post-policy exclusion. In Casero v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 830225 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the policy provided no coverage for the insureds' claim to own land that was not insured in the policy, as to which the insureds first asserted a right in a deed recorded five years after the policy date. In Buroker v. Phillips, 169 A.D.3d 992, 93 N.Y.S.3d 397, 2019 N.Y. Slip Op. 01386 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2019), the insured's access over an easement drive was blocked years after the policy date, by people who took title to the burdened property through a post-policy tax foreclosure. The court said the title insurer was not entitled to summary judgment based on the post-policy exclusion, because it had not proven conclusively that the neighbors' legal theory for barricading the driveway was that the tax sale had extinguished the easement. The court conceded that, if that was the neighbors' theory, the exclusion would be invoked. In Mortazavi v. Federal Ins. Co., 2019 WL 2609779 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the would be caused by the insured or due to the fact that the insured is the owner, and would also thus invoke Exclusion 3(a):

> Nothing else appearing, title insurance operates to protect a purchaser or mortgagee against defects in or encumbrances on title which are in existence at the time the insured takes his title. [citations omitted] "It is not prospective in its operation and has no relation to liens or requirements arising thereafter." Mayers v. Van Schaick, supra. "The risks of title insurance end where the risks of other kinds begin. Title insurance, instead of protecting the insured against matters that may arise during a stated period after the issuance of the policy, is designed to save him harmless from any loss through defects, liens, or encumbrances that may affect or burden his title when he takes it."[365]

The only sense in which the policy extends into the future is that the insured typically becomes aware of the title defect after the date of policy. The post-policy exclusion has been found to be unambiguous.[366]

The exclusion is frequently applicable in tax claims. Generally, the exclusion applies to negate liability for taxes that are levied or become due after the policy date.[367] However, when a tax is imposed after the policy date but with a retroactive lien date, the exclusion does not apply.[368] Tax insurer had no duty to defend the insured former owner in a lawsuit brought by the purchaser alleging the insured's failure to disclose the existence of encroaching structures that the insured had built after the policy date.

---

[365] National Mortgage Corp. v. American Title Ins. Co., 299 N.C. 369, 261 S.E. 2d 844 (1980); quoted with approval in Firstland Village Associates v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 284 S.E.2d 582 (S.C. 1981). In Firstland, the claim involved an amendment to restrictions that was recorded months after the policy date. The court found no duty to indemnify, clear title or issue later policies free of a reference to the amendment, stating "Title insurance is unique in that it is retrospective, not prospective." Similarly, in Ruisi v. Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 3854407 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the court said "[t]itle policy is unique in that it is retrospective, not prospective. It is designed to protect against past events, not possible future encumbrances."

[366] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens and Southern Nat'l Bank, 821 F.Supp. 1492, 1495 (N.D.Ga. 1993).

[367] Vurimindi v. LandAmerica Financial Group, Inc., 2012 WL 8700440 (Pa.Cmwlth.) (unpublished) held that the policy did not protect against taxes that became liens after the policy date, especially because the tax liens were likely invalid due to their late filing. In Lone Star Equities, Inc. v. Dimitrouleas, 34 N.E.3d 936, 2015-Ohio-2294 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 2015), the court found that the post-policy exclusion barred liability for real estate taxes that were reassessed after the policy date, even though the dispute had begun before the closing date. In Princeton South Investors, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 437 N.J.Super. 283, 97 A.3d 1190 (N.J.Super.A.D. 2014), cert.den. 220 N.J. 268 (Jan. 23, 2015), the exclusion was found to apply to a tax reassessment that was pending on appeal on the policy date, but on which there was no present tax owed. In BV Jordanelle, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 830 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2016), the exclusion was found to apply when the property was within a special taxing district that had made no assessment on the policy date. In First Clover Leaf Bank v. National Land Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 392728, 2015 IL App (5th) 120442-U (Ill.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), app.den. 32 N.E.3d 673 (Table) (May 27, 2015), the exclusion negated any duty of the insurer to redeem the property from taxes that were levied after the policy date.

[368] In Menconi v. Stewart Title of Illinois, 2015 WL 4534148, 2015 IL App (1st) 143043-U (Ill.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), the court has refused to dismiss a policy suit based on a tax levy made after the date of policy for an claims are fully analyzed in §9.4.

A forged release of the insured deed of trust is necessarily a post-policy event, and thus excluded.[369] A claim that the insured mortgage was given as a preference is excluded, when the borrower files bankruptcy after the date of policy.[370] The claimed preference was a condition which:

> arose only because [the borrower] chose to file bankruptcy and chose to file within the critical time period. Both of these events, which might give rise to an avoidance, transpired after the title policy issued, and, therefore, the loss of the secured position would be excluded from the coverage of the policy because it was occasioned by subsequent events.[371]

In finding the matter excluded, therefore, the court determined that the source of loss was the filing of the bankruptcy within the preference period. In a second decision, in which the facts were not well developed, an adversary proceeding apparently based on preference was found not to create a duty to defend or indemnify, because the foreclosure and adversary proceeding were both post-policy matters.[372] Preference claims have also been found excluded under Exclusions 3(a) (see §11.2.6) and 3(b) (see §11.3.4). See §11.5 for a complete discussion of Exclusion 3(d), concerning post-policy matters.

When the adverse title claim, lien or encumbrance existed before the policy date, the fact that the action to enforce that interest is brought or the lis pendens is recorded after the date of policy does not invoke the post-policy exclusion.[373]

"omitted" tax from several years prior to the policy date, because it had a retroactive lien date prior to the policy date. Following the ruling on the motion to dismiss, the insured would still be required to prove that the lien was both effective and that the statute would properly be construed to impose a lien prior to the policy date.

[369] Upson v. Goodland State Bank & Tr. Co., 797 P. 2d 845 (Colo.App. 1990). The court ruled that the exclusion was not negated or limited by the fact that the insurer recorded the forged release.

[370] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank, 821 F.Supp. 1492 (N.D.Ga. 1993).

[371] Id. at 1495.

[372] Capital Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 861 S.W.2d 84 (Tex.App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1993).

[373] Thus, the policy was found to protect against a mortgage recorded before the policy date despite the fact that the lis pendens on foreclosure of that lien was post-policy, in U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Ins. Co., 37 A.D.3d 822, 832 N.Y.S.2d 223 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2007). In San Jancinto Z, L.L.C. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2014 WL 1317696 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), modified on denial of rehearing (April 24, 2014), rev.den. June 18, 2014, a governmental body brought a condemnation lawsuit years after the policy was issued. However, at the time that action was filed, there were already several lawsuits in progress to determine who had the better claim of ownership and there were competing lien claims. The person claiming ownership adversely to the insured made the assertion in his answer to the condemnation complaint that he was the rightful owner. The court held that this assertion triggered a duty to defend, although the condemnation itself was an excluded post-policy event. In Colonial Mortgage Service Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 6237852 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished), the court found that the fact that a lis pendens was recorded after the policy date did not invoke the exclusion, because the rights claimed by the plaintiff in the complaint existed before the policy date.

Exclusions

The policy does not protect against a title defect arising after the policy date, even if the effect of such a defect is to invalidate the insured's interest as of the date of the policy. For example, a policy assured the insured lender that it had a first deed of trust on a lessee's interest, to which the fee owner's interest was subordinate. This assurance was given based on a subordination agreement from the lessor. The lessor's subordination was conditioned on the use of the loan funds for construction of a building on the property. After the policy date, the lender gave the borrower the loan funds without requiring that a building be built, and the lessor had the subordination agreement declared null. The insured sued the insurer, which defended on the post-policy exclusion. The court agreed with the insurer that the claim was not covered:

> Here, the policy of title insurance issued by defendant insured the lien of plaintiff's deed of trust on the Abernathy property "all as of the 18th day of July, 1969, at 12:26 p.m. the effective date of this policy." This affirmative statement of coverage is also restated in the negative as an exclusion from coverage in subparagraph 3(d) of the policy, which specifically excludes from coverage defects, liens other than certain statutory liens for labors and materials, encumbrances, adverse claims against the title as insured or other matters "attaching or created subsequent to the date hereof.[374]

Similarly, sellers brought an action to reclaim the insured property for lack of consideration, and a consent judgment was entered after the policy date by which the insured would either give a mortgage to the sellers or lose the property. The insured did not grant the mortgage, and was thus divested of title. This divestiture was a post-policy matter and thus excluded.[375] Also, when an easement was recorded before the policy date, but the easement holder first sought to reform it to encumber the insured property after the date of policy, the post-policy exclusion was found to apply.[376] When a neighbor sought to subdivide land contrary to the terms of a recorded declaration of restrictions 12 years after the policy was issued to the insured, the matter was excluded as being a post-policy act, and the insurer had no obligation to prosecute the insured's lawsuit to enforce the restriction.[377]

Title insurance policies typically recite not only a date of policy, but the exact time of day as to which policy coverage extends. The post-policy exclusion applies to matters that occur on the policy date but after the time recited in the policy. In Mark Twain Kansas City Bank v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[378] the policy was timed, at the lender's request, as of the moment at which the insured mortgage was recorded. The insured lender disbursed the loan funds less than an hour later. The

---

[374] National Mortgage Corp. v. American Title Ins. Co., 299 N.C. 369, 261 S.E. 2d 844 (1980).

[375] Kramer v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 69 Ill.App. 3d 1015, 387 N.E.2d 1105 (1979).

[376] Campbell v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 166 Wash.2d 466, 209 P.3d 859 (Wash. 2009).

[377] Heyse v. Case, 114 Conn.App. 640, 971 A.2d 699 (Conn.App. 2009), cert.den. 293 Conn. 905, 976 A.2d 705 (Conn. July 23, 2009).

[378] 807 F.Supp. 84 (E.D.Mo. 1992).

money was delivered to a party other than the mortgagor owner. A court later held that the mortgage was invalid because the owner received no consideration for the granting of the lien. The court granted the insurer's summary judgment motion based on the post-policy exclusion, stating:

> … the policy clearly excludes coverage for defects attached or created subsequent to "Date of Policy" and unambiguously defines "Date of Policy" as embracing a specific date and time, that is, July 11, 1986 at 11:30. Although the faulty disbursement took place only fifty-one minutes later, the defect was created after the "Date of Policy" and hence is excluded from coverage.[379]

National Mortgage and Mark Twain were relied on in Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co.,[380] in which the priority of the insured deeds of trust were challenged on the grounds that the lender had disbursed the loan funds, after the date of policy, contrary to the bankruptcy court order which gave the lender its priority, thus working a subordination of the lender's interest.

A Florida court also relied in part on Mark Twain in applying the post-policy exclusion in Lawyers Title Ins. Co., Inc. v. Novastar Mortg., Inc.[381] In that case, after the policy date, the insured lender rejected the loan because it detected that some of the borrower's paperwork was phony. The insured told the loan broker to sell the loan to someone else, which it did, cancelling the assignment of note and mortgage. However, the broker did not repay the insured. The lender was denied foreclosure, and the court also rejected its policy claim.[382]

The exclusion also applies to an adverse right that ripens after the policy date but that was inchoate or latent on the policy date, such as an equitable lien, easement by prescription, adverse possession or constructive trust.[383] Similarly, the exclusion negates coverage as to the insured's

---

[379] Id. at 87. Similarly, in Ruisi v. Connecticut Attorneys Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 3854407 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the court found that the policy did not protect against the fact that a mortgage on the insured parcel was not paid off due to the fact that the lawyers entrusted with the money stole it and recorded a forged mortgage release, because the lender delivered the money after the policy date, and thus the post-policy exclusion applied.

[380] 56 Cal.App.4th 1489, 66 Cal.Rptr.2d 714 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1997).

[381] 862 So.2d 793, 28 Fla. L. Weekly D2746 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2003), reh.den. (Jan. 28, 2004).

[382] The court said: "Novastar's failure to take any action to enforce its rights on the note, whether at the time the closing package was received without the note, at Netwide's refusal to forward the note, at the time it learned that the loan had been resold, or at any time thereafter, made the machinations of Netwide possible. It is unreasonable for an insured to expect that a title insurance policy would insure against a wrongful act such as Netwide failing to repay Novastar when it resold the loan. All of the acts that prevented Novastar from enforcing its mortgage lien occurred subsequent to the issuance of the title insurance policy and arose as a direct result of Novastar's actions or inactions. As such, Novastar's loss was either not covered by, or was excluded by the policy provisions."

[383] See Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660 (Va. 1994), holding that an easement by necessity was excluded because it was not established until after the date of policy. In Woodle v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 287 Neb. 917, 844 N.W.2d 806 (Neb. 2014), the court said that, although implied easements were created on a land division that occurred before the policy date, they did not "attach" for title insurance purposes until they were declared by court order. Because that order was entered after the date of the policy, the easements fell under the post-policy exclusion.

rights that were enforceable when the policy was issued but that are cut off or expire after the date of policy.[384] However, the exclusion typically does not apply to rights implied by law that existed on the date of policy, but which are not adjudicated until after the policy date.[385] Thus, it is important to identify whether or not, under state law, the rights at issue existed on the policy date without any requirement that they be adjudicated. For example, Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp.[386] involved a claim of an easement of necessity. The insureds contended that the exclusion did not apply, since an easement by necessity "arises at the time the dominant tract is severed from the subservient tract." The court disagreed:

> While an easement by necessity legally arises at the time the servient estate is severed from the dominant estate, the easement may remain inchoate until established through judicial order or otherwise. An easement often is not judicially established or sought to be established for many years following the initial severance. [citations omitted] If, as the Neighbors contend, this exception in the title policy is not applicable to easements by necessity established after the policy date, a title insurance company, before issuing a policy of insurance, would be required to research the title records for all contiguous properties to determine whether a latent easement by necessity existed in order to protect itself against exposure for a subsequently established easement by necessity. This is an unreasonable burden to place on the title insurance company.[387]

However, another Virginia court distinguished Carstensen and found that the exclusion did not apply to an easement by necessity, because the claim was made on an ALTA Residential policy, which excludes title risks "that first affect title after the Policy Date" rather than those "attaching or created subsequent to Date of Policy."[388]

---

[384] In Community Credit Union v. AmeriTitle & Abstract, Inc., 344 Wis.2d 519, 822 N.W.2d 737 (Table), 2012 WL 3930615 (Wis.App.) (unpublished), the court held that the expiration of an insured five-year access easement after the policy date did not invoke the access coverage, and the post-policy exclusion applied, because on the date of policy there was a right of access to the property.

[385] In Blaser v. DeVries, 2011 WL 5965762 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court held that a declaration of restrictions that was not recorded against the property but which other lot owners sought to impose under the doctrine of common plan of restriction attached to the property, if at all, on the date of the first deed that included the restrictions. The court relied on Michigan case law that has established that rule. The court found no coverage under this policy, not because of the post-policy exclusion bur rather due to a Schedule B exception for restrictions on "the use of the premises not appearing in the chain of title." The decision highlights the need to determine under local law when a particular right or interest is deemed to attach to property as of the policy date.

[386] 442 S.E.2d 660 (Va. 1994).

[387] Id. at 665.

[388] Reams v. Southern Title Ins. Corp., 43 Va. Cir. 494, 1997 WL 33619877 (Va.Cir.Ct. 1997) (unpublished). The court said: "[w]hereas the Carstensen outcome turned on the words 'attaching or created' in order to buttress the 'inchoate' versus 'judicially established' status of an easement by necessity, the language in the instant case leads to a contrary outcome. The easement by necessity burdening the Reams' property 'affected' the tract prior to the 1986 Policy

Adverse matters created before the policy date but not recorded until afterward create a tension between the Covered Risks and the post-policy exclusion. One example is the lien which takes priority over the insured mortgage lien, even though it is recorded after the policy date. In Citibank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.,[389] the policy was dated as of the date on which the insured mortgage loan closed. The mortgage was recorded three weeks after the policy date. Another mortgage was signed two weeks before the policy date, and recorded a week after the policy date but two weeks before the insured mortgage was recorded. The intervening mortgage was found to have priority over the insured mortgage based on recording dates. The insurer argued that it was not recorded on the policy date, and therefore it was not protected against. The court held the post-policy exclusion inapplicable, however, because under state law the intervening lien arose when executed, which was prior to policy date.

The policy protects against covered matters discovered after the policy date but attaching before that date. Thus, the post-policy exclusion does not apply as to matters existing on the date of policy but discovered before the insured mortgage was assigned.[390]

Another form of inchoate right is the construction lien claim. In most states, construction lien claims relate back from the date of filing or recording of the lien to an earlier date tied to the first work on the project or the construction contract itself. See Chapter 10 regarding construction liens generally. The standard exception for construction liens removes coverage for lien claims based on work done prior to the Policy Date.[391]

Date, even though court recognition did not occur until 1994. Such an easement arose by operation of law at the time the Reams' parcel was severed from the dominant tract. In other words, this encumbrance existed prior to the plaintiffs' acquisition of the Powhatan tract and purchase of the title insurance policy from the defendant. At the time the policy was issued it affected title."

[389] 645 N.Y.S.2d 826 (A.D. 2 Dept. 1996).

[390] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. National Enterprises, Inc., 133 F.3d 929 (Table), 1997 WL 800294, *1 (9th Cir. (Cal.)) (unpublished).

[391] Clements v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 612 So. 2d 1172 (Ala. 1992).

11.6 Lack Of Adequate Consideration

FORM 44, Appendix A
Lack of adequate consideration

The policy does not protect an insured against a claim that its title is defective because the insured failed to pay adequate consideration for the property.[392] One commentator has explained the purpose of the exclusion as follows:

> This exclusion fits in the category of those that prevent coverage of matters that the insurer cannot discover via a title search and for which the insured bears some responsibility. It prevents coverage where an insured owner or lender is deemed not to have been a purchaser for value. Such an insured will not be protected by state recording laws against claims of subsequent bona fide purchasers. The effect of the exclusion is that insureds who are not protected by state recording laws also will not be protected by their title insurance policies. Thus, under state recording statutes that give priority to subsequent bona fide purchasers for value, insured donees and devisees of real property may not only lose their priority, but also may not be indemnified for their losses because of this exclusion in their title insurance policies.[393]

For example, in Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald,[394] the insured prepared the quit claim deed used to confirm a tax title, and altered the legal description from the grantor's own deed. The alteration increased the land conveyed from two acres to more than 12. However, the insured knew that the grantor's deed contained only two acres. Further, the insured paid no consideration for the deed. The court ruled that the failure of title to the additional acreage was excluded because the insured was not a bona fide purchaser for value. While the court rested its conclusion on Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b), it might more properly have applied Exclusion 3(e).

When the insured's purchase at auction was set aside because its bid price of $3,500 was so low that it shocked the conscience, the Arizona Supreme court held nonetheless that the exclusion

---

[392] Exclusion 3(e) of the 2006 ALTA Owner's policy negates coverage for defects "resulting in loss or damage that would not have been sustained if the Insured Claimant had paid value for the Title." Exclusion 3(e) of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy excludes loss "resulting in loss or damage that would not have been sustained if the Insured Claimant had paid value for the Insured Mortgage." In Northwest Savings Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 253080 (Pa.Super.) (unpublished), the insured mortgage was unenforceable because the loan money that was to have been used to pay off prior liens was instead stolen by the bank's closing agent. The trial court found that this exclusion negated coverage. The appeals court affirmed based on Exclusion 3(a), but did not reach this holding.

[393] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 6:25, p. 457, West/Thomson Reuters (footnotes omitted).

[394] 275 Mont. 111, 911 P.2d 209 (1996).

did not negate coverage.[395] The court said the exclusion is intended to apply when the insured's consideration is so low that the insured does not get the benefit of the race-notice recording laws. While the auction bid was low, it was more than merely nominal, and thus would protect the bidder under the recording laws. The court gave this helpful summary of the scholarly comment on the value exclusion:

> Title insurance exists against the backdrop of the recording statutes. Under those laws, unrecorded interests are invalid against creditors and against subsequent purchasers for "valuable consideration" who lack notice of the interest. …This background informs our interpretation of the "failure to pay value" exclusion. How can a purchaser's failure to pay value for the title result in a loss? This loss can obviously occur if an insured lacking recording act protection faces a title challenge from a prior unrecorded interest. The recording statutes generally protect bona fide purchasers from unrecorded interests in land, but such interests are valid and binding as to a purchaser who does not pay valuable consideration or who has notice. … The circumstances in which a purchaser will not be protected by the recording statutes have evident counterparts in the policy exclusions. Exclusion 5 excludes coverage for losses that result from the purchaser's "failure to pay value" for the title; Exclusion 4.b applies to unrecorded risks that are known to the purchaser but not the insurer. …Given the policy language and the nature of title insurance, the exclusion for "failure to pay value" is most reasonably understood as applying when an insured is not a bona fide purchaser protected by the recording statutes.[396]

The court found no coverage, but because the insured "created, allowed, or agreed to" the risk of set-aside by making the low bid.

The insurer should consider whether or not the exclusion applies, when the insured has been sued for fraud or unconscionable acts in the purchase of the property[397] or on the basis that the insured's deed is void as against a subsequent purchaser for value. The insurer should determine if the transaction has the indicia of a normal arm's length sale, through contact with others to the transaction, and by obtaining the closing statement, payoffs, checks and other proof of payment, notes and mortgages taken back by the seller, and other closing documents.

The insured need not pay value directly to the seller to avoid the exclusion. For example, in Wheeler v. Reese, the insured (Sperry) released the debt owed by Reese in exchange for the conveyance of property owned by another (Wheeler). Wheeler later challenged the conveyance for

---

[395] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Action Acquisitions, LLC, 218 Ariz. 394, 187 P.3d 1107 (2008).

[396] 187 P.3d at 1111.

[397] Such cases are often also controlled by Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Moskopoulos, 116 Cal.App. 3d 658, 172 Cal.Rptr. 248 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1981) and its progeny, in which the tortious conduct in the procurement of title is found not to be within the scope of the policy at all, and further excluded under Exclusion 3(a). See §11.2.7 for a discussion of these cases.

lack of consideration to him. The court stated:

> Here, the trial court found that Sperry received the title in exchange for forgiveness of Reese's $108,000 debt to him. Although this value was paid to Reese, not Wheeler, the exclusion does not require that value be paid to the grantor. Because we must interpret words of exclusion strictly against the insurer, … this exclusion does not preclude coverage.[398]

11.7 Usury, Consumer Credit, Truth In Lending

Exclusion 5 of the 2006 ALTA Loan policy negates coverage for:

> Invalidity or unenforceability in whole or in part of the lien of the Insured Mortgage that arises out of the transaction evidenced by the Insured Mortgage and is based upon usury or any consumer credit protection or truth-in-lending law.

This exclusion is also found in the 1992 ALTA Loan policy. It appeared as an exception to Insuring Provision 5 in the 1970 ALTA Loan policy.

The policy thus states that the insurer is not required to indemnify the insured if the mortgage is found to be unenforceable because the underlying debt is usurious.[399] This exclusion was held to apply when the mortgage was rendered unenforceable by illegal loan charges.[400] The insurer's knowledge of the off-record agreement that created the illegal loan charges did not vitiate the exclusion or suggest that the policy should be reformed to remove it.[401]

Usury coverage is obtained either by removal of the exclusion or an affirmative assurance which cancels the exclusion. When an exclusion similar to the ALTA form was removed from the policy at the insured's request, the insurer was found liable for the insured's defense of a claim of usury.[402]

There are at least three bases for raising the exclusion. First, when the borrower asserts usury as a defense to the enforcement of the mortgage, the insurer may simply rely on the exclusion. Second, if usury is not alleged by the borrower, the insurer may raise it as a limitation on the loss payable. An insured should not be permitted to collect as a policy loss money that the lender would be barred by law from collecting from the borrower, as a matter of public policy. Generally, when

---

[398] Wheeler v. Reese, 835 P.2d 572 (Colo.App. 1992), modified on den.reh. April 9, 1992, cert.den. August 31, 1992; Sims v. Sperry, 835 P.2d 565 (Colo.App. 1992).

[399] See Wisot, Usury and Title Insurance, in Attorneys' Role in Title Insurance, A.B.A. Real Property, Probate & Trust Law Section (1990).

[400] Blaylock Inv. Corp. v. Standard Title Ins. Co., 335 F.Supp. 1284 (W.D.La. 1971), aff'd, 453 F.2d 395 (5th Cir. 1972).

[401] Id.

[402] Freidus v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 159 Misc. 209, 287 N.Y.S. 639 (1936).

the insured knowingly and intentionally violates the law, any insurance coverage against such violation is void.[403] Using this rationale, one court permitted recovery from the insurer of the principal but not the criminally usurious interest.[404] The court stated:

> To summarize, we hold that it was not error for the trial court to consider the fact that the underlying loan transaction here involved criminal usurious activity as defined by Section 687.071(3), Florida Statutes (1981). Whether such considerations properly fit into the patchwork quilt of the law governing this particular kind of controversy is not by any means crystal clear. ... [T]he trial judge believed such considerations appropriate, and we are not prepared to say otherwise, inasmuch as we are unable to articulate convincing reasons to the contrary. Accordingly, we find that the trial judge properly disallowed that portion of the damages predicated on the usurious interest rate from the total coverage afforded by the commitment issued by Title & Trust. Where a contract contains both legal and illegal terms and enforcement of the illegal terms can be refused without nullifying the contract's essential purpose, courts will give effect to those valid portions and ignore the illegal terms.[405]

Finally, one court held that an insurer had the right to prove that the loan was usurious even absent an attack by the borrower. If the loan was proven to be usurious, coverage would be voided because the insured would hold no insurable interest in the property, and suffer no loss.[406]

> [O]ne has an insurable interest in property "by the existence of which he will gain advantage, or by the destruction of which he will suffer a loss." [citations omitted] Because, however, a usurious mortgage is void, and the mortgagee, therefore, has no right to collect principal or interest, no loss will occur if the property is destroyed.[407]

However, another court rejected the insurer's attempt to assert the usurious nature of the insured loan as a defense to loss, when the borrower had not raised usury directly.[408] However, that decision rested largely on the finding that the debt was not usurious because the insured had purchased the note at a discount.

---

[403] See Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Title Guarantee Co., 520 F.2d 1170 (D.C. Cir. 1975) below this section.

[404] Title & Trust Co. of Fla. v. Parker, 468 So.2d 520 (Fla.App. 1985).

[405] 468 So.2d at 524.

[406] Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., 992 F.2d 1231 (1st Cir. 1993). The case is further discussed at §11.4.4, concerning the no loss exclusion. The penalty for usury varies from state to state. In Focus, the First Circuit found that Rhode Island law renders usury a complete bar to the debt. In other states, the penalty for usury is that the interest, or the usurious portion of it, is not collectible.

[407] Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., 992 F.2d 1231, 1242 (1st Cir. 1993).

[408] Moe v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 21 Cal.App.3d 289, 98 Cal.Rptr. 547 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1971).

Recent versions of the ALTA loan policy also exclude defects or invalidity in the insured mortgage due to violations of consumer credit protection or truth in lending laws.[409] Thus, if the mortgage is void because the insured failed to comply with such laws, the policy does not indemnify the insured against loss.

11.8 Creditors' Rights

The policy excludes certain matters that arise by the assertion of rights in the insured property by creditors of the current or former owner. The creditors' rights exclusion has attracted great attention from scholars.[410] There are four main concerns covered by the exclusion. They are:

1. That the insured interest is voidable as a preference (Section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code);

2. That the deed or mortgage is voidable as a fraudulent conveyance (Code Section 548);

3. That the insured mortgage is subordinate to other lien claims because the insured lender engaged in inequitable conduct (Code Section 510); and

4. That the conveyance of the property was a fraud on creditors and should be set aside or recharacterized as a mortgage.

---

[409] In Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Title Guarantee Co., 520 F.2d 1170 (D.C. Cir. 1975), it appears that the policy did not contain this exclusion. The insurer argued that an insured should not receive insurance against violation of such consumer protection laws. The court held that the insurer was not entitled to void the policies, because the insured did not knowingly violate the law. The specific exclusion would presumably lead to the opposite result. In Southern Title Ins. Co. v. Crow, 278 So.2d 294 (Fla.App. 1973), cert den. 284 So.2d 221 (Fla. 1973), the court appeared to accept the premise that there would be no coverage when the mortgage was voided by the borrower due to a TILA violation, but held that the insurer had not established that the assignee insureds had knowledge of the violation when they bought the loan, and thus the insurer was barred from raising the defense. See §7.10 for a discussion of assertion of policy defenses against loan assignees.

[410] The numerous specific real estate transactions in which creditors' rights claims might surface, and the title insurer's underwriting of those transactions, are thoroughly analyzed in Bonita, An Elizabethan Legacy: Creditors' Rights and Title Insurance, Probate & Property, May/June 1998, p. 38. See Murray, Creditors' Rights Issues in Loan Transactions and Recharacterization in Bankruptcy Proceedings: Equitable Subordination, both in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448 1999, p. 739; Murray, Guaranties and Fraudulent Transfers, in Title Insurance 2000: Critical Issues Facing the Buyer, Seller and Lender, Practicing Law Institute N-462 2000, p. 1009. See, for example, Rifkin, Title Insurance and Creditors' Rights; Keller, The Creditors' Rights Exclusion; Hosack, The Creditors' Rights Exclusion; Levinson, Creditors' Rights and Wrongs; and Pedowitz, The Creditors' Rights Exclusion: Belt and Suspenders?, all in Current Developments In Title Insurance 1992, Practicing Law Institute N-384 1992; Williams, Creditors' Rights Exclusion in Title Policies, 6 Probate & Property 8 (1992); Rifkin, Title Insurance and Creditors' Rights; Pedowitz, Creditors' and Debtors' Rights and Title Insurance, both in A.B.A. Real Property & Trust Law Section, Attorney's Role in Title Insurance (1990); and Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 6.13, pp. 6-84 to 6-101.

A creditors' rights exclusion was added to the ALTA policies in 1990. It was amended in 1992 when ALTA adopted a form of exclusion promulgated by the New York State Land Title Association. The 1992 owner's policy version of the exclusion reads as follows:

> 4. Any claim, which arises out of the transaction vesting in the Insured the estate or interest insured by this policy, by reason of the operation of federal bankruptcy, state insolvency, or similar creditors' rights laws, that is based on:
>
> (a) the transaction creating the estate or interest insured by this policy being deemed a fraudulent conveyance or fraudulent transfer; or
>
> (b) the transaction creating the estate or interest insured by this policy being deemed a preferential transfer except where the preferential transfer results from the failure:
>
> (i) to timely record the instrument of transfer; or
>
> (ii) of such recordation to impart notice to a purchaser for value or a judgment or lien creditor.

The 1992 ALTA Loan Policy included a modified (a) which read "the transaction creating the interest of the insured mortgagee being deemed a fraudulent conveyance or fraudulent transfer," and added a provision, inserted as (b), for "the subordination of the insured mortgagee as a result of the application of the doctrine of equitable subordination." Although earlier versions of the ALTA Homeowner's Policy had no creditors' rights exclusion, it appears as Exclusion 7 of the 2010 version of the policy. See a discussion of that policy's covered risks at §9.14.2, and its exclusions at §11.10.

The 2006 policies moved the exceptions to the exclusion to the Covered Risks. The coverage is found at Covered Risk 9 of the owner's policy and Covered Risk 13 on the loan policy. ALTA maintains that this coverage was implicit in the 1992 policy forms. The coverage protects against avoidance of the insured instrument caused by the overturning of a prior conveyance as a fraudulent transfer or preference.[411] It also protects against avoidance of the insured instrument as a preference, but only if due to untimely recording or its failure "to impart notice of its existence to a purchaser for value or to a judgment or lien creditor." Creditors' rights appear as Exclusion 4 in the 2006 owner's policy and Exclusion 6 in the loan policy. The exclusions now state that they do not limit the protections afforded by the covered risks. The primary change in the 2006 policy exclusions is that [411] In Concept Dorssers v. Pacific Northwest Title Ins. Co., Inc., 2010 WL 1141462 (W.D.Wash.) (unpublished), the court found that the prior-conveyance coverage was not invoked when the insured transfer also was attacked as a fraud on creditors, and thus the matter was excluded. Thus, the policy was found not to obligate the insurer to defend an insured deed of trust against a bankruptcy trustee's adversary proceeding claiming that prior transfers were in fraud of creditors, because the trustee also asserted that the insured deed of trust was a fraud on creditors and not for value. The court found that the trustee would be unable to attack the insured deed of trust unless it, too, was a fraud on creditors. The allegations against the insured's interest triggered Exclusion 6 of the loan policy, and negated any duty to defend or indemnify.

the loan policy creditors' rights exclusion is modified to drop subordination of the insured mortgage, which was a reference to Section 510 of the Bankruptcy Code. The official commentary says that ALTA believes this is not a narrowing of the exclusion, because coverage for such a subordination claim is already negated by Exclusion 3.

The creditors' rights exclusion applies to claims by a bankruptcy trustee seeking to avoid a transfer as a fraud on creditors or as a preferential transfer.[412] The creditors' rights exclusion also applies to non-bankruptcy disputes in which a transfer is attacked as being a fraud on creditors, including claims based on a state fraudulent transfer act.[413]

The creditors' rights exclusion exists because bankruptcy and state laws permit title to be divested, or a mortgage rendered void, because the transaction harmed creditors. The conveyance or mortgage is not defective; rather, the underlying transaction causes title to fail. The title insurer, however, is not in the business of analyzing borrowers' financial condition. It is not privy to all of the terms of the transaction. Thus, as one commentator put it,

> Most in the industry consider the 1992 amended ALTA creditors' rights exclusion to be a fair compromise among the concerns of title insurers, lenders, and purchasers. The amendment acknowledges that certain risks related to recording and notice may be within the title company's control and entitled to insurance coverage, but prevents the title insurer from being liable for financial risks in the transaction and rightful claims of the transferor's creditors that could not have been uncovered via a title examination. Title insurance was never intended to insure the solvency of the insured's transferor or the evenhandedness of the mortgagee's conduct. Neither was title insurance intended to guarantee that transferors will pay their creditors and not attempt to convey assets beyond their reach. Such risks are simply beyond title [412] In Rechtzigel Trust v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York, 748 N.W.2d 312 (Minn.App. 2008), a trustee for a bankrupt exchange intermediary brought a preference action to claim the proceeds of sale delivered by the intermediary to the seller. The commitment had said a 1987 Residential policy would be issued, but the insurer actually issued a 1992 form policy. The court reported that, because the parties "agree that the 1992 policy form does not afford coverage for Rechtzigel's claims beyond the 1987 policy, we further conclude there is no coverage under the 1992 policy." The court also dismissed the claim premised on the promised Residential policy, which does not contain a creditors' rights exclusion, on the alternate ground that the trustee did not attack title and no coverage of that policy was triggered by the preference action. In Hanks v. First American Title Ins. Co., ___ S.E.3d ___, 2018 WL 2230674 (Tenn.App.) (not yet released for publication), the creditors' rights exclusion was found to bar coverage for a bankruptcy trustee's claims of fraudulent conveyance and preferential transfer, but not the claim that the property sale was a post-petition transfer that violated the automatic stay.

[413] In Banner Bank v. First American Title Ins. Co., 916 F.3d 1323 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2019), a lender was sued by a receiver appointed by the SEC, who attacked the insured mortgage as being part of a Ponzi scheme that defrauded investors. The receiver's claim was based on Utah's Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. The court held that the receiver's allegations fell under the creditors' rights exclusion. The court said: "The most natural reading of the Receiver's complaint is one to avoid Mr. Jacobson's transfer of the deeds of trust as a fraudulent conveyance. The action is clearly taken pursuant to the UVTA—a creditors' rights law—and the allegations in the complaint are that Mr. Jacobson was operating a wide-scale Ponzi scheme, and the transfer of the deeds was in furtherance of it and to defraud his creditors. The Receiver's action falls squarely within the policy’s exception for lawsuits alleging a fraudulent transfer or conveyance."

insurance companies' expertise.[414]

The addition of the exclusion in 1990 is not evidence that the earlier policy forms were either vague or broader in coverage. A case involving the post-policy exclusion is analogous. In that case, the court ruled:

> Defendant offers "expert" opinions as to whether this language contemplated a post-policy preference action. First of all, these experts were not involved in the formation of this contract… . Second, just because Chicago Title may have inserted even more specific language in other policies does not mean that the language in this contract actually contemplated coverage of the risk of a preference action voiding the bank's secured interest. After all, no court has ever actually construed this provision against Chicago Title.[415]

Most creditors' rights claims would also be removed from coverage under exclusions that existed before the creditors' rights exclusion was added to the policy. Preference and recharacterization claims have been found excluded under Exclusions 3(a) (see §11.2.7), 3(b) (see §11.3.4) and 3(d) (post-policy) (see §11.5).In addition, policies issued before 1990 often contained endorsements or exceptions in Schedule B removing coverage as to creditors' rights issues, when the specific transaction suggested a creditors' rights problem. In the 1939 case of First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., an adversary proceeding to declare a mortgage a preference was held not to be a matter "created" or "suffered" by the insured.[416] The insured admitted that the mortgage secured antecedent debt, but denied that it had intended to take a preference.[417] The key fact was that the insurer was aware that the mortgage secured antecedent debt; from this, the court found that the insurer, not the lender, had assumed the risk of a preference claim. In a similar case involving antecedent debt, the insured did not disclose this fact to the insurer. The insurer argued that it would not have insured the mortgage if it had known that fact, which proposition the court accepted as reasonable.[418]

---

[414] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, § 6.13, p. 6-90. In later editions of that book, the author has excised the last three sentences of the quoted passage.

[415] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank, 821 F.Supp. 1492, 1495 (N.D. Ga. 1993).

[416] 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703 (Sup. Ct. 1939).

[417] The court stated: "The bank took the mortgage but it did not create the defect. That was created by operation of law. Such a clause does not protect the defendant from the very act insured against, which was the taking of the mortgage. ... The Federal Court did not adjudge that there was any actual intent on the part of the bank to obtain a preference. Nor does the evidence justify such a finding here. The mortgage could constitute a preference without such an actual intent on the part either of the mortgagors or the mortgagee." 12 N.Y.S.2d at 709.

[418] Bank of San Diego v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 283 Cal.Rptr. 1 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1991) (unpublished), previously published at 231 Cal.App.3d 1265 and withdrawn from publication. See discussion of this case and others at §11.3.4 concerning concealment of material risk as voiding coverage under Exclusion 3(b). See also §11.5, discussing Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank, 821 F.Supp. 1492 (N.D.Ga. 1993), in which the settlement of a

In two cases, claims of preference were found to be excluded from coverage as post-policy matters.[419] One court found a duty to defend the insured, when the debtor filed bankruptcy three days before title passed. The post-policy exclusion was apparently not raised, although Exclusion 3(b) was argued and rejected. The trial court had:

> dismissed the complaint on the ground that the trustee's action did not attack plaintiff's title and that, even if it did, the defendant would not be liable under the policy because the plaintiff had failed to inform defendant of the bankrupt's serious financial difficulties, of which plaintiff had actual or constructive knowledge. Not being liable to pay damages, the defendant was held not obligated to defend the plaintiff against the trustee's action. This was error.
>
> By alleging that the transfer of the realty to plaintiff was fraudulent and null and void, the trustee's complaint attacked the plaintiff's title; the defendant was therefore under a duty to defend the plaintiff against the trustee's action.[420]

The court thus apparently relied on the axiom that the duty to defend is broader than the duty to pay, in that the duty to defend includes all matters that attack title, even those which are subject to valid policy defenses.

A different kind of creditors' rights issue is the person seeking to recharacterize a deed that is absolute on its face as a mortgage, on the premise that the deed was given to defeat claims of judgment or other creditors. The creditors' rights exclusion specifically negates coverage for such a claim. However, Exclusion 3(a) has also been found to apply to negate coverage as to an action to recharacterize a deed as a mortgage, when the action is brought outside of the context of bankruptcy.[421] The leading case involving recharacterization of an interest in bankruptcy is Bidart v. American Title Ins. Co.[422] That court found that an action to recharacterize the insured's title interest was premised on allegations about the insured's intent that triggered Exclusion 3(a). Because the grantee-mortgagor gave a secret repurchase option back to the seller when the property was conveyed to the insured, the court found no duty to defend the suit to rescind the conveyance or have the deed declared an equitable mortgage.[423] The court reasoned that "a claim that a deed absolute on its face is to operate as a mortgage is a claim that the parties intended to create the mortgage."[424] preference claim was found excluded as being post-policy, even though the transfer itself was before the policy date.

---

[419] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens & Southern Nat'l Bank, 821 F.Supp. 1492 (N.D. Ga. 1993); Capital Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 861 S.W.2d 84 (Tex.App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1993).

[420] National Heat & Power Corp. v. City Title Ins. Co., 57 App.Div.2d 611, 394 N.Y.S.2d 29 (1977).

[421] Spurgeon v. Coan & Elliott, 180 S.W.3d 593 (Tex.App. -Eastland 2005); Marr v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 307 Fed.Appx. 952, 2009 WL 211809 (6th Cir. (Ky.)) (unpublished).

[422] 734 P.2d 732 (Nev. 1987).

[423] Bidart v. American Title Ins. Co., 734 P.2d 732 (Nev. 1987).

[424] 734 P.2d 732, 734. See also Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Alaska Fed. Savings and Loan Ass'n, 833 F.2d 775 (9th

Bidart was followed in Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. FFCA/IIP 1988 Property Co.,[425] in which an insurer was found to have no duty to defend its insured when the bankruptcy adversary complaint alleged that the insured sale-leaseback was actually a mortgage. The FFCA court held:

> [T]he defendants correctly contend that Mr. Raghavan's attempt to recharacterize the transaction as creating a security interest was without merit and would not have succeeded. This does not resolve the issue, however, because "[i]t is the nature of the claim and not its merits that determines the duty to defend." [citation omitted] Thus, "[t]he insurance company can properly refuse to defend when the underlying factual basis of the complaint, even [if] proved true, would not result in liability under the insurance policy." [citations omitted]
>
> * * * *
>
> By its very nature, Mr. Raghavan's recharacterization claim alleged that the defendants intended to create a security interest when transacting with Mr. Raghavan. Were this allegation true, Exclusion 3(a) would exclude such a "defect" in title as one "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to" by the defendants. It is of absolutely no relevance that the defendants did not so intend, for Ticor's duty to defend was based upon the nature of Mr. Raghavan's claim, and not upon its merits. [citation omitted] Ticor has no duty to defend against a claim that, if successful, had no possibility of invoking coverage under the title insurance policy.[426]

However, Bidart was found not applicable in Allison v. Ticor Title Ins. Co.[427] In that case, a bankruptcy trustee threatened to have condominium unit owners' interests declared to be "merely either equity investors in the [condominium] and/or mortgage holders on said equity investment." The Seventh Circuit ruled that this claim did not render title defective. However, the adversary proceeding was never tried, and the allegations underlying the trustee's apparent recharacterization claim never clearly established. Therefore, the insurer could not convince the court that the trustee's suit was based on intentional conduct by the insureds permitting a recharacterization of their interests. The court found a duty to defend. The Allison result was primarily due to the lack of specificity in the trustee's pleadings.

Cir. 1987).

[425] 898 F.Supp. 633 (N.D.Ind. 1995).

[426] 898 F.Supp. at 640-641.

[427] 907 F.2d 645 (7th Cir. (Wis.) 1990); 979 F.2d 1187 (7th Cir. 1992). The Allison case is further discussed in Homburger, Federal Securities Laws and Ownership of Nontraditional Real Property, 27 Real Property, Probate and Trust Journal 523 (Fall 1992). That article dwells particularly on the court's rejection of the claim in Allison that title to the condominium units was defective because such units could be considered investment contracts rather than interests in real estate.

11.9 Violation Of Doing Business Laws

The loan policy excludes loss caused by the lender's inability to enforce the mortgage because the lender is not qualified to do business in the state.[428] "Doing business" laws have been characterized as those laws which "regulate corporations by prescribing the terms and conditions upon which corporations will be permitted to do business in the state.[429] If a lender is not qualified to do business in a state, one common penalty is that it is denied access to the state courts, which in turn prevents it from enforcing a mortgage through foreclosure. In some states, a loan transaction by an unqualified or unlicensed lender is completely prohibited. No matter what the penalty, the insured's legal status in the jurisdiction is a matter exclusively within the insured's control—hence the exclusion.

When the law in question did not state that a lender's failure to qualify made its mortgages unenforceable, the insured argued that the exclusion did not apply. The court rejected the theory, saying:

> This argument is ultimately self defeating because the premise relied on by American to avoid application of the exclusion, i.e., that Section 11-43-101 does not void liens, necessarily admits there is no injury or harm for which the policies provide coverage.[430]

Thus, whenever the borrower asserts as a defense to a foreclosure that the insured has not complied with the doing business laws, the claim is excluded by the ALTA loan policy.

11.10 Homeowner's Policy Exclusions

The Exclusions in the Homeowner's policy are very similar to those found in other ALTA policies. Certain coverages provide limited assurances about subjects otherwise excluded. For example, Exclusion 1, for governmental regulation, "does not limit the coverage described in Covered Risk 14, 15, 16, 17 or 24." Similarly, the post-policy exclusion, 4(d), does not limit Covered Risks 7, 8.d, 22, 23, 24 or 25. Exclusion 2 is very important and different from other policies. It excludes coverage for the failure of the existing structures or any part of them to be constructed in accordance with applicable building codes. Although this exclusion does not limit the coverage of Covered Risks 14 and 15, the exclusion makes clear that the policy does not protect the insured from building code violations. Also, the definition of Policy Date is modified so that it is the later of either the date shown on Schedule A or "the date and time the instrument [by which the owner took title] is recorded."[431] The statement that the policy does not insure title to land outside [428] Exclusion 4 of the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy states that the insurer will not indemnify the insured against "[u]nenforceability of the lien of the Insured Mortgage because of the inability or failure of an Insured to comply with applicable doing-business laws of the state where the Land is situated." Earlier versions of the standard ALTA policy have nearly identical exclusions.

---

[429] Title Ins. Co. of Minn. v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 866 F.2d 1284 (10th Cir. (Colo.) 1989).

[430] 866 F.2d at 1285.

[431] Mr. Gosdin says this definition "provides 'gap coverage.'" This statement deserves explanation. The "gap" is not Schedule A, or any rights in adjacent streets or waterways, found in the definition of "Land" in previous policies, has quite logically been moved to Exclusion 6. That exclusion also "does not limit" the coverage of Covered Risks 11 or 18. Although earlier versions of the policy had no creditors' rights exclusion, it appears as Exclusion 7 of the 2010 version of the policy. The Homeowner's policy's covered risks are discussed at §9.14.2.

---

the same one excepted in the title insurance commitment, but the one illustrated by the Alford decision, which is between delivery of the deed and its recording. The New Homeowners Policy of Title Insurance, Virginia Land Title Association Examiner, Spring, 1999, p. 15.

12 Exceptions

Some of the exclusions in a title insurance policy appear in Schedule B. The policy preamble states that the covered risks are granted subject to the exceptions in Schedule B of the policy. These exclusions are labeled in title insurance policies as exceptions from coverage, rather than as exclusions, but they are exclusions nonetheless. Policy exceptions almost invariably describe matters that are within the scope of the covered risks but that are removed from coverage.

There are two types of exceptions. The first are those termed "standard" or "general" exceptions (also occasionally known as "ALTA" exceptions, because the American Land Title Association promulgated wording for such standard exceptions some years ago). Such exceptions remove coverage for classes of risk that are not specific to any one recorded instrument or to the parcel. In this treatise, the term "standard" is used for this class of exceptions.

The subjects of the standard exceptions are: parties in possession (see §12.2), survey matters (see §12.3), rights and interests that are visible on inspection (see §12.3), easements that do not appear in the public records (see §12.4), construction or mechanic's liens (see §12.5 and Chapter 10) and real estate taxes (see §12.6).

The second type of exception is for a title matter that pertains specifically to the insured parcel. These are known in the industry as "special" exceptions. Most commonly, a special exception negates coverage for the effect on title of a recorded instrument. Special exceptions are discussed at §12.7.

12.1 Standard Exceptions--Nature And Purpose

FORM 75, Appendix A
Off record risks excepted by standard exceptions

The number and wording of the standard exceptions varies somewhat from state to state and company to company. Some consistency is lent by the fact that the American Land Title Association has promulgated "suggested" wording for the standard exceptions. This treatise will refer to the ALTA-promulgated language except as noted.

The primary purpose of the standard exceptions is to remove from coverage various matters that affect title but that cannot be discovered in a search of those public records that impart notice of rights in real estate. This rationale has been repeatedly endorsed by the courts as being fair and enforceable. One court said:

> The exceptions set forth in Schedule B refer generally to situations which may affect the title but which would not be reflected by an examination of the public records. A title insurance company has no other feasible method of protecting itself from these circumstances… .[1]

Another court said that, "[a]bsent a specific undertaking to that effect, [the policy] does not presume to insure against infirmities not of record."[2] Thus, a policy containing the standard exceptions is sometimes termed a record title policy. See §9.12.1 for a discussion of the extent to which the policy insures off-record matters.

---

[1] McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852, 855 (Fla.App. 1976). Similarly, in Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 19 Cal.4th 26, 77 Cal.Rptr.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513 (Cal. 1998), the court said: "[a] title insurer issues title insurance on the basis of, and in reliance on, the quality of its own investigation into instruments which, when recorded, impart constructive notice. Generally those records are public records concerning the status of the title. Potential risks not disclosed in public records are generally excluded from coverage." See also Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); and Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893 (1984).

[2] Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805, 806 (Fla.App. 1980).

12.2 Parties In Possession

FORM 46, Appendix A
Parties in possession generally

The ALTA-suggested wording of the parties in possession exception is as follows: "[r]ights or claims of parties in possession not shown by the public records." The parties in possession exception has been declared to be unambiguous.[3] The legitimate purpose of the parties in possession exception was well-explained in Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co.:

> The rationale for including an actual possession exclusion in a title insurance policy stems from the fact that possession of the land is notice of an interest in it. Blackburn v. Venice Inlet Co., Fla.1948, 38 So.2d 43. When a person, who does not appear in the chain of title, is found in possession of property it may indicate, for example, that he is making claim to the property by adverse possession, or that he is claiming under an unrecorded deed. A title examiner, however, seldom visits the land the title to which he is concerned with. J. McBrayer, Examination of Florida Titles Section 275 (1958). Thus, both to protect themselves and to put their client on notice of this state of affairs, title examiners and title insurance companies generally exclude from their title opinions and policies claims of parties in actual possession of the land insured.[4]

The parties in possession exception applies to rights of tenants and holders of easements or servitudes. Adverse possession claims normally also fall under this exception, although some cases have found that other exceptions also negate coverage for adverse possession. Some courts have held that the parties in possession exception does not apply to rights of possession that are shown in the

---

[3] In Fischer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 388 S.W.3d 181 (Mo.App. W.D. 2012), the court provided an erudite discussion of the exception. The court said that "[t]he plain and ordinary meaning of the parties in possession exception for coverage is: The title insurance policy does not insure against rights or claimed rights of parties asserting possession to property via means outside of any public record denominating such possessory interest in the property." Although "possession" is not defined in the policy, the Fischer court said that it had found no case holding the exception to be ambiguous. Rather, it said, "there are numerous cases across the country and treatises that conclude the opposite." It cited Zimmerman v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 28 S.W.3d 584, 586 (Tex.App.1999) (concluding that the parties in possession exception is "a standard exception from coverage specifically relating to claims such as adverse possession"); Boyadjiev v. Transnation Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 3556156 (Mich.App. 2005) (unpublished) (parties in possession exception was unambiguous and designed to except from coverage unrecorded property possessory claims such as adverse possession); Cheverly Terrace Partnership v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 100 Md.App. 606, 642 A.2d 285 (Md.App. 1994) (parties in possession exception unambiguously excepted unrecorded property possessory claims such as adverse possession, negating duty to defend insured); Panciocco v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 147 N.H. 610, 794 A.2d 810 (2002); and Smith v. McCarthy, 195 S.W.3d 301 (Tex.App.-Fort Worth 2006).

[4] 216 So.2d 255, 257 (Fla.App. 1968).

public records.[5] These three subjects will be discussed in turn.

12.2.1 Rights Under Leases And Unrecorded Instruments

FORM 48, Appendix A
Tenant in possession

The parties in possession exception removes coverage as to tenants in the property, whose rights of possession would be apparent on inspection but are not disclosed by recorded instruments.[6] As one court stated it:

> …coverage will not be extended for conditions that are physically observable by an inspection of the premises. An example would be a tenant in obvious possession of the real property.[7]

Most jurisdictions say that a purchaser of land is bound by the knowledge he or she would glean by an inspection of the property and an inquiry of parties in possession.[8] The possession exception thus merely confirms that a purchaser does not shift or delegate its inquiry notice or inspection duty to the title insurer, unless the policy contains an affirmative assurance to the

---

[5] Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 216 So.2d 255 (Fla.App. 1968); Pruett v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 271 So.2d 920 (Miss. 1973); Parker v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 429 So.2d 1267 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 1983); and Nautilus, Inc. v Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 13 Wash App 345, 534 P.2d 1388 (1975).

[6] In Alabama Title & Trust Co. v. Millsap, 71 F.2d 518 (5th Cir. 1934), a tenant, Mays, claimed to hold possession for the owner, who retained a right to redeem the property from foreclosure. The property was sold by the lender to Millsap. The redemption holder sued to redeem and Millsap, the insured, was found not to be a bona fide purchaser without notice because of the inquiry notice from the tenant. The possession exception was found to negate coverage as to the right of redemption. In 236 West 40th Street Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 54 A.D.3d 632, 864 N.Y.S.2d 416 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2008), an exception for "rights of tenants or persons in possession" was held to remove coverage as to the rights of a tenant under an unrecorded lease with a right of first refusal. In Carefree Villages, Inc. v Keating Properties, Inc., 489 So.2d 99, 11 FLW 1095 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1986), policy coverage was not in issue. Rather, the buyer and seller disagreed about whether or not the possession exception was a "permitted" title exception. The court stated: "[r]ights of parties in actual possession of land are properly excepted from the coverage of title insurance policies where the circumstances reflecting possession should be apparent to one who visits and inspects the property." In Cavender Enterprise Leasing Family, LLC v. First States Investors 4200, LLC, 2013 WL 495650 (W.D.La.) (unpublished), the exception plus the post-policy exclusion were found to negate coverage for a right of first refusal recorded after the policy date.

[7] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, Inc., 544 So.2d 1070, 1072 (Fla.App. 1989).

[8] See, for example, Kroitzsch v. Steele, 768 So.2d 514, 25 Fla.L. Weekly D2145 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 2000), in which the purchasers drove by the property, confirmed that it was occupied, but failed to ask the occupant directly about his rights in the property. The occupant later claimed to be the owner. The purchasers' actual knowledge of the possession plus their failure to inquire precluded bona fide purchaser status. The title insurance policy contained a possession exception, and the seller signed a possession affidavit labeling the occupant a tenant. The court found that the buyers had no right to rely on the affidavit's characterization of the adverse party as a tenant only.

contrary. However, the exception may not negate coverage as to possessory rights that are not visible on inspection of the property, such as a buried pipe.[9] As one court explained:

> Did the parties intend to include buried pipe lines within the actual possession exclusion? We think not. It is well settled that in order for actual possession to place those acquiring title to the subject property on inquiry, such possession must be open, visible, and exclusive. [citations omitted] In the present case the water pipe line was buried beneath the ground and there were no surface indications of its existence. The possession was not, therefore, "visible." Consequently there was no "actual possession," within the legal meaning of that term as used in the appellant's contract insuring Mosely's title.[10]

The exception may or may not apply when the possessor also has rights that may be found in the public records. Thus, in Herbil Holding Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co.,[11] the parties in possession exception was held not to apply when the possessor was also the record titleholder. In Herbil, the titleholder was not named in a mortgage foreclosure. The insured purchased from the foreclosing lender. After closing, the purchaser started an action to evict the titleholder, and the titleholder overturned the foreclosure and the buyer's title because he did not receive notice of the action. The court held that the possession exception did not negate coverage, saying:

> We hold that a defect arising from the rights of a person whose interest appears in the chain of title must be covered unless specifically excepted, irrespective of whether notice of that interest to the insured may be implied through open possession at the time the policy was issued. Because there was no specific exception for Robert Barbieri's interest, the more general exception for a "person in possession" is no bar to recovery.[12]

The specific language of the possession exception in the policy at issue must be compared to the asserted right in order to determine if the exception negates coverage for the claimed interest in the property.[13] In Fekishazy v. Thomson,[14] there was an unrecorded five-year lease. The purchase

---

[9] Shaver v. National Title and Abstract Co., 361 S.W.2d 867 (Tex. 1962); San Jacinto Title Guaranty Co. v. Lemmon, 417 S.W.2d 429 (Tex.App. 1967); Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Plemons, 554 S.W.2d 734 (Tex.App. 1977) (drainage channels not visible); Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 38 Colo.App. 385, 560 P.2d 839 (1976) (utility easement); Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 216 So.2d 255 (Fla.App. 1968) (underground pipeline).

[10] Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 216 So.2d 255, 257 (Fla.App. 1968).

[11] 183 A.D.2d 219, 590 N.Y.S.2d 512 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1992).

[12] 590 N.Y.S.2d at 517.

[13] See Doyle v. Siddo, 54 A.D.3d 988, 865 N.Y.S.2d 126, 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2008), in which the court ruled that an action seeking to impose a constructive trust on the insured property was "clearly and unambiguously contracted listed the possessory right as being a month-to-month tenancy, and the policy exception also recited a month-to-month tenancy right. The appellate court, relying on Herbil, found that the narrow possession exception in the policy did not adequately negate coverage for the tenant's actual rights under the five-year written lease. In Morgan v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[15] the adverse party was a tenant who also held a contract to purchase the condominium unit. The policy made exception for claims "which are not shown by the public records but which could be ascertained by an inspection of the land or by making inquiry of persons in possession thereof." The court construed this exception narrowly, so that it did not negate coverage for the possessor's claim of ownership.

12.2.2 Trespassers

FORM 49, Appendix A
Trespasser

The policy protects against ownership rights that affect the insured's title to the insured land. It does not insure against possession by a person who has no legal right, such as a trespasser, since such a person does not claim an ownership right or possessory interest in the property. The parties in possession exception merely restates the fact that "loss" caused by a party having no right to possess the property is outside the ambit of the policy. Even when the exception is removed from the policy, no duty to indemnify exists for trespass. The subject of the chain of title, public records, and their relation to policy coverage is discussed at §9.12.

For example, in Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Woods,[16] a company cut timber on the insured land. The logger had a deed, but the grantor of that deed held no timber rights on the property, which made the logger a trespasser. The court said the policy did not protect the insured against the taking of the timber.[17] The court buttressed its conclusion by finding that the insured had not suffered a loss caused by the spurious timber deed, because that deed did not create a defect in the insured's title.[18] excepted from coverage" by the parties in possession exception.

---

[14] 612 N.Y.S.2d 276 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 1994).

[15] 65 Fed.Appx. 184, 2003 WL 21212656 (9th Cir. (Hawai'i) 2003) (unpublished).

[16] 449 S.W.2d 773 (Tex. 1970).

[17] "The policy does not, either expressly or by implication, purport to insure against damage done to the land by a trespasser under the circumstances of this case." 449 S.W.2d at 775.

[18] "A party is not charged with constructive notice of a recorded instrument which is not in his chain of title. The conveyance from Darnell Lumber Company to Gross & Janes is not connected in any way with the title under which plaintiff claims, because the deed from Massey to Darnell is not on record. Plaintiff is not charged with constructive knowledge of either instrument. [citations omitted] Having purchased and paid value for the land without actual or constructive knowledge of either conveyance, plaintiff took the property free and clear of any rights or claims that Gross & Janes might otherwise have been entitled to assert. The two timber deeds did not, therefore, prevent plaintiff's having "good and indefeasible title" as guaranteed by his title insurance policy." Id. at 774.

The lack of coverage concerning trespass depends on the legal status of the possessor. A person who claims to hold a right in the property may invoke coverage, unless and until a court determines that the person is in fact a trespasser.

12.2.3 Possession Exception And Claims Based On Recorded Instruments

The ALTA-promulgated possession exception is for rights of parties in possession "not shown by the public records." The public record qualifier in the exception establishes the tension between record notice, which the insurer is deemed responsible for discovering, and notice by inspection, which is the purchaser-insured's burden. Most courts have held that the possession exception does not negate coverage for rights based on an instrument or grant found in the public records, particularly a right that is not purely possessory in nature.[19] However, the exception is enforced when the claimed right is based primarily on possession and not a recorded instrument.[20]

12.2.4 Adverse Possession And Prescriptive Easements

FORM 47, Appendix A
Adverse possession or prescriptive easement claim

---

[19] Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953) (exception did not apply to recorded easement); Fohn v. Title Ins. Corp. of St. Louis, 529 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1975) (exception did not apply to recorded deed for part of parcel); Laabs v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 72 Wis.2d 503, 241 N.W.2d 434 (1976) (recorded deed overlap); Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Sterling, 772 S.W. 2d 242 (Tex.App. 1989); 822 S.W.2d 1 (Tex. 1991) (recorded deed to possessor for part of insured parcel); Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 38 Colo.App. 385, 560 P.2d 839 (1976) (utility easement); McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852 (Fla.App. 1976) (utility easement); Pruett v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 271 So.2d 920 (Miss. 1973) (drainage ditch); Guaranty Title & Trust Corp. v. Virginia-Carolina Tie & Wood Co., 152 Va. 698, 148 S.E. 815 (1929) (part of insured parcel patented to another); Parker v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 429 So.2d 1267 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 1983) (recorded but forged deed). Contra: Halvorson v. National Title and Abstract Co., 391 S.W.2d 112 (Tex.App. 1965) (recorded easement excepted by possession exception). In Stewart Title v. Sterling, 772 S.W. 2d 242 (Tex.App. 1989), the court found that, although the parties in possession exception contained no exception for recorded rights, it nevertheless was so limited. That ruling was based on the Texas state-promulgated waiver of inspection form, which itself refers to unrecorded matters only. The court stated: "Sterling was required to sign a "Waiver of Inspection" at the closing which stated that Stewart Title's policy would except from coverage the rights of parties in possession, "the existence of which does not appear of record." … The Owner's Policy issued to Sterling by Stewart Title [excepted] 4. Rights of parties in possession. Significantly, the qualifying language, 'the existence of which does not appear of record,' which was included in the waiver signed by Sterling, was omitted from the policy issued to him." Also see Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Abstract Associates, Inc., d. 4/4/2000, No. 821 (Ct.Sp.App. Md.) (unpublished), in which the policy contained the simple exception "Fences." The insurer paid the claim when it turned out that the fence enclosed property owned in fee by another, but the agency that did the title search missed the deed. The insurer sued the agent, and the agent defended by claiming that the insurer could have denied the claim based on record ownership under the exception for "Fences." The appeals court did not directly decide the issue, but sent the case back for trial after noting several decisions that said that "a non-specific general exception would [not] exclude an undiscovered recorded ownership interest."

[20] In Polito v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 12 Ill.App. 2d 57, 138 N.E.2d 710 (1956), the possession exception negated coverage for the rights of an adverse possessor who had been in continuous possession, despite the fact that his possession was evidenced in the public records through a lawsuit that had been dismissed more than two decades before the policy was issued.

Most decisions have held that a claim involving adverse possession, prescriptive easement rights or a boundary by acquiescence or agreement falls under the parties in possession exception.[21] However, some claims of adverse possession are not removed from coverage, depending on the nature of the right claimed when compared to the language of the exception.[22] The possession exception negates coverage for even a claim of adverse possession in which the claimed possessor's use of the property is not open and obvious.[23]

---

[21] Cooper v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 73 Or.App. 539, 699 P.2d 1128 (Or.App. 1985); Koenig v. First American Title Ins. Co. of Texas, 209 S.W.3d 870 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.) 2006); Cheverly Terrace Partnership v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 642 A.2d 285, 100 Md.App. 606 (Mo.App. 1993); Frydman v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 68 A.D.3d 622, 891 N.Y.S.2d 381, 2009 N.Y. Slip Op. 09530 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2009) (no duty to defend insured in adverse possession case when policy contained exceptions for "rights of tenants or persons in possession" and "fences ... [that] vary with the record lines" as shown on a 1972 survey report); Fischer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 388 S.W.3d 181 (Mo.App. W.D. 2012) (insurer not required to indemnify or defend insured when sued by neighbor for adverse possession or boundary by acquiescence based on fence line because policy contained parties in possession exception; contains informative discussion of difference between the two doctrines as to policy coverage). In Hansen v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 424437 (D.Or.) (unpublished), the court found that an exception for "facts, rights, interests or claims which are not shown by the public records but which could be ascertained by an inspection of said land or by making inquiry of persons in possession" removed coverage for a claim of adverse possession. The court relied on Cooper v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 73 Or.App. 539, 699 P.2d 1128 (Or.App. 1985). The parties in possession exception was found to exclude an adverse possession claim in Zimmerman v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 1999 WL 394602 (Tex.App.-Austin) (unpublished). The court noted that "[t]he rationale for the exception, at least in part, is that possession of land should put the insured on notice of an adverse interest." Zimmerman was followed in another Texas case involving adverse possession, Smith v. McCarthy, 195 S.W.3d 301 (Tex.App.-Fort Worth 2006, pet. denied), which also relied on the Cheverly decision. In Panciocco v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 794 A.2d 810 (N.H. 2002), the court found an adverse possession claim removed from coverage by the possession exception, noting that the exception exists because the title examiner "seldom visits the land the title to which he is concerned with." Thus, "title examiners and title insurance companies generally exclude from their title opinions and policies claims of parties in actual possession of the land insured.'" One early case, Bothin v. California Title Ins. & Trust Co., 153 Cal. 718, 96 P. 500 (1908), found adverse possession excepted by a possession exception for the "tenure of the present occupants." The court said "It was left to the appellant to determine, by an inspection and examination of the property, whether there was adverse occupancy or not, to determine for himself by actual measurement, survey, or examination of the premises whether he was getting what he contracted to purchase, or whether there was an adverse claim of title of any character by the occupants of the whole or any portion of the premises."

[22] In Place v. St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co., 67 Minn. 126, 69 N.W. 706 (1897), the court said an exception for "tenancy of the present occupants" did not negate coverage for a claim of adverse possession. It construed the phrase "present occupants" to refer to tenants only, not a party claiming fee title adversely to the insured owner.

[23] In Cheverly Terrace Partnership v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 642 A.2d 285, 100 Md.App. 606 (Mo.App. 1993), the insured admitted that the possession exception would bar a duty to indemnify if the party could establish a claim of adverse possession. The insured claimed the insurer had a duty to defend the claim because the party could not prevail, and thus was not a "party in possession." The court disagreed, saying "We disagree with this result-oriented approach. The duty to defend under an insurance policy is not determined by the facts ultimately proven in the underlying suit. Rather, an insurer's duty to defend is based on whether the allegations in the complaint potentially bring the claim within the policy's coverage." The alleged claim was based on possession, not a recorded right, and therefore the exception negated a duty to indemnify or defend. Similarly, in Boyadjiev v. Transnation Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 3556156 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the insured sought to avoid the effect of the exception by arguing that the neighbor was not really in possession. He submitted photographs to the insurer to support his argument. The court found that, "regardless

More than one standard exception may be found to apply to a claim involving adverse possession, prescriptive easement rights or a boundary by acquiescence or agreement. Adverse possession claims have also been found to be removed from coverage by the exceptions for unrecorded easements and survey matters. See §12.2.5 concerning the application of the latter two exceptions to such claims. For cases concerning the application of the survey exception to adverse possession claims, see § 12.3.17.2.

Some courts have held that a possession exception did not negate coverage, when the adverse party claimed both adverse possession and color of title based on a recorded instrument.[24] However, public record of a suit to remove the adverse possessor, which had been dismissed more than two decades before the policy date, did not take the possession claim outside the scope of the possession exception.[25] of whether the exclusion applies to claims of parties actually in possession or claims of parties merely claiming to be in possession, the exclusion applies to any possession that is not of record." However, in Houston Title Guaranty Co. v. Fontenot, 339 S.W. 2d 347 (Tex.App. 1960), the neighbor claimed title to a three-foot strip based on an oral property line agreement. The only physical evidence of the title claim was the encroachment of the neighbor's garage eave and downspout onto the insured property. The court held that the insured could not reasonably have divined the existence of the oral agreement from having seen the encroachment; thus, the matter was not excepted by the possession exception. Note, however, that Fontenot was not about adverse possession but an oral agreement granting an alleged easement or license.

---

[24] In Hansen v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 1605618 (D.Or.) (unpublished), the court held that an exception for "facts, rights, interests or claims which are not shown by the public records but which could be ascertained by an inspection of said land or by making inquiry of persons in possession" would not apply if the adverse possessor also claimed to have color of title based on a recorded instrument. Cooper v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 73 Or.App. 539, 699 P.2d 1128 (Or.App. 1985), held that a possession exception negated coverage for an adverse possession claim, but would not apply if the claim was based on color of title from a recorded instrument. In Nautilus, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co., 534 P.2d 1388 (Wash.App. 1975), the adverse party based its claim on a platted description that overlapped the insured's description, not mere possession, and was thus not excepted. In Horn v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 89 N.M. 709, 557 P.2d 206 (1976), the possession exception did not apply to the rights of a party in possession who also was the record titleholder.

[25] Polito v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 12 Ill.App. 2d 57, 138 N.E.2d 710 (1956).

12.2.5 Matters That Invoke Several Exceptions For Possession, Survey And Unrecorded Easements

Some claims of adverse possession, prescriptive easement, boundary line by agreement and similar rights or doctrines may fall under separate exceptions for parties in possession, survey matters, or easements not of record. When both exceptions are included in the policy, the court may elect to decide policy coverage under either exception.[26] When the policy contains one exception but not the other, the question is whether or not the remaining exception encompasses the issue presented by the claim, and the result can depend on the wording of the exception or the language of an affidavit used by the insurer to remove a different exception.[27]

For cases concerning the application of the survey exception to adverse possession claims, see §12.3.17.2. The exception for easements not of record is discussed at §12.4.

---

[26] In Dickins v. Stiles, 81 Wash.App. 670, 916 P.2d 435 (1996), the policy contained both survey and possession exceptions, and was found not to create a duty to indemnify or defend against a claim of adverse possession. In Fischer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 388 S.W.3d 181 (Mo.App. W.D. 2012), a neighbor claimed some of the insured land either by adverse possession or under the doctrine of boundary line by acquiescence or agreement. The court said, in a scholarly opinion, that "[a]dverse possession is a 'title' claim; boundary by acquiescence is a 'boundary' claim. In the context of 'title' insurance, this is a distinction with a difference." The importance of that difference, the court said, was that a boundary line by agreement claim does not invoke a Covered Risk, while an adverse possession claim does. In any event, the court found no coverage for either claim based on the parties in possession exception. It did not reach the survey exception, which the insurer also asserted. In Hansen v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 1605618 (D.Or.) (unpublished), the policy contained exceptions for "facts, rights, interests or claims which are not shown by the public records but which could be ascertained by an inspection of said land or by making inquiry of persons in possession" and "[d]iscrepancies, conflicts in boundary lines, shortage in area, encroachments or any other facts which a correct survey would disclose." Therefore, it refused to dismiss a claim that the insurer had a duty to defend the adverse possession suit. The insured argued that the allegations in the neighbors' complaint were vague enough that they might have encompassed a claim based on color of title—that is, by a written instrument—and that instrument could have been recorded. The court so ruled despite the fact that the insured had already won the adverse possession lawsuit, and no such allegation had been made or proven.

[27] In Alden v. Schuster, 2008 WL 2039075 (Conn.Super. 2008) (unpublished), for example, insureds argued that the removal of the possession exception granted coverage against an encroachment, despite the fact that the survey exception remained in the policy. The premise for their argument was the language in the possession affidavit, in which the sellers had stated that they had no knowledge of any encroachments, and which said "[this affidavit] may be used under some circumstances to justify the deletion of the survey exception from certain mortgage policies." The court rejected the argument based on the fact that numerous cases have found encroachments to be excepted by the survey exception, and because the court determined that the possession exception is intended to deal with rights of tenants and others who reside in the premises. The court held: "It appears clear that 'rights of persons in possession other than the insured' refers to the rights of tenants. As there were no tenants of Lot 8, CATIC removed the exception. By its own terms, the affidavit relied upon by the plaintiffs does not relate to the "persons in possession" exception, it relates to exception B, the survey exception. … It is undisputed that CATIC did not delete the survey exception from the Policy. Under plaintiffs' interpretation of the Policy language, the removal of General Exception A, persons in possession other than owners, would always result in the de facto removal of General Exception B, the survey requirement. Whenever a survey would reveal that an insured's property encroached upon or was encroached upon by the property of a neighbor, that neighbor, like the Schusters, would be a 'person in possession other than the owner.' Such interpretation eradicates the survey exception, violating the basic rules of contract construction. … Contrary to the plaintiffs' argument, the language of the Policy is not ambiguous. General Exception A, "persons in possession other than the insured," refers to tenants of the insured property, not neighbors. The removal of that exception has no effect in the plaintiffs' present circumstances."

Exceptions

Several decisions have found claims of adverse possession or prescriptive easement excepted under the "unrecorded easements" or "accurate survey" exceptions.[28] In Brenner v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., the Virginia Supreme Court disposed of an adverse possession claim based on the survey exception:

> ... any claim relating solely to the driveway portion was excluded from coverage under the survey exception [(c)] because it is undisputed that the driveway and its use "would have been disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises," in the language of the Exception. ... Thus, the insurer had no duty to defend because it appears clearly that it would not be liable under its contract for any judgment based upon the allegations of the Preshlock complaint.[29]

A Washington decision also held that a claim of adverse possession fell under the survey exception.[30] However, a Missouri court found that the issue of whether or not an accurate survey would disclose a prescriptive avigation easement was a question of fact:

> The issue of the disclosure of the matter of an unrecorded prescriptive easement by accurate and complete surveys is certainly one of fact as Hon contends. It cannot be determined from the pleading alone what a surveyor might take into account in surveying the boundaries of the property and what he might determine to be an easement by prescription by aircraft landing and taking off at a low altitude from the observable, adjacent Runway 31 to the north of Hon's property. The testimony of expert witness surveyors might determine that proposition, that testimony to be evaluated by the trier of the fact. Although no case has been cited or found concerning this issue which involves a prescriptive flight easement, see these cases holding that what an accurate survey would disclose is a fact question: ... [citations omitted][31]

---

[28] See Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 888 P.2d 83 (Or.App. 1995) (claim of prescriptive or implied easement excepted under either unrecorded easement exception or parties in possession exception). A prescriptive easement claim was not covered by the policy due to an exception for "any discrepancies, conflicts or shortages in area or boundary lines or any encroachments or protrusions, or any overlapping of improvements," in Rockhold v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 1999 WL 239053 (Tex.App. -San Antonio) (unpublished). The insured protested that a claim of prescriptive easement was not one of the words recited in that exception. The court said that, "[a]lthough [the insured] asserts that [the plaintiff] did not specifically claim a boundary dispute or encroachment, the easement, by its very nature, disrupted the boundary lines between the two properties. Whether [the plaintiff] had pled encroachment, protrusion, or boundary discrepancy is irrelevant. The pleadings sufficiently alleged that the easement claimed surpassed his property line and lay within the bounds of [the insured's] property, thereby invoking the exclusion."

[29] 397 S.E.2d 100, 104 (1990).

[30] Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 637, 584 P.2d 939 (1978).

[31] Hon, Inc. v. Central Missouri State Univ. Board of Regents, 678 S.W.2d 413, 415 (Mo.App. 1984).

Thus, not every type of possession interest is shown by an accurate survey. However, a purchaser of property, on inspecting the property and making due inquiry as to possession, has a duty to and will discover almost any form of possession. As an Illinois court observed, there is more cohesion in finding that the parties in possession exception applies to possessory rights, because that exception is clearly based on the purchaser's duty of inquiry and inspection:

> When Plaintiffs contracted for the purchase of the premises, and when they acquired title, it was their bounden duty to inquire of the person in possession by what tenure he holds and what interest or claims he had in the premises. The purchaser cannot excuse himself by merely obtaining information as to how possession was obtained ... . Open possession is sufficient to charge such purchaser with knowledge of all legal or equitable claims of the occupant which could have been ascertained by such inquiry.[32]

12.3 Accurate Survey And Inspection Exception

The second standard exception is commonly referred to as the "survey" exception. One of the more common phrasings of the survey exception is as follows:

> Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

A different exception is used in Texas.[33] Also, there are numerous permutations of the survey exception, as is discussed at §12.3.3. When the ALTA 2006 form of policy is used, some insurers use a survey exception that is identical to Covered Risk 2(c), the so-called survey coverage of that policy, which reads as follows:

> Any encroachment, encumbrance, violation, variation, or adverse circumstance affecting the Title that would be disclosed by an accurate and complete land survey of the Land. The term "encroachment" includes encroachments of existing improvements located on the Land onto adjoining land, and encroachments onto the Land of existing improvements located on adjoining land.

Covered Risk 2(c) is analyzed at §9.9.1, including those cases that have construed the coverage of a policy that contains both the survey coverage and a survey exception. That discussion is not repeated in this section.

The survey exception is frequently mated with an exception for unrecorded easements, because underwriting standards typically say that both exceptions must be inserted in a policy if the insured does not deliver an acceptable survey. See §12.4 for a complete discussion of the unrecorded

---

[32] Polito v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 12 Ill.App. 2d 57, 138 N.E.2d 710, 713 (1956).

[33] The current Texas Exception 2 reads as follows: "Any discrepancies, conflicts, or shortages in area or boundary lines, or any encroachments or protrusions, or any overlapping of improvements."

easement exception.

The removal of the standard exceptions is known in some states as "extended coverage." It is true that the removal of an exclusion always expands coverage. However, the term "extended coverage" should not be understood to suggest that the removal of the standard exceptions is the granting of any affirmative coverage.[34] The fact that a certain type of fact might or might not appear on a survey does not create or increase coverage.[35]

Most versions of the survey exception make exception for two separate but related classes of defects: those shown on an accurate survey, and those that would be disclosed by an inspection of the land. The inspection clause is discussed at §12.3.17. The following sections discuss some general issues about the survey exception, including the following:

1. The purpose and scope of the exception is discussed at §12.3.1.

2. The question of whether or not the exception is ambiguous is discussed at §12.3.2.

3. The effect of differences in the exception language is described in §12.3.3.

4. The assertion that the insurer had a duty to obtain a survey or highlight the effect of the exception is analyzed in §12.3.4.

5. The standards which establish what is shown on an accurate survey, and thus the scope of the survey exception, are discussed at§12.3.5.

Following these general topics, this section discusses survey issues by type: overlaps, encroachments, boundary line disputes, shortages in distance or area, adverse possession and prescriptive easements, and water boundaries. Finally, §§12.3.13 through 12.3.16 discuss the effect of removal of the survey exception and affirmative assurances about survey matters.

---

[34] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Dahlmann, 291 Wis.2d 156, 715 N.W.2d 609, 2006 WI 65 (Wis. 2006) (survey exception is a policy exclusion; its removal does not create a coverage, even though some states call the removal of the exception "extended coverage").

[35] In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Investguard, Ltd., 215 Ga.App. 121, 449 S.E.2d 681, 683 (Ga.App. 1994), the court said that it was irrelevant whether the property's location in a flood plain would be disclosed on an accurate survey, because that designation is not a defect in title and thus was not covered by the policy. In Shea Homes, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3334210 (W.D.N.C.) ((unpublished), the location of tree stump burial pits was shown on a survey, but the depicted area was allegedly not accurate. The insured, a homebuilder, built new homes on some of the pits and they sank. The pits did not invoke policy coverage, even though they were shown on a survey.

12.3.1 Purpose And Scope Of Survey Exception

FORM 76, Appendix A
No survey coverage unless exceptions removed

The commonly-stated purpose of the survey exception is that it removes from coverage various matters that cannot be found in the public records but that would be apparent on review of a survey. As one author points out, this is the same rationale that underlies most of the "standard" exceptions.[36] The necessity of the survey exception has been endorsed repeatedly by courts that have found it to be fair and enforceable. For example:

> The exceptions set forth in Schedule B refer generally to situations which may affect the title but which would not be reflected by an examination of the public records. A title insurance company has no other feasible method of protecting itself from these circumstances ... .[37]

Or, as a later Florida opinion said, "[a]bsent a specific undertaking to that effect, [the policy] does not presume to insure against infirmities not of record."[38]

Nested within most versions of the survey exception is a further exception for those matters that would be identified on an inspection of the property. The inspection clause is related to but not the same as the survey exception. The rationale for the inspection clause is slightly different than for the survey exception. The inspection clause excepts matters that are open and obvious to a purchaser of the property. The inspection clause thus makes it clear that the insurer is not the buyer's guarantor if the purchaser fails to make a diligent inspection of the property as is his or her ordinary duty in conveyancing law. As one court stated it:

> The purpose of an inspection, which is performed by merely visiting the property, is to disclose such matters as physical encroachments, evidence of adverse use, and monuments. By comparison, a survey, as this case demonstrates, can involve extensive research and field work. Unlike a mere inspection, a survey relates the property as described in recorded instruments to the land as it exists.[39]

---

[36] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 7:2, p. 515, West/Thomson Reuters.

[37] McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852, 855 (Fla.App. 1976). See also Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893 (1984).

[38] Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 390 So.2d 805, 806 (Fla.App. 1980).

[39] Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

See §12.3.17 for a discussion of the inspection clause.

Thus, the most commonly-stated justification for the exception is that it excepts matters which the insurer cannot discover by even the most careful search of the land records, but that could be discovered by ordinary diligence of the purchaser-insured by either an inspection or by obtaining a survey.

Some property rights that would be identified on a survey or found in an inspection are also disclosed in the public records. In such cases, the question is whether or not the exception is negated by the fact that the insurer could have identified the issue from its records search.[40] The exception does not apply only to matters not shown in the public records.[41] Courts have reached surprising consistency in these cases.[42]

The survey exception covers a number of subjects, all of which relate in some way to matters that typically are disclosed on a survey. The exception has a significant drawback, in that the insurer or court must interpret the exception through the lens of what a survey would recite or disclose. Some courts have said this requires the expert testimony of a surveyor, or at least the preparation of an accurate survey, as is discussed at 12.3.5 and 12.3.5.3. In this regard, title insurers operating in other states should note that modern Texas policies contain a promulgated Exception 2 that encompasses all or most of the subjects of the usual survey exception without making any reference to a survey. The current Texas Exception 2 reads as follows: "Any discrepancies, conflicts, or shortages in area or boundary lines, or any encroachments or protrusions, or any overlapping of improvements."

12.3.2 Survey Exception Enforceable, Not Ambiguous

As to non-recorded matters, the survey exception is not ambiguous, and is enforceable.[43] The

---

[40] For example, in Dallas Title & Guaranty Co. v. Valdes, 445 S.W.2d 26 (Tex.App. 1969), the policy insured "All of Lot 9, Block G, Summit Oaks Subdivision fronting on U.S. 183 Expressway and being the same as lot 9 in Plat Book 7, Page 183, Travis County Plat records and same fronting about 140 feet on said expressway." In fact, about 90% of Lot 9 had been taken by public condemnation for highway. The court rejected the argument that the survey exception applied.

[41] This contrasts with the related exception for "easements, or claims of easements, not shown in the public records." See §12.4 regarding that exception.

[42] See §12.3.9 (record overlaps) and §12.3.17.2 (recorded easements).

[43] In Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 216 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992), the court gave this recitation of prior decisions that have found the survey exception enforceable: "[W]e find that the survey exception is neither vague nor unenforceable. The subject policy is in a form promulgated in 1970 by the American Land Title Association, which has been approved by the Commissioner of Insurance. Identical or similar language has been approved by other courts and scholars. See Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co., 177 F.Supp. 925 (W.D.Mo.1959) (excepting '[f]acts which would be disclosed by an accurate survey of the premises herein described'); Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W.2d 893 (1984) (excepting 'any matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises'); Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 301, 354 N.W.2d 154, 157 (1984) (language excepting 'any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises' construed 'as having plain and ordinary meaning'); Swanson v. Mid-South Title Ins. Co., 692 S.W.2d 415 (Tenn.App.1984) (excepting 'other facts which a correct survey would show'); see also 7

terms "overlap" and "accurate survey" are also not ambiguous, and the lack of definition in the policy for the terms does not render the exception void.[44] The exception also unambiguously covers encroachments of improvements onto adjoining land.[45] The characterization of an encroachment as a "protrusion" did not make the exception ambiguous.[46] The exception also is not rendered ambiguous by the fact that it does not state the date as of which a survey would disclose the excepted matters.[47] One court found the survey exception rendered ambiguous when the insurer asserted it in a fashion that caused it to conflict with a covered risk.[48]

The survey exception is not a void adhesion contract term, since the insured can negotiate its removal in some cases. A buyer does not have a "reasonable expectation" of survey coverage that would bar the insurer from denying a claim based on the survey exception.[49]

Powell on Real Property Section 1046 at 92-38 (1987 ed.) (Powell) (an exception excluding 'any state of facts an accurate survey would disclose' described as a 'common exception in most owners' policies')." See also Alden v. Schuster, 2008 WL 2039075 (Conn.Super. 2008) (unpublished), which found the exception enforceable and not ambiguous.

[44] Downing v. Eubanks, 557 N.E.2d 1027 (Ind.App. 1990). The lack of definition of "overlap" was again raised in RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W. 2d 607 (Tenn.App. 1989). In that case, the court stated: "We think ... that where RLB's deed covers a portion of the land described in a prior deed held by TVA, the facts show a classic case of an overlap. While we are not aware of any authority which defines the term 'overlap' as used in this policy, we think that the facts of this case come within the common, ordinary meaning of the term."See also §12.3.9, regarding overlaps.

[45] Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984): "[The] survey exception is expressed in language having plain and ordinary meaning. Therefore, correct location of any structure on the described premises is not a risk or loss covered by Chicago's policy of title insurance." See also Alden v. Schuster, 2008 WL 2039075 (Conn.Super. 2008) (unpublished).

[46] Cook Consultants, Inc. v. Larson, 677 S.W.2d 718 (Tex.App. 1984), aff'd in part and rev'd in part Larson v. Cook Consultants, Inc., 690 S.W.2d 567 (Tex. 1986).

[47] In Swanson v. Mid-South Title Ins. Corp., 692 S.W.2d 415 (Tenn.App. 1984), the insured made the argument that a survey performed on policy date would not have shown physical evidence of the neighbor's title claim. Thus, the insured would admittedly have gotten protection against the matter had he presented a survey at policy issuance. The insured wanted the insurer estopped from being required to grant the same coverage after the defect was discovered, on the pretense of the exception's "ambiguity."

[48] In McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852 (Fla.App. 1976), the insurer asserted that the survey exception negated coverage for a recorded, which the court found to be in conflict with the covered risk for easements, rendering the policy ambiguous and the survey exception unenforceable as to the recorded easement.

[49] "We reject plaintiff's contention that the exclusion should be deemed void as against public policy; we perceive no unconscionability in permitting, or public policy basis for prohibiting, title insurers from excluding from coverage, if clearly expressed, matters which would be revealed by an accurate survey. Such an exclusion is not so broad that it renders the insurance policy a meaningless sham, but rather merely places on the insured the burden of obtaining an accurate survey of the property the insured is purchasing and the responsibility for any defects which that survey discloses." Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893, 896 (1984).

12.3.3 Words And Phrases Used In Survey Exception

The breadth of the survey exception depends on the exact wording used. The use of the phrase "other matters" makes it clear that the survey exception is not limited to the subjects specifically identified in the exception, such as encroachments, overlaps and boundary line disputes.[50]

When the exception is for matters "which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises," it does not except only those matters that would be disclosed by both a survey and an inspection of the property.[51] Rather, the survey exception and the inspection clause are independent limitations on coverage, based on different rationales, as is discussed at §12.3.1. However, one court construed an exception for "[u]nrecorded easements, discrepancies or conflicts in boundary lines, shortage in area and encroachments which an accurate and complete survey would disclose" as meaning that the phrase "which an accurate and complete survey would disclose" modified each of the prior clauses, including "unrecorded easements."[52] The court said that the exception would apply to an unrecorded easement only if that easement would have been shown on an accurate and complete survey. Another court held that a survey exception which used the phrase "and which are not shown by the public records" did not apply to any matter found in the public

---

[50] In Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992), the court held that "other matters" included a claim based on the fact that the insured parcel contained fewer acres of land than was stated in the policy legal description. A prescriptive easement claim was not covered based on an exception for "any discrepancies, conflicts or shortages in area or boundary lines or any encroachments or protrusions, or any overlapping of improvements," in Rockhold v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 1999 WL 239053 (Tex.App. -San Antonio) (unpublished). The insured urged that the exception did not apply because prescriptive easement was not one of the words recited in that exception. The court said that, "[a]lthough [the insured] asserts that [the plaintiff] did not specifically claim a boundary dispute or encroachment, the easement, by its very nature, disrupted the boundary lines between the two properties. Whether [the plaintiff] had pled encroachment, protrusion, or boundary discrepancy is irrelevant. The pleadings sufficiently alleged that the easement claimed surpassed his property line and lay within the bounds of [the insured's] property, thereby invoking the exclusion."

[51] "Finally, we disagree with the conclusion of the Appellate Division that the exception does not apply because the shortage in acreage was not discoverable by both an accurate survey and an inspection of the premises. A survey and inspection serve related but different purposes. ... It would distort the title policy to the point of illogic to expose Chelsea to the risk of the results of an accurate survey merely because those results could not be revealed by an inspection of the premises." Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217. In Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1974) it was stated: "The insured is not protected from matters dependent upon a survey or a critical inspection of the property ... ."[emphasis added]

[52] "Hon argues that the matter of whether or not the easement by prescription claimed by CMSU over Hon's property would have been disclosed by an 'accurate and complete' survey is a question of fact which is properly made on the basis of proof, and not merely on the pleadings. Commonwealth argues that the clause in Schedule B, 2, supra, excepts coverage for unrecorded easements solely, and that the phrase, 'which an accurate and complete survey would disclose' modifies only the term 'encroachments,' not 'unrecorded easements.' That is too narrow a construction of the clause, which is contained in one single sentence wherein 'unrecorded easements, discrepancies or conflicts in boundary lines, shortage in area,' are connected by the conjunctive 'and' with 'encroachments;' thus a fair reading of the clause can only be that all of these items are subject to the disclosure of an accurate and complete survey." Hon, Inc. v. Central Mo. State Univ. Board of Regents, 678 S.W.2d 413 (Mo.App. 1984).

records.[53]

In Houston Title Guaranty Co. v. Fontenot,[54] the court construed a rather ancient version of the Texas survey exception, which used the phrase "discrepancies in area and boundaries which a correct survey would show." The court said the exception was not construed based on what a "complete" survey would show. The insurer argued that the insured's survey was not complete because it did not show encroachments, but the insurer did not say it was incorrect. The court held that the survey was an adequate representation of what would be shown on a correct survey. Because the survey did not show the encroachments that were the subject of the claim, the court found that the exception did not negate coverage for the encroachments.[55]

12.3.4 No Duty To Obtain Survey, Or Highlight Or Remove Exception

The insurer has no duty to obtain a survey for the insured in order to cause itself to remove the survey exception; nor does it have a duty to instruct the insured on the desirability of obtaining coverage against survey matters. Removal of the survey exception is a significant coverage for which, in most jurisdictions, an insured pays a substantial additional premium. When the exception may be removed by payment of an additional premium, the disclosure of the exception prompts the proposed insured to consider getting the coverage.[56] The policy issuer does well to inform the customer of the value of the additional coverage that is created by removal of the exception, which justifies the related premium.[57]

---

[53] Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 18 Cal.App.3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (1971). The full exception read: "Discrepancies, conflicts in boundary lines, shortages in area, encroachments, or any other facts which a correct survey would disclose, and which are not shown by the public records."

[54] 339 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App. 1960).

[55] Houston Title Guaranty Co. v. Fontenot, 339 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App. 1960). The form of survey exception at issue in Fontenot has not been used in Texas for many years. Modern Texas policies use an Exception 2 that does not even refer to a survey, but instead lists the subjects generally associated with the survey exception. The Texas Exception 2 reads as follows: "Any discrepancies, conflicts, or shortages in area or boundary lines, or any encroachments or protrusions, or any overlapping of improvements."

[56] In Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 637, 584 P. 2d 939, 944 (Wash. 1978), the court said: "We do not agree that the provision should be denied effect because it was not set forth in the preliminary commitment. Certainly, it would seem desirable that general exceptions be specifically set forth in the preliminary commitment or that a copy of the standard form policy be delivered to the insured at the same time as the preliminary commitment. At the very least, this case demonstrates that an insured should receive a copy of the standard form policy in a closing conference conducted at the title company office. We cannot say, however, that Transamerica's failure to take either course renders the provision nugatory."

[57] In Marshall v. King & Morgenstern, 272 Ga.App. 515, 613 S.E.2d 7 (Ga.App. 2005), the insured asserted that the title agent orally committed to issuing a First American Eagle™ policy which would have included protection against survey matters, but instead the agent issued a 1992 ALTA policy without removing the survey exception. The court found a question of fact as to whether or not the agent (not the insurer) was liable to the insured for failing to adequately inform the insured or, alternately, to bind the intended coverage. In states where the Residential or Homeowner's policies are offered, giving affirmative coverage similar to those found in the Eagle™ policy, title agents should carefully consider advising customers on policies that afford greater coverage. Insurance broker liability is discussed at §17.7.

When the insured does not request or pay for the removal of the survey exception, that coverage may not be created by merely interpreting the exception as a nullity.[58] The exception also is not removed de facto by an allegation in negligence that the insurer has a duty to examine a survey and tell the insured what it contained.[59]

An insurer is not obligated to obtain an accurate survey for the insured so that the legal description insured can be verified by field measurements.[60] By not getting a survey, the insured assumes risk, including the possibility that it will pay for more land than is conveyed to it.[61]

---

[58] "As Mr. Witkin puts it, '(f)or a premium of about double the usual sum, the company makes a survey and inspection, and the policy covers a great many of such off-record defects as would thereby be discovered.' (3 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law, 8th ed., Real Property, § 168, p. 1906; see C.E.B., Cal. Real Estate Sales Transactions, § 17.17, p. 620.) What appellants are arguing is that the Western Title Insurance Company's policy of title insurance, although a standard policy of title insurance, protected appellants against the loss of acreage Edgardo Contini thought he was getting even though he admitted knowing the land he was buying had three government lots and the significance of the designation 'government lot.' What appellants are seeking from the Western Title Insurance Company policy is extended coverage without having requested that type of coverage and without having paid the additional premium. The court properly granted respondent Western Title Insurance Company's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict." Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257, 261 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1974). To the same effect are Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 637, 584 P. 2d 939 (Wash. 1978) and Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W. 2d 893 (1984). In Panciocco v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 794 A.2d 810 (N.H. 2002), the court found that the survey and parties in possession exceptions should not be judicially eliminated from the policy based on the insured's "reasonable expectation" that the policy would not contain such exceptions from coverage. It ruled that the insurance contract's terms are not construed based on the insured's own subjective testimony about what coverage she expected to receive.

[59] Ely v. Munshower, 4 Pa.D. & C.3d 430 (1977).

[60] In Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., the court held: "Plaintiffs contend that when they sought title insurance from the defendant, it was the responsibility of the defendant to determine the correctness of the description in insuring the title to such property as the plaintiff actually purchased under their deed. Had the survey obtained by the plaintiffs prior to the erection of the building been a correct survey, it would have revealed the exact location of plaintiffs' east boundary and their present difficulty would not have arisen. It is very apparent that the defendant was under no obligation to cause a survey to be made prior to issuing the policy, and that it insured the title only to such property as plaintiffs actually acquired. There can be no other reason for the exclusionary clause in its contract, and such exclusionary clause is binding upon the plaintiffs, and they are not entitled to recover." 177 F.Supp. 925, 926 (W.D.Mo. 1959). In accord is Ely v. Munshower, 4 Pa.D. & C.3d 430 (1977).

[61] In Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992), the court said: "In effect, plaintiff seeks to obtain a better policy than it purchased by transferring to the insurer a risk that it assumed. … Had plaintiff obtained a survey from Duffy before the Kosa closing, instead of waiting until it wanted to subdivide the property, it could have eliminated the risk of paying for property it did not receive." This holding in Walker Rogge was quoted with approval in American Title Ins. Co. v. Carter, 670 So.2d 1115 (Fla.App. 1996), later appeal, 710 So.2d 1020, which denied recovery as to a boundary line dispute discovered by the insureds when they obtained a survey after closing. The policy contained the survey exception. See also: Parahoo v. Mancini, 1998 WL 180539 (Ohio App. 10 Dist.) (unpublished), dism., app.den. 83 Ohio St.3d 1416, 698 N.E.2d 1005 (1998) (insurer and closing agent has no "obligation to explain the meaning of metes and bounds descriptions in closing documents or ... provide purchasers with a survey map that accurately depicts the size of the subject property ... .").

12.3.5 How Survey Accuracy Is Measured

Proper survey method is important both when the coverage issue is whether or not the matter in dispute would have been shown by an accurate survey, and when an alleged boundary line dispute or overlap exists, as judged by a survey that uses the proper method. This section explains the most important rules regarding accurate and proper survey methods.

Cases construing the survey exception typically give little more than conclusory statements about what would be shown by an accurate, complete or correct survey. Most court decisions do not employ the substantial body of law on the subject of legal descriptions and survey methods. Careful evaluation of a surveyor's method can establish as a matter of law that the surveyor did or did not create an accurate (and complete) survey.

When the claimed overlap or encroachment results solely from a dispute between surveyors as to proper method for finding the property in the field, that dispute does not create a defect in title.[62] In the leading case of Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co.,[63] for example, the court determined that the case was "not a dispute about a boundary line or an overlap," but a (non-covered) "survey dispute."[64]

12.3.5.1 Survey Standards And Surveyor's Role

The standards for survey work are found in several different works. The benchmark is the 1973 government survey standards.[65] These standards, in book form, are the rules by which government surveys are to be performed and monumented. The book also provides a wealth of information useful in the preparation of surveys for private parties. A second authoritative source is Clark on Surveying and Boundaries.[66] This comprehensive work is relied on by surveyors and courts alike. The third source is the ALTA/NSPS (formerly the ALTA/ACSM) land title survey standards, which are discussed in full beginning at §12.3.5.2. There are also numerous other books and articles on the subject, some of which are state-specific.[67]

---

[62] A common example would be a disagreement between surveyors as to how a shortage or excess of footage in a government section or smaller parcel should be apportioned. There is no one cure-all apportionment rule, but in each type of case there is a correct method. Disputes normally arise when one surveyor guesses wrongly as to the applicable rule. See Walter G. Robillard, Clark on Surveying and Boundaries, Eighth Edition, The Michie Company.

[63] 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[64] Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[65] United States Dep't of Interior, Bureau of Land Management, Manual of Surveying Instruction (1973) [Technical Bulletin No. 6].

[66] Written by Walter G. Robillard, now in its eighth edition, and published by The Michie Company (available through LexisNexis).

[67] Books include: Grimes, Law of Surveying and Boundaries, (Fourth Edition); and Brown, Boundary Control and Legal Principles, (Second Edition); Bales, A Guide to Understanding A Survey, an excellent source available from the author care of Chicago Title Insurance Company, Wheaton, Illinois; Lathrop, Ed., Legal Topics in Boundary Surveying:

> It is helpful first to recall the surveyor's proper role:
>
> The surveyor's responsibility is the location of the written title lines on the ground and the subsequent relation of all lines of possession that may conflict with them. This function does not permit him to pass upon the application of law to the identification of written or unwritten property rights.[68]

The limitations on the surveyor's authority are that he or she:

> … cannot establish a new boundary line without other authority, either legal or from the landowners. Except by express statutory authority, the surveyor cannot legally determine true existing boundary lines. Absent statutory authority, all a surveyor can do is testify as a witness as to where, in his best judgment, after relying upon the available evidence of earlier surveys, boundary lines are located.[69]

It can be very important to establish the surveyor's role for the sake of the court. To illustrate, in Houston Title Guaranty Co. v. Fontenot,[70] the court attempted to identify the difference between an

---

A Compendium, American Congress on Surveying and Mapping, 5410 Grosvenor Lane, Bethesda, Maryland 20814-2122; and Illinois Laws Relating to Surveys, Title and Real Property, available from Compass Surveying, 1600 Shore Road, Suite E, Naperville, Illinois 60563. Articles include: Hoag, Fundamentals of Land Measurement, available from Chicago Title Insurance Company, Corporate Communications Department, 171 North Clark Street, Chicago, Illinois 60601-3294; Estopinal, Understanding Land Surveys, Professional Education Systems, Inc., Post Office Box 1208, 200 Spring Street, Eau Claire, Wisconsin 54702; Land Surveys--A Guide for Lawyers (1989), American Bar Association, 750 North Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, Illinois 60611; Williams and Onsrud, What Every Lawyer Should Know About Surveys, American Bar Association Probate and Property, March-April 1988); Bales, The 1988 ALTA/ACSM Land Title Survey Standards, in P.O.B., June-July 1989, available from the publisher at 5820 Lilley Road, Suite 5, Canton, Michigan 48197-3623; Bales, 1988 ALTA/ACSM Land Title Survey Standards Reexamined, in P.O.B. August-September 1991; Washburn, The Riparian Developer's Dilemma: Locating the Boundary of Navigable Lakes and Rivers, 18 Real Property, Probate and Trust Journal 538 (Fall 1983); Maloney, Ordinary High Water Mark, Land and Water L.Rev. 465 (1978); Nielsen, Determining and Surveying Water Boundary Lines in Michigan, Michigan Bar Journal, September, 1987, pp. 874-81; Nielsen, Insuring Title to Riparian and Littoral Property, Michigan Real Property Review, Summer, 1990.

Grimes and Brown, and numerous other aids, are available from Landmark Enterprises, 10324 Newton Way, Rancho Cordova, California 95670, a large mail-order supplier of survey book and teaching aids. The largest provider of survey drawing equipment is Pronto Land Measure, Inc., Post Office Box 3219, Flint, Michigan 48502. The Bureau of Land Management publishes a diskette containing hundreds of squibs on reported cases, organized by topic, which is a very useful research tool. See also, Land Surveys, Second Edition, edited by Mitchell G. Williams, published by the Real Property, Probate and Trust Law Section of the American Bar Association, which is a collection of articles. The ALTA/ACSM survey standards are discussed in an article by Richard F. Bales, Esq. and Michael Filipski, Residential and Commercial Surveys in Illinois (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education).

[68] Walter G. Robillard, Clark on Surveying and Boundaries, Eighth Edition, The Michie Company, §2.02, p. 26.

[69] Id. at §2.04, p. 28.

[70] 339 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App. 1960).

"accurate" survey and a "complete" survey. In that case, the survey did not show eaves and downspouts that encroached onto the neighbor's property. The court held that the survey was accurate but "incomplete." It therefore held that the undisclosed encroachments were covered by the policy.[71] This "accurate" versus "complete" distinction in Houston Title, however, is artificial and superficial. The court failed to understand that the failure to include detail such as encroachments renders a survey inaccurate, because the survey does not adequately reflect the location of improvements in the field. The insured should not obtain coverage against existing matters by tendering a survey that does not disclose the very matters against which coverage is sought.

The subject of surveyor negligence is beyond the scope of this treatise, but in general the surveyor is liable for failing to follow uniform standards, such as for the setting of boundary corner monuments.[72]

---

[71] "Appellant asserts, however, that the survey made by Boyles was not a complete survey in that it failed to show that the eaves and downspout of the Collis garage encroached upon Lot 7. The policy in question does not call for a complete survey but a correct survey and refers only to discrepancies in area and boundaries which a correct survey would show. It makes no reference to encroachments such as overhanging eaves. It is our view, therefore, that the Boyles survey is a correct survey of the area and boundaries of the lot although it fails to show any protrusion of the Collis eaves across the line. Even if a complete or correct survey would have shown the protrusion of the eaves across the part of the boundary line adjacent to the garage, it still would not have shown a claim to the fee title to a 3 foot strip extending the whole length of the boundary line between Lots 6 and 7. Since a correct survey would not have shown such latter discrepancy, appellant was obligated to defend the suit, as it was obligated under the title policy to defend every suit or proceeding on any claim against or right to said land, or any part thereof." 339 S.W.2d at 349-50.

[72] For example, in Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Conklin Assoc., 152 N.J.Super. 1, 377 A.2d 740 (1977), we see the very rare case of the insurer seeking to recoup from the surveyor who caused the problem. The surveyor defended based on the statute of limitations. The surveyor had prepared the subdivision plat and, later, six surveys for individual lots. The statute had run on the subdivision plat. The court found compound negligence, and that the statute was not a bar: "Further, this court is satisfied that the evidence at trial adequately supports the charge of defendants' culpability. Expert testimony revealed that field markers, or monuments, delineate the state boundary at regular intervals. Rather than locate more than one such monument, as would have been the proper practice, defendants located one. As a result, the error was made. This spoke negligence. Prosser, Law of Torts (4 ed. 1971), s 33. In repeating the error by relying on the original mistake, defendants engaged in a new, independent course of conduct, albeit based upon an original wrongful act. While defendants suggest that this reliance was not negligent, offering expert testimony to the effect that it is the usual custom and practice of a surveyor in preparing individual lot surveys to rely upon the state line descriptions of a filed subdivision map, defendants are estopped to assert that the reliance placed on their own earlier negligent conduct was reasonable. Restatement of Torts s 894, Comment (b). Thus, in erroneously preparing the individual lot surveys, defendants exposed themselves anew to the charge of negligence. The failure to ascertain the true descriptions of these border lots was caused by an unreasonable failure to produce an accurate survey of the state line. Each time this was done negligence was involved. See Restatement of Torts, s 552." Title insurer recovery against a surveyor by subrogation is discussed at §5.7.

12.3.5.2 ALTA/NSPS And Statutory Survey Standards

The American Land Title Association and the National Society of Professional Surveyors have worked out joint standards for minimum survey detail.[73] These standards are the only uniform and national standards for land surveys, and are developed and periodically modified based on the joint effort of national organizations representing surveyors, the title industry and certain customer groups. The ALTA/NSPS Standards require that surveys show all encroachments, record overlaps, gaps and gores, boundary line disputes, recorded and unrecorded easements, boundaries of public or private roads, setback or building restriction lines, found and set monuments, evidence of adverse or prescriptive use, and water bodies and boundaries.

A survey that complies with the ALTA/NSPS survey standards is an accurate and complete survey, as that term is used in the survey exception and Covered Risk 2(c) of the 2006 ALTA policies.[74] A survey may also be considered to be accurate and complete if it is not prepared based on the ALTA/NSPS standards, but does comply with other recognized survey standards. Those other standards come from two general sources: trade associations and state law. A number of surveyor trade associations, both national and local, have developed standards that are used in various jurisdictions. At least some states also have survey standards imposed by law or regulation with which the surveyor must comply. A survey may also be judged as being accurate and complete based on a surveyor's expert testimony, as is discussed at §12.3.5.3.

Many drawings and plats are not properly termed surveys, and certainly are not accurate surveys as that term is used in the ALTA title insurance policy or a survey exception. Some surveyors and engineers issue drawings to residential mortgage lenders that depict only the principal structures. Typically, the preparer certifies only that these improvements are within the boundaries of [73] The NSPS was at one time an arm of the American Congress on Surveying & Mapping. The groups merged, with the NSPS as the surviving body. The current Minimum Standard Detail Requirements for ALTA/NSPS Land Title Surveys (hereafter the "ALTA/NSPS Standards") may be viewed at alta.org. The standards have undergone numerous revisions over the years.

---

[74] In Haley v. Hume, 448 P.3d 803 (Wash.App. 1 Div. 2019), the seller to the insured, Hume, had abandoned a recorded access easement by allowing her neighbor to take out a culvert that had rerouted a stream to go on the far side of the easement path. After the culvert was removed, the stream went back to its natural bed, bisecting the path of the driveway and making it unusable. Hume's property abutted a public street, and was not rendered landlocked by her abandonment of the easement. Several years later, Hume conveyed her property to Haley, apparently together with the easement. Haley's title insurance policy contained a survey exception that read in part "...other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey or inspection of the premises." A court declared that Hume had abandoned the easement. Haley sued his title insurer based on his inability to use the easement. The court found no policy coverage, because of the survey exception. The court held that the best evidence as to what matters would be disclosed by an accurate survey was found in the ALTA/NSPS survey standards. The court relied on several ALTA/NSPS survey standards in order to reach this conclusion: "These minimum ALTA/NSPS requirements confirm that if Haley had conducted a survey in 2005, it would have disclosed that the easement area was exclusively possessed by someone other than Hume. The survey would have disclosed the recorded easement benefitting Haley's property. Following the ALTA/NSPS standard, the survey would have noted the evidence of Pugh's possession, noted that the easement was not observable at the time the survey was made, noted that there was evidence of use by someone other than Hume, and noted that there was a stream in the middle of the easement area. All of these would have indicated that the condition of the easement area in 2005 was inconsistent with the use of the easement that Haley believed he was acquiring. As such, a survey would have disclosed the loss that Haley now asserts."

the property. These drawings go by a variety of names, such as mortgage inspection reports and mortgage surveys. In most states with laws or regulations prescribing the detail and field work required for land surveys, such mortgage drawings do not qualify, and surveyors are thus careful to refrain from calling them surveys.

The mortgage drawing was created because lenders wanted something cheaper than a real survey that would give the basic assurance that the house is built on the land. In preparing a mortgage drawing, the surveyor typically sets no monuments, examines no title documents, and does only the most essential field work. In some locales, the surveyor or engineer relies entirely on lines of occupation rather than survey monuments in estimating the boundary lines and measuring the distance between the house and the lines. The product typically contains the caution that it is not to be used to establish the boundaries of the property or set fences. In some jurisdictions, title insurers remove the survey exception on loan policies based on these mortgage drawings. Because of the minimal field work done, however, insurers will seldom rely on such products to remove the exception from the owner's policy.[75]

A mortgage survey is not an accurate survey for purposes of determining the scope of the survey exception. In State Farm Ins. Co's v. Peda,[76] State Farm paid on its homeowners' insurance policy because the garage on the insured property encroached onto neighboring land. It sued the title insurer to recoup. The policy contained a survey exception, which Stewart Title argued removed coverage for the encroachment. The court agreed, finding that a boundary survey and a mortgage survey are two very different creatures.[77]

Some title insurers and surveyors also offer quasi-surveys that are aerial photographs reduced to scale, over which the preparer superimposes a number of layers of detail, such as boundary lines derived from a tax parcel or geographic information system (GIS) map or a prior survey, plotting of easements, setback lines established by private restrictions or zoning code and other information. The insurer may offer to remove the survey exception from the policy based on such a quasi-survey product.

---

[75] See Parahoo v. Mancini, 1998 WL 180539 (Ohio App. 10 Dist.) (unpublished).

[76] 2003-Ohio-1092, 2003 WL 943884 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished).

[77] Citing Parahoo v. Mancini, 1998 WL 180539 (Ohio App. 10 Dist.) (unpublished), the regulations and other authorities, the court ruled: "It is clear from the preambles of the Administrative Code sections cited above, that a mortgage location survey is only for the intent and use of a mortgagee or title insurer, while a boundary survey is to be used to establish boundary lines. The policy exemption at issue in this case specifically excluded 'encroachments, overlaps, and boundary line disputes.' It is apparent from the context and language of the document that only a boundary line survey would be sufficient. Clearly a mortgage loan survey would not necessarily discover the specific exclusions relating to boundary lines in the policy. In this case, a mortgage loan survey was conducted, and it did not reveal the encroachment. Yet, boundary line surveys eventually revealed the existence of the encroachment. … The survey exception included in the policy was there to inform the insured that Stewart Title does not insure against boundary disputes or encroachments such as the one that has arisen. The exception excludes boundary line disputes, regardless of whether a survey was, in fact, conducted. When read in context with the language of the exclusion, the term survey was not ambiguous. It was intended to mean boundary line survey, because legally, only a boundary line survey would necessarily reveal the matters in the exclusion; i.e., encroachments and boundary line disputes. Since the term 'survey' as used in the exclusion was not ambiguous, State Farm was not entitled to judgment as a matter of law."

Subdivision plats and similar surveys created for the division of land likewise are not "accurate surveys" for purposes of determining the scope of policy coverage. Unlike the mortgage drawing, a subdivision plat is a survey and normally is required by statute to conform to reasonably strict standards for detail, monumentation and field work. However, such plats typically are not required to depict any improvements. In most states, they also do not plot existing easements (other than those being reserved or created concurrently with the filing of the plat). Therefore, subdivision plats and similar land division surveys are not sufficient to disclose all of the matters shown by a full land survey. For example, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Knopf,[78] a subdivision plat was found not to be an accurate survey that would cause an insurer to remove the survey exception:

> The Knopfs assert in their brief that, as a matter of law, the subdivision plat was a survey within the meaning of the policy. The assertion is erroneous. The survey exception in the policy refers to "an accurate survey and inspection of the premises." The policy clearly contemplates a current, on-site examination and measurement of the property. The subdivision plat, although apparently prepared by a surveyor, was not necessarily based on such an examination and/or such measurements.[79]

In addition, a subdivision plat is not prepared for the benefit of a lot owner, and the surveyor's certificate does not run to such an owner. The insurer insists on a certification running to it and its insured so that, once it gives coverage based on the survey, it has a right to recoup if the surveyor has made a mistake.

12.3.5.3 Proof Of Survey Accuracy

As is stated in § 12.3.5.2, the ALTA/NSPS survey standards provide reliable evidence of what matters would be depicted, and in what fashion, on an accurate survey. In some cases, a survey contains a proper certification and appears to be accurate and complete, but there is some question as to the accuracy of its method or its completeness. Typically, the best evidence as to the survey's accuracy is in the form of expert surveyor testimony.

In Waterview Associates, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[80] the insured legal was a "parcel of land in ... Section 2" described by metes and bounds. The insured got a survey depicting the land according to the metes and bounds measurements. Later, an eighth line of Section 2 was monumented for the first time by the city engineers. The neighbor filed suit, asserting title up to the new monument, and won. The lake frontage for the insured parcel was reduced by 30 feet. The court refused to grant summary judgment in favor of the insurer on its assertion that the survey exception negated coverage for the insured's "loss" of the disputed land. It held that the question of whether the dispute over the land would have been shown on an accurate survey was a fact question on which expert testimony was required. Citing Waterview, a Maryland court also ruled that expert testimony

---

[78] 109 Md.App. 134, 674 A.2d 65 (1996); cert.den. 343 Md. 333, 681 A.2d 69 (1996).

[79] 674 A.2d at 71, fn. 1.

[80] 30 Mich.App. 687, 186 N.W.2d 803 (1971).

is required to establish whether an overlap would be disclosed by an accurate survey, and refused to decide the scope of the survey exception on summary judgment.[81]

12.3.6 Gaps And Gores Between Parcels

A party may purchase several parcels that appear to be contiguous to each other, but that do not necessarily abut along all or any of their supposed common boundary line. For example, if the insured is conveyed the West 20 acres and also the East 20 acres of the same quarter-quarter-section, but the quarter-quarter-section contains 42 acres instead of the normative 40 acres, there will be a two-acre strip of land lying between the two parcels. The land lying between the two parcels is known as a gap or gore. It can be difficult to determine who owns the gap strip, if it is not owned by the present owner of the two parcels.

The title insurance policy insures the title to the parcels described in Schedule A. However, if there is land lying between two parcels described in the policy, there is no coverage against an ownership claim by someone else as to that land.[82] The survey exception confirms the lack of any policy coverage for a possible gap or gore between the insured parcels.[83] The survey exception also negates coverage for the abandonment of an insured easement, when that fact would be depicted or noted on a survey prepared using the ALTA/NSPS survey standards.[84]

---

[81] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Knopf, 109 Md.App. 134, 674 A.2d 65 (1996); cert. den. 343 Md. 333, 681 A.2d 69 (1996).

[82] This fact has been acknowledged for perhaps as long as title insurance has been in existence. See the discussion of gaps and gores in T.D. McCullough, Surveys, Do or Don't—Will or Won't, in Title News, Volume 39, Number 7 (July 1960), p. 8. More recently, the lack of policy coverage for gaps and gores was discussed in the explanation for ALTA's adoption of a contiguity endorsement, as the ALTA 19 series, in Clifford L. Morgan, New Endorsement Forms Advance Industry, in Title News, Volume 83, Number 1 (January/February 2004), p. 24. Mr. Morgan, who was then the chair of the ALTA Forms Committee, observed that "When the land described in the policy is made up of several separately described parcels that appear to have somewhat contiguous boundaries, the insured and its counsel are quite often concerned about whether the parcels are contiguous and, if so, what boundary of a given parcel is contiguous to what boundary of another. They also are concerned that there may be strips, gaps, or gores between the respective contiguous boundaries." The ALTA 19 endorsement provides that assurance, he explained, impliedly acknowledging that the standard policy does not.

[83] As is explained in § 12.3.5.2, the best evidence of what an accurate survey would show is whether or not the issue must be depicted or noted on a survey prepared based on the ALTA/NSPS survey standards. Gaps and gores must be shown on such a survey. Section 6(B)(vii) of the 2011 ALTA/NSPS Minimum Standard Detail Requirements For ALTA/ACSM Land Title Surveys states that an ALTA/NSPS survey shall show: "The relationship of the boundaries of the surveyed property (i.e. contiguity, gaps, or overlaps) with its adjoiners, where ascertainable from Record Documents and/or from field evidence gathered during the process of conducting the survey of the property being surveyed. If the surveyed property is composed of multiple parcels, the extent of any gaps or overlaps between those parcels shall be identified. Where gaps or overlaps are identified, the surveyor shall, prior to preparation of the final plat or map, disclose this to the insurer and client for determination of a course of action concerning junior/senior rights."

[84] In Haley v. Hume, 448 P.3d 803 (Wash.App. 1 Div. 2019), the seller to the insured, Hume, had abandoned a recorded access easement by allowing her neighbor to take out a culvert that had rerouted a stream to go on the far side of the easement path. After the culvert was removed, the stream went back to its natural bed, bisecting the path of the driveway and making it unusable. Hume's property abutted a public street, and was not rendered landlocked by her abandonment of the easement. Several years later, Hume conveyed her property to Haley, apparently together with the

The issue of possible gaps and gores has spawned what is known as a contiguity endorsement, which indemnifies the insured in the event that some other party claims to own a gap parcel.[85] See § 9.11.2 for a discussion of the ALTA contiguity endorsement.

12.3.7 Shortage In Area

FORM 50, Appendix A
Shortage in acreage

If the area of the insured parcel is less than what is recited in the policy or in a survey map referenced in the policy, that shortage in area does not, by itself, evidence an adverse claim against the insured title. A question about the parcel's true area does not cause the insured to own any less than the full parcel conveyed to the insured. The very purpose of a survey is to locate in the field what has been described in the deed. Variances in area as shown on prior deeds or plats and as measured in the field are the norm rather than the exception, particularly as survey equipment becomes more precise.

The 2006 ALTA policies contain Covered Risk 2(a)(iii), which protects against "variations" that affect title and which would be disclosed on an accurate and complete land survey. An insured might argue that this coverage is broad enough to protect against a shortage in area, although the better reading of the coverage is that it does not so provide. Covered Risk 2(c), and the decisions construing that provision, are fully discussed at §9.9.1.

Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co.[86] held that the Schedule A legal description was not an affirmative assurance of acreage. The policy described the land as government lots. The court pointed out that, by definition, government lots contain fewer acres than perfect quarter-sections.

---

easement. Haley's title insurance policy contained a survey exception that read in part "...other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey or inspection of the premises." A court declared that Hume had abandoned the easement. Haley sued his title insurer based on his inability to use the easement. The court found no policy coverage, because of the survey exception. The court held that the best evidence as to what matters would be disclosed by an accurate survey was found in the ALTA/NSPS survey standards. The court relied on several ALTA/NSPS survey standards in order to reach this conclusion: "These minimum ALTA/NSPS requirements confirm that if Haley had conducted a survey in 2005, it would have disclosed that the easement area was exclusively possessed by someone other than Hume. The survey would have disclosed the recorded easement benefitting Haley's property. Following the ALTA/NSPS standard, the survey would have noted the evidence of Pugh's possession, noted that the easement was not observable at the time the survey was made, noted that there was evidence of use by someone other than Hume, and noted that there was a stream in the middle of the easement area. All of these would have indicated that the condition of the easement area in 2005 was inconsistent with the use of the easement that Haley believed he was acquiring. As such, a survey would have disclosed the loss that Haley now asserts."

[85] In Rio Mesa Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 4639103 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the insured's counsel drafted a custom contiguity endorsement that he contended gave the assurance that there was "the ability to move freely among the parcels" described in the endorsement. However, there is no assurance of access from parcel to parcel in the ALTA 19 series endorsements.

[86] 40 Cal.App. 3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1974).

Therefore, the Schedule A description supported the insurer's argument that the policy made no assurance as to acreage.

The inclusion of a survey exception in the policy makes it clear that there is no assurance as to the quantity of acreage being conveyed.[87] In Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co.,[88] the insured walked the land with the seller and was shown a 1975 survey describing the land as containing about 18.3 acres. The purchase contract set the price at "$16,000 per acre" and referred to the property as "19 acres more or less." The insurer had insured the property many times before. Each time, the deed and policy used a metes and bounds description which enclosed a parcel of about twelve acres. The last deed of record concluded by saying "CONTAINING 12.486 acres." However, the insurer issued its commitment using the description from the 1975 survey, not the last deed and policy description. Later, the insured discovered that the 1975 survey was inaccurate, and that the parcel had always contained about twelve acres, not nineteen. The insured sued the insurer for the land deficiency, and on the basis that it had a duty to disclose what it knew about the true acreage. The New Jersey Supreme Court reversed the trial and appellate courts, and held the insurer not liable. The court stated:

> In the absence of a recital of acreage, a title company does not insure the quantity of land. Title companies are in the business of guaranteeing title, not acreage. [citations omitted] To obtain such insurance, an insured should provide the title company with an acceptable survey that recites the quantity of land described or obtain from the company an express guaranty of the quantity of land insured in the policy.
>
> *   *   *
>
> Whatever else the phrase "other matters" might mean in a survey exception, it clearly refers to the dimensions of the lot lines and the size of the lot. The size of a tract simply cannot be ascertained with any certainty from a search of public records alone. The reason is that land exists on the ground, not on paper. When a description refers to a point in the line of another, only a survey can reveal the actual size of a piece of property and the amount of land included in a deed. A shortage in acreage is one of the facts that an accurate survey and inspection would disclose.[89]

In US Life Title Ins. Co. v. Hutsell,[90] for example, the policy insured two parcels and recited their acreage as shown on the survey. Schedule B contained a survey exception. Finally, the title

---

[87] Fee v. Stahley, 2008 WL 4849844 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (policy did not assure that property had same shore frontage or acreage as represented by real estate agent; survey exception negated any coverage); Wolf v. Clack, 2009 WL 5173715 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished) (survey exception "means what it says," that policy does not protect against either record overlap or shortage in area).

[88] 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[89] 562 A.2d at 216.

[90] 164 Ga.App. 443, 296 S.E.2d 760 (1982).

agent stated by a cover letter to the policy that "the survey has been insured." The court found the survey exception in "direct conflict" with the "survey has been insured" statement, and reversed a summary judgment in favor of the insurer. It stated:

> Shortage of area ... may be sufficiently related to the standard notions of title defect or encumbrance as to be a risk allowed coverage by title insurance.[91]

Therefore, an affirmative assurance as to acreage can cancel out the survey exception as to acreage.

12.3.8 Shortage In Distance

FORM 51, Appendix A
Shortage in distance

If a dimension or boundary line of the insured parcel is shorter than what is recited in the policy or on the subdivision plat, that shortage in distance does not, by itself, evidence an adverse claim on title. A question about the parcel's true dimensions does not cause the insured to own any less than the full parcel conveyed to the insured. The very purpose of a survey is to locate in the field what has been described in the deed. Variances between distances as recorded and as measured are the norm rather than the exception, particularly as survey equipment becomes more precise.

Therefore, a mere shortage in distance does not invoke policy coverage, whether or not the policy contains a survey exception. The policy provides no assurance that a distance recited on a recorded subdivision plat is accurate, even when the policy does not contain a survey exception. The policy is not a guarantee of the accuracy of the recitals on the subdivision plat, and the policy does not incorporate those recitals by reference merely by using the platted legal description in Schedule A. On unplatted land, the policy also does not assure the insured that the land has the full area which is represented by the recited distances, even when the policy does not contain a survey exception. However, a recital of distance in the policy has been found to create coverage when the inaccurate distance envelops a parcel owned by someone other than the insured, and the policy does not contain a survey exception. On unplatted land as well as platted land, however, coverage as to most situations that could be classified as a shortage in distance is negated by the survey exception.

The 2006 ALTA policies contain Covered Risk 2(a)(iii), which protects against "variations" that affect title and which would be disclosed on an accurate and complete land survey. An insured might argue that this coverage is broad enough to protect against a shortage in distance, although the better reading of the coverage is that it does not so provide. That Covered Risk is fully discussed at §9.9.1.

The policy does not assure or guarantee the accuracy of the distances recited on recorded subdivision plats. In Sommers v. Smith and Berman, P.A.,[92] the purchasers "thought, because of representations made by the seller and the real estate broker, that one boundary of the lot was further from the house than it actually was." In a suit against the insurer, the court ruled in the insurer's favor, holding that there "was no defect in the title of the property which they were conveyed and which was insured.[93] The fact that the insurer did not limit its survey exception to matters disclosed by the survey did not create coverage which otherwise did not exist. Because the title to the property was not defective in any way, "the validity of the exclusion has no bearing on the merits of buyers' claim."[94] Also, in Mims v. Louisville Title Ins. Co.,[95] the court held that there was no duty to defend a complaint that alleged that the subdivision plat contained mistakes in the sizes and descriptions of the lots and the location of the streets. The policy contained a survey exception, which the court found to exclude coverage.

---

[91] Id.

[92] 637 So.2d 60 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 1994).

The policy does not insure the accuracy of distances recited in the Schedule A legal, even when the survey exception is removed. However, the legal description recited in Schedule A of the policy is not a policy term, and conflicting calls in the description of the insured parcel cannot create coverage. Rather, Schedule A is merely a declarations page, and the description of the insured parcel merely identifies the land insured, as discussed in §8.2. Some courts have correctly found that an apparent conflict between two calls in the legal description does not invoke policy coverage.[96] Other courts have incorrectly held that two conflicting calls in the insured's legal description result in an "ambiguity" in the policy that should be construed in the insured's favor so that the policy insures the title to a parcel that is larger than what was actually conveyed.[97]

---

[93] 637 So.2d at 61.

[94] 637 So.2d at 62.

[95] 358 So.2d 1028 (Ala. 1978).

[96] In Lynburn Enterprises, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 191 Ga.App. 710, 382 S.E. 2d 599 (1989), the insured property was described by courses and distances. The property was bounded by public streets or alleys on all sides. A survey was obtained and the survey exception removed. Later, the insured discovered that the insured property was smaller than as stated in the survey. The court construed the policy as insuring ownership to the monuments of the public streets and alleys, not the stated distances. In doing so, it used the general survey principle that monuments prevail over distances. To bolster this conclusion, the court noted that the monuments were obvious, and the insured had not been led to believe from the policy description that it had bought the larger hypothetical parcel. Rather, it said: "It follows that plaintiff purchased exactly what it bargained for--property lying between Bancroft Circle, Second Street and the public alley. The mere fact that the length of the call lines did not meet plaintiff's expectations is of no consequence. Plaintiff received good title to the land in question. See Land Trust Co. v. Morgan, 22 Ga.App. 388, 95 S.E. 1006. This action to recover title insurance proceeds cannot, therefore, be permitted to stand."

[97] In Lagomarsino v. San Jose Abstract & Title Ins. Co., 178 Cal.App.2d 455, 3 Cal.Rptr. 80 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1960), the policy description called to both an iron pipe and to the boundary of a railroad right-of-way, and used a distance of 90.50 feet. The iron pipe was located at 90.50 feet. The distance to the accurate right-of-way boundary was 70.50 feet. The court said that the recitation of both the pipe and the distance created an ambiguity in the legal description which was to be construed in the insured's favor. This ruling was bolstered by the court's finding that the insured believed that the iron pipe was placed at the true boundary with the right-of-way. However, Lagomarsino does not refer or construe a survey exception. In Marandino v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 156 Va. 696, 159 S.E. 181 (1931), the policy legal description recited: "Beginning at the Northeast corner of 22nd and Broad Streets, as established by ordinance of City Council of the City of Richmond, approved October 14, 1911, thence running Northwardly along and fronting on the

When the policy contains a survey exception and the land is unplatted, the exception reinforces the lack of coverage for an inaccurate distance in the policy legal description.[98] In Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co.,[99] one boundary line was described both by a call and distance and by reference to the land of an adjoiner. Later it was discovered that the true distance to the adjoiner's land was significantly less than as stated in the deed and policy. The court held that the policy insured only up to the adjoiner's land, not the full (erroneous) distance of the survey call. The Walker Rogge court, as in Lynburn, found that the insured received all of the property owned by the grantor, and therefore had no loss.[100] Also, in Bennett v. Investors Title Ins. Co.,[101] a policy that contained a survey exception was found not to protect against the effect of a survey which inaccurately showed the width of a highway right-of-way. The Bennett court relied on Walker Rogge in making its ruling.

12.3.9 Overlaps

An overlap between two recorded deeds should be depicted on an accurate survey, and is excepted from coverage by a survey exception.[102] However, an overlap is not discovered in survey field work, because it is created by recorded deeds for adjoining parcels that each purport to convey some of the same land to different grantees.[103] As one court stated, "a classic case of an overlap"

Eastern line of 22nd Street 38 feet and 5 inches… ." A five-foot strip of land had previously been taken for street, reducing the frontage to about 33 feet. The insured had built a retaining wall in the part taken for street. The court held that, because the policy legal description contained an inaccurate distance which included the land previously conveyed, the policy insured title to the land taken for street. The court rejected the argument that coverage was negated by the reference in the policy legal description to the ordinance by which the road width was set. Again, Marandino contained no discussion of a survey exception.

[98] In Patel v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2013 Ark.App. 670, 2013 WL 6002069 (Ark.App.) (unpublished), however, when the legal description had a call of a certain distance to the southerly right of way of a road, and the distance was later shown to be inaccurate, the court refused to rule as a matter of law that the call to the adjoining road controlled the distance, and that the survey exception negated coverage.

[99] 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[100] In Walker Rogge, the court considered whether a reference to a deed to a neighbor is actually a monument, and found that it was. The insured had argued, with some support, that a "monument" should be limited to physical or natural objects. The Walker Rogge court disagreed. See §12.3.5 for a discussion of what may be considered a "monument."

[101] 635 S.E.2d 649 (S.C. 2006).

[102] Downing v. Eubanks, 557 N.E.2d 1027 (Ind.App. 1990); RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W.2d 607, 609 (Tenn.App. 1989); Fischer Sand and Aggregate, LLP v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1316130 (Minn.App.) (unpublished).

[103] See Fischer Sand and Aggregate, LLP v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1316130 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), in which the overlap was created by the division of a larger parcel by deeds conveying land by acreage, when the land contained fewer total acres than were recited in the two deeds. The court found that the survey exception negated coverage for the overlap.

exists where "[the insured's] deed covers a portion of the land described in a prior deed held by [the neighbor]."[104] The effect of an overlap is that the junior conveyance of the overlap area conveys no title, as one court explained this way:

> 'If a grantor conveys property, part of which belongs to the grantor and part of which belongs to another, the deed is good as to the property owned by the grantor and a mere nullity as to the property not owned by the grantor.' Lisenbee v. Parr (1970), 62 Tenn.App. 518, 465 S.W.2d 361, 365, cert. denied.[105]

One decision held that the survey exception would apply only if "the problem was something not susceptible of ascertainment through title examination but only through an accurate survey."[106] This is a false limitation on the survey exception. Although an overlap is almost always based on two recorded deeds, the deed to the adjoiner is not in the chain of title to the insured parcel. The title examiner is not required to examine deeds in the chains of title to neighboring parcels, which do not impart constructive notice to a buyer of the insured parcel. See §3.4.7.5 for a discussion of the doctrine of constructive notice in regard to the chain of title. Thus, most courts have found correctly that the survey exception applies to an overlap without considering if the source of that overlap could be discovered in a title search.[107]

A boundary line dispute can be mischaracterized as being an overlap. In American Title Ins. Co. v. Carter,[108] the disputed boundary was described on both deeds as the quarter-quarter section line. One party claimed the issue was an overlap of recorded descriptions. The court accurately concluded that the issue was not an overlap, which results from two inconsistent boundaries, but a dispute as to where the agreed-on line ran--that is, a question of "where 'on the ground' that line should be drawn."[109]

An overlap, therefore, is the result of conflicting conveyances, not a matter of possession such as an encroachment or adverse possession. The insurer may be required to prove that the overlap would be disclosed on an accurate survey. The correct analysis of an alleged overlap is:

1. Determine whether or not the legal descriptions for the two neighboring parcels can

---

[104] RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W.2d 607, 609 (Tenn.App. 1989).

[105] Downing v. Eubanks, 557 N.E.2d 1027, 1029-30 (Ind.App. 1990).

[106] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Knopf, 109 Md.App. 134, 674 A.2d 65, 72 (1996).

[107] Geiger v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3802724 (Wis.App.) (unpublished). In Fischer Sand and Aggregate, LLP v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1316130 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), the overlap was created by the division of a larger parcel by deeds conveying land by acreage, when the land contained fewer total acres than were recited in the two deeds. The court found that the survey exception negated coverage for the overlap.

[108] 670 So.2d 1115 (Fla.App. 1996), later decision, 710 So.2d 1020.

[109] 670 So.2d at 1117.

be harmonized. There is no overlap if the two parcels share a common and agreed-on boundary line, even if a measurement appears to conflict, as discussed in §12.3.9.1.

2. If an overlap exists and would be shown on an accurate survey, the overlap is removed from coverage by the survey exception, as addressed in §12.3.9.2.

3. If an overlap exists but would not be shown on an accurate survey, the exception may not apply, as is discussed in §12.3.9.3.

12.3.9.1 Harmonizing Claimed Overlaps

Courts recognize valid public policy in harmonizing descriptions whenever possible to avoid overlaps and other boundary disputes. This is done principally by use of the "monuments over distances" survey law rule. See §12.3.8 for more discussion of what constitutes a monument.

In Bernhard v. Reischman,[110] the court applied the monuments over distances rule to find that no overlap existed and thus the insured did not suffer a loss. The insured land lay on the south slough of a river. If a call in the insured description was given effect, it had the effect of vesting title in the insured to a large parcel of land that had accreted to the neighboring parcel. However, the deed also referred to the "bank" of the river. The court held that the policy did not insure the insured as owning to the called distance, but merely to the bank of the river. Thus, there was no overlap in descriptions. Further, the court found that "[a]n accurate survey would have disclosed the substantial discrepancy between the [actual v. deeded] courses and distances in the deed and the calls referenced to the South Slough."

12.3.9.2 Determining Whether Overlap Would Show On Survey

FORM 52, Appendix A
Overlap

An overlap of two recorded deeds is shown on an accurate survey. For example, a surveyor performing an ALTA/NSPS survey is required to show any overlap disclosed by a recorded document.[111] Those standards are discussed at §12.3.5.

A court may require expert testimony to establish that an accurate survey would show a record overlap.[112] The court found expert testimony to be required to establish whether an overlap

[110] 33 Wash.App. 569, 658 P.2d 2 (1983).

[111] The February 23, 2016 Minimum Standard Detail Requirements for ALTA/NSPS Land Title Surveys say, at ¶6(b)(vii), "The relationship of the boundaries of the surveyed property with its adjoiners (e.g., contiguity, gaps, overlaps), where ascertainable from documents provided to or obtained by the surveyor pursuant to Section 4 and/or from field evidence gathered during the process of conducting the fieldwork. If the surveyed property is composed of multiple parcels, the extent of any gaps or overlaps between those parcels shall be identified. Where gaps or overlaps are identified, the surveyor shall, prior to or upon delivery of the final plat or map, disclose this to the insurer and client."

[112] 1440 Empire Boulevard Development Corp. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 60 A.D.3d 1354, 874 N.Y.S.2d 857 (Table), 2009 N.Y. Slip Op. 02072 , 2009 WL 724411 (N.Y.A.D. 4 Dept.) (unpublished) (insurer did not present expert

would be disclosed on an accurate survey or by a title examination. Therefore, the court refused to decide the matter for either party on summary judgment.

Some cases have held that an overlap would be disclosed by an accurate survey.[113] Others have held the opposite.[114] An exception that includes the word "overlap" is deemed to except recorded overlaps.[115] RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York[116] found no coverage as to an overlap because of the survey exception. The court stated that the policy does not define "overlap," but supplied this definition:

> … [W]here [one] deed covers a portion of the land described in a prior deed held by [another], the facts show a classic case of an overlap. While we are not aware of any authority which defines the term "overlap" as used in this policy, we think that the facts of this case come within the common, ordinary meaning of the term.[117]

In RLB, the competing deeds each contained metes and bounds descriptions. In 1943, when the TVA bought to the south, its northerly boundary line was the north line of a road. The road was later moved south. When the insured purchased, its deed conveyed to the north line of the existing road, which the county surveyor had incorrectly assumed was in its former location. Thus, the insured description contained land owned by the TVA between the new roadway and the true boundary. The court found the overlap excepted even though it was created by instruments in the public records. It testimony that the claimed overlap would be shown on an accurate survey, and insured produced survey that did not show overlap).

---

[113] RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W. 2d 607 (Tenn.App. 1989); Downing v. Eubanks, 557 NE2d 1027 (Ind.App. 1990); Wolf v. Clack, 2009 WL 5173715 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished) (survey exception "means what it says," that policy does not protect against either record overlap or shortage in area).

[114] See 1440 Empire Boulevard Development Corp. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 60 A.D.3d 1354, 874 N.Y.S.2d 857 (Table), 2009 N.Y. Slip Op. 02072 , 2009 WL 724411 (N.Y.A.D. 4 Dept.) (unpublished). In Crawford v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 585 So.2d 952 (Fla.App. 1991), the court found that the possession exception was not applicable, because the conflicting deed was recorded. The court did not knock out the survey exception due to the recording of the deed. Rather, the court found a question of fact as to whether or not a recorded deed overlap was excepted (which overturned a summary judgment for the insurer). In Pentecost v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 704 So.2d 1103, 23 Fla.L. Weekly D199 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 1997), rev.den. 718 So.2d 169 (1998), the insureds were sued for being "wrongfully in possession of" a portion of the plaintiffs' land, to which the insureds countered that they "own[ed] title to the lands in dispute under their deed." The insurer was found obligated to defend the insureds, apparently because the suit challenged title to land described in the policy. However, the appellate court did not address whether or not the survey and possession exceptions would negate the duty to indemnify.

[115] Geiger v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3802724 (Wis.App.) (unpublished). In Fischer Sand and Aggregate, LLP v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1316130 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), the overlap was created by the division of a larger parcel by deeds conveying land by acreage, when the land contained fewer total acres than were recited in the two deeds. The court found that the survey exception negated coverage for the overlap.

[116] 774 S.W.2d 607 (Tenn.App. 1989).

[117] 774 S.W.2d at 609.

held that, while the competing deeds were recorded, the existence of the overlap could only be discovered in the field because it depended on the location of the roadway.[118]

Likewise, in Downing v. Eubanks,[119] an overlap created by two deeds from a common grantor was found not to be covered as a result of the survey exception. The insured deed was the second conveyance. The court denied the insured's claim to the land. As to the policy claim, the court stated: "[a]n accurate survey of Tract 1 would have resulted in the overlap being covered by the policy." The Downing court came to this conclusion because a survey of the overlapping Tract 2 did indeed show the overlap area. The court even attached the survey as an exhibit to the opinion to prove the point. Downing agrees with the ALTA/NSPS survey standards. See §12.3.5.

In Swanson v. Mid-South Title Ins. Co.,[120] the insured deed overlapped with an earlier deed. The two parcels had a common grantor, but did not come from the same chain of title. The court found that there was no notice in the chain of title, because the overlapping property was from a different chain. Thus, the insurer was not responsible for not reporting the overlap deed.[121] The Swanson court also found that the overlap would not have been disclosed by an accurate survey. It held that there was no physical evidence of the neighbor's possession of the disputed land at policy date. In so finding, however, the court did not address the usual standard that a survey is obligated to review deeds of adjoiners. The Swanson court did not finish its analysis there, however. It ruled that the broad language of the Swanson survey exception[122] limited the policy to insurance of the "record title":

> [w]ith the survey exception a part of the policy, the obligation of Mid-South was only to insure the title to the property actually acquired by Swanson if the defects were not revealed by the record title.[123]

---

[118] "[W]ithout extrinsic proof, it would be impossible to locate RLB's property with respect to the northern line of the TVA property. We think the situation presented is exactly what the exclusion in the title policy refers to: a set of facts under which the true location of the boundary line could only be established by an accurate survey." 774 S.W.2d at 609 (Tenn.App. 1989).

[119] 557 N.E.2d 1027 (Ind.App. 1990).

[120] 692 S.W.2d 415 (Tenn.App. 1984).

[121] The court stated: "As to ascertaining any defect or conflict from the public record, we find, as the trial court implicitly found that the tracts of land conveyed to Bue and Swanson respectively were separately described tracts of land in the deed by which the grantor Kelly acquired title. Joe Fowlkes, attorney, who prepared the title papers and examined the title testified, 'I searched the title and it's clearly an encroachment. It is not a situation where somebody conveyed off some of this property. There's never been a conveyance off of this tract that Mr. Swanson has. The line has been encroached upon through the years, and of course that happens with time, particularly when you have got a description that old. That description goes back at least 75 or 80 years.'" 692 S.W.2d at 418-9.

[122] The exception in the Swanson policy read: "Any discrepancies, conflicts, encroachments, servitudes, shortages in area and boundaries or other facts which a correct survey would show."

[123] 692 S.W.2d at 420.

Because it had already ruled that the overlap could not have been discovered by a competent exam of the public records, the insurer was not responsible for any loss caused by the overlap.[124]

In Nautilus, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.,[125] the insured property bordered water. The adjoining property description included land to a government survey meander line, and had already been platted showing the meander line as the boundary line.[126] The insured land included a metes and bounds description of tidelands lying between the ordinary high and low tide lines. The tidelands had also been included in the adjoining plat. The court ruled that a survey would have shown the meander line and the tide lines, but not the neighbor's claim of title. Therefore, the court ruled that the matter was not removed from coverage by the survey exception.

12.3.9.3 Affirmative Coverage For Overlap Area

Endorsements that assure that the parcel insured is as depicted on a referenced survey are discussed in §9.11.2. A similar affirmative coverage was found to exist when the insurer adopted a new description created by a survey, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. McKee.[127] In that case, an overlap had been created by an unrecorded deed. Early deeds to the insured property excepted the land conveyed in that deed, but more recent conveyances did not contain the exception. The land was a ranch, and there was no physical evidence of a possession line. The insured thought he was buying the land in the unrecorded deed, and he obtained a survey that included the overlap area. The insurer agreed to issue the policy using the survey description. Although the policy contained a survey exception, the court found that, when the insurer adopted the survey description, it affirmatively insured the title to the overlap area against adverse claims. The crux of McKee is its holding that the insurer gave an affirmative assurance that the insured owned the overlap parcel by adopting the survey description.

12.3.10 Encroachments

The survey exception removes coverage for improvements on neighboring land that encroach onto the insured property, and also improvements on the insured land that encroach onto an adjoining parcel.[128] The survey exception has been found unambiguous in the context of

---

[124] Swanson is not the only case which says that the inclusion of the survey exception limits the policy to insurance of "record" title. In Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 673, 584 P.2d 939 (Wash. 1978), the policy contained the survey exception. The court rejected a boundary line dispute claim, stating: "Here, there was nothing, express or implied, which suggested that the title insurance policy insured more than the record title to the property."

[125] 13 Wash.App. 345, 534 P.2d 1388 (1975).

[126] "In 1951, the property was platted and submitted with maps to the county commissioners, who approved the platting. An addendum to the plat, which was of record when Transamerica issued the title insurance policy to Nautilus, shows the eastern boundary of the property owned by Nautilus to be the government meander line which the map locates in the waters of Hood Canal."

[127] 354 S.W.2d 401 (Tex.App. 1962).

[128] "'To encroach' may be defined in ordinary terms as "to enter by gradual steps or by stealth into the possessions or encroachments.[129] The exception is not skirted by calling the encroaching improvement something else, such as a "protrusion."[130]

12.3.10.1 Types Of Encroachments Excepted

The following types of encroachments have been held to be excepted by a survey exception:

1. A neighboring driveway's encroachment onto the insured parcel, resulting in a claim of prescriptive easement.[131]

2. A neighbor's sewer drain field encroaching onto the insured property.[132]

3. The encroachment of the insured's house onto the neighbor's property.[133] The survey exception negates any assurance of title to buildings encroaching onto neighboring land.[134]

4. The encroachment of a subsurface footing for a retaining wall onto the insured property.[135] rights of another." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 747 (1976). The same source defines 'encroachment' as 'an instance of encroaching (as in the building of a structure in a public park or a fence that projects over a neighbor's land).' Id." Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67, 76, note 8 (D.D.C. 1993).

---

[129] Muscat v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 135 Mich.App. 26, 351 N.W.2d 893 (1984); Alden v. Schuster, 2008 WL 2039075 (Conn.Super. 2008) (unpublished). See also §12.3.2, regarding ambiguity and the survey exception generally.

[130] Cook Consultants, Inc. v. Larson, 677 S.W.2d 718 (Tex.App. 1984), aff'd in part and rev'd in part Larson v. Cook Consultants, Inc., 690 S.W.2d 567 (Tex. 1986).

[131] Brenner v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 240 Va. 185, 397 S.E.2d 100 (Va. 1990). However, in Allpress v. Lawyers Title Insurance Corp., 218 Tenn. 673, 405 S.W.2d 572 (1966), the insured alleged that an encroaching driveway would not have been disclosed by an accurate survey. Based solely on this contested fact, the court found that there was a question of fact as to whether the driveway would have been shown, and denied the insurer's motion for summary judgment.

[132] Ely v. Munshower, 4 Pa.D. & C.3d 430 (1977).

[133] Alden v. Schuster, 2008 WL 2039075 (Conn.Super. 2008) (unpublished); Walters v. Marler, 83 Cal.App.3d 1, 147 Cal.Rptr. 655 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1978); Cook Consultants, Inc. v. Larson, 677 S.W.2d 718 (Tex.App. 1984), aff'd in relevant part in Larson v. Cook Consultants, Inc., 690 S.W.2d 567 (1986); Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984). The Heyd court, however, allowed the insured to amend its pleadings to assert that the house encroachment should somehow have been discovered by the insurer in its separate role as abstractor of title.

[134] Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984); Cook Consultants, Inc. v. Larson, 677 S.W.2d 718 (Tex.App. 1984), aff'd in part and rev'd in part in Larson v. Cook Consultants, Inc., 690 S.W.2d 567 (1986) (survey exception removes coverage against effect of house's encroachment onto neighbor's property).

[135] Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67 (D.D.C. 1993). However, the Kayfirst court found that such an underground encroachment was not excepted by the survey exception. The court construed the survey exception

5. The encroachment onto the insured property of eaves and a downspout.[136]

6. The encroachment by the insureds onto their neighbor's land of "virtually everything beyond [the insureds'] back door, including their swimming pool, surrounding concrete deck and appurtenant equipment."[137]

12.3.10.2 Encroachment Onto Adjoining Land Of Structure On Insured Land

FORM 79, Appendix A
Encroachment

When a building on the insured parcel encroaches onto adjoining land, the policy does not insure the title to the encroaching structure and any possible coverage is negated by the survey exception.[138] However, the policy may insure ownership of a building if that structure is specifically identified in Schedule A as being part of the Land.[139] An encroachment may also be considered to be covered by the policy if an endorsement insures that improvements are located as shown on a survey, as discussed in §12.3.15.

The Residential policy's Covered Title Risk 12, protecting against enforced removal of

---

as excepting only those encroachments which would be disclosed by an accurate survey, and held that this subsurface encroachment would not have been shown. See §12.3.3 for a discussion of the construction of the exception.

[136] Houston Title Guaranty Co. v. Fontenot, 339 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App. 1960). However, the court found that these encroachments were not excepted, because the exception used did not include the word "encroachment." Further, the court ruled that a "correct" survey is different from a "complete" survey, and that the insurer did not establish that a "correct" survey would show encroaching eaves and downspouts. The court finally rested its finding of coverage on the conclusion, however, that the dispute concerned title to the land underneath the encroachment, not the encroachment itself.

[137] Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 Cal.App.4th 1294, 33 Cal.Rptr. 771, 773 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994).

[138] Hand v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 1103725 (Tex.App.-Fort Worth) (unpublished) (policy did not insure title to wavy wall that strayed beyond insured's boundary line in places, and survey exception negated duty to defend against neighbor's trespass lawsuit); 631 North Broad Street, LP v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 4051798 (E.D.Pa. 2018) (unpublished), aff'd 2019 WL 3383878, 778 Fed.Appx. 164 (3rd Cir. (Pa.) 2019) (unpublished) (encroaching wall not insured in policy, based on definition of Land, which lack of coverage was buttressed by the survey exception, with appeals court stating that "the underlying litigation involved an encroachment or boundary dispute that a complete and accurate survey would have disclosed."); First American Title Ins. Co. v. Dahlmann, 291 Wis.2d 156, 715 N.W.2d 609, 2006 WI 65 (Wis. 2006) (underground parking garage built in street not part of insured Land; sole coverage would be if encroachment was so substantial as to render title to insured Land unmarketable).

[139] Broadway Realty Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. & Trust Co., 226 N.Y. 335, 123 N.E. 754 (1919). For further discussion of this case under the subject of what constitutes land, see §8.7.

"structures," does not cause the policy to insure the ownership of an encroaching structure.[140] See §3.2.3.1.7 regarding forced removal coverage.

12.3.10.3 Encroachments Not Visible

Almost every form of visible encroachment would appear on an accurate survey. However, a survey will not disclose rights completely below or above the surface for which there is no surface evidence. In Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co.,[141] a neighbor's step footing buried four feet underground extended seven feet inside the property line. The court found the encroachment a covered matter, because the encroachment was an "encumbrance." The court also held that it rendered title unmarketable. However, the court found the survey exception inapplicable because it considered the exception limited to those encroachments that would be disclosed by a survey.

Kayfirst follows the cases under the inspection clause and regarding adverse possession that find policy coverage for possession issues that would not be shown on an accurate survey. See §12.2.5 regarding limitations on the possession exception, §12.3.17.2 regarding matters not visible relating to the inspection clause, and §12.3.5.3 on the subject of what is meant by an accurate survey.

12.3.11 Boundary Line Disputes

FORM 77, Appendix A
Boundary line dispute

A survey exception typically excepts boundary line disputes. The exception applies to a true boundary line dispute, in which the neighboring legal descriptions do not conflict and the issue is strictly where the true boundary line is located.[142] A boundary line dispute can also be based on a

---

[140] Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 Cal.App.4th 1294, 33 Cal.Rptr. 771, 776 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994). The measure of damage for an encroachment for which the policy provides protection is the lesser of the diminution in value resulting from the defect, or the cost to remove it. If the insurer protects against an encroachment and then removes it, under its right to clear title, the insured suffers no compensable loss. See Perry v. Stewart Title Co., 756 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1985), in which an encroachment onto an easement was resolved by payment for a partial release.

[141] Kayfirst Corp. v. Washington Terminal Co., 813 F.Supp. 67 (D.D.C. 1993), relying on Glyn v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 132 App.Div. 859, 117 N.Y.S. 424 (1909), which had also held encroachments to be encumbrances which made title unmarketable.

[142] American Title Ins. Co. v. Carter, 670 So.2d 1115 (Fla.App. 1996), later app., 710 So.2d 1020, held that when both deeds called to the same line, the problem was not an overlap but a question of "where 'on the ground' that line should be drawn," and thus an excepted boundary line dispute. In Fischer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 388 S.W.3d 181 (Mo.App. W.D. 2012), the court observed that "a boundary by acquiescence exists if there is an uncertain boundary and the landowners fix the boundary by an 'agreement that is presumed as a result of long acquiescence.'" It found that a boundary by acquiescence did not even invoke a Covered Risk, and also was removed from coverage by the possession exception. The court did not reach the survey exception, which also appeared in the policy. In Hofmann v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 107 Wash.App. 1010, 2001 WL 803756 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the insured property bounded on a state highway. The insured learned that the highway boundary was nearer than the seller had represented. The distance in the insured property's legal description may also have been inaccurate as a result. The court found the matter removed from coverage by the survey exception, even though the legal description did not except the recorded highway deed:

line set by agreement or acquiescence, such as the placement of a fence in a location by agreement of the two neighbors.[143]

The term boundary dispute is sometimes used as a label for a disagreement that is really of a different variety. Overlaps between two deeds of record are discussed at §12.3.9. Adverse possession claims decided under the possession exception are discussed at §12.2.5. Those cases decided under the survey and inspection exception are found at §12.3.17.1.

Some boundary line disputes are caused by surveyor error in measuring and setting of monuments in the field. Such errors create contradictory field evidence as to the true or established boundary line, the simplest example being two monuments placed at a corner used as the point of beginning for two or more parcels. (By contrast, apparent overlaps are often resolved by tying both parcels' descriptions to an undisputed monument.) For example, in Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust Co.,[144] two recorded private surveys disagreed as to the proper placement of the government survey line between two government lots. The survey exception removed coverage for the dispute. The insurer had no duty to prosecute the insured's action to determine the boundary line, or to defend the insured against the neighbor's counterclaim.[145]

Similarly, in Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn.,[146] the insured placed a new building in reliance on the boundary line as shown on an inaccurate survey. Later, the neighbor obtained what the parties stipulated was an accurate survey. Using the correct boundary line, the building was too close to the boundary line to allow trucks to load and unload at the insured's building. The exception was found to apply, and coverage denied. Also, a court determined that the survey exception would remove coverage as to a boundary dispute that apparently resulted from inaccurate dimensions shown on a recorded subdivision plat.[147]

The exception does not negate coverage for a claim of reformation. A seller's claim that extra

---

"Here, an accurate survey would have taken into account the 1953 Deed that conveyed a portion of the land to the state for future highway expansion. [citing Walter G. Robillard, Clark on Surveying and Boundaries, The Michie Company] Such a survey may have disclosed a question of location, boundary and area regarding the Hofmann's property. Because the claim against Chicago Title presents a boundary question that an accurate survey may have disclosed, we find that the Schedule B survey exception excludes coverage." Id. at 3.

[143] See Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 673, 584 P. 2d 939 (Wash. 1978) (boundary line dispute resulting from claim to old fence line); Fischer Sand and Aggregate, LLP v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1316130 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (exception negated coverage for boundary dispute based on fence line set in a disputed location).

[144] 18 Cal.App.3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971).

[145] 18 Cal.App. 3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971).

[146] 177 F.Supp. 925 (W.D.Mo. 1959).

[147] Lefkovich v. Kearns, 2005 WL 1154389 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished). Lefkovich was not a dispute about policy coverage, however, but a malpractice action brought by the purchasers against their attorney on the theory that he should have advised them to obtain an owner's policy. The court found that the lawyer did not commit malpractice, because the policy would not have protected the buyers against the boundary dispute.

land had been conveyed by mutual mistake was found not to be a boundary line dispute.[148] A boundary line dispute did not exist when the proper interpretation of the insured's deed would be to say that it excepted the parcel claimed by the true owner.[149]

12.3.12 Water Boundaries

Establishing a boundary line along a body of water is a science that requires the combination of title records, survey field work, and historical research as to the water's edge at time of the original government grant and since. The surveyor or other expert must attempt to determine the origin of the dry land, as fill, alluvion or possibly accretion resulting from a man-made protrusion such as a breakwall. State laws differ on the question of whether the state or the adjoining owners have title to the bed of a water body.[150]

The ALTA title insurance policies state that they do not insure any right or title that the insured may hold in the bed of an adjoining body of water.[151] Nonetheless, it is common practice for a title insurer to place a water rights exception in Schedule B of a policy that insures a parcel adjoining or near a body of water. Such a water exception confirms the lack of any policy assurance concerning any rights the insured may have in such water body, as further discussed in § 8.9. A water exception is not an affirmative assurance that the insured parcel abuts the water body named in the exception.[152]

It is common for dry land to be added to a parcel abutting a water body by the natural processes of accretion and reliction, and for such parcel to shrink due to erosion of the shore. There are various methods used to divide the new dry land created by accretion and reliction between the adjoining owners on the shore. Also, a river may change course by an avulsive movement. This can cause a parcel to lose or gain shore frontage. However, because avulsion is a sudden action that cuts off an oxbow in the river, the rule is that ownership of the oxbow does not change hands when the avulsive movement occurs.

The changes in the size and shape of shoreland property due to accretion, reliction, erosion and avulsion affect title. It is very common for the policy to contain a water exception that negates

---

[148] Chanoux v. Title Ins. Co., 258 S.W.2d 866 (Tex.App. 1953).

[149] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. McKee, 354 S.W.2d 401 (Tex.App. 1962).

[150] See, for example, Nielsen, Insuring Title to Riparian and Littoral Property, Michigan Real Property Review, Summer, 1990; Nielsen, Determining and Surveying Water Boundary Lines in Michigan, Michigan Bar Journal, September, 1987; and decisions and articles cited therein.

[151] The definition of Land in Condition 1(g) of the 2006 ALTA policies says: "…The term 'Land' does not include any property beyond the lines of the area described in Schedule A, nor any right, title, interest, estate, or easement in abutting streets, roads, avenues, alleys, lanes, ways, or waterways, but this does not modify or limit the extent that a right of access to and from the Land is insured by this policy." (emphasis added) coverage for any dispute over the title to accreted or relicted land.[153] In addition, coverage for disputes about ownership of accreted or relicted land may be negated by a survey exception or a possession exception.[154] In Bernhard v. Reischman,[155] the court held that a dispute over accretion on a river concerned "boundary and area," invoking a survey exception that used those terms. However, in Nautilus, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.,[156] the survey exception was held not to apply when neighboring parcels were described using overlapping water boundary lines, and the insurer "knew from the public record about the conflict between the Trail's End plat and the Nautilus property at the time it issued its policy." Therefore, the court said that:

[152] Schiller v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 444 P.3d 459 (Table), 2019 WL 3202204 (Nev.) (unpublished) (parcel separated from the shore of Lake Tahoe by a buffer strip along the shore of the man-made lake was not insured as being on the shore because the policy contained an exception for the rights of the public in the lake).

> …although a survey would establish a line of ordinary high water and the meander line, the dispute was over who owned the land between those points. A survey would therefore not be dispositive of the dispute; the exception does not apply.[157]

The court also held that the insurer could have and did find the overlap in the public records was not altered by the fact that the complaint also alleged adverse possession.

12.3.13 Survey Obtained But Not Submitted For Survey Coverage

The mere fact that an insured obtained a survey does not render the survey exception null, if the insured did not request or pay for removal of the survey exception. At least three fundamental insurance principles lie as foundation for this conclusion. First, courts abhor an interpretation that gives coverage by estoppel. In most markets, the survey exception is removed only on payment of an additional premium. When there is an established premium for a coverage, the court should find that no such coverage was given when no premium was paid.[158] Second, it is also fundamental that an

---

[153] In Schiller v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 444 P.3d 459 (Table), 2019 WL 3202204 (Nev.) (unpublished), the court found no coverage in the policy concerning nearby Lake Tahoe, in part because the policy contained a water exception.

[154] Note, however, that in Plastow v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2011 WL 6370570 (W.D.Mich.) (unpublished), the court read survey, possession and water exceptions narrowly so that it was able to find a duty to defend the insured in a lawsuit about accretion, and then applied the same elastic reasoning to find a duty to indemnify also—and this notwithstanding the fact that the insureds had owned the parcel for 30 years before they bought insurance, so that much of the accretion had occurred while they were the owners.

[155] 33 Wash.App. 569, 658 P.2d 2 (1983). There was no evidence of the existence of the substantial accreted lands in the public records, and a survey would have alerted the insurer that the accreted land could be considered part of the neighbor's description.

[156] 13 Wash.App. 345, 534 P.2d 1388 (1975).

[157] 13 Wash.App. 345, 534 P.2d 1388, 1391 (1975).

[158] Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust, 18 Cal.App. 3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971); Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App. 3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257 (1974), which held: "What appellants are seeking from the Western Title Insurance Company policy is extended coverage without having requested that type of coverage and without having paid the additional premium." The court rejected the insured's demand.

insurer must be aware that it is assuming a risk in order for it later to be held liable for that risk.[159] Third, as many cases point out, the survey exception is not removed automatically on receipt of just any survey. Most importantly, the survey must be accurate. If not, the insurer is not obligated to remove the exception.[160] In addition, once a title issue is disclosed by the survey, the insurer has the right to make an exception for that matter, negating coverage.[161]

Therefore, the survey exception is fully enforceable even when the insured obtained a survey before the closing and the description in the policy was created by the surveyor, but the insured did not contract for a policy free of the exception.[162] The insured may not estop the insurer into coverage by claiming in a negligence cause that the insurer had a duty to notice and advise the insured of an encroachment.[163] Note that the insurer is well-advised to let the consumer know that the coverage may be obtained and that, if that coverage was not elected, the policy would contain the exception. See §12.3.4. It is also persuasive to show that there is a significant charge for the removal of the exception.[164] The fact that insurers charge, and some insureds pay, large extra premiums for assumption of the survey risk establishes its value.

---

[159] "Assuming arguendo that the ALTA lenders policy is a representation that the contingencies insured against will not occur, a purchaser insured by a CLTA standard coverage may not recover for damages sustained as a result of his reliance upon them. Thus, even if Transamerica had represented to Columbus and Wells Fargo that the house was located entirely on parcel 4, and did not encroach onto parcel 1, Transamerica would be liable for negligent misrepresentation only to Columbus and Wells Fargo. There would be no liability to Walters if he relied upon such representations to his detriment, even if such reliance was reasonably foreseeable. To hold otherwise would give the purchaser the benefit of extended coverage without having paid the additional premium therefor. (Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1974) 40 Cal.App.3d 536 at pp. 543-544, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257.)" Walters v. Marler, 83 Cal.App.3d 1, 147 Cal.Rptr. 655, 666 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1978).

[160] For example, "RLB next asserts that the survey exception should not defeat this claim since the description in its deed was based on a survey (the 1972 survey) which did not reveal the encroachment or overlap. We think the answer to that contention is clear. The reference in the policy to an 'accurate survey' could hardly refer to a prior survey which in fact created the overlap." RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W. 2d 607, 609 (Tenn.App. 1989).

[161] Stearns v. Title Ins. & Trust, 18 Cal.App. 3d 162, 95 Cal.Rptr. 682 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1971) reasoned held that "Appellant purchased a standard coverage policy. ... At additional cost he could have purchased a policy affording extended coverage insuring against risks such as those involved in Corona's claim. [citations omitted] The purchase of such extended coverage would have necessitated his obtaining a correct survey, however [citations omitted], and the boundary dispute would in all likelihood have become known to the insurer" and thus excepted from coverage.

[162] Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 637, 584 P.2d 939 (Wash. 1978); RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York, 774 S.W. 2d 607 (Tenn.App. 1989); Kuhlman v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 177 F.Supp. 925 (W.D. Mo. 1959); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. McKee, 354 S.W.2d 401 (Tex.App. 1962); Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1974).

[163] Ely v. Munshower, 4 Pa.D. & C.3d 430 (1977).

[164] See Muench v. Oxley, 90 Wash.2d 637, 584 P.2d 939 (Wash. 1978); Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.3d 536, 115 Cal.Rptr. 257 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1974).

12.3.14 Owner Claim Based On Loan Policy Survey Coverage

Removal of the survey exception for the lender insured does not provide coverage to the owner insured. On occasion, the survey exception is removed for the lender but not the owner. An owner might later claim that he or she should be treated as if the exception had been removed from the owner's policy also. See §7.7 for a discussion of owners claiming the benefit of coverages given in loan policies.

This is not sound reasoning. First, the owner may not bootstrap into the lender's coverage because he did not pay for the coverage. In most jurisdictions, there is a charge for such coverage. To give it by estoppel is contrary to the premium structure, which in many states must be justified when filed. Second, the risk in removing the exception for an owner is significantly greater than it is as regards the lender. The lender must establish not only that a title defect exists, but also that there has been a loan default and that its security has been impaired. See §3.2.4 regarding loss under a loan policy. Third, many "surveys" used to delete the survey exception from a loan policy are mortgage inspection reports or similar products that are not surveys. They most certainly are not "accurate" surveys conforming to ALTA/NSPS Standards or state-promulgated minimum survey standards. They do not locate evidence of possession lines, survey monuments, improvements, easements, and other detail that affects an owner's use of the property. Mortgage inspection reports are designed to satisfy lender customers essentially that the primary improvements are located on the described property. They recognize that lenders have different, lesser purposes in obtaining survey products. Lenders do not set fences, construct improvements or, most importantly, have disputes with neighbors which are worked out in court under the guise of boundary line disputes.

12.3.15 Survey Attached Or "Insured"

A policy is sometimes issued that attaches or refers to a survey or a map. The policy may then also contain a general assurance regarding the survey, such as "the survey has been insured,"[165] that it "shows clear,"[166] or that there are "[n]o variations or encroachments"[167] other than those shown as exceptions.

The most common survey-related endorsement is the ALTA survey endorsement, which insures that the "land is the same" as that delineated on the referenced survey. This endorsement has been found to assure "that the Property's boundaries are located as shown on the Boundary Survey, and nothing more." The court rejected the insured's contention that the endorsement had the effect of assuring the insured that all physical matters depicted thereon were in exactly the location shown.[168] The survey endorsement is further discussed at §9.11.2.

---

[165] Hutsell v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co., 157 Ga.App. 845, 278 S.E.2d 730 (1981).

[166] MacBean v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 169 N.J.Super. 502, 405 A.2d 405 (App.Div. 1979).

[167] Enright v. Lubow, 202 N.J.Super. 58, 493 A.2d 1288 (1985); app. 215 N.J. Super. 306, 521 A.2d 1300 (1987).

[168] Shea Homes, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3334210 (W.D.N.C.) ((unpublished). The issue in the case was the location of tree stump burial pits, which were superimposed on the boundary survey from an earlier map in the public records. The insured, a homebuilder, built new homes on some of the pits and they sank.

In two cases, courts implied assurances regarding surveys without any affirmative language. In one case, the policy showed an exception for a matter on a survey, which the court deemed sufficient to serve as an assurance against any inaccuracy in the referenced survey.[169] In the second case, a recorded drawing was referred to in the legal description, with the statement "which said plat is duly recorded." The recorded "plat" was a mere sketch, and not sufficient to identify the boundary lines of the property. The court found the insurer responsible for the cost of a survey to establish where the property boundaries were.[170]

When a map was attached to the commitment with a substantial disclaimer, neither the inclusion of the map nor the disclaimer were deemed to expand or contract the coverage of the policy.[171] The attachment of a "property sketch" to the policy, with an appropriate caveat, was found not to be an affirmative coverage.[172]

12.3.16 Effect Of Removal Of Survey Exception

By removing the survey exception, the insurer indemnifies against most matters related to boundary lines, encroachments and overlaps. The ALTA Residential and Homeowner's policies provide certain affirmative assurances. See §§9.14.1 and 9.14.2. The CLTA 126.1 endorsement offers the insured certain assurances which are similar to those found in the Residential policy.

The following types of survey errors or matters have specifically been held compensable when the survey exception has been removed, or an affirmative assurance given, unless another exception or exclusion also applies:

1. The failure to show an encroachment of the insured's sidewalk onto the neighbor's property.[173]

2. The failure to report to the insured the existence of encroachments onto the insured

---

[169] Enright v. Lubow, 202 N.J.Super. 58, 493 A.2d 1288 (1985); appeal 215 N.J. Super. 306, 521 A.2d 1300 (1987).

[170] Miller v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 112 F.Supp. 221 (E.D. Va. 1953). Miller agrees with the cases finding the insurer liable for the cost of determining boundary lines when the insured legal description is so deficient that the legal cannot be surveyed or located on inspection. See §12.3.8 and §8.5 for further discussion of deficient legal descriptions.

[171] Santos v. Sinclair, 884 P.2d 941, 945 (Wash.App. Div. 2 1994). The disclaimer read: "The Company has not surveyed the premises described in [blank]. The sketch below is furnished without charge solely for the purposes of assisting in locating said premises and the Company assumes no liability as to the validity, location, or ownership of any easement or other matter shown thereon, nor for the inaccuracies therein, including the accurate location of boundaries, including water boundaries. This sketch does not purport to show all highways, roads and easements adjoining or affecting said premises, nor is it a part or modification of the report, commitment, policy or other title evidence to which it may be attached."

[172] Fee v. Stahley, 2008 WL 4849844 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (property sketch used to remove survey exception on loan policy only, which may have been attached to policy, was not a survey, contained a caveat about accuracy, and did not negate survey exception as to issue of property's area and dimensions).

[173] McMinn v. Damurjian, 105 N.J.Super. 132, 251 A.2d 310 (Ch. 1969).

property of neighboring front steps and other building improvements, as disclosed by a survey.[174]

3. The incorrect placement of a side lot line, and damages for subsequent judgment prohibiting the insured from using cellar door because it opened onto the neighbor's property.[175]

4. The incorrect placement of a power line easement 50 feet from house as opposed to the true measurement of five feet from the house.[176]

5. The incorrect labeling of an adjacent thoroughfare as a public street. The insureds built their house facing the "street." Later, they learned that the "street" was really a lot on which the neighbor later built a house. The insured's house faced the neighbor's new house rather than the true public street.[177]

6. The fact that the "plat" which the policy stated was "duly recorded" was a mere drawing with no distances and calls, description, or anything else necessary to establish where the insured property was located. The insurer was required to pay the cost of surveying the property.[178]

7. An incorrect statement of the amount of acreage.[179]

8. Shortage in dimensions, causing "loss" of land and damages because the lot would support fewer apartments than would a lot of the size shown on the survey.[180]

9. The encroachment of the insured's barn and fence onto the neighbor's property.[181]

---

[174] Glyn v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 132 App.Div. 859, 117 N.Y.S. 424 (1909).

[175] Id.

[176] Enright v. Lubow, 202 N.J.Super. 58, 493 A.2d 1288 (1985); app. 215 N.J. Super. 306, 521 A.2d 1300 (1987).

[177] MacBean v. St. Paul Title Ins. Corp., 169 N.J.Super. 502, 405 A.2d 405 (N.J.A.D. 1979).

[178] Miller v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 112 F.Supp. 221 (E.D. Va. 1953).

[179] Hutsell v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co., 157 Ga.App. 845, 278 S.E.2d 730 (1981).

[180] Sunset Holding Corp. v. Home Title Ins. Co., 172 Misc. 759, 16 N.Y.S.2d 273 (Sup.Ct. 1939).

[181] In Rackouski v. Dobson, 634 N.E.2d 1229 (Ill.App. 3 Dist. 1994), the court held: "This exception squarely addresses the dispute in the present case regarding the barn building which allegedly encroaches on plaintiff's property. However, "Schedule B" of the policy states that "[t]he standard exceptions referred to on the inside front cover are deleted." Thus, appellee expressly waived the exception to coverage that specifically deals with the allegations asserted in plaintiff's complaint. ... [W]e believe that the logical conclusion is that the policy, as executed, does cover such

10. The failure to make specific reference to an easement of record, physical evidence of which was shown on the survey. The policy exception for "dirt driveway crosses adjoining lands" did not give the insured adequate notice of the nature of the interest.[182]

Thus, the removal of the survey exception extends considerable coverage to the owner or lender as to off-record matters that are otherwise beyond the scope of the policy's protection.

However, the removal of the exception is not itself a coverage.[183] The removal of the exception is not an assurance by the insurer of the accuracy of any matter depicted on the survey that is delivered to the insurer to induce it to remove the exception.[184]

12.3.17 Inspection Of Premises

The inspection clause bars recovery by the purchaser from its insurer for any matters that the insured would have discovered if she or he had looked at the property. A commonly used form of survey exception includes this inspection clause:

> Encroachments, overlaps, boundary line disputes, and any other matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey and inspection of the premises.

The inspection clause is not found in some versions of the survey exception, and is not found in

---

"encroachments, overlaps … which would be disclosed by an accurate survey… ." 634 N.E.2d at 1231.

[182] Amidano v. Donnelly, 615 A.2d 654 (N.J. Super. 1992). The court may have come to the same conclusion that the insurer was liable for failing to report the recorded easement if the survey exception had not been removed. The court stated: "The careful description of easements which Meridian excepted from coverage by reference to the recorded instruments creating them, justifies a reasonable policyholder conclusion that title was insured against easements other than those specific easements, although subject to the exceptions for encumbrances in other named categories. See Caravan Products Co., Inc. v. Ritchie, 55 N.J. 71, 74-75 (1969). The Donnellys argue that had Meridian intended to except the recorded easement granted by the Ort deed, it should have listed it as 'as contained in Deed Book 237, page 340.' We agree." 615 A.2d at 658.

[183] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Dahlmann, 291 Wis.2d 156, 715 N.W.2d 609, 2006 WI 65 (Wis. 2006); Community Credit Union v. AmeriTitle & Abstract, Inc., 344 Wis.2d 519, 822 N.W.2d 737 (Table), 2012 WL 3930615 (Wis.App.) (unpublished).

[184] Shea Homes, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3334210 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished) (policy did not insure limits of stump burial holes as depicted on survey). However, in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Doubletree Partners, L.P., 739 F.3d 848 (5th Cir. (Tex.) 2014), the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the removal of a phrase from the state-mandated survey exception used in Texas increased the coverage of the policy, and in effect created a coverage against the inaccuracy of a line drawn on the survey presented to the insurer. The line was intended to depict the boundary of a flowage easement, which covered land below a certain elevation. In the same policy, an exception for the recorded flowage easement was also found not to remove coverage for the issue, because that exception was modified to add the phrase "and shown on survey dated March 22, 2006 by Mark Paine, RPLS # 5078." The court held that this limited the exception to that part of the flowed area as depicted by the surveyor.

Covered Risk 2(c) of the 2006 ALTA policies, the so-called survey coverage.

A survey exception that contains an inspection clause becomes a graft of two related sets of issues with some overlap. As was stated by the Walker Rogge court:

> A survey and inspection serve related but different purposes. The purpose of an inspection, which is performed by merely visiting the property, is to disclose such matters as physical encroachments, evidence of adverse use, and monuments. By comparison, a survey, as this case demonstrates, can involve extensive research and field work. Unlike a mere inspection, a survey relates the property as described in recorded instruments to the land as it exists.[185]

As is discussed at §12.3.5, determining what an accurate survey will show is a precise, relatively objective analysis. There are no precise rules about what would be revealed on an inspection of the premises.

The inspection clause removes coverage for matters by which the insured is bound because they would be discovered in an inspection of the property before a purchase.[186] In other words, the inspection is a duty of the purchaser as a part of a good faith purchaser's duty to investigate the property.

An inspection shows visible possession by another. As stated by one court:

> All the authorities agree that possession, in order to constitute notice, must be actual possession of the party, or his agent or tenant, consisting of acts of occupancy which are open, visible and unequivocal, and in nature sufficient upon the observation of a subsequent purchaser to put him on inquiry as to rights of the possessor.[187]

The exception is worded "and inspection of the premises." However, most courts have read "and" as "or." A matter need not be revealed both by an accurate survey and an inspection for the survey exception to apply.[188]

---

[185] Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[186] In Mann v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 975 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App.-Houston 14 Dist. 1998), the property was subject to two easements allowing the government to drop bombs on it. The easements were recorded after closing. The insured purchaser inspected the property with the seller beforehand. He saw a caliche road, signs warning of bombing activity, government employees and vehicles on the property, and a spotting tower. He did not go in the tower, so he did not see the military's maps, charts, telephone and radio. He also made no inquiry of the military personnel, although the seller talked to one in his presence. The easements were found binding on the insured based on his inquiry notice, not constructive notice. The same notice was found to void policy coverage under the inspection clause of the survey exception.

[187] Shaver v. National Title & Abstract Co., 361 S.W.2d 867, 869 (Tex. 1962) (citing DeGuerin v. Jackson, 50 S.W.2d 443 (Tex.Civ.App. 1932), aff'd 124 Tex. 424, 77 S.W.2d 1041).

[188] "[T]he court ruled that for the exception to apply, the defect must be disclosed by both an accurate survey and a

12.3.17.1 Visible Possession Including Adverse Possession

FORM 53, Appendix A
Matters visible on inspection

The inspection clause of the survey exception typically refers to evidence of possession that would be visible on an inspection of the property. Three types of interests commonly disclosed by inspection are adverse possession, public use of a dedicated road, and easements.[189]

When adverse possession is evidenced by matters that would be disclosed on an accurate survey, the survey exception negates coverage. This is true whether or not the exception includes the inspection clause.[190] The better view is that the exception negates coverage even when the insurer removes the possession exception. See §12.2.4 for a discussion of adverse possession claims under the parties in possession exception.

Adverse possession rights often have physical evidence such as an improvement, structure or sign that would be disclosed by an accurate survey. Perhaps the most common example is a fence, which is an encroachment but often also the basis for a claim of adverse possession. Similarly, a claim of a prescriptive easement is often evidenced by an improvement or structure. For example, a utility that lays a pipe or transmission line may also claim a prescriptive easement in the absence of a written easement grant.

Some adverse possession rights would not be disclosed on an accurate survey, but would be observable on an inspection of the property. An adverse possession claim was found to be excepted by the inspection clause of a survey exception in Bothin v. Calif. Title Ins. & Trust Co.[191] The court held the possession would be disclosed by inspection, and thus was excepted:

> It was left to the appellant to determine, by an inspection and examination of the property, whether there was adverse occupancy or not, to determine for himself by actual measurement, survey, or examination of the premises whether he was getting what he contracted to purchase, or whether there was an adverse claim of title of any physical inspection of the property. Because an inspection would not have revealed the shortage, the court found the exception to be inapplicable. We disagree with the analyses of both courts. ... It would distort the title policy to the point of illogic to expose Chelsea to the risk of the results of an accurate survey merely because those results could not be revealed by an inspection of the premises." Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992).

---

[189] A tenant's interest would also normally be disclosed by inspection. Several cases hold that a tenant's rights are excepted by the "parties in possession" exception. See §12.2.1. The inspection clause of the survey exception should also apply to tenants' rights.

[190] See Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guarantee Co., 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208, 217 (1989); subs. appeal, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992) ("It would distort the title policy to the point of illogic to expose Chelsea to the risk of the results of an accurate survey merely because those results could not be revealed by an inspection of the premises.").

[191] 153 Cal. 718, 96 P. 500 (1908).

character by the occupants of the whole or any portion of the premises.[192]

Improved streets are also usually visible on inspection, and thus excepted.[193] A de facto inspection clause was imposed as to a street dedication, even though the survey exception had been removed from the policy. In Malkin v. Realty Title Ins. Co. Inc.,[194] a former owner of the property had deeded a 10-foot strip of the property, a platted lot, for public street. The insured obtained a survey, which mistakenly described the full lot, but showed that the 10-foot strip was part of the paved roadway. The policy used the survey legal description. Although the survey exception was removed, the court held that the insureds had "assumed" the risk that the strip was not owned by their grantor. As to the insureds' claim that they had paid an additional premium to get the survey exception removed, the court relied on the inspection clause. It said:

> we [do not] think it likely [that] either Mr. Malkin or his attorney thought that the appellee, for an additional $60, would undertake the obligation of evicting Montgomery County from its occupancy of part of the lot or, in the alternative, of paying the Malkins $2,500.[195]

The Malkin court set a higher standard for the insured's "due diligence" because the insured was relatively sophisticated, and was represented by a lawyer.[196]

The insurer does not have a duty to inspect the land on the insured's behalf. Texas has codified this understanding by promulgating a "waiver of inspection." If the insured signs the waiver, the insured agrees that the insurer will not inspect, and the policy will contain the inspection clause.[197]

---

[192] 96 P. at 502. The court did not actually rely on an inspection clause, apparently because the older form of policy the court interpreted did not have one. The exception relied on was for "tenure of the present occupant." The court's rationale, however, was entirely consistent with and better supported by the wording of the inspection clause.

[193] In Mellinger v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 93 Cal.App.4th 691, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 357 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2001), a 20-foot strip of the insured parcel was improved with what the court described as a "busy" public street. There was conflicting testimony about whether or not a right-of-way grant existed, or was evidenced in the public record. The insurer obtained summary judgment on its argument that the parties in possession exception removed coverage because there was no evidence in the public records of the city's claim to own the road. It relied principally on Native Sun Investment Group v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 189 Cal.App.3d 1265, 235 Cal.Rptr. 34 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1987), which held that the same exception removed coverage as to the state's claim to own the ocean shore. The appeals court acknowledged that the exception would be a valid defense if the right-of-way was not shown in the public records.

[194] 244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155, 157 (1966).

[195] 244 Md. 112, 223 A.2d 155, 157 (1966).

[196] Malkin is discussed at §9.1.3.4, regarding the sophisticated policyholder exception to the rule that an insurance contract is construed against the insurer as drafter.

[197] The "Waiver of Inspection" provided as follows: "I hereby waive inspection by you of such property and accept your policy subject to rights of parties in possession, and those under whom they hold, and to any visible and apparent

Visible use of property may put the insured on a duty to inquire, which would lead to the insured discovering that the possessor holds an unrecorded interest. Such inquiry notice, if binding on the insured, causes the easement or other interest to be excepted from coverage under the inspection clause.[198] However, when a survey was obtained which showed a billboard, and the insurer did not make exception for the unrecorded billboard lease, the insurer was found to have assumed the risk, even though it did not remove the general survey and inspection exception.[199]

12.3.17.2 Recorded Easements; Equivocal Evidence Of Possession

Courts are reluctant to excuse the insurer's failure to report a recorded easement based on the survey exception or the inspection clause. Thus, when power poles are located near the edge of the property, or near a reported easement, courts have rejected the inspection clause on the insureds' testimony that they thought the utility lines were outside the property line or inside the reported easement.[200] Also, the clause has been held not to apply as to recorded easements for which there is no visible evidence of possession,[201] such as an underground pipeline[202] and a drainage ditch.[203]

However, sometimes the evidence on inspection is so unmistakable that the inspection clause can be considered sufficient to except even a recorded easement. In Halvorson v. National Title and Abstract Co., the obvious nature of the high tension wire easement bisecting the property apparently convinced the court that the insured must have assumed or agreed to the easement's existence.[204] As roadway or easement over or across the subject property, the existence of which does not appear of record, if any such parties are not in possession of, or if any such roadway or easement affects the premises upon which you have issued such policy, and take it upon myself to inspect such premises and obtain possession thereof from the present occupants." See Sterling v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 822 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

---

[198] See Mann v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 975 S.W.2d 347 (Tex.App.-Houston 14 Dist. 1998).

[199] Eller Media Co. v. DGE, Ltd., 2004 WL 2002449, 2004-Ohio-4748 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2004) (unpublished). The court was influenced by the fact that the title insurer also did not seem to think the general exception sufficient, because it added a specific exception after the claim was received: "… [W]hen [Surety's examiner] learned of the claim and impending lawsuit, he wrote the 'billboard exception' into the title policy. As noted by the judge, the survey contained no identification or notations about the billboard or any rights of parties to it... This explicit exception was unilaterally inserted to avoid contractual obligations to DGE."

[200] McDaniel v. Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852 (Fla.App. 1976); Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 38 Colo.App. 385, 560 P.2d 839 (1976).

[201] Morton v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 32 So.3d 68, 34 Fla. L. Weekly D1406 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 2009) (easement to maintain creek not visible and not excepted, relying on McDaniel for principle that "a title insurer cannot hide behind its policy's accurate survey exception to avoid liability when a title defect is of record.").

[202] Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953); Guarantee Abstract & Title Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 216 So.2d 255 (Fla.App. 1968); Shaver v. National Title & Abstract Co., 361 S.W.2d 867 (Tex. 1962); San Jacinto Title Guaranty Co. v. Lemmon, 417 S.W.2d 429 (Tex.App. 1967).

[203] Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Plemons, 554 S.W.2d 734 (Tex.App. 1977).

[204] 391 S.W.2d 112 (Tex.App. 1965).

in Malkin v. Realty Title Ins. Co. Inc., discussed in the previous section, the court implicitly relied on Exclusion 3(a) in addition to the inspection clause. Similarly, in RLB, Inc. v. US Life Title Ins. Co. of New York,[205] the court found that survey stakes at the true boundary line were adequate notice that there was an overlap in descriptions. The insured protested that he thought the stakes represented an easement, but the court rejected the argument. It apparently believed that the insured was on sufficient notice to require it to at least make further inquiry.

On occasion, the inspection clause is inapplicable because the visible evidence of possession is not unequivocal enough to put the buyer on notice. A neighbor's claim of adverse title was not excepted, when the primary evidence was an advertising sign on the insured parcel for the neighbor's tourist attraction.[206] The insured admitted observing the signs. The insured was held not to be responsible to deduce that the signs were evidence of a claim of ownership. The court also did not find any "due diligence" duty on the purchaser's part to contact the sign owners.

12.3.17.3 Evidence Of Physical Access

FORM 22, Appendix A
Physical barrier to access

The fourth primary situation in which the inspection clause has been invoked in reported decisions is when there is no physically open and improved street adjoining the insured parcel. The policy insures a right of access, but not that an abutting public street is physically open and improved. See §9.7 regarding the right of access coverage. The survey exception reiterates that the insurer does not protect the insured against the lack of an improved, adjoining street. In Krause v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida,[207] the insureds admitted they had a right of access, but wanted the insurer to pay for the substantial fill required to make it useable by normal vehicles. The court held that the policy insures only that there is a right of access. It bolstered its argument with the inspection clause, stating:

> The policy here specifically excepted any facts revealed by an accurate survey. The physical condition of the existing access was easily ascertainable by a simple inspection of the site by the purchasers. As the title company insured the quality of the title as shown by the record and there was access of record, it was not required to aid in the suit by appellants Krause and Beane to establish a grant of necessity.[208]

---

[205] 774 S.W.2d 607 (Tenn.App. 1989).

[206] Fohn v. Title Ins. Corp. of St. Louis, 529 S.W.2d 1 (Mo. 1975).

[207] 390 So.2d 805 (Fla.App. 1980).

[208] 390 So.2d at 806.

Krause built on Title & Trust Co. of Florida v. Barrows.[209] In Barrows, the platted "street" was only the extension of a sandy beach, and was covered by the tide in the spring and fall. The court reversed a judgment in favor of the insured landowner, saying:

> In the case here before us, there is no dispute that the public record shows a legal right of access to appellant's property via the platted Viejo Street. The title insurance policy only insured against record title defects and not against physical infirmities of the platted street.[210]

Finally, in Gates v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[211] the insured testified that the trek from the public street to his property was "indescribable" and a mere "goat path." The court held, however, that the policy insures only the right of access. Further, it found the insurer was not responsible for inspecting the property for the insured, or for insuring that the access route was passable.[212]

12.4 Easements Not Shown By Public Records

FORM 54, Appendix A
Unrecorded easement exception

The policy contains a standard exception for "easements or claims of easements not shown by the public records," or similar wording. This exception spans unrecorded easement grants,[213] and claims of easements by necessity,[214] prescription[215] and implication.[216] The exception also applies to

---

[209] 381 So.2d 1088 (Fla.App.1979).

[210] 381 So.2d at 1090.

[211] 813 S.W.2d 10 (Mo.App. 1991).

[212] The Court cited both Barrows and Krause in holding: "It is true that the western road, the route by which plaintiff Gates had a right of access, was a difficult one and, in its present condition, of only limited usefulness, but if plaintiff had a right of access, even though over a rough and nearly impassable route, he makes no case under his title insurance policy. A title insurance company may not be expected to investigate the physical condition of a way of legal access to the insured property to determine if it is passable."

[213] In Daniel v. Coastal Bonded Title Co., 539 So. 2d 567 (Fla.App. 1989), the exception was found applicable to unrecorded easements. However, the insured had a cause of action based on the alleged failure of the insurer as closing agent to alert the insured to the easements and some encroachments shown by a survey in the insurer's possession at closing. In Armitage v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 2137954 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), the exception was found to apply to a conditional easement granted in an unrecorded purchase contract. In Mann v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 975 S.W.2d 347 [Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.)], the insured was found to have inquiry notice of unrecorded easements in favor of military to use land for aerial target practice. Mann is further described in §12.3.17.

[214] In Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660 (Va. 1994), the court stated: "The easement by necessity at issue in this case clearly was unrecorded at the time the policies were issued. Furthermore, this exclusion reinforces the nature of a title insurance company's business, which is to provide insurance coverage for the validity of the title to the extent

a post-policy claim that a recorded easement should be reformed to encumber the insured property, because such a claim of easement is not in the public records on date of policy.[217] The exception also takes away coverage for easements that are recorded, but are not in the chain of title to the insured parcel.[218]

The exception does not apply to easements that are in the public records.[219] The policy definition of public records is limited to those records that, under state law, impart constructive notice of interests in real estate. The definition of public records is fully discussed at §9.12. This exception is consistent with other standard exceptions in limiting the insurer's risk to "record" matters. See §12.3.1 regarding the rationale for the survey exception.

---

diligent examination could or should have discovered defects at the time of policy issuance. Title insurance indemnifies the policyholder for those discoverable, but undiscovered, defects in the title, not for every claim which ultimately might affect the title." 442 S.E.2d at 663. In Seilham v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 360 F.Supp.3d 412 (E.D.La. 2018), the court said that a title insurer had no duty to defend the insured against the Louisiana equivalent of an easement by necessity (a servitude by "destination of the owner" under Louisiana Civil Code article 741) because of the exception for easements not shown by the public records.

[215] In Louisville Title Ins. Co. v. Guerard, 409 So.2d 514 (Fla.App. 1982), the court found the unrecorded easements exception negated coverage for a claimed prescriptive easement. A California decision, Bailey v. State Farm Ins. Co., 810 F.Supp. 267 (N.D. Cal. 1992), also held that the insurer had no duty to defend against a claimed prescriptive or implied easement based on the unrecorded easements exception, although the primary evidence in the case concerned possession and the possession exception would have been equally applicable. See §12.2.5 concerning the possession exception and a claim of prescriptive or implied easement.

[216] Bailey v. State Farm Ins. Co., 810 F.Supp. 267 (N.D. Cal. 1992), held: "Schedule B of the policy excludes, "easements, liens, encumbrances, or claims thereof, which are not shown by the public records"). The Flagg litigation asserted a right to the easement by prescription, implication, balancing of hardships, and estoppel. None of these would appear in the public records. Strictly construing the policy exclusion against Fidelity, the claims in the litigation are plainly excluded from coverage under the policy." 810 F.Supp. 267, 271 (N.D. Cal. 1992). To the same effect, as to prescriptive easements, is Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 888 P.2d 83 (Or.App. 1995) (claim of prescriptive or implied easement excepted under either unrecorded easement exception or parties in possession exception).

[217] Campbell v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 1822391 (Wash.App. Div. 3) (unpublished). However, when the policy contained a combined "accurate survey" and "unrecorded easements" exception, the latter clause was found to be limited by the former, causing only those unrecorded easements that would be shown on a survey to be excepted. Hon, Inc. v. Central Mo. State Univ. Board of Regents, 678 S.W.2d 413 (Mo.App. 1984). The Hon case is further discussed at §12.2.5.

[218] See Snow v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 84 Nev. 480, 444 P.2d 125, 128 (1968), discussed further below, this section, and Seilham v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 360 F.Supp.3d 412 (E.D.La. 2018).

[219] An unrecorded easements exception did not negate coverage for utility lines for which an easement had been recorded, in C 1031 Properties, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 175 Wash.App. 27, 301 P.3d 500 (Wash.App. Div. 3 2013). In Schram v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 168920 (N.D.Ind.) (unpublished), the court held that the exception did not negate a duty to defend the insured just because the complaint did not allege that the claimed easement was recorded. The insurer also obtained an affidavit from the plaintiff in which he averred that the easement was not recorded, but the court still found a duty to defend. In Robbins v. Mason County Title Ins. Co., 5 Wash.App.2d 68, 425 P.3d 885 (Wash.App. 2 Div. 2018), the court held that the exception did not negate a duty to "defend" the insured against the treaty rights of a Native American tribe to harvest shellfish along tidelands including part of the insured parcel, despite the fact that those rights were identified only in a treaty and a federal court decision issued after the policy date.

The modern policy definition of "public records," and especially its reference to state law, was provoked by Hahn v. Alaska Title Guaranty Co.[220] In that case, an easement was found not excepted by the standard unrecorded easement exception even though it was created by an executive order that was published only in the Federal Register. Hahn stands alone in its expansive interpretation of the "public records" definition found in the 1970 ALTA policy. Its ruling would be impossible under a fair reading of later versions of the ALTA policies.

In Upton v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co.,[221] an easement was excepted when filed in a set of public records, but those records were not considered by state law to impart constructive notice to purchasers of real estate. The court found that the scope of the term "unrecorded" in the exception is defined by the types of records that state law says impart constructive notice. A title insurer's practice in searching some records that do not impart constructive notice did not affect the unambiguous scope of the exception.

> We find nothing ambiguous in the definition of the term "public records" contained in the policy ... . The parties by contract clearly limited the records-search requirement with express reference to the law that determines those records which impart constructive notice. The determination of which records "by law impart constructive notice of matters relating to land" was patently a question of law for the trial court. In resolving that question, we need only to give effect to the obvious meaning of the word "law" and refer to those things of which the law is composed, namely the statutes, constitution, and case precedent of this state.[footnote omitted] The only law we find declaring that certain records shall impart constructive notice of matters relating to land is Code of 1975, Sections 35-4-51 and -63 set out above. We find no cases, nor are we cited to any legal precedent whatsoever in this state, that holds that any other court records, in addition to those in the office of the probate judge of any county, shall impart constructive notice of an easement in real estate.[222]

Likewise, an easement recorded outside of the chain of title does not impart constructive notice. Thus, coverage as to such an easement is removed by this standard exception:

> Any instrument executed by such an owner which is recorded before his acquisition or after his relinquishment of title is considered outside the "chain of title." 6 Powell, Real Property, 293; 8A Thompson, Real Property (1963 Replacement), §4340. In an extensive series of articles by Francis S. Philbrick, the most relevant of which appears at 93 U.Penn.L.Rev. 391, it is explained that this restriction affords the only practicable method of modern title search, for the alternative would require (in Nevada) searching the records of a century under the name of an owner who might [220] 557 P.2d 143 (Alaska 1976).

[221] 469 So.2d 548 (Ala. 1985).

[222] 469 So.2d at 555-556.

> have held title for but a week.
>
> Applying this rule to the case at bar, the Anderson-Coffee Agreement was not within the chain of title and so was within the exclusion from Snow's title insurance policy of "easements, liens or encumbrances which are not shown by the public records." The Title Company therefore had no duty to Snow either (1) to make good any damages which he might sustain from the existence of the Anderson-Coffee Agreement or (2) to defend him against Mesa's assertion of its rights under the agreement.[223]

Similarly, an easement granted by the State of Texas by legislation, covering all "submerged land or lands owned by the State of Texas," was excepted as to property conveyed by the state before the law was passed. The court found as a matter of law that the easement did not affect the insured property, and was not in the chain of title.[224] Also, in First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc.,[225] public roads disclosed only on road maps in the county clerk's office were excepted from coverage by an exception for "[e]asements, claims of easements or encumbrances which are not shown by the public records." The road maps were held not to impart constructive notice under the Utah statutory scheme. In Miller v. Title Insurance Co. of Minn.,[226] an identical exception was found to remove coverage as to records in the city engineer's office that showed that municipal water and sewer lines had been installed under the surface of the insured's property. The Montana court found the policy definition of "public records" to be unambiguous. The court found:

> According to Title Insurance Company, the contract definition of "public records," in conjunction with the Montana statutes relating to recorded instruments (70-21-209, MCA) and constructive notice (70-21-302, MCA), make it clear that title insurers and abstractors search only record title in the offices of the clerk and recorder and the clerk of court in the county in which the real property is located. Pursuant to Montana's statutory scheme, documents recorded or filed in the office of the clerk and recorder or clerk of court impart constructive notice. Nowhere in the insurance policy or Montana statutes related to recording is there a suggestion that the records of the city engineer and water department impart constructive notice to purchasers of real property. While documents located in a city engineer's office or water department may be subject to public inspection as public records under § 2- 6-202(1), MCA, such documents do not by law impart constructive notice. Accordingly, we agree with Title Insurance Company and conclude that the term

---

[223] Snow v. Pioneer Title Ins. Co., 84 Nev. 480, 444 P.2d 125, 128 (1968).

[224] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Adams, 829 S.W.2d 356 (Tex.App. 1992).

[225] 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998), reh.den.

[226] 1999 MT 230, 987 P.2d 1151 (Mont. 1999).

"public records" in the Millers' policy is not ambiguous.[227]

However, an easement that lacked a legal description and most other legal formalities was found to be sufficiently definite nonetheless to be considered a public record.[228] To the same effect are Ryczkowski v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co.[229] and First American Title Ins. Co. v. Adams.[230]

12.5 Construction Liens

The fourth standard exception is for construction liens. The subject of construction liens is covered in Chapter 10.

12.6 Taxes

The final standard exception, in most parts of the country, is for real estate taxes. Taxes are discussed in full at §9.4.

12.7 Special Exceptions

In addition to the standard exceptions, Schedule B contains "special" exceptions (more appropriately termed exclusions that are specific to the parcel whose title is insured). The policy provides no coverage for a matter described in a Schedule B exception.[231] There is tremendous variety in the types of special exceptions that may appear in a policy. This chapter discusses the principles governing how these exceptions are construed.

---

[227] 987 P.2d at 1153.

[228] Hill v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. of N.Y., 731 S.W. 2d 910 (Tenn.App. 1986).

[229] 85 Nev. 37, 449 P.2d 261 (1969).

[230] 829 S.W.2d 356 (Tex.App. 1992).

[231] See First American Title Ins. Co. v. Hegedus, 2013 WL 4077033 (D.Del.) (unpublished), which held that the insurer was not responsible for paying a loss due to use restrictions that were excepted in Schedule B. In Palmer v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 3049343 (S.D.Tex.) (unpublished), the insureds admitted that the insurer informed them of a new exception for a mineral instrument at closing, but they did not realize the effect of that instrument until years later. The court said that "the party claiming fraud has a duty to use reasonable diligence in protecting his own affairs, including to read documents that the party signs." It said that, because "the closing documents disclosed the mineral liens," there had been "no actionable misrepresentation… ." Also, although it would seem self-evident that the policy does not assure affirmative rights in an excepted encumbrance, the court so found in Heyse v. Case, 114 Conn.App. 640, 971 A.2d 699 (Conn.App. 2009), cert.den. 293 Conn. 905, 976 A.2d 705 (Conn. Jul 23, 2009). In that case, an insured demanded that the insurer prosecute a lawsuit to enforce the claimed violation of restrictions by her neighbor. The court ruled that the insurer had no such duty, in large part based on the fact that the policy excepted the restrictions. In Flagstar Bank, FSB v. Lawyers Title Co., 2014 WL 1725746 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2014) (unpublished), the court held that a lender that bought loans that the originator claimed were first liens had neither a contract nor a fraud claim against the title insurer, when the lender later opened the policies and realized that they excepted prior deeds of trust that had not been paid off at closing. The lender's case appears to have been doomed at the summary judgment hearing, when Flagstar's lawyer was forced to say "I will concede that my client could have figured out they had been scammed sooner if they had read the policy." In Sewell v. Fidelity Nat'l Financial, 2016 WL 728012 (D.Md.) (unpublished), affirmed by 668 Fed.Appx. 510, 2016 WL 4761319 (4th Cir. (Md.)) (unpublished), the court ruled that an

Section 12.7.1 discusses what an exception must state to give adequate disclosure of the effect of the instrument. The claimed duty to highlight specific terms within an instrument is discussed below at §12.7.2. Section 12.7.4 analyzes when a general or broad exception gives notice of a specific recorded item. Section 12.7.5 considers those cases when no direct exception is made for a defect. Some states impose a separate duty to "abstract" title by reciting Schedule B exceptions, as discussed in Chapter 15. Finally, the insurer has no duty to remove special exceptions, or give legal advice to a proposed insured as to how exceptions can be removed, as discussed in §12.7.6.

12.7.1 Adequacy Of Notice Given By Exception

FORM 56, Appendix A
Exception gives adequate notice of defect

FORM 80, Appendix A
Exception conspicuous, plain and clear

Matters that are recited as exceptions on Schedule B of the policy are excepted (excluded) from coverage.[232] The insurer also has no policy liability for the lack of an exception for a recorded matter if that instrument does not constitute a lien or encumbrances on title.[233]

Insurers craft exceptions so as to explain with reasonable specificity the risks and subjects for which there is no coverage. Sophisticated insureds often spend great amounts of time and energy owner's policy does not protect the insured against the loss of title due to the foreclosure of a mortgage signed by the owner and excepted in the policy. In Fo Ge Investments LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 27 Neb.App. 671, 935 N.W.2d 245 (Neb.App. 2019), the insured owner purchased property subject to an existing mortgage, and the policy excepted that mortgage. The court held that the insured owner obtained no coverage against the foreclosure of the excepted mortgage, even if the foreclosure was triggered by the seller's default under a loan that the insured did not assume.

---

[232] Heyse v. Case, 114 Conn.App. 640, 971 A.2d 699 (Conn.App. 2009), cert.den. 293 Conn. 905, 976 A.2d 705 (Conn. Jul 23, 2009) (insurer had no duty to prosecute lawsuit to enforce violation of restrictions excepted on Schedule B); De Maio v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2008 WL 4372997 (D.Md. 2008) (unpublished) (insurer not liable to insured when utility company installed large transformer on property pursuant to excepted utility easement); Herr v. Forghani, 2011 WL 1833829 (Wash.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (exception for covenants and easements as shown on plat negated coverage for claimed overburdening of an easement on the insured property, despite the insured's claim that his extended-coverage policy "did away with" the Schedule B exceptions).

[233] Luboff v. Security Title & Guaranty Co., 46 Misc. 2d 599, 260 N.Y.S.2d 279 (Sup.Ct. 1965) (no duty to show developer agreement which was not a defect, lien or encumbrance); Sala v. Security Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 693, 81 P.2d 578 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1938); (no duty when lis pendens not shown, then removed as cloud on title); Peterson v. Title & Trust Co. of Fla., 431 So.2d 311 (Fla.App. 1983) (no duty to show or resolve applicability of restrictions not shown); Laurence v. Kruckmeyer, 124 Ariz. 488, 605 P.2d 466 (App. 1979) (no duty to show easement as affecting parcels which it did not affect); Village Carver Phase I, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 128 So.3d 107 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2013) (no duty to except rights barred by marketable title act). See also §9.5, regarding the insuring provision as to defect, liens and encumbrances, and §9.4, regarding the lack of duty to report that property lies in a special taxing district.

negotiating and drafting the limitations to coverage that they will accept. An exception is adequate if it gives a plain and understandable recitation of the defect, lien or other matter that is the subject of the exception.[234] An exception is adequate when it is not capable of two or more constructions, and is not buried in affirmative assurances but is identified as an exclusion from coverage.[235] Stated another way,

> It is well settled that an "'insurer may exclude certain losses from coverage if it uses 'language which clearly and unmistakably communicates to the insured the specific circumstances under which the expected coverage will not be provided.'" ... A provision excepting certain losses from coverage is therefore not automatically construed against the insurer. Rather, it is only when the insurer uses language that is ambiguous, that "doubt is resolved against the insurer."[236]

The insurer "is under no duty to advise the insured of the effect of the exclusion on coverage."[237] Further, the acceptance by the insured of a policy or endorsement without objection is [234] "It is generally acknowledged that a title insurer's duty of disclosure regarding an instrument affecting title is satisfied by a statement of the nature of the document, recording information, etc. The underwriter is not required to set forth its contents [citation omitted], nor to provide an explanation as to its legal effect or implications [citation omitted]. An exception to coverage that is 'plain and understandable' in its statement of the subject will be effective [citation omitted]." Robert E. Ellis, Title Insurance Law Handbook, p. 270. See also Stewart Title Ins. Co. v. Credit Suisse, 2013 WL 4710264 (D. Idaho) (unpublished) (vendor's liens were removed from coverage by exception for memorandum of agreement and option because court found that, since a seller's lien must arise from a sale contract, the excepted instruments were "indispensable to the creation of the statutory liens; no liens would have arisen without them"). In 1500 Viewsite Terrace, LLC v. Pickford Escrow, Inc., 2017 WL 4309755 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), exceptions for a pending lawsuit and lis pendens were enforceable to remove coverage for the entire dispute, with the court finding each exception to be sufficiently clear and understandable so as to exclude coverage for the matters they described.

---

[235] Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. National Westminster Bank, U.S.A., 1998 WL 31512, 134 F.3d 377 (Table) (9th Cir. Cal.) (unpublished). In Blaser v. DeVries, 2011 WL 5965762 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court ruled that an exception for restrictions on "the use of the premises not appearing in the chain of title" encompassed a building size restriction that was not recorded against the parcel but enforced under the common plan of restriction doctrine, despite the insured's argument that there is a distinction between a building restriction and a use restriction. In Nuzzo v. Horvath, 2011 WL 3795035 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished), an exception for "conditions and restrictions" stated in three recorded deeds was adequate to remove coverage for the obligation to maintain a dam, which was recited in the deeds, and the reasonable expectations doctrine did not obligate the insurer to abstract the instruments, which the court observed would be akin to the practice of law.

[236] First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 966 P.2d 834 (Utah 1998), reh.den.

[237] First American Title Ins. Co. v. J.B. Ranch, Inc., 966 P.2d at 837. An exception for an "easement of the State of Missouri, by condemnation suit No. 215119 ..." put the insured on notice of the condemnation suit. The insurer was not liable for any loss caused by a restriction on access to the property created by the condemnation, although the exception did not recite that it restricted access to the property and copies of the condemnation petition and order were not delivered to the insured, in Livingston v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 373 F.Supp. 1185 (E.D. Mo. 1974), aff'd, 504 F.2d 1110 (8th Cir. 1974).

an agreement by the insured to accept the limitation on policy coverage created by the exception.[238]

The title insurance commitment has been found to be a source of notice of recorded matters to a purchaser or lender. Arizona takes the view that an insured is bound by notice of public records disclosed by the insured's title insurer in the course of its examination of title.[239] An exception to the title insurance policy gives the purchaser notice of substantive rights of others in the property, which can trigger the running of a statute of limitations on claims against others as to the adverse matter.[240] A real estate broker may have a fiduciary duty to the purchaser to review the commitment and highlight the matters it discloses.[241] However, what the insurer knows or has in its title plant, but does not disclose in the commitment, is not imputed to the insured merely because it obtains a policy from the insurer. California and other states do not allow imputation of notice of the public record from the insurer to the insured. See cases discussed at §9.12.1.

When the property is a condominium, the policy will typically except the documents by which the ownership regime was created. Disputes concerning the manner in which the condominium is operated or governed, or the interpretation of the governance documents, should be considered removed from coverage both by the exception for the declaration, bylaws and other governance documents, and by Exclusion 3(a), for matters "agreed to" by the insured.[242] However, [238] Livingston v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 373 F.Supp. 1185 (E.D. Mo. 1974), aff'd, 504 F.2d 1110 (8th Cir. 1974); Green Harbour Homeowners' Ass'n, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 74 A.D.3d 1655, 905 N.Y.S.2d 304 (A.D. 3 Dept. 2010), app.den. 2010 WL 4116983, 2010 N.Y. Slip Op. 85507 (exception for "variations between the number and location of" units conveyed in prior deed and parcels shown on subdivision map was adequate to negate coverage for dispute over the ownership of lots mistakenly conveyed to both insured and subdivision association, and insurer's insertion of exception because of the very defect claimed by insured and its refusal to remove the exception were deemed strong evidence that policy did not insure against risk).

---

[239] In Hall v. World Savings and Loan Ass'n, 189 Ariz. 495, 943 P.2d 855 (1997), the deed by which the owner/borrower took title recited that nominal consideration had been paid for the property. A judgment creditor sought to have the insured mortgage found junior to the judgment under a fraudulent conveyance statute, based on the notice provided by the title insurer. The court agreed "that the title company was [the lender] World's agent for purposes of the title report, and thus World is bound by whatever notice the title company had while acting within the scope of its authority." However, because it is not uncommon in Arizona for a deed to recite nominal consideration, "nothing on the face of the recorded documents alerted either the title company or World to the possibility of fraud or the need for further investigation."

[240] In DiPietro v. City of New Rochelle, 658 N.Y.S.2d 319, 237 A.D.2d 324, 1997 N.Y. Slip Op. 02182 (A.D. 2 Dept. 1997), for example, the insured "had knowledge of certain statements about the reverter provision from the title report and the title policy," which notice was found to create a duty to inquire further, and which started the limitations period as to claims against the seller.

[241] Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty, 63 Cal.App. 4th 18, 73 Cal.Rptr.2d 784 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1998). Contrast Field with Wright v. C & S Family Credit, Inc., 1998 WL 195954 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished), in which a lender was found not to be a fiduciary to its borrower, and therefore under no obligation to disclose to the borrower the existence of a judgment lien against the property. The borrower had failed to obtain a title policy as it purchased the land. Thus, the court reasoned further that, even if the lender were a fiduciary, it would have no duty to disclose the judgment, because the borrower's own "common observation or ordinary diligence would have furnished the information." Id. at 4.

[242] See, for example, Schwartz v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 1999 WL 475850 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished), finding no coverage as to an insured's assertion that his unit encroached on common elements.

when the validity of the insured's rights in the condominium are in dispute, the policy may be said to have assured that the insured's rights were validly granted or created by reciting the unit in Schedule A, and a court may strain to find the exception not broad enough to negate coverage for the issue.[243] The phrasing of an exception for a condominium declaration does not relieve the insured of the obligation, imposed by law, to be informed of the content of the instrument.[244] The exception refers to a document in the public records, which the insured can inspect; often, the insurer delivers a copy of the instrument to the insured for that purpose.

An exception for a recorded instrument is typically sufficient to remove coverage for all disputes concerning the instrument or its subject, including actions to enforce the instrument.[245] An exception for a recorded restriction also removes coverage as to any violation by the insured of the restriction. In Dalessio v. Williams,[246] Schedule B stated "[t]his policy does not insure against loss or damage by reason of the following: ... 6. On the Plat of Crystal Shores Subdivision ... a. Plat Restrictions... ." A garage built just prior to policy date violated the restrictions. The court rejected the argument by the insureds that the exception covered only the restrictions, not their violation:

---

[243] In Piper v. Nitschke's Northern Resort Condominium Owner's Association, Inc., 322 Wis.2d 604, 777 N.W.2d 677, 2009 WI App 182 (Wis.App. 2009), the plaintiff unit owners asserted that one defendant's unit had been declared in an amendment to the condominium declaration that was invalid because it was not signed by all owners, and that the other defendants' units as built encroached onto common elements. The court resorted to a highly technical parsing of the exception for the condominium declaration, bylaws and other governance documents, concluding that the exception was not broad enough to negate coverage for the dispute.

[244] In Wilmington Plantation, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 2131149 (M.D.Tenn) (unpublished), the first version of a commitment exception labeled a condominium declaration as "protective covenants." The insured claimed that he did not know that the property, which was vacant land, was part of a condominium, and sought damages from the insurer for the reduced value of the land as being in a condominium regime. However, the exception provided the recording data of the excepted instrument, and a revised commitment described the declaration accurately. Also, the deed described the property as units in a condominium. The court held that the policy was not a representation, and the insurer was not liable.

[245] Fatell v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2009 WL 3158166 (D.Colo.) (unpublished) (exception for unpatented mining claims reserved or excepted in patent sufficient to remove coverage for mining claim that was reserved in excepted patent, although mining claim might also be discoverable in public records); CIA, Gary Gresko, S.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2009 WL 1010964 (D.N.J.) (unpublished) (exception for any loss caused by lawsuit was sufficient to effectively nullify policy when insured's deed was later rescinded by the excepted litigation); Yen v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 5429458 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (exception for lease also negated coverage for dispute about lease); A. Gugliotta Development, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co. of New York, 112 A.D.3d 559, 976 N.Y.S.2d 172, 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 08034 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013) (exception for trail easement also excepted rights of travelers to use trail); IQ Holdings, Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.W.3d 861 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014) (exception for terms of condominium declaration negated coverage for exercise of right of first refusal created in that instrument; insurer had no duty to abstract important terms of declaration in exception). In 1500 Viewsite Terrace, LLC v. Pickford Escrow, Inc., 2017 WL 4309755 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), exceptions for a pending lawsuit and lis pendens were enforceable to remove coverage for the entire dispute. The court refused to parse the exceptions so narrowly that they would leave coverage for certain aspects of the broader title dispute.

[246] 111 Ohio App.3d 192, 675 N.E.2d 1299 (9 Dist. 1996), app.den. 77 Ohio St.3d 1481, 673 N.E.2d 142 (1996).

> Reading exclusion 6(a) in light of the language preceding the list of exclusions, we note that the policy excluded coverage for loss or damage "by reason of" the plat restrictions. The damage to the Williamses occurred by reason of those restrictions. Under the plain language of the exclusion, First American was not obligated to compensate the Williamses for the damage arising from [the lawsuit about the restriction violation]. As such, it had no duty to defend the Williamses ... .[247]

Similarly, in Dickins v. Stiles,[248] the insured was sued for violating a restrictive covenant excepted in the policy. The court found that the insurer had no duty either to defend or indemnify, because of the exception. The court also found no duty to defend a claim that the restriction was part of a common plan of restriction. An exception for matters that depicted on a recorded survey was found to be broad enough to cover all such matters, even those that were not accurately shown on that survey.[249]

When a policy excepts one recorded instrument but not a second instrument on the same subject, but the excepted instrument refers to the unexcepted document, the exception may be deemed sufficient notice of both encumbrances.[250] The exception directs the proposed insured to a review of the excepted document, which in turn provides notice of the non-excepted instrument.

When there are two instruments of record concerning the same subject or right and the excepted document does not reference the non-excepted document, the exception is broad enough to encompass the second instrument.[251] However, the exception may not be deemed adequate when the [247] 675 N.E.2d at 1301. A lone dissenting justice would have found coverage. The survey exception was removed. The offending garage was built after the survey date and not shown on it. The dissenter reasoned "[Insurer] admits that this [the removal of the survey exception] means coverage for items which a correct survey would show, provided they are not of public record. The violation of the plat restrictions does not show on any public record, so it seems to me that coverage exists." Id. at p. 4. This reasoning ignores the majority's logic as to the very purpose of the exception for the restrictions, and would absolve a property owner of any duty to examine and understand those recorded encumbrances that restrict the use of the property.

---

[248] 81 Wash.App. 670, 916 P.2d 435 (1996).

[249] Shea Homes, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3334210 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished) (all tree stump burial pits excepted from coverage, although exception referred only to those depicted on survey and insured argued that the covered matter was the burial pits not disclosed on the survey).

[250] Nilesh Enterprises, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2009 WL 2998204 (W.D.Tex.) (unpublished) (when policy excepted one recorded restriction document but not another, question of fact remained as to whether or not unexcepted restrictions caused diminution in value). In Czarnecki v. Phillips Pipe Line Co., 524 S.W.2d 153 (Mo.App. 1975), one recorded encumbrance made further reference to three separate recorded easements. An exception for the encumbrance was sufficient to put the insured on notice of all three easements, negating coverage. In Parks v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2018 MT 33N, 2018 WL 1064088 (Mont.) (unpublished), an easement that was recited in both a deed and a recorded abstract of a purchase agreement. The Montana Supreme Court held that a policy exception for the easement created in the abstract was adequate to negate all coverage for the easement.

[251] In Beaudin v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2019 WL 422208 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that there was no coverage concerning a neighbor's easement over the insured property when the owner's policy excepted one recorded instrument disclosing the easement, although the policy did not also except a second instrument about the same easement. In Pandora Distribution, LLC v. Ottawa OH, LLC, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2924995 (N.D. Ohio 2019) instrument excepted is only remotely related to the recorded instrument that is not excepted, or the non-excepted instrument substantially affects the insured's rights.[252] An exception for "building lines and easements" as shown on a subdivision plat was found not to be adequate to encompass three recorded oil and gas pipeline easements encumbering the property, especially because a surveyor testified that the references to the easements on the plat were "substandard."[253]

In Soluk v. Security Union Title Ins. Co.,[254] the insured land was burdened by a private drive created when the land was divided, giving access to the rear parcel. The drive was shown on a land division map, and two covenants about its use and maintenance were recorded. The policy excepted the "effect of" the covenants, but did not specifically except the drive as shown on the map. The court found that the insurer was not obligated to defend or indemnify the insured in a dispute with the neighbor over the width of the drive:

> If the Soluks elected to ignore the contents of the covenanted restrictions, that was their prerogative. However, they cannot now claim that they were entitled to a defense or indemnification when the Policy explicitly advised the Soluks that it

---

(not yet released for publication), reconsid.den. 2019 WL 5729932, A policy exception for an encroaching overhead conveyor, and the license that allowed it to be built, negated the title insurer's duty to defend the insured in a later dispute over ownership of the conveyor, despite the lack of a separate exception for another recorded agreement about the structure.

[252] See Dulac v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 3838999, 26 Mass.L.Rptr. 199 (Mass.Super.) (unpublished) (exception for recorded Torrens petition did not clearly encompass title defect listed in Torrens officer's report refusing the application, leaving question of fact for trial). In Bohr v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2008 WL 2977353 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the policy excepted an easement allowing the neighbors to use a pool on the insured property. It failed to except an amendment making the easement permanent, which the insured claimed thwarted her development plans. The insurer did not assert that the easement exception was broad enough to also cover the amendment. In GC Finance, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., GC Finance, LLC v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 1408823 (M.D.Tenn.) (unpublished), affirmed 2011 WL 5966512 (6th Cir. (Tenn.)) (unpublished), the policy excepted a gas pipeline easement, but not a partial release of the easement that reduced its path but inserted greater rights of access for maintenance. The insured claimed that the maintenance provision in the amendment allowed the easement holder to interrupt play at the insured golf course. The court found the title insurer not liable, because the partial release limited the encumbrance and made the property more valuable, not less. In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Stribling, 294 Ga.App. 382, 670 S.E.2d 154 (Ga.App. 2008), the policy contained several exceptions for private drives running through the insured property. The court found that a vague complaint might claim the right to use a drive crossing the property for which there was no exception, and therefore there was a duty to defend the insured, despite the insurer's protest that the policy exceptions removed coverage for all private drives. Similarly, in Cohn v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 3342971 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), an exception for an access easement "as shown upon" the filed subdivision map was found not to be broad enough to cover a claimed easement by necessity for the benefit of land outside of the subdivision, even though the easement path was placed in the same 40-foot strip shown on the subdivision map, because the easement by necessity came into being before the plat was recorded. In Cox v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 59 A.3d 1280, 2013 ME 8 (Me. 2013), the court strained to find that a policy gave coverage for an easement extinguished of record and replaced by an easement that was excepted, because the policy also excepted a condominium declaration that referred to the easement that was later extinguished.

[253] Crossman v. Yacubovich, 290 S.W.3d 775 (Mo.App.E.D. 2009).

[254] Case No. B131586-NON-OP, Cal.App. 2 Dist., Div. 2, 9/25/00 (unpublished).

> excluded coverage for disputes over the effect of the restrictive covenants.

The court found the exception for the covenants broad enough to also encompass the map:

> There is good reason why Security Union's predecessor in interest excluded coverage for "the effect" of the Chaney covenants. The insurer undoubtedly anticipated that a lawsuit would be filed to reform the grant deeds to reflect that the parcels created by the Chaneys' subdivision are burdened by a private street, in accordance with the 1966 covenants... By signaling its refusal to defend against a dispute over "the effect" of the Chaney covenants, the insurer adequately warned the Soluks that they were purchasing the property at the risk of having "the effect" of the covenants resolved adversely to them. The exclusion advised the Soluks that the insurer would not participate in any future dispute over the covenants or the nature of the unobstructed private street...

When an easement was shown only as being set forth in a mortgage on the property, and no exception was made for the easement itself, such notice was sufficient when the insured also had actual knowledge of the easement from the seller.[255] The court stated:

> Granted the company did not indicate the easement in bold face or red letters, the fact remains that the information was made available. The effect of an easement, valid or not, was a factor to be resolved as between vendor and purchaser depending upon the terms of their contract. It was not for Inter-County, as Tomgil quietly intimates, to negotiate, renegotiate or bear the brunt of any disabilities of Tomgil's contract.[256]

An insurer that excepted outstanding taxes on a cooperative had no duty to inform an officer of the cooperative that taxes were unpaid. The taxes conflicted with a representation by the developer, but the policy itself contained no misrepresentation, and the insurer had no duty to police the transaction on behalf of the insured.[257] Similarly, a title agent had no duty to "point out any outstanding encumbrances" on title, such as that the legal description included more land than the borrower intended to mortgage.[258] Also, an insurer that excepted a set of restrictions had no duty to advise the insured that they created a homeowners' association having the power to enforce them.[259] A title insurer was not required to recite in an exception for an access easement that the easement was

---

[255] Sullivan v. Tomgil Building Corp., 46 Misc.2d 613, 260 N.Y.S. 2d 465 (Suffolk Cty.Sup.Ct. 1965).

[256] 46 Misc.2d at 615.

[257] Rockville Tudor Apartment Corp. v. Bodner, 1997 WL 34847566 (N.Y.Sup.) (unpublished).

[258] Miller v. Wilson Title Co., 2000 WL 1023755 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished).

[259] Shah v. Anderson, 2000 WL 146715 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished).

exclusive.[260]

The insurer does not have a duty to identify the parties to an instrument, its nature, terms or significance. For example, the insurer has no duty to explain the effect of a wetlands designation, when the fact of such designation is disclosed.[261] The insurer also has no duty to explain the risk of subsidence from mining operations, when the fact of a mineral reservation is properly noted.[262] An exception for "any claim or title of the State of California and /or the United States of America as to all or any portion of said land lying within the bed of Clear Lake ... under natural conditions" was found sufficient to except the state's later claim of title to the high water mark of the lake.[263]

A statement that is made part of a Schedule B exception is not an affirmative assurance.[264] In some parts of the country, it is customary for the title insurance commitment or policy to append the statement "affects parcel ___" below the exception for a recorded instrument, when the policy insures title to two or more parcels. This type of statement is not an assurance that the document does not affect other parcels insured on the same policy. Rather, the statement is a courtesy to the customer to assist in the review of what is sometimes a long and complicated title report. In Walton v. First American Title Ins. Co., [265] the policy insured title to two parcels, each of which was in a different but related subdivision. Each subdivision had a separate declaration of restrictions and easements. Both sets of restrictions were excepted in the policy. At the insured's request, and after the policy was issued, the insurer inserted statements below both exceptions tying them to the two respective parcels. However, one set of restrictions imposed an easement on the lot in the other subdivision, which became the source of the dispute. The court determined that the Schedule B statements were not affirmative assurances against the possibility that the restriction declarations would affect all parcels.

---

[260] Vorgitch v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2002 WL 86870 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished).

[261] Manley v. Cost Control Mktg & Man., Inc., 583 A.2d 442 (Pa.Super.Ct. 1990).

[262] Holmes v. Alabama Title Co., 507 So.2d 922 (Ala. 1987).

[263] Lyon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 178 Cal.App.3d 1191, 224 Cal.Rptr. 385 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986).

[264] In The Peoples Bank v. Troutman, 2015 WL 4511540 (Tenn.App. 2015) (unpublished), app.den. Nov. 24, 2015, the court held that a loan policy that excepted a deed of trust did not protect the insured against the lien, and the inclusion of the phrase "subordinated by Subordination Agreement" in the exception was not an assurance or coverage. In Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2062947 (D.Nev. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed June 11, 2019, the court held that a statement in an exception for a declaration of restrictions, that "said covenants, conditions and restrictions provide that a violation thereof shall not defeat the lien of any ... Deed of Trust...," was not an affirmative assurance, but a recital of one term in the excepted instrument. The court said that the insurer "gave no assurance that the statement in the CC&Rs was correct, it merely gave notice of what the CC&Rs said."

[265] 844 N.E.2d 143 (Ind.App. 2006).

12.7.2 Special Terms Contained In Excepted Item

FORM 57, Appendix A
Special term contained in excepted instrument

An insured sometimes asserts that an exception for a recorded instrument is inadequate if it does not describe all of the types of rights granted in that instrument. Insureds have also asserted that an exception provides inadequate notice if it does not highlight the important terms in the excepted instrument, or contains an inaccuracy in a name or amount recited in the exception.

These arguments have no merit under any circumstance in those jurisdictions that have held that the title insurance policy is not an information product, which is the majority of states. See the state-by-state review at §15.12. Further, even in the small number of states in which an insurer can be liable for failing to inform the insured of the existence of a recorded instrument by excepting it from policy coverage, the argument is tenuous that the insurer has a further duty to "abstract" the recorded instrument to highlight its important terms. As is discussed in §12.7.1, the large majority of decisions have held that the insurer fulfills its entire duty to exclude a matter by making exception for a recorded instrument, at which point the insured has both the ability and the duty to read the document to be informed of its effect on the insured parcel's title. A number of decisions have held that an exception applies to every interest that springs from the excepted instrument, and that the exception need not highlight a particular term in that document.[266]

The decisions discussed below that have found a duty to accurately or fully disclose the terms of the excepted instrument have been overturned, either explicitly or implicitly, by later rulings in those jurisdictions that a title insurance policy is not an abstract of title. They are discussed only to inform the reader that their holdings are no longer valid law.

A 1963 lower court New Jersey decision found that an exception for "restrictions" in certain deeds did not except a condition in the same deeds stating that certain buildings were to be built before the property could be resold.[267] However, in 1989, the New Jersey Supreme Court held that a

---

[266] In TIMAC Realty v. G & E Tremont LLC, 121 A.D.3d 457, 994 N.Y.S.2d 91, 2014 N.Y. Slip Op. 06858 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2014), the court held that a buyer could not lay off its due diligence about water charges to the insurer by asserting that the exception for those charges in the policy should be more informative, saying: "…title reports function to apprise title insurers of defects in title; they do not serve to warn prospective purchasers of every risk facing the property… . If plaintiff relied on the title report for a list of water meters on the property, it did so at its own risk." An exception for a mortgage was not deficient by not reciting that the lien may secure other debt to the same lender, in Private Lending & Purchasing, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 54 Mass.App.Ct. 532, 766 N.E.2d 532 (Mass.App. 2002). The court reasoned: "Private Lending's contention, that failure to disclose the existence of a dragnet clause constitutes an undisclosed defect, lien, or encumbrance on title to the property, rests upon the erroneous conclusion that such a failure transforms the excepted lien or encumbrance into a defect in title. ... Schedule B of the Pace and Triad policies took exceptions to ... the Luso mortgages, not to certain terms or provisions of the mortgages, or to the legal effect of those instruments. The dragnet clause provision does not create a separate lien or encumbrance beyond the mortgage itself; rather, it expands the scope of the obligation that the mortgage secures. ... Attorney Cohen found the Luso mortgages in his title search; the problem lay in his failure to read all the mortgage provisions. In effect, and contrary to the plain meaning of the policy, Private Lending attempts recovery under the policy not for an undiscovered or misindexed lien or encumbrance, but for one discovered and excepted from coverage."

[267] Feldman v. Urban Commercial, Inc., 78 N.J.Super. 520, 189 A.2d 467 (Ch. 1963), aff'd, 87 N.J.Super 391, 209

title insurance policy is not an abstract of title, and a title insurer may not be sued for negligent misrepresentation of the state of title, premised on a title insurance policy and absent a separate contract to search and examine title.[268]

The 1956 Trisdale decision from California held that, when an exception for a utility easement recited the wrong name as the easement holder, the insurer was liable to the insured for extra money paid to release the easement twice, even though the exception correctly recited the recording data for the instrument and the insured could have reviewed it himself. The court said: "A reference to an encumbrance belonging to 'A' is not a reference to an encumbrance belonging to 'B'."[269] In effect, the court found an exception to be a coverage, and considered the policy to be in the nature of an abstract of title. The California title insurance code has since been rewritten to define a title insurance policy as being a contract of indemnity rather than an abstract of title, vitiating the Trisdale holding.

A 1933 New York decision held that an exception for "restrictive covenants" in a certain recorded deed did not encompass a reverter clause in the same instrument.[270] In 1993, a New York court ruled that an exception that listed a mortgage as being in the amount of $100,000, instead of the correct figure of $180,000, caused the insurer to be liable for the difference in amounts.[271] However, New York has since held that a title insurance policy is not an information product, and those decisions are no longer good law in New York.

The 1977 Texas decision of Northland Building held that policy exceptions for two deeds of trust that stated that they were "securing a note for" a recited dollar amount gave the affirmative assurance that the debt secured by the deeds of trust was no greater than the stated amounts, and obligated the insurer to pay the loan balances above the stated amounts.[272]. However, current Texas law prohibits claims for passive rather than active misrepresentation of the state of title. Further, later Texas decisions disagree with the reasoning of Northland Building. For example, in Roscoe v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. of Dallas,[273] the court rejected a claim that the insurer had a duty to inform the insured of a balloon payment term in its exception for a mortgage the insured was assuming:

A.2d 640 (App. Div. 1965). In M.R.M. Realty Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 270 N.Y. 120, 200 N.E. 666 (1936), by contrast, the court found that very similar deed conditions were not enforceable and did not affect title.

[268] Walker Rogge Inc v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co., 562 A.2d 208 (N.J. 1989).

[269] J.H. Trisdale, Inc. v. Shasta County Title Co., 146 Cal.App.2d 831, 304 P.2d 832 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1956).

[270] Holly Hotel Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 147 Misc. 861, 264 N.Y.S. 3 (Sup. 1932), aff'd, 239 App.Div. 773, 264 N.Y.S. 7 (1933).

[271] Chrysler First Financial Services Corp. of America v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 156 Misc.2d 814, 595 N.Y.S.2d 302 (Sup.Ct. 1993).

[272] Southwest Title Ins. Co. v. Northland Building Corp., 552 S.W.2d 425 (Tex. 1977).

[273] 105 N.M. 589, 734 P.2d 1272 (1987).

> It is well-settled that a person entering into a contract has a duty to read and familiarize himself with its contents before he signs and delivers it. Smith v. Price's Creameries, 98 N.M. 541, 650 P.2d 825 (1982). Roscoe's failure to read and familiarize himself with the terms of the mortgage he agreed to assume, when that information was readily available, clearly indicates a lack of reasonable diligence. Had Roscoe made reasonable inquiry or examined the original mortgage, he would have discovered the balloon payment. ... Here, USLife's policy insures against loss or damages due to "[a]ny defect or lien or encumbrance on such title." Schedule B of the policy specially excludes from coverage any loss or damage resulting from the mortgage in question. This exception is clear and unambiguous.[274]

Similarly, another Texas decision held that the insurer was not required to indicate in its exception for a deed of trust that it contained a due-on-sale clause.[275] The court explained that:

> It is not the purpose of a title policy to set forth in full detail a detailed explanation of the full terms and provisions of each instrument affecting the property, but give only sufficient information to put them on notice of the existence of such instruments. If every title exception in a title policy set forth the full details of every instrument involved, it would more resemble an abstract of title than a title policy. Under Lyon's theory, if the property was subject to an oil gas and mineral lease, it would be necessary to set forth in minute detail the many things that are involved in this type of lease, such as the length of the primary term, the amount of delay rentals, the amount of royalty payable, etc. See Jernigan v. Page, 662 S.W.2d 760 (Tex.App. - Corpus Christi 1983, no writ) where it was pointed out that the purpose of the recording statutes in Texas was to provide notice to all persons of the existence of recorded material and the effect of same, so that a person interested in the property could look at the full instrument by examining the record.[276]

12.7.3 Ambiguous Language In Exception

An exception is an exclusion from coverage. The rule that an exclusion is construed against the insurance company will typically apply to the interpretation of an exception. In construing exceptions, courts ordinarily limit poorly worded exceptions to their most narrow reasonable construction.[277] For example, when both the mortgagor and the IRS had rights of redemption after a

---

[274] 734 P.2d at 1274.

[275] Lyons v. Montgomery, 685 S.W.2d 390 (Tex.App. 1985); aff'd in relevant part, 701 S.W.2d 641 (Tex. 1985).

[276] 685 S.W.2d at 393.

[277] See Desjardins v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2013 DNH 086, 2013 WL 2949089 (D.N.H.) (unpublished), which held that the statement in Schedule B that "Exceptions Numbered 1 and 2 of the Owner's Policy do not limit the coverages described by the Covered Title Risks set forth in the Cover of the Owner's Policy" completely negated the survey exception as a limitation on the covered risk. See a complete discussion of the doctrine that an insurance policy is foreclosure sale, an exception for "[r]ights of redemption from foreclosure of mortgage" was found not to give adequate notice of the IRS's redemption rights. The agent's failure to use the underwriter's more descriptive exception was considered to be evidence that the agent intended to confuse or mislead the insured.[278] Also, when a general exception was inconsistent with the nature of a recorded interest, the exception was found ambiguous, and thus read in a light most favorable to the insured.[279]

The presumption that the insurer suffers the risk of ambiguity would not be proper, however, when the insured has written the exception or negotiated its terms. Frequently, special exceptions are redrafted by the proposed insured. Such exceptions should be construed against the insured.

12.7.4 Adequacy Of Blanket Exceptions As To Recorded Matters

A general form of exception may remove coverage for a specific recorded interest or encumbrance. The mere fact that the exception is general rather than specific does not cancel its effect, if the general exception accurately describes the recorded interest.

Until recently, title insurers have not made a regular practice of inserting blanket exceptions for classes of rights that are normally the subject of recorded instruments. However, insurers began inserting such exceptions in short-form loan policies. That practice later migrated to owner's policies, in certain jurisdictions and under certain limited circumstances. Such exceptions are enforceable.[280] Their scope is dependent on the phrasing of the exception. For example, in Cobb v.

---

construed against the insurer, and the unique limitations on this doctrine in regard to title insurance, at § 9.1.3.4.

[278] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Vella, 570 So.2d 578 (Ala. 1990). The insurer was found to have recklessly misrepresented the facts to the proposed insureds by the deliberate use of an exception contrary to the clear form contained in the underwriter's own manual. The agent who prepared the commitment testified that he did not use the underwriter's form because it "would 'only clutter the commitment.'" 570 So.2d at 583.

[279] Shotwell v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 91 Wash.2d 161, 588 P.2d 208 (1978).

[280] In Seba v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2008 WL 5273509 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), rev.den. 483 Mich. 1019, 765 N.W.2d 330 (Mich. 2009), an exception for easements and restrictions of record in an owner's policy was found to negate liability for a recorded use restriction that was not discovered in the title search. In Crawford v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 310 Ga.App. 611, 714 S.E.2d 137 (Ga.App. 2011), when the title insurance policy excepted "[a]ny easements or servitudes appearing in the public records," the insured's deed also excepted easements of record, and the insured admitted that she knew of a particular easement before she purchased, the court held the exception enforceable. The court also said that the insured could not prove detrimental reliance on the title commitment, which did not make specific exception for the recorded instrument. In Metro Bank v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 4344600 (N.D.Ala.) (unpublished), the court held that an exception for "Restrictive Covenants, if any" on an owner's policy was enforceable, and negated coverage for a recorded restriction limiting the property's use to grazing land, which frustrated the insured's intent to build a house on the property. In Pasha v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 5510931 (Ky.App.) (unpublished), the court found an exception for "[a]ny easements or servitudes appearing in the public records" to bar coverage for a use restriction for which the policy did not contain a separate exception that identified the instrument by its recording data. It said that the use restriction was a "servitude." Because that word is not defined in the policy, the court turned to Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, which provided this definition: "a right by which something (as a piece of land) owned by one person is subject to a specified use or enjoyment by another." The court said that definition perfectly fit the restriction, and that classifying a use restriction as a servitude was consistent with Kentucky law. In Rouse v. North American Title Ins. Co., Northern District of Georgia federal court, Atlanta Division, Civil Action

Stewart Title Guar. Co.,[281] an owner's policy excepted "Restrictive Covenants affecting the property described in Schedule A." A recorded restriction frustrated the insured's development plans. The insured argued that the exception was limited to restrictions "described in Schedule A." The court rejected the argument, and held that the exception removed coverage for the restrictions.

One commonly-used exception that does not make reference to a specific recorded instrument is an exception for any part of the insured property which may have been taken, dedicated or laid out for use as a public road. It is common industry practice to make such an exception when the property is not platted. The reason is that, in many states, public roads may exist within such property by ancient takings not in the chain of title, or by virtue of public use for a period of time. The only means of determining that such a roadway exists is by inspecting the property.

In Hofmann v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[282] there was a recorded conveyance of a road lying within the insured property. The legal description in Schedule A did not except the highway conveyance, but described the property as bordering the road. Further, the policy contained a general road exception modified by the phrase "unless disclosed of record." The insureds argued coverage because the title insurer failed to "list a highway disclosed by public record." They cited Shotwell v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.[283] and Santos v. Sinclair,[284] both of which found that a general road exception applied only to the improved portion of the roadway and not the balance of the land conveyed by a deed in the public records. The court held that, "[b]y negative implication, this clause provides coverage for roads and highways disclosed by the public records." However, the court found that the Schedule B survey exception negated this implied coverage.

A road exception was found to remove coverage for a claimed public roadway in Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.[285] The exception in Gebrayel read "[R]ights of the public in and to that portion of the herein described property lying within the limits of streets, roads and highways." A Washington case, however, held that an exception for "right of way for existing roads" excepted the 15-foot-wide roadway that was "existing" and in use, but not the entire 40-foot dedicated area.[286] Similarly, a general exception for the right to "use" the property was not sufficient to cover a prior dedication of the fee simple interest, since a right to use implies an easement rather than fee.[287]

No. 1:17-CV-04709-LMM, June 29, 2018 (no Westlaw citation available), the court said that an exception for "[c]ovenants, conditions, restriction, easements and/or servitudes" negated coverage for a prescriptive easement claim.

[281] 2007 WL 4460198 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished).

[282] 107 Wash.App. 1010, 2001 WL 803756 (Wash.App. 1 Div. 2001) (unpublished).

[283] 91 Wash.2d 161, 588 P.2d 208 (1978).

[284] 76 Wn.App. 320, 884 P.2d 941 (1994).

[285] 888 P.2d 83 (Or.App. 1995).

[286] Shotwell v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 91 Wash.2d 161, 588 P.2d 208 (1978). A similar case is Amidano v. Donnelly, 615 A.2d 654 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[287] Robey & Co. v. City Title Ins. Co., 261 Cal.App.2d 517, 68 Cal.Rptr. 38 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1968).

Exceptions

Courts routinely enforce exceptions that do not recite recording data for recorded instruments, but which are sufficiently descriptive and applicable to put the insured on notice of those rights. An exception for "the rights if any, of the City of New York arising from the mapping of Bergen Avenue" was found to except an easement for private street rights reserved in a deed recorded in 1926.[288] The easement emanated from the subdivision plat that mapped out the street. Therefore, the City's claim fell under the exception. An exception for "rights of way, public or private" was found sufficient to except a recorded right-of-way.[289] Also, an exception for "reservations contained in patents from the United States of America" was sufficient to except the mineral interest in the property reserved by the U.S. and since conveyed.[290] In Crews v. Griffith,[291] there was no recorded conveyance of the adjoining road and the policy excepted "roads ... not shown of record." The insured argued that the exception did not apply because the road was depicted on numerous maps "of record." The court said that "the reliability of all title opinions in Louisiana would be undermined" if such a broad brush stroke were applied:

> [I]s an examiner of title bound to know what "numerous public maps" reveal in the absence of an actual public record establishment of the public road or servitude of passage? ... The phrases [sic] "of record" cannot be read so broadly as to include all vehicle travel paths that appear on every survey filed in the conveyance records. In this case, the travel path is a clearly defined paved (at least in part) road. The Griffiths are seeking insurance against the prospective determination of the character of the road. That is not the purpose of title insurance.[292]

In Yaffie v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp.,[293] the court reformed the policy to remove a road exception based, in part, on the title agent's testimony that the policy was intended to protect against a claim that any part of the insured property had been taken in fee simple for road purposes. The dispute concerned land within the policy description that had recently been abandoned as a public road. Schedule B contained an exception for "title to or rights of the public and others ... in ... adjacent streets, roads and ways... ." The insureds' attorney, who also served as the title agent, testified that he did not intend the exception to negate coverage for the fee title to the road, because it was within rather than adjacent to the insured parcel, and that the purpose of this road exception was

---

[288] Scaglione v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 303 A.D.2d 671, 757 N.Y.S.2d 84 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2003).

[289] Sylvania v. Stein, 177 N.J.Super. 117, 425 A.2d 701 (Ch. 1980).

[290] Devlin v. Bowden, 97 N.M. 547, 641 P.2d 1094 (1982). An exception for a reservation of mineral rights has the effect of removing the mineral interest from the insured estate. Eames v. St. Paul Title Ins. Co., 654 S.W.2d 560 (Tex.App. 1983).

[291] 856 So.2d 1229 (La.App. 3 Cir. 2003), reh.den. Nov. 5, 2003.

[292] 856 So.2d at 1232.

[293] 1998 Me. 77, 710 A.2d 886 (Me. 1998).

to remove coverage for "claims related to use of roads that abut the covered parcel."[294] The court held that the attorney-agent's "unique situation" as agent of both parties made "his intentions, almost by definition, the mutual intentions of the parties." It reformed the policy to remove the exception.

An exception that adequately describes the subject of the title defect or encumbrance removes coverage as to the matter, even if the exception does not identify the nature of the adverse party's rights or their source. A common source of disputes of this nature is exceptions for physical features or improvements that are depicted on a survey. However, when the scope of the exception is narrower than, or different from, the rights that actually exist, the exception has been found not to remove coverage. Thus, in Boel v. Stewart Title Guar. Co.,[295] a policy insuring title to a platted lot made exception for "[a]ny question which may arise or claim of loss which may result from the existence of an underground ditch, which does no[t] appear to affect improvements situated on the land," as disclosed by an "on site inspection." In fact, the United States owned a 30-foot strip of land running through the insured parcel and across some of the platted streets, and the developer had relocated the ditch built by the U.S. so that some of it now lay outside the land owned by the government. The Idaho Supreme Court found the "ditch" exception insufficient to remove coverage for the claim of fee title, because "[t]he fact that the federal government coincidentally utilized its fee strip for the construction and maintenance of the ditch does not mean that the Boels' damages, related to the existence of the deed, in any way "arise" or "result" from the existence of the ditch." Similarly, an exception for "[d]irt driveway crosses adjoining lands," added after review of a survey, was found not to be adequate notice of a recorded driveway easement. Several driveway easements affecting the property, all of which were described by their recording information except the one at issue. The court found:

> The careful description of easements which Meridian excepted from coverage by reference to the recorded instruments creating them, justifies a reasonable policyholder conclusion that title was insured against easements other than those specific easements, although subject to the exceptions for encumbrances in other named categories.[296]

The court also held that the excepted easements were "of a fundamentally different nature" than the missed easement, and therefore the exceptions provided no notice of it.[297] Also, in Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Abstract Associates, Inc.,[298] an exception for "[f]ences" as shown on a survey was found not to except fee ownership by a party whose deed was missed in the title search. The title commitment

---

[294] 710 A.2d at 889.

[295] 137 Idaho 9, 43 P.3d 768 (Idaho 2002).

[296] Amidano v. Donnelly, 615 A.2d 654 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[297] 615 A.2d at 659.

[298] Appeal No. 821, April 4, 2000 (Md.Ct.Sp.App.) (unpublished).

did not disclose the correct record owner, causing the insured to purchase the land from the wrong party. The survey showed a fence surrounding the property on which the deed was missed. After acquiring the property for the insured, the insurer sued the agent, which defended claiming that the insurer should have denied the claim based on the "[f]ences" exception. The court held that "a non-specific general exception would [not] exclude an undiscovered recorded ownership interest."

12.7.5 Coverage As To Matters Not Excepted

When an encumbrance, lien or defect in title is not excluded and not excepted in the policy, in most cases the insured is indemnified for actual monetary loss or damage that it suffers due to the matter that is not excepted. As one court noted, the failure to make an exception for a recorded matter has traditionally been considered the most common source of policy claims:

> A title insurance company has an obligation to answer for any loss due to a defect in a title if it has not excepted that defect from its coverage. It cannot escape liability when it does not except a defect that is a matter of public record. It is generally assumed that a title defect that appears in the public records but that is not noted is covered by a title policy.
>
> *   *   *   *
>
> It has been said that the most common error in the title insurance industry is the negligent failure to note a title defect appearing in the public records.[299]

When a matter is not excepted, the policy permits the insurer to resolve the claim in several ways, including the removal of the encumbrance or lien or payment of loss to the insured.

No affirmative policy coverage is created by the insurer's removal of an exception. It is not uncommon for a title insurer to provide an informational "note" or exception concerning a matter related to the property but not within policy coverage. The removal of such a note or exception after receipt of an affidavit does not create coverage for the subject matter of the note.[300]

The policy is not a guarantee that title is as shown. However, in those states that consider the insurer to have a duty to search and examine title and to except all recorded matters in the commitment and policy, the failure to make an exception for a matter discoverable in the public records is sometimes deemed to be a breach of the policy.[301] This is a paradoxical analysis, however.

---

[299] Parker v. Ward, 614 So.2d 975, 977 (Ala. 1992).

[300] In Yellowstone II Development Group, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 Mont. 223, 20 P.3d 755 (Mont. 2001), a title agency raised an exception for "recordability and acceptance of documents conveying title," because the property had previously been described as two parcels and the agent believed the division did not comply with the law. The former county attorney gave an affidavit opining that there were "no legal impediments" to deeding out 20-acre parcels without a subdivision plat, and the agent removed the exception. The insured learned that the affidavit was wrong, and that it was prohibited from dividing the land. The court found the matter excluded from coverage. The removal of the exception did not create coverage. However, in Michael v. Stock, 162 A.3d 465, 2017 PA Super 99 (Pa.Super. 2017), the court held that an insured might have a reasonable expectation that the policy insured a parcel based solely on the inclusion in the policy of an informational reference to a tax parcel number.

[301] Laurence v. Kruckmeyer, 124 Ariz. 488, 605 P.2d 466, 468 (Ariz.App. 1979).

If a matter is excepted, it is excluded from coverage and the insurer has no liability to the insured. The policy protects against those matters not excluded. Thus, the insurer should not be deemed to have breached the policy by affording coverage to the insured rather than excluding the matter.

The policy may give notice of the lien or encumbrance other than by an exception, but such notice ordinarily is not sufficient to negate coverage. Reference to an encumbrance in Schedule A is not, by itself, usually sufficient to except the matter from coverage.[302] One court said that a reference in the Schedule A description of the land to a subdivision plat did not remove coverage for a waterline easement shown on the plat, saying:

> The description of the land in the policy was for the purpose of identifying the land covered by the policy and not, as appellant contends, for the purpose of limiting the insurance protection purchased.[303]

Also, a reference to a road right of way in the Schedule A description was not the equivalent of an exception.[304]

An exception for one instrument or subject may or may not be adequate to except another instrument or matter that is either referenced in the same map or document, or located in the same portion of the insured parcel. For example, an exception for one type of right as disclosed on a subdivision plat may or may not be adequate to remove coverage for other types of rights disclosed on the same plat.[305] Also, when two recorded restrictions of the same type encumbered the property, only one of which was excepted, the insurer argued that the insured did not suffer a loss due to the lack of exception for the other. The court viewed the policy as if it were an abstract of title, saying:

> We would agree with this contention except that the restriction which was listed was considered to be ineffective as to the property in question by the Bank's attorney who caused the dentists to be so advised at closing.[306]

Other courts have also found a duty to indemnify when two easements of the same nature

---

[302] The fact that the policy described the insured parcel by reference to a recorded subdivision plat was not the equivalent of a Schedule B exception for a utility easement depicted on the plat. Courchaine v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 6522442 (Wash.App. Div. 3) (unpublished). The court relied on the Lemmon and Shotwell cases discussed in this section.

[303] San Jacinto Title Guaranty Co. v. Lemmon, 417 S.W.2d 429, 431 (Tex.App. 1967).

[304] Shotwell v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 91 Wash.2d 161, 588 P.2d 208 (1978).

[305] In Santos v. Sinclair, 76 Wn.App. 320, 884 P.2d 941 (Wash.App. Div. 2 1994), an exception for "rights, restrictions and reservations" depicted on a plat was found not to be sufficient to except an easement depicted on the same plat. In Courchaine v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 6522442 (Wash.App. Div. 3) (unpublished), the court relied on Santo in finding that an exception for "restrictions" shown on a subdivision plat did not except a utility easement depicted on the same plat, which was granted by a separate recorded instrument.

[306] Endruschat v. American Title Ins. Co., 377 So.2d 738 (Fla.App. 1979).

encumbered the property, one excepted and the other not.[307]

The subject of the duty, found in some states, to conduct a search and examination of title, and to disclose recorded instruments, particularly liens, on a title insurance commitment and policy, is discussed in Chapter 15. Several cases are illustrative. A title examiner's intentional failure to list a title matter on a policy in furtherance of criminal fraud can be a criminal act.[308] However, the failure to report an open mortgage on a policy is not an intentional false statement "for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of ... any institution the accounts of which are [federally] insured... upon any application, advance, discount, purchase, purchase agreement, repurchase agreement, commitment, or loan... ."[309] Rather, the policy "made no statement" at all about the mortgage, "and did not falsely state that it had been released or was no longer a lien... ."[310]

However, when a recorded document did not affect title but merely gave notice of a claim to a portion of the proceeds from the sale of land, the lack of an exception for the instrument in Schedule B did not create policy liability:

> Put simply, the agreement here is not a title defect because it does not affect title. The agreement merely gives Herman Klickman a lien on one-third of the proceeds derived from a sale of the property in question. It does not give Herman Klickman any interest in the property, nor does it give him the right to disturb the buyers in their possession of the property. In short, the buyers could not possibly be affected by the terms of the agreement.[311]

Similarly, an "Agreement to Retain Land in Irrigable Status" was found not to affect the title to the property, and was thus properly not reported on Schedule B.[312] However, an insurer was unsuccessful in arguing that a timber deed did not affect title, on the argument that it only conveyed the timber and not the land on which the trees grew.[313]

---

[307] See Shotwell v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 91 Wash.2d 161, 588 P.2d 208 (1978), and Amidano v. Donnelly, 615 A.2d 654 (N.J. Super. 1992), discussed at §12.7.4.

[308] See, for example, Milbrandt v. Huber, 149 Wis.2d 275, 440 N.W.2d 807 (Wis.App. 1989).

[309] 18 U.S.C. § 1014.

[310] United States v. Thorn, 17 F.3d 325, 328 (11th Cir. 1994).

[311] Klickman v. Title Guaranty Co. of Lewis County, 105 Wash.2d 526, 528-9, 716 P.2d 840 (Wash. 1986).

[312] Lombardo v. Pierson, 852 P.2d 308 (Wash. 1993).

[313] Parker v. Ward, 614 So.2d 975 (Ala. 1992).

12.7.6 No Duty To Remove Exceptions Or Give Advice

Each title insurer has the right to decide what risks it will take and under what terms.[314] Title insurers set underwriting standards that establish which risks they will accept and which matters against which they will not indemnify. The title clearance process used by title insurance underwriting personnel is so sophisticated that it approaches an art form. Title insurers each have different underwriting standards. An insurer may use an underwriting standard or individual underwriting decision as a marketing tool, by setting a standard that makes the company more accommodating to its customers, although certain states impose regulatory limits on certain behavior.[315] Sometimes, one insurer will make the deliberate decision not to make exception for a known defect, lien or encumbrance, because it considers the matter to have been resolved or barred by an applicable curative law, statute of limitations or other theory or doctrine, but another insurer will insist on making an exception for the matter.

The insurer may not be sued for making exception for defects, liens or encumbrances that it believes do or may attach to the property.[316] An insurer's refusal to issue a policy does not make the title to a parcel unmarketable.[317] See the discussion of the marketability of title coverage at §9.8.1.

---

[314] See Aronoff v. Lenkin Co., 618 A.2d 669 (D.C.App. 1992), in which the court held: "We think a title insurer has an unqualified right to select the risks it is willing to underwrite... . Unless it is otherwise bound by law or contract, it may refuse to insure for any reason, sound or not, or for no reason at all." 618 A.2d at 686.

[315] See the statutes referenced in §15.12, adopted in some states, that require an insurer to conduct a title search and examination to certain standards, and which prohibit the practice of insuring over or around a recorded lien.

[316] Fry v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 187 Cal. 168, 201 P. 115 (1921) (title insurer did not slander title by making exception for judgment that owner believed was not a valid lien). A court may find perplexing an insurer's judgment as to what is and is not a good underwriting risk. See Mathews v. Moore, 1997 WL 241741 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), in which the court found it a "mystery" that title insurers would rely on a private trustee's sale to remove liens against the borrower, but not a lis pendens filed in a judicial foreclosure. Nonetheless, it is exclusively within the insurer's province to decide what risks it will assume. In Weiss v. Lowenberg, 95 A.D.3d 405, 944 N.Y.S.2d 27, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 03366 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2012), the sellers sued, claiming that the buyers falsely accusing them at the closing table of having filed a fraudulent probate petition, and accused First American of inserting an exception in the title commitment "in order to accommodate the buyer's desire to avoid closing on the contract." The Appellate Division affirmed dismissal of First American, finding that there was no allegation that First American had procured the buyer's breach of the contract, or even that the buyer had breached the contract. Further, it said, the sellers' allegation that the insurer accommodated the buyer by making an exception based on at least a perceived title risk was inconsistent with their claim that First American made the exception maliciously and recklessly. It dismissed the tortious interference with contract claim. In First Bank Texas, SSB v. W.D. Welch, P.C., 2017 WL 2443132 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished), the court rejected the insured's argument that it was harmed by an exception in a loan policy for a lien that the court determined was subordinate to the insured mortgage. The court said the exception caused no harm, even though the insured paid money to the lien holder to subordinate its lien to the insured mortgage. In Mattlage v. Dividend Solar Finance, LLC, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 6464006 (W.D.Tex. 2019) (not yet released for publication), the court held that a title insurer's listing of a financing statement as an exception in a title insurance commitment was its business decision, not a legal opinion or an assertion that the instrument was a cloud on title. The lender asserted that the financing statement was a lien only on the solar power equipment that it installed, which it considered to be personal property.

[317] Wilson v. Pacific Coast Title Ins. Co., 106 Cal.App.2d 599, 235 P.2d 431 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1951).

Exceptions

The insurer is not required to insure a particular title at all. The insurer's business is a private enterprise. There is no constitutional right to the issuance of a title insurance policy.[318] There is no set of rules that imposes a standard of conduct on the insurer, such as title standards promulgated by a state bar association, although a Kansas court so found.[319] Title insurers are not obligated to insure the title to land that may be subject to attack. In a California lawsuit, the plaintiffs alleged that members of the title industry conspired to deny title policies to purchasers of tax titles. The Supreme Court overturned a lower court order striking causes of action based on tortious interference with contract and state unfair competition and restraint of trade laws. The court held that the insurers were permitted to introduce evidence at trial that the refusal to insure was based on legitimate business concerns, including risk.[320]

The insured or its counsel is charged with the duty of determining which exceptions it wishes to have removed before it will accept the title insurance policy. The proposed insured or seller sometimes induces the insurer to remove a commitment exception based on an indemnity, information or an assurance.

The insurer is not obligated to explain to a proposed insured how to go about eliminating a defect, lien or encumbrance. The insurer is also not required to remove a defect, lien or encumbrance as an exception if a curative law, statute of limitations or other theory or doctrine might cure or bar enforcement of a defect, lien or encumbrance.[321] Very often, the application of such a law or doctrine is less than certain under the given circumstances, or might be challenged by a third party.

---

[318] In Hanie v. Atlanta Title & Trust Co., 45 Ga.App. 26, 163 S.E. 515 (1932), for example, the insurer refused to insure title to land which it had previously insured. The owner sued for damages. The appellate court upheld a demurrer, holding that "the policy does not obligate the title company to insure the title to the property at a later date."

[319] A Kansas federal court held that an insurer has a duty of "reasonable performance" in its role as abstracter of title, and may not refuse to insure title if title is marketable under those standards, in In re Lisa, Inc., 224 B.R. 173 (D.C.D. Kan. 1998). The court rejected Aronoff v. Lenkin Co., 618 A.2d 669 (D.C.App. 1992), which held that a title insurer is not bound by any such standard. In In re Lisa, the title agent had refused to remove liens from Schedule B based on a bankruptcy order for sale free and clear. The state title standards said that such an order effectively removes such liens. The court stated: "Ford [the title agent] next argues that a title insurance company is free to impose any conditions it wants in the insurance policy. The Trustee argues that only reasonable conditions consistent with general title standards may be imposed. The Trustee argued Ford violated a duty of good faith and fair dealing when it refused to issue a policy without the exception. … The Trustee cited the Kansas Title Standards Handbook as evidence that Ford's refusal was inconsistent with general title standards. The bankruptcy court agreed with the Trustee, and relying on the handbook as evidence of what constitutes reasonable performance, concluded Ford had breached its duties under the contract when it refused to issue a policy without the exclusion. This court agrees with the bankruptcy court's analysis."

[320] Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 19 Cal.4th 26, 960 P.2d 513 (Cal. 1998).

[321] For example, in Gildea v. Guardian Title Co. of Utah, 970 P.2d 1265 (Utah 1998), reh.den., the plaintiff property seller alleged that, by making an exception for a judgment, the title agent conspired with the judgment creditor to force the seller to pay the debt even though the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. The court found no conspiracy and no intent to defraud the seller. Further, the court found that "Guardian was completely justified in refusing to insure against the judgment lien even though it was later held that the judgment lien had been waived" by the bankruptcy discharge. Similarly, in Watson v. LandAmerica Austin Title, 338 Fed.Appx. 352, 2009 WL 1106870 (5th Cir. (Tex.)) (unpublished), a title company was found not liable to a seller for a sale he lost because it refused to remove exceptions for federal tax liens against the seller, particularly when the IRS demanded the money from closing and the seller's claimed defense to the liens was proven to be bogus.

For example, in Wilkinson v. Rives,[322] numerous judgments and tax liens against the sellers attached to the land and were excepted in the commitment. The sellers settled with the creditors based on their attorney's advice, although a homestead exemption and declaration might have barred enforcement of the liens against the homestead parcel. The sellers sued the insurer, asserting that the insurer had given the advice that the homestead declaration was invalid and that the liens would have to be removed before a policy could be issued. The court found that the title examiner had given no such advice, and that the commitment was not advice or a representation. The court held that the insurer had the right to make "a title decision not to risk possible litigation by issuing a policy of title insurance without showing the judgments and liens as exceptions." Also, it concluded the insurer could not give legal advice about the effect of a homestead exemption:

> [The insurer] had no duty to give a legal opinion to appellants concerning the title to the subject property, and in fact was prohibited from doing so. [citing Agreement Between the State Bar of California and The California Land Title Association, 41 Ca.S.B.J. 156 (1966)] ... Appellants' reliance on section 552 of the Restatement of Torts is misplaced for the reasons that the evidence fails to show that CLTC furnished to appellants an inaccurate or incomplete title report or that appellants relied on any statement of CLTC regarding their homestead exemption.[323]

An insurer also has no duty of care to property owners who are not insureds to prevent their property from being conveyed by fraudulent conduct, as discussed at §7.7.

---

[322] 116 Cal.App.3d 641, 172 Cal.Rptr. 254 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1981).

[323] 172 Cal.Rptr. at 258.

13 Escrow and Settlement

This chapter discusses real estate escrows and the closing of a real estate transaction, whether classified as an escrow, settlement, table closing, or a mail-away or remote closing. This chapter discusses the principles underlying an escrow, the categories of duties undertaken by the escrowee, the theories of recovery against escrowees, and the grounds on which escrowees may recoup losses. Also included in this chapter, at §13.13, is a discussion of state laws and regulations controlling the type of funds that may be delivered to an escrowee.

There are several related subjects discussed in other chapters. Construction escrows are discussed in §10.2. Punchlist and completion escrows are discussed at §10.2.8. Chapter 14 covers closing protection letters. See §17.2 concerning claims that the underwriter is responsible for a title agent's escrow or closing errors, and §17.8.3 regarding the theft of closing money by a title agent.

13.1 Types Of Escrows And Their Purposes

An escrow is the deposit of an instrument and/or money (the deposit) with an independent party (the escrowee), with instructions to deliver the deposit on satisfaction of the conditions stated in the escrow instructions. Not every delivery of property under written instructions constitutes an escrow.[1] The general subject of escrow has been much discussed by scholars.[2]

---

[1] In TCC Historic Tax Credit Fund VII, L.P. v. Levenfeld Pearlstein, LLC, 2012 WL 5949211 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court held that, although a lawyer for a party to the transaction may serve as an escrowee, the delivery of money to a party's lawyer with instructions to forward it to three companies did not create an escrow, and a claim for breach of escrow contract failed.

[2] See Burke, Law of Title Insurance, Chapter 18; Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, Chapter 20; Walker & Eshee, The Safeguards and Dilemmas of Escrows, 16 Real Estate L.J. 45 (1987); John Hosack, Recent Developments and Decisions, in Current Developments In Title Insurance 1992, Practicing Law Institute N-384 1992, p. 621-770; Boyette, Title Insurance Liability Beyond the Policy, Florida Bar Journal, July/August, 1995, pp. 24-34; 30A C.J.S. Escrows; 28 Am.Jur.2d Escrows; McCall, The Title Insurer as Escrow Agent, the Guarantor, May/June 1988; Raymond Werner, Closing Real Estate Transactions: Loan Closings: Escrow, the Guarantor, May/June 1991, July/August 1991 and September/October 1991.

Escrow was first adopted as a method for the delivery of a conveyance instrument. In a conveyance escrow, the conveyance instrument (typically a deed) is deposited with the escrowee, along with written instructions. As one treatise explains,

> As frequently defined, an escrow is a written instrument, which by its terms imports a legal obligation, deposited by the grantor, promisor, or obligor, or his agent, with a stranger or third person, who is not a party to the instrument, to be kept by the depositary until the performance of a condition or the happening of a certain event and then to be delivered over to take effect. The term is also used to express the conditional execution and deposit of a deed or written instrument in such a manner. ...
>
> An escrow agreement is in essence a contractual undertaking to assure the carrying out of obligations already contracted for. It is primarily a conveyancing device designed to carry out the terms of a binding contract of sale previously entered into by the parties; the use of an escrow is simply a customary and convenient method of carrying out an agreement of sale.[3]

An escrow is formed by the delivery to a neutral party of documents and/or closing money, with instructions to deliver the deposits on the happening of certain conditions. The instructions must be clear that every deposit is beyond the depositor's power to recall it, with delivery conditional only on the other party's performance. If the depositor retains any ability to control the deposit, it remains the property of the depositor.[4] Title to the real estate passes when the conditions set by the instructions have been met, at which time the deed is delivered to the purchaser.[5] The grantor has no power to revoke the conveyance once the deed has been deposited into escrow.[6]

In modern times, the principle of escrow has been expanded, and is used for the transfer of

---

[3] 28 Am.Jur.2d Escrows §2.

[4] 28 Am.Jur.2d Escrows §4.

[5] In Osborn v. Osborn, 42 Cal.2d 358, 267 P.2d 333 (Cal. 1954), the court said: "Where a deed is placed in the hands of a third person, as an escrow, with an agreement between the grantor and grantee that it shall not be delivered to the grantee until he has complied with certain conditions, the grantee does not acquire any title to the land, nor is he entitled to a delivery of the deed until he has strictly complied with the conditions. If he does not comply with the conditions when required, or refuses to comply, the escrow-holder cannot make a valid delivery of the deed to him."

[6] "At common law an escrow was an instrument for the conveyance of land deposited by the grantor with a third party to be kept by the latter until the performance of a condition or the happening of a certain event and was then to be delivered over to the grantee. The doctrine of escrow was extended at an early date to all sealed instruments importing legal obligations ... More recently the concept has been further expanded to include money and personal property." Janson v. Cozen and O'Connor, 450 Pa.Super. 415, 676 A.2d 242, 246 (1996). The same history of escrow is recited in Hoornstra v. United States, 969 F.2d 530, 533 (7th Cir. 1992), and In re Handy Andy Home Improvement Centers, Inc., 196 B.R. 87 (N.D.Ill. E.D. 1996). See also 28 Am.Jur.2d Escrows §2.

things other than conveyance instruments. Money may be transferred and delivered through escrow.[7] Also, escrows may be used for construction loan disbursing, holdback or punchlist escrows, like-kind exchanges under Section 1031 of the tax code, environmental remediation, non-real estate sales, and for the deposit of money to allow the insurer to insure against title defects. See §10.2 regarding construction escrows. Punchlist and completion escrows are discussed at §10.2.8. See §5.10 regarding indemnities.

The closing of a real estate transaction is conducted in various ways in the United States, and is identified by different terms, the principal labels being settlement, closing and escrow. All real estate closings involve some form or aspect of an escrow. This chapter covers all forms of closings and escrows.

California and other western states operate under what is termed the pure or true escrow system, derived from Spanish law, which is discussed in depth in this chapter. The delayed-funding escrow is used in the Midwest and known as the Chicago form of escrow.[8] The "New York" style of table closing is another form of escrow.[9]

In a table closing, which is common in many Eastern and Midwestern states, the parties all meet at a closing table. The deed or mortgage is delivered when the consideration has been paid and the other conditions to closing have been met. The closer has a role that is similar to that of an escrow officer, but accepts his or her instructions primarily by direct conversation with the parties at the closing table.

It is common in a table closing for the buyer-seller closer to also serve as the closing agent for the lender. The lender issues written loan closing instructions to its closing agent. Those instructions are unilateral, although the lender may require the borrower to sign the instructions to signify his or her agreement with those terms. The lender can be liable to its borrower for the acts of the loan closing agent that the lender appoints.[10] The loan closing agent is the agent solely of the

---

[7] 30A C.J.S. Escrows §4.

[8] In the Chicago form of escrow, the insurer/escrowee receives funds and documents with instructions to record immediately, but not to fund the sale until it can search title through the date of recording so that it is prepared to issue a policy free of any matters in the recording gap. If a matter does appear in the gap search, the buyer reconveys and the mortgage is discharged of record to confirm that title remains in the seller.

[9] In the New York or table closing, the insurer accepts documents for recording and receives and disburses funds immediately. The closer marks up the title commitment to remove the gap exception and to commit to all coverages required by the insured. A policy is issued in conformity with the mark-up shortly after closing. The key aspect of a New York style closing is that the insurer accepts the risk of title matters that might appear in the gap. The insurer ordinarily does so based on an indemnity from the seller. The New York closer typically receives written instructions from the parties about delivery of money and closing documents.

[10] See Emigrant Mortgage Co., Inc. v. Costa, 2017 WL 4104913 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished), which held that the loan closing agent was the agent of the lender. The court noted that the lender, Emigrant Mortgage, had issued detailed written loan closing instructions that appointed the title company to serve as its agent in closing the loan. The court also noted that Emigrant had required the title agent to deliver a closing services letter (closing protection letter) to Emigrant to cover its acts as settlement agent. The court said that a jury could conclude from these facts that Emigrant had authorized Professional Abstract to close the loan as its agent, and that it had exercised control over its actions as closing lender in performing the instructions given by the lender.[11] The loan closing agent is not the agent of the borrower, as to the loan.[12] This combination of roles held by the closer is legally permissible due to the fact that the closer owes a limited duty to all parties, and can perform all of his or her duties without violating a duty owed to another party. Cases involving loan closing agents are discussed in various passages of this chapter, particularly §13.9.3 concerning the disclosure of facts about fraud.

In some cases, a loan closing is conducted at the borrower's residence or another place that is convenient to the borrower. In many such transactions, the loan documents are presented to the borrower for signing by a person who may be termed a mobile notary, witness closer or some similar designation. The witness closer is typically a notary public, which allows that person to acknowledge the borrower's signature on the mortgage or an affidavit. The mobile notary typically delivers the signed loan documents to another party, such as a title company, and that other company typically prepares the loan closing statement and delivers the loan money according to the lender's written instructions. The witness closer typically assumes the same standard of care that is imposed on an escrow officer for the witnessing of the signing of closing documents.[13] Cases involving witness closers are discussed in the appropriate passages of this chapter.

In the mail-away or remote closing, the buyer and seller do not meet at a closing table, most commonly because they do not reside in the same locale. The parties typically deliver the closing documents and money to a neutral closer, accompanied by written instructions about how they are to be delivered. In the remote closing, the closing officer has limited contact with the parties, and does not assume the same level of responsibility as does an escrow officer operating under joint written instructions.

Lenders are experimenting with the concept of a loan closing in which the borrower signs the loan documents without being in the presence of any other party, and a notary public acknowledges signatures "electronically." The procedures to be used in such a closing have not yet been well developed. Some states have adopted electronic notary or acknowledgment laws. However, to date, agent. The court cited Sears Mortg. Corp. v. Rose, 134 N.J. 326, 337 (1993), a seminal New Jersey case on loan closing agency.

---

[11] See Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. United General Title Ins. Co., 109 A.D.3d 953, 972 N.Y.S.2d 296 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 05982, in which the court found that a lender had no cause of action against its closing agent for the fact that the loan was obtained by impersonation, when the closer accepted as identification from the impersonator a driver's license that was not an obvious fake. The court noted that Countrywide's closing instructions did not require the closer to verify the signer's identity.

[12] See, for example, Sweeting v. Chicago Title Co., 2017 WL 1153354 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished), in which the court held that a loan closing agent owed no duty to the borrower. However, see also DiRenzo v. Katchen, 2017 WL 3255237 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished) (loan closer who signs HUD-1 settlement statement certification has legal duties to buyer that go beyond role of mere notary or witness, but he or she is not automatically a fiduciary and is required to perform only those duties that are found in the written loan closing instructions).

[13] DiRenzo v. Katchen, 2017 WL 3255237 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished) (loan closer who signs HUD-1 settlement statement certification has legal duties to buyer that go beyond role of mere notary or witness, but he or she is not automatically a fiduciary and is required to perform only those duties that are found in the written loan closing instructions).

those laws do not establish consistent standards for an electronic acknowledgment.

Buyers, sellers and lenders can and sometimes do conduct closings without using a neutral escrow officer or closer. However, a closing conducted through an escrowee or closer provides several valuable advantages to the parties. The use of a neutral escrow officer or closer provides a method by which the insureds can get protection against the recording gap, and allows the parties to deposit the documents and funds with an independent stakeholder experienced in the transfer of funds and the recording of documents. Finally, by tying the close of escrow or settlement to the issuance of a title insurance policy in an acceptable form, the proposed insureds receive the assurance that they will receive the policy coverages for which they have bargained.

13.2 Escrow Instructions

The instructions of the principals to the escrowee provide the terms of the escrow. These instructions are sometimes denominated an agreement, but the more proper term is escrow instructions, in that they are the appointment of an agent by one or more principals. This treatise uses the term escrow instructions.

In most cases, escrow instructions must be in writing to be valid.[14] When no signed original instructions can be proven, a party may introduce testimony showing that the instructions were signed.[15] Some instructions may be oral, even when others are in writing.[16] However, oral instructions are not binding if they modify written instructions or are not given jointly by all of the principals.[17] A California regulation requiring escrowees to obtain written instructions did not

---

[14] When one party signed instructions, the escrowee was negligent in performing the escrow without signatures of the other parties, particularly after the signing party materially amended the instructions without notice to the other parties. However, the negligence was not malicious and did not support a verdict for punitive damages. Flyer's Body Shop Profit Sharing Plan v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 185 Cal.App.3d 1149, 230 Cal.Rptr. 276 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986).

[15] MH Investment Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 785 P.2d 89 (Ariz.App. 1989); Haufler v. Zotos, 446 Mass. 489, 845 N.E.2d 322 (Mass. 2006) (one party's 18-month delay in signing escrow instructions did not make escrow voidable at option of other party or demote instructions to mere "offer" to form an escrow).

[16] "As noted in [Claussen v. First American Title Guaranty Co., 186 Cal.App.3d 429, 435, 230 Cal.Rptr. 749 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1986)], 'escrow instructions may be oral, even when some are in writing (citations) and some escrow instructions may be implicit in the express instructions given.' (Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp. (1975) 48 Cal.App.3d 616, 621-623 [122 Cal.Rptr. 150]—escrow instructions implicitly required proceeds of sale to be paid to both sellers.)" Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990); Winslow v. Scaife, 219 Va. 997, 254 S.E.2d 58 (1979).

[17] Katleman v. U.S. Communities, Inc., 197 Neb. 443, 249 N.W.2d 898 (1977); Scholz Homes, Inc. v. Wallace, 590 F.2d 860 (10th Cir. 1979); Burke, Law of Title Insurance, §18.2, p.18:5; Osborn v. Grego, 596 P.2d 1233 (Kan. 1979) (completion escrow on new construction amended by phone call from builder not binding on homeowner who did not approve, but homeowner's later acts ratified amendment); Gattozzi v. Midland First American Nat'l Title Service, 2000 WL 1369890 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished) (unsigned letter from one principal changing tax payment amount insufficient to modify written instructions); Carrillo v. Accurate Escrow, Inc., 2003 WL 116675 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (unsigned amendment modifying written escrow instruction invalid, especially in light of principal's limited understanding of English language); Brantley v. Boyd, 2009 WL 4052682 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished) (escrowee that accepted telephone instruction to send loan proceeds to party other than borrower was liable to lender for full exonerate an escrowee from liability for violation of oral instructions.[18] The purchase agreement may serve as some or all of the escrow instructions, or its terms may be incorporated into the escrow instructions, in which case the escrowee is correct in obeying the terms of the purchase agreement as discussed at §13.8.

Escrow instructions may be signed by a representative of a principal. When an escrow principal is an entity, and the instructions are signed by a representative of that entity, the escrowee is not obligated to determine that the representative has authority to bind the principal in the conduct of the escrow.[19] The escrowee is required to obey the instruction of a representative of the entity escrow principal.[20] The escrow may accept instruction from the authorized or empowered representative of the individual escrow principal, which may include an attorney or real estate broker.[21] An escrowee is obligated to investigate a possible mistake in the instructions when the amount of loan when the borrowers refused to pay money back). However, a principal may not use the requirement for written instruction to disclaim his own verbal instruction. When a party to the escrow gave verbal instructions to close the transaction, but refused to sign a written amendment necessary to solve a shortfall in the purchase price, that party was not entitled to seek recovery of the shortfall from the escrowee on the theory that the escrowee was obligated to obtain the written amendment which the party refused to sign. Gris, Inc. v. Rho, 2003 WL 21758394 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished). When the escrow instructions were one sentence long, a subsequent letter from the principal was properly found to augment the original instructions, and the escrowee was at fault for not obeying the letter instructions. Int'l Capital Corp. v. Moyer, 347 Ill.App.3d 116, 806 N.E.2d 1166, 282 Ill.Dec. 578 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2004). In Mew Equity, LLC v. Sutton Land Services, LLC, 144 A.D.3d 874, 42 N.Y.S.3d 175, 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 07630 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2016), a lender submitted a mortgage release to the escrowee, which recorded it. The court dismissed the claim by the lender against the escrowee alleging that there was an oral agreement to hold the release in escrow, because such an agreement would contradict the plain terms of the instrument, and evidence of such an oral agreement was barred under by the parol evidence rule.

---

[18] Zang v. Northwestern Title Co., 135 Cal.App.3d 159, 185 Cal.Rptr. 176 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1982).

[19] Capital Salvage v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2004 WL 1753213 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2004) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to confirm authority of LLC member to sign escrowed documents and escrow instructions); Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 73 Cal.App.4th 668, 86 Cal.Rptr.2d 490 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1999) (escrowee had no duty to verify authority of trustee); 837 Prairie Avenue LLC v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., Inc., 2011 WL 3916936 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to confirm authority of LLC member to bind company to purchase agreement and escrow instructions); Fey Family Limited Partnership v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 662519 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (when son claimed to be general partner of partnership in fraudulent sale of property owned by partnership, escrowee had no duty to father, the real general partner, to detect or prevent unauthorized sale).

[20] Murrietta Car Wash, Inc. v. North County Bank, 2003 WL 21481135 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (instructions from one member of joint venture were binding and escrowee was obligated to obey them, although other members later asserted that they disagreed with the instructions given).

[21] Posner v. Equity Title Ins. Agency, Inc., 222 P.3d 775, 2009 UT App 347 (Utah App. 2009) (when seller authorized his real estate broker to get deal closed, escrowee was not negligent in taking instruction to close escrow from broker rather than seller directly, and delivery of key documents to broker was sufficient); American Diversified Properties, Inc. v. Valleywide Escrow, Inc., 2008 WL 4060942 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (broker and co-broker may direct escrowee on payment of commissions when principals delegate this authority to the brokers); West Knoxville Associates Limited Partnership v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 124 F.3d 210 (6th Cir. (Tenn.)) (Table), 1997 WL 561420 (unpublished) (escrowee must establish that attorney for principal has authority to give instructions); 7A C.J.S. Attorney

escrowee is notified of the issue by the party's attorney.[22] As with other documents, forged escrow instructions are usually void.[23] A party to the escrow who refuses to sign the escrow instructions may not later sue the escrowee for breach of the instructions, because no contract has been formed between the party and the escrowee.[24]

No task or duty may be added to supplement the duties contained in the written escrow instructions based on testimony about supposed escrow industry customs.[25] Some instructions may be implicit in the express instructions given.[26] In one case, an insurer was held to be an escrowee even though no written instructions were given to it, with the court implying instructions from the terms of the instrument deposited with the insurer.[27]

The escrowee does not have an implied duty to verify the actions of other parties, the authenticity of documents prepared or signed by others, or similar conduct by others.[28]

& Client § 211; 7 Am.Jur.2d Attorneys at Law § 129.

[22] Diaz v. United California Bank, 71 Cal.App.3d 161, 139 Cal.Rptr. 314 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1977).

[23] In Phleger v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 2008 WL 65771 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the plaintiff claimed that the escrow instructions had been forged as part of a loan fraud scheme, and that the escrowee was bound by the "real" instructions which emanated from the plaintiff. The court allowed the case to survive a motion to dismiss, but noted the sophistry in this premise: "Phleger's complaint and her opposition do appear to studiously play upon an equivocation between what might be referred to as the 'actual Phleger' who claims that she did not sign the loans and the 'purported Phleger' who did." In Penklor Properties LLC v. Buehler, 2019 WL 1343583 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished), a Tennessee escrowee that paid money to the seller's agent based on a forged amendment to escrow instructions was required to replace the money, because the court said that no reasonable business person would have trusted that the amendment was genuine.

[24] Lottmann v. Land and Real Estate Investments, 2007 WL 4532808 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished); Goldberg, Sager & Associates v. Gilewski, 2017 WL 1438571, 2017 N.Y. Slip Op. 50544(U) (N.Y. Kings Cty.) (unpublished).

[25] In Bianchi v. Ladjen, 2018 WL 1901945 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished), the court excluded the testimony of an expert witness who claimed to have closed several thousand residential real estate transactions and who said that the escrowee violated its "standard of care" by drafting "an inadequate escrow agreement" that failed to address the risk of loss due to property damage during the pendency of escrow. The court said the witness' testimony was inconsistent with the terms of the purchase contract as to the same risk.

[26] Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990); Claussen v. First American Title Guaranty Co., 186 Cal.App.3d 429, 230 Cal.Rptr. 749 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1986); Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp., 48 Cal.App.3d 616, 621-623, 122 Cal.Rptr. 150 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1975).

[27] The court placed all of the onus on the insurer for obtaining written instructions, saying that it "failed to execute such an agreement with the parties." Lacy v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 794 S.W.2d 781 (Tex.App.-Dallas 1990).

[28] Qube Films Ltd. v. Padell, 2016 WL 881128 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (unpublished) (escrow instructions calling for escrowee to release money to one party when other party had determined that conditions for release of money had been met did not obligate escrowee to independently verify that conditions had been met before delivery of money); Batson v. Rim San Antonio Acquisition, LLC, 2016 WL 6901312 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (unpublished) (New York escrowee's fiduciary duty only as broad as scope of written duties; escrowee instructed to deliver money based on written instruction from one party had no implied duty to verify who controlled bank account to which money was delivered); Madison Square

A valid and enforceable escrow is formed when all necessary parties have signed escrow instructions.[29] When two or more parties give instructions, they must be consistent to form an enforceable escrow agreement.[30] If the instructions are unclear or inconsistent, the escrowee should

---

Development Partnership of Arizona v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 3501556 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished) (when escrow instructions said that one party was to give notice to both escrowee and other party, escrowee was not required to verify that other party received notice that escrowee received and obeyed); Ramos v. Romero, 2016 WL 1239277 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no general duty to verify that a person was who he purported to be, and escrow instructions contained a valid disclaimer of such a duty; therefore, escrowee was not liable to buyers for fraud caused by impersonation of sellers); Iglesias v. Pentagon Title and Escrow, LLC, 206 Md.App. 624, 51 A.3d 51 (Md.App. 2012) (lender's settlement agent owed no duty to person whose identity was stolen by borrower to detect and stop identity theft, or to verify authenticity of power of attorney given to closer); Mortensen v. First American Title Co., Inc., 2013 WL 1222566 (D. Idaho) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to woman who gave her husband a power of attorney to verify with her that she had authorized him to sign documents on her behalf; power was valid and had not been revoked as of closing); Brandt v. Sande, d/b/a Land Title Services, 299 Mont. 256, 1 P.3d 929, 2000 MT 98 (Mont. 2000) (escrowee not required to verify party paid at direction of principal to verify that he held direct assignment of escrow proceeds); Capital Salvage v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2004 WL 1753213 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2004) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to confirm authority of LLC member to sign escrowed documents and escrow instructions); Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 73 Cal.App.4th 668, 86 Cal.Rptr.2d 490 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1999) (no duty to verify authority of trustee); 837 Prairie Avenue LLC v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., Inc., 2011 WL 3916936 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to confirm authority of LLC member to bind company to purchase agreement and escrow instructions); Fey Family Limited Partnership v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 662519 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (when son claimed to be general partner of partnership in fraudulent sale of property owned by partnership, escrowee had no duty to father, the real general partner, to detect or prevent unauthorized sale); Pichon v. L.J. Broekemeier, Inc., 108 Idaho 846, 702 P.2d 884 (Idaho App. 1985) (escrowee not required to verify that consideration had been paid for deed delivered to escrowee for recording); Hooper v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 285 Pa.Super. 265, 427 A.2d 215 (1981) (escrowee instructed to send funds to pay off mortgage did not have additional duty to verify its later discharge); Humphreys v. Northwestern Title Co., 2002 WL 475217 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrow instruction to "secure" note as deposit into escrow did not create implied duty to verify that instrument had not been forged, distinguishing Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc., 210 Cal.App.3d 915, 259 Cal.Rptr. 117 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1989), which found a cause of action against the escrowee for accepting a forged amendment to the escrow instructions). In Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 186 Wash.2d 58, 375 P.3d 651 (Wash. 2016), the Washington Supreme Court resolved the question certified to it, ruling in a resounding and well-supported opinion that a title insurer does not owe a duty of care to the property owner in recording a document. The court said: "[p]laintiffs urge us to hold that justice requires title insurance companies to look behind the signatures on the document and police the parties' agreements against conflicting corporate documents or loan agreements. This is not a just result, and placing this burden on title insurance companies increases their costs, slows the recording process, and frustrates public policy, with no appreciable benefit." Subsequently, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of the claims against the escrowee, in Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 668 Fed.Appx. 760, 2016 WL 4572391 (9th Cir. (Wash.) 2016) (unpublished).

[29] Edwards v. CBD & Sons, 2018 WL 2303017 (D.Conn. 2018) (unpublished) (deed escrow not unenforceable based on borrower's argument that he was forced to enter into escrow due to his loan default, when escrow was a required condition to loan forbearance agreement).

[30] Cloud v. Winn, 1956 OK 267, 303 P.2d 305 (Okla. 1956); Calcagno v. Drew, 694 N.Y.S.2d 248, 1999 N.Y. Slip Op. 06933 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 1999) (letter from buyer's lawyer became escrow agreement when seller's lawyer wrote that he had "no problem whatsoever" with the instructions); Babcock Place Ltd. Ptnshp. v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 Mont. 364, 69 P.3d 1145 (Mont. 2003), reh.den. June 5, 2003 (law firm may be sued for malpractice for drafting escrow instructions that were ambiguous and did not adequately protect client). In Gould v.

get them clarified before proceeding.[31] An escrowee does not violate any duty to a principal by refusing to perform according to its instruction, when the other principal is giving a contrary instruction.[32] An escrowee was liable to one principal of the escrow for failing to deliver supplemental instructions to the other party for signature, which supplemental instructions clarified the due dates in the escrow.[33]

Once clear instructions are given, the escrowee must obey them even if a party directs the escrowee to disregard them.[34] For example, when a letter of credit was deposited as earnest money, and the letter stated that it was to be drawn on if the buyer defaulted, the escrowee was obliged to draw on the letter even though the buyer forbade it.[35] However, an escrowee does not breach the instructions by obeying a demand from one of the escrow principals for the return of money or a document deposited by that party, unless the instructions state that a deposit, once made, cannot be withdrawn.[36]

An escrowee is not liable if it performs according to its instructions.[37] When the escrow

---

Mellick and Sexton, 263 Conn. 140, 819 A.2d 216 (2003), a law firm drafted escrow instructions that were used to collect investors' money for a real estate project. The money was delivered to the law firm's client, who did not use it properly, and the investors lost their money. They sued the law firm. The court found that the lawyer did not represent the investors, and had no duty to build protections for the investors into the escrow instructions.

[31] Diaz v. United California Bank, 71 Cal.App.3d 161, 139 Cal.Rptr. 314 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1977); Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., 183 Cal.App.3d 57, 227 Cal.Rptr. 785 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986); Gardenhire v. Phoenix Title & Trust Co., 11 Ariz.App. 557, 466 P.2d 776 (1970); Spaziani v. Millar, 215 Cal.App.2d 667, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1963).

[32] James v. Shavon Ltd., 2012 WL 6029813 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished).

[33] 1939 Argyle, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 1816053 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished). The appeals court reinstated the jury award of $1.7 million, most of which was a premium paid by the buyer to the seller to induce him to close on the purchase despite his claim that the buyer had missed a deadline that was clarified in the supplemental instructions.

[34] An attorney-escrowee's email stating that he would not release the signed purchase agreement until the buyer's deposit checks had cleared modified his escrow instructions and prevented his clients from delivering the contract and seeking to enforce it. Vic's Parking Corp. v. Nash, 26 Misc.3d 413, 890 N.Y.S.2d 803, 2009 N.Y. Slip Op. 29449 (N.Y.Sup.Ct. 2009). In Versailles Investments, LLC v. First California Escrow Corp., 2017 WL 2264490 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the buyer reserved the right to assign the purchase contract to an entity and instructed the escrowee to alter the signed deed to run in favor of the entity he formed, which it did. The court held that the buyer had no claim against the escrowee for having complied with his instructions.

[35] Lacy v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 794 S.W.2d 781 (Tex.App.-Dallas 1990).

[36] In Mazgani v. S.B.S. Trust Deed Network, Inc., 2016 WL 379591 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the borrower sued the escrowee for allegedly breaching its instructions by allowing the sub-escrowee to return the loan money pursuant to the lender's demand. The lender demanded the money because "the loan had been improvidently funded." The court found that obedience to the lender's instruction was not a breach of the escrow instructions.

[37] In Colonial Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Redwood Empire Title Co., 236 Cal.App.2d 186, 46 Cal.Rptr. 16 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1965), the instructions required that the insurer-escrowee issue policies insuring the deeds of trust as first liens, but instructions state that one party is to give a notice to both the escrowee and the other party, the escrowee is not required to verify that the other party actually received the notice that was sent to the escrowee, and which it obeyed.[38]

Instructions may be modified with the consent of all parties.[39] Instructions may not be changed by one party without approval of all other parties.[40] However, when one party changes the instructions and the escrowee acts in reliance on the modified instructions, the other party's failure to repudiate the escrowee's action is ratification, which precludes recovery for breach:

> [A]n unauthorized act of an agent may be ratified by a principal, and when ratified it is the equivalent of an original grant of authority. [citations omitted] On acquiring knowledge of the unauthorized act of an agent, the principal should promptly

---

"subject to exceptions No. 2, 3 and 4" of the title commitments. One of those exceptions was for assessments by a special assessment district. Therefore, it was not a breach of instructions to break escrow and issue policies subject to such assessments. In SO5 501, LLC v. Metro-Dade Title Co., 109 So.3d 1192 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2013), the court held that, because the escrow instructions said the escrowee was required to disburse the earnest money at the seller's direction if buyer defaulted on the contract, the escrowee was not required to ask the buyer if it agreed it was in default before disbursing at the seller's direction. The court said that the escrowee "could not have breached its fiduciary duty by, nor was it grossly negligent for, disbursing the funds in the manner instructed by the developer and required by the escrow agreement."

[38] Madison Square Development Partnership of Arizona v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 3501556 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished).

[39] Jones v. Title Guar. & Trust Co., 178 Cal. 375, 173 P. 586 (1918); 28 Am.Jur.2d Escrows §5.

[40] Ogdahl v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 72 Cal.App.3d Supp. 41, 140 Cal.Rptr. 148 (A.D.Sup.Ct. Santa Barbara 1977) (overturned by Contemporary Investments, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 145 Cal.App.3d 999, 193 Cal.Rptr. 822 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1983)); Katleman v. U.S. Communities, Inc., 197 Neb. 443, 249 N.W.2d 898 (1977); Scholz Homes, Inc. v. Wallace, 590 F.2d 860 (10th Cir. (Kan.) 1979); Dickens v. First American Title Ins. Co. of Arizona, 784 P.2d 717 (Ariz.App. 1989). In Osborn v. Grego, 596 P.2d 1233 (Kan. 1979), for example, a completion or "punchlist" escrow on new construction was amended by phone by the builder, without like approval by the homeowner, which was not a binding amendment. However, the homeowner's later acts ratified the amendment. In Crosby v. Kendall, 247 Ga.App. 843, 545 S.E.2d 385 (Ga.App. 2001) cert.den., attorney-escrowee David Crosby held funds from investors to be used to renovate buildings purchased by Samuel Caldwell, Crosby's long-time client. Caldwell told the investors that one of Crosby's main duties was to make sure that their money was not released until the requirements in the escrow instructions had been met. However, Crosby took order from Caldwell that contradicted the escrow instructions and left the investors without the collateral and liens that Crosby had been instructed to obtain. The court upheld a judgment against Crosby for damage caused by his failure to follow the investors' instructions: "The jury was authorized to conclude that evidence that Crosby communicated solely with Caldwell and failed to procure the necessary documents from him to fulfill his escrow agent duties showed a conscious disregard for consequences, especially in light of Crosby's past attorney-client relationships with Caldwell. Crosby could have contacted the appellees at any time and told them that he was unable to procure the necessary documents. He could have looked at his own paperwork and seen that the escrow agreement requirements were not being met. Instead, he blindly relied on statements made by a past, and possibly present, client to the detriment of those he represented as an escrow agent. Crosby knew he was not fulfilling the requirements of the escrow agreements, and he admitted that on at least one occasion he acted contrary to the escrow agent agreements in his attempt to help Caldwell."

repudiate the act; otherwise it will be presumed he has ratified and affirmed the act.[41]

When one party modifies instructions as to its deposits, and the other parties are aware of and do not object to the modification, the escrowee may obey the modified instruction.[42] A court order instructing the escrowee to disburse deposited funds in a particular fashion supersedes the escrow instructions.[43]

An escrowee is entitled to enforce an escrow instruction provision requiring the parties to pay a fee for the escrow services.[44]

In California, Arizona, Nevada and other true escrow states, the escrowee often appoints a sub-escrowee or sub-escrow to conduct certain functions of the escrow, most typically the receipt and disbursement of the money deposited into the escrow.[45] On occasion, the sub-escrow is also instructed to record documents on the close of escrow. Often, the sub-escrow is the title insurer or title insurance agency that will issue policies in the transaction. An independent escrow company typically is unable to provide adequate assurances to a title insurer (with whom the escrow company has no contractual relationship) that the escrow company has fully and correctly paid off all liens and loans through the escrow. If the escrowee is unable to induce the title insurer to issue policies in the form prescribed by the escrow instructions, the escrowee is typically unable to comply with an instruction to cause the issuance of policies in a certain form. The sub-escrow arrangement allows the title insurer to control the payoff of loans and liens so that it can issue title insurance policies free of exceptions for the liens that the parties have designated to be paid off through escrow, without having to wait and rely on the recording of lien releases. It can take months for such releases to be recorded, and not all liens are released of record.

Under a sub-escrow, the sole principal is the escrowee. The escrow instructions are given by the escrowee to the sub-escrow. The sub-escrow owes a duty solely to the escrowee. The principals to the main escrow are not parties to the sub-escrow, and the sub-escrow does not owe any duty of

---

[41] Osborn v. Grego, 596 P.2d 1233, 1237 (Kan. 1979) [citations omitted].

[42] Common Wealth Ins. Systems, Inc. v. Kersten, 40 Cal.App.3d 1014, 115 Cal.Rptr. 653 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1974).

[43] Kramer v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 69 Ill.App .3d 1015, 26 Ill.Dec. 275, 387 N.E.2d 1105 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1979). In Securities and Exchange Commission v. Champion-Cain, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 4686938 (S.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication), a title insurer escrowee was found to have breached a duty to the court by not having immediately turned over escrowed money on receipt of a court order instructing that all property of an entity was to be paid to the entity's receiver, despite the fact that many people whose money was part of the escrow pool told the escrowee they did not want the receiver to take control of their money.

[44] In Bong Je Choi v. Prima Escrow, Inc., 2019 WL 5157124 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court enforced an escrow instruction requiring the parties to pay escrow fees based on the proposed sale price despite the fact that escrow did not close, but held that the escrowee was not entitled to also collect prevailing-party attorneys' fees.

[45] See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 46 Cal.App.4th 1181, 54 Cal.Rptr.2d 84 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1996), and Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 142 Cal.App.4th 508, 48 Cal.Rptr.3d 217 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2006), for a discussion of the sub-escrow arrangement.

care to those principals, as discussed at §13.4. The role and duties of the sub-escrow are further discussed at §§13.6, 13.9.1 and 13.14.

13.3 Legal Relationship Between Escrowee And Others

FORM 81, Appendix A
Escrowee owes no duty to third parties

The escrowee's legal status is classified somewhat differently in the various states. Some consider the escrowee to be a neutral stakeholder in the transaction.[46]

> The escrow relationship is a stakeholder relationship that carries special duties. ... An escrow agent acts as a neutral third party.[47]

Other states consider the escrowee to be a limited agent of all parties to the escrow.[48]

> [T]he escrow holder is generally considered the agent of both parties to the escrow, and he owes an obligation to each party measured by an application of the ordinary principles of agency. Such agency has been held to be for the limited purpose of the escrow, and to continue until the escrow is closed.[49]

California refers to the escrowee as "the limited agent and fiduciary of all parties to an escrow."[50] This agency "is limited because the escrow agent only represents his principals insofar as [46] Citizens National Bank of Roswell v. Davisson, 229 U.S. 213, 223 (1913); Bell v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 830 S.W.2d 157 (Tex.App. 1992); Wilson v. Carver Fed. Savings & Loan Ass'n, 774 S.W.2d 106 (Tex.App.-Beaumont 1989); Bowles v. Key Title Co., 163 Or.App. 9, 986 P.2d 1236 (Or.App. 1999) (escrowee's duty is "to hold and dispose of 'stakes,' pursuant to the parties' instructions... .").

---

[47] Bell v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 830 S.W.2d 157 (Tex.App. 1992). Note, however, that Texas also considers the escrowee a fiduciary.

[48] Blackburn v. McCoy, 1 Cal.App.2d 648, 654, 37 P.2d 155 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1934); Gurley v. Bank of Huntsville, 349 So.2d 43 (Ala. 1977); Shaheen v. American Title Ins. Co., 120 Ariz. 505, 508, 586 P.2d 1317, 1320 (Ariz.App. 1978); Fretz v. First American Title Ins. Co., 161 Ariz. 174, 777 P.2d 672 (App. 1989); In re Munoz, ___ B.R. ___, 2019 WL 6528810 (Bkcy.N.M. 2019) (not yet released for publication) (while an escrowee is often termed an escrow agent, it is not the agent of an escrow principal, and certainly not its agent for service of legal process). See also, Nagy, Escrowees' Duty to Disclose Fraud: An Expansion of the Limited Agency Doctrine, 22 Ariz. L.Rev. 1146, 1149 (1980); Jacobsen, California Escrow Agents: A Duty to Disclose Known Fraud?, 17 Pacific L.J. 309, 312-3 (1985); Winslow v. Scaife, 219 Va. 997, 254 S.E.2d 58 (1979).

[49] 30A C.J.S. Escrows §10 (footnotes omitted).

[50] Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 211 Cal.App.3d 1122, 260 Cal.Rptr. 21, 25 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1989) [citing Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., 183 Cal.App.3d 57, 64-65, 227 Cal.Rptr. 785 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986)]; Spaziani v. Millar, he carries out the escrow instructions... ."[51] Courts in some other states have also held that an escrowee owes at least a limited fiduciary duty to the escrow principals.[52]

The negligence of the escrowee as limited agent may not be imputed to the principals of the

---

215 Cal.App.2d 667, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1963). In Blackburn v. McCoy, 1 Cal.App.2d 648, 37 P.2d 153 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1934), the court elucidated: "There seems to be a divergence of opinion in the books as to whether the status of an escrow holder is that of an agent or trustee for the parties to the escrow. Conceding that the escrow instructions created an agency in the defendant Title Guarantee and Trust Company for the several parties to the escrow, as contended for by appellant Blackburn, it could not be a general agency for each one of the parties because their interests were conflicting. The status could only properly be classified as an agency on the theory that there was a limited agency as to each party to the escrow, whereby the duties and obligations owing by the escrow holder to each would not conflict with the duties it owed to the other. The usual purpose that prompts the creation of an escrow is the desire of persons dealing at arm's length with each other to have their conflicting interests handled by one person in such a manner as to adequately protect the rights of each of the parties to the transaction. The fundamental principles underlying the obligations of a general agency would not, and could not, tolerate the operation of an escrow, such as we have here, as a general agency. If the several escrow instructions create in the escrow holder an agency, it must be one limiting the obligations of the escrow holder to each party to the escrow in accordance with the instructions given by such party. This in practice has been and is the underlying principle that has made possible the development of the escrow method of handling transactions which has become such an important factor in conveyancing and other business activities. Upon this theory, it has been given almost universal judicial sanction in this and other jurisdictions." 37 P.2d at 155.

[51] Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 211 Cal.App.3d 1122, 260 Cal.Rptr. 21 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1989).

[52] Takayama v. Schaefer, 240 A.D.2d 21, 669 N.Y.S.2d 656 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1998), held that "an escrow agent can be held liable for breach of the escrow agreement and breach of fiduciary duty as escrowee" (citing Grinblat v. Taubenblat, 107 A.D.2d 735, 484 N.Y.S.2d 96 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1985), and that "[a]n escrow agent not only has a contractual duty to follow the escrow agreement, but additionally becomes a trustee of anyone with a beneficial interest in the trust." The Takayama ruling was upheld in Baquerizo v. Monasterio, 90 A.D.3d 587, 933 N.Y.S.2d 869, 2011 N.Y. Slip Op. 08890 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2011). In Sasidharan v. Piverger, 145 A.D.3d 814, 44 N.Y.S.3d 85, 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 08387 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2016), the court quoted and followed the holdings of Takayama and Baquerizo that an escrowee "not only has a contractual duty to follow the escrow agreement, but additionally becomes a trustee of anyone with a beneficial interest in the trust [with] a duty not to deliver the property held in escrow to anyone except upon 'strict compliance with the conditions imposed' in the escrow agreement." See also Thorpe Trucking, LLC v. Devit, 2003 WL 22233905 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished) (escrowee is a fiduciary); Knoll v. Butler, 675 A.2d 1308, 1312 (Pa.Commw. 1996), aff'd 693 A.2d 198 (Pa. 1997) ("An ordinary escrow agreement creates a fiduciary relationship between the agent and the transferor"); Frenkel v. Baker, 2014 WL 5697449 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished); Posner v. Equity Title Ins. Agency, Inc., 222 P.3d 775, 2009 UT App 347 (Utah App. 2009) (escrowee is a fiduciary to all parties to the escrow, with a duty to act in good faith, with loyalty and due care, and to make disclosure). In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 7339150 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court refused to rule that an escrowee's fiduciary duty is limited to its duty to obey written instructions, but did not identify any way in which the fiduciary duty is broader than such obedience. Florida also says that an escrowee owes a fiduciary duty to the escrow principals. Watkins v. NCNB Nat'l Bank of Fla., N.A., 622 So.2d 1063 (Fla.App. 1993). In Maxfield v. Martin, 217 Ariz. 312, 173 P.3d 476 (Ariz.App. 1 Div. 2007), rev.den. June 3, 2008, the court held that an Arizona escrowee "has a fiduciary relationship of trust and confidence to the parties to the escrow" that has two facets: "to comply strictly with the terms of the escrow agreement and to disclose facts that a reasonable escrow agent would perceive as evidence of fraud being committed on a party to the escrow." The Arizona statement of an escrowee's fiduciary duties may also be found in Maganas v. Northroup, 135 Ariz. 573, 663 P.2d 565 (1983); Burkons v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of California, 168 Ariz. 345, 813 P.2d 710 (1991); Mur-Ray Management Corp. v. Founders Title Co., 169 Ariz. 417, 819 P.2d 1003 (Ariz.App. 1991); and Surowiec v. Capital Title Agency, Inc., 790 F.Supp.2d 997 (D.Ariz. 2011).

escrow.[53] Nor, in most cases, may the escrowee's knowledge be imputed to a principal to the escrow.[54] However, when the escrowee participates in fraud, its actions are imputed to its principal.[55]

The California escrowee is not a trustee, and does not have the powers and obligations given to trustees in that state.[56] Some states consider the escrowee a fiduciary.[57] In some states at least,

---

[53] Common Wealth Ins. Systems Ins. v. Kersten, 40 Cal.App.3d 1014, 115 Cal.Rptr. 653 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1974), stating "[a]lthough for certain purposes an escrow holder has been termed an agent of the parties to the escrow (see Spaziani v. Millar, Supra, 215 Cal.App.2d 667, 682-683, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658), the relationship is not such that justifies imputation of contributory negligence. Imputed contributory negligence is a disfavored doctrine. (Prosser, Torts (4th ed.) § 74, p. 488; 2 Harper and James, Law of Torts, § 23, pp. 1264-1266.) A plaintiff will not be barred from recovery by the negligence of a third person unless the relation between them is such that plaintiff would be vicariously liable as a defendant to another who may be injured, such as the relationship between master and servant or persons engaged in a partnership or joint venture. (Prosser, Supra, p. 488; 28 Harper and James, Supra, p. 1273.) The relationship between a party to an escrow and the escrow holder is not that of master and servant. The former justification for the doctrine of respondent superior which was based on control has now been supplanted by the rationale of allocation of risk of loss. (Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co., 2 Cal.3d 956, 959, 88 Cal.Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988.) Neither the rationale of control nor allocation of risk justifies making an innocent party to an escrow vicariously liable for torts of the escrow holder."

[54] "An agent's notice of matters which is outside the scope of the agency or not related to its purposes is not imputed to the principal. 3 C.J.S. Agency § 436, p. 301. Before notice or knowledge of an agent is imputed to his principal it must first be shown that the authority of such agent extended to the very matter about which and concerning which such knowledge or notice was acquired. … As escrow agent, the authority of the title company did not extend to the investigation of title. In this regard, the course and scope of the title company's authority was limited to the closing of the loan. Since the title company acquired no knowledge of the plaintiffs' claim while acting in the scope of its duties as escrow agent, no question arises with regard to imputed notice." Tamburine v. Center Savings Ass'n, 583 S.W.2d 942, 949 (Tex.App. 1979). In Estates of Collins v. Dancy, 205 Cal.App.4th 1238, 141 Cal.Rptr.3d 227 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 2012), the court held that the escrow officer's knowledge would be imputed to the buyer, but the escrow officer did not know that a deed had been forged. The court said the knowledge of a title officer at the same company was not imputed to the buyer, however.

[55] See, for example, GreenPoint Mortgage Funding, Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 49 A.D.3d 687, 854 N.Y.S.2d 185, 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. 02552 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2008), in which the court held there were triable questions of fact as to whether or not the actions of a closing attorney should negate policy coverage, when the closer was accused of participating in a title fraud. The court followed the standard rubric that "[w]here a loss is caused by the fraud of a third party, in determining the liability as between two innocent parties, the loss should fall on the one who enabled the fraud to be committed," citing Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Consumer Home Mortgage, 272 A.D.2d 512, 514, 708 N.Y.S.2d 445 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000).

[56] Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 211 Cal.App.3d 1122, 260 Cal.Rptr. 21 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1989).

[57] NGM Ins. Co. v. Secured Title & Abstract, Inc., 2008 WL 4276932 (E.D.Va.) (unpublished), related decision, 2008 WL 4642957 (E.D.Va.) (unpublished); Boatright v. Texas American Title Co., 790 S.W.2d 722 (Tex. 1990); Bell v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 830 S.W.2d 157 (Tex.App. 1992); Tucson Title Ins. v. D'Ascoli, 94 Ariz. 230, 234, 383 P.2d 119, 121 (1963); Francis v. Eisenmayer, 171 Cal.App.2d 221, 340 P.2d 54 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1959); Karras v. Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 659, 258 P.2d 866 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953); Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Cleary, 319 Ill.App. 83, 48 N.E.2d 576 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1943); National Bank of Washington v. Equity Investors, 81 Wash.2d 886, 506 P.2d 20 (1973); T.T.S.G., Inc. v. Kubic, 226 A.D.2d 132, 639 N.Y.S.2d 825 (A.D. 1 Dept. 1996); Solondz v. Barash, 639 N.Y.S.2d 561 (A.D. 3 Dept. 1996); Kaarela v. Birkhead, 600 N.E.2d 608 (Mass.App. 1992); Bakewell v. Heritage Nat'l Bank, 890 S.W.2d 653 (Mo.App. 3 Dist. 1994); National Building & Contracting Co., Inc. v. Alerion Bank & Trust

however, the escrowee closing a loan on behalf of a lender does not owe a fiduciary duty to the borrower.[58] Florida classes the escrowee as a fiduciary when the escrow parties are not represented by counsel:

> [W]here neither the seller nor the purchaser is represented by attorneys at law, [the insurer-escrowee] acts as agent for both and in such capacity is acting in a fiduciary relationship.[59]

Other courts have ascribed different but similar roles and labels to the functions of the escrowee.[60] Texas imposes on an escrowee what it describes as the twin duties of loyalty and "full disclosure."[61]

The escrowee's position entitles it to seek legal relief in a dispute over the escrow,[62] rescind the accidental recording of a deed,[63] or recoup funds paid out of escrow.[64] See §13.14 regarding the escrowee's rights to recover against third parties.

On occasion, the escrowee is also the agent of or attorney for one of the principals. That dual

---

Co., 772 So.2d 938 (La.App. 2000), reh.den., writ den. 787 So.2d 310, 317 (La. 2001) ("[c]ourts in this state have held that where a financial institution acts as a fiduciary and violates an escrow agreement, it is liable to make restitution and pay for all damages that are proximately caused by the violation."); Tavenner v. The Talon Group, 2012 WL 6022836 (W.D.Wash.) (unpublished) (escrowee's mark-up of recording and other charges violated its fiduciary duty to borrower on refinance loan closed for lender); Thorpe Trucking, LLC v. Devit, 2003 WL 22233905 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished) (escrowee is a fiduciary). See Coxon, Successfully Defending Fiduciary Duty Claims, For The Defense, August 2000, p. 14.

[58] Richardson v. New Century Mortgage Corp., 2005 WL 1554026 (N.D.Miss. 2005) (unpublished), aff'd 202 Fed.Appx. 773, 2006 WL 2990260 (C.A.5 (Miss.)) (unpublished); Central Bank v. Rowe Construction, Inc., 2011 WL 1119872 (Minn.App.) (unpublished).

[59] Gerson v. Broward County Title Co., 116 So.2d 455, 457 (Fla. 1959).

[60] The court said that escrowed funds are held in "a trust-like arrangement," in Pippin v. Kern-Ward Bldg. Co., 8 Ohio App. 3d 196, 198, 456 N.E.2d 1235, 8 O.B.R. 266 (Ohio App. 1982). "The depositary under an escrow agreement is an agent of both parties, as well as a paid trustee with respect to the purchase money funds placed in his hands." Id. [quoted with approval in Shafron Enterprises Defined Benefit Pension Plan v. Midland Title Security Inc., 602 N.E.2d 253 (Ohio App. 1992)]. One court found the escrowee to be the bailee of a deed, which bailment duty was violated when the deed was accidentally recorded against instruction. Montano v. Land Title Guar. Co., 778 P.2d 328 (Colo.App. 1989).

[61] City of Forth Worth v. Pippen, 439 S.W.2d 660 (Tex. 1969); Home Loan Corp. v. Texas American Title Co., 191 S.W.3d 728 (Tex.App.-Houston 2006); In re SMIC, Ltd., 2013 WL 4078704 (Bkcy.N.D.Tex.) (unpublished); Luppino v. York, 2017 WL 4415661 (W.D.Tex.) (unpublished). This duty is further discussed at §13.9.3, in the context of the alleged duty to disclose facts suggesting that one party to the escrow is perpetrating a fraud.

[62] Title Guaranty Escrow Service v. Powley, 2 Haw.App. 265, 630 P.2d 642 (1981).

[63] LaSalle National Bank v. Kissane, 163 Ill.App.3d 534, 114 Ill.Dec. 635, 516 N.E.2d 790 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1987).

[64] Julian W. Curtis Co. v. District-Realty Title Ins. Corp., 267 A.2d 830 (D.C. 1970).

role does not grant the person additional powers as escrowee, but may impose an additional burden of care on the escrowee as to the other parties to the escrow.[65] The nature of the agent's existing duties to one principal may preclude that person from acting as escrowee. In its deferred exchange regulations, the Internal Revenue Service prohibits a party from acting as intermediary if it is the agent or legal representative of the taxpayer.[66] Note, however, that the role of intermediary is not strictly that of escrowee. The subject of exchange intermediaries is fully discussed at §13.15. Some states hold that an attorney for one principal may act as escrowee,[67] but others do not permit the practice.[68] A Connecticut court ruled that an attorney for one of the principals was disqualified from acting as escrowee, because his status as to his client prevented him from acting as the limited agent of the other principal. Therefore, the funds held by the attorney were not held in escrow at all, even

---

[65] In Crosby v. Kendall, 247 Ga.App. 843, 545 S.E.2d 385 (Ga.App. 2001) cert.den., an attorney-escrowee appealed from a judgment, complaining that the trial court erred in telling the jury "that an attorney acting as an escrow agent 'must meet the standards of the legal profession, including those set forth in the code of professional responsibility' and in instructing the jury on the State Bar of Georgia conduct standards governing attorneys." The appellate court did not decide if an attorney-escrowee has such a duty, because it found that Crosby violated the fiduciary duty applicable to all escrowees. In Denton v. Good Way Oil 902 Corp., 48 So.3d 103, 35 Fla. L. Weekly D2502 (Fla.App. 4 Dist. 2010), reh.den. Dec. 21, 2010, the court found that an escrowee did not have the power to speak for the seller in agreeing to extend the closing date, absent evidence that the seller delegated that authority, although the escrowee had served as the seller's attorney in other deals.

[66] 26 U.S.C. § 1031.

[67] In Andrews v. Carmody, 2001 WL 758735 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished), the court noted that, in Ohio, "in real estate transactions, an attorney may act as the attorney for one of the parties and the escrow agent for both parties." It relied on Saad v. Rodriguez, 30 Ohio App.3d 156 (1986). A Wisconsin court announced the rule that an attorney may serve as an escrowee, citing Andrews v. Carmody from Ohio. Buena Vista Shores Marina, LLC v. Poston, 2006 WL 1751349 (Wis.App. 2006) (unpublished). Florida takes the view that an attorney for one of the parties may act as an escrowee, but in doing so takes on duties to the other principal. See The Florida Bar v. Joy, 679 So.2d 1165 (1996), in which the court held that a lawyer for one of the parties was in fact an escrowee, but in becoming such he had taken on a new role and duties: "Regardless of the escrow agent's other relationships or duties to the principal parties (lawyers often hold funds in escrow where their client is one principal and some other non-client is another principal party) when principal parties agree upon an escrow agent, by undertaking to act as such, the escrow agent establishes a new legal relationship to the principal parties and by an expressed agreement or by agreement implied in law, agrees to certain basic inherent matters. The relationship established is that of principal and agent and involves the escrow agent being an agent of, and owing a fiduciary duty to, all of the principal parties." Id. at 1167 [quoting United American Bank of Central Florida, Inc. v. Seligman, 599 So.2d 1014, 1016 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 1992)]. In Joy, the attorney failed this duty miserably, which may be an indication that the Florida position is not good public policy.

[68] See Janson v. Cozen and O'Connor, 450 Pa.Super. 415, 676 A.2d 242 (1996), in which the court ruled that an attorney could not have been holding funds as an escrowee because: "[A]s a general rule, an instrument or funds cannot be deposited as an escrow with an agent or attorney of the grantor or obligor, because the possession of the instrument by such agent or attorney is equivalent to possession of it by the grantor or obligor and is revocable by him. 30A C.J.S. Escrows § 7d 984." 676 A.2d at 247. Another example of an attorney acting as escrowee while representing one of the parties is found in In re Discipline of Two Attorneys, 421 Mass. 619, 660 N.E.2d 1093 (1996). Also see the cases in §13.9.2 analyzing the issue of the attorney's role in explaining documents to the non-client when the attorney is acting as an escrowee.

though that was the agreement of both parties.[69] The state legislature acted immediately to overturn the decision, passing a law saying that "[n]o escrow arrangement shall be ineffective, invalid or unenforceable because the escrow holder is the attorney-at-law, law firm or agent for one or more parties to the escrow... ."[70]

The instructions may define the nature of the relationship between the parties. If so, a principal may not later impose a standard of care on the escrowee that is contrary to the instructions. For example, in Nichols v. Chicago Title Ins. Co.,[71] the escrow agreement stated:

> The parties hereto agree ... that they are not nor does this agreement create ... a trust relationship ... or any other legal or juridical relationship other than that of independent, contracting parties ... .[72]

The court found that this acknowledgment precluded the assertion that the escrowee was the fiduciary of the escrow party.

The escrowee is not a general agent of, or an attorney, advisor or advocate for, any of the principals, and "has no duty to 'police' a transaction for the parties."[73] Such a role would conflict

---

[69] Galvanek v. Skibitcky, 55 Conn.App. 254, 738 A.2d 1150 (Conn.App. 1999).

[70] Public Act 00-74, validating escrows in which "the escrow holder is the attorney ... for one or more of the parties to the escrow agreement." The statute was found to ratify the effectiveness of an attorney escrow established before the law's effective date, in Rockwell v. Klein, 2000 WL 1887846 (Conn.Super. 2000) (unpublished).

[71] 107 Ohio App.3d 684, 669 N.E.2d 323 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 1995).

[72] 669 N.E.2d at 332.

[73] State Bar v. Security Escrows. Inc., 233 Or. 80, 377 P.2d 334 (1962); Stanton v. Bank of Am, N.A., 2010 WL 4176375 (D. Hawaii) (unpublished); Atooi Aloha, LLC v. Gaurino, 2018 WL 650194 (D. Hawaii 2018) (unpublished). The court said the escrowee does well to advise the parties that they should obtain counsel, in Styrk v. Cornerstone Investments, Inc., 61 Wash.App. 463, 810 P.2d 1366 (1991). An attorney who acts as an escrowee does not convert his or her work as escrowee into legal services. In Mizrahi v. Valdes-Fauli, Cobb & Petrey, P.A., 671 So.2d 805 (1996), the defendant had acted as both attorneys for the plaintiff and as escrowee. It defended a suit brought on its escrow obligations by asserting the two-year statute of limitations for professional malpractice. The court rejected the argument, holding: "The vocation of escrow agent does not qualify as a profession under the statute because a four-year college degree is not required for an escrow agent. [citation omitted] Regardless of the benefits defendants derived from their knowledge of the law in the fulfillment of their duties as escrow agent, they were not acting as plaintiffs' attorneys." Id. See also Gonzales v. American Title Co. of Houston, 104 S.W.3d 588 (Tex.App.-Houston (1 Dist.) 2003), reh.den. (May 16, 2003), rev.den.(Mar 05, 2004) (sloppy closing practices did not support a claim that escrowee participated in claimed fraud to deceive borrowers about the interest rate on their loan); Schultz v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Nat'l Bank, N.A., 94 F.3d 721 (5th Cir. 1996) (escrowee had no duty to add conditions to disbursement of money to protect principal); Tesoro Coast, LLC v. United Escrow Co., 2011 WL 3716985 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrow company not liable to customer for having recommended a 1031 company that stole the customer's money, because it had no duty to investigate company before making referral and the escrow officer had no reason to suspect problems with the company). In Forbes v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 541509 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the escrowee had no duty to determine whether or not the property description was accurate, following the long-standing rule in California that "the escrow holder has no general duty to police the affairs of its depositors." In Mortensen v. First with the escrowee's proper role of neutral stakeholder in the transaction:

> An escrow holder, by definition, is a neutral party with no obligation to either party to the transaction except to carry out the terms of the escrow instructions. "They owe no duty to advise the parties on their legal rights ... [and] [t]hey have no reason to protect the rights of any one party as against another."[74]

The escrowee also is not charged with making the transaction happen or causing any of the principals to perform their contractual obligations, including to command them to make the deposits into escrow that are contemplated by the instructions, as is discussed at §13.8. The escrowee is not a tax advisor, and is not liable to a taxpayer for taxes and expenses resulting from the fact that an exchange of property does not qualify for tax deferral.[75] The escrowee is not the title company, and has a limited obligation to explain title information as necessary, and closing documents signed by parties, as discussed at §§13.9.1 and 13.9.2.

Further, the escrowee is not the messenger or mediator between the parties. Rather, as the court explained in Bowles v. Key Title Co.,[76] since the escrowee may not favor or influence any of the escrow principals, it was not the escrowee's "responsibility nor its prerogative" to advise one party of the other's statement that "the deal was off." The court explained:

> Indeed, it may well have been an improper intrusion into the parties' transaction if [escrowee] had done what plaintiff maintains it was required to do and had informed [buyer] of the [seller's] professed unwillingness to proceed. Such a disclosure potentially could have impeded or prevented subsequent efforts by the parties to revitalize their own transaction, had they otherwise had the interest and the desire to do so.
>
> In any event, in the absence of a contractual or other relationship beyond the usual escrow arrangement, it is not the function of an escrow agent to monitor, steward or salvage the business relationship of the principals. It is the principals' own responsibility to create, conduct and communicate with one another about their fundamental business and contractual dealings. In other words, it is normally the American Title Co., Inc., 2013 WL 1222566 (D. Idaho) (unpublished), the plaintiff argued that the escrowee should have warned her that her divorce property settlement agreement was a terrible bargain. The court found that First American "was not under any duty to act, give advice, or act on behalf of Ms. Mortensen," and thus it had not assumed a fiduciary duty to her. In Streambend Properties II, LLC v. Ivy Tower Minneapolis, LLC, 781 F.3d 1003 (8th Cir. (Minn.) 2015), the court held that an escrowee was not the agent of a developer-seller, and could not be sued for the alleged fraud of the developer under the Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act (ILSFDA), 15 U.S.C. § 1703 or under state law.

---

[74] McDonald v. Title Ins. Co. of Oregon, 49 Or.App. 1055, 621 P.2d 654, 657 (1980) (quoting State Bar v. Security Escrows, Inc., 233 Or. 80, 82, 377 P.2d 334 (1962)).

[75] Callicutt v. Professional Services of Potts Camp, Inc., 974 So.2d 216 (Miss. 2007).

[76] 163 Or.App. 9, 986 P.2d 1236 (Or.App. 1999).

> responsibility of the parties rather than that of their escrow agent to stay informed about such fundamental aspects of their business relationship as whether they continue to have one.[77]

Several states take the view that performing a closing or escrow, or preparing documents incident to an escrow, is the practice of law.[78] In some states, escrowees are licensed, and their conduct regulated,[79] at least in part to overcome concerns about the unauthorized practice of law by

---

[77] Bowles v. Key Title Co., 163 Or.App. at 18, 986 P.2d at 1241 (Or.App. 1999).

[78] In Massachusetts, non-attorneys are not permitted to perform closings, because such services are considered to be the practice of law. In the Matter of Mid-Atlantic Settlement Services, Inc., 755 A.2d 389 (2000). In Massachusetts Conveyancers Ass'n, Inc. v. Colonial Title & Escrow, Inc., 13 Mass.L.Rptr. 633, 2001 WL 669280 (Mass.Super. 2001), a corporate title agency was found to have practiced law without a license by evaluating title, drafting documents and representing lenders as closing agent. A federal court found the Massachusetts definition of practice of law unconstitutional, in Real Estate Bar Ass'n for Massachusetts, Inc. v. Nat'l Real Estate Information Services, Inc., 609 F.Supp.2d 135 (D.Mass. 2009). See also, Real Estate Bar Ass'n for Massachusetts, Inc. v. Nat'l Real Estate Information Services, Inc., 642 F.Supp.2d 58 (D.Mass. 2009). In The Real Estate Bar Ass'n for Massachusetts, Inc. v. National Real Estate Information Services, 946 N.E.2d 665 (Mass. 2011), the court ruled that a person does not practice law by issuing a title insurance policy, ordering a title examination or filling out a HUD-1. However, an attorney must attend and do something worthwhile at closings, and opine on title. Other states also have banned lay persons from conducting closings or drafting documents. See In re First Escrow, Inc., 840 S.W.2d 839 (Mo. 1992); Ohio State Bar Ass'n v. Dalton, 124 Ohio St.3d 514, 924 N.E.2d 821, 2010-Ohio-619 (Ohio 2010); GRECCA, Inc. v. Omni Title Services, Inc., 277 Ga. 312, 588 S.E.2d 709 (Ga. 2003); Supreme Court of Georgia Formal Advisory Opinion No. 13–1, No. S14U0705, issued September 22, 2014, found at 2014 WL 4669283 (non-lawyer may not conduct witness real estate closing); and Dijkstra v. Carenbauer, 2014 WL 791140 (N.D.W.Va. 2014) (unpublished) (non-lawyer may not conduct witness real estate closing). In 1987, the South Carolina Supreme Court announced that, for the safety of the public, "real estate and mortgage loan closings should be conducted only under the supervision of attorneys." State v. Buyers Service Co., Inc., 292 S.C. 426, 357 S.E.2d 15 (1987). The court has been disciplining lawyers ever since then. See Doe v. McMaster, 355 S.C. 306, 585 S.E.2d 773 (S.C. 2003); Doe Law Firm v. Richardson, 371 S.C. 14, 636 S.E.2d 866 (S.C. 2006); In the Matter of Joseph Wendell Arsi, 357 S.C. 8, 591 S.E.2d 627 (S.C. 2004); In the Matter of Stephen M. Pstrak, 357 S.C. 1, 591 S.E.2d 623 (S.C. 2004); In re James, 405 S.C. 17, 747 S.E.2d 169 (S.C. 2013) (lawyer disbarred for theft of closing money); In re Breckenridge, 416 S.C. 466, 787 S.E.2d 466 (S.C. 2016), reh.den. July 18, 2016 (South Carolina Supreme Court reprimanded attorney for allowing a non-lawyer to disbursing closing funds, which that state considers the practice of law). In Boone v. Quicken Loans, Inc., 803 S.E.2d 707, 420 S.C. 452 (S.C. 2017), the South Carolina Supreme Court ruled that the procedures used by Quicken Loans' title agency did not cause it to commit the unauthorized practice of law, because attorneys licensed in the state performed all title-related tasks that are the practice of law. The court thus found that a proposed class of plaintiffs had no grounds to sue the lender and title agency.

[79] See Cal.Fin.Code § 17200 (West 1982): "It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in business as an escrow agent within this State except by means of a corporation duly organized for that purpose licensed by the commissioner as an escrow agent." Oregon, for example, requires a person to be licensed in order to be "engag[ed] in the business of an escrow agent" or to "act in the capacity of an escrow agent." ORS 696.511(1). See also: New Mexico rule 13.14.4 NMAC, effective 1/1/2001; Washington State rule Chapter 208-680 WAC, Escrow Agent Registration Act, filed 9/15/2000; Virginia's Consumer Real Estate Settlement Protection Act (CRESPA) permits non-lawyers to conduct real estate closings and regulates the licensing and oversight of real estate settlement agents, including lawyers, to allow them to perform escrow, closing, or settlement services as expressly defined under the Act. Va. Code Ann. §§ 6.1-2.19-2.29 (1950). CRESPA was interpreted in Fears v. Virginia State Bar, 2000 WL 249247 (Va.Cir.Ct.) (unpublished).

escrow or title companies or their non-attorney employees.[80] Other states hold that an escrowee does not practice law or assume the duties of an attorney by preparing closing documents.[81]

13.4 Duty Of Care And Parties To Whom Owed

An escrowee owes a duty of reasonable care to the escrow parties (known as principals), and that duty is owed only to the escrow parties.[82] The escrowee must comply strictly with the instructions of the principals. If it delivers the deposits contrary to instructions or otherwise breaches that duty, it is liable to the injured escrow principal for breach of contract.[83] The escrowee is not

---

[80] In Coast Security Mortgage Corp. v. Real Estate Agency, 331 Or. 348, 15 P.3d 29 (Or. 2000), the Oregon Supreme Court held that a mortgage broker did not engage in the business of an escrow agent by going to homes to have documents and escrow instructions signed and notarized. The court accepted the mortgage broker's explanation that he was merely a messenger for the escrow company. It noted that the Oregon escrow law forbids an escrowee from giving legal advice. The court reversed a decision by the appeals court found at 155 Or.App. 579, 964 P.2d 306 (Or.App. 1998). In Bishop v. Jefferson Title Co., Inc., 107 Wash.App. 833, 28 P.3d 802 (Wash.App. 2 Div. 2001), the court found that an escrow agent may be sued for malpractice because its non-attorney escrow officer prepared documents not on the approved list of fill-in-the-blank forms, and did not tell the customers about the limits of what type of document she was permitted to prepare. The court also found that she bungled the form, going beyond inserting "objective data" to preparing a document that "she did not understand." She wrote clauses "without knowing or understanding the legal impact of" what she had written. The court also found the escrow officer failed her duty to "advise the parties of the limitations of the services rendered" and disclose to them in writing using a five-page form. The parties got the form, but the escrow officer did not also orally inform them of the limits of her services.

[81] For example, in Poferl v. National Title Co., 2001 WL 267464 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), the court held: "[Lender] did not take the precaution of retaining counsel or other professionals to advise him about the legality of the loan agreement. Instead, appellant edited one of his previous loan agreements and instructed National Title to draft the promissory note in accordance with his instructions. Accordingly, appellant had neither a good-faith basis to rely on respondents' attorney, nor a good-faith basis to rely on National Title."

[82] A person is not a party to an escrow unless he delivers instructions, because escrow is a contract. Noroian v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2004 WL 308173 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 2004) (unpublished). The escrowee owes no continuing duty to a person who has been substituted out as a party to the escrow. Silver Spring Oasis, LLC v. Lawyers Title of Arizona, Inc., 2014 WL 47342 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (citing Luce v. State Title Agency, Inc., 190 Ariz. 500, 950 P.2d 159 (Ariz.App. Div. 1 1997)). A party suing over lender closing instructions must establish that it was the lender who gave the instructions and funded the loan; an admission of that alleged "fact" by the escrow officer, which she later recanted, was not proof that the plaintiff was the party to the loan closing instructions. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 7339150 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished).

[83] Tucson Title Ins. v. D'Ascoli, 94 Ariz. 230, 234, 383 P.2d 119, 121 (1963); Francis v. Eisenmayer, 171 Cal.App.2d 221, 340 P.2d 54 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1959); Karras v. Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 659, 258 P.2d 866 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953); Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Cleary, 319 Ill.App. 83, 48 N.E.2d 576 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1943); Banville v. Schmidt, 37 Cal.App.3d 92, 112 Cal.Rptr. 126 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1974); Amen v. Merced County Title Co., 58 Cal.2d 528, 25 Cal.Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1962); Common Wealth Ins. Systems, Inc. v. Kersten, 40 Cal.App.3d 1014, 115 Cal.Rptr. 653 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1974); Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 211 Cal.App.3d 1122, 260 Cal.Rptr. 21 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1989); Shore Financial Services, Inc. v. Lakeside Title and Escrow Agency, Inc., 2013 WL 2223781 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), rev.den. December 23, 2013, 495 Mich. 914, 840 N.W.2d 331 (Mem), 2013 WL 6800563 (Mich.) (loan closer not liable for borrower's failure to comply with loan condition when closer received no instruction on the subject).

liable to any of the principals if it obeys its instructions.[84]

The escrowee's standard of care is to exercise ordinary skill and diligence in performing the written escrow instructions.[85] If the escrowee does not carry out its instructions with ordinary skill and diligence, it is liable for loss proximately caused by such negligence.[86] An escrowee has an obligation to do all of the things normally done by an escrowee that are explicit or implicit in its instructions and not expressly excluded thereby.[87] However, the escrowee's duty of care may not be increased based on expert testimony about supposed industry customs suggesting some higher standard of care or a duty to take an action that is not recited in the escrow instructions.[88]

---

[84] In Dailey v. Thorpe, 445 S.W.3d 785 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014), reh.den. (Oct 23, 2014), the court held that an escrow officer who obeyed all written instructions was not liable to the sellers for allegedly conspiring with the buyers to defraud the sellers, when the claimed instruments of that fraud were made part of the escrow instructions. In Mazgani v. S.B.S. Trust Deed Network, Inc., 2016 WL 379591 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the borrower sued the escrowee for allegedly breaching its instructions by allowing the sub-escrowee to return the loan money to the lender when the lender demanded the return of the money because "the loan had been improvidently funded." The court found that obedience to the lender's instruction was not a breach of the escrow instructions. The court also held that the escrowee did not violate a duty to the buyer under the escrow instructions by paying large loan fees, which the court noted were paid from the seller's proceeds and thus were not a charge against the buyer.

[85] Biadi v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 374 So.2d 30 (Fla.App. 1979); Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990), citing Common Wealth Ins. Systems, Inc. v. Kersten, 40 Cal.App.3d 1014, 115 Cal.Rptr. 653 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1974), in turn citing Amen v. Merced County Title Co., 58 Cal.2d 528, 25 Cal.Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1962); Rianda v. San Benito Title Guar. Co., 35 Cal.2d 173, 217 P.2d 25 (Cal. 1950).

[86] Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990), citing Common Wealth Ins. Systems, Inc. v. Kersten, 40 Cal.App.3d 1014, 1030-1031, 115 Cal.Rptr. 653 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1974), in turn citing Amen v. Merced County Title Co., 58 Cal.2d 528, 532, 25 Cal.Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1962); Rianda v. San Benito Title Guar. Co., 35 Cal.2d 173, 217 P.2d 25 (Cal. 1950); Banville v. Schmidt, 37 Cal.App.3d 92, 112 Cal.Rptr. 126 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1974); and Spaziani v. Millar, 215 Cal.App.2d 667, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1963).

[87] Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990); Bruckman v. Parliament Escrow Corp., 190 Cal.App.3d 1051, 1056, 235 Cal.Rptr. 813 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1987); Alliance Bank v. Dykes, 2012 WL 6734457 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (lender's instruction to secure a first lien was not an implicit instruction prohibiting subordinate financing obtained by borrowers, and borrowers had no claim against escrowee because it did not prevent them from closing on subordinate financing).

[88] In Bianchi v. Ladjen, 2018 WL 1901945 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished), the court excluded the testimony of an expert witness who claimed to have closed several thousand residential real estate transactions and who said that the escrowee violated its "standard of care" by drafting "an inadequate escrow agreement" that failed to address the risk of loss due to property damage during the pendency of escrow. The court ruled that the escrowee had no authority to alter the terms of the purchase contract allocating the risk of loss between the parties as the expert had suggested. The court was "disinclined to endorse a novel theory of liability for title agents that could have a significant public policy impact, in the absence of the recognition of such proposed duties by the Supreme Court or regulatory authorities." In Pyper v. Reil, 2018 UT App 200, 437 P.3d 493 (Utah App. 2018), the court rejected the testimony of an escrow expert who opined that it was customary in the escrow business to halt a transaction when there were indications that one party might be attempting to defraud the other party. The court said that it would be bad public policy to create a new and novel legal

In some jurisdictions, a suit for breach of escrow duties sounds in tort rather than contract. However, the escrow agreement itself is a contract and, in some jurisdictions, an action may lie in contract for breach of the agreement.[89] Upon the escrowee's breach of an instruction or an implied promise arising out of the escrow agreement, the injured party acquires a cause of action for breach of contract.[90] This subject is further discussed in §13.11, which covers the damages payable for breach of escrow instructions.

The escrowee does not owe a duty of care to parties who are not principals to the escrow.[91] California has a well-developed body of case law holding that the escrowee has no duty of care to parties whose only relationship to the escrow is that they are to be paid through it.[92] The seminal duty for an escrowee based solely on what a witness claims to be industry custom.

---

[89] Joe Keresztury Homes, Inc. v. Commerce Land Title of San Antonio, Inc., 1998 WL 130245 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished) (escrowee sued in contract, not tort); Country Title, L.L.C. v. Jaiyeoba, 2016 WL 66616 (Tex.App.-Houston) (unpublished) (because escrow is contractual in Texas, customer was entitled to be paid her out-of-pocket losses caused by escrowee's errors, but not for alleged harm to her credit rating or punitive damages); Bear Creek Planning Comm. v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 164 Cal.App.3d 1227, Cal.Rptr. 172 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1985) (escrowee stipulated that it was "contractually bound to record" a document); A Good Time Rental, LLC v. First American Title Agency, Inc., 259 P.3d 534 (Colo.App. 2011) (escrow is a contract; tort claims on escrows are barred by economic loss rule); IQ Holdings, Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 451 S.W.3d 861 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014); Luppino v. York, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2017 WL 4415661 (W.D.Tex. 2017) (permanent citation not yet available) (when escrow is performed under written instruction, the relationship is contractual and the parties may not sue the escrowee for negligence).

[90] Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990); Rianda v. San Benito Title Guar. Co., 35 Cal.2d 170, 173, 217 P.2d 25 (Cal. 1950); Claussen v. First American Title Ins. Co., 186 Cal.App.3d 429, 230 Cal.Rptr. 749 (Cal.App. 6 Dist. 1986).

[91] Carter Development of Massachusetts, LLC v. Howard, ___ So.3d ___, 2019 WL 6315009, 44 Fla. L. Weekly D2833 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 2019) (escrowee owed no duty of care to a purchaser for supposed mishandling of earnest money, because escrow instructions were given solely by property owner and developer).

[92] Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 142 Cal.App.4th 508, 48 Cal.Rptr.3d 217 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2006); Aguilar v. Chang, 2003 WL 22026591 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2003) (unpublished) (escrowee not liable for ignoring demand by real estate broker for commission she was allegedly owed, but which the seller refused to pay, because escrowee takes its instructions only from escrow principals); TSF 53419, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 1750981 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee on sale escrows did not owe duty to holder of deed of trust to make payment to it, although lien holder gave notice that it expected to be paid from sale). The California courts rely on the non-escrow decision of Biakanja v. Irving, 49 Cal.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 (Cal. 1958), which announced the set of factors that must be balanced to determine if a person owes a duty to another with whom he has no contract. In Business Advisors, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 2325124 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that a real estate brokerage was not entitled to collect from an escrowee that violated closing instructions by paying the broker commission to an individual rather than the brokerage, because the broker did not hold a license and thus had no legal right to the commission. The court said that, if it gave relief to the broker, it would be giving aid to an illegal transaction. In Jafari v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 2 F.Supp.3d 1125 (S.D.Cal. 2014), the court held that the escrowee owed no duty of care to the FDIC because it was paid from escrow and did not deposit any instructions or money with the escrowee, citing Markowitz and Summit. In Estate of Gaspar, 2016 WL 1733626 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the seller's attorney had no standing to sue the escrowee for alleged breach of instructions, which the lawyer said caused him personally to incur expenses and spend time for his client's sake, because the attorney was not a third party beneficiary of the escrow. The court also noted that the attorney never asked his client to pay his fees. In Alereza v. Chicago Title Co., 6

California decision on the subject is Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co.,[93] in which the California Supreme Court ruled that a lender claiming the right to be paid from an escrow may not sue the escrowee for negligence, because the lender was not a party to the escrow. The Summit court overturned Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co.,[94] which had held that a recorded assignment of a deed of trust effected a modification of the escrow instruction, and obligated the escrowee to pay the assignee rather than the assignor. Kirby, the court said, had stretched too far the earlier case of Builders' Control Service of No. Cal., Inc. v. North American Title Guar. Co.[95] The Summit court said:

Cal.App.5th 551, 211 Cal.Rptr.3d 469 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 2016), the court held that an escrowee owed no duty of care to a person who was not a party to the escrow or mentioned in the instructions as a person benefited by the escrow, citing Summit and using the Biakanja factors. In Ruvalcaba v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, 2017 WL 2985121 (S.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the court used the same analysis as in Biakanja and Alereza, and concluded that a sub-escrow did not owe a duty to the borrower to obtain the most current payoff information before making payment to the existing lender.

States other than California follow the same principle. In Aurora Loan Services, LLC v. Security Title Agency, Inc., 2014 WL 458133 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), the court found that a loan servicer that claimed that the loan had been assigned before it was paid off, and the owner of the loan did not receive the money, had no right to sue the escrowee for its claimed negligence in making the payoff. In Torbet v. Torres, 2002 WL 10651 (Wash.App. 2 Div.) (unpublished), a Washington court held that, although the decedent's children were to be paid from the proceeds of a sale of estate property, under the terms of an estate planning agreement, the escrowee who conducted the sale was not liable to the heirs, because the escrowee had no knowledge of the agreement or instruction from the heirs, and had no duty to investigate. In P.E.M. Construction & Development Co., Inc. v. EnCap Gold Holdings, LLC, 2011 WL 3802244 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished), the court found that a subcontractor was not an intended third-party beneficiary of a construction project escrow, and was not entitled to be paid from it, particularly when the conditions for disbursement had not been met. In Kaplan v. Valley Nat'l Bank, 52 Misc.3d 1210(A), 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 51108(U), 41 N.Y.S.3d 719 (Table), 2016 WL 3939922 (Table) (N.Y. Suffolk Cty. 2016) (unpublished), an escrow company retained by the buyer property was found not to have owed a duty to a beneficiary of the seller trust. In Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 186 Wash.2d 58, 375 P.3d 651 (Wash. 2016), the Washington Supreme Court resolved the question certified to it, ruling in a resounding and well-supported opinion that a title insurer does not owe a duty of care to the property owner in recording a document. The court said: "[p]laintiffs urge us to hold that justice requires title insurance companies to look behind the signatures on the document and police the parties' agreements against conflicting corporate documents or loan agreements. This is not a just result, and placing this burden on title insurance companies increases their costs, slows the recording process, and frustrates public policy, with no appreciable benefit." Subsequently, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of the claims against the escrowee, in Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 668 Fed.Appx. 760, 2016 WL 4572391 (9th Cir. (Wash.) 2016) (unpublished). In Cadence Bank, N.A. v. DLO Title, LLC, 2018 WL 1399584 (M.D.Tenn 2018) (unpublished), the court held that title company that closed a sale transaction owed no duty to a lender that expected to have its loan paid off at closing. In Carter Development of Massachusetts, LLC v. Howard, ___ So.3d ___, 2019 WL 6315009, 44 Fla. L. Weekly D2833 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 2019), a Florida court held that the escrowee owed no duty of care to a purchaser for its supposed mishandling of the buyer's earnest money, because the escrow instructions were given solely by the property owner and developer.

[93] 27 Cal.4th 705, 41 P.3d 548, 117 Cal.Rptr.2d 541 (2002).

[94] 183 Cal.App.3d 57, 227 Cal.Rptr. 785 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986).

[95] 205 Cal.App.2d 68, 22 Cal.Rptr. 712 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1962).

> We agree with the Court of Appeals here that 'Kirby misread Builders' Control Service. Builders' Control Service holds only that an agent's knowledge of an assignment by its principal obligates the agent to honor the principal's assignment; Kirby transformed that obligation, which is founded in the law of agency, into a duty owed to honor contracts made by creditors of the principal even though the escrow holder had no agency relationship with the creditor. … The Builders' Control Service court did say that 'receipt of notice [of an assignment] is tantamount to new instructions.' … However, under the facts of that case, the statement meant no more than that a party to an escrow may issue new instructions to the escrow holder in the form of an assignment. As the Court of Appeal here observed: '… In the context of Builders' Control Service, the agent's receipt of notice of the assignment could be deemed the equivalent of a new instruction regarding the party to be paid because the assignment was made by the owner-builder, a party to the escrow entitled to give instructions to the escrow holder. However, Kirby transmuted that agency concept into a holding that transactions by strangers to an escrow can supersede and amend the instructions given by the parties to the escrow. Nothing in Builders' Control Service supports that remarkable conclusion.[96]

Nonetheless, one California court gave the federal government special deference, contrary to the general rule.[97]

The escrowee also does not owe a duty of care to other people who are not parties to the escrow.[98] The escrowee owes no duty to a party who deposits money under escrow instructions

---

[96] Kirby had also been criticized in Braemer v. Kuntz, 2001 WL 1660044 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), decided shortly before Summit. In Chen v. Dynasty Escrow, Inc., 2002 WL 1227478 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), rev.den. August 14, 2002, the court further defined the very limited remaining vitality of Kirby after Summit: "Thus, to the extent that Kirby has not been disapproved of by Summit, the only principle that it continues to stand for is that an escrow holder must follow the instructions of the parties to the escrow, and, to the extent the escrow holder is an agent of the parties and has knowledge of an assignment by one of the parties, to disburse proceeds held by it for such party, to the same extent that such party is obligated to disburse those proceeds to the party's assignee."

[97] In Bedrock Financial, Inc. v. United States, 2014 WL 1600452 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished), a California federal court ruled that an escrowee that did not pay the government from closing to satisfy its tax lien must pay the tax debt in full, because it "converted" the government's money. The court rejected the argument that the government had any duty to collect the taxes by foreclosing on the taxpayer's property. It rejected all of the prior California cases holding that the escrowee does not owe a duty to a party to be paid from escrow, on the slender theory that the money was the government's property.

[98] Sherman v. First American Title Ins. Co., 201 Ariz. 564, 38 P.3d 1229 (Ariz.App. 2002); Chavez v. Barrus, 146 Idaho 212, 192 P.3d 1036 (Idaho 2008) (title company that insured mortgage owed no duty to former spouse of owner as to her claim that spouse connived to wipe out her equity in property); Dorsett Bros. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 880 S.W.2d 417 (Tex.App.-Houston [14th Dist.] 1993) (subcontractor not a third party beneficiary of escrow just because a check deposited with escrowee had subcontractor's name in remarks line); Black v. Metro Title, Inc., 290 Wis.2d 213, 712 N.W.2d 395, 2006 WI App 52 (Wis.App. 2 Dist. 2006) (divorcing spouse who delivered quit claim deed to closing was not party to loan escrow and had no cause of action against escrowee for failing to pay her half of equity drained from homestead by loan, citing Summit as support). Also, when closing documents are faked to make it appear that a title signed by others.[99] The escrowee also owes no duty to a party that has an interest in the real estate insurer has acted as settlement agent when it was not, and the insurer did not attend closing, disburse funds or perform any other closing or escrow act, the title insurer did not have a fiduciary duty to either lender or borrower. Bancoklahoma Mortgage Corp. v. Capital Title Co., Inc., 194 F.3d 1089 (10th Cir. (Okla.) 1999). However, an Arkansas court, in an unpublished decision, refused to rule on summary judgment that there could be no "contract" between the escrowee and the party being paid. In that case, the party to the escrow instructed the escrowee to obtain payoff information, a release of lien was prepared, and the creditor fully expected to be paid. After closing, the escrow principal changed its instruction and told the escrowee not to make the payment. The creditor claimed that the communication before closing resulted in a contract to make payment. The court remanded for trial. Fleming Companies, Inc. v. Tucker Abstract Co., 2002 WL 819602 (Ark.App.) (unpublished). In Yavapai Title Agency, Inc. v. Pace Preparatory Academy, 2013 WL 3368935 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), the court held that a title company owed no duty to a former owner of property to locate a deed of trust in his favor in its title search in order to cause it to be paid off with through subsequent sale. The court referred to escrow rather than title cases in its ruling. In Sweeting v. Chicago Title Co., 2017 WL 1153354 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished), the court cited Summit in holding that a loan closing agent owed no duty to the borrower. In Nevarez Law Firm, P.C. v. Dona Ana Title Co., 708 Fed.Appx. 186 (5th Cir. (Tex.)) (Mem.) (unpublished), the court held that an attorney had no standing to sue an escrowee for alleged breaches of escrow instructions given by his clients. However, in Tafea v. Gateway Title Co., 2017 WL 5843239 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), an escrowee who was found to have assisted a rehab flipper in misusing investors' money owed a duty to the investors not to work a fraud on them. The fact that the investors were not parties to written escrow instructions did not insulate the escrowee from liability for the fraud in which it participated.

---

[99] Ramos Oil Co., Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Agency of Nevada, Inc., 2004 WL 1987083 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 2004) (unpublished) (escrowee not required to obtain escrow instructions from third party who deposits funds into escrow without instructions; escrowee's sole duty is to obey instructions given); Weule v. Transnation Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 1140009 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee that received wire transfer from investor and mortgage to be recorded giving investor a lien, but no escrow instructions from investor, not required to protect investor from flim-flam operator, determine what lien priority investor expected to receive, or advise him how escrowed funds were disbursed). In Edelman v. Belco Title & Escrow, L.L.C., 754 F.3d 389 (7th Cir. (Ill.) 2014), the court held that an escrowee had no duty to investors who deposited money into an escrow in which they were not parties, particularly not to protect them from the fraud of the person who induced their investments. The escrowee had no duty to seek written instructions from the depositors. In Rove v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1998 WL 696880 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished), a consortium contributed earnest money used by a housing coalition to purchase property. The earnest money group was not a party to the escrow agreement. The deal stalled, and the individuals notified the escrowee that they wanted their money back. The coalition and the RTC instructed the escrowee not to return it, and then entered into a restated purchase agreement. The transaction closed. The earnest money group then sued the escrowee on numerous causes of action for failure to return the money. The trial court granted the escrowee summary judgment because the plaintiffs were not parties to the escrow. On appeal, the earnest money group tried to leap that hurdle by pointing out that the escrow account was opened in the name "First American Title Insurance Company Escrow Agent for Stephen Moses Interests." The court held that the name of the account "does not, standing alone, give rise to a duty of reasonable care... ." It also noted, however, that the escrowee had a duty of care as to the buyer and seller, both of whom had given contrary instructions. "First American would have breached both its duty to exercise a high degree of care in holding the earnest money and its duty to carry out the terms of the real estate contract if it had released the funds to the [Stephen Moses group] over the objections of RTC and the Coalition." In Muller v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 525 S.W.3d 859 (Tex.App.-Houston 2017), the court held that, when escrow instructions were signed by a company as buyer, the escrowee owed no duties to a member of that company who contributed some of the purchase money, and specifically did not owe that person a fiduciary duty. In Stewart Title of Louisiana v. Chevron, U.S.A., Inc., 216 So.3d 869 (La.App. 4 Cir. 2015), writ den. 176 So.3d 406 (Mem) (August 28, 2015), when an individual sent money to an escrow company in the amount of the buyer's down payment and told the escrowee he was acting for the buyer, the escrowee properly treated the money as a deposit into escrow on behalf of the buyer, and did not violate a duty to the third party depositor by delivering the money to the seller per the escrow instructions. In Armenta v. First American Fund Control, Inc., 2015 WL 1933186 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2015)

but is not a party to the escrow.[100] When an escrow principal is an entity, the members of that entity do not have standing to sue the escrowee in their own names.[101] The escrowee owes no duty to a person competing to purchase the property for the escrow was formed.[102] The escrowee also has no duty of care to the assignee of a loan that was closed through the escrow,[103] or the funding lender that took an immediate assignment of the loan closed in the escrow.[104]

A sub-escrowee owes a duty only to the principal of the sub-escrow. The sub-escrowee owes no duty to the principals of the main escrow.[105] Sub-escrows are further described at §13.2.

(unpublished), an escrow company that held condominium presale deposits, which it disbursed according to instructions and as it made inspections of the project, was found not liable to the unit buyers for the developer's failure to complete the project, because the unit buyers were not parties to the escrow instructions.

[100] Rooftop Mgmt. & Consulting v. Washington Mutual Bank, FA, 2003 WL 21101479 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (lender whose trustee's sale of property was unwound due to simultaneous sale of property by owner not entitled to sue escrowee for interfering with sale); Best v. Security Title Agency, Inc., 2012 WL 5923806 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (escrowee handling sale of property owed no duty to holder of option and was not liable to option holder when sellers ignored him at time of sale); Iglesias v. Pentagon Title and Escrow, LLC, 206 Md.App. 624, 51 A.3d 51 (Md.App. 2012) (lender's settlement agent owed no duty to person whose identity was stolen by borrower to detect and stop identity theft, or to verify authenticity of power of attorney given to closer); JBME Co., LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 1908051 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (escrowee that rerecorded deed of trust to correct its legal description, but accidentally included a parcel not owned by borrower, was not liable to true owner of parcel for clouding or slandering its title); Mortensen v. First American Title Co., Inc., 2013 WL 1222566 (D. Idaho) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to woman who gave her husband a power of attorney to verify with her that she had authorized him to sign documents on her behalf; power was valid and had not been revoked as of closing); Brassell v. Harbourview Abstract, Inc., 163 A.D.3d 908, 82 N.Y.S.3d 483, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 05439 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2018) (escrow between one owner of property and attorney did not benefit other property owner, and non-party had no claim against escrowee).

[101] Home Title Co. of Maryland, Inc. v. LaSalla, 257 So.3d 640 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 2018) (when limited liability company was principal of escrow, its member had no standing to sue escrowee for alleged breach of instructions).

[102] I-20 Corridor Properties, LLC v. Mahony Title Services, LLC, 986 So.2d 821 (La.App. 2 Cir. 2008) (title company hired to close the sale of property to one buyer was not a fiduciary as to a competing buyer, and the losing buyer may not sue the title company for its alleged damages). However, in In re SMIC, Ltd., 2013 WL 4078704 (Bkcy.N.D.Tex.) (unpublished), the court found that a Texas escrowee that had already opened an escrow for the sale of property to one buyer violated its duty of loyalty to that buyer by serving as escrowee on a second sale the seller arranged for the same property. The seller decided that the first buyer was unable or unwilling to close, but the first escrow was not formally terminated. The court found that the escrowee was unable to be a neutral third party in the second escrow.

[103] U.S. Bank, N.A. v. National Lenders, Inc., 2008 WL 1869754 (Mass.Super.) (unpublished).

[104] Gateway Bank, FSB v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Calif., 2009 WL 4190455 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished).

[105] See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 46 Cal.App.4th 1181, 54 Cal.Rptr.2d 84 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1996); Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 142 Cal.App.4th 508, 48 Cal.Rptr.3d 217 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2006); First AFG Financial Corp. v. Security Union Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 4975501 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (sub-escrowee hired to record documents and issue title insurance policy not directly liable to lender escrow principal for accidental release of two parcels from deed of trust); Flagstar Bank, FSB v. Lawyers Title Co., 2014 WL 1725746 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (title agency and its underwriter not required to repay lender money stolen by its escrow company

An escrowee has no fiduciary duty to non-parties. However, an escrow agent may be liable to a non-party for negligent performance of contractual obligations where the non-party's reliance upon proper performance is known and anticipated.[106]

A lender's closing agent is not a dual agent in that capacity, and owes no duty of care to the borrower unless the closing agent is also serving in an additional capacity under a separate contract.[107] Also, when the borrowers authorized the escrowee to accept instructions from the buyers' lender, and the escrowee acknowledged receipt of such instructions, the lender became a principal to the escrow.[108] One court found that the FDIC, as the receiver for a lender, was entitled to assert a although money was sent by lender to title agency, but neither lender nor escrow company appointed agency as sub-escrow); Sweeting v. Chicago Title Co., 2017 WL 1153354 (Cal.App. 3 Dist.) (unpublished) (borrower had no standing to sue title insurer sub-escrow that handled escrowed loan money, and sub-escrow's duties in handling of money were not related to borrower's claim about defective signatures on closing documents); 1500 Viewsite Terrace, LLC v. Pickford Escrow, Inc., 2017 WL 4309755 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (sub-escrow owed no duties to buyer of real estate); Ruvalcaba v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, 2017 WL 2985121 (S.D.Cal.) (unpublished) (sub-escrow owed no duty to borrower to obtain most current payoff information before making payment to existing lender). Conversely, a loan broker that insisted on closing the loan at the borrowers' residence was not a sub-escrowee, and the escrowee was not liable for his alleged TILA violations. Residential Mortgage Capital v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 3621871 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished). In Mazgani v. S.B.S. Trust Deed Network, Inc., 2016 WL 379591 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that an escrowee did not control the acts of a title insurer that disbursed funds as a sub-escrowee for the lender, and that the sub-escrow did not create an agency relationship between the escrow company and the title insurer. The suit was brought by a borrower, who alleged that the escrowee breached its instructions by allowing the sub-escrowee to return the loan money to the lender when it asked that its money be returned because "the loan had been improvidently funded." The court also found that obedience to that instruction was not a breach of the escrow instructions.

---

[106] 30A C.J.S. Escrows §10.

[107] Rankin v. Dault, 396 B.R. 203 (E.D.Mich. 2008) (buyers in failed purchase not entitled to sue title company loan closer for failing to make purchase happen); Askenaizer v. Moate, 406 B.R. 444, 2009 DNH 073 (D.N.H. 2009) (title company closer was lender's agent and owed no duty to borrower as to disbursement of funds); Fantino v. Lenders Title and Guar. Co., 303 Ill.App.3d 204, 707 N.E.2d 756, 236 Ill.Dec. 629 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999); Pippin v. Kern-Ward Bldg. Co., 8 Ohio App.3d 196, 456 N.E.2d 1235 (Ohio App. 8th Dist. 1982) (borrower could not countermand lender's closing instructions because borrowers were not parties to those instructions); Richardson v. New Century Mortgage Corp., 2005 WL 1554026 (N.D.Miss. 2005) (unpublished), aff'd 202 Fed.Appx. 773, 2006 WL 2990260 (C.A.5 (Miss.)) (unpublished); Dietrich Family Irrevocable Trust v. Philip F. Greco Title Co., 2008 WL 509845 (Mich.App.) (unpublished); Burton v. Sure Title, 2007 WL 4322269 (Mich.App.) (unpublished); Sarnecky v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co., 2015 WL 6438635 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), reh.den. (Nov. 12, 2015), rev.den. (Jan. 13, 2016) (borrower may not sue loan closer for alleged breach of loan closing instructions). In Fantino v. Lenders Title and Guar. Co., 303 Ill.App.3d 204, 707 N.E.2d 756, 236 Ill.Dec. 629 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), the court held that, when the escrow agreement stated that the escrowee was acting solely for the benefit of the lender, the borrowers' signatures on the agreement was their assent that the escrowee owes them no duty. The borrowers were not permitted to circumvent that fact by claiming to be third party beneficiaries of the escrow. The court further held that the escrowee is not the fiduciary of the borrowers in disbursing the loan funds, since a fiduciary duty is owed only to the party who makes the deposit. In Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017), however, the court concluded that the borrower was a third party beneficiary of a lender's closing instructions, notwithstanding the prior Ohio decision of Pippin v. Kern-Ward Bldg. Co. to the contrary (cited above).

[108] Money Store Investment Corp. v. Southern Calif. Bank, 98 Cal.App.4th 722, 120 Cal.Rptr.2d 58 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.

claim against the failed lender's closing agent for the closer's role in claimed bank fraud.[109] If the lender's closing agent is also a title insurance agent, the two agency relationships have different scopes and the principal of the closing agent depends on the nature of the act being performed.[110]

However, in Rhode Island, when an attorney closes a loan, the borrowers are his clients; while the lender is a direct beneficiary of his services, it is not his client.[111] Further, when the borrower was hustled into a scheme to have the loan proceeds delivered to a contractor arranged by the loan broker, who failed to perform the intended home repairs, the court ruled that the lender's closing attorney also served as escrowee for the borrower and breached a duty to her by assisting in the apparent sham.[112]

2002).

[109] F.D.I.C. v. Calhoun, 34 F.3d 1291 (5th Cir. 1994) (FDIC, as successor to failed lender, not precluded from recovery on claimed reliance on escrowee's acts in fostering bank fraud).

[110] In Northwest Savings Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 253080 (Pa.Super.) (unpublished), the court found that The Closing Company of Pennsylvania served as both the bank's closing agent and the title insurer's policy-issuing agent. It "misappropriated" loan money that it was supposed to have sent to pay off loans from a refinance closing. The court held that The Closing Company was a dual agent, but the loss should rest with the innocent principal under whose agency scope the payoff malfeasance occurred. The court determined that the theft occurred while the company was acting as the lender's agent, barring the bank's claims against the title insurer.

[111] Credit Union Central Falls v. Groff, 966 A.2d 1262 (R.I. 2009). However, in Pineda v. Chase Bank USA, N.A., 186 A.3d 1054 (R.I. 2018), the court held that a lender was not liable to its borrower for the theft of the loan money by the closing attorney because, even if the lawyer was the lender's agent, his theft was not within the scope of that agency and could not invoke the doctrine of respondeat superior.

[112] Russell v. Demandville Mortgage Corp., 11 Misc.3d 1056(A), 815 N.Y.S.2d 496, 2006 N.Y. Slip Op. 50231(U) (N.Y.Sup. 2006).

13.5 Duties Regarding Funds

The escrow instructions typically charge the escrowee with closing escrow after the deposit of all required money into a bank or investment account, as specified by the instructions.[113] The escrowee does not have a duty to deposit funds in an interest-bearing account, as would a trustee.[114] An escrow agreement may be written to allow the escrowee to earn interest on funds held.[115]

An escrowee is not liable to a party seeking to wire money to the escrowee whose money is diverted to the wrong bank account by a party who issues fake wiring instructions for the escrowee's account.[116]

The escrowee is typically required by law to maintain a separate escrow account, and is prohibited from commingling escrowed funds with the escrowee's own money. Until 2011, an escrowee was not permitted to earn interest on money held in escrow, because that money is not the property of the escrowee.[117] The ban on interest has been codified in some states by statute.[118] In [113] See Spalla v. Fransen, 188 Ohio App. 3d 666, 936 N.E.2d 559, 2010-Ohio-3461 (Ohio App. 11 Dist. 2010), in which a check was not deposited immediately, and then bounced. The court held that the escrowee was not liable to the principal for more than the check amount on the principal's theory that the escrowee's failure to act more quickly deprived him of the opportunity to cancel the sale and get a new buyer. In Plaza Leyenda, L.P. v. Lawyers Title of Arizona, Inc., 2011 WL 1203655 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), an escrowee did not promptly tell the property owner that a check had been returned NSF and the owner was forced to rebid a construction job and pay substantially more for the work. The escrowee was found liable for the project cost increase. In Capcor at KirbyMain, L.L.C. v. Moody Nat'l Kirby Houston S, L.L.C., 509 S.W.3d 379 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014), the escrow officer did not tortiously interfere with the buyer's performance under the purchase contract by informing him on the day before closing that he must deposit the purchase money by wire transfer, which he said he could not do in time to close escrow.

---

[114] Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., 211 Cal.App.3d 1122, 260 Cal.Rptr. 21, 25 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1989).

[115] Marshall v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corp., 186 A.D.2d 542, 588 N.Y.S.2d 364 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1992).

[116] See White v. Citywide Title Corp., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2018 WL 5013571 (N.D.Ill. 2018) (permanent citation not yet available), in which the court has dismissed some but not all claims brought against a title agency by a buyer who delivered a down payment to a fraudster's bank account based on phony wiring instructions. This type of fraud is often referred to as the spoofing of an email account. An FBI website explains the scam this way: "Phishing and spoofing are somewhat synonymous in that they refer to forged or faked electronic documents. Spoofing generally refers to the dissemination of email which is forged to appear as though it was sent by someone other than the actual source. Phishing, often utilized in conjunction with a spoofed email, is the act of sending an email falsely claiming to be an established legitimate business in an attempt to dupe the unsuspecting recipient into divulging personal, sensitive information such as passwords, credit card numbers, and bank account information after directing the user to visit a specified website. The website, however, is not genuine and was set up only as an attempt to steal the user's information."

[117] Until 2011, the Federal Reserve Act prohibited Federal Reserve banks from directly or indirectly paying any interest on demand deposits such as escrow accounts. 12 U.S.C. § 371a; see also 12 C.F.R. § 217.1 et seq. (2004) (Regulation Q). That regulation, adopted in 1933 under Section 19(i) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 371a), was repealed by section 627 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, effective July 21, 2011.

[118] See, for example, California Insurance Code section 12413.5; Va. Code § 6.1-2.23(a) (requiring closing agents to some states, banks give earnings credits or similar non-cash setoffs to escrowees, which are typically applied to offset fees incurred on the escrow accounts.[119] A sweep of the escrow account has been found to violate laws prohibiting the commingling of escrowed funds.[120]

In the State of Washington, escrowees are considered limited officers of the court. The Supreme Court claims jurisdiction over escrowees under the novel title of "limited practice officers." Lawyers in Washington are required to put client trust account money in accounts earning interest for a foundation that distributes the money for legal care of the poor. Washington escrowees have the same obligation to deliver interest earned on their accounts to the foundation, but are not liable to escrow parties for interest or earnings credits earned, or that allegedly should have been earned, on escrow deposits.[121]

The escrowee must deposit checks received within a reasonable time or risk being liable if the checks are not good when finally deposited.[122] However, when a check was sent by a broker with segregate and maintain closing funds and pay money as instructed).

---

[119] Until July 21, 2011, the Federal Reserve Act prohibited Federal Reserve banks from directly or indirectly paying any interest on demand deposits such as escrow accounts. 12 U.S.C. § 371a; see also 12 C.F.R. § 217.1 et seq. (2004) (Regulation Q). That regulation was repealed by section 627 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act. See Federal Register, Vol. 76, No. 137, Monday, July 18, 2011, at pp. 42015-42020. Regulation Q formerly defined interest as "any payment to or for the account of any depositor as compensation for the use of funds constituting a deposit." However, "[a] member bank's absorption of expenses incident to providing a normal banking function or its forbearance from charging a fee in connection with such a service is not considered a payment of interest." 12 C.F.R. § 217.2(d). The Federal Reserve Board has issued a number of rulings and opinion letters holding that various bank charges may be absorbed by the bank without being considered the payment of interest. The Board had opined that banks do not pay interest by offering loans at favorable rates for the purchase of investment instruments pledged as security for the loans to customers who maintain large demand deposit balances, in which the amount of credit extended is tied to the historical average account balance. 1988 Fed. Reserve Bd. Interpretive Letter, Fed. Reserve Reg. Service 2-545.1 (June 28, 1988). In Hirsch v. Bank of America, N.A., 107 Cal.App.4th 708, 132 Cal.Rptr.2d 220 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2003), a court dismissed claims against banks for paying earnings credits to title companies, reasoning that the plaintiffs themselves would not have been entitled to earn interest on the funds, and therefore were not out anything. Also see later decisions at 2006 WL 182953 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), and State v. PricewaterhouseCoopers, 125 Cal.App.4th 1219, 23 Cal.Rptr.3d 529 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2005).

[120] In re Crocker Companies, Inc., 2007 WL 3333274 (D. Utah) (unpublished).

[121] The Ninth Circuit ruled that the earnings credits were "nothing but incentive payments to repeat customers [of the banks]"--i.e., the escrow companies--which are "never the property of the escrow companies' customers," in Washington Legal Foundation v. Legal Foundation of Washington, 271 F.3d 835 (9th Cir. (Wash.) 2001), reversing prior op. 236 F.3d 1097 (9th Cir. (Wash.) 2001). The earnings credits granted to the title insurers by their banks were found not to be the property of the depositors into escrow, and thus they had no standing to sue for the money value of those credits, in three decisions issued on identical class action suits filed against different insurers, Cornelius v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co., 2009 WL 596585 (W.D.Wash.) (unpublished); Jankanish v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 779330 (W.D.Wash.) (unpublished), later decision 2009 WL 1919117 (W.D.Wash.) (unpublished); and Sypolt v. The Talon Group, 2009 WL 497133 (W.D.Wash) (unpublished).

[122] Wade v. Lake County Title Ins. Co., 6 Cal.App.3d 824, 86 Cal.Rptr. 182 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1970); Chilton v. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 554 S.W.2d 246 (Tex.App. 1977); Katleman v. U.S. Communities, Inc., 197 Neb. 443, 249 N.W.2d 898 (1977); Countrywide Realty Corp. v. Alboni, 420 A.2d 1181 (Del.Super.Ct. 1980). In the above cases, the no written instructions, it was not a violation of implicit instructions to keep the check in the file rather than deposit it.[123] If a money deposit is not received by the specified deadline, the escrowee must tell the other parties that the money has not been deposited, and obtain their instructions on how to proceed.[124] The escrowee must inform the other parties if it receives a check that bounces, causing the required deposit not to be made.[125] The escrowee may be liable if it incorrectly represents to one principal that another principal has made a required money deposit into escrow, or if the escrow officer allows escrow to close under the mistaken belief that all money deposits have been made.[126]

An escrowee may be liable if it intentionally gives the seller the impression that an instrument deposited into escrow by the buyer in lieu of cash is as good as legal tender.[127] However, the escrowee has no liability for statements that are truthful, or recommendations or referrals made in good faith.[128]

---

checks became worthless because of the payor's insolvency after delivery to the escrowee. The escrowee may have a defense to liability if the check was not good on the day it was delivered to the escrowee, because in such a case the escrowee's failure to deposit does not cause the dishonoring of the check. See Capital Title Co. v. Mahone, 619 S.W.2d 204 (Tex.App. 1981).

[123] Rianda v. San Benito Title Guarantee Co., 35 Cal.2d 170, 217 P.2d 25 (Cal. 1950).

[124] Chilton v. Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 554 S.W.2d 246 (Tex.App. 1977).

[125] In Burman v. Richmond Homes Ltd., 821 P.2d 913 (Colo.App.1991), the court held that the escrowee had an affirmative duty to inform the seller that the buyer's earnest money check had bounced because it was issued on a closed account, and thus the escrow deposit had not been made. That error was aggravated by the escrowee/broker's apparent intentional failure to inform the seller in an apparent attempt to protect its right to a commission. Had the seller been aware of the earnest money deficiency, the seller would have let the purchase contract expire, and would have been free to accept a later offer for more money. The broker/escrowee would not have received a commission on the later offer.

[126] BCV Colonnade v. United Realty Companies, LLC, 2009 WL 2974768 (Mich.App.) (unpublished) (escrowee grossly negligent for confirming to escrow principal the receipt of earnest money deposit that had not been made); Commercial Escrow Co. v. Rockport Rebel, Inc., 778 S.W.2d 532 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 1989) (escrowee liable when it closed escrow in reliance on a receipt for deposit of funds which listed wrong party as depositor); Rivermont Village, Inc. v. Preferred Land Title, Inc., 371 S.W.3d 858 (Mo.App. S.D. 2012) (escrowee who promised to deposit earnest money check on day of receipt was liable to seller for obeying buyer's counter-instruction not to deposit check).

[127] The escrowee also represented to various sellers that the purchaser was "an honorable and wealthy man." Bowling v. Founders Title Co., 773 F.2d 1175 (11th Cir. 1985). The escrowee was found liable to the sellers for the money they lost in their transactions with the buyer, who was perpetrating a fraud. The court found the escrow officer to be a willing, if gullible, instrument of that fraud. Based on the pattern of misrepresentation to various sellers, the court upheld a verdict against the insurer based on the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO).

[128] In Jefmor, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 839 S.W.2d 161 (Tex.App. 1992), an escrowee was not liable to a mortgage loan assignee for having "represented" that the loan was funded, when the escrowee's only representation was the HUD-1 certification that funds had been disbursed. The court held that the escrowee's "legal duty regarding the truth of the statement that the funds had been disbursed extended no further than to Amerifirst, the party to whom the statement was made." In Tesoro Coast, LLC v. United Escrow Co., 2011 WL 3716985 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the escrowee was found not liable for having referred a customer to a 1031 company that stole the customer's money,

The escrowee has no independent duty to confirm that funds have been transferred outside of escrow as represented to the escrowee. Thus, when the escrowee received a HUD-1 showing that earnest money had been transmitted outside of escrow, the seller and buyer both presented affidavits swearing that the money had changed hands, and the escrowee had been given no specific responsibility to confirm the truth of the affidavits, it was not liable when in fact no money had changed hands.[129] Also, when the purchaser handed the seller an earnest money check before an escrow was set up, and the escrow was later opened but the check not deposited, the escrowee was not obligated to inform the purchaser of that fact "absent an inquiry with respect thereto."[130]

The escrowee is required to obey the parties' instructions as to the disbursement of money from escrow.[131] No deposits may be released until escrow closes, unless instructions specifically so provide.[132] When a check was deposited containing an endorsement stating that the money was for purchase of land, the endorsement created an implied instruction not to disburse funds until the land was conveyed.[133] The escrowee is not liable for returning earnest money to the buyer if the contract is terminated and the buyer is entitled to the return of the money.[134] However, the escrowee may be required to reimburse a party if it disburses earnest money improperly.[135] When the joint instructions told the escrowee to "release" the buyer's deposited money to the seller, the escrowee accurately when the escrowee had no reason to believe there was a problem with the company.

---

[129] Kansa Reinsurance Co., Ltd., et al. v. Stewart Title Co., 20 F.3d 1362 (5th Cir. 1994). The court also held that the escrow officer's notarization of the signatures on the fraudulent HUD-1 did not make it liable to the lender.

[130] Kraft v. Bartholomew, 620 P.2d 755, 759 (Hawaii App. 1980).

[131] Freegard v. First Western Nat'l Bank, 738 P.2d 614 (Utah 1987). In California, Financial Code section 17414 prohibits knowingly or reckless disbursement of escrow funds "otherwise than in accordance with escrow instructions."

[132] Karras v. Title Ins. & Guarantee Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 659, 258 P.2d 866 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953); Broussard v. Hill, 100 Nev. 325, 682 P.2d 1376 (1984); Commercial Escrow Co. v. Rockport Rebel, Inc., 778 S.W.2d 532 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 1989) (escrowee liable when it closed escrow in reliance on a receipt for deposit of funds which listed wrong party as depositor). In Inmobiliaria Buenaventuras S.A. de C.V. v. Chicago Title Co., 2019 WL 6167404 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the escrow did not close. The escrowee and seller read the escrow instructions to mean that the earnest money could be delivered to the seller immediately on receipt, and the escrowee delivered the money on the seller's request. The court later read the instructions to mean that no deposits were to be released until close of escrow, and entered a judgment against the escrowee for the amount of the earnest money it had disbursed to the seller. In Streambend Properties II, LLC v. Ivy Tower Minneapolis LLC, 2019 WL 2332409 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), petition filed December 23, 2019, the escrowee title insurer did not violate its escrow instructions or state law in delivering earnest money and other deposits to the developer immediately on receipt, to be used in construction of the condominium building, without the consent of the buyers, because the escrow instructions authorized that disbursement.

[133] Wieland v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 755 S.W.2d 659 (Mo.App. 1988).

[134] Second Ave. Realty LLC v. 1355 Second Owner LLC, 164 A.D.3d 1153, 84 N.Y.S.3d 121, 2018 N.Y. Slip Op. 06191 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2018).

[135] Durish v. Panan International N.V., 808 S.W.2d 175 (Tex.App. 1991).

obeyed that instruction by delivering the money to the seller before close of escrow.[136]

When a court instructs the parties that money is to be held in escrow until a final order is issued determining whose is entitled to receive the money, the money may not be disbursed until there is such a final order and any appeal therefrom has been decided.[137] A court order instructing the escrowee to disburse deposited funds in a particular fashion supersedes the escrow instructions.[138]

On the close of escrow, the escrowee delivers the seller's net proceeds of sale according to the seller's instructions. When there are two sellers under the escrow instructions, the proceeds check is typically made payable to both of them, unless otherwise directed.[139] However, the escrowee is not responsible for loss caused by one seller's forgery of the other's signature on a check properly payable to both of them but delivered just to one.[140] The seller may make a payment direction, instructing the escrowee to pay all or a portion of the seller's money to a third party.[141] The escrowee is required to obey such a payment direction, whether received before or after the break of escrow.[142]

---

[136] Lin v. Central Escrow, Inc., 2015 WL 7777609 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished).

[137] In Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe v. Terwilliger, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 4452246 (D.S.D. 2019) (not yet released for publication), when an interim court order mandated that money for payment of disputed taxes be placed in escrow until a final order determined if the taxes were owed, then an order was entered but an appeal was filed, the escrowee acted properly in refusing to disburse the money before the order was affirmed or reversed on appeal. In Securities and Exchange Commission v. Champion-Cain, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 4686938 (S.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication), a title insurer escrowee was found to have breached a duty to the court by not having immediately turned over escrowed money on receipt of a court order instructing that all property of an entity was to be paid to the entity's receiver, despite the fact that many people whose money was part of the escrow pool told the escrowee they did not want the receiver to take control of their money.

[138] Kramer v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 69 Ill.App .3d 1015, 26 Ill.Dec. 275, 387 N.E.2d 1105 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1979).

[139] Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp., 48 Cal.App.3d 616, 621-623, 122 Cal.Rptr. 150 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1975); Bakewell v. Heritage Nat'l Bank, 890 S.W.2d 653 (Mo.App. 3 Dist. 1994); Adorno v. Delgado, 2004-Ohio-5559, 2004 WL 2348158 (Ohio App. 9 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to ex-husband to make sure that he received money in exchange for the quit claim deed he delivered to escrowee, because escrowee had limited duties, and its only principal was the wife's lender).

[140] In Gerson v. Broward County Title Co., 116 So.2d 455 (Fla. 1959), a husband forged his wife's signature on the check, which had been delivered to him by the escrowee. In finding for the escrowee, the Florida court rested its decision on the fact that husband and wife hold title as tenants by the entireties. As such, they "are regarded as one person." Thus, "[t]he law is well settled that the husband may accept payment in discharging a note held by the entireties, since tenancy by the entireties is an indivisible tenancy and possession by the husband is in law possession by the wife [citation omitted]." Id. at 456, 457.

[141] Builders' Control Service of No. Cal., Inc. v. North American Title Guar. Co., 205 Cal.App.2d 68, 22 Cal.Rptr. 712 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1962).

[142] Contemporary Investments, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 145 Cal.App.3d 999, 193 Cal.Rptr. 822 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1983). The Contemporary Investments decision overturned the earlier case of Ogdahl v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 72

An escrowee is required to obey a seller payment direction despite a lender's assertion that such a direction could be used as a device when a loan is obtained by fraud.[143] When a court order declared that one party was to be paid from the escrow, but that party instructed the escrowee to pay a third party, the instruction was an assignment of the escrowed money, and the escrowee erred in paying per the court order rather than the instruction.[144] The escrow principal may revoke a payment direction, and the escrowee is not liable to the party who was to be paid when it obeys the modified instruction from the escrow principal.[145] The person who is paid pursuant to a seller payment direction does not become a party to the escrow, however. See §13.4.

The escrowee also has a duty to disburse the balance of the escrowed money according to the instructions it receives from the parties.[146] It should not disburse funds without the parties'

Cal.App.3d Supp. 41, 140 Cal.Rptr. 148 (1977), which had held that the principal to the escrow was not authorized to change his own instructions to pay a creditor from the escrow, after escrow broke. In reversing Ogdahl's holding, the court Contemporary Investments court stated: "The unwarranted significance the Ogdahl court placed on the closing of escrow has led to much confusion in the law applicable to escrow holders. If the escrow holder has no notice of assignment [of proceeds to another party], it is his duty to comply strictly with the instructions of his principal. If he disposes of his principal's property in violation of those instructions, he is liable for any loss occasioned thereby. (Spaziani v. Millar (1963) 215 Cal.App.2d 667, 682, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658.) This applies before or after the close of escrow." 193 Cal.Rptr. at 825.

[143] In Home Loan Corp. v. Texas American Title Co., 191 S.W.3d 728, 731 (Tex.App.-Houston 2006), the court noted that the escrowee is obligated to obey a seller payment direction, and the lender's claim that such a direction was used to further a fraudulent loan does not alter the escrowee's duties to the escrow principals. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 7339150 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), an Illinois court has refused to accept the FDIC's conclusory assertion that payments of seller proceeds made from closing at the sellers' direction were third party payments that the escrowee was required to disclose to the lender, as indicators of loan fraud.

[144] Wood v. Chicago Title Agency of Las Vegas, Inc., 109 Nev. 70, 847 P.2d 738 (1993). The court stated that the escrowee "would not have been subject to contempt had it sought guidance from the district court or filed an interpleader." 847 P.2d at 740.

[145] In Brandt v. Sande, d/b/a Land Title Services, 299 Mont. 256, 1 P.3d 929, 2000 MT 98 (Mont. 2000), the direction to pay the third party was revoked by the principal, leaving the escrowee with no duty to the payee; the court also held that the escrowee was not required to chase the party to verify whether or not he held a direct assignment of escrow proceeds, which might have been irrevocable.

[146] NGM Ins. Co. v. Secured Title & Abstract, Inc., 2008 WL 4276932 (E.D.Va.) (unpublished), related decision, 2008 WL 4642957 (E.D.Va.) (unpublished) (title agent closer liable to seller for sale proceeds not delivered from closing, despite agent's protest that money was wired to wrong account by mistake, which may not even have been true); Jarvis v. K & E RE One, LLC, 390 S.W.3d 631 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2012) (escrowee's delivery of loan payoff to loan broker and servicer not a violation of duty, and servicer found to have authority to accept payoff funds). In DeFehr v. E-Escrows, Inc., 2012 WL 956511 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), when an escrowee distributed money to a judgment debtor years before a creditor got a judgment against the debtor, the creditor had no claim against the escrowee for its alleged disbursement to an unauthorized party. In Edwards v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 222243 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that refinancing borrowers had no claims against the escrowee for not paying off some of their tax debts when the escrowee followed its instructions as to what tax debt was to be paid, particularly since the borrowers took steps to pay the least amount possible to the IRS from escrow.

approval.[147] One court synopsized the escrowee's duties in handling funds thusly:

> In managing monies deposited in escrow, the escrow agent is required to conduct his affairs with scrupulous honesty, skill and diligence. Webster v. U.S. Life Title Co., 598 P.2d 108 (Ariz.Ct.App. 1979). The escrow agent must strictly comply with the terms of the escrow agreement and may not use the proceeds in any manner that is not authorized by contract or deposit. Colonial Savings and Loan Ass'n v. Redwood Empire Title Co., 46 Cal.Rptr. 16 (Ct.App. 1965).[148]

The escrowee is responsible for following the instructions of the parties as to the disbursement of money to third parties. When the escrow instructions do not itemize how funds are to be disbursed, the parties' signed closing statement or HUD-1 typically provide the payment instructions to the escrowee.[149] An authorization form telling the escrowee to pay according to a HUD-1 provides a specific instruction and an acknowledgment that the borrower has reviewed the figures.[150] The [147] Commercial Escrow Co. v. Rockport Rebel, Inc., 778 S.W.2d 532 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 1989). An attorney-escrowee violates this duty by delivering escrowed funds to his client without instruction from or notice to the non-client principal of the escrow. In re Discipline of Two Attorneys, 421 Mass. 619, 660 N.E.2d 1093 (1996). In Brantley v. Boyd, 2009 WL 4052682 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished), an escrowee that accepted telephone instruction to send loan proceeds to a party other than the borrower was liable to the lender for the full amount of the loan, despite evidence that the person to whom the money was delivered was the intended ultimate recipient. In Samra v. Johal, 2010 WL 3715347 (W.D.Wash.) (unpublished), an escrowee that received documents saying that an LLC member had broad authority to act was permitted to take that member's instructions on the disbursement of proceeds to other members without verification from the other members. In Rose v. Stewart Title & Trust of Phoenix, Inc., 2011 WL 2366808 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), an escrowee was found to have violated its instructions by disbursing an investor's deposited money to a third party without his knowledge or consent, contrary to the instructions; its liability was not negated by the later termination of the escrow. In Texas Capital Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 822 F.Supp.2d 678 (W.D.Ky. 2011), the court refused to dismiss an action brought by a funding lender against an escrowee for having forwarded loan money received for closings without obtaining the approval of the funding lender. The instructions to forward the money came from the loan originator, who said the account was for a different escrowee whom he had selected. In fact, the account to which the money was forwarded was controlled by the originator, who stole the money. In Drury v. Poblocki Holdings, LLC, 388 Wis.2d 256, 932 N.W.2d 183 (Table), 2019 WL 2608708 (Wis.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), In a corporate sale holdback escrow, the seller demanded the return of the money and the escrowee complied. The buyer sent notice to the escrowee forbidding it to disburse, but that notice was sent one day past the deadline set by the escrow instructions. The court found the escrowee not liable to the buyer because the late notice was ineffective and it would have been wrong to obey it.

---

[148] Broussard v. Hill, 100 Nev. 325, 682 P.2d 1376 (1984).

[149] See Beasley, Escrows and Closings, in Title Insurance 1999: Mastering Critical Issues Facing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders, Practicing Law Institute N-448 1999, p. 107; Richardson v. New Century Mortgage Corp., 2005 WL 1554026 (N.D.Miss. 2005) (unpublished), aff'd 202 Fed.Appx. 773, 2006 WL 2990260 (5th Cir. (Miss.)) (unpublished). However, in Richardson, the escrowee was justified in using the net cash to borrower to obtain the release of a lien, when the HUD-1 had been prepared on the false assumption that the borrower would use money outside of closing to obtain that release.

[150] In re Staggie, 255 B.R. 48 (Bkcy.D. Idaho 2000), involved an acknowledgment signed by the borrowers at closing escrowee is responsible for properly pro-rating taxes and distributing funds accordingly.[151] A seller may sue the escrowee for paying off the wrong loan at closing, as a result of which the mortgage against the property was not released.[152]

Instructions to use the funds "to clear title" before disbursing the balance to the seller were found to require clearing of even those liens which might be junior to the title conveyed.[153] Similarly, an escrowee was negligent in not obtaining a sales tax clearance certificate, on the sale of a tavern, when all the debts of the business were to be paid out of closing.[154] When an escrow was formed for the deposit of money to be used by an insurer to protect against a title defect, and the instructions permitted the insurer-escrowee to pay attorney fees incurred in defending the insured against a title defect, the insurer was found not to be permitted to use the funds to defend any party other than the insured who was the object of the escrow.[155]

In general, the escrowee may not unilaterally alter the disbursement instructions, and should bring a mistake to the parties' attention and seek joint modification of the instructions.[156] However, that said they had "carefully reviewed the HUD-1" and found it accurate. The agreement said that borrowers "hereby authorize the Settlement Agent to make expenditures and disbursements as shown above and approve the same for payment." This agreement was found not to be a waiver of the borrower's right to contest fees in a lawsuit with the lender. Rather, the court said, the statements "were intended to protect the title company from any later challenge concerning its disbursement of the proceeds from the sale."

---

[151] Farkas v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 71 Ohio App.3d 633, 594 N.E.2d 1140 (Ohio App. 1991); B & H Resources, L.L.C. v. 28925 Lorain Inc., 2017 -Ohio- 7248, 2017 WL 3531469 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished) (closer did not err in prorating real estate taxes based on amount listed in tax records, although as of closing seller had appealed assessed value).

[152] McKeeman v. Corestates Bank, N.A., 751 A.2d 655, 2000 PA Super 117 (Pa.Super. 2000). The opinion is couched in terms of the seller's rights under the title insurance policy, but clearly the title insurer's actions were as an escrowee rather than under the policy.

[153] First Montana Title Co. of Billings v. North Point Square Assoc., 240 Mont. 33, 782 P.2d 376 (Mont. 1989).

[154] Amen v. Merced County Title Co., 58 Cal.2d 528, 25 Cal.Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1962).

[155] Mehlman v. Dollinger, 674 N.Y.S.2d 37 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1998). The case is a further illustration of the fact that secured indemnities accepted by title insurers to induce them to provide insurance coverages should not be drafted as escrows. What the court characterized as an escrow in this case was really an indemnity secured by funds. Recoupment on indemnities, and disputes regarding same, are discussed at §5.10.

[156] In Splash Design, Inc. v. Lee, 103 Wash.App. 1036, rev.den. 144 Wash.2d 1009, 31 P.3d 1185 (Wash. 2001), attorney-title agent-escrowee Karl Park had failed to search the correct seller's name for liens. He stopped payment on his escrow check when he searched the correct name and discovered a federal tax lien that might attach. The parties agreed to hold back a portion of the purchase price until the seller could obtain a certificate of non-attachment from the IRS. Park, the escrowee, refused to release the balance of the funds, however, and the seller sued him. When the certificate of non-attachment was obtained, Park released the balance but would not pay the holdback amount, because he had incurred the expense of being sued. The court found Park guilty of a negligent search and breach of fiduciary duty in refusing to release the funds. He argued that there was a dispute about the money, and the instructions permitted him to hold the funds until a dispute was resolved. The court disagreed, saying: "But there was not a dispute between the parties here. And Park did more than merely preserve the status quo. He actively intervened in the transaction when he

when a loan closing statement is prepared predicated on the release of a lien outside of escrow, which the borrower does not accomplish, the escrowee was entitled to apply the borrower's net cash from closing to obtain that release. [157] Also, in keeping with the general rule that an escrowee has no duty to "police" the transaction (see §13.3), it is not obligated to add conditions to its instructions before disbursing funds, for the protection of a principal.[158]

An escrowee is not obligated to release funds on a certain date unless the instructions create that unambiguous duty. When the escrow instructions create a clear drop-dead date on which funds are to be released to one party, absent an event that would cause them to be delivered to another party, the funds are to be delivered on the drop-dead date.[159] If the escrow fails to close, or the conditions to close of escrow are not met, the escrowee is to return all deposits to the depositors, unless the escrow instructions provide otherwise.[160] If money is deposited by a party other than the returned the purchase price to the buyer, Lee, without returning the business to the seller. Nothing in the escrow documents gave Park the authority to step out of the advisory capacity created by the instructions and intervene in the transaction. The evidence in the record supports only one conclusion: Park's conduct breached his fiduciary duty."

---

[157] Richardson v. New Century Mortgage Corp., 2005 WL 1554026 (N.D.Miss. 2005) (unpublished), aff'd 202 Fed.Appx. 773, 2006 WL 2990260 (C.A.5 (Miss.)) (unpublished). The borrower sued the lender's closing agent, alleging fraud and other causes of action. The court held that the loan closer, Hunt, did not owe Richardson, the borrower, a fiduciary duty, and rejected Richardson's claims, saying: "Viewing the facts most favorable to Richardson, the establishment of the first seven fraud elements is reasonably possible. The problem, however, comes in meeting the last two. Did Richardson have a right to rely on the representation that he would receive the $11,396 himself without using it to satisfy the tax lien? Further, did satisfaction of the $19,000 tax lien using the $11,396 create consequent and proximate injury to the plaintiff? A sober review of the record in this case, even viewed in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, manifestly establishes that the answer to both questions is no. Richardson admits that he knew at all relevant time that he owed the IRS $19,000 on the property he was seeking to refinance. He knew that it would be necessary to deal with that tax lien before he could get the loan. Even if he believed Hunt would 'handle' the lien, he had to know that handling it would require some fraction of the $19,000 owed. Given his apparent dearth of funds, the court fails to see what money he planned to use to satisfy the tax lien. Essentially, the plaintiff did not have a right to believe that he could get the surplus of the new loan without paying the tax lien since such a belief is patently unreasonable."

[158] Schultz v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Nat'l Bank, N.A., 94 F.3d 721 (5th Cir. 1996).

[159] In Marcuson v. Clifton, 571 S.E.2d 599 (N.C.App. 2002), a sewer assessment was pending but not yet final as of closing. The parties escrowed money with instructions to pay it to the buyers "upon the rendering of billing from Wake County to the record owner." However, the instructions said, " [i]f an assessment is made such that there is no cost to either the buyers or sellers within 16 months of closing, the escrow will be returned to sellers in full." An assessment roll was confirmed, and a bill sent to the owners, well past the sixteenth month after closing. The escrowee paid the bill, and the sellers recovered from escrowee, with the court finding that the money should have been returned to them when the 16 months had elapsed. In Felger v. Financial Title Co., 2004 WL 1756191 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 2004) (unpublished), the escrowee held money to protect against a judgment. The escrow instructions called for the money to be held for 90 days while the judgment debtor tried to obtain a release of the judgment. The creditor learned of the escrow and made a demand for the money within the 90 days. The escrowee paid the money and obtained a release of the judgment. The court found that the debtor was not harmed by this technical breach of instructions, because the money would have been properly released to the creditor a month later.

[160] Wiczer v. Wojciak, 30 N.E.3d 670, 391 Ill.Dec. 400, 2015 IL App (1st) 123753 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2015) ("if the single party to the escrow instructions, and the conditions for close of escrow are not met, the escrowee properly obeys the instruction of the depositor to return the money to it.[161] Release of money under a "punchlist" or construction completion escrow is discussed at §10.2.8.

The escrowee does not have a duty to advise the other parties to the escrow when it is releasing funds, unless the instructions so state.[162] However, an escrowee was found to have a duty to notify the buyer that the seller had filed a declaratory judgment lawsuit to obtain the earnest money held in escrow, when the buyer was from out of state and had received no notice of the suit.[163]

An escrowee generally has no duties about money to persons who are not parties to the escrow, as is further discussed at §13.4. The escrowee has no duty to a party named by one of the principals to the escrow to receive funds.[164] The escrowee is not liable for payment out of escrow to parties for whom the escrowee has no payment instructions.[165] A New York case, however, raised the suggestion that an escrowee could owe a fiduciary duty to a mortgagee that delivered its satisfaction to the escrowee on the representation that it would be paid when escrow broke.[166] conditions of the escrow are not met, the escrowee must return the subject matter to the depositor," quoting Columbia Homes, Inc. v. Sirois, 115 Ill.App.3d 651, 653, 71 Ill.Dec. 518, 451 N.E.2d 6 (1983)); In re L & R Development & Investment Corp., 2017 WL 4863013 (Bkcy.P.R. 2017) (unpublished) (escrowee not negligent in returning down payment to buyer on its unilateral instruction when transaction failed); Appel v. Boston Nat'l Title Agency, LLC, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 3858888 (S.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication) (when escrow failed to close because the sellers refused to complete the auction sale, the escrowee was required to return the purchase price to the buyer and was sued for having delayed in the return of the money).

---

[161] Tribeca Companies, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 239 Cal.App.4th 1088, 192 Cal.Rptr.3d 354 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2015). The court said that an important factor in its reasoning was that the sole party to the escrow did not make any deposits into escrow, and thus the deposit by the non-principal was not merely one element of a larger transaction. The court said that fact distinguished the case from Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co., 27 Cal.4th 705, 711, 117 Cal.Rptr.2d 541, 41 P.3d 548 (2002) and its holding that a depositor is not a principal to the escrow and the escrowee must treat the instructions it receives from the escrow principals as paramount.

[162] In Madison Square Development Partnership of Arizona v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 3501556 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the escrow instructions said that the escrowee was to disburse the deposited money when it received instructions to do so from the party that was to receive the money. The escrowee received that instruction and disbursed the money. It was not also required to verify that the party seeking the money had given the required notice to the other party, or to verify that the other party agreed that the money should be disbursed, when the instructions did not say that the escrowee had either such duty.

[163] Fisher v. Comer Plantation, Inc., 772 So.2d 455 (Ala. 2000).

[164] In Brandt v. Sande, d/b/a Land Title Services, 299 Mont. 256, 1 P.3d 929, 2000 MT 98 (Mont. 2000), the direction to pay the third party was revoked by the principal, leaving the escrowee with no duty to the payee; the court also held that the escrowee was not required to chase the party to verify whether or not he held a direct assignment of escrow proceeds, which might have given the payee standing as a party.

[165] T.T.S.G., Inc. v. Kubic, 226 A.D.2d 132, 639 N.Y.S.2d 825 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1996).

[166] In T.T.S.G., Inc. v. Kubic, 226 A.D.2d 132, 639 N.Y.S.2d 825 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1996), the court stated: "As escrow agent, defendant owes a fiduciary duty to the parties to the transaction [citation omitted], and there exists a

Another New York case held an escrowee responsible to a mechanic lien claimant for "failing to follow closing instructions received from" the claimant at closing on a sale, as a result of which the lien claimant did not get paid.[167]

When there is a dispute about the release of funds, the escrowee may wish to obtain all parties' consent before disbursing. However, the escrowee should avoid adding conditions to its performance of the escrow that, when not met, will cause it not to perform clear instructions.[168]

When the escrowee also serves as title insurer and fails to discover a lien, the escrowee may not unilaterally disobey its instructions to pay off the lien,[169] but may seek a modification of the instructions from the principals. The obligor on a lien should not be permitted to avoid paying its just obligation based solely on the title insurer-escrowee's failure to discover the lien. An Ohio court found, without analysis, that search negligence precluded a title agent from recovering money paid to a borrower at closing that should have been used to pay off a missed mortgage. However, that negligence did not preclude the title agent's foreclosure of the mortgage against the borrower after it purchased the loan.[170]

In certain situations, the escrowee desires or is required to deliver the funds to a court of competent jurisdiction as full satisfaction of its obligations. This may be done by an interpleader action. See the full discussion of interpleader at §13.11.

---

question of fact whether defendant assumed a fiduciary duty to plaintiff [mortgagee]. Defendant's payment of the escrow funds to others, including the sponsor and himself, rather than meeting his obligation to plaintiff, would thus constitute a breach of fiduciary duty." Id. at 826. Similarly, in Takayama v. Schaefer, 669 N.Y.S.2d 656 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1998), the court found that an escrowee is "a trustee of anyone with a beneficial interest in the trust."

[167] F & C General Contractors Corp. v. Atlantic Mutual Mortgage Corp., 268 A.D.2d 556, 703 N.Y.S.2d 196 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2000).

[168] In Securities and Exchange Commission v. Champion-Cain, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 4686938 (S.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication), a title insurer escrowee was found to have breached a duty to the court by not having immediately turned over escrowed money on receipt of a court order instructing that all property of an entity was to be paid to the entity's receiver, despite the fact that many people whose money was part of the escrow pool told the escrowee they did not want the receiver to take control of their money.

[169] In Splash Design, Inc. v. Lee, 103 Wash.App. 1036, rev.den. 144 Wash.2d 1009, 31 P.3d 1185 (Wash. 2001), attorney-title agent-escrowee Karl Park had failed to search the correct seller's name for liens. He stopped payment on his escrow check when he searched the correct name and discovered a federal tax lien that might attach. The parties agreed to hold back a portion of the purchase price until the seller could obtain a certificate of non-attachment from the IRS. Park, the escrowee, refused to release the balance of the funds, however, and the seller sued him. When the certificate of non-attachment was obtained, Park released the balance but would not pay the holdback amount, because he had incurred the expense of being sued. The court found Park guilty of a negligent search and breach of fiduciary duty in refusing to release the funds. He argued that there was a dispute about the money, and the instructions permitted him to hold the funds until a dispute was resolved. The court disagreed: "But there was not a dispute between the parties here. And Park did more than merely preserve the status quo. He actively intervened in the transaction when he returned the purchase price to the buyer, Lee, without returning the business to the seller. Nothing in the escrow documents gave Park the authority to step out of the advisory capacity created by the instructions and intervene in the transaction… . The evidence in the record supports only one conclusion: Park's conduct breached his fiduciary duty."

[170] Nicholson v. Colson, 2000 WL 193231 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.) (unpublished).

The date on which escrow is considered to break may be dictated by state law, if the state has a law regulating closing funds. For example, Utah has a law requiring that an escrowee have collected funds before it issues funds from the escrow.[171] In that state, an escrow closes on the day prescribed by the closing funds statute, which in most cases is the day after the funds are deposited.[172] Closing funds laws are further discussed at §13.13.

In some states, title companies act as the loan servicer for a lender, collecting payments from the borrower and distributing them to the lender or otherwise as directed by the lender. In an escrow for collection of land contract payments, the escrowee did not violate a duty by accepting a late payment, or one lesser in amount than was due and payable.[173] The loan servicing escrowee also receives instructions and authority to release the loan collateral under the terms of the instructions and the debt instrument.[174]

An escrowee who absconds with deposited money is generally liable to the principals. Defalcation by title agents is discussed at §17.8.3. Difficult issues can arise as to the relative rights of the various parties whose money was deposited in the escrow account.[175] When an escrowee was instructed to draw on a letter of credit, but failed to do so before it expired, the escrowee was liable to the seller who would have been entitled to the funds.[176]

A seller who is mistakenly paid too much money at closing must return the overpayment when sued for unjust enrichment.[177] The seller's signing of a "compliance" agreement at closing has

---

[171] Utah Code Ann. § 31A-23-307(2) states: "(c) No check may be drawn, executed, or dated unless the segregated escrow account against which it is drawn contains a sufficient credit balance consisting of collected or cleared funds, at the time the check is drawn, executed, or dated. … (d)(iii) [C]ashier's checks, certified checks, teller's checks, U.S. Postal Service money orders, and check s drawn on a Federal Reserve Home Loan Bank may be disbursed on the day following the date of deposit... ."

[172] Schuhman v. Green River Motel, 835 P.2d 992 (Utah App. 1992).

[173] Malta v. Phoenix Title & Trust Co., 76 Ariz. 116, 259 P.2d 554 (1953).

[174] In Aldabbagh v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2008 WL 4069204 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), a title insurer performing under an account servicing agreement for the collection of loan payments was found not to have mistakenly released both deeds of trust that secured the debt, and therefore was not liable to the lender for the balance of the loan.

[175] Deer Creek, Inc. v. Section 1031 Services, Inc., 235 Ga.App. 891, 510 S.E.2d 853 (1999) involved 1031 Services, Inc., a Georgia company formed by a man who assumed the name and social security number of a dead person. Once he got some exchange money, the man withdrew more than $2 million from the account and left the country. The first two exchange parties to seek their money, Miller and Burdine, got arbitration awards, confirmed by the court, ordering the bank to turn over the amount of their deposits from the money remaining in the account. A group of other exchange parties then sought to block the turnover of funds. The court upheld the orders turning over funds to Miller and Burdine. On appeal, the court upheld the delivery of the money to Miller and Burdine. The court refused to impose a constructive trust, since that remedy is intended to prevent unjust enrichment but none of the depositors were unjustly enriched by the return of their own money. The court also said that Miller and Burdine were not the fiduciaries of the other exchangers.

[176] Lacy v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 794 S.W.2d 781 (Tex.App.-Dallas 1990).

[177] In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Wetzel, Ill.App. 5 Dist., Appeal No. 5-98-0429 (May 28, 1999) (unpublished), Larry been found a significant factor in obligating a seller to disgorge overpayment.[178]

When the escrowee makes a mistake in the handling of funds, it has a right to recover from the party in whose favor the mistake was made. For example, when the escrowee prepared the closing statement and listed the sale price as $2,000 too little, the escrowee reimbursed the seller for the mistake. The buyer was then obligated to pay the escrowee. The court rejected the buyer's claim that the payment to the seller was a "compromise settlement" or a "voluntary payment."[179] Title insurers who made mortgage payoffs to a mortgage broker which had arranged the loans and which had accepted the monthly payments from the borrowers were entitled to an injunction against the foreclosure of the mortgages. The court found that the mortgage broker had been the dual agent of borrowers and mortgagees.[180]

13.5.1 Loan Payoff Disputes

FORM 83, Appendix A
Lender bound by payoff letter

The accurate payoff of loans secured by real estate is a persistent source of problems for escrowees. As to the borrower, the lender is not obligated to consider the loan paid off until payment is received in full. However, buyers and refinancing lenders must rely on payoff figures given by the lender in making payments to clear title of the existing mortgage or deed of trust.

An escrowee is liable to the escrow principals if it violates its instruction to pay off a loan.[181] and Lori Wetzel were paid $30,000 too much in their seller proceeds check. The title insurer was forced to sue as subrogee for unjust enrichment. The Wetzels argued that the insurer was precluded from recovering because of negligence. The court said: "We will give this case all the analysis it deserves. The Wetzels are attempting to perpetrate a fraud. They have been unjustly enriched. The Wetzels' arguments to the contrary represent legal nit-picking and double-talk. Lawyers Title is subrogated to Magna Bank's claim and was properly awarded summary judgment. See Dix Mutual Insurance Co. v. LaFramboise, 149 Ill.2d 314, 597 N.E.2d 622 (1992). We will not aid the Wetzels in this chicanery."

---

[178] For example, in Charter Title Agency, Inc. v. Hosfelt Investment Co., 1999 WL 1221527 (Ohio App. 10 Dist.) (unpublished), the seller signed an agreement "to fully cooperate and adjust for clerical errors on any or all documents deemed necessary in the reasonable discretion of" the settlement agent. The court found that this obligated the seller to reimburse the closer for taxes that were incorrectly prorated on the closing statement. See a further discussion of compliance agreements at §13.14.

[179] Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Mundelius, 887 S.W.2d 728 (Mo.App.S.D. 1994). The court stated: "The payor should be allowed to recover for payments made for others in good faith where, because of the relationship, he had reason to believe it would be reimbursed [and escrowee] had reason to believe that defendant would reimburse it for costs associated with the purchase."

[180] Young v. Nevada Title Co., 744 P.2d 902, 103 Nev. 436 (1987).

[181] See Faerber v. Troutman & Troutman, P.C., 2017 WL 2691264 (Tenn.App.) (unpublished), in which the court found an attorney closing agent liable to the escrow principal for having delivered the loan payoff check to a party other than the lender, contrary to instruction as evidenced by the closing statement. However, in McMahon v. Bouchal, 2017 WL 4862454 (Md.App. 2017) (unpublished), a title agency was not liable to the borrowers for failing to pay off their

An escrowee/closing attorney was liable to a title insurer when he instructed the insurer to delete a deed of trust from its policy based on his payment at closing, after which he paid off the wrong loan.[182]

However, an escrowee that obeys its instructions and pays off a prior mortgage loan in full is not liable to the escrow principals if the lender fails to perform its obligation to release the mortgage.[183] When an escrowee was instructed to send funds to pay off a mortgage, it did not have the additional duty to verify its later discharge.[184]

There is a growing body of law, both statutory and by precedent, to the effect that third parties are entitled to the release of the real estate on payment of the amount recited in a payoff statement, even if that sum is not sufficient to pay off the loan.[185] Part of this emerging consensus is loan after the borrowers induced the title company to give them the loan money instead.

---

182 Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Landry, 1999 WL 307220 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished).

183 Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Bowman, 2012 WL 474167, 2012 -Ohio- 576 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee not liable to owner for seller's lender's failure to release paid-off mortgage).

184 Hooper v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 285 Pa.Super. 265, 427 A.2d 215 (1981).

185 California Civil Code Section 2943, subdivision (a)(5), for example, defines "payoff demand statement" as: "a written statement prepared in response to a written demand made by an entitled person or authorized agent, setting forth the amounts required as of the date of preparation by the beneficiary, to fully satisfy all obligations secured by the loan that is the subject of the payoff demand statement. The written statement shall include information reasonably necessary to calculate the payoff amount …, [and that such a letter] may be relied upon … in accordance with its terms, including … for the purpose of establishing the amount necessary to pay the obligation in full." Under that code section, an "entitled person" includes the borrower, a subsequent owner of the encumbered property, a party holding a subordinate lien or "the escrowholder licensed as an agent pursuant to Division 6 (commencing with Section 17000) of the Financial Code." However, in Rubie's LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2546585 (E.D.Cal. 2019) (not yet released for publication), a title insurer sued the lender that was paid off and the SBA, alleging that Wells Fargo demanded payment, First American paid the loan, and therefore the lender was required to release the deed of trust, based on the terms of the deed of trust instrument. The insurer did not allege that a request for payoff demand had been made, or a payoff statement issued, under Civil Code Section 2943. The court ruled that the insurer had not alleged the formation of a contract between Wells Fargo and First American that would support the claim. The Uniform Residential Mortgage Satisfaction Act was promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on State Laws in 2004. That law has been adopted in Alabama, North Carolina, Virginia and Wisconsin, with variants adopted in Indiana and a number of other states. That model law, which makes payoff letters binding and imposes real penalties for the failure to release a mortgage, is discussed in A First Look At An Interesting Act, by Jim Stewart, in Servicing Management (July 2005). The model law and its progress in state legislatures may be viewed at www.nccusl.org. In Sutton Funding, LLC v. Jaworski, 945 N.E.2d 705 (Ind.App. 2011), the court relied on the Indiana law, which compels lenders to honor payoff statements because other parties rely on them, to find a lender obligated to release its mortgage on payment of the amount stated in its letter even if it was inaccurate. Indiana Code section 32-29-6-13 says: "A creditor or mortgage servicer may not withhold the release of a mortgage if the written mortgage payoff statement misstates the amount of the payoff and the written payoff is relied upon in good faith by an independent closing agent without knowledge of the misstatement...." Similarly, in American First Nat'l Bank v. Jordan-Lewis Development, L.P., 2011 WL 2732779 (Tex.App.-Houston (1 Dist.)) (unpublished), the Texas release law, Texas Property Code § 12.017(c), was used to uphold the release of a deed of trust recorded by the title company based on a payoff letter issued by the bank. The payoff letter had the unusual provision that the lien would be released on delivery of a certificate of deposit. The CD was delivered, but the borrower did not sign a pledge agreement. In Stommel v. LNV Corp., 2015 WL 417883 (D. Utah)

the principle that a third party buyer or lender has a right to obtain a release of the real estate when it has relied on a payoff statement, whether or not the letter is accurate. A Virginia statute on payoff letters was found to create a duty on the lender's part to promptly notify the closer that a payoff letter was inaccurate. By waiting more than two months after it accepted the payoff money, the lender had lost the right to demand additional funds in exchange for the release of the property.[186]

Every state has a statute requiring a lender to release its lien within a certain period of time after having received payment in full.[187] However, not every state has adopted a law that gives an escrowee standing to sue a lender for its failure to release its mortgage after receiving payment in full, or for its failure to honor the terms of its payoff statement.[188]

A number of states have adopted laws that permit a title insurer or agent to release a mortgage of record when the company has paid off the loan.[189] A lender may have a claim against the title insurer or agent if its lien was improperly released.[190]

(unpublished), recons.den. 2015 WL 2255055 (May 13, 2015), which concerned a "split" closing conducted jointly by two escrow companies, the court held that a lender's promise to release a deed of trust without payment could be asserted by both escrowees as a defense to that lender's foreclosure threat. The court enjoined foreclosure of the deed of trust and awarded attorneys' fees to the property owner.

[186] Sovereign Title Co. v. First Union Nat'l Bank, 2000 WL 511798 (Va.Cir.Ct.) (unpublished). Virginia has a law, Va. Code § 6.1-330.82(A), obligating lenders to honor payoff letters within a specified period of time. That law was an important factor in the Sovereign decision.

[187] Those laws are discussed in the paper entitled The Uniform Residential Mortgage Satisfaction Act with Prefatory Note and Comments, published and promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on State Laws, available at uniformlaws.org. The case of A Pro Realty Service, Ltd. v. Fulton Bank, NA, 2019 WL 2121502 (Pa.) (unpublished), concerned Pennsylvania's lien release statute, Title 21 P.S. Deeds and Mortgages § 721-6, which says that, if the lender fails to record the satisfaction within 60 days of receipt of payment in full, "the mortgagee shall forfeit and pay to the mortgagor a penalty in a sum not exceeding the original loan amount." The court found that the borrower made a premature demand on the lender and therefore could not collect the penalty.

[188] Louisiana has no statute relating to loan payoffs, and the code acknowledges a contractual relationship only between the lender and the borrower. In Accent Title, LLC v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, 2015 WL 3862904 (M.D. La.) (unpublished), a title company sued a lender for refusing to release its lien on payment in full, and issuing subsequent payoff statements that demanded increased amounts of money. The court found the title company had no standing to bring that action. In Title Solution Services, Inc. v. Carrington Mortgage Services, LLC, 2019 WL 1469397 (E.D.La.) (unpublished), the facts were nearly identical to those in Accent Title. The title agent advanced $11,000 of its own money to the lender to get a release, after the lender issued a payoff statement after closing demanding a larger amount of money. The court said that the title company had standing to sue only because it had advanced its own money to the lender, distinguishing Accent Title. However, it also held that the amount advanced by the title agent was less than the $75,000 required for federal jurisdiction over the case.

[189] See, for example, California Civil Code §2941; Del. Code Ann. tit. 25, § 2120(a); and Texas Property Code § 12.017(c). The law, first adopted in Minnesota, became so popular that it spurred the Uniform Residential Mortgage Satisfaction Act, drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, which is discussed above, this section.

[190] See Cathay Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 46 Cal.App.4th 266, 53 Cal.Rptr.2d 595 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1996); SMS Financial XXIII, LLC v. Cornerstone Title Co., 19 Cal.App.5th 1092, 228 Cal.Rptr.3d 562 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2018)

Most cases hold that equity loan accounts are not considered closed, and post-closing advances obtain priority, unless there is some evidence that the borrower closed the account, or gave an implied instruction to that effect, as discussed further below. However, the escrowee's failure to observe reasonable terms concerning the manner prescribed by the lender for delivery of the payoff is a basis for the lender to reject a payoff.[191]

Most lenders take the position that payoff figures are not binding unless given in writing. However, lenders frequently amend written payoff statements orally. In Smith v. Woodwind Homes, Inc.,[192] the court allowed an action against a bank that issued an oral modification. The action was based on equitable estoppel, promissory estoppel and performance of an oral agreement. In Smith, the lender issued a payoff letter showing the full principal and interest due to satisfy the debt. The closing was short on proceeds. The loan officer allegedly told the escrow officer over the telephone that he would release the property from the mortgage on receipt of the net proceeds of sale. The money was sent with a mortgage satisfaction. The lender did not sign the satisfaction, but the bank's internal receipt was marked "loan payoff in full." Its ledger for the loan was changed to zero. About three months later, the bank had the borrower sign a new note for the balance of the debt. Only after that loan went into default did the bank bring a foreclosure action. The title agency was not allowed to sue the bank for negligent misrepresentation.[193]

(buyer of loan may sue title agency for wrongfully releasing deed of trust under lien release law); M & T Bank v. Mallinckrodt, 43 N.E.3d 1039, 2015 IL App (2d) 141233, 398 Ill.Dec. 129 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015) (certificate of release issued by insurer based on fake payoff letter and payment to wrong party, due to borrower's fraud); In re Allman, 2010 WL 3366405 (Bkcy.D.Or.) (unpublished) (lender bound by the lien release signed by the title company for line of credit loan because borrowers signed written instruction to freeze account, loan paid off in full and title company sent letters warning lender that it would use Oregon's release statute to release lien unless lender objected); American First Nat'l Bank v. Jordan-Lewis Development, L.P., 2011 WL 2732779 (Tex.App.-Houston (1 Dist.)) (unpublished) (Texas release law used to uphold release of deed of trust recorded by title company based on payoff letter issued by bank).

[191] See Hondroulis v. Homecomings Financial, Inc., 2007 WL 4482213 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), subs. order 2008 WL 312807 (M.D.Fla.), in which the court sanctioned the lender's rejection of a payoff wire transfer because the loan number was not contained in the reference line, even though a fax was sent to the lender at the same time attaching the payoff statement and giving the loan number. The court noted that the lender received 200 wires per day, and "could not definitively determine that the wire transfer and faxed information related to the same loan by simply comparing the faxed documents to the wire transfer." In Atlantic Nat’l Servicing Co., Inc. v. Anderson, 2007 WL 583329 (D. Utah) (unpublished), an offer to pay off a loan by check delivered in person, rather than by wire, was held insufficient when the payoff letter specified payment by wire transfer. The lender was held entitled to assess a substantial late-payment penalty.

[192] 605 N.W.2d 418 (Minn.App. 2000).

[193] The agency premised this proposed cause of action on Restatement (Second) of Torts § 552. The court said: "[a]n essential element of negligent misrepresentation is that the alleged misrepresenter owes a duty of care to the person to whom they are providing information. [citation omitted] A duty of care arises when one making representations is 'supplying information for the guidance of others in the course of a transaction in which one has a pecuniary interest, or in the course of one's business, profession or employment.' ... But, where 'adversarial parties negotiate at arm's length, there is no duty imposed such that a party could be liable for negligent misrepresentations.' ... Here, the bank was not supplying guidance or advice to CCTG; rather, it was engaged in an arm's-length commercial transaction. The bank and CCTG were negotiating the terms for closing on the sale of the home and repaying the outstanding construction

A lender may seek to disavow a payoff letter issued by a loan servicer, on the theory that it did not have authority to bind the lender. However, most loan servicing agents have the actual authority to issue payoff letters, receive payoffs and issue releases of the collateral.[194] In dealing with loan servicers, industry custom plays a role in determining the apparent authority of the servicer. Thus, when a lender appoints a servicing agent with authority to collect loan payoffs, an escrowee may deal with the servicing agent until it receives notice that the servicing contract has been terminated, or facts that put the escrowee on inquiry notice as to the agent's authority. When the servicing agent gives a payoff letter, and no notice of termination is given to the escrowee, the lender is obligated to discharge its mortgage lien on payment of the loan balance to the servicer, even if after the payoff letter is issued the servicing agreement has been revoked and the lender did not receive the funds.[195]

A lender may also assert lack of authority to bind as a defense to an incorrect payoff statement issued by the lender's attorney. An attorney may or may not have authority to bind the client to a payoff amount by issuing a payoff letter.[196]

When the parties rely on what is later proven to have been a fake or forged payoff letter, and absent a statute that identifies which party bears the burden of that type of fraud, this ancient equitable principle applies:

> Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by reason of the fraud or wrong conduct of another, the burden must fall upon him who put it in the power of the wrongdoer to commit the fraud or do the wrong.[197] mortgage and subcontractors' liens. Both parties were experienced at closing real-estate transactions and CCTG has not demonstrated any special relationship between them indicating they were anything other than sophisticated equals negotiating a business transaction. Thus, we conclude as a matter of law that CCTG has not demonstrated that the bank owed it a duty of care and CCTG's motion to amend its complaint to include a claim of negligent misrepresentation was properly denied."

---

[194] Jarvis v. K & E RE One, LLC, 390 S.W.3d 631 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2012) (loan broker who also acted as servicer had apparent authority to accept loan payoff money, and lien release was owed to borrower; decision contains scholarly discussion of the issue).

[195] Banco Santander Puerto Rico v. Select Title Service Inc., 692 So.2d 950 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 1997); Citywide Banks v. Armijo, 313 P.3d 647 (Colo.App. 2011).

[196] In Bacich v. Uzzell, 2000 WL 760440 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), an attorney was found to have authority to issue a payoff statement, but not to negotiate a reduction in the payoff amount. The lender clients were private individuals holding a purchase money mortgage rather than an institution, which the court considered a significant factor. In CHD, Inc. v. Taggart, 167 Wash.App. 1035, 2012 WL 1263501 (Wash.App. Div. 3) (unpublished), however, a lender gave its law firm authority to issue a payoff statement by escrowing the note and deed of trust with the firm, and was obligated to release the deed of trust on receipt of the amount recited in the payoff statement even if it was incorrect.

[197] M & T Bank v. Mallinckrodt, 43 N.E.3d 1039, 2015 IL App (2d) 141233, 398 Ill.Dec. 129 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015), quoting Connor v. Wahl, 330 Ill. 136, 146, 161 N.E. 306 (1928).

However, it is not always easy to determine which party gave the borrower the power to forge the payoff letter, and who should thus suffer the loss.[198]

The lender may also assert that terms for the lien release other than the dollar amount to be paid have not been met, and therefore the lien release is not owed. When the lender agrees to a short payoff, but conditioned on receipt of other collateral or valuable consideration, the failure to obtain and deliver the additional collateral may justify the lender in refusing to release the mortgage or deed of trust.[199] An escrowee may sue a lender for failing to honor its agreement to subordinate its lien to the mortgage held by the lender that is the escrow principal.[200]

A payoff statement must reflect only the debt legally owed by the borrower as of the date of the letter's issuance. A lender may not condition its release of collateral on payment of an additional sum designed to cover potential future litigation costs to the lender in defending itself in counterclaims by the borrower.[201]

Some payoff disputes occur because the payoff statement issued by the bank is as to a loan with the same borrower but not the one that is to be paid off at closing. The lender will in most cases be obligated to honor the payoff letter and release the lien if it made a mistake in issuing a payoff statement on the wrong loan, or the closer provided unambiguous information with the payoff

---

[198] In M & T Bank v. Mallinckrodt, 43 N.E.3d 1039, 2015 IL App (2d) 141233, 398 Ill.Dec. 129 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015), the borrower was the president of the mortgage banker that made the loan to himself as an individual. His company sold the loan to M & T Bank, which did not record a mortgage assignment but did register the loan in the MERS system. The borrower delivered the fake payoff letter on behalf of his mortgage banking company, which was the record holder of the mortgage. First American was the escrow company for the refinance lender, U.S. Bank. The title company issued a certificate of release after making the payoff. The appeals court said that, at trial, the judge would have to balance the actions of M & T in not giving public notice that it owned the loan with U.S. Bank's failure to check the MERS registry to verify that Mallinckrodt's company still held the loan, to decide which of them put Mallinckrodt in the position to work the fraud.

[199] In Alpha Title Agency, Inc. v. Peoples State Bank, 2004 WL 576663 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the lender agreed to discharge a mortgage on receipt of part of the money and a consent judgment for the balance. The lender was not required to issue the discharge on receipt of the money without the consent judgment.

[200] WFG Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Kavac Holding Company, LLC, 2019 WL 636722 (S.D.Tex. (Houston) 2019) (unpublished), recommendations adopted 2019 WL 632754 (S.D.Tex. (Houston) 2019) (permanent citation not yet available) (title insurer entitled to sue holder of blanket deed of trust based on oral promise to subordinate lien to subsequent construction deeds of trust on individual lots, and for other claims based on lender's actions seeking to wipe out lot buyer and lender).

[201] In Crown Bank v. Crowder Mortgage Corp., 5 P.3d 954 (Colo.App. 2000), the loan was in foreclosure and the lender was concerned about ongoing expenses if the lawsuit was not dismissed as part of the payoff. After reviewing Colorado's statute on payoff obligations, the court said: "We conclude that a lender cannot place conditions on its release of a deed of trust other than the satisfaction of the indebtedness secured by that deed of trust. This conclusion is consistent with the apparent purpose of the statute, which is to permit the owners of real property to obtain the release of liens by the payment of the full amount secured by the lien and thereby permit the owner to sell, pledge, or otherwise deal with the property free of the lien. If a lien holder were permitted further to condition the release of the lien, it could use that ability to coerce settlement of other disputes or accounts a result which the statute clearly intended to prevent."

indicating what loan was to be paid off and what lien was to be released.[202] However, if the person who ordered the payoff statement made a mistake as to which loan was to be paid off, the liability for the error will typically fall on that party.[203]

A lender that receives money with the instruction that it is to be used for the payoff of a mortgage loan is liable to the parties if it fails to properly apply the funds. In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Allfirst Bank,[204] a borrower was entrusted with two checks from closing, one to himself as the cash-out portion of the new loan and the other payable to his bank as the payoff of the existing line of credit. The borrower did not deliver the close-my-account letter to the bank. He asked the teller to deposit both checks in his personal account. The teller noted that the bank had several open loan accounts, one with a balance matching the check payable to the bank, and that a payoff letter had been issued a short time before. Nonetheless, she deposited the check in the borrower's personal account. The court held that the bank was obligated to release the mortgage, because the new lender relied on the bank to apply the check to pay off the loan.

On subdivision and other blanket mortgages, payoffs are often made based on partial release agreements made by lenders and borrowers. If the partial release agreement does not establish the price to be paid on each lot sale, that price may be determined based on the course of conduct.[205] The lender may keep bad records on such a loan, complicating the later determination of whether or not the lender was obligated to release a particular parcel. However, the lender is not entitled to a presumption that its money had been stolen before being paid based on the fact that it did not issue releases, had no record of receiving payment, and a person who performed some of the closings was later found to have stolen money from his escrow account.[206]

---

[202] In Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. F.D.I.C., 936 S.W.2d 266 (Tenn.App. 1996), the insurer-closer called for a payoff amount, giving the borrower's name and the address of the property. The lender gave a payoff figure for a different loan to the same borrower. That amount was sent to the lender after closing, with reference to the property on the check. The lender deposited the check, but the deed of trust was never released. Later, the lender was taken over by the F.D.I.C., which sought to foreclose. The court declared the deed of trust released, on the grounds that the lender was bound by its payoff figure. The court held that this was "a classic case for the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel." In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Cumberland County Bank, 633 F.Supp.2d 566 (M.D.Tenn. 2009), the lender that issued payoff letter covering only one loan and not both mortgage loans was not entitled to summary judgment on the misrepresentation claim brought by the insurer-closer, with the insurer contending that the bank "could have prevented the mistake in this case by following sound practices and employing a computer system that provided more than just partial information on its loans."

[203] In EvaBank v. Traditions Bank, 258 So.3d 1119 (Ala. 2018), a bank that issued a payoff letter for the wrong borrower was not required to release its mortgages on payment of the amount shown on the payoff letter, because the court held that the title company that requested the letter had a duty to notice the fact that the borrower and loan number listed on the letter were not correct.

[204] 394 Md. 270, 905 A.2d 366 (Md. 2006).

[205] Jim Carpenter Co. v. Potts, 495 S.E.2d 828 (Va. 1998).

[206] Knapp v. Smethurst, 139 Md.App. 676, 779 A.2d 970 (Md.App. 2001). As to the closer, Goldberg, the court said: "[m]ere surmise that these funds were among the monies stolen by Goldberg and LTR does not make it so." Rather, the court said the bank could not use its own bad records against the admittedly innocent purchasers: "[a]s a regulated

The payoff of revolving credit home equity loans creates special issues. A payoff of the full balance owing does not, by itself, close the loan account or instruct the lender to release the real estate. However, a court may find the lender obligated to release the mortgage even without conclusive evidence that a close-my-account letter was delivered.[207] The lender may be entitled to priority for advances made after the account was reduced to zero at closing, if the borrower does not close the account in writing.[208] Such a letter written by the escrowee may be sufficient, but only if the borrower authorized the closer to write on his or her behalf.[209] A closer may also assert equitable arguments including equitable subrogation, equitable estoppel, and unjust enrichment, if the evidence is reasonably clear that acceptance of the payoff check was conditioned on the closing of the account and release of the real estate. For example, a court noted favorably that the payoff check was marked "for mortgage payoff."[210] However, when the lender received adequate notice that the account was to be closed, and third parties relied on the payoff to prompt the satisfaction of the lien, financial institution, albeit an unsuccessful one, it is reasonable to infer that the Bank would not have ignored a failure by LTR to remit funds that the Bank anticipated with regard to a troubled loan. Moreover, the settlement statement of LTR shows that the net proceeds were to be paid to the Bank, and there is no correspondence from the Bank to LTR, subsequent to the settlement, inquiring about the proceeds. Because it is hard to conceive of how the Bank could forget to collect some $27,000 in loan proceeds, the plausible inference is that the monies were received."

---

[207] In *Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. E*Trade Bank*, 2018 WL 5023611 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the lender was required to reconvey the deed of trust when it received payment, because the deed of trust did not say that the release obligation was dependent on receipt of a close-my-account letter, nor do California Civil Code sections 2941 and 2943 condition release on receipt of such a letter. The court also held that the lender had the burden of proof to show that the letter signed by the borrowers had not been delivered to the lender. The court also tossed the lender's far-fetched argument that federal Truth In Lending law does not permit a lender to release a HELOC deed of trust on payment in full. However, the court said that California's law permitting a title insurer to release a deed of trust was a remedy available to the senior lender, and might prevent it from suing the HELOC lender for its failure to record a release.

[208] Bank of New York v. Fifth Third Bank of Central Ohio, 2002 WL 121925 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished); Dreibelbiss Title Co., Inc. v. Fifth Third Bank, 806 N.E.2d 345 (Ind.App. 2004), reh.den. July 2, 2004 (letter given to lender with payoff in full, but did not contain magic language "close my account," permitting lender to make additional advances with priority later); Washington Mutual Bank, F.A. v. ORNL Federal Credit Union, 300 S.W.3d 665 (Tenn.App. 2008) (reversing judgment against lender requiring it to release deed of trust without close-my-account letter because its payoff statement mistakenly did not include that requirement despite the bank's usual custom; court found that deed of trust itself stated that it would not be released until the borrower had requested that the line of credit be cancelled, and therefore lender that made payoff was on notice and not entitled to equitable estoppel).

[209] In Bank of New York v. Fifth Third Bank of Central Ohio, 2002 WL 121925 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the court did not reject the proxy argument, but said that there was no proof in the record on the issue: "Without a copy of the written escrow agreement, neither the trial court nor this Court can determine whether the parties in this matter intended Express Title Services to act as the Laymons' agent in requesting termination of the equity line account. Furthermore, … there is no indication in the record that appellee Fifth Third Bank knew … that the parties intended for Express Title Services to act as the Laymons' agent ... Express Title Services … never indicated that it was acting as the Laymons' agent in terminating the equity line account or that the Laymons wanted to close their equity line account."

[210] First American Title Ins. Co. v. TCF Bank, F.A., 286 Ill.App.3d 268, 676 N.E.2d 1003, 222 Ill.Dec. 39 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1997).

a lender is bound to release the mortgage even if it has made new advances to the borrower.[211]

Some courts have not obligated the lender to release an equity loans mortgage based on letters issued by the lender to the borrower stating that the equity loan has been paid off, and implying that the mortgage lien will be released. A letter from the bank to the borrower announcing that the loan was closed, and implying that it had been paid in full, was found not to be a payoff letter that obligated the lender to satisfy the mortgage. The letter was issued automatically, due to a software glitch, and the escrowee did not confirm the payoff with the lender.[212] Likewise, a letter that announced that the equity loan had been paid off was found by an Ohio court not to obligate the lender to release the mortgage, although the letter was faxed directly to the title company at its request. [213] Similarly, in California Nat'l Bank v. Havis,[214] a letter stating that "payoff funds" had been received did not obligate the lender to release its deed of trust, when the payoff check later bounced.

The payoff of loans in foreclosure also presents special problems and potential liability for the escrowee. When the property is being sold by the borrowers shortly before a scheduled foreclosure sale, the prompt and accurate payoff of the loan is imperative to call off the sheriff's or trustee's sale and thus avoid the possibility that a bidder at that sale will claim paramount title to the property. [215] When an escrowee is aware that a foreclosure sale has been scheduled, prudence dictates that the escrowee obtain clear instructions from the lender as to how the payoff is to be made, that those instructions be followed, and that the escrowee confirm after closing or break of [211] In In re Allman, 2010 WL 3366405 (Bkcy.D.Or.) (unpublished), the borrowers' written instruction before closing to freeze the account, followed by the payoff in full and two letters from the title insurer warning that it would use Oregon's release statute to release the lien unless the lender objected, formed a sufficient basis to find the lender bound by the lien release signed by the title company.

---

[212] Barrows v. Firstar Bank, 103 S.W.3d 386 (Mo.App. W.D. 2003).

[213] Sky Bank-Ohio Bank Region v. Sabbagh, 161 Ohio App.3d 133, 829 N.E.2d 743, 2005-Ohio-2517 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 2005). The letter issued by the lender was not an accident or part of an automatically-generated batch mailing, was faxed directly to the title agent at its request, and said "Sam Sabbagh loan was paid off on Feb. 25 99." This would seem to make a strong case for reliance. However, the court was swayed by a note in the title agent's file saying that the borrower wished to keep the line of credit open, and that the lender never directly committed to release the mortgage.

[214] 120 Cal.App.4th 1122, 16 Cal.Rptr.3d 245 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2004). In Havis, a lender issued a statutory payoff demand statement. A few days later, in advance of the closing of escrow that would have provided a legitimate payoff check, the borrowers delivered a check to the bank in the correct amount. The bank issued a letter saying: "[t]his letter is to verify that California National Bank received payoff funds for the above referenced loan on July 24, 2002, in the amount of $1,175,247.14. It is our policy to issue the Full Reconveyance, 10 days after receipt of the pay off check. Therefore, a Full Reconveyance will be sent to the County Recorders on or about August 5, 2002." The predictable occurred: the check was returned as NSF. The escrowee was tricked by the second letter into not paying off the loan at closing, however. The court ruled that the payoff receipt letter was conditioned on the clearing of the check, and that the lender was not obligated to release its deed of trust, because the parties did not reasonably rely on it.

[215] See Mathes v. Coast Cities Escrow, 2006 WL 122451 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), in which payment was received by the lender shortly after the sale was conducted, the bidder at sale was found to have the better claim to own the property, and the people who bought from the borrowers sued the escrowee for claimed negligence.

escrow that the foreclosure sale has been cancelled due to the payoff. The escrowee is not liable for the effect of a late payoff if it is not aware of the pending foreclosure sale, or is misinformed as to the sale date, however.[216]

Escrowees and title insurers sometimes fail to pay off loans because they are tricked into relying on mortgage releases that they later learn were forged by the borrower or someone acting on the borrower's behalf. A forged lien release or reconveyance is void, and is not binding on the lender unless there is strong evidence that the lender knew that third parties would rely on it, and the lender failed to take action to expunge the release.[217]

An insurer may seek reimbursement from a settlement attorney or agent who negligently fails to close an equity loan account and obtain a release of the real estate. One insurer was found to have waived its subrogation rights by giving a full release to the borrowers.[218] Another insurer was barred from suing the attorney by the statute of limitations.[219]

An escrowee may seek reimbursement from the borrower when the escrowee is forced to pay part of the loan debt from its own money in order to obtain a lien release. However, in one such case, because the insurer had issued a policy to the seller for a purchase-money mortgage, the court denied recovery against the seller on the premise that an insurer may not seek subrogation against its insured.[220] The result would presumably have been different if the insurer had premised its claim on unjust enrichment instead.

13.6 Duties Regarding Documents And Recordings

The escrowee may be liable if it fails to obtain a party's signature on an instrument, the

---

[216] Mathes v. Coast Cities Escrow, 2006 WL 122451 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee's potential liability for late payoff dependent on the facts known by the escrowee as to the impending foreclosure sale; case not ripe for summary judgment because its knowledge was disputed).

[217] In CitiMortgage, Inc. v. Porter, ___ So.3d ___, 2018 WL 6626609, 44 Fla.L. Weekly D16 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2018) (permanent citation not yet available), the court held that, because a forged mortgage release is void, a later lender did not automatically take priority over a mortgage released by a forged instrument. In De Hoog v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2019 WL 1856751 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), borrowers whose attorney recorded a fraudulent reconveyance of their deed of trust were not entitled to quiet title against the lender based on the notion that the lender was required to expunge the reconveyance within a certain period of time. In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Union Avenue Holding, LLC, 2019 WL 149534 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished), a title insurer that paid a claim based on a forged mortgage discharge received a $1.3 million judgment against the seller company and its two members, though neither member admitted the forgery.

[218] In Chemical Bank of N.J. v. Bailey, 296 N.J.Super. 515, 687 A.2d 316 (N.J.Super.A.D. 1997), a closing attorney paid off a revolving credit loan but did not obtain a release of the lien. The attorney was found negligent in failing to obtain a borrower instruction to close the account, or include the lender's fee for closing the account and release the lien. However, the insurer that paid off the loan to obtain a release of the lien was found not permitted to recover against the attorney because, in settling the dispute, the insurer gave a full release to the borrowers.

[219] Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Kurnos, 340 N.J. Super. 25, 773 A.2d 726 (N.J.Super.A.D. 2001).

[220] Castania v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of California, 200 Ga.App. 633, 409 S.E.2d 286 (Ga.App. 1991).

granting and recording of which is a condition to the escrow.[221] The escrowee is not obligated to personally witness the signing of all documents delivered into escrow, or to verify that signatures on documents signed outside of the escrow officer's presence are genuine.[222] However, when documents are signed before the escrow officer, the escrow officer must make a reasonable verification of the signing parties' identities, which standard of care is also set by or tied to state notary law if the signature is acknowledged by the escrow officer.[223] In the "witness closing" or mobile notary

---

[221] Sprague v. Chicago Title Co., 2009 WL 2960864 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (measure of damages payable by escrowee for failure to obtain and record easement was lost profit on sale that failed due to lack of easement grant).

[222] Reyes v. Stewart Title of California, 2011 WL 3305974 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished). The lender's settlement agent had no duty to the person whose identity was stolen to detect and stop the identity theft, or to verify the authenticity of the power of attorney given to the closer, in Iglesias v. Pentagon Title and Escrow, LLC, 206 Md.App. 624, 51 A.3d 51 (Md.App. 2012). In Tabatabai v. Emerald Estate Escrow, Inc., 2011 WL 4434926 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that an escrowee was not required to do detective work to uncover the fact that a power of attorney had been forged, when the document appeared to be regular and was presented in a routine manner. Similarly, in Mortensen v. First American Title Co., Inc., 2013 WL 1222566 (D. Idaho) (unpublished), an escrowee was found not to owe a duty to a woman who had given her husband a power of attorney to verify that she had authorized him to sign documents under that power, which was valid and had not been revoked. In Summit Diamond Bridge Lenders, LLC v. Philip R. Seaver Title Co., Inc., 2019 WL 4668596 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the escrow instructions stated that the original of a letter of credit was to be deposited with the escrowee. All of the parties later questioned the authenticity of the letter deposited with the escrow company but nonetheless authorized the escrow to close. The court held that the escrowee was not liable for proceeding with the escrow, when the letter of credit was later proven to be a forgery.

[223] In Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. United General Title Ins. Co., 109 A.D.3d 953, 972 N.Y.S.2d 296 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013), 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 05982, the court found that a lender had no cause of action against its closing agent for the fact that the loan was obtained by impersonation, when the closer accepted as identification from the impersonator a driver's license that was not an obvious fake. The court noted that Countrywide's closing instructions did not require the closer to verify the signer's identity. In Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc., 210 Cal.App.3d 915, 259 Cal.Rptr. 117 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1989), the court held that an escrowee has a duty to make a reasonable verification of identity, and thus refused to dismiss a complaint alleging that the escrowee failed in that duty by accepting a forged amendment to the escrow instructions. In Dushey v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Group, 2011 WL 2315168 (Wash.App. Div. 3) (unpublished), a Washington court ruled against a borrower who claimed her signature had been forged at closing because she failed to rebut the affidavit by the closer saying that she never lets loan documents leave the room and makes copies of driver's licenses as evidence that the borrowers attended closing and proved their identities. In Home Loan Center, Inc. v. Flanagan, 2012 WL 1108132 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court found that an escrowee has a duty to inform the lender of possible impersonation, when the person appearing before the closer looked nothing like the (genuine) driver's license presented for identification, and the loan closing instructions read: "[e]ach Borrower must sign all documents exactly as his or her name appears on the blank line provided for his or her signature." The escrowee proceeded with the loan closing without informing the lender of his suspicions about the man's identity. The court said that the closer "owed LendingTree a duty of ordinary care in supervising the closing and verifying identities and notifying LendingTree of circumstances indicating fraud." In Ultimate Title, LLC v. Ladd, 2018 WL 3388407 (Md.App.) (unpublished), a title company that closed a sale was liable to the purchaser because it failed to detect that the owner's son had impersonated the seller at closing, even though the settlement agent did make the impersonator produce a driver's license as proof of his identity. The court distinguished Iglesias v. Pentagon Title and Escrow, LLC, 206 Md.App. 624, 51 A.3d 51 (Md.App. 2012), discussed above, because in that case the settlement agent was found to have no obligation to independently verify the genuineness of signatures affixed outside her presence. However, in Atooi Aloha, LLC v. Gaurino, 2018 WL 650194 (D. Hawaii 2018) (unpublished), the court found that the escrowee had no duty to verify the authenticity of signatures, because the escrow instructions said that the escrowee had no duty to determine closing, an individual, who is akin to a sub-escrowee, has as his or her sole or primary duty to obtain signatures on the closing documents, often in the customer's home or office, as further described at §13.2. The witness closer assumes the standard of care of a closer or escrow officer who witnesses the signing of conveyance and closing documents.[224]

In escrow, the purchaser receives title when the conditions for close of escrow have occurred. The escrowee delivers the deed out of escrow, either to the grantee or to the recorder as instructed by the grantee.[225] The escrowee may not deliver a conveyance instrument from escrow to the grantee until the conditions of the escrow have been met. When the escrowee records a conveyance instrument before those conditions are met, or if they cannot be met, the deed is a nullity and may be voided, and the escrowee may be liable for violation of its instructions.[226]

An escrowee is liable to the principal if it violates an instruction to record a deposited instrument within a reasonable time after receipt of that instruction.[227] The escrowee does not breach

---

"the sufficiency or correctness as to form, manner of execution, or validity of any instrument deposited in this escrow," or to determine "the identity, authority or rights of any person executing the same."

[224] DiRenzo v. Katchen, 2017 WL 3255237 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished) (loan closer who signs HUD-1 settlement statement certification has legal duties to buyer that go beyond role of mere notary or witness, but he or she is not automatically a fiduciary and is required to perform only those duties that are found in the written loan closing instructions).

[225] See, for example, Flores Camac v. 550 Realty Heights, LLC, 130 A.D.3d 556, 14 N.Y.S.3d 51, 2015 N.Y. Slip Op. 05631 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2015), which stated the familiar principle that, "[w]hen a deed is delivered to be held in escrow, the actual transfer of the property does not occur until the condition of the escrow is satisfied and the deed is subsequently delivered to the grantee by the escrow agent," citing Scartozzi v. Scartozzi, 50 A.D.3d 662, 663, 856 N.Y.S.2d 154.

[226] In Osborn v. Osborn, 42 Cal.2d 358, 267 P.2d 333 (Cal. 1954), the court said: "Where a deed is placed in the hands of a third person, as an escrow, with an agreement between the grantor and grantee that it shall not be delivered to the grantee until he has complied with certain conditions, the grantee does not acquire any title to the land, nor is he entitled to a delivery of the deed until he has strictly complied with the conditions. If he does not comply with the conditions when required, or refuses to comply, the escrow-holder cannot make a valid delivery of the deed to him." Thus, if the escrow holder does deliver the deed before the buyer complies with the seller's instructions to the escrow, such purported delivery conveys no title to the buyer. See also Montgomery v. Bank of America, 85 Cal.App.2d 559, 193 P.2d 475 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1948); Laolagi v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2009 WL 2351607 (Cal.App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished); Miller & Starr, California Real Estate, §§ 8:36-8:42.

[227] Boatright v. Texas American Title Ins. Co., 790 S.W.2d 722 (Tex. 1990); Allen and Title Ins. and Trust Co. v. Webb, 87 Nev. 266, 485 P.2d 677 (1971); Bear Creek Planning Comm. v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 164 Cal.App.3d 1227, 211 Cal.Rptr. 172 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1985); Anderson v. Northwest Bonded Escrows, Inc., 4 Wash.App. 754, 484 P.2d 488 (1971); Harding v. Atlas Title Ins. Agency, Inc., 285 P.3d 1260, 2012 UT App 236 (Utah App. 2012) (recording of trust deed ten months late, which allowed two liens to be recorded in gap); Cruz v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 157 A.D.2d 333, 556 N.Y.S.2d 270 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1990) (no written escrow instructions; HUD-1 settlement statement describing mortgage as a "2ND MTG" considered instruction to record mortgage in second position); Choudhary v. First Option Title Agency, 107 A.D.3d 657, 967 N.Y.S.2d 86 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2013); In re Ocwen Financial Services, Inc., 649 N.W.2d 854, 2002 WL 1902578 (Minn.App. 2002). However, in OC Property Management, L.L.C. v. Gerner & Kearns Co., L.P.A., 2008 WL 4263563, 2008 Ohio 4709 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2008) (unpublished), no damage flowed from the failure to record a mortgage, because the unrecorded but valid mortgage was its escrow instructions by not recording an instrument if the escrow does not break, or the conditions for recording are not satisfied.[228]

The escrowee may be liable for its failure to deliver documents to the recorder in the order in which the escrowee has been instructed to record them,[229] or if it receives conflicting instructions about the recording order without clarifying the instructions to make them consistent.[230] Conversely, the escrowee is not liable if it records the instruments in the order as instructed, even if one of the principals later disagrees with the recording order.[231] The escrowee is also not responsible if the recorder mixes up the order of the documents after they have been delivered to the recorder. An escrowee is not responsible for recording the same instrument in two different counties, unless it receives explicit instructions to do so.[232] An escrowee is not liable for failing to record an instrument if the violation of that instruction does not cause harm, or the party claiming the negligent act was not the beneficiary of the recording instruction.[233] still enforceable by foreclosure against the borrowers. As between the parties, a conveyance is effective on delivery. In Chase Manhattan Mortgage Co. v. Lane, 2010 WL 2738266 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished), a title agent that lost a deed and deed of trust and did not solve the problem for years was found liable for actual and punitive damages. In Silver Spring Oasis, LLC v. Lawyers Title of Arizona, Inc., 2014 WL 47342 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished), the court held that the escrowee's sole duty, to person who was not a party to the escrow and who delivered a deed of trust into escrow for recording, was to record the instrument, which it did. However, in Donnell v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Agency of Nevada, Inc., 2012 WL 1669421 (D.Nev.) (unpublished), the escrowee was not liable to investors in a real estate fund for not recording an escrowed deed of trust, when the party who had given the escrow instructions, the manager of the fund, had instructed the escrowee not to record the instrument. In Muco v. Sadiku, 63 Misc.3d 1225(A), 2019 N.Y. Slip Op. 50709(U), 2019 WL 2064012 (Table) (Queens Cty.Sup.Ct.) (unpublished), a title agent that was allegedly instructed to record a parking easement may be liable to the buyer of the benefited parcel for not having recorded the instrument before the burdened property was sold, which rendered the easement ineffective.

---

[228] Spring Gardens Inc. v. Security Title Ins. Agency of Utah Inc., 2016 UT App 113, 374 P.3d 1073 (Utah App. 2016), cert.den. 384 P.3d 567, Utah, Sep. 14, 2016 (escrowee did not violate instruction to record a deed of trust on close of escrow because escrow never closed).

[229] Sanders v. Park Towne, Ltd., 2 Kan. 212, 596 P.2d 1233 (1979).

[230] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Funk, 2015 WL 1870287 (Del.Super. 2015) (unpublished), the instructions said that the sellers would receive a first priority purchase money mortgage. The buyers also agreed to give a first lien to a different party that funded part of the purchase price. The seller mortgage was declared to have priority. The escrowee paid the party that did not receive the first lien as promised, and had no recourse against the seller.

[231] Dalejo Farm, Inc. v. Approved Statewide Title Agency Corp., 2006-Ohio-6351, 2006 WL 3478346 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee not liable because two mortgages were recorded in correct order, per instructions which referred to them as "first" and "subordinate").

[232] In State Resources Corp. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 224 S.W.3d 39 (Mo.App. S.D. 2007), a deed of trust covered land in two counties, and title was searched by two different companies. An employee of one company attended closing, took possession of the single deed of trust that recited both parcels, and recorded it in one county. The company received no instruction to record in the other county. The court found that neither title company had such a duty.

[233] In Estate of Myrman v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2016 WL 3264120 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the borrower claimed that it was damaged by the title insurer's failure to immediately record a deed transferring title from a trustee to

The escrowee may also be liable if it fails to record the instrument altogether, contrary to a recording instruction.[234] Similarly, an escrowee may be liable for damage proximately caused by its unreasonable delay in delivering the instrument to the recorder,[235] but is not responsible for the

---

the individual borrowers, and also because it later recorded a copy of that deed. The court ruled that the insured deed of trust was not invalid because the deed was not recorded, because a conveyance is effective on delivery. Further, the title insurer's electronic recording of a copy of the deed did not violate its trusted-submitter agreement with the recorder or amount to the recording of a sham conveyance in violation of an Arizona statute. Further, the borrower's claim of negligence was really just posturing, since the borrower had committed to grant a valid deed of trust and the title insurer's actions did not harm the borrower. Finally, the title insurer was not serving as an escrowee, although its actions would not have violated any duty had it been the escrowee. Similarly, in East Coast Athletic Club, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 39 A.D.3d 461, 833 N.Y.S.2d 585, 2007 N.Y. Slip Op. 02878 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2007), the court held that a title insurer owed no duty to a borrower to record its mortgage, when the insurer's sole role was to issue a policy to the lender. In Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 186 Wash.2d 58, 375 P.3d 651 (Wash. 2016), the Washington Supreme Court resolved the question certified to it, ruling in a resounding and well-supported opinion that a title insurer does not owe a duty of care to the property owner in recording a lien instrument. Subsequently, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of the claims against the escrowee, in Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 668 Fed.Appx. 760, 2016 WL 4572391 (9th Cir. (Wash.) 2016) (unpublished). In Eagle Equity Fund, LLC v. TitleOne Corp., 161 Idaho 355, 386 P.3d 496 (Idaho 2016), the Idaho Supreme Court held that a junior deed of trust holder was not harmed by a title company's reconveyance of that security instrument, although the escrowee apparently violated its escrow instructions in recording the release, because the junior lien did not attach to any equity in the property. The land's value was less than the amount owed to the senior lender. The lender sued the escrowee under Idaho Code section 45-1205, which provides a cause of action for the negligent reconveyance of a deed of trust. In Hooper v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 7434789 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), reh.den. January 16, 2015, the court ruled that a title company's re-recording of a deed of trust containing a handwritten correction of the lot number did not work a fraud on the borrower or make the title company liable to the borrower. The court noted that the borrower intended to borrow the money, got the benefit of the loan, and that the lender could have imposed an equitable lien against the correct parcel if the borrower had disputed the validity of the deed of trust.

[234] Robinson v. Carney, 632 A.2d 106 (D.C.App. 1993). See also Crupi v. Newell and Talarico Title Agency, Inc., 14 Misc.3d 1225(A), 2007 WL 292296 (N.Y.Sup.), 2007 N.Y. Slip Op. 50171(U) (unpublished), in which a title agent failed to record a mortgage "spreader" agreement and the court found that there may be liability despite the fact that the agreement was not insured under the policy. Also, in 1st State Title v. LP Recordings LLC, 2015 WL 7750297 (Mich.App. 2015) (unpublished), a company that conducted title searches and recorded documents for another title company was found liable for having failed to record 31 of the 750 or so deeds it got, despite its argument that the other title company did not deliver enough money to pay all of the recording fees and transfer taxes owed.

[235] In Lawyers Title Co. of Houston v. Authur, 569 S.W.2d 578 (Tex. 1978), the failure to record a release of a mortgage for about a year was found a breach of duty, especially given the fact that the escrowee's senior officer assured the party that "everything necessary to the closing had been accomplished." The delay cost the party a premium for a bond that had to remain in place until the lien was removed. Similarly, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Pokraka, 595 N.E.2d 244 (Ind. 1992), the insurer-escrowee breached its duties by covenanting with the buyer not to record the seller's purchase-money mortgage for 90 days after closing. In the meantime, the purchaser obtained additional financing which primed the seller's mortgage. The court said the escrowee's actions were not malicious, however, and it struck an award of punitive damages. In Meerhoff v. Huntington Mortgage Co., 103 Ohio App.3d 164, 658 N.E.2d 1109 (Ohio App. 3 Dist. 1995), the escrowee took six days to record a deed and mortgage, which in some locales would be considered prompt. However, a divorce lien was recorded in the gap period. The court considered testimony that recordings are sometimes done immediately, and ruled the six-day delay to be negligence. It held that "reasonable minds could come to only one conclusion regarding appellant's duty and breach thereof." Id. at 1112. The failure to record promptly may create policy liability also. In Banco Popular De Puerto Rico v. First American Title Ins. Co., 1997 WL 586156 (D.C.

recorder's own delay in accepting the instrument or completing the recording process.

It is standard for a lender to instruct the escrowee to close only when it can assure the lender that its mortgage or deed of trust will be in first position. The largest risk in accepting this instruction is the possibility of a gap lien. The risk is greater still when the escrowee does not search and examine title itself. The first-lien instruction has been found to cause the escrowee to be liable nonetheless.[236]

The escrowee may be liable for damage caused by its failure to obey an instruction not to record an instrument.[237] An escrowee may mitigate damages by unwinding the transaction when it has recorded a deed by accident and contrary to instructions.[238]

When the escrow instructions premise recording or delivery of a conveyance on the happening of an event, the escrowee is authorized to record or deliver immediately on the occurrence of the triggering event, and if delivery is unconditional the escrowee may record on receipt.[239] The escrow parties do not have the right to prevent delivery of the documents for recording by giving a "contradicting instruction," unless the instructions so provide. Also, the escrow parties do not have a grace period for objecting to recording after the triggering event simply because the instructions do not state that time is of the essence.[240]

The escrowee has a duty of reasonable care to deliver as instructed those documents

---

Puerto Rico) (unpublished), an insurer was found liable on its policy for a judgment which obtained priority over the insured mortgage because of a delay in the recording of the mortgage by the insurer's agent-escrowee. One may presume that the insurer would not have considered itself obligated to issue the mortgage policy assuring priority, had its policy-issuing agent not agreed to record the instrument.

[236] In Old West Annuity and Life Ins. Co. v. Progressive Closing & Escrows, Inc., 2003 WL 21872555 (10th Cir.) (unpublished), the court ruled that "the risk of a competing lien was precisely the type of foreseeable event contemplated by the parties, and precisely why Old West instructed Progressive not to close or fund the loan unless Old West's loan would be recorded in a first lien position… ."

[237] Zang v. Northwestern Title Co., 135 Cal.App.3d 159, 185 Cal.Rptr. 176 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1982). In Alamo Lumber Co. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 439 S.W.2d 423 (Tex.App.Civ. 1969), the insurer-escrowee recorded releases of lumber company's liens, delivered in escrow, without authority and without having paid the lumber company the amounts instructed. The court held that the lumber company had the right to recover from the insurer-escrowee the damage proximately caused, except that it was found to have elected to ratify the unauthorized act.

[238] LaSalle National Bank v. Kissane, 163 Ill.App.3d 534, 114 Ill.Dec. 635, 516 N.E.2d 790 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1987).

[239] JYS Investments, L.L.C. v. Fisher, 2011 WL 2462568 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) (because discharge of mortgage to escrowee was not delivered with an instruction conditioning its recording on payoff of loan, escrowee did not err by failing to return the instrument to the lender); Stonich v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3906733 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (when an experienced real estate investor delivered reconveyance of junior deed of trust on his children's house, which they needed to refinance first loan, without any instruction to escrowee that recording was contingent on payment, escrowee was not required to pay investor before recording).

[240] Baiting Hollow Acquisitions, LLC v. Estates of Baiting Hollow, Inc., 266A.D.2d 490, 698 N.Y.S.2d 731, 1999 N.Y.Slip Op. 10006 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1999).

deposited into escrow that are not conveyance documents to be recorded.[241] The escrowee also has a duty to obtain a sufficient and enforceable instrument of the type that is described in the escrow instructions.[242] For example, when instructions called for deposit of an affidavit, it was a breach to accept an unsworn statement (which turned out to be a forgery).[243] The escrowee may not alter the instrument after it has been signed and deposited into escrow, without the permission of the parties.[244] The escrowee's acceptance of a deed of trust in which part of the subdivision name was missing from the legal description was found to be a breach of the instruction.[245] An escrowee was held liable to a title insurer for damage caused by its acceptance of a judgment release that was not effective.[246] However, the escrowee was not required to verify that consideration had been paid for a deed delivered to escrowee for recording.[247]

---

[241] In Lee v. Dublin Manor Corp., 2007 WL 2259190 (S.D. Ohio) (unpublished), the buyer sued the insurer, alleging that the escrowee title agent failed to deliver a promised final certificate of occupancy. The court assumed as true the allegation that the underwriter was liable for the title agent employee's closing acts because the decision was issued at the preliminary stage of a motion to dismiss.

[242] In Tison v. First American Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2775512 (W.D.Wash. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), an escrowee that served as closing agent for a loan prepared a deed conveying the property to the borrowers, but that deed was incomplete. The escrowee then had the borrowers sign a corrective deed, the sufficiency of which was later disputed. The court refused to grant the escrowee's motion to dismiss claims brought by the borrower's family alleging that the corrective deed was defective and failed to divest the grantors of their interest in the property.

[243] Common Wealth Ins. Systems, Inc. v. Kersten, 40 Cal.App.3d 1014, 115 Cal.Rptr. 653 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1974).

[244] In Yanez v. Kler, 2018 WL 4140947 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the escrowee altered a deed after the seller signed it to add a second parcel, albeit because the escrowee believed it was correcting an omission. The court found that the change created rather than fixed and error, and held that the deed was void as to the added parcel, and that a bona fide purchaser had no power to enforce the title conveyed. In Hancock v. Kulana Partners, LLC, 145 Hawai'i 374, 452 P.3d 371 (Hawaii 2019), the escrowee altered the deed after it was signed by the grantor without the grantor's permission. The state supreme court held that the grantor was entitled to assume that the deed would be recorded as signed, and held that the statute of limitations on the grantor's fraud claim against the escrowee began running when the grantor discovered the alteration.

[245] Marsh v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 57 Wash.App. 610, 789 P.2d 792 (Wash.App. 1990). However, such a breach must still cause damage. In Marsh, the deed of trust was rerecorded to correct the description, but the borrower filed bankruptcy within the preference period after the rerecording. The court held that the escrowee was not responsible for the claimed settlement damages. See §13.11 regarding escrow damages and §13.10 regarding the effect of bankruptcy.

[246] In Stewart Title Ins. Co. v. Equitable Land Service, Inc., 616 N.Y.S.2d 650 (A.D. 2 Dept. 1994), the agent marked a judgment "omit" at closing on receipt of a release which did not include the legal description of the insured property. After closing, the judgment creditor foreclosed and got a $120,000 judgment, which the agent's underwriter was forced to pay off. The underwriter sued the agent, and judgment in its favor was upheld on appeal.

[247] Pichon v. L.J. Broekemeier, Inc., 108 Idaho 846, 702 P.2d 884 (Idaho App. 1985).

Seeley v. Seymour[248] held that a title insurer that records an instrument as an accommodation may be liable to the owner if the document slanders title. The court said that, by recording the instrument, the insurer "gave the appearance that Safeco had given its imprimatur to the document." The court relied heavily on the fact that the insurer had special recording privileges in the county, and the manner of recording suggested that the instrument was being insured.

Seeley has been consistently distinguished rather than followed. It was distinguished in Luce v. State Title Agency, Inc.,[249] because in Luce the insurer-escrowee did not hold the quasi-governmental status of deputy recorder of deeds. Further, unlike Seeley the deed of trust was not void on its face. A District of Columbia court rejected a very similar argument that a title insurer had slandered title by recording a deed including the disputed land on a form with the title insurer's name on it, and by including the land in its title insurance policy. Other states' courts have also rejected the Seeley analysis as lacking any foundation in good public policy.[250] However, an Illinois court found that a title company slandered title by recording a deed signed by members of an LLC who did not have authority to convey the property.[251]

An escrowee that records an instrument as an accommodation to the party who seeks to have

---

[248] 190 Cal.App.3d 844, 237 Cal.Rptr. 282 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1987).

[249] 190 Ariz. 500, 950 P.2d 159 (Ariz.App.Div. 1 1997). The court said: "[a] title insurance policy, however, is not a representation that the title is in any particular condition, and, therefore, defendant Lawyers Title's name on the deed is only a reference to the presence of a contract between Lawyers Title and defendant Butcavage. The name of Lawyers Title did not communicate to a third party any type of falsehood because the only representation made by Lawyers Title was that they were insuring defendant Butcavage against a potential claim regarding the title."

[250] In Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 186 Wash.2d 58, 375 P.3d 651 (Wash. 2016), the Washington Supreme Court resolved the question certified to it, ruling in a resounding and well-supported opinion that a title insurer does not owe a duty of care to the property owner in recording a document. The court said: "[p]laintiffs urge us to hold that justice requires title insurance companies to look behind the signatures on the document and police the parties' agreements against conflicting corporate documents or loan agreements. This is not a just result, and placing this burden on title insurance companies increases their costs, slows the recording process, and frustrates public policy, with no appreciable benefit." The court presented a lengthy explanation of public policy and other arguments refuting the type of duty enunciated in Seeley. It relied heavily on the Arizona rationale in the Luce decision as a basis for rejecting the Seeley analysis. Further, it said that "the Seeley court expressly denied that it was recognizing a 'tort of "negligent slander of title"' or that liability arose 'solely from the recordation of the document.' 190 Cal.App.3d at 862 n. 8, 237 Cal.Rptr. 282." Subsequently, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of the claims against the escrowee, in Centurion Properties III, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 668 Fed.Appx. 760, 2016 WL 4572391 (9th Cir. (Wash.) 2016) (unpublished). See also, Parchment v. Universal Title, LLC, June 23, 2005, D.C. Sup.Ct. Case No. 05-CA-212 (2005); and Brown v. CMG Escrow Co., 2010 WL 93228 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), which dismissed a claim against an escrowee accusing it of slandering title by closing an escrow and recording a deed of trust based on what the borrower said were forged documents. The court said that the plaintiff's damages were the result of the perpetrator's fraud, not the actions of the title company.

[251] McClain v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1515263, 2015 IL App (1st) 133971-U (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2015) (unpublished). Unfortunately, because the title insurer was forced to appeal from the entry of a default judgment, the court and plaintiff were excused from addressing the merits of the claim.

it recorded undertakes a very limited role.[252] When an escrowee accepts an accommodation recording under oral instructions, the escrow principal must prove the exact instruction given in order to claim a breach of the instruction.[253] The escrowee does not assume a fiduciary duty by accepting the document for recording, and therefore does not undertake an implied duty to protect the escrow principal by assuring that the document is recorded in a particular order or priority position. In Culbertson v. Wigley Title Agency, Inc.,[254] the escrow principal handed the closer a mortgage for recording. It was not the first lien on the property. Years later, the principal sued the escrowee, claiming that the closer promised that he would have a first lien. The closer recalled only that he said the principal would have "a lien." The court found no fiduciary duty to assure that the principal would have the first lien on the property.

Perhaps in response to the onerous burden of the Seeley case, insurer-escrowees sometimes make it a policy not to perform accommodation recordings unless the requesting party releases the escrowee from liability or indemnifies the escrowee as to any claim regarding the recording. Such an indemnity and hold harmless agreement precludes recovery against the escrowee even as to a claim that the escrowee was negligent in failing to record the document promptly.[255]

A person who prepares or records a document is also not responsible in tort as if the person had damaged the property, trespassed, or stolen from it. Thus, in Barringer Land, Ltd. v.

---

[252] In Kipperman v. First American Title Co., 2015 WL 301730 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2015) (unpublished), a title insurer that was given a partial release of a deed of trust to be recorded as an accommodation was found not to be liable to the lender for the loss it claimed to have suffered due to an alteration to the legal description in the instrument that was allegedly made by the title company. The court held that, because the recording was done at no charge and strictly as an accommodation, First American did not have the duties of an escrowee in its handling of the instrument. Instead, its duty was limited to recording the instrument. The court said that the recording was done as an accommodation despite the fact that the instrument was not stamped as such, there was no accommodation recording exculpatory agreement, and First American had previously conducted an escrow for the third deed of trust when it was granted. The court noted that Dynamic's own witness admitted at trial that this was an accommodation recording, and that he gave the instrument to First American rather than record it himself simply because it was easier. All of these factors militated toward a finding of the narrowest possible legal duty.

[253] In Omega Healthcare Investors v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2003 WL 118006 (D.Mass. 2003) (unpublished), personal property financing statements were held under oral instructions. The escrowee claimed that it was told not to file; the law firm said it had instructed the escrowee to file. The financing statements were filed late, and set aside in bankruptcy. In the ensuing escrow lawsuit, the court dismissed a claim by the escrowee for indemnity, ruling that the filing was done "'[s]trictly as an accommodation, and without a signed escrow contract or any other agreement regarding further compensation... .' That, without more, does not show the requisite special relationship with Dykema to imply an obligation to indemnify First American."

[254] 2002 WL 219570 (Ohio App. 9 Dist.) (unpublished).

[255] Rooz v. Kimmel, 55 Cal.App.4th 573, 64 Cal.Rptr.2d 177 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1997). The Rooz court held that the factors considered in Tunkl v. Regents of Univ. of California, 60 Cal.2d 92, 383 P.2d 441 (1963) and Akin v. Business Title Corp., 264 Cal.App.2d 153, 70 Cal.Rptr. 287 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1968) which would void any attempted exculpatory clause in an escrow agreement, do not apply to all transactions conducted by title insurers. As to accommodation recordings, the court found there was no evidence that the conduct was "a service of great importance to the public," and the escrowee had no particular advantage in bargaining strength. Therefore, the exculpatory clause was enforceable.

Barringer,[256] the person who prepared and notarized a deed that allowed the illegal cutting of trees was found not liable for taking the trees, because he "did not engage in any acts of cutting, felling, destroying or removing trees."

Recording laws can present a threat to the efficacy of a recorded instrument. In Ohio, the law formerly required two witnesses on recorded documents, and deemed the conveyance void if the parties were unable to prove that the witnesses were present at signing. The law became popular with bankruptcy trustees, who used it to void mortgages.[257] The courts were openly skeptical about whether or not busy closing departments would send two witnesses to each home closing.[258] The equivocal testimony of the borrowers was found not sufficient to overturn the mortgage in one case.[259] The court seemed persuaded partly because the title agency had adopted a written two-witness rule before the time the mortgage was signed. The lack of a written rule, conversely, was considered probative in a case when the second witness also could not recall being in the home.[260] Rather than repeal the witness requirement, the state legislature adopted a revision which prohibits the impeachment of a witnessing of a facially valid mortgage except in cases of actual fraud, and declaring that a facially valid mortgage is constructive notice to all bona fide purchasers for value (including bankruptcy trustees).[261] The law became effective June 30, 1999. This law has been held not to be retroactive, however, so that it does not apply to mortgages executed before that date.[262]

Along with the responsibility for recording the documents on break of escrow, the escrowee is typically expected to determine the correct amount to be collected for the recording fees charged by the recorder. This seemingly minor task can be complicated when it is difficult to determine in advance of close of escrow the amount of the recording fees. Some escrowees collect a uniform recording fee that, when averaged over a number of transactions, equals the actual cost of recordings. Courts have permitted classes of borrowers to sue escrowees for allegedly failing to refund excess recording fees collected at closing.[263] However, the practice of charging a uniform

---

[256] 761 So.2d 720 (La.App. 1 Cir. 2000).

[257] See, for example, In re Williams, 240 B.R. 884, 35 Bkcy.Ct.Dec. 175 (Bkcy.N.D. Ohio 1999) and In re Krueger, 2000 WL 895601 (Bkcy.N.D. Ohio), disagreed with in In re Carpenter, 266 B.R. 671 (Bkcy.E.D.Tenn. 2001) and disagreement noted in In re Burns, 269 B.R. 20, 38 Bkcy.Ct.Dec. 164 (6th Cir. BAP (Ohio) 2001).

[258] See In re Krueger, 2000 WL 895601 (Bkcy.N.D. Ohio).

[259] In re Williams, 240 B.R. 884, 35 Bkcy.Ct.Dec. 175 (Bkcy.N.D. Ohio 1999).

[260] In re Krueger, 2000 WL 895601 (Bkcy.N.D. Ohio).

[261] Ohio Rev. Code § 5301.234.

[262] In re Williams, 240 B.R. 884, 35 Bkcy.Ct.Dec. 175, footnote 720.

[263] In Drozeck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 140 Ohio App.3d 816, 749 N.E.2d 775 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2000), on recons. 2001 WL 106652 (Ohio App. 8 Dist.), the plaintiff "contended that [the amount charged] exceeded the actual charge accessed [sic] by the county recorder to Lawyers Title and that over one million people also were similarly overcharged." The court refused to dismiss the plaintiff's breach of escrow cause of action. In CitiMortgage, Inc. v.

recording fee has been found not to be a violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act.[264]

Transfer or mortgage taxes are payable in many transactions. The parties must instruct the escrowee if they believe that the transfer or mortgage is exempt from taxation, and the parties must calculate and declare the value on which the tax is pad. An escrowee is not responsible for determining whether or not the parties may claim an exemption from a transfer tax, and is not liable to the parties for the amount of a tax they paid that arguably was not owed.[265]

13.7 Duties Regarding Drafting Of Instruments

When an escrowee prepares a conveyance or related instrument at the instruction of its principals, it has a duty to draft the instrument in compliance with a standard of care, which varies somewhat from state to state.[266] One Nevada case said that the escrowee's expertise in "the minutiae of real estate closings" gave it the knowledge of a lawyer, and some of the same professional responsibilities.[267] However, an escrowee is not a lawyer and does not owe the same standard of care to escrow parties as would an attorney.[268]

White, 435 P.3d 1184 (Table), 2019 WL 1213177 (Kan.App.) (unpublished), a Kansas appeals court held that a title agency violated the Kansas Consumer Protection Act by not refunding a four dollar overcharge for the recording of a mortgage. However, the court said that the title agent did not violate the law by charging a flat fee of $20 for overnight delivery service, although that fee was several dollars more than the actual delivery cost, because the agent filed its flat rate with the insurance department.

[264] See Freeman v. Quicken Loans, Inc., 132 S.Ct. 2034, 182 L.Ed.2d 955, 80 USLW 4395 (U.S. 2012); Echevarria v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 256 F.3d 623 (7th Cir. 2001); Krzalic v. Republic Title Co., 314 F.3d 875 (7th Cir. (Ill.) 2002); Boulware v. Crossland Mortgage Corp., 291 F.3d 261 (4th Cir. (Md.) 2002); Wesolowski v. Title Source, Inc., 608 Fed.Appx. 724, 2015 WL 1529841 (11th Cir. (Ga.) 2015) (unpublished); and Clements v. LSI Title Agency, Inc., 779 F.3d 1269 (11th Cir. (Ga.) 2015) regarding alleged mark-ups of settlement service provider charges and RESPA compliance. A complete discussion of RESPA is beyond the scope of this publication.

[265] In Bushman v. American Title Co. of Washtenaw, 101 F.Supp.3d 714 (E.D.Mich. 2015), the court dismissed a class action suit brought by home sellers against title companies, alleging that they owed the sellers money for not having claimed exemptions from transfer tax.

[266] In Marks v. Reliable Title Agency, Inc., 2012 WL 2522399, 2012 -Ohio- 3006 (Ohio App. 7 Dist.) (unpublished), Susan Marks bought a house in her name only. The title company hired to close the purchase money loan was asked to draft a deed vesting Susan only in title and a power of attorney from the husband to the wife. Richard Marks later sued the title company. The court found that it complied with its instructions by drafting the documents. The court said the escrowee did not owe Richard a fiduciary duty, and had no duty to make sure that he obtained an interest in the property. In Bates v. Chicago Title Co., 2013 WL 3753062 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), although the holder of a lien on the property was not a party to a loan escrow, the court refused to hold as a matter of law that the escrowee owed him no duty, because it drafted a new deed of trust for him to replace the old one, and the instrument the escrowee drafted was defective. In Gorsha v. Clark, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1071576 (S.D. Ohio 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the court held on a motion to dismiss that an attorney retained by a title company to draft a deed may be liable to the sellers for alleged malpractice, although the sellers did not retain the attorney directly and gave him no direct instructions.

[267] Allen and Title Ins. and Trust Co. v. Webb, 87 Nev. 266, 485 P.2d 677, 681 (1971).

[268] Hangman Ridge Training Stables, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 105 Wash.2d 778, 719 P.2d 531 (1986). See also

An escrowee may be liable for drafting an instrument that does not have the same terms as recited in the purchase agreement.[269] The escrowee has a duty to include in the instrument the terms as instructed by the principals, whether directly or by reasonable inference from the instructions.[270] The escrowee complies with its standard of care when it drafts or obtains an instrument that corresponds to at least the spirit of the instruction it receives.[271] An escrowee may be held liable for damage resulting from its failure to properly draw and record a deed of trust.[272] Similar liability attaches regarding drafting of a deed.[273] The escrowee that agrees to prepare a new legal description for use by the parties has a duty to draft the description with reasonable care.[274]

However, when an escrowee does not serve as drafter of the instrument, it is only required to obey instructions regarding documents to be assembled for recording. Thus, when an escrow was

---

Poferl v. National Title Co., 2001 WL 267464 (Minn.App.) (unpublished) (malpractice suit by lender against title agent for "drafting" usurious note and unauthorized practice of law barred because agent did not assume duties of attorney or practice law).

[269] In Askew v. Allstate Title & Abstract Co., 603 So.2d 29, 31 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1992), the escrowee drafted a mortgage back to the seller that contained a broader subordination clause than the purchase agreement described, which allowed the purchaser to immediately obtain other financing senior to the seller's mortgage. The court noted that the escrowee knew that the buyer would close on senior financing only hours after the purchase, thus immediately implementing the modified subordination clause. The court reversed a grant of summary judgment in favor of the escrowee, finding that it might be liable for failing to follow the terms of the purchase agreement.

[270] Edwards v. Stewart Title & Trust of Phoenix, Inc., 156 Ariz. 531, 753 P.2d 1187 (Ariz.App. 1988) (when instructions specified that conveyance would contain a reverter, escrowee-drafter had implied duty to include reverter in deed it was instructed to draft).

[271] Kirk Corp. v. First American Title Co., 220 Cal.App.3d 785, 270 Cal.Rptr. 24 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1990) (escrowee did not go beyond instructions by obtaining lease cancellation, when instructions required that lease be removed before close of escrow).

[272] Boatright v. Texas American Title Ins. Co., 790 S.W.2d 722 (Tex. 1990); Kish v. Bay Counties Title Ins. Co., 254 Cal.App. 725, 62 Cal.Rptr. 494 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1967).

[273] Ehmer v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 156 N.Y. 10, 50 N.E. 420 (1898). In Dixon v. Shirley, 558 S.W.2d 112 (Tex.App. 1977), the escrowee discovered that the land owned by the seller was not the same land described in the purchase agreement. The escrowee prepared the deed using the accurate description but did not inform the buyer of the issue. The escrowee was liable to the buyer due to the fact that the land conveyed seriously limited the buyer's intended use of the land.

[274] In Land Title of Central Florida, LLC v. Jimenez, 946 So.2d 90 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2006), 32 Fla. L. Weekly D145, the escrowee inserted the wrong legal description in the deed and mortgage. The purchase contract did not contain a legal description. The sellers owned two parcels, and the drafter used the description of the other seller parcel. See Brean v. North Campbell Professional Building, 26 Ariz.App. 381, 548 P.2d 1193 (Ariz.App. 1976). Executive Management, Ltd. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 963 P.2d 465 (Nev. 1998), concerned a case in which a deed containing a defective legal description was deposited into escrow just before the land was platted. Later, the plat and a replacement description were delivered to the escrowee. There was apparently no clear instruction with the plat to modify the legal description on the deed already in escrow to match the plat to be recorded. The court did not reach the merits of the plaintiff's assertion that the escrowee was negligent and perpetrated a fraud by failing to correct the description on the deed before recording it.

merely instructed to attach a legal description to a deed, it was under no duty to verify that the description was correct, and acted prudently in taking the description from the title evidence. [275]

An escrowee may not alter an instrument that it has drafted, after it has been signed and deposited, without both parties' consent.[276]

13.8 Duty To Close According To Purchase Agreement Terms

When an escrow involves the sale and purchase of real estate, it is common for the purchase agreement to serve as the escrow instructions or to incorporate escrow instructions by reference so that the two contracts become integrated.[277] The escrowee both may and should obey the terms of the purchase agreement unless the joint escrow instructions given by buyer and seller state otherwise.[278] With the exception of the purchase agreement, however, an escrowee does not receive its instructions from documents that are part of the transaction.[279] Also, a purchase agreement alone

---

[275] Holder-McDonald v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2006 WL 289396 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished).

[276] In Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 106 Cal.App.3d 365, 165 Cal.Rptr. 449 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1980), an escrowee discovered a mineral reservation after the deed of trust was signed. The reservation also was not shown on the title commitment. The escrowee did not have authority to merely add the reservation to the legal description later without giving notice to the purchaser-signer. In Carver v. RBS Citizens, N.A., 2019 WL 4733437 (Md.Sp.App.) (unpublished), a title insurer that added parcels to a deed of trust by rerecording it after closing was not liable to the borrowers on their claim of constructive fraud, because the insurer had no contractual relationship with the borrowers. The title insurer apparently also served as settlement agent.

[277] See Highbridge House Ogden LLC v. Highbridge Entities LLC, 155 A.D.3d 505, 64 N.Y.S.3d 32, 2017 N.Y. Slip Op. 08187 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2017), in which the escrow instructions were appended to the purchase agreement and a jury trial waiver in the escrow instructions was found to control the entire transaction.

[278] AD Group Southern & Ellsworth, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 1592784 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (escrowee correctly paid broker commission as called for in purchase agreement, which was deemed incorporated into the escrow instructions, and also correctly resisted contrary instruction of seller); Wiczer v. Wojciak, 30 N.E.3d 670, 391 Ill.Dec. 400, 2015 IL App (1st) 123753 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2015) (purchase agreement and not escrow instructions controlled the handling of money deposits when escrow instructions were not signed, even though the purchase agreement disagreed with the escrow instructions on who was to receive the money); Hodges v. First Texas Title Company, LLC, 2015 WL 5173527 (Tex.App.-Eastland 2015) (unpublished) (when purchase contract included both surface estate and mineral rights, and seller wanted to amend contract to reserve mineral rights but buyer refused, escrowee did not breach instructions by closing on purchase contract terms as agreed). In Michigan, an escrowee's duties are to obey escrow instructions and the terms of the purchase agreement related to the escrow. See Smith v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 177 Mich.App. 264, 440 N.W.2d 915 (1989); Hills of Lone Pine Ass'n v. Texel Land Co., 226 Mich.App. 120, 572 N.W.2d 256 (1997); Coran v. Century Title Agency, L.L.C., 2010 WL 4679498, 2010 Mich. App. LEXIS 2217 (Mich.App.) (unpublished).

[279] In Shine v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. of Houston, 1996 WL 134962 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished), writ den. Nov. 15, 1996, the husband owned the family residence in his name solely. His wife joined the loan application, which said that title would be held in both names. The husband never gave a deed. The wife sued the escrowee and lender, on the theory that the loan application was an instruction to prepare a deed. The court rejected this contention, noting: "Title companies are not agents for the parties to supervise transfer of title. ... We agree that the loan application submitted to Citicorp does not constitute an instruction to prepare certain documents which would be necessary for the residential refinancing transaction." Id. at 4.

does not serve as escrow instructions that dictate how deposited money is to be disbursed.[280]

The escrowee may be required to perform a range of tasks described in the purchase agreement and escrow instructions. The escrowee may be instructed to assure that homeowner's or casualty insurance is in force as of closing.[281] Also, the escrowee may have a duty to obtain and deliver reports and inspections.[282] Similarly, when the purchase contract called for the buyer to assume a 9.5% mortgage but the escrowee learned that the actual rate was about to escalate to 11%, a valid cause of action was found to exist against the escrowee for not informing the buyer of the rate hike.[283]

An escrow closes when the conditions to closing as stated in the purchase agreement and escrow instructions have been met.[284] An escrowee that has been instructed to close escrow when a title insurance policy will be issued in the state described in the instructions may not close escrow until it is satisfied that the insurer will issue the policy as specified.[285]

---

[280] In Shafron Enterprises Defined Benefit Pension Plan v. Midland Title Security Inc., 602 N.E.2d 253 (Ohio App. 1992), an escrowee that was given funds to disburse to the seller, but without any escrow instructions, had no duty to withhold funding because title was encumbered by an easement not permitted in the purchase agreement.

[281] The cases are not consistent. Compare Bigelow v. Crescent Title, L.L.C., 997 So.2d 83 (La.App. 4 Cir. 2008), writ den. 3 So.3d 488, 2009-0058 (La. Mar 06, 2009) (New Orleans title agent that failed to get assignment of flood insurance at closing liable for cost of building and contents destroyed in Hurricane Katrina shortly after closing); Bougere v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 2008 WL 4852286 (E.D.La.) (unpublished) (title company's failure to pay homeowner's insurance from refinance closing did not make the company liable for Katrina flood damage when the closing funds were wired the day Katrina made landfall and insurance was not placed); Helmer v. Empire Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 2009 WL 2356869 (E.D.La.) (unpublished) (title company closer had no duty to verify that homeowner's insurance was bound, was only responsible for sending premium check to insurer if so instructed).

[282] In Florida Southern Abstract & Title Co. v. Bjellos, 346 So.2d 635 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1977), when the purchase agreement called for a "negative termite inspection report," but the inspector found an active termite infestation, the escrowee was found to have a duty to inform the purchaser that the termite letter was not the negative report required by the purchase agreement. For a good discussion of this case and other Florida cases in this chapter, see Boyette, Title Insurance Liability Beyond the Policy, Florida Bar Journal, July/August, 1995, pp. 24-34.

[283] Sudberry v. Lowke, 403 So.2d 1117 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 1981).

[284] See Orlando Int'l Hotels, LLC v. Robert J. Guidry Investments, LLC (In re First Farmers Financial Litigation), 2017 WL 6026652 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished). In that case, the purchase contract required concurrent performance by buyer and seller as conditions to closing, but neither party performed its duties. The court held that neither party was entitled to sue the other for breach of contract. Instead, the contract was simply void and unenforceable by either side. The Orlando court relied on Pittman v. Canham, 3 Cal.Rptr.2d 340 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1992) for the principle of concurrent performance.

[285] In Donerail Corp. N.V. v. 405 Park LLC, 100 A.D.3d 131, 952 N.Y.S.2d 137, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 06767 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2012), a seller who arranged for the defeasance of a mortgage loan that could not be prepaid and the issuance of an owner's policy free of exception for the lien complied with the purchase agreement, which required that all non-permitted liens be paid or discharged. The escrowee was not at fault for being prepared to close the transaction. Instead, the buyer breached the contract by refusing to close. In Perry v. First American Title Co., 2018 WL 4959354 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), when the instructions said that escrow could not close until a lien and lis pendens had

The escrowee is not responsible for causing the escrow principals to fulfill their obligations to bring the escrow to a close.[286] The escrowee is not charged with making the transaction happen or causing any of the principals to perform their contractual obligations, including to command them to make the deposits into escrow that are contemplated by the instructions.[287]

Also, the escrowee may not be required to perform a principal's contractual obligations when that party fails to do so.[288] When a seller-builder failed to provide a home warranty, the buyer had no right to demand that the escrowee get such a warranty simply because it had disbursed according to a closing statement showing the warranty as a seller charge.[289] Similarly, an instruction to "secure" a note as a deposit into escrow did not carry with it an implied duty to verify that the instrument had not been forged.[290] been released of record, the escrowee correctly refused to obey the direction of the seller to close escrow based on the theory that the matters had been extinguished by passage of time.

---

[286] Bridges v. Security Title Agency, Inc., 2011 WL 2174944 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (escrowee not liable to buyers for seller's failure to deliver deed into escrow). See further citations concerning the fact that an escrowee has no duty to police the transaction for the benefit of the parties, in §13.3.

[287] Clarkston Holdings, Ltd. v. Avington Park Condominium Ass'n, Inc., 2013 WL 2420973 (Mich.App. 2013) (unpublished) (provision of Michigan's condominium statute that says a developer shall deposit money with an escrowee for construction of must-be-built improvements does not impose duty on title company to make developer deposit that money); Capcor at KirbyMain, L.L.C. v. Moody Nat'l Kirby Houston S, L.L.C., 509 S.W.3d 379 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014) (escrow officer did not interfere with buyer's performance under purchase contract by informing him on day before closing that he must make wire transfer, which he said he could not do in time to close escrow); Jafari v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 2 F.Supp.3d 1125 (S.D.Cal. 2014) (FDIC as receiver for failed bank had no claim against escrow company for failing to make sure that borrower met the terms of short sale release agreement that went beyond mere delivery of agreed-on sum).

[288] The purchaser had no claim against the escrowee when the contract fell through because an option was not prepared or delivered to the seller for signature, although the buyer issued a letter to the escrowee attempting to pass off the duty to prepare that agreement. Bowles v. Key Title Co., 163 Or.App. 9, 986 P.2d 1236 (Or.App. 1999).

[289] In Dickerson v. Trinity-Western Title Co., 985 S.W.2d 687 (Tex.App.-Ft. Worth 1999), the settlement statement included a disbursement for a home warranty which the seller had contracted to provide. The warranty was not delivered at closing, so the escrowee withheld the $600 premium from the seller. The buyer sued the escrowee, claiming that it had misrepresented something. The court found that the only "representation" was the line item on the settlement statement. The court saw the claim for what it was: "the allegations effectively seek to transfer, from the builder to [the escrowee], the contractual responsibility to furnish a home warranty." The escrow agreement stated that the escrowee was not responsible for the parties' performance of the building contract, however. The court awarded attorney fees to the escrowee because the escrow agreement said the escrowee would be reimbursed if it was "a prevailing party in any legal proceeding brought under or with relation to" the contract. See also, James v. Shavon Ltd., 2012 WL 6029813 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished) ("Western Title was the escrow agent; it was not responsible for James's or Shavon's performance or nonperformance of the sales contract").

[290] Humphreys v. Northwestern Title Co., 2002 WL 475217 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished) (distinguishing Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc., 210 Cal.App.3d 915, 259 Cal.Rptr. 117 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1989), which found a cause of action against the escrowee for accepting a forged amendment to the escrow instructions. Humphreys is limited in its holding because the party asserting the claim against the escrowee was not a principal, and the court found that the escrowee

13.9 Statements And Representations By Escrowee

Standards that impose a duty to disclose information run contrary to the cardinal rule that an escrowee's duties are no more or less than as stated in the agreement. A typical statement of the escrowee's duties is:

> A depository [escrowee] must be guided in carrying out its duty by what the contract says, for the agreement for escrow with its instructions constitutes the full measure of the duties and obligations assumed by the depository.[291]

Further, the traditional rule is that the paramount obligation of the escrowee is to remain neutral in the transaction. Favoritism to one party is breach of a duty to the other. The Oregon Appeals Court confirmed this view in one case:

> ... [A]ny duty that the escrow agent owed the plaintiffs "cannot be based upon defendant's role as an escrow agent or as a provider of title insurance. An escrow holder, by definition, is a neutral party with no obligation to either party to the transaction except to carry out the terms of the escrow instructions. '*They owe no duty to advise the parties of their legal rights * * * [and t]hey have no reason to protect the rights of any one party against another.*'"[292]

Thus, disclosure of information to one party that influences that party's conduct toward the other party to the escrow would be breach. The underlying rationale of this view is that the escrowee has no right, much less duty, to interfere in the business transaction in order to protect one party from the other.[293]

However, in other states, there is an affirmative duty incumbent on the escrowee to tell an escrow principal information about the state of title that, if withheld, would cause the party to suffer loss. Some states have adopted the view that the title insurer/escrowee is a "nongratuitous provider of information" as defined in Section 552 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts.[294] Under this owed no duty to that party.

---

[291] Osborn v. Grego, 596 P.2d 1233, 1237 (Kan. 1979) (citing Lewis v. Shawnee State Bank, 226 Kan. 41, 596 P.2d 116 (1979)).

[292] Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 132 Or.App. 271, 888 P.2d 83, 88 (Or.App. 1995) (emphasis in original), citing Barr v. Pratt, 105 Or.App. 220, 224, 804 P.2d 496 (1991); State Bar v. Security Escrow, Inc., 233 Or. 80, 82, 377 P.2d 334 (1962); and McDonald v. Title Ins. Co., 49 Or.App. 1055, 1059, 621 P.2d 654 (1980).

[293] In Gurley v. Bank of Huntsville, 349 So.2d 43 (Ala. 1977), a non-title case, a bank escrowee was not obligated to disclose the terms of its loan agreement which was closely related to an escrow in which it acted as escrowee. The court held: "[t]here is no duty to disclose information received by an escrow agent unless such a duty is required by the terms of the agreement." Id. at 45.

[294] Comment D of §552 states: "The fact that the information is given in the court of the defendant's business, analysis,

> although an escrow holder owes no duty to advise the parties on their legal rights and ... is not required to protect the rights of any one party as against another, it can assume a duty to exercise due care when it volunteers advice.[295]

Under the Restatement Section 552 rationale, then, the escrowee is held to assume a duty to use due care in communicating information to the escrow parties. Section 552 provides, in pertinent part:

> (1) One who, in the course of his business, profession or employment, or in any other transaction in which he has a pecuniary interest, supplies false information for the guidance of others in their business transactions, is subject to liability for pecuniary loss caused to them by their justifiable reliance upon the information, if he fails to exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information.
>
> (2) Except as stated in Subsection (3), the liability stated in Subsection (1) is limited to loss suffered
>
> (a) by the person or one of a limited group of persons for whose benefit and guidance he intends to supply the information or knows that the recipient intends to supply it; and
>
> (b) through reliance upon it in a transaction that he intends the information to influence or knows that the recipient so intends or in a substantially similar transaction ... .[296]

---

profession or employment is a sufficient indication that he has a pecuniary interest in it, even though he receives no consideration for it at the time. It is not, however, conclusive. But when one who is engaged in a business or profession steps entirely outside of it, as when an attorney gives a casual and offhand opinion on a point of law to a friend who he meets on the street, or what is commonly called a 'curbstone opinion,' it is not to be regarded as given in the course of his business or profession; and since he has no other interest in it, it is considered purely gratuitous."

[295] Lindstrand v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 127 Or.App. 693, 874 P.2d 82, 84 (Or.App. 1994) [citing McDonald v. Title Ins. Co., 49 Or.App. 1055, 621 P.2d 654 (1980)].

[296] Adopted in Mur-Ray Management Corp. v. Founders Title Co., 169 Ariz. 417, 819 P.2d 1003 (Ariz.App. 1991). Section 552 was also accepted as a basis for liability of a title insurer whose marketing employee wrote reference letters on behalf of a lender customer. It was alleged that the reference letters induced a borrower to choose the lender, causing harm when the lender was unable to close the loan. The insurer argued that it was not in the business of supplying reference letters. The court replied: "Plaintiffs have offered evidence that sales representatives at Fidelity considered it a part of their jobs to give these reference letters. … Comment (d) to section 552 explains that '[t]he fact that the information is given in the course of the defendant's business, profession or employment is a sufficient indication that he has a pecuniary interest in it, even though he receives no consideration for it at the time.' Additionally, … Plaintiffs offer testimony from Lunde in which he admitted that one of his purposes in sending out the AMI referral letters was to 'try and get some initial business' for Fidelity out of the transaction if the borrowers ultimately chose AMI as their back-end lender. … This is sufficient to constitute a pecuniary interest in the transaction under section 552. Comment (d) to section 552 provides that 'defendant's pecuniary interest in supplying the information will normally lie in a consideration … paid in a transaction in the course of and as a part of which it is supplied. It may, however, be of a more indirect character. Thus … an agent who expects to receive a commission on a sale may have such an interest in it although he sells nothing.'" Mid States Development, L.L.C. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2001 WL 1172215 (N.D.Tex. 2001) (unpublished).

See §16.7 regarding the assertion of a duty under Section 552 to create a standard of care for abstractor liability in the issuance of the commitment to insure.

A second basis on which an escrow party may assert escrowee liability is a consumer protection statute. The escrow principal may assert that the escrowee engaged in an unfair or deceptive act by failing to accurately disclose information. This theory was advanced in Hangman Ridge Training Stables, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co.,[297] in which the lender required that the borrower transfer the property to be given as security from their corporation to themselves individually, which created a tax liability. The borrowers sued the escrowee, claiming that the escrowee had a duty to warn them of this tax consequence. The court found that the necessary elements for a private suit under the Washington Consumer Protection Act were not met.

Most claims asserting that an escrowee had a duty to disclose fall under three categories:

1. Information about the state of title;

2. Advice about the legal effect of a closing document; and

3. Facts that suggest fraud or that a party has made a bad bargain.

These subjects are discussed below.

13.9.1 Information About The State Of Title

Generally, the escrowee has no duty to search title or to inform the parties to the escrow of facts or information about the state of title.[298] When the escrow instructions create any such duty, the escrowee will have a duty to disclose only those matters of which it is presently aware at the time of the escrow and which the escrow officer would reasonably believe to have a material effect on the [297] 105 Wash.2d 778, 719 P.2d 531 (1986).

[298] Tamburine v. Center Savings Ass'n, 583 S.W.2d 942 (Tex.App. 1979); Axley v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 88 Cal.App.3d 1, 151 Cal.Rptr. 570 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1978); Hobaica v. Seypet Resorts, LLC, 2012 WL 6675129 (C.D.Cal.) (unpublished) (American escrow depositors had no claim against insurer-escrowee for its alleged lack of authority to issue policy in Mexico because they were not insureds); Touch Stone AZ-Central Properties, L.L.C. v. Title Management Agency of Arizona, L.L.C., 2014 WL 1778356 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished) ("the fact that Title Management knew that the parties intended a lien-free transfer did not transform Title Management from an escrow agent into a title investigator, guarantor, or insurer" and escrow duties were satisfied when escrowee obtained insurer's agreement to remove exception for deed of trust, not to verify that loan was in fact paid off); K Corp. Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Financial, Inc., 2015 WL 3755339 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to examine title independently to determine if vesting of title shown in title report was accurate); Eleazer v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 1137215 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no duty to search title or to disclose information about recorded instruments; escrow instructions contained specific exculpation of any such duty); 1500 Viewsite Terrace, LLC v. Pickford Escrow, Inc., 2017 WL 4309755 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee owed no duty to search title and assumed no separate contractual duty to search title or disclose liens and encumbrances to buyers; title waiver enforced).

escrow transaction.[299] The insurer-escrowee's duty to disclose is limited to that information "acquired in the course of its agency with respect to matters pertaining thereto."[300] The escrowee has no duty to disclose information about the state of title that it learned other than in the course of that escrow.[301]

The insurer-escrowee may be required to advise the escrow party about the state of title in response to a direct inquiry, or when the circumstances are such that the failure to speak may allow the other party to provide false information.[302] Also, an insurer-escrowee was liable for not informing the purchaser that title had numerous liens and clouds on it, when specifically asked what was holding up the closing of the transaction. The jury found that the failure to give available information on specific inquiry allowed the seller to lie, and induced the buyer to assume that the transaction would eventually close.[303]

When an escrowee makes an incorrect statement about the status of title, and the insured reasonably relies on the statement to his or her harm, the escrowee may be liable to the escrow principal for damage suffered as a result.[304] Opinions offered with the sincere conviction that they are true, and which opinions are in fact reasonable, may or may not make the escrowee liable to the [299] Cano v. Lovato, 105 N.M. 522, 734 P.2d 762 (N.M.App. 1986) (escrowee had duty to tell party of pending tax sale that could and did extinguish title). In Charles v. Florida Foreclosure Placement Center, Inc., 988 So.2d 1157 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2008), the court held that an elderly lady who claimed she was tricked into deeding her house away in a foreclosure rescue sale stated a valid cause of action against the title company closer for failing to explain the nature of the transaction, making this distinction: "[w]hile it is clear that Quantum had no duty to explain the legal ramifications of these documents, it did have an obligation to at least identify them," meaning that it should have explained that the woman was signing a deed. However, in Hilton v. Washington Mutual Bank, 2009 WL 3485953 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the borrower had not pled a valid cause of action based on breach of fiduciary duty or other claims simply by alleging that the closer rushed him through the signing of into signing loan documents that, he claimed, were predatory in nature.

---

[300] Spaziani v. Millar, 215 Cal.App.2d 667, 30 Cal.Rptr. 658 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1963), quoted in Cano v. Lovato, 105 N.M. 522, 734 P.2d 762 (N.M.App. 1986). Spaziani was cited with approval in Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 73 Cal.App.4th 668, 86 Cal.Rptr.2d 490 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1999), which held that an escrowee had no duty to tell the buyer that the trust agreement obligated the seller trustee to obtain consents from the beneficiaries to a sale of the property. The court held that, even if a disclosure duty existed, it could not be asserted by the successor trustee, since he was not a party to the escrow.

[301] Tamburine v. Center Savings Ass'n, 583 S.W.2d 942 (Tex.App. 1979).

[302] In Kraft v. Bartholomew, 620 P.2d 755 (Hawaii App. 1980), the court denied a motion for directed verdict in favor of an escrowee that knew of a title defect and that the seller was misleading the buyer about it, and the buyer asked the escrowee what the problem was.

[303] Kraft v. Bartholomew, 620 P.2d 755 (Hawaii App. 1980).

[304] In Abdel-Fattah v. Community Bank of Brockton, 2007 WL 2705751 (Mass.Super.) (unpublished), an attorney who closed a mortgage loan and certified title to his client, the lender, was not entitled to summary judgment dismissing the claim of the buyer-borrower that the attorney had incorrectly informed the buyer that a missing one-quarter interest in the property had been cured.

party, but do not support a fraud or intentional misrepresentation claim.[305]

An escrowee may have a duty to disclose to an escrow party a survey that is in the escrow file that discloses material defects or encumbrances on the property or its title. An escrowee was found to have a duty to present the buyer with a survey in the escrowee's possession that identified several encroachments that were later alleged to have prevented the insured from selling or refinancing. The buyer argued that it might not have bought had it known what the escrowee knew at closing.[306] An insurer was not entitled to summary judgment when the insured alleged that the insurer had a survey in its possession at closing which disclosed significant encroachments, but the escrowee did not disclose that fact to the buyer.[307] However, the escrowee does not vouch for the accuracy of a survey merely by delivering it to a party through escrow.[308]

However, an escrow officer's statements are merely that. A statement by an escrow officer that a certain unrecorded access easement did not exist, although subject to dispute, was protected from the claim that it slandered title, because the title company anticipated litigation about the issue.[309]

The escrowee also has no duty to search title or have it searched by another.[310] The escrowee is not obligated to secure or procure title insurance on behalf of the principal, absent a specific instruction to that effect and proof that the escrow principal took all steps necessary to obtain such insurance.[311] An escrowee is not required to inform a borrower that an owner's policy will not be [305] In Perry v. Stewart Title Co., 756 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1985), an escrow officer announced at closing that "a survey had been conducted, [and] that it revealed no problems." A one-foot encroachment of the garage and driveway onto an easement appeared on the survey when it was delivered, however. The court found that the escrowee negligently made a false statement, although it found no evidence of fraudulent intent. In McColgan v. Brewer, 112 A.D.3d 1191, 977 N.Y.S.2d 790, 2013 N.Y. Slip Op. 08492 (N.Y.A.D. 3 Dept. 2013), leave to appeal denied 2014 WL 7152321 Dec. 17, 2014, the court held that a buyer could not maintain a fraud claim against an insurer for the statements of a title examiner employed by a title agent that he believed an easement benefited the parcel to be insured, when all of the parties who reviewed it, including an attorney, agreed with the title examiner.

---

[306] Daniel v. Coastal Bonded Title Co., 539 So.2d 567 (Fla.App. 1989). The insurer-escrowee did not use the survey to give the owner survey coverage, and the court agreed that there was no basis for a claim on the policy.

[307] The court agreed with the insurer that it had a right to make exception for the encroachments on the policy, and there was no policy coverage for same. Daniel v. Coastal Bonded Title Co., 539 So.2d 567 (Fla.App. 1989).

[308] Miller v. LandAmerica Lawyers Title of El Paso, 362 S.W.3d 842 (Tex.App.-El Paso 2012).

[309] M & H Glass Enterprises v. Tischler, 2006 WL 1010470 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished).

[310] Axley v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 88 Cal.App.3d 1, 151 Cal.Rptr. 570 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1978).

[311] Van de Bovenkamp v. United Title Co., 2006 WL 3530473 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished). The court found that no such duty was created by Civil Code § 1057.6, enacted in 1992, which requires a written caution to be given to real estate purchasers stating that "it may be advisable to obtain title insurance in connection with the close of escrow since there may be prior recorded liens and encumbrances...."

issued in connection with a loan transaction.[312] When a purchaser elects to pay all or part of the purchase price outside of closing and in advance of obtaining title evidence, the escrowee-insurer does not have a special duty to warn the party at the earliest possible moment that title is defective, in order to avert loss to the party.[313] The escrowee's limited agency for a seller does not make it liable for a seller's contractual duty to disclose the condition of title.[314]

The insurer-escrowee has no duty to disclose information about matters that do not affect title. For example, the insurer-escrowee had no obligation to tell a buyer that property was located in a district in which a utility had the right to assess the property for converting to underground utility service, when no lien existed on the day escrow closed.[315]

If an escrowee relays information about title obtained from a third party that turns out to be inaccurate, the escrowee is not responsible for the inaccuracy.[316] This is especially true when the escrowee disclosed in writing that the tax information being provided was an estimate, and the escrowee was not liable for any incorrectness in the information.[317]

An escrowee may specifically contract to inform an escrow party about certain conditions to title. Failure to advise the party of such title matters in the face of such direction is a breach of instruction. Thus, when the escrow specifically required the escrowee to obtain and review title information, and inform the principal of any restriction which would be violated by the principal's

---

[312] Shine v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. of Houston, 1996 WL 134962 (Tex.App.-San Antonio) (unpublished). The court noted: "[t]he Settlement Statement signed by plaintiff and her husband clearly shows that she instructed Commonwealth not to disburse funds for an owner's policy but only for the lender Citicorp's coverage." Id. at *4. Similarly, in Bancoklahoma Mortgage Corp. v. Capital Title Co., Inc., 194 F.3d 1089 (10th Cir. (Okla.) 1999), the court found that borrowers did not have a right to assume that they were getting title insurance in connection with refinance loans. To the contrary, the lender gave "a HUD booklet entitled, 'Your Guide to Settlement Costs' to the homeowners. ... The information provided in this booklet advised the homeowners that a title insurance policy issued only to the lender would not protect them. ... It further advised that if the homeowners wanted to protect themselves, they would need to purchase an owner's policy." The affidavits of title provided to the title insurer from closing did not promise insurance. Finally, "'insurance agents in Missouri have no general duty to advise potential customers of optional coverages that may be available.'" Farmers Ins. Co. v. McCarthy, 871 S.W.2d 82, 86 (Mo.App. 1994). Thus, the Title Companies had no obligation to inform the homeowners about a title insurance policy that would protect their interests."

[313] Taggart v. Nevada Title Guaranty Co., 76 Nev. 46, 348 P.2d 749 (1960).

[314] Burman v. Richmond Homes Ltd., 821 P.2d 913 (Colo.App. 1991); Rockville Tudor Apartment Corp. v. Bodner, 1997 WL 34847566, Sept. 18, 1996 New York Law J. 25 (N.Y.Sup.) (Trial Order).

[315] Wallace v. Dave Hansen Construction Co., Inc., 593 P.2d 307 (Ariz.App. 1979).

[316] Wallace v. Dave Hansen Construction Co., Inc., 593 P.2d 307 (Ariz.App. 1979).

[317] Wallace v. Dave Hansen Construction Co., Inc., 593 P.2d 307 (Ariz.App. 1979). Similarly, when a tax pro-ration was made based on the seller's tax statement, which was inaccurate because the seller qualified for an over-65 exemption but the buyer did not, the insurer/escrowee was not liable for the difference in tax amount. The source of injury to the buyer, if any, was the taxing authority's determination, not the insurer/escrowee's pro-ration. Clayton v. Norwest Mortgage, Inc., 1997 WL 724944 (Tex.App.-Houston [1 Dist.]) (unpublished); Title Agency of Texas v. Arellano, 835 S.W.2d 750 (Tex.App.-Houston [14th Dist.] 1992), writ den.

intended use of the property, the escrowee had assumed such a duty.[318]

However, an escrowee has no duty to give advice or to coach the parties on how to protect themselves from risks. Thus, the escrowee has no duty to advise a buyer to obtain a title insurance policy[319] or a survey of the property.[320] The escrowee also has no duty to obtain a survey for the lender.[321] Washington holds that an escrowee has no positive duty to warn a buyer that the legal description for the property being purchased is less than that described in his offer to purchase. The high court reversed the appeals court ruling that an escrowee had a fiduciary duty to tell the buyer that the legal description in the offer included more land than the seller owned, even though that fact would have been evident if the buyer had reviewed the title commitment.[322]

A sub-escrowee charged with the disbursement of funds and recording of instruments, at the direction of the escrowee, is not itself an escrowee with a duty to determine and disclose the status of title for the parties to the escrow.[323] Rather, the court found:

> Fidelity was engaged to perform only the most rudimentary of the escrow functions--payout of funds and recordation of documents. It did not undertake to prepare or review the escrow documents or ensure that the parties' instructions were carried out. We decline to hold that a third party so engaged thereby becomes the fiduciary of the purchasers for purposes of searching the records or transmitting information regarding title.[324]

The court noted that the sub-escrowee never saw, much less signed, the escrow instructions in which the escrowee was told not to break escrow unless title was in the form permitted by the lender. Sub-escrows are further described at §13.2.

---

[318] Red Lobster Inns of America, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 656 F.2d 381 (8th Cir. 1981).

[319] Scott v. BAC Home Loan Servicing, L.P., 2016 WL 320219 (E.D.Pa. 2016) (unpublished) (property owner had no basis to sue escrowee for its alleged failure to notify him of his option to purchase title insurance; the court also said that, in any event, Section 126.1 of Title 31 of the Pennsylvania Code, which requires the giving of a notice of the availability of an owner's policy, is not required to be given at a refinance loan closing such as the one conducted by the title company in this case).

[320] Dudas v. Belinger, 2003-Ohio-6118, 2003 WL 22715598 (Ohio App. 9 Dist.) (unpublished).

[321] In Bank of New York Mellon, Trustee v. Jacobson, 2015 WL 1757885 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), the court held that the statement in a lender's closing instructions that the title company closer was to review a survey if the lender obtained one was not the equivalent of a promise by the insurer-loan closer to obtain a survey in order to discover that there was no house built on the land to be mortgaged.

[322] Denaxas v. Sandstone Court of Bellevue, L.L.C., 148 Wash.2d 654, 63 P.3d 125 (Wash. 2003).

[323] Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 46 Cal.App.4th 1181, 54 Cal.Rptr.2d 84 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1996).

[324] 54 Cal.Rptr.2d at 91.

13.9.2 Advice About The Legal Effect Of A Closing Document

FORM 82, Appendix A
No duty to give legal advice

An escrowee is not an attorney or advisor to the parties to the escrow, as explained at §3.3. The insurer-escrowee does not assume the role of attorney based on the escrow party's past experience with settlement agents who were attorneys, or because certain documents referred to the insurer as "approved attorney":

> ... First American is a title insurance company, not a professional corporation qualified to render the professional services of an attorney pursuant to Code §§ 13.1-542 through -556. An attorney-client relationship cannot be created by a non-attorney acting as an attorney. If the non-attorney employees of First American engaged in acts reserved to attorneys, charges of unauthorized practice of law may lie, as noted by the trial court, but not claims for legal malpractice.[325]

Therefore, an escrowee may not, and does not have a duty to, explain the legal effect of a document presented at closing, even when the escrowee drafted the instrument.[326] The escrowee is not required to explain the effect of amendments to a closing document.[327] The escrowee has no duty to warn a party that he or she may be taking an imprudent risk.[328]

---

[325] Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660, 669 (Va. 1994).

[326] National Bank of Washington v. Equity Investors, 81 Wash.2d 886, 506 P.2d 20 (1973), rev'd other grounds 86 Wash.2d 545, 546 P.2d 440 (1976) (escrowee not bound to explain terms of subordination agreement); Cowart v. Northwest Title Agency of Ohio and Michigan, Inc., 2008-Ohio-9, 2008 WL 53292 (Ohio App. 6 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee not required to explain legal significance of property's location within a floodplain); Fontenot v. LandAmerica Commonwealth Title of Houston, Inc., 2014 WL 4260114 (Tex.App.-Houston) (unpublished) (escrow officer had no obligation to explain to a seller the risk in accepting a subordinate take-back purchase money deed of trust).

[327] Bell v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 830 S.W.2d 157 (Tex.App. 1992) said: "[w]hile Metro had a duty to point out the interlineations, it did not have a duty to explain the signing of the interlineations because to do so would have breached its duty to both parties to remain a neutral third party at the closing. Despite his advanced years, Bell, Sr., was an attorney who was mentally competent at the time he signed the interlineations. Metro owed no duty to give him legal advice on the consequences of initialing the interlineations and signing the deed."

[328] Axley v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 88 Cal.App.3d 1, 151 Cal.Rptr. 570 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1978) (no duty of "reasonable care and diligence" requiring escrowee to advise lender not to take fourth position deed of trust). In Charles v. Florida Foreclosure Placement Center, Inc., 988 So.2d 1157 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2008), the court held that an elderly lady who claimed she was tricked into deeding her house away in a foreclosure rescue sale stated a valid cause of action against the title company closer for failing to explain the nature of the transaction, making this distinction: "[w]hile it is clear that Quantum had no duty to explain the legal ramifications of these documents, it did have an obligation to at least identify them," meaning that it should have explained that the woman was signing a deed. However, in Hilton v. Washington Mutual Bank, 2009 WL 3485953 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the borrower had not pled a valid cause of action

However, as in other matters, when the escrowee speaks, it has a duty to speak truthfully, and may be liable if a party reasonably relies on the escrow officer's opinion or statement, even if it was offered sincerely and thoughtfully.[329] A title agency attending a closing as agent of the buyer's lender was found to have a duty of care to the buyer, and could be sued for fraudulent misrepresentation when its employee volunteered the opinion at the closing table that a septic report was a "clear septic test."[330] Similarly, an escrowee was held liable under the volunteer doctrine for having given the advice to close on the purchase of a newly-built house although the buyers knew that some workmen had not been paid.[331] Also, an escrowee was found responsible for harm when the escrow officer represented to various sellers that the purchaser was "an honorable and wealthy man" and that "earnest money time deposits" were "valid devices in California" backed by certificates of deposit, all or most of which was not true.[332]

Liability for bad advice may be based on Section 552 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, regarding negligent misrepresentation. See the discussion of this Restatement section above at §13.9. Parties were allowed to pursue negligent misrepresentation claims against escrowees for giving bad advice as to the sufficiency of an escrow party's security for a debt,[333] and advising that an indemnity based on breach of fiduciary duty or other claims simply by alleging that the closer rushed him through the signing of into signing loan documents that, he claimed, were predatory in nature.

---

[329] An escrowee was liable for having volunteered that there would be sufficient funds in the escrow to pay all lien claimants, in Arizona Title Ins. and Trust Co. v. O'Malley Lumber Co., 14 Ariz.App. 486, 484 P.2d 639 (Ariz.App. Div. 1 1971). In Premium Hospitality, L.L.C. v. Astra Capital Funding, 2013 WL 3791495 (E.D.La.), recons.den., 2014 WL 896807 (E.D.La. 2014), later decision 2014 WL 3778687, an escrow officer's emailed statement that a "Conditional Letter of Guarantee" allegedly sent by a bank officer was "in fact, an official letter from Wells Fargo and was signed by him personally" was a sufficient promise on which to sue, when the other party allegedly released money from escrow in reliance on that promise about the piece of paper. The result was not changed by the fact that the escrow instructions contained an exculpation clause saying the escrowee would not be liable for the validity of any instrument deposited into escrow or the genuineness of any signature on a deposited instrument.

[330] Bortz v. Noon, 698 A.2d 1311 (Pa.Super. 1997), reh.den. The court found a duty of care to the purchasers because, in addition to appearing at closing for the lender, the title agent "provided the buyers with a service, namely the issuance of title insurance, for a fee. ... Obviously, Suburban Settlement was not acting merely for the mortgage company, but, instead, was providing dual services to the buyers and the lender." This blurring of functions is not as obvious as the court suggests, however. The claimed misrepresentation at closing did not affect the title to the real estate. The closer overstepped his role by opining on a matter that he was, as the court points out, not qualified to judge. Thus, the closer's liability more properly arose because he volunteered the opinion rather than because he had a legal duty to the purchasers to give such an opinion.

[331] McDonald v. Title Ins. Co. of Oregon, 49 Or.App. 1055, 621 P.2d 654 (Or.App. 1980).

[332] Bowling v. Founders Title Co., 773 F.2d 1175 (11th Cir. 1985). Based on the fact that the escrow officer made the same misrepresentation to various sellers, the court upheld a verdict against the insurer based on the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act.

[333] Mur-Ray Management Corp. v. Founders Title Co., 169 Ariz. 417, 819 P.2d 1003 (Ariz.App. 1991).

rather than a title insurance policy would be adequate protection against construction liens.[334] Similarly, when the title insurance commitment correctly showed that a building height restriction had been changed by a second restriction, but the escrow officer voluntarily advised the homeowners that a restriction existed and gave them a copy of the earlier version, the escrowee was responsible for the homeowners' reliance on the escrow officer's incorrect information.[335] Likewise, a seller had a valid cause of action for fraud against a closer when the lender failed to fund, but the closer told the seller that the funds would be available the next day.[336]

In the State of Washington, an escrowee is not under any duty to give legal advice or see to it that an escrow party obtains such advice.[337] However, if the escrowee voluntarily performs acts that are later found to be the unauthorized practice of law, the escrowee is held to the same standard of care as is an attorney. For example, an escrowee who drew up a promissory note engaged in unauthorized practice of law. Thus, the escrowee became responsible for advising the party that it should not lend without getting a deed of trust as security.[338]

13.9.3 Facts Which Might Suggest Fraud Or Bad Bargain

An escrowee violates its limited agency duties by actively participating in or facilitating a fraud perpetrated by one of the escrow principals against another.[339] This may include the escrow

---

[334] De Zemplen v. Home Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 221 Cal.App.2d 197, 34 Cal.Rptr. 334 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1963).

[335] Lindstrand v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 127 Or.App. 693, 874 P.2d 82 (Or.App. 1994).

[336] Boenker v. American Title Co., 590 S.W.2d 777 (Tex.App. 1979).

[337] National Bank of Washington v. Equity Investors, 81 Wash.2d 886, 506 P.2d 20 (1973).

[338] Bowers v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 100 Wash.2d 581, 675 P.2d 193 (1983); Andersen v. Northwest Bonded Escrows, Inc., 4 Wash.App. 754, 484 P.2d 488 (1971); and Hecomovich v. Nielsen, 10 Wash.App. 563, 518 P.2d 1081 (1974).

[339] Baker ex rel. Hall Brake Supply, Inc. v. Stewart Title & Trust of Phoenix, Inc., 197 Ariz. 535, 5 P.3d 249, 320 Ariz.Adv.Rep. 51 (Ariz.App.Div. 1 2000) (closer who "facilitated" fraud was liable for her own acts and as co-conspirator; underwriter could be liable in respondeat superior for closer's acts, but not for her conspiracy to defraud, which would have created "two layers or 'double' vicarious liability"); In re Ganier, 2010 WL 1780356 (Bkcy.D. Idaho) (unpublished) (title agent that employed a notary was not responsible for damage allegedly caused by notary's misconduct in acknowledging forged deed of trust, despite liability statute, because title company had no knowledge of misdeed); Straight v. Approved Fed. Savings Bank, 2005 WL 1288091 (W.D.Wash. 2005) (unpublished) (borrower entitled to pursue claim that escrowee assisted perpetrator in getting him to sign conveyance and note he did not understand); Vancura v. Katris, 391 Ill.App.3d 350, 907 N.E.2d 814, 330 Ill.Dec. 1 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2008) (employer negligent in training notary employee, but did not actively condone his conduct in notarizing forged mortgage assignment). In Teel v. American Title Co. of Houston, 2001 WL 1097862 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.) 2001) (unpublished), rev.den. January 10, 2002, reh.den. February 28, 2002, an escrowee was sued for fraud and mental anguish damages based on the allegation that it conspired in a fraudulent sale at a below-market price. In Spears v. Washington Mutual, Inc., 2009 WL 605835 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished); related decision, 2009 WL 2761331 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished), a title agent was dismissed from a lawsuit alleging that Washington Mutual and First American's appraisal officer's knowing participation in a conspiracy to commit loan fraud.[340] However, the escrow officer serving as loan closing agent is not liable to the lender for allegedly failing to report information to the lender that the escrow officer did not observe, or that did not have the appearance of being false or fraudulent.[341]

However, an escrowee has no obligation to inform a party to the escrow that the terms of the transaction are simply not the best that might be available to the party.[342] Some borrowers have subsidiary conspired to inflate valuations. See also Steven Biskupic and David Cannon, Advising Civil Clients: When the FBI Comes to the Door, The Wisconsin Lawyer (February 2000), p. 11 (discussing white collar crime prosecutions, emphasizing loan fraud). In Tafea v. Gateway Title Co., 2017 WL 5843239 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), an escrowee who was found to have assisted a rehab flipper in misusing investors' money owed a duty to the investors not to work a fraud on them. The fact that the investors were not parties to written escrow instructions did not insulate the escrowee from liability for the fraud in which it participated. In White v. Parker, 2018 WL 1279545 (unpublished); recommendations adopted, 2018 WL 1278420 (E.D.Tenn. 2018) (unpublished), a person who delivered over a million dollars to be used to fund the purchase of property in double escrows (sometimes called a "seasoning" escrow, and a very dubious practice) received a judgment against the title company closer and others because his money was not returned to him as promised, and was apparently stolen.

---

[340] Pulphus v. Sullivan, 2003 WL 1964333 (N.D.Ill. 2003) (unpublished), (fraud, RICO and other claims against title company employee allegedly part of fraud ring); Inner City Management, LLC v. JKV Real Estate Services, Inc., 304 B.R. 250 (Bkcy.D.Md. 2003) (bankruptcy trustee for loan fraud ringleader may not sue title insurers for allegedly participating in fraud, because only injured parties have standing). In Smith v. Berg, 247 F.3d 532 (3rd Cir. (Pa.) 2001), the title insurer was sued as a RICO co-conspirator because it allegedly "cooperated with [the perpetrator] by 'allowing him to assume many of [Fidelity's] normal functions during settlements' and by recording false information on HUD-1 Settlement Statements." In Menuskin v. Williams, 145 F.3d 755 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1998), aff'g and rev'g in part 98 F.3d 1342 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 1996) (Table), dismissing app. of 940 F.Supp. 1199 (E.D.Tenn. 1996).the court left open the question of whether or not an insurer-escrowee, by drafting deeds and delivering them in folders bearing the company name, gave the false impression that it had conducted a title search, which would bolster the legitimacy of the transaction. In Tafea v. Gateway Title Co., 2017 WL 5843239 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), an escrowee who was found to have assisted a rehab flipper in misusing investors' money owed a duty to the investors not to work a fraud on them. The fact that the investors were not parties to written escrow instructions did not insulate the escrowee from liability for the fraud in which it participated. In United States v. Granitur, 2018 WL 3820686 (S.D.Fla. 2018) (unpublished), the court affirmed a loan closer's conviction on felony charges for failing to inform a lender that the seller paid the buyer's down payment on the purchase of a condo unit, and the seller was the government's lead witness at trial. In Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Kaufman, 934 F.3d 585 (7th Cir. (Ill.) 2019), the owner of a title agency who also personally conducted loan closings was found liable to the lender for having failed to report that the borrowers were straw buyers and had made misrepresentations in their loan applications.

[341] In Saleh v. Hasan Merchant, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1331788 (N.D.Ill. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the escrowee had no duty to discover or disclose the fact that a seller had given the buyer an appraisal that set too high a value on the property being sold, which was a subject beyond the escrow officer's ken. In People v. Kidd, 2013 WL 500356 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), an escrow officer's conviction for aiding and abetting a large loan fraud ring was overturned, because she obeyed escrow instructions and notarized deeds that were signed by the correct parties, and the prosecutor merely conjectured that she knew the deals were fraudulent.

[342] Ramsey v. Baxter Title Co., 54 A.3d 710, 2012 ME 113 (Me. 2012) (lender's closing attorney had no fiduciary duty to borrower to tell her that she might be able to get different loan with better terms). In Dailey v. Thorpe, 445 S.W.3d 785 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014), reh.den. Oct 23, 2014, the court held that an escrow officer who obeyed all written instructions was not liable to the sellers for allegedly conspiring with the buyers to defraud the sellers, when the claimed instruments of that fraud were made part of the escrow instructions. In Jenkins v. Security Title Agency Inc., asserted that the loan closing agent has a duty to inform the borrower if the terms of the loan are onerous or unconscionable. The loan closing agent has no such duty.[343] The imposition of such a duty would violate the escrowee's position as a neutral stakeholder, and would be tantamount to a mandate to offer legal advice. See the discussion of the escrowee's neutral role at §13.3.

Some states hold that an escrowee has a duty to warn one of the escrow principals when the escrowee has actual knowledge that another escrow principal is perpetrating a fraud.[344] Other states

---

2017 WL 2547235 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), sellers signed a contract under which they agreed to an installment sale of the property without any deed of trust or promissory note securing their rights. The court held that the escrow company had no duty to advise the sellers that they were entering into a risky transaction. The sellers cited Burkons v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Cal., 168 Ariz. 345 (1991), as authority suggesting that the escrowee had a duty to inform the sellers that the contract was a fraud. The appeals court disagreed, retorting that "our supreme court has explained that an 'escrow company is not a guardian for the uninitiated.' Berry v. McLeod, 124 Ariz. 346, 352 (1979)."

[343] In Johnson v. Robinson, 292 B.R. 821 (Bkcy.E.D.Pa. 2003), the court rejected the claim that the closer had an affirmative obligation to advise the borrower not to sign loan documents that were unfavorable to her. It said: "Title agencies are intermediaries who perform essentially ministerial, administrative tasks associated with documenting the transactions which lenders and borrowers bring to them. They are neither the counselor to the borrower nor the lender. The law imposes no duty of advice and disclosure on a closing agent. Indeed, the request to impose the onerous, impractical and amorphous duties which the Debtor demands upon the title clerk who conducts a loan closing seems patently unreasonable." However, in Charles v. Florida Foreclosure Placement Center, Inc., 988 So.2d 1157 (Fla.App. 3 Dist. 2008), the court refused to dismiss claims by an elderly lady against the closer for failing to explain that she was deeding her house away as part of a foreclosure rescue transaction. In Prince v. Accardo, 54 A.D.3d 837, 863 N.Y.S.2d 819, 2008 N.Y. Slip Op. 06975 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept.) (2008), the title insurer for the purchaser was granted summary judgment on the sellers' claim that the buyer had perpetrated a fraud in arranging a foreclosure rescue, holding that the sellers had offered no proof of fraudulent conduct by the insurer. Also see Proctor v. Metropolitan Money Store, 579 F.Supp.2d 724 (D.Md. 2008), later decision 645 F.Supp.2d 464 (2009) (underwriter not liable for agents' claimed negligence or fraud in failing to disclose terms of foreclosure rescue transactions; later decision held that complaint adequately pled RICO and other claims against buyers, after dismissal of insurer).

[344] "Absent clear evidence of fraud, an escrow holder's obligations are limited to compliance with the parties' instructions." Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co., 27 Cal.4th 705, 711, 41 P.3d 548, 552, 17 Cal.Rptr.2d 541 (Cal. 2002) (citing Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 264 Cal.App.2d 160, 162, 70 Cal.Rptr. 378 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1968)). Arizona and Nevada have adopted the rule that an escrowee has a duty to disclose facts about fraud, as discussed below in this section. Those decisions are discussed in Nagy, Escrowees' Duty to Disclose Fraud: An Expansion of the Limited Agency Doctrine, 22 Ariz. L.Rev. 1146, 1150 (1980), citing United Homes, Inc. v. Moss, 154 So.2d 351, 354 (Fla.App. 1963); and Bardach v. Chain Bakers, Inc., 265 A.D. 24, 27, 37 N.Y.S.2d 584, 587 (1942), aff'd 290 N.Y. 818, 50 N.E.2d 233 (1943). See also, American Title Co. of Houston v. Bomac Mortgage Holdings, L.P., 196 S.W.3d 903 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2006) (title company that failed to inform lender of simultaneous flip of property and concealed flip by altering title commitment to show flipper in title liable for loan amount plus penalty under Deceptive Trade Practices Act). This duty is sometimes rooted in the escrow instructions. Some courts have based their rulings on this statement from 30A C.J.S. Escrows §10: "[T]here is no duty to disclose information received by an escrow agent unless such duty is required by the terms of the escrow agreement, or unless an agent knows that fraud is being committed on a party to the escrow." In Home Loan Center, Inc. v. Flanagan, 2012 WL 1108132 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court found that an escrowee has a duty to inform the lender of possible impersonation, when the person appearing before the closer looked nothing like the (genuine) driver's license presented for identification, and the loan closing instructions read: "[e]ach Borrower must sign all documents exactly as his or her name appears on the blank line provided for his or her signature." The escrowee proceeded with the loan closing without informing the lender of his suspicions about the man's identity. The court said that the closer "owed LendingTree a duty of ordinary care in supervising the closing and verifying identities and notifying LendingTree of circumstances indicating fraud." However, hold that an escrowee does not have a duty to disclose to one escrow party its suspicion that the other escrow party may be perpetrating a fraud, or similar suspicious circumstances regarding the transaction.[345] The latter view is consonant with the escrowee's position as limited agent of each party. As discussed above, an escrowee is not a policeman, and may not interject its opinion about the economic benefits of the transaction. The escrowee is often in a position to witness a bad bargain or a "sharp" sale or purchase, without participating in any wrongful act against any of the escrow parties. See the discussion of the escrowee's neutral role at §13.3.

In California, an escrowee does not have a duty to report the potential that one of the parties is perpetrating a fraud on the other, absent "clear evidence of fraud."[346] The most influential modern in Edelman v. Belco Title & Escrow, L.L.C., 754 F.3d 389 (7th Cir. (Ill.) 2014), another Illinois court found that an escrowee had no duty to warn investors who deposited money into escrow that the party to the escrow who induced their deposits might be taking advantage of them. For example, when a bank escrowee was alleged to have had knowledge of federal securities fraud, the court found a duty to disclose that information. "[The escrowee] contends its fiduciary duties as an escrow are limited by the express terms of the escrow agreement. Regardless of the agreement's express terms, however, an escrow agent's duty to its principal includes the obligation to disclose information about a known fraud being committed on the principal." Powell v. H.E.F. Partnership, 793 F.Supp. 91, 93 (D.Vt. 1992). See also Schoepe v. Zions First National Bank, 750 F.Supp. 1084 (D. Utah 1990).

---

[345] In Victory v. Sneed Financial Services, LLC, 2010 WL 45918 (N.D.Tex.) (unpublished), a title insurer that held investor funds in escrow was found to have no duty to act beyond its written instructions. A number of escrows were opened to accept investor deposits for the purchase of ATM-related machines. The escrowee was found to have no duty to detect the fact that the business operator was selling the same machines to different investors. The court noted that California and Texas laws are "substantially similar," because both states say that an escrowee has no general duty to police the affairs of its depositors and its obligations "are limited to faithful compliance with the depositors' instructions." It compared Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 264 Cal.App.2d 160, 70 Cal.Rptr. 378 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1968) to the Texas cases of Watkins v. Williamson, 869 S.W.2d 383 (Tex.App.-Dallas 1993, no pet.) (citing City of Fort Worth v. Pippen, 439 S.W.2d 660, 665 (Tex.1969)) and Trahan v. Lone Star Title Co. of El Paso, Inc., 247 S.W.3d 269 (Tex.App.-El Paso 2007). In Central Bank v. Rowe Construction, Inc., 2011 WL 1119872 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), a Minnesota court found that a title company loan closer had no fiduciary duty to the borrower and was not liable to the borrower for allegedly concealing from them that they were involved in a loan fraud flipping ring. In Coran v. Century Title Agency, L.L.C., 2010 WL 4679498, 2010 Mich. App. LEXIS 2217 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court held that Michigan does not impose a duty on an escrowee to disclose facts about fraud, and specifically rejected the fraud disclosure duty adopted in Arizona under Berry v. McLeod, 124 Ariz. 346, 604 P.2d 610 (1979), discussed in this section. In Pyper v. Reil, 2018 UT App 200, 437 P.3d 493 (Utah App. 2018), the court held that an escrowee in Utah does not have a duty to shut down a transaction in which one party might be defrauding the other. It said that "Utah has not recognized as included in an escrow agent's fiduciary duty the affirmative obligation to detect and halt a potentially fraudulent transaction... ." It refused to expand the escrowee's duties in such a way based on alleged "industry standards." The court also said that Pyper had not explained how such a suggested duty "might reasonably coexist with an escrow agent's 'core' duty to follow the instructions provided to it or how the tensions inherent in affirmatively stepping outside of those instructions in situations implicating potential fraud might be resolved."

[346] One commentator summarized Blackburn v. McCoy, 1 Cal.App.2d 648, 37 P.2d 153 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1934), on which Lee relied, as follows: "The court concluded ... that a general agency did not exist between the parties and the escrow agent. An escrow agent owes duties to two parties with conflicting interest. The court reasoned that the duty to disclose fraud to one principal conflicts with the duty of loyalty to the other principal." Jacobsen, California Escrow Agents: A Duty to Disclose Known Fraud?, 17 Pacific L.J. 309, 315-6 (1985). In Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co., 27 Cal.4th 705, 1160A, 117 Cal.Rptr.2d 541, 41 P.3d 548 (Cal. 2002), the court said: "… an escrow holder has no general duty to police the affairs of its depositors; rather, an escrow holder's obligations are

California decision is Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co.[347] The Lee court found that the escrowee does not have "a fiduciary duty to go beyond the escrow instructions and to notify each party to the escrow of any suspicious fact or circumstance which has come to his attention before or during the life of the escrow which could conceivably affect such party even though the fact or circumstance is not related to his specific escrow instructions."[348] This proposed duty would be too subjective a burden, in light of the escrowee's limited agency and duty of neutrality. Such a duty would leave the escrowee open to suit from the other party, whose benefit of the transaction would presumably be lost, once exposed:

> In fact, under the proposed rule, once an escrow holder received information (from whatever source) he would be forced to decide independently whether to believe the information and disclose it or disbelieve it and conceal his knowledge. If he concealed his knowledge he would risk suit. If he discloses and the information is inaccurate, he may be sued by all parties to the escrow for interfering with their contract. [footnote omitted] For example, in the fourth cause of action of appellants' complaint appellants allege that the other defendants falsely and fraudulently promised appellants that they would obtain tenants and the necessary financing to acquire and remodel the subject real property in order to induce appellants to purchase the property.
>
> Thus, if respondents had informed appellants of these facts, and if it was later discovered that their information was inaccurate, they would have subjected themselves to multiple lawsuits.
>
> Establishing a rule which would create such a dilemma and subject to the escrow holder to a high risk of litigation would damage a valuable business procedure. Manifestly, appellants' contention, if adopted by judicial fiat, would effectively discourage a reasonable and prudent man or company from acting as an escrow holder and would ultimately defeat the very purpose for which escrows limited to faithful compliance with the depositors' instructions. Absent clear evidence of fraud, an escrow holder's obligations are limited to compliance with the parties' instructions." The last sentence of that quote was relied on in Phleger v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 2009 WL 225416 (N.D.Cal.) (unpublished), in which the court refused to dismiss a claim against the escrowee because the principal "has shown that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Stewart had 'clear evidence of fraud,' and failed to stop the escrow, thus breaching its duty to the parties to the escrow." In the companion decisions of AREI Colonnade 1, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2013 WL 637231 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), and Wood River Capital Resources, LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2013 WL 637903 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), a California court held that a title insurer that acted as a sub-escrowee in preparing deeds for the purchase of interests in a nursing home did not have a duty to discover that the operator of the purchasing investor syndicates was operating a Ponzi scheme and warn his investors.

---

[347] 264 Cal.App.2d 160, 162, 70 Cal.Rptr. 378 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1968), relying on Blackburn v. McCoy, 1 Cal.App.2d 648, 37 P.2d 153 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1934), which reached the same conclusion on similar facts.

[348] 70 Cal.Rptr. at 379.

> originated.[349]

California courts have reiterated the Lee rule in later decisions.[350]

The Lee rule dovetails with, and is partly a recognition of, the escrow principals' legitimate interest in keeping the details of a transaction private. Escrow officers routinely and properly preserve the confidentiality of a transaction. Many escrow officers are taught not to disclose the facts of an escrow to anyone other than the parties. This is a business practice and is not based on a legal duty, but protects a legitimate interest of the principals to whom the escrowee owes a limited duty. Thus, the mere refusal to comment on a transaction to a person who is not a principal does not suggest or establish that an escrowee is in league with another party to defraud.[351]

The rule enunciated in Lee was followed in the Alabama decision of Gurley v. Bank of Huntsville.[352] Missouri also follows the California approach. A Missouri appellate court acknowledged that a limited fiduciary duty existed on the part of the escrowee, but held:

> The fiduciary relationship of an escrow agent and the other parties to the agreement is much narrower in scope than other fiduciary relationships such as attorney/client. An escrow agent is bound by the terms of the escrow agreement and breaches the fiduciary duty only when the agent fails to follow those terms. [citation omitted] It is not the escrow agent's duty to discover fraud committed by one party upon another or to protect the parties from each other except as to the limited duties outlined by the agreement. The escrow relationship between plaintiff and defendants did not lull plaintiff into a false sense of security. The scope of this fiduciary relationship did not encompass a duty on the part of defendants to protect plaintiff from the acts of Resort [the seller].[353]

---

[349] 70 Cal.Rptr. at 380.

[350] See Barrons v. Chicago Title Co., 2016 WL 4156975 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), which dismissed claims brought by buyers against an escrowee in which the buyers claimed that they had paid too much for the property because transaction costs were hidden by the device of a double escrow. The court said that California does not assume that a double escrow is evidence of fraud that the escrowee must disclose to the second buyer. It said "[g]iven that there were two transactions—the seller to BH & Sons, and BH & Sons to plaintiffs—the existence of dual escrows does not seem particularly troubling, and certainly is not 'clear evidence of fraud' such that the Chicago Defendants would be required to depart from their instructions." See also the related decision of Kornievsky v. Chicago Title Co., 2016 WL 4156976 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished).

[351] In Bosch v. Jaffer, 2000 WL 280436 (Tex.App.-Houston (1 Dist.)) (unpublished), a partner in the selling partnership who did not consent to the sale of real estate did not establish that the title insurer conspired with the general partner to defraud him simply because a closer told him she "could not comment" on whether or not the property had been sold. The objecting partner's consent was not required for the sale.

[352] 349 So.2d 43 (Ala.1977).

[353] Gilmore v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 926 S.W.2d 695, 699 (Mo.App.E.D. 5 Div. 1996).

A second Missouri decision held that an escrowee cannot disclose what it does not know. Mere evidence that a person was fraudulently not paid through an escrow was not sufficient to show that the escrowee did anything other than "participate in the ordinary course of business in a real estate financing transaction."[354]

The double escrow or simultaneous flip transaction has spurred Arizona and Nevada to adopt the principle that an escrowee has a duty to disclose the existence of both transactions to all three parties, as discussed below. The states divide on the issue in large part because not every flip transaction is fraudulent. There are at least four different types of flips, one of which is fully legitimate, another subject to equitable claims, and two typically criminal in nature. In the legitimate sweat-equity flip, the buyer renovates the property and later resells at a higher price. The second is the double-escrow or back-to-back sale, in which the second buyer agrees to purchase for more than the first seller agrees to sell and the middle man collects the profit between the two prices. The double-escrow flip is not illegal and the title passed in each phase of the flip is valid. However, the first sale is sometimes the result of overreaching or undue influence, which can cause both transfers to be attacked.[355] The third is the forgery flip, in which the perpetrator forges a deed putting himself

---

[354] McNeill v. Community Title Co., 11 S.W.3d 863 (Mo.App.E.D. 2000).

[355] The double escrow or "flip" occurs when a party lines up a buyer for property willing to pay more than the amount for which the intermediary is able to purchase it. The escrows are conducted separately but in rapid succession, with the intermediary desiring that neither the initial seller nor ultimate buyer know of the other transaction. "As long as the intermediary buyer-seller is not an agent of one of the parties, and as long as there is no other misrepresentation, the use of the 'double escrow' is a legitimate transaction." Miller & Starr, Current Law of California Real Estate, §12:83 at 395 (1977). An example of misrepresentation or concealment of fact by the middleman, not the escrowee, is found in Tschira v. Willingham, 135 F.3d 1077 (6th Cir. 1998). In that case, a real estate investment firm was sued for breach of fiduciary duty and intentional misrepresentation when it flipped property to German investors. In one transaction, the middleman bought for $774,000 and sold the same day to the investors for $1,985,000. The title insurance policy was issued in the amount of the first sale price, but the middleman altered the policy or misrepresented it so that the investors believed the policy was in the second sale price amount. In Memphis Hardwood Flooring Co. v. Daniel, 771 So.2d 924 (Miss. 2000), the court unwound a flip purchase by ruling that the middleman buyer was not a bona fide purchaser. Jamie Daniel, a retired schoolteacher, hired "Lucky" Easley to clear timber on 800 acres, for which Daniel was grossly underpaid. Easley contracted with Memphis Hardwood Flooring to sell the timber for a large profit. Memphis Hardwood's lawyer drafted all of the documents. Daniel discovered the "flip," and sued for rescission, among other things. Memphis Hardwood defended on the basis that it was a bona fide purchaser for value. The court found that Memphis Hardwood had constructive or actual knowledge of Easley's fraudulent statements to Daniel, had acted in "bad faith" because it drafted all the documents, and knew that the timber was being flipped, which precluded the company from being a bona fide purchaser for value. "Memphis' claim that it was not astride the horse of fraud may be so, but the evidence is clear that its left foot was in the stirrup, and that's sufficient to destroy its claim of innocent purchaser without notice." In his discussion of Memphis as a Daily Development on the DIRT listserv of the American Bar Association Section on Real Property, Probate & Trust Law and the University of Missouri, Kansas City, School of Law, Moderator Professor Patrick A. Randolph, Jr. noted that many flip transactions have no element of fraud, and in this case "the court tells us of no facts that, under established principles, would make Memphis aware of facts sufficient to reach a conclusion that fraud was being carried out." An example of a double escrow in which full disclosure of the facts was made to the second purchaser is found in Resh v. Realty Concepts, Ltd., 2016 WL 593809 (S.D.W.Va.) (unpublished). In that case, the purchase agreement signed by the buyers disclosed that the sale was part of a double escrow. The title insurance commitment likewise accurately recited the record ownership of the property. The court found that the or herself in title and then conveys, usually to an innocent buyer. The forgery flip is criminal and does not pass good title to the second buyer. The fourth type is the loan fraud flip, in which property is traded between members of a ring of creditworthy individuals at ever-more-inflated prices, with the goal of obtaining loan money in an amount greater than the real value of the property.[356] In a loan fraud flip, the transfer of the title itself is typically valid. However, the loan that is obtained by the buyer is almost always the product of fraud. The key element in such a fraud scheme is an appraisal giving a falsely inflated value to the property.

California follows the rule that an escrowee does not have an obligation to disclose to the parties that a double escrow is being conducted.[357] The leading California decision is Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., [358] which involved a double-escrow flip in which the escrowee was alleged to have known about both sales. The court rejected Lee's claim that the escrowee had a duty to tell him about the double sale. In a double escrow, as in any transaction, the escrowee breaches its duties if it deliberately misrepresents facts to an escrow principal. Thus, all states would likely accept the principle that an escrowee may not actively conceal a double sale, such as by altering its title insurance commitment to make it appear that the middleman is already the owner of record before the close of the first escrow.[359]

Arizona was the first state to adopt the rule that an escrowee must disclose to all parties the existence of a double escrow. In Berry v. McLeod,[360] the broker arranged to have the seller convey to a shell corporation controlled by the broker. The broker then immediately resold the property to a third party for double the amount. The escrowee was alleged to have knowledge because the broker set up both escrows with the same company. Unlike Lee, the intermediate owner, as a broker, was the agent of the seller. The flip transaction violated the broker's duty of fidelity to the seller. The escrowee had no independent duty to inform the buyers of that fact, and was not liable to the buyers for the damages they claimed, which were based on the differences in the two sale prices. In Cooper Enterprises, PC v. Brighton Title Co., LLC, 233 P.3d 548, 2010 UT App 135 (Utah App. 2010), an escrowee was found obligated to close a double escrow despite its insurer's refusal to issue a policy and the fact that Utah regulations prohibit an escrowee from conducting such an escrow. The court said: "Brighton had no choice but to conclude the escrow in a manner consistent with the [purchase contract] and its fiduciary duties to both parties. … Brighton is not somehow excused from its fiduciary duties just because adverse consequences might result from deviating from the instruction in the insurance commissioner's bulletin… ."

---

[356] In Walsh Securities, Inc. v. Cristo Property Management, Ltd., 7 F.Supp.2d 523 (1998), Cristo allegedly purchased 200 income properties, selling them to investors who obtained loans based on inflated appraisals and false leases. After each sale, the purchaser secretly transferred a 60% interest in the property back to Cristo, which pooled rents from several properties to meet mortgage obligations. Cristo's buyers eventually defaulted on a large share of the loans. Flip transactions are further discussed at §9.2.

[357] Chen v. Dynasty Escrow, Inc., 2002 WL 1227478 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), rev.den. August 14, 2002.

[358] 264 Cal.App.2d 160, 70 Cal.Rptr. 378 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1968).

[359] American Title Co. of Houston v. Bomac Mortgage Holdings, L.P., 196 S.W.3d 903 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2006).

[360] 124 Ariz. 346, 604 P.2d 610 (1979).

Berry court reviewed the California decisions and found their reasoning "sound," but only "up to a point":

> The California rule on disclosure by an escrow agent is sound up to a point. Absent fraud, the activities of real estate investors and speculators in buying and selling real property is a legitimate activity. The escrow agent has no duty to regulate the transactions so that each party receives a fair price for his property. The escrow company is not a guardian for the uninitiated. On the other hand, the escrow agent should not assist the perpetration of fraud by silence when disclosure could prevent the accomplishment of the fraud.
>
> Generally, there is no duty to disclose information received by an escrow agent unless such a duty is required by the terms of the agreement, but we hold that there is an exception to the foregoing rule when the escrow agent knows that a fraud is being committed on a party to an escrow and the failure of the escrow agent to disclose the information of the fraud will assist in accomplishing the fraud; under such conditions the escrow agent has a duty to disclose the facts actually known.[361]

The court found that, in the facts presented in Berry, the escrowee had a duty to disclose the double escrow to the first seller and second buyer. This newly-created rule was founded in the general principle that, in Arizona, an escrowee is a fiduciary, and owes the parties to the escrow a duty of "disclosure."

Arizona followed Berry with the case of Burkons v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of California.[362] In Burkons, and the companion case of Manley v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of California,[363] in which the buyers induced the sellers to convey their properties and subordinate their seller financing deeds of trust on the promise of construction development on the properties. Pyramid I, the buyer, bought land from various individuals, who took back deeds of trust. Pyramid signed letters of intent that gave the impression it would be constructing commercial buildings. Based on these letters, the sellers agreed to subordinate their deeds of trust to later deeds of trust obtained by Pyramid. In fact, the proceeds of the later loans were used to fund the down payments to the sellers, with the balance paid to Pyramid. None of the money was used for construction. When Pyramid defaulted, the subordinated sellers sued the insurer-escrowee for failure to disclose fraud per Berry. The insurer argued that there was no fraud apparent to the insurer in its role as escrowee. It posited that the sellers were suggesting a duty to discover fraud rather than disclose fraud already known to the insurer, which would extend the Berry decision. The court disagreed:

> Berry requires the escrow agent to disclose information when it "knows that a fraud > is being committed." Berry, 124 Ariz. at 352, 604 P.2d at 616. It does not require the escrow agent to investigate and search for fraud. Id. But our reading of Berry also leads to the conclusion that it does not permit the escrow agent to close its eyes in the face of known facts and console itself with the thought that no one has yet confessed fraud. Although not required to investigate, when the agent is aware of facts and circumstances that a reasonable escrow agent would perceive "as evidence of fraud," then there is a duty to disclose.[364]

[361] 124 Ariz. 346, 604 P.2d 610, 616 (Ariz. 1979).

[362] 813 P.2d 710 (Ariz. 1991).

[363] 798 P.2d 1327 (Ariz.App. 1990). The Burkons case contains the legal analysis. Manley cites to Burkons.

In reaching this conclusion, the court relied heavily on the insurer's internal directives and training which warned against insuring over-encumbered property. The training specifically described the Pyramid style of transaction, labeling it "fraud." The escrow officer identified the Pyramid deals as being in the suspect category. Thus, the Burkons court found liability because the insurer-escrowee was aware of the type of fraud at issue, and an employee had spotted that modus operandi in the transaction at issue. While a liberal interpretation of Burkons would mean that the case broadened Berry, the Burkons opinion itself does not so hold. It merely held that the insurer knew that a fraud was taking place and had a duty to speak, as in Berry.

The Berry and Burkons decisions produced much critical commentary.[365] The Berry-Burkons rule has been applied by Arizona courts in later cases.[366] The later decisions carefully limit the effect of those decisions, by repeating the observation from Berry that the escrowee is not the guardian for the uninitiated.[367]

---

[364] 813 P.2d at 718.

[365] Note, 22 Ariz. L.Rev. 1146 (1980) at 1153; Martindale, Expanding the Duties of Arizona Escrow Agents: Burkons v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., 24 Ariz.St.L.Rev. 821 (1992); Note, California Escrow Agents: A Duty to Disclose Known Fraud?, 17 Pac.L.J. 309 (1985).

[366] See Baker ex rel. Hall Brake Supply, Inc. v. Stewart Title & Trust of Phoenix, Inc., 197 Ariz. 535, 5 P.3d 249, 320 Ariz.Adv.Rep. 51 (Ariz.App.Div. 1 2000) (escrow officer who "facilitated" fraud on investors violated her duty to disclose the fraud); M & I Bank, FSB v. Coughlin, 2011 WL 5445416 (D.Ariz.) (unpublished) (escrowee had duty, based on written instructions from lender, to trace source of funds for cashier's check delivered as down payment); Thornton v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 540287 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (because Arizona requires escrowee to tell an escrow principal information indicating fraud, trial court was wrong to dismiss claims by hard-money lenders that escrowee should have warned them borrower was misapplying loan money and that the deed of trust ahead of theirs was in larger amount than they thought); Bridges v. Security Title Agency, Inc., 2011 WL 2174944 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (due to unusual facts, escrowee may have had duty to tell buyers about option agreement encumbering land they wanted to buy, on theory that option was an indicator that sellers were working a fraud on buyers, and thus claim survived summary judgment).

[367] In Madison Square Development Partnership of Arizona v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 3501556 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the court found that the escrowee had no reason to disclose an indicator of fraud to one party when the other party sent a notice to the escrowee instructing it to deliver deposited money but did not send that notice to the other party, and the escrowee had no reason to suspect that the notice had not been sent. The court said the Arizona escrowee does not have a duty to investigate or police the transaction to prevent fraud. It quoted Berry v. McLeod for the principle that an escrow company "is not a guardian for the uninitiated." , 124 Ariz. At 352. Similarly, in Jenkins v. Security Title Agency Inc., 2017 WL 2547235 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), sellers signed a contract under which

Nevada adopted the Berry-Burkons doctrine in Mark Properties, Inc. v. National Title Co.[368] In that case, two Las Vegas real estate developers sold a pair of properties to two investors at inflated prices. The developers first conveyed the real estate to an entity that they controlled, then to the investors. When the investors discovered at closing that the developers controlled the selling entity, they insisted that the two sale prices were the same and represented fair market value, neither statement being true. The investors sued the escrow company for failing to disclose known fraud. The Nevada court weighed the California position espoused in Lee and the Arizona position adopted in Berry and Burkons, and adopted the Arizona approach:

> We agree with Mark Properties that an escrow agent has a limited duty to disclose facts concerning actual fraud of which the agent is actually aware. Although we conclude that the escrow agent has such a duty, we hold that an escrow agent has no duty to investigate circumstances surrounding a particular sale in order to discover fraud.

Nonetheless, the standard adopted by Mark Properties is perhaps less onerous than Arizona's, and not far from the California rule. The court held that the escrowee has no duty to disclose unless it is "actually aware" of facts "concerning actual fraud." The court said that a stringent disclosure rule can cause the escrowee to disobey the instructions, its primary obligation. If the escrowee had obeyed the non-party plaintiffs' instruction to freeze the earnest money held in escrow, "it would likely be liable to the parties to the escrow for breach of fiduciary duty and conversion."

A Nevada federal court applied the Mark Properties rule in the 2012 decision of Donnell v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Agency of Nevada, Inc.[369] In that case, a scammer named Farris caused investors to open escrows with Fidelity. Although an inquiry by Fidelity "would likely have led to the discovery of the Ponzi scheme operated by Farris," the court admitted, the company "had no legal duty to pursue an investigation." It agreed with Fidelity that the information actually known to the company was not unusual or suspicious. It said the plaintiffs had "offered nothing to show that Fidelity and Flood [the escrow officer] were 'aware of facts and circumstances that a reasonable escrow agent would perceive as evidence of fraud,'" the standard set in Mark Properties. Fidelity had obeyed its duty to follow the escrow instructions.

---

they agreed to an installment sale of the property without any deed of trust or promissory note securing their rights. The court held that the escrow company had no duty to advise the sellers that they were entering into a risky transaction. The sellers cited Burkons v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Cal., 168 Ariz. 345 (1991), as authority suggesting that the escrowee had a duty to inform the sellers that the contract was a fraud. The appeals court disagreed, retorting that "our supreme court has explained that an 'escrow company is not a guardian for the uninitiated.' Berry v. McLeod, 124 Ariz. 346, 352 (1979)." In C & G Farms Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 1281847 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the lenders asserted a fraud because the borrower divided a large tract in order to give each lender a lien on a different part of the whole. The court held that the escrowee did not breach a duty to the lenders because there were no facts suggesting fraud. The appeals court also reminded that Berry does not require the escrow agent to investigate and search for fraud.

[368] 34 P.3d 587 (Nev. 2001), earlier opinion at 14 P.3d 507 (Nev. 2000) withdrawn and superseded on rehearing.

[369] 2012 WL 1669421 (D.Nev.) (unpublished).

Most states have refused to follow the Arizona decisions, particularly when the escrow party suggests that the court impose a disclosure duty that goes beyond a double escrow to some other alleged type of fraud.[370] A federal court in Illinois has decided or assumed that, in that state, an escrowee may be liable to the defrauded escrow principal if the double escrow was conducted for a fraudulent purpose.[371] Further, an escrowee has been found to have complied with a duty to disclose

---

[370] A Washington decision also stated the rule that an escrowee has a duty to disclose facts that a reasonable person would perceive as evidence of fraud. Butko v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 99 Wash.App. 533, 991 P.2d 697 (Wash.App. 2 Div. 2000) (unpublished), recons.den. March 8, 2000, order for publication withdrawn May 5, 2000. Butko went one step further, finding that an escrowee may be sued by the person who gives notice of the fraud for damage caused by the failure to notify. However, the decision was withdrawn from publication and has no precedential value. The decision received attention before its withdrawal, after it was made a Daily Development on October 27, 2000 by Professor Patrick Randolph, the long-time moderator for the DIRT listserv of the ABA Real Property, Probate & Trust Law Section. The Berry-Burkons model was rejected by a Louisiana court. That court found that neither the agent nor its underwriter had a duty to disclose loan irregularities to the lender. Resolution Trust Corp. v. American Title Ins. Co., 901 F.Supp. 1122 (M.D.La. 1995). The agent disbursed a loan in which the lender's president and a director held interests in the borrower partnership. The issue before the court was the claimed liability of the insurer for its agent's failure to disclose. The court found that the insurer "assumed no liability beyond its insurance policy's coverage." It went on to find that "Dupree, as agent for American Title, did not have a duty to disclose to River City, the lender and policy holder, irregularities, illegalities, or acts of fraud in the loan transaction." Id. at 1124. In Central Bank v. Rowe Construction, Inc., 2011 WL 1119872 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), a Minnesota court found that a title company loan closer had no fiduciary duty to the borrower and was not liable to the borrower for allegedly concealing from them that they were involved in a loan fraud flipping ring. In Coran v. Century Title Agency, L.L.C., 2010 WL 4679498, 2010 Mich. App. LEXIS 2217 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court held that Michigan does not impose a duty on an escrowee to disclose facts about fraud, and specifically rejected the fraud disclosure duty adopted in Arizona. In Resh v. Realty Concepts, Ltd., 2016 WL 593809 (S.D.W.Va.) (unpublished), the court found that the escrowee had no independent duty to inform the buyers of double escrows. In Orlando Millenia, LC v. United Title Services of Utah, Inc., 355 P.3d 965, 2015 UT 55 (Utah 2015), the court said that an escrowee owes a fiduciary duty to all parties in the transaction, which duty requires the escrowee to act in good faith, with loyalty and due care, and to "make disclosure." In Cooper Enterprises, PC v. Brighton Title Co., LLC, 233 P.3d 548, 2010 UT App 135 (Utah App. 2010), an escrowee was found obligated to close a double escrow despite its insurer's refusal to issue a policy and the fact that Utah regulations prohibit an escrowee from conducting such an escrow. In a later Utah decision, Pyper v. Reil, 2018 UT App 200, 437 P.3d 493 (Utah App. 2018), the court accepted the plaintiff's position that an escrowee in Utah has a duty to disclose facts "that would reasonably indicate a fraud was occurring." However, the court observed that "recognizing a duty to disclose facts indicating fraud does not equate to a duty to halt a transaction where fraud is known or suspected." The court thus held that an escrowee in Utah does not have a duty to shut down a transaction in which one party might be defrauding the other. It said that "Utah has not recognized as included in an escrow agent's fiduciary duty the affirmative obligation to detect and halt a potentially fraudulent transaction... ." It refused to expand the escrowee's duties in such a way based on alleged "industry standards." The court also said that Pyper had not explained how such a suggested duty "might reasonably coexist with an escrow agent's 'core' duty to follow the instructions provided to it or how the tensions inherent in affirmatively stepping outside of those instructions in situations implicating potential fraud might be resolved." In Just Us Realtors, LLC v. Nudge, LLC, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 2526731 (D. Utah 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), people who bought real estate from promoters through real estate investor seminars at inflated prices because the promoters bought through double escrows. The buyers sued all of the parties involved in those sales, including the escrowees, claiming that the deals were frauds that violated RICO. The case was dismissed on jurisdictional grounds, without reaching the merits of the claims.

[371] The federal court made that assumption in a series of decisions involving four double escrows allegedly conducted in order to inflate the amounts of the loans to beyond the intended loan-to-value ratio. See Federal Deposit a double escrow by informing all parties of the two simultaneous sales.[372] Other states not only recognize a double escrow as a valid and enforceable set of contracts, but obligate the escrowee to carry out both escrows without questioning their validity or giving notice to all parties of the existence of two simultaneous escrows.[373]

The party suing the escrowee often alleges that the escrowee owed a duty that was greater than mere disclosure of facts about fraud, sometimes framing the supposed duty as being to prevent the transaction from closing. However, not even Arizona courts have held that an escrowee has a duty to prevent an escrow from closing. Such a claimed duty would be antithetical to the escrowee's primary duty, which is to obey the instructions and close the transaction, putting the escrowee in a legally untenable position.[374]

Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 3592736 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1437873 (N.D.Ill. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), and Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 6497354 (N.D.Ill. 2019) (not yet released for publication. There is no prior Illinois decision holding that an escrowee is responsible for disclosing double escrows to the principals of the escrows.

[372] A leading commentary on title and escrow issues states that, "[a]s long as the intermediary buyer-seller is not an agent of one of the parties, and as long as there is no other misrepresentation, the use of the 'double escrow' is a legitimate transaction." Miller & Starr, Current Law of California Real Estate, §12:83 at 395 (1977). An example of a double escrow in which full disclosure of the facts was made to the second purchaser is found in Resh v. Realty Concepts, Ltd., 2016 WL 593809 (S.D.W.Va.) (unpublished). In that case, the purchase agreement signed by the buyers disclosed that the sale was part of a double escrow. The title insurance commitment likewise accurately recited the record ownership of the property. The court found that the escrowee had no independent duty to inform the buyers of that fact, and was not liable to the buyers for the damages they claimed, which were based on the differences in the two sale prices. In Cooper Enterprises, PC v. Brighton Title Co., LLC, 233 P.3d 548, 2010 UT App 135 (Utah App. 2010), an escrowee was found obligated to close a double escrow despite its insurer's refusal to issue a policy and the fact that Utah regulations prohibit an escrowee from conducting such an escrow. The court said: "Brighton had no choice but to conclude the escrow in a manner consistent with the [purchase contract] and its fiduciary duties to both parties. … Brighton is not somehow excused from its fiduciary duties just because adverse consequences might result from deviating from the instruction in the insurance commissioner's bulletin… ." In Burman v. Richmond Homes Ltd., 821 P.2d 913 (Colo.App.1991), an insurer that also performed the escrows was not liable for fraudulent concealment of a title encumbrance, because the existence of the general improvement tax district was disclosed in the title commitments and policies. The seller did not show the commitments to the purchasers. The insurer was found not to have a duty to make sure the purchasers saw the commitments.

[373] In Ramji v. 6100 Clarkson, L.P., 2019 WL 2455620 (Tex.App.-Houston) (unpublished), when the property owner and the buyer under the second leg of a simultaneous property flip signed a new contract cutting the middle man out of the deal, the jury awarded the middle man his lost profit, and the appeals court upheld that verdict. Ramji makes it clear that, in Texas, a double escrow is a valid transaction and that parties who interfere with it may be sued.

[374] In Pyper v. Reil, 2018 UT App 200, 437 P.3d 493 (Utah App. 2018), the court held that an escrowee in Utah does not have a duty to shut down a transaction in which one party might be defrauding the other. It said that "Utah has not recognized as included in an escrow agent's fiduciary duty the affirmative obligation to detect and halt a potentially fraudulent transaction... ." It refused to expand the escrowee's duties in such a way based on alleged "industry standards." The court also said that Pyper had not explained how such a suggested duty "might reasonably coexist with an escrow agent's 'core' duty to follow the instructions provided to it or how the tensions inherent in affirmatively stepping outside of those instructions in situations implicating potential fraud might be resolved."

A lender has an interest in receiving from its loan closing agent facts that the closing agent learns that indicate that the borrower might be perpetrating loan fraud on the lender. This issue is very different from the Berry-Burkons-Mark Properties rule devised to protect an investor purchaser from paying an inflated price through the device of a double escrow. The Berry-Burkons-Mark Properties rule does not impose a general duty on a loan closer to disclose loan fraud indicators to the lender. The loan closer has no general duty to warn the lender about possible fraud or impropriety that might be suggested during the loan closing. In Resolution Trust Corp. v. American Title Ins. Co.,[375] a bank made a loan to a partnership in which an officer and director of the bank were partners. In addition, the bank made an unsecured loan to the partnership for its "equity" in the project. The RTC took over the institution, and sued the title insurer on the theory that the insurer's agent, who was also the bank's attorney, had a duty to disclose these irregularities to the uninvolved officials of the bank. The court disagreed, holding that the agent had no duty to disclose "irregularities, illegalities, or acts of fraud in the loan transaction." In addition, the insurer "assumed no liability beyond its insurance policy's coverage," and therefore would not be responsible for a breach of duty by the attorney in his role as closing attorney.

A lender seeking to impose a duty on its independent loan closing agent to inform the lender of loan fraud indicators may do so only by written instructions. The independent loan closing agent is considered by all or most states to be the agent only of the lender, as discussed in §13.4. Therefore, the lender certainly can craft closing instructions to its agent that require it to disclose to the lender various indicators of loan fraud, as a condition to the closing of the loan. The loan closing agent may be liable to the lender if it disobeys such instructions.[376]

Such closing instructions do not create strict liability for the closing agent for borrower loan fraud. The loan closing agent is entitled to defend itself by establishing that the lender had already disregarded a series of ref flags indicating that the borrower was perpetrating loan fraud before the lender even scheduled the closing, as is almost always the case. If the loan closer provides that proof, the court may fairly imply that the lender was not induced to make the loan by the loan closer's failure to disclose a fact learned at the closing table.[377]

---

[375] 901 F.Supp. 1122 (M.D.La. 1995).

[376] For example, M & I Bank, FSB v. Coughlin, 2011 WL 5445416 (D.Ariz.) (unpublished) held that, when the escrow instructions told the escrowee that, if it received a cashier's check for the loan closing, it must perform a "complete sourcing of the funds to insure the funds belong to the borrower," the escrowee was required to verify that the money came from the borrower's account. In Home Loan Center, Inc. v. Flanagan, 2012 WL 1108132 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), the court found that an escrowee has a duty to inform the lender of possible impersonation, when the person appearing before the closer looked nothing like the (genuine) driver's license presented for identification, and the loan closing instructions read: "[e]ach Borrower must sign all documents exactly as his or her name appears on the blank line provided for his or her signature." The escrowee proceeded with the loan closing without informing the lender of his suspicions about the man's identity. The court said that the closer "owed LendingTree a duty of ordinary care in supervising the closing and verifying identities and notifying LendingTree of circumstances indicating fraud."

[377] See Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 3592736 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished). In that case, the court said that the FDIC's claims against Chicago Title as loan closer were grounded in negligence, making the defunct lender's comparative negligence in its loan underwriting a valid defense on which the court would hear testimony at trial. It said: "The Court agrees with the Chicago Title Entities that evidence of Founders Bank's own practices is Only one decision has suggested that a loan closer has a duty to disclose loan fraud indicators based on some duty that goes beyond the lender's written instructions. In Home Loan Corp. v. Texas American Title Co.,[378] a lender argued that earlier Texas decisions stating that an escrowee has a duty of "full disclosure" should require the loan closer to inform the lender of loan fraud indicators. The court restated the Texas duty of "full disclosure" this way:

> … a title company that accepts funds for disbursement in a closing transaction for a fee owes the party remitting those funds a duty of loyalty, a duty to make full disclosure, and a duty to exercise a high degree of care to conserve the money and pay it only to those persons who are entitled to receive it. See City of Forth Worth v. Pippen, 439 S.W.2d 660, 664-65 (Tex.1969). Ordinarily, a fiduciary duty of full disclosure requires disclosure of all material facts known to the fiduciary that might affect the rights of the person to whom the duty is owed.[379]

The TATCO court said that Texas falls in line with states that follow the rule that "an escrow agent owes a duty to disclose all matters coming to the agent's notice or knowledge concerning the subject of the agency that are material for the principal to know for his protection or guidance."[380] The title relevant and admissible to show that their actions contributed to their losses. As for evidence of banking industry practices generally, such evidence may be relevant to show whether Founders Bank's failure to follow its own industry standards contributed to its losses, but only if introduced through proper means, i.e., such as through properly disclosed and supported expert witness testimony." The court said it would not allow Chicago Title to argue generally that "the banking industry was riddled with incompetence and corruption during the relevant time period." However, it said that the insurer could introduce evidence about "the downturn in the real estate market," because that would be relevant to the damages claimed by the FDIC. In a later decision in the same case, Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1437873 (N.D.Ill. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), the court granted the title insurer a new trial because the jury instructions did not accurately reflect the complicated balancing of negligence, contributory negligence and willful and wanton behavior. However, a few months later, the court flipped its position and found that contributory negligence is not a valid defense to a breach of fiduciary claim, so that no new trial was warranted on that claim. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 6497354 (N.D.Ill. 2019) (not yet released for publication).

---

[378] 191 S.W.3d 728, 731 (Tex.App.-Houston 2006).

[379] Home Loan Corp. v. Texas American Title Co., 191 S.W.3d 728, 731 (Tex.App.-Houston 2006). In In re SMIC, Ltd., 2013 WL 4078704 (Bkcy.N.D.Tex.) (unpublished), the court found that a Texas escrowee that had already opened an escrow for the sale of property to one buyer violates its duty of loyalty to that buyer by serving as escrowee on a second sale by the same seller that was arranged when the seller believed the first buyer was unable or unwilling to close, because the escrowee had ceased to be a neutral third party.

[380] The court cited for this proposition Aronoff v. Lenkin Co., 618 A.2d 669, 687 (D.C.1992) and Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Montana, 242 Mont. 155, 789 P.2d 567, 573 (1990), the latter of which it acknowledged has been overruled (on other grounds) by Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122, 134-40 (1996). Both cases contained statements similar to the court's paraphrase, but neither in the context of disclosure of fraud. In Aronoff, the court denied summary judgment to Commonwealth Land Title regarding a closing it conducted in which, allegedly, its closer was aware that the seller was unable to convey insurable title. The court said that, "despite this knowledge, [Commonwealth] never intimated there was any problem with the sellers' title during the course of a five company argued, based on Texas cases and other authorities, that the duty of disclosure is not unlimited, and is always tied to the scope of the written escrow instructions.[381] The court said that it found no Texas Supreme Court decision explicitly limiting the disclosure duty to the written instructions.[382] The title company also urged that a broad duty "would allow participants in failed real estate transactions to shift their losses to title companies for not disclosing information concerning the merits of the underlying transaction (such as market factors affecting the value of property, terms at which financing could have been obtained, and the like) that could have alerted a party to abandon the transaction in time to avoid the loss." The court responded that the duty was not as broad as the insurer feared:

> [T]his contention fails to recognize that a fiduciary's duties do not extend beyond the scope of the fiduciary relationship. To the extent an escrow agent is employed only to close a transaction in accordance with a contract that has already been entered into by the parties, it is not apparent how the agent's duty of disclosure could extend beyond matters affecting the parties' rights in the closing process to those concerning the merits of the underlying transaction.[383]

In Home Loan Corp. v. Texas American Title Co., the lender contended that the loan closer should have disclosed the seller's direction to deliver a portion of his net proceeds of sale to someone else. The court did not grant the lender's motion for summary judgment. It made three important points. First, the lender had committed to making the loan before the closing occurred, and it seemed improbable that the lender would have had the right to cancel the loan if the escrowee had disclosed the third-party payments. Second, the parties had not even briefed the question of whether or not a payment at the seller's direction is the same as paying the money to the seller. In fact, it is settled law that a seller has the right to direct payment of the net proceeds to a third party, and the escrowee is obligated to honor that direction.[384] Third, there was no apparent causal connection between the lender's losses from the fraudulent loan and the seller's payment direction. The court said: hour closing, not even when the sellers tendered their title documents in escrow. If proven, these allegations would establish a breach of duty … for then Commonwealth must have known it could not perform the escrow even if the purchasers changed their mind and decided to close the deal." Kitchen Krafters also did not involve fraud. In that case, a bank acted as escrowee for collection of payments under a land contract, and separately made a loan secured by the real estate. The court affirmed a jury finding that the bank should have told the borrower how a prepayment under the contract had been applied.

---

[381] The insurer accurately cited Chapman Children's Trust v. Porter & Hedges, L.L.P., 32 S.W.3d 429, 438 (Tex.App.-Houston [14th Dist.] 2000, pet. denied) (citations omitted) and Equisource Realty Corp. v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 854 S.W.2d 691, 697 (Tex.App.-Dallas 1993) for this proposition.

[382] 191 S.W.3d at 733.

[383] 191 S.W.3d at 733-4.

[384] See §13.4 and discussion of Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., 183 Cal.App.3d 57, 227 Cal.Rptr. 785 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986), which concerned an assignment of escrowed proceeds of sale.

> Moreover, because the underlying loan transaction was a sham, Home Loan would have suffered the resulting loss on it even if TATCO had disbursed the funds to the seller expressly named in the HUD-1.[385]

Thus, even under TATCO, a lender faces a difficult burden in attempting to prove that facts not disclosed by a closing agent were the direct cause of a loan loss.

13.10 Creditor Claims Against Money Held In Escrow

A creditor may seek to attach, levy on or garnish money held in a pending escrow. Also, if one of the parties to the escrow files for bankruptcy, the trustee or creditors may claim money of the debtor that is held in an escrow.

Money deposited into escrow belongs to one of the parties to the escrow. Most such issues center on the question of whose property the escrowed money is while it is being held in escrow.[386] To prevail, the creditor or trustee must establish that the money is owned by the debtor. The ownership of escrowed money is usually analyzed based on the underlying contract. The creation of an escrow alone does not create a binding contract for sale of property. Until such contract exists, the escrowed money is typically still the property of the depositor.[387]

---

[385] 191 S.W.3d at 735.

[386] A good discussion of the bankruptcy trustee's right to claim escrowed money or documents is contained in Mears, Can Bankruptcy Trump an Escrow? A Primer on Enforceability, Business Law Today, September/October, 1996, p. 40. When money was paid out of escrow to a creditor/investor of the bankruptcy debtor less than 90 days before an involuntary petition was filed, the trustee was permitted to recover the money for the benefit of all creditors, on proof that the money belonged to the debtor and had been obtained by hucksterism from the other investor/creditors. In re Ogden, 314 F.3d 1190 (10th Cir. (Utah) 2002). When a company deposited money into an escrow based on a court order, to be paid to its creditors, it no longer held an interest in the money, and the company's bankruptcy trustee could not take it back. In re G & G Investments, Inc., 458 B.R. 707 (Bkcy.W.D.Pa. 2011). In In re Expert South Tulsa, LLC, 522 B.R. 634 (10th Cir. B.A.P. 2014), the court held that a company's bankruptcy estate did not include as an asset money being held in escrow for a construction project, which the debtor would only be entitled to receive if it completed a contract that it has not yet performed.

[387] The Sports Authority, Inc. v. Chesapeake Associates, 145 F.3d 1325 (Table), 1998 WL 234331 (4th Cir. (Md.) 1998) (unpublished).

When a buyer or seller files for bankruptcy while there is a pending escrow for the sale or purchase of real estate, the money in escrow is deemed to be property of the estate if it belonged to the debtor on the date the petition was filed. Title to the money passes from buyer to seller when the conditions to the escrow have been met for close of escrow.[388] Escrowed earnest money becomes the seller's property if the buyer breaches the contract and forfeits the deposit.[389] When the seller files bankruptcy immediately after the close of a purchase escrow, money held by the escrowee to pay liens and closing costs is no longer the seller's property.[390] However, seller proceeds paid through escrow to a creditor of the seller, shortly before the filing of the petition, may be recaptured by the trustee as a preferential transfer.[391]

Money held in an escrow other than a real estate purchase escrow is the property of the party having the better or more substantial claim to it.[392] When money is held in escrow pending resolution of a dispute by arbitration, title to the deposited money passed to the winner when the arbitration award is made.[393] Money deposited into escrow to pay a judgment, if affirmed, is no longer the property of the debtor when the judgment is affirmed.[394] New York follows the rules stated in In re Stockbridge Funding Corp.:[395]

---

[388] See Dickerson v. Central Florida Radiation Oncology Group, 225 B.R. 241 (D.C.M.D.Fla. 1998), in which it was found that a bankruptcy debtor who was a party to an escrow in which the conditions for release of money had not yet been satisfied held only a contingent remainder interest in the money. In Davis v. Cox, 356 F.3d 76 (1st Cir.(Me.) 2004), similarly, the court found that, when the debtor delivered money into an attorney escrow under court order, "the funds were placed in custodia legis and Cox was divested of legal title of the funds and title passed to the attorneys as officers of the court. … As a result, the funds held in custodia legis did not pass into the bankruptcy estate upon the filing of the bankruptcy petition. … Cox held just a contingent interest to the property held in custodia legis, subject to the divorce court's disposition of the property. Thus, only Cox's contingent interest became property of the estate." In In re Goodwin Miller, ___ B.R. ___, 2018 WL 878841 (Bkcy.E.D.Cal. 2018) (permanent citation not yet available), retirement fund money deposited by the debtor into escrow as down payment on the purchase of real estate was property of the estate, and was no longer entitled to protection from creditors because it lost that status when it was placed in escrow.

[389] Hallmark Builders, Inc. v. Bradfordt Co., 205 B.R. 971 (1996); O'Reilly Law Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Co., 2017 WL 2345609 (D.Nev.) (unpublished).

[390] In re Smith, 2007 WL 1832110 (Bkcy.C.D.Ill.) (unpublished). The court found that the money earmarked for the payoff of the sellers' mortgage debt was not the sellers' property because the sellers committed to convey the property free of liens. The money was still sitting in the settlement agent's hands after closing because the sellers had misrepresented the payoff amount and the lender refused payment as being short.

[391] Coulson v. Kane (In re Price), 589 B.R. 690 (D. Hawaii 2018), aff'd 773 Fed.Appx. 893 (9th Cir. (Hawaii) 2019) (unpublished).

[392] In In re Expert South Tulsa, LLC, ___ B.R. ___, 2018 WL 1588410 (Bkcy.Kan. 2018) (permanent citation not yet available), money deposited into escrow by a bankruptcy debtor was not property of the estate when the debtor had only a contingent interest in the money and the other party had the better claim to it.

[393] In re Arrow Mill Development Corp., 185 B.R. 190 (Bkcy.D.N.J. 1995).

[394] In the Matter of Newcomb, 744 F.2d 621 (8th Cir. 1984). By contrast, in Dodson v. National Title Ins. Co., 159 Fla. 371, 31 So.2d 402 (1947), a party's direction to pay his proceeds of sale to his daughters was found not to be a

> 1. For an escrow to be valid, the delivery of the property must be irrevocable. Although the grantor retains a contingent right to repossess the property if the specified condition does not occur, while the property is in the hands of the depository it must be beyond the possession and control of the grantor ...; and,
> 2. Under New York law, legal title to the property placed in escrow remains with the grantor until the occurrence of the condition specified ...; and,
> 3. [T]he deposit of property in escrow creates in the grantee such an equitable interest in the property that upon full performance of the conditions [of the] escrow ..., title will vest at once in him.[396]

Other New York cases add the further gloss that, when there is a dispute, deposits may not be released unless it is "clear that no factual issues or viable claims exist under the closely scrutinized terms of the escrow agreement."[397]

Money held by an insurer-escrowee as security for an indemnity in the insurer's favor is not held in escrow. It is the property of the insurer until the purpose of the indemnity is fulfilled. See §5.10.3. However, when a title insurer is holding money as security against a title defect in what is termed an escrow, that money can be subject to attack by the trustee if the depositor files bankruptcy. The trustee will typically argue that the transfer is subject to avoidance as a preference, with the insurer an "initial transferee" under §550 of the Code. An initial transferee can be compelled to return money to the estate. However, many courts have adopted an exception known as the "control" or "conduit" rule.[398] An escrowee who holds money as a conduit for another is not an initial completed escrow, and thus of no effect when the party died before the money was delivered. Dodson was distinguished in Naylor v. U.S. Trust Co. of Fla., 711 So.2d 1350, 23 Fla.L. Weekly D1510 (Fla.App. 2 Dist. 1998), however, in which a party gave similar instructions but also expressly stated his intent to make a gift "immediately." Although the giver died before the funds were transferred, the letter was found to be a delivery of the funds.

---

[395] 145 B.R. 797 (Bkcy.S.D.N.Y. 1992).

[396] 145 B.R. 797, quoting from Cohen v. Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc., 138 B.R. 687 (Bkcy.S.D.N.Y. 1992) and In re O.P.M. Leasing Services, Inc., 46 B.R. 661, 667 (Bkcy.S.D.N.Y. 1985).

[397] E.S.P. Adj. Services v. ASTA Group, 125 A.D.2d 849, 850, 509 N.Y.S.2d 955; quoted in Takayama v. Schaefer, 240 A.D.2d 21, 669 N.Y.S.2d 656 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1998).

[398] See, for example, In re Harwell, 414 B.R. 770 (M.D.Fla. 2009) (attorney who received money for his client was not "initial transferee" but mere conduit for client, barring trustee for client's estate from recovering the amount of money that passed through attorney's account and into debtor-client's hands); In re Pony Express Delivery Services, Inc. 440 F.3d 1296 (11th Cir. (Ga.) 2006) (insurance broker mere conduit of premiums entrusted to it as fiduciary, and thus not an initial transferee subject to avoidance); Nordberg v. Societe Generale (In re Chase & Sanborn Corp.), 848 F.2d 1196 (11th Cir. 1988); In re Ogden, 314 F.3d 1190 (10th Cir. 2002); Bonded Fin. Serv., Inc. v. European Am. Bank, 838 F.2d 890 (7th Cir.1988); In re Columbia Data Prods., Inc., 892 F.2d 26 (4th Cir. 1989); In re Bullion Reserve of N. Am., 922 F.2d 544 (9th Cir. 1991); In re Baker & Getty Fin. Servs., Inc., 974 F.2d 712 (6th Cir. 1992); In re Coutee, 984 F.2d 138 (5th Cir. 1993); In re First Sec. Mortgage Co., 33 F.3d 42 (10th Cir. 1994); and In re Finley, Kumble, Wagner, Heine, Underberg, Manley, Myerson & Casey, 130 F.3d 52 (2nd Cir. 1997).

transferee subject to an avoidance action.[399] For example, in In re Moskowitz,[400] the trustee argued that the insurer was an "initial transferee" under §550 of the Code, because it received the funds from the seller. As an initial transferee, the insurer would be required to give the money back to the estate. The court refused, holding that the insurer either was not a transferee but a mere conduit of money, or was such a transferee but deserving of equitable protection. In Moskowitz, the insurer had no knowledge of the bankruptcy at the time it accepted the funds. Another series of cases holds that money held in escrow as a guarantee fund is not property of the estate.[401] Those cases did not involve title escrows, but the same principle should apply to a title escrow. An alternative is for the insurer to state in an escrow agreement that the funds belong to the insurer as long as they are needed for the protection of its insureds.[402]

When the escrowee files bankruptcy, the money in the escrowee account is assumed not to be the property of the escrow company's estate unless established otherwise. However, the claimants to that money must trace their funds unless they are held in a segregated account.[403] When the party who delivers funds is not able to establish that the money was delivered in trust, or under an escrow, it is not considered to be escrow money merely because the account into which it was deposited bears the label of "escrow."

---

[399] In In re Stanwich Financial Services Corp., 2018 WL 1219285 (D.Conn. 2018) (unpublished), the court rejected the bankruptcy trustee's claim that a law firm escrowee was an "initial transferee" subject to liability in a claimed transfer in fraud of creditors.

[400] 85 B.R. 8 (E.D.N.Y. 1988).

[401] In re Atlantic Gulf Communities Corp., 369 B.R. 156 (Bkcy.D.Del. 2007); In re Palm Beach Heights Dev. & Sales Corp., 52 B.R. 181 (Bkcy.S.D.Fla. 1985). In those cases, money was escrowed to pay for infrastructure improvements in large real estate developments.

[402] The agreement may contain a paragraph similar to the following: "[t]he Funds are agreed to be the property of Insurer. The Funds are held by Insurer to be used for the benefit of Insurer and its insured(s). The undersigned acknowledges that it is not an insured or a third-party beneficiary of a policy issued by Insurer, that the Funds are not its property, and its only interest in the Funds is a conditional right to receive all or the surplus of the Funds, if any, including any accrued but unused interest, if any, according to the terms of this undertaking."

[403] In In re Dreier LLP, 527 B.R. 126 (S.D.N.Y. 2014), recons.den. 2014 WL 4401222 (S.D.N.Y., Sep. 5, 2014), the court ruled that money held in escrow by a law firm that filed bankruptcy was not property of the estate, but could be reclaimed by the owners only if they could trace the cash through a commingled account or if there was a separate, segregated account set up in their names. In re Handy Andy Improvement Centers, Inc., 196 B.R. 87 (N.D. Ill. 1996) held that money in a segregated account was the property of the escrow principal, not the debtor escrowee. However, the mere statement in a lease that "Lessee shall always have on deposit" certain funds did not create an escrow, since there was no prohibition on commingling of funds. In In re Scanlon, 239 F.3d 1195 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2001), on the day the bankruptcy petition was filed, money the debtor had agreed to escrow was in the hands of his attorney, in a temporary escrow or trust account. The court relied on In re S.E.L. Maduro, 205 B.R. 987, 990-91 (Bkcy.S.D.Fla. 1997) for the rule that "funds that are deposited into an escrow account by a debtor, for the benefit of others, cannot be characterized as property of the estate." It held that the money was not part of the estate because the debtor had no control over the money, and would not receive any of it back. Therefore, the money merely "experienced a temporary layover" in the lawyer's account.

> Although one of the accounts bears the name "escrow" account, such labels only suggest a fiduciary relationship, but are not conclusive. [citations omitted] Instead, the nature of the account depends on the rights and obligations intended by the parties.[404]

If funds are commingled, the first burden of proof is on the trustee to prove that at least some part of the money belonged to the bankruptcy debtor. The burden then shifts to the party claiming the escrow to trace his or her money into and out of the account.[405]

> In the case of commingled accounts, the bankruptcy trustee's burden of proof is affected by the beneficiary's burden to trace. The funds in a commingled account maintained in the debtor's name may be used to pay his unsecured creditors unless a beneficiary can trace his or her superior right in the funds. Thus, the law implies the element of "control" in the absence of tracing. Accordingly, the bankruptcy trustee carries her burden of proving that the account was property of the debtor by showing that the debtor had legal title to the account, and the account consists of commingled trust and personal funds. …The burden then shifts to the defendant (1) to show that the debtor held only legal title and (2) to trace the equitable owner's interest to the specific property at issue.[406]

When tracing is impossible or extremely difficult, some courts adopt the "lowest intermediate balance" rule.

> [The rule] is grounded in the fiction that, when faced with the need to withdraw funds from a commingled account, the trustee withdraws non-trust funds first, thus maintaining as much of the trust's funds as possible. Hence, pursuant to the lowest intermediate balance rule, if the amount on deposit in the commingled fund has at all times equaled or exceeded the amount of the trust, the trust's funds will be returned in their full amount. [citation omitted] Conversely, if the commingled fund has been depleted entirely, the trust is considered lost. ... Finally, if the commingled fund has

---

[404] 234 B.R. 337 (Bkcy.S.D.N.Y. 1999).

[405] In re Carrozzella & Richardson, 247 B.R. 595 (2nd Cir. BAP (Conn.) 2000) (party claiming constructive trust must trace funds to avoid having fund distributions reclaimed by trustee as preferences); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Midwest Title Agency, Inc., 99 Ohio St.3d 1440, 789 N.E.2d 1120 (Table), 2003-Ohio-2971 (Ohio App. 5 Dist. 2002) (unpublished) (title insurer creditor claiming pro-rata share between creditors able to trace funds, per Section 213 of Restatement of Law of Restitution). There are lengthy discussions of the principles concerning distribution of money to numerous defrauded people when the money was in a commingled bank account maintained by the debtor in three decisions emanating from the downfall of exchange intermediary companies controlled by Edward Okun, in In re 1031 Tax Group, LLC, 439 B.R. 47 (Bkcy. S.D.N.Y. 2010); 439 B.R. 78 (Bkcy.S.D. N.Y. 2010); and 439 B.R. 84 (Bkcy. S.D.N.Y. 2010).

[406] Id.

> been reduced "below the level of the trust fund but not depleted, the claimant is entitled to the lowest intermediate balance in the account." [citation omitted] In no case is the trust permitted to be replenished by deposits made subsequent to the lowest intermediate balance.[407]

In some circumstances, courts have dispensed with the requirement of tracing funds. [408] The escrowee's errors and omissions policy is an asset of the escrow company's bankruptcy estate.[409]

Also, when deposits are lost or stolen by the escrowee, the loss is borne by the party who owned the deposit at the time of its loss:

> [A]s between the seller and the buyer, the loss falls on the one who owns the property at the time of the embezzlement or loss. For example, if the escrow holder embezzles the purchase price before the time when, under the terms of the escrow, the seller is entitled to it, the loss falls on the buyer, since it is still his money. On the other hand, if the money be embezzled after the time when the seller has become entitled to the money, the loss falls on him, since it is now considered his property.[410]

On holdback escrows, the loss is generally borne by the seller because the purchaser now owns the property, while the seller has at least the conditional right to receive the escrowed funds.[411]

---

[407] In re Dameron, 155 F.3d 718 (4th Cir. 1998), aff'g 206 Bkcy.Rptr. 394 (Bkcy.E.D.Va. 1997).

[408] Union Savings Bank v. The White Family Companies, Inc., 167 Ohio App.3d 51, 853 N.E.2d 1182, 2006-Ohio-2629 (Ohio App. 2 Dist. 2006). In that case, the title company accepted a bad check for $5 million and wrote two checks totaling $5 million in reliance thereon. The title company was forced to file bankruptcy as a result. In a dispute with the bank over liability for the checks, the court held that the parties whose money was used to fund the $5 million in checks were not required to trace the source of their loss, because the shortage in the account essentially matched the amount of the bad check accepted by the escrowee.

[409] In re EMS Financial Services, LLC, 2013 WL 64755 (Bkcy.E.D.N.Y.) (unpublished) (proceeds of escrow company's errors and omissions policy are property of company's bankruptcy estate, but trustee cannot take money until claims by customers are proven).

[410] Bixby Ranch Co. v. United States, 35 Fed.Cl. 674, 678 (1996), quoting Pagan v. Spencer, 104 Cal.App.2d 588, 232 P.2d 323 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1951).

[411] Bixby Ranch Co. v. United States, 35 Fed.Cl. 674, 678 (1996); GE Capital Mortgage Services, Inc. v. Avent, 114 N.C.App. 430, 442 S.E.2d 98 (1994); Cradock v. Cooper, 123 So.2d 256 (Fla.App. 1960); and Stuart v. Clarke, 619 A.2d 1199 (D.C.App. 1993).

13.11 Damages For Breach of Escrow Instructions; Defenses To Liability

An escrowee may become liable to a party to the escrow for violation of an escrow duty. An individual escrow officer may be directly liable to an escrow principal, even when the instructions name a corporation as escrowee and the escrow officer is an employee of that company.[412] When an insurer acts as escrowee, its escrow duties are separate from its policy liabilities. The loss payable for breach of an escrow duty is not dictated by the terms of a title insurance policy issued in relation to the transaction.[413]

In many states, a claim of escrow negligence sounds in tort rather than contract, and the claimant must prove that the escrowee's negligence was the proximate cause of damage.[414] Other states deem escrow to be contractual in nature.[415] When escrow instructions are construed as being contractual in nature, the economic loss doctrine applies to bar tort claims based on their violation.[416]

---

[412] See, for example, Covey Run, LLC v. Washington Capital, LLC, 196 F.Supp.3d 87 (D.D.C. 2016), in which the principal appointed as escrowee a lawyer's professional corporation, and then sued both the professional corporation and the attorney for claimed breach of the instructions and fiduciary duties. The Florida court denied the individual defendant's motion for dismissal.

[413] Red Lobster Inns of America Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 656 F.2d 381 (8th Cir. 1981).

[414] See, for example, Bear Creek Planning Com. v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 164 Cal.App.3d 1227, 211 Cal.Rptr. 172 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1985); Marsh v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 57 Wash.App. 610, 789 P.2d 792 (Wash.App. 1990); Osborn v. Grego, 596 P.2d 1233, 1238 (Kan. 1979); and Walker v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 828 P.2d 621 (Wash.App. 1992). 30A C.J.S. Escrows §10 states: "any loss suffered by a principal due to an escrow agent's noncompliance with the directions in an escrow agreement must be causally and actually attributable to such act of noncompliance in order for the loss to be recoverable." See the more complete discussion of proximate cause below. In K Corp. Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Financial, Inc., 2015 WL 3755339 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the escrow company was not liable to the seller for the difference between the sale price in the first contract, which fell through, and the price on the later sale that closed. The court said the escrowee did not breach its instructions but that, even if it had, it could not reasonably have foreseen that its actions would cause the loss of the sale. In Alereza v. Chicago Title Co., 6 Cal.App.5th 551, 211 Cal.Rptr.3d 469 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 2016), the court dismissed the plaintiff's claims against the escrowee because he had not alleged matters indicating that his claimed losses were proximately caused by the escrow company's errors.

[415] Michigan views escrow as being contractual in nature, and there is no action in tort for breach of the escrow instructions. Karloukli's, Inc. v. Walgreen Co., 2004 WL 435384 (Mich.App.) (unpublished). Similarly, Colorado considers escrow instructions a contract, and the escrowee may not be sued for falsely representing facts about the escrow or other claims based on negligence or tort principles, which claims are barred by the economic loss doctrine. A Good Time Rental, LLC v. First American Title Agency, Inc., 259 P.3d 534 (Colo.App. 2011). In Country Title, L.L.C. v. Jaiyeoba, 2016 WL 66616 (Tex.App.-Houston) (unpublished), the court held that, because escrow is considered to be contractual in Texas, a customer was entitled to be paid her out-of-pocket losses caused by the escrowee's errors, but not for the alleged harm to her credit rating or punitive damages.

[416] First Internet Bank of Indiana v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2009 WL 2092782 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished) (federal court in Indiana held closing negligence claim barred by economic loss doctrine); A Good Time Rental, LLC v. First American Title Agency, Inc., 259 P.3d 534 (Colo.App. 2011); Dyer v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2012 WL 1288778 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished) (negligence claim against Florida escrowee barred by economic loss doctrine); First Magnus Financial Corp. v. Rondeau, 2012 WL 607563 (D.Nev.) (unpublished) (because escrow instructions are a contract, economic loss doctrine bars claims against escrowee for negligence and failure to disclose material facts to lender).

However, the doctrine has been held not to bar claims against the escrowee that are valid in the jurisdiction and that do not sound in contract, such as for breach of fiduciary duty or intentional tort.[417] See §13.3 for a complete discussion of the issue of how various states construe escrow disputes as being either tort or contractual in nature.

In states that have adopted the tort framework for escrow disputes, the escrowee may be liable for damages caused by its actions and that could reasonably have been expected to flow from them.[418] However, the escrowee is not liable for damages that were not proximately caused by its [417] Wall Street Mortgage Bankers, Ltd. v. Attorneys Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2008 WL 5378126 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished) (although loan closing instructions are a contract, lender may still sue for breach of fiduciary duty and negligence in handling of closing and economic loss doctrine does not negate those claims); Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Lennar Corp., 2014 WL 201663 (M.D.Fla. 2014) (unpublished) (in Florida, economic loss rule bars negligence claims but not claims of fraudulent inducement or negligent misrepresentation based on facts independent of the escrow contract); Bates Energy Oil & Gas v. Complete Oilfield Services, 361 F.Supp.3d 633 (W.D.Tex. 2019) (escrowee holding money for purchase of frac sand, accused of aiding and abetting theft of that money, not entitled to dismissal of intentional tort claims under economic loss doctrine).

---

[418] In Bear Creek Planning Commission v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 164 Cal.App.3d 1227, 211 Cal.Rptr. 172 (Cal.App. 3 Dist. 1985), an escrowee breached its duty to record restrictions, which the developer later sought to enforce. The landowner sued for slander of title, since the restrictions were not recorded. The escrowee was found liable for the judgment of slander of title and attorney fees incurred defending the action, on the basis that the attempt to enforce the restrictions was foreseeable. In Ford v. Guarantee Abstract and Title Co. Inc., 553 P. 2d 254 (Kan. 1976), when the insurer paid off the seller's mortgage without obtaining a deed to the insureds, and the insurer failed to either cure title or return the money later, the jury awarded punitive damages for breach of escrow duties. In Schwartz v. Aracor Search & Abstract, Inc., 2014 WL 4493662 (E.D.Pa. 2014) (unpublished), the damage to the borrowers' credit rating and other harm caused by the theft of loan payoff money justified entry of a punitive damage award against the title agent that stole the payoff money, despite the agent's plea that it had used the money for payroll rather than an evil purpose. In Strohbach v. United General Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 3286218 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), an escrowee that was instructed to require the delivery of a performance bond as a condition to a loan closing, but that failed to require its receipt, was required to pay the lender the full amount of the loan. The borrower siphoned off all of the loan money through a separate construction escrow. In Ash v. North American Title Co., 223 Cal.App.4th 1258, 2014 WL 612988 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2014) (certified for partial publication), a buyer agreed to extend the date for close of escrow for the replacement leg of his exchange from a Friday to the following Monday. On that Monday, November 24, 2008, LandAmerica 1031 Exchange Services froze all of its accounts, including the segregated account held by Ash. The court kept the account frozen until long after the six-month deadline under Section 1031 had passed. Ash sued his escrow company for his expenses, and the jury granted all of them, including legal bills of $140,000, tax liability of $465,000, lost income from the property and loan costs, totaling just over $1 million. The jury added punitive damages of $750,000. The appeals court found that the escrow company could not have foreseen either the LandAm shutdown or the misguided court orders that froze all accounts until it was definitely too late to complete the exchanges. It vacated the judgment and verdict and sent the case back for retrial, with instruction to tell the jury about the doctrines of intervening acts and superseding cause. In Kreisers Inc. v. First Dakota Title Ltd. Ptnshp., 2014 S.D. 56, 852 N.W.2d 413 (S.D. 2014), a title agent that served as intermediary in a tax-deferred exchange and that did not ask if the customer intended a forward or reverse parking exchange arrangement was found liable to the customer for the taxes it did not defer because the intermediary set up the documents for a standard forward exchange when the customer needed to do a reverse parking exchange instead. In K Corp. Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Financial, Inc., 2015 WL 3755339 (Cal.App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the escrow company was not liable to the seller for the difference between the sale price in the first contract, which fell through, and the price on the later sale that closed. The court said the escrowee did not breach its instructions but that, even if it had, it could not reasonably have foreseen that its actions would cause the loss of the sale.

escrow negligence and that the escrowee could not reasonably have foreseen.[419] The measure of damage for an escrowee's breach of instructions that proximately causes a failure of title to the property or a diminution in its value is the lesser of the diminution in value resulting from the breach or the cost to remove the defect in or encumbrance on title.[420]

The escrowee may also be responsible for attorney fees incurred by the escrow principal "in prosecuting litigation against another party, if the litigation was necessary to remedy the injury

---

[419] Marsh v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 57 Wash.App. 610, 789 P.2d 792 (Wash.App. 1990); NYCTL 1996-1 Trust v. Malihan, 715 N.Y.S.2d 51, 2000 N.Y. Slip Op. 09174 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept.) (liability for negligent failure to pay taxes limited to tax amount, not value of real estate lost in ensuing tax sale); Sparks v. United Title & Abstract, LLC, 56 So.3d 302 (La.App. 2 Cir. 2010) (escrowee not liable for misdrafting of deed that allegedly prevented owners from leasing minerals, when seller had already leased minerals to another party). In Amzak Capital Management v. Stewart Title of Louisiana (In re West Feliciana Acquisition, L.L.C.), 744 F.3d 352 (5th Cir. (La.) 2014), the appeals court found that the connection between the escrowee's failure to attach a legal description to a mortgage and the $58 million in business losses the lender suffered after it took title by foreclosure was so tenuous that it dismissed the recording negligence claim because the lender would not be able to establish proximate cause. In Edwards v. Escrow of the West, 2014 WL 4071223 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2014) (unpublished), the escrowee was not liable to the escrow parties for their own tax debt, when the partial payment made through escrow removed the tax lien from the property but did not cause the IRS to forgive the balance owed. The court held that the debtors had not proven the element of causation. In Sean & Shenassa 26, LLC v. Chicago Title Co., 2014 WL 5500512 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), the court affirmed a jury verdict finding that there was no causal connection between the escrowee's issuance of an interim binder of insurance rather than a policy as instructed and the buyer's inability to flip the property in a bad market, which led to the loss of title through foreclosure. In Amerivest Financial, LLC v. Malouf, 263 Or.App. 327, 328 P.3d 739 (Or.App. 2014), rev.den. 356 Or. 397, Oct. 2, 2014, an escrow company that held $10 million used to buy large life insurance policies at a discount was able to get a dismissal of claims that it aided and abetted securities fraud. That claim was based solely on the fact that the escrow company agreed to serve as escrowee, giving the apparent fraud an air of security and legitimacy. In Beckett Family Rentals, L.L.C. v. Schweitzer Title Agency, Ltd., 2015 WL 4506781 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court held that the fact that a new tax assessment was levied after closing, causing the tax payment made by an escrow company to be credited first against the new assessment and thus not to fully pay the pre-closing tax, was not a violation of the escrow instructions, and did not cause the later tax foreclosure that extinguished the owner's title. Therefore, the escrowee was not liable to the owner for the loss of the property.

[420] In Perry v. Stewart Title Co., 756 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1985), an encroachment onto an easement was resolved by payment of a $100 fee to release part of the easement. The purchaser had insisted on rescinding the sale despite the easement holder's willingness to release. The court rejected the purchaser's claims against both seller and escrowee for "house hunting expenses, the cost of moving from their house, the cost of renting an apartment after they moved, the loss of favorable financing and depreciation on the house, closing costs, and house payments made to" their lender. Id. at 1205. Because the escrowee had obtained the release and paid the fee for it, the purchaser was not entitled to these further claimed damages. In JAAV Investments, LLC v. Amcap Mortgage, Ltd., 2014 WL 708492 (Tex.App.-Houston 2014) (unpublished), when a seller committed loan fraud that, in turn, caused the originating lender to have to repurchase the loan plus pay a penalty, the court found that the borrower was not required to pay the penalty because he could not have reasonably foreseen that the originator would be forced to pay such a fee. The case did not involve an escrowee, but is enlightening about the connection between closing acts and repurchase rights. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 5276346 (N.D.Ill. 2015) (unpublished), the court held that the maximum amount that the FDIC could recover against a loan closer for its alleged failure to inform the defunct lender about double escrows was the amounts of the deficiency judgments taken by the FDIC after its credit bids on foreclosure. The FDIC admitted that it set those too-high bid prices based on valuations it had done by the same appraiser that gave inflated values for the properties before the loans were made. The court said the closer did not conspire with the appraiser in inflating the values, and thus the bid prices were binding on the lender in limiting its recovery against the closer.

caused by the defendant's tort."[421] However, the escrowee is not liable for such litigation expenses unless the escrow principal establishes that the escrowee's delay or actions necessitated the litigation.[422] A buyer does not prove diminution merely by showing that the current assessed value was less than the purchase price. In affirming a trial court that found no proximately-caused damage, one court said:

> As noted by the trial judge, "[The decrease in value] may have been because of the economy or they paid too much for it. There are a lot of things." We agree.[423]

The escrow principal has a duty to mitigate its damages.[424] However, not all conduct by the escrow principal that increases its loss necessarily violates the duty to mitigate damage.[425] Likewise, the escrowee must seek to mitigate the party's damages.[426]

The escrowee may assert the applicable statute of limitations.[427] It may also enforce a

---

[421] Prentice v. North Amer. Title Guar. Corp., 59 Cal.2d 618, 30 Cal.Rptr. 821, 381 P.2d 645 (Cal. 1963) (escrowee liable for cost of quiet title suit necessitated by delays caused by escrowee).

[422] Rabutaso v. Canga, 2002 WL 1064738 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), rev.den. August 14, 2002; Silber v. The Heritage Escrow Co., 2004 WL 352660 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2004) (unpublished) (rejecting tort-of-another attorney fee doctrine because there was no evidence that escrowee forced escrow principal to sue for specific performance by delaying closing).

[423] Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660, 667 (Va. 1994).

[424] In Castillo v. Express Escrow Co., 2011 WL 3911088 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court held that the escrowee owed no damages to the escrow parties because they failed to mitigate their damages, which were also nominal.

[425] In Royal Thrift and Loan Co. v. County Escrow, Inc., 123 Cal.App.4th 24, 20 Cal.Rptr.3d 37 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2004), involving the alleged forgery of escrow party's deed of trust, the lender conducted a trustee's sale, but chilled third-party bidding by giving notice that its lien might have been forged. The court found that the lender did not fail to mitigate, and affirmed a judgment against the escrowee of about the loan amount.

[426] In Walker v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 828 P.2d 621 (Wash.App. 1992), an escrowee that recorded a defective trust deed was not granted summary judgment based on the trust deed holder's failure to mitigate, when the escrowee had an equal opportunity to do so by bidding at the foreclosure sale of the senior trust deed.

[427] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Fiserv Fulfillment Services, Inc., 2008 WL 3833831 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished) (when title agent told insured lender its mortgages had been recorded, but they were not, statute of limitations began running on date mortgages should have been recorded, despite agent's concealment of true facts); McGuire v. Mosley Rogers Title Company, L.L.C., 997 So.2d 23 (La.App. 2 Cir. 2008) (holding that escrow party had a duty to review closing documents immediately after closing to determine if any were missing, statute of limitations had run, and tardy discovery that a document had not been procured was not excused); Dovenmuehle, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 478 So.2d 423 (Fla.App. 1985); Arizona Title Ins. and Trust Co. v. O'Malley Lumber Co., 14 Ariz.App. 486, 484 P.2d 639 (Ariz.App. 1971); Schmidt v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 1996 WL 170050 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 1996) (unpublished); Baker Street Homeowners' Ass'n v. Old Republic Title Co., 2003 WL 157559 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 2003) (unpublished) (two year statute of limitations for suit on alleged breach of oral escrow instructions); Royal Thrift & Loan Co. v. County Escrow, Inc., 123 Cal.App.4th 24, 20 Cal.Rptr.3d 37 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2004) (three-year statute of limitations on escrow acts also provision in the escrow instructions that shortens the statutory time for filing suit against the

---

applies to suits against the escrowee's surety); McCalla v. Stuckey, 233 Ga.App. 397, 504 S.E.2d 269 (Ga.App. 1998), later app. 241 Ga.App. 527, 527 S.E.2d 219 (Ga.App. 1999); Union Savings Bank v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 191 Ohio App.3d 540, 946 N.E.2d 835, 2010-Ohio-6396 (Ohio App. 10 Dist. 2010) (negligence claim brought too late under Ohio's four-year statute of limitations, which begins running on date of alleged error, not date of discovery, but claim of implied contract not barred by negligence statute); Sparks v. Pate-Campbell Properties, Inc., 283 P.3d 249 (Table), 2012 WL 3630263 (Kan.App. 2012) (unpublished) (Kansas' two-year statute of limitations for suit on deed drafting error began running on day deed was recorded because legal description error was obvious); Dunmore v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 400 S.W.3d 635 (Tex.App.-Dallas 2013) (mistake in describing one lot on a deed, rather than the two that the purchase contract recited, was noticeable by looking at deed; statute of limitations for suing title company for error began when deed was delivered, not when corrected nine years later); Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. St. Louis Title, LLC, 2014 WL 200368 (E.D.Mo.) (unpublished) (statute of limitations that applies to the FDIC under FIRREA for negligence actions is the later of three years after the date the claim accrued or the state law deadline. 12 U.S .C. § 1821(d)(14)(A)(ii), which begins to run on the date the FDIC is appointed receiver or the date on which the cause of action accrues, whichever is later. 12 U.S.C. § 1821(d)(14)(B)); Independent Trust Corp. v. Stewart Info. Serv. Corp., 665 F.3d 930 (7th Cir. (Ill.) 2012) (statute for agent's theft of money does not begin to run "until a plaintiff knows or should know that he has been injured and that his injury was wrongful"); Bank of America, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 4435857 (N.D.Ill. 2014) (unpublished) (statute of limitations for claim against title agent for failure to pay off a loan began running not on date of closing but on date on which it knew or should have known payoff had not been made, citing Independent Trust); Krot v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co., 2014 WL 7464084 (Tex.App.-Austin) (unpublished) (plaintiffs who sued escrowee for fraud conspiracy did not get extension of statute of limitations because escrowee gave more documents in discovery after limitations period had run, when there was no evidence that escrowee had concealed documents earlier); WA Southwest 2, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 240 Cal.App.4th 148, 192 Cal.Rptr.3d 423 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2015) (sophisticated real estate investors not entitled to an extended statute of limitations under discovery rule because facts were disclosed in private placement memoranda); NNN Parkway Corporate Plaza 8, LLC v. Hirschler Fleischer, APC, 2017 WL 1020451 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (identical ruling as in WA Southwest, by same court); Eagle Equity Fund, LLC v. TitleOne Corp., 161 Idaho 355, 386 P.3d 496 (Idaho 2016) (suit by lender against escrowee under Idaho Code section 45-1205, which provides cause of action for negligent reconveyance of deed of trust, was barred by three-year statute of limitations created by that law); Angelo v. Stewart Title & Trust of Phoenix, Inc., 2017 WL 410903 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished) (lawsuit not susceptible to class treatment because some of the two hundred plus plaintiffs' claims were barred by Arizona statute of limitations); Fogarty v. Palumbo, 163 A.3d 526 (R.I. 2017) (Rhode Island suit for escrow negligence against title agency falls under three-year legal malpractice limitations period; lawsuit dismissed because it was filed too late); Long v. Freedom Escrow, 2017 WL 462133 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (California statute of limitations for claim that escrow company typed wrong sale price on transfer declaration began running on date deed recorded; limitations period not tolled because error was discoverable immediately); LCL, LLC v. Falen, 308 Kan. 573, 422 P.3d 1166 (Kan. 2018) (when title company prepared deed that mistakenly conveyed mineral rights to grantee but grantor continued to receive royalties for six years, limitations period began running when grantor should have realized deed contained an error); U.S. Bank, N.A. v. HLC Escrow Inc., 919 F.3d 17 (1st Cir. (Me.) 2019) (escrow negligence claims barred based on Maine's six-year contract statute of limitations); Holliday v. Stewart Title of California, Inc., 2018 WL 1358159 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (claims barred by all applicable California limitations periods and not tolled based on delayed discovery rule); Nemeth v. Republic Title of Texas, Inc., 2018 WL 3062393 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished) (claim that escrow agent had duty to inform buyers of condominium unit next buyer would not be approved for FHA loan dismissed based on two-year negligent misrepresentation statute of limitations, not merits of claim); Sky Station Holdings I, LP v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2019 WL 3786569 (Tex.App.-Austin) (unpublished) (limitations period for lender claims against escrowee about closing of allegedly fraudulent loan began running when lender received documents asserting fraud; action dismissed because it was filed after limitations period had run); Hancock v. Kulana Partners, LLC, 145 Hawai'i 374, 452 P.3d 371 (Hawaii 2019) (when escrowee altered deed after it was signed by grantor, grantor was entitled to assume that deed would be recorded as signed, and statute of limitations on grantor's fraud claim against escrowee began running when grantor discovered alteration).

escrowee. [428]

The escrowee may also assert other defenses to liability. The escrowee may defend a claim of having violated instructions with proof that the party ratified the conduct.[429] The escrowee may properly rebut a claim by the escrow principal that the escrowee had a duty to disclose or give advice with proof that it advised the party to obtain legal advice.[430] The escrowee is not liable for malfeasance when the escrow did not close and the principal that has sued the escrowee cannot prove it was prepared to close escrow.[431]

Many states have anti-deficiency statutes or rules precluding the lender from seeking payment of the debt after having accepted the property in satisfaction of the full debt. In such a state, a lender may be precluded from seeking money damages from the escrowee when it has taken title to the property after making a full credit bid at sale, or if it accepted a deed in lieu of foreclosure and cancelled the promissory note.[432]

Reasonable exculpatory provisions in escrow instructions or agreements are enforceable.[433] A

---

[428] 10000 Millenium Plaza, LLC v. Brentwood Escrow, Inc., 2005 WL 2283085 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (provision shrinking time for suit under escrow to one year deemed reasonable in commercial transaction); Fielding v. Gateway Title Co., 2008 WL 2816750 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), later decision 2009 WL 1847385 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrow instruction provision limiting time to sue escrowee to one year enforced, in part because clause was prominently displayed in instructions); Openiano v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 5372878 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (one-year limitations period set by escrow instructions and initialed by the principals enforceable, and barred lawsuit filed three years after close of escrow); Versailles Investments, LLC v. First California Escrow Corp., 2017 WL 2264490 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished) (one year limitations period set by escrow instructions enforceable).

[429] See First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Beaumont v. Stewart Title Co., 732 S.W.2d 98 (Tex.App. 1987); Pioneer Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Cranwell, 369 S.E.2d 678 (Va. 1988) (ratification not found).

[430] Styrk v. Cornerstone Investments, Inc., 61 Wash.App. 463, 810 P.2d 1366 (1991).

[431] Rivera v. Fly, 2009 WL 1059644 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished).

[432] In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 7231455 (W.D.Wash. 2016) (unpublished), the court refused to dismiss the claims of the FDIC against an escrowee based on the lender's full credit bid at sale, under Washington's anti-deficiency statute. Ticor Title cited cases from California and Oregon that had barred claims against property insurers based on anti-deficiency laws, but none from Washington. The court said that, although the law would preclude the FDIC from pursuing the borrower, it "did not automatically immunize third parties from liability." Numerous decisions have considered this principle in relation to claims under the title insurance policy (see §3.2.4), a closing protection letter (see §14.4.1) or a title agent (see §17.7). In First Bank of Lincoln v. Land Title of Nez Perce County, Inc., 165 Idaho 813, 452 P.3d 835 (Idaho 2019), the Idaho Supreme Court held that, by making a full credit bid in its foreclosure of the deed of trust, the lender barred itself from later suing a title agent escrowee for its claimed negligence in the handling of the escrow, seeking the difference between the loan amount and the appraised value of the property.

[433] Hurst v. Enterprise Title Agency, Inc., 157 Ohio App.3d 133, 809 N.E.2d 689, 2004-Ohio-2307 (Ohio App. 11 Dist. 2004) (escrowee may exculpate itself from duty to comply with municipal ordinance requiring closer to deliver certificate of inspection to buyer at closing); 390 Kings Highway, LLC v. Maylov, 95 A.D.3d 998, 944 N.Y.S.2d 261, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 03632 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 2012) (provision in a sale contract limiting the escrowee's liability to liquidated damage provision inserted by the escrow principal is enforceable only if the penalty is reasonable and proportional to the violation of instruction, be it large or small.[434] In California, exculpatory clauses in escrow agreements are generally not enforceable as to the escrowee's own negligence because escrow is the pervasive means of closing transactions and thus is a matter of public interest and, further, the escrowee has superior bargaining power in setting the terms of an escrow agreement.[435] Thus, a broad exculpatory clause shielding the escrowee from liability for its own negligence was not enforceable, and was not justified on the rationale that the escrow party could have "covered" the escrowee's negligence by obtaining a title insurance policy.[436] However, an indemnity and hold harmless agreement given by an escrow party to the escrowee to induce it to perform an accommodation recording was enforceable, even as to a claim that the escrowee was negligent in failing to record the document immediately.[437]

In states other than California, where escrow is less pervasive, even a very broad exculpatory clause may be enforceable.[438] However, when the exculpatory clause carves out intentional acts or intentional or bad faith conduct found enforceable) Batson v. Rim San Antonio Acquisition, LLC, 2016 WL 6901312 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (unpublished) (court enforced escrow instructions limiting escrowee's liability to its own "gross negligence, fraud and willful misconduct"); Ramos v. Romero, 2016 WL 1239277 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished) (escrowee had no general duty to verify that a person was who he purported to be, and escrow instructions disclaimed such a duty; therefore, escrowee was not liable to buyers for fraud caused by impersonation of sellers).

---

[434] Shore Financial Services, Inc. v. Lakeside Title and Escrow Agency, Inc., 2013 WL 2223781 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), rev.den. December 23, 2013, 495 Mich. 914, 840 N.W.2d 331 (Mem), 2013 WL 6800563 (Mich.) (lender's liquidated damage provision of $1,000 a day, regardless of magnitude of violation, found unenforceable).

[435] Akin v. Business Title Corp., 264 Cal.App.2d 153, 70 Cal.Rptr. 287 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1968); Tunkl v. Regents of Univ. of California, 60 Cal.2d 92, 383 P.2d 441, 6 A.L.R.3d 693 (1963); Selby v. Burtch, 238 Cal.Rptr 212 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1987) (unpublished), previously published at 193 Cal.App.3d 147. In Ultra Escrow, Inc. v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 2011 WL 2120187 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished), a loan assignee was found not to be liable to defend an escrowee under an indemnity, because the addendum creating the indemnity was not signed by the originating lender.

[436] In Selby v. Burtch, 238 Cal.Rptr 212 (Cal.App. 5 Dist. 1987) (unpublished), previously published at 193 Cal.App.3d 147, the court said: "[t]he responsibilities of Stewart Title as title insurer are distinct from those of escrow agent. (See Fin.Code, § 17000 et seq.; Ins.Code, § 12340 et seq.; Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 Cal.App.3d 844, 860, 237 Cal.Rptr. 282; see also Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal.App.3d 917, 938-939, 122 Cal.Rptr. 470. The negligent drawing of the trust deed was wholly unrelated to the normal incidents and benefits associated with the purchase of title insurance. ... It does not appear reasonable to require an escrow client to purchase title insurance in order to ensure that the corporation perform its duties as escrow agent without negligence to the injury of its client." Selby was withdrawn from publication.

[437] Rooz v. Kimmel, 55 Cal.App.4th 573, 64 Cal.Rptr.2d 177 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1997). The Rooz court held that the factors considered in Akin v. Business Title Corp., 264 Cal.App.2d 153, 70 Cal.Rptr. 287 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1968) which would void any attempted exculpatory clause in an escrow agreement, do not apply to all transactions conducted by title insurers. As to accommodation recordings, the court found there was no evidence that the conduct was "a service of great importance to the public," and the escrowee had no particular advantage in bargaining strength.

[438] Lynch v. Santa Fe National Bank, 97 N.M. 48, 627 P.2d 1247 (1981) (broad exculpatory provision enforced as to bank escrowee); Home Healthcare of Illinois, Inc. v. Jesk, 425 Ill.Dec. 231, 112 N.E.3d 594, 2017 IL App (1st) 162482 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 2017) (attorney-escrowee entitled to enforce provision in escrow agreement limiting his liability to gross negligence of the escrowee, the provision is not a bar to liability when acts of that character are proven.[439]

An arbitration provision in escrow instructions is enforceable if it complies with state law.[440]

The situs for a lawsuit for breach of escrow duties is, in most cases, the state in which the property is located, or in which the escrow activities were performed.[441] However, a reasonable forum selection clause in an escrow agreement is enforceable.[442] A waiver of the right to a trial by jury that is part of the escrow instructions is also enforceable.[443] An escrow principal who files suit against the escrowee is not entitled to make discovery demands for records or information concerning escrows conducted by the escrowee that involved other parties, which documents are protected by privacy laws.[444]

A provision in escrow instructions that the escrowee is to be reimbursed for legal expenses if it becomes embroiled in a dispute over the escrow is typically enforceable.[445] Such a provision may willful misconduct or gross negligence, and no such conduct had been proven).

---

[439] BCV Colonnade v. United Realty Companies, LLC, 2009 WL 2974768 (Mich.App.) (unpublished) (escrowee may be found grossly negligent for confirming receipt of an earnest money deposit that had not been made, rendering liability limitation provision in escrow instructions inapplicable).

[440] In JAKS Properties, LLC v. St. Croix Hospice, LLC, 924 N.W.2d 876 (Table), 2018 WL 5846088 (Iowa App. 2018) (unpublished), a mandatory arbitration provision in a judgment lien escrow agreement was enforceable, but was not binding on the judgment creditor, who was not a party to the escrow.

[441] In Ex Parte Alamo Title Co., 128 So.3d 700 (Ala. 2013), reh.den. May 17, 2013, an escrowee's wiring of money to Alabama and a few phone calls to people located there, in connection with the escrow in dispute, was found not to subject the escrowee to personal jurisdiction in that state.

[442] Podesta v. Hanzel, 684 Fed.Appx. 213, 2017 WL 1135696 (3rd Cir. (Pa.)) (unpublished) (clause requiring that suit be brought in North Carolina enforceable even though plaintiff accused escrowee of participating in fraud). Summit Diamond Bridge Lenders, LLC v. Philip R. Seaver Title Co., Inc., 2016 WL 7427500 (Mich.App.) (unpublished) (escrow instruction clause selecting California as dispute forum not enforceable when transaction involved Michigan escrowee, real estate and borrower, and sole connection to California was would-be lender who did not make loan and which may have been a phony entity).

[443] DAB, Incorporated v. Sunbelt Rentals, Inc., 2017 WL 280692 (D.Neb.) (unpublished) (when purchase agreement incorporated escrow agreement that said parties waived jury trial over any contract dispute, jury waiver enforceable in lawsuit for breach of purchase contract); Highbridge House Ogden LLC v. Highbridge Entities LLC, 155 A.D.3d 505, 64 N.Y.S.3d 32, 2017 N.Y. Slip Op. 08187 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2017) (finding jury trial waiver in escrow instructions enforceable as to all disputes over the transaction, because escrow instructions were integrated into purchase agreement).

[444] In Appel v. Boston Nat'l Title Agency, LLC, ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 183504 (S.D.Cal. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), an escrow customer sued the escrow company for failing to promptly return deposited money. The customer suspected that its money was not returned immediately because the escrow account was short. The court held that the customer was not entitled to see the deposits and transfers for the escrow account involving other escrow customers, because those transactions were not relevant and disclosing the information would violate the privacy rights of those customers.

[445] Schuhman v. Green River Motel, 835 P.2d 992 (Utah App. 1992). However, in Busch v. Welling, 2017 WL

be classed as a prevailing-party attorney fee provision.[446] The California courts have decided a number of cases interpreting whether or not an escrow instruction indemnity supports an award of prevailing-party attorney fees under California Civil Code § 1717. Under that statute, an agreement for the award of prevailing-party attorney fees must be reciprocal to be enforceable, which has resulted in a series of seemingly inconsistent rulings.[447]

930435 (D.Ariz.) (unpublished), the court held that an escrowee that was at least grossly negligent in carrying out its simple instructions was not entitled to be reimbursed for its expenses in being sued for breach of instructions.

[446] Lee v. Investors Title Co., 241 S.W.3d 366 (Mo.App. E.D. 2007); Wei v. Culture Escrow, Inc., 2018 WL 6167880 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished).

[447] In Bruckman v. Parliament Escrow Corp., 190 Cal.App.3d 1051, 1056, 235 Cal.Rptr. 813 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1987), an indemnity provision in escrow instructions was found to support an award of prevailing-party attorney fees. However, Campbell v. Scripps Bank, 93 Cal.Rptr.2d 635, 78 Cal.App.4th 1328, 00 Cal. Daily Op.Serv. 2024 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2000) held that an indemnity did not support prevailing-party attorney fee award, and overturned Bruckman as having been decided "without analysis and out of context." That decision was followed by Rhodes v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 15429 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), in which escrow instructions that contained both an indemnity of the escrowee and a separate paragraph requiring the principal to pay the escrowee's attorney fees in a dispute was found to be a prevailing-party fee agreement. The escrowee was thus entitled to collect its attorneys' fees after successfully defending against liability under the escrow. In Paul v. Schoellkopf, 128 Cal.App.4th 147, 26 Cal.Rptr.3d 766 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2005) (certified for partial publication), the court held that parties may not construct escrow instruction indemnities to limit recovery of attorney fees to a particular type of claim, such as failure to pay escrow costs. Based on Paul and an amendment to Section 1717 of the Civil Code, a court broadened a unilateral attorney fee indemnity to be reciprocal, then applied the court-modified provision against the escrowee to permit the escrow principal to recover fees in a suit for breach of escrow instructions, in Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc., 128 Cal.App.4th 1174, 27 Cal.Rptr.3d 754 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 2005). However, a similar unilateral instruction was not made reciprocal in order to convert it to a prevailing-party fee agreement, when the escrowee prevailed, in Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corp. v. It's A Jungle Out There, Inc., 2006 WL 1305207 (N.D.Cal. 2006) (unpublished). The decision held that an attorney fee indemnity provision was not a prevailing-party fee agreement enforceable by the escrowee that prevailed in a lawsuit claiming breach of escrow instructions, because the provision was unilateral rather than reciprocal and thus did not meet the requirements of Section 1717. The same ruling was made in Castillo v. Express Escrow Co., 2011 WL 3911088 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished). However, in Marina Glencoe, L.P. v. Malibu Escrow Corp., 2010 WL 685098 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), an escrow provision saying that the principals would indemnify the escrowee in the event of a dispute, including payment of attorney fees incurred by the escrowee, was construed as a prevailing-party attorney fee agreement under Civil Code Section 1717, making the escrowee liable to the principal for its violation of the instructions. In Rideau v. Stewart Title of California, Inc., 235 Cal.App.4th 1286, 185 Cal.Rptr.3d 887 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 2015), the court held that a provision in the escrow instructions saying that the principal would defend the escrowee in a dispute over the escrow was not a reciprocal prevailing-party attorney fee agreement under California Civil Code § 1717. Thus, an escrow principal who proved the escrowee disobeyed its instructions was not entitled to collect from the escrowee the attorneys' fees it spent in suing the escrow company. In an interesting twist, the court in Fidelity National Title Co. v. 1575 Adrian Road Associates, LLC, 2015 WL 177205 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), held that a seller that sued an escrowee for "breach" of the purchase contract, as if the escrowee was a party to that agreement, must pay the escrowee back for the cost of defending that claim, under the purchase contract's prevailing-party fee provision. The escrowee was entitled to enforce that provision because the seller wrongly claimed that the escrowee was a party to the purchase contract; the court's ruling that it was not a party to the contract was not a defense to the attorney fee claim. In Bong Je Choi v. Prima Escrow, Inc., 2019 WL 5157124 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court enforced an escrow instruction requiring the parties to pay escrow fees based on the proposed sale price despite the fact that escrow did not close, but held that the escrowee was not entitled to also collect prevailing-party attorneys' fees.

In certain situations, the escrowee desires or is required to deliver the funds to a court of competent jurisdiction as full satisfaction of its obligations. This may be done by interpleader.[448] If no lawsuit has been brought, the escrowee will ordinarily have to bring at least a motion for interpleader, and perhaps a civil suit plus the motion. The order should accept delivery of the funds and release the escrowee from any further liability. If the insurer does not deposit the funds with the court under interpleader, some states say that the escrowee is a necessary party in the suit "so that [the escrowee] will be amenable to any judgment rendered after trial with respect to the disposition of the escrow funds."[449] The escrowee may not unreasonably delay in filing an interpleader action when it has received inconsistent instructions or there is a dispute between the parties about how the escrowee is to proceed.[450] When the agreement so provides, the escrowee is entitled to be reimbursed for its expenses.[451]

However, in some jurisdictions, the escrowee has a right to interplead only if certain criteria are met. For example, in Texas, interpleader is governed by Civil Procedure Rule 43. The petitioner in interpleader must prove:

> (1) it is either subject to, or has reasonable grounds to anticipate, rival claims to the same fund; (2) it has not unreasonably delayed filing an action for interpleader; and (3) it has unconditionally tendered the fund into the court's registry.

---

[448] Takayama v. Schaefer, 240 A.D.2d 21, 669 N.Y.S.2d 656 (N.Y.A.D. 2 Dept. 1998). In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Kenneally, 2011 WL 3754048 (S.D.Cal.) (unpublished), an escrowee that had been made a defendant in the California lawsuit between buyer and seller for rescission of the purchase contract, and then in the Florida lawsuit between the buyer and his law firm, was entitled to interplead the escrowed money with the court, and an order discharging it from any further duty or liability. In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Cumberland Farms, Inc., 62 Misc.3d 1205(A), 2019 N.Y. Slip Op. 50001(U), 2019 WL 82240 (Table) (Kings Cty.) (unpublished), the court said the escrowee was entitled to deposit escrowed money with the court in interpleader when it proved that the purchase did not close and there was a dispute over who was entitled to the money deposited by the buyer.

[449] Takayama v. Schaefer, supra, 669 N.Y.S.2d at 659.

[450] In Wood v. Chicago Title Agency of Las Vegas, Inc., 109 Nev. 70, 847 P.2d 738 (1993), the escrowee obeyed a clear court order to deliver funds to Chapman. However, the escrowee had previously received notice that Chapman had assigned his interest in the money to Wood. The court entered summary judgment in favor of Wood for the escrowee's failure to honor the assignment. The court was unsympathetic to the fact that it was the court itself which the escrowee had obeyed. Rather, it offered: "Chicago Title would not have been subject to contempt had it sought guidance from the district court or filed an interpleader. Unfortunately, rather than seek the district court's assistance or pay Wood pursuant to the assignment, Chicago Title, at its peril, chose to release the account without paying Wood. In so doing, Chicago Title breached the duty it owed Wood." 847 P.2d at 740.

[451] Schuhman v. Green River Motel, 835 P.2d 992 (Utah App. 1992); Advantage Title Agency, Inc. v. Rosen, 297 F.Supp.2d 536 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (escrowee normally may deduct reasonable fees and costs in filing an interpleader, but right does not "take priority over" federal tax liens and escrowee may not deduct fees if remaining funds in escrow will be less than federal tax lien amount over which escrow was created); In re The Kirk Corp., 2010 WL 2293471 (Bkcy.N.D.Ill.) (unpublished) (interpleading assists all parties when there is a dispute, so escrowee was entitled to be reimbursed attorneys' fees incurred in the interpleader action from escrowed money even though the instructions did not so provide).

Also, an interpleader action is appropriate when the principals have given conflicting instructions that cannot be reconciled; however, if the instructions can be performed, one party's objection to the escrowee's performance of those instructions is not a sufficient basis for interpleader.[452]

When a bank that is serving as an escrowee fails and is taken over by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, neither the FDIC nor the bank to whom it sells the failed bank's assets is accountable to the escrow principals for the money formerly held in escrow.[453]

13.12 Claims Against Insurer For Title Agent Escrow Acts

Escrow parties sometimes seek to make the insurer liable for the conduct of a title agency in its escrow or closing functions. Policy-issuing agents have no authority to act as agent of the underwriter for closings.[454] This subject is fully discussed in Chapter 17, particularly in §17.2.

13.13 Laws Regulating Closing Funds

Most states have passed laws regulating the method or instrument by which money may be delivered to or accepted by escrow companies and other closing agents.[455] Utah has a law requiring that an escrowee have collected funds before it issues funds from the escrow.[456] In that state, an escrow closes on the day prescribed by the closing funds statute, which in most cases is the day after the funds are deposited.[457]

---

[452] For example, when the instructions were reasonably clear that earnest money belonged to the buyer, an objection by the seller to the release of the funds (solicited by the escrowee) was found an insufficient basis for interpleader of the funds. Interpleader was also not permitted when there was an existing lawsuit about the sale of the property and the suit by the escrowee (one of the parties' attorney) smelled to the court like forum-shopping. Mesirov Gelman Jaffe Cramer & Jamieson, LLP v. SVD Realty, LP, 2001 WL 120142 (E.D.Pa.) (unpublished). In Land Title Co. v. Dubois, 2000 WL 688253 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished), the escrow instructions said the funds were to go back to the buyer if he gave notice within a review period. The buyer gave the notice to the escrowee. Out of an abundance of caution, the escrowee asked the seller if it objected to the return of funds, which she did. The escrowee then brought an interpleader action. The court found that there was insufficient evidence of a dispute to justify interpleader. It said: " [t]he claims ... must be such as to place the stakeholder in some real doubt or hazard to entitle it to the remedy of interpleader, and the doubt must at least be a reasonable one." The court denied interpleader and made the escrowee pay the buyer's attorney fees in seeking the funds.

[453] When a bank failed while it was holding $1,250,000 in escrow, and the FDIC took over the bank and sold at least certain of its assets to Centennial Bank, the federal court held that the company whose money was being held in escrow was not entitled to its return, and did not even have standing to sue either the FDIC or Centennial Bank to get the money back. The court acted as though the money had simply evaporated. The court did not say that the FDIC owed anyone an accounting, or suggest any recourse to the escrow principal for the loss of its money. RPM National Foundation, Inc. v. Centennial Bank, 603 Fed.Appx. 836 (11th Cir. (Fla.)) (unpublished).

[454] See Cameron County Savings Ass'n v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 819 S.W.2d 600 (Tex.App. 1991).

[455] See, for example, California Insurance Code §12413.1, discussed in Newman v. Bank of New York Mellon, 2017 WL 4325772 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished).

[456] Utah Code Ann. § 31A-23-307(2) states: " (c) No check may be drawn, executed, or dated unless the segregated

One purpose of such laws is to limit the borrower's risk that a mortgage lender will go out of business and fail to fund loans closed by it or on its behalf.[458] A number of such failures have occurred.[459] There have also been many instances of schemes by criminals designed to steal money from escrowees' trust accounts. The combination of these risks creates a large danger to customers, title insurers, title agents and escrow companies.[460]

The National Association of Insurance Commissioners has promulgated the Title Insurance Agent Model Act and Title Insurers Model Act. Both model acts contain closing funds provisions.[461]

When a mortgage banker collapses and fails to honor the loan funding instrument, the closer's checks or wire transfers have already funded the loan. The closer is in the unenviable position of being asked to make its funds good, if possible, with scant likelihood of being repaid later. The escrowee logically will seek to take legal possession and assignment of the loan documents.

It seems logical that the escrowee should be entitled to hold the note, since it has funded the loan. However, the case of In re Union Security Mortgage Co. found to the contrary. In that case, Union Security Mortgage "funded" the loan with a $72,867 check issued to East Tennessee Title Insurance Agency, Inc. (ETT), the closer. ETT issued its checks to close the transaction. The Union Security check bounced. ETT immediately sued for a writ of possession for the note and deed of trust. It dropped the suit when it received a voluntary assignment from Union Security. ETT began to escrow account against which it is drawn contains a sufficient credit balance consisting of collected or cleared funds, at the time the check is drawn, executed, or dated. … (d)(iii) [C]ashier's checks, certified checks, teller's checks, U.S. Postal Service money orders, and check s drawn on a Federal Reserve Home Loan Bank may be disbursed on the day following the date of deposit... ."

---

457 Schuhman v. Green River Motel, 835 P.2d 992 (Utah App. 1992).

458 However, in Newman v. Bank of New York Mellon, 2017 WL 4325772 (E.D.Cal.) (unpublished), the court found that a borrower was not entitled to disavow his loan or defeat foreclosure of the deed of trust by asserting that the title company that closed the loan disbursed before the money arrived, in violation of California's good funds law.

459 See John Q. Beard, Lawyers Just Want to Have Funds, ABA Journal, September, 2001 (discussing good funds laws and risks in disbursing on uncollected funds).

460 Numerous articles have been published on a variety of schemes, including the following helpful items: Kurt Pahl, Check Fraud--The Rules Have Changed and You Are Exposed; Chuck Conner, Red Flags: Look For Warning Signs on Checks Being Deposited Into Escrow!; and Staying Clear of Lender Fraud is Tougher Than Ever, also by Conner, all appeared in Settlement Services Today magazine, in the May, July, and August, 1999 issues, respectively.

461 The model acts require the insurer-closer to obtain one of the following classes of funds before disbursing: "(1) Cash; (2) Wire transfers such that the funds are unconditionally received by the title insurance agent [insurer] or the agent's [insurer's] depository; (3) Checks, drafts, negotiable orders of withdrawal, money orders and any other item that has been finally paid before any disbursements; (4) A depository check, including a certified check, governed by the provisions of the Federal Expedited Funds Availability Act, 12 U.S.C. § 4001, et seq.; or (5) Credit transfers through the Automated Clearing House (ACH) which have been deemed available by the depository institution receiving the credits. The credits must conform to the operating rules set forth by the National Automated Clearing House Association (NACHA)." §10(E), Agent Act; §16(E), Insurer Act.

get monthly payments from the borrower. About a month later, Union Security was forced into an involuntary bankruptcy. The bankruptcy trustee brought suit against ETT to avoid the assignment of the loan to ETT as a preference. The Bankruptcy Court granted the trustee summary judgment, which the District Court reversed. The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, however, reversed again, voiding the assignment as a preference. The District Court decision was based on the view that ETT held equitable title to the loan documents from the time it funded the loan. The assignment of the documents thus, in that court's opinion, merely transferred the "bare legal title" to the documents, and was not attackable as a preference. The Sixth Circuit disagreed with this analysis, stating:

> ETT's argument rests upon a flawed conception of debtor's arrangement with ETT. Debtor [Union Security] plainly did not agree to give ETT $72,867 as consideration for ETT's "transfer" of the note and deed of trust. That debtor did not so agree is revealed by the fact that ETT never had any ownership rights in those documents, which were made out to debtor and held by ETT merely as an escrow agent. Instead, the arrangement between debtor and ETT appears to have been a more pedestrian one: in exchange for a relatively small fee, ETT agreed to make appropriate dispersals of funds and documents upon the satisfaction of certain conditions. Debtor's delivery of the $72,867 check to ETT was one of those conditions, just as Collins' delivery of the warranty deed to ETT was one of those conditions. Debtor's delivery of the check no more discharged an obligation owed by debtor to ETT than Collins' delivery of the warranty deed discharged an obligation owed by her to ETT. These deliveries were merely incident to the performance of ETT's escrow agent function. Since no obligation owed by debtor to ETT underlay debtor's delivery of the check to ETT, there was no "underlying obligation" upon which ETT could maintain an action when the check was dishonored.[462]

The court also dismissed several other arguments made by ETT, including that the assignment was not a preference because the debtor "paid nothing for the note transferred, received nothing and had nothing under state law." The Sixth Circuit admitted that the lender had not funded the loan. The court rested its decision on the undisputed fact that the loan itself was valuable, and therefore an assignment of the loan was a preference.

The Union Security decision errs by mischaracterizing the relationship between the lender and closer as strictly escrow. The court held in effect that the lender's only obligation to the closer was the deposit of a check, rather than the delivery of the loan funds. The court ignored the fact that a mortgage banker closer/escrowee has dual roles: escrowee as between the parties to the transaction, and also agent of the lender as between lender and borrower. In its role as lender's agent, the closer funds the loan on the lender's written promise to deposit funds with the closer for the loan amount. The lender's breach of its promise to fund leaves its agent as the permanent loan funder. The assignment of the loan documents to ETT was perfunctory and, in the closing industry, a phenomenon which is more and more common. The lender was unable to fund the loan, probably because its line of credit had been frozen. Both lender and closer knew that the lender had no right to sell the loan on the secondary market, since that would require a representation that the lender had fully funded the loan. Therefore, the lender got a release of its liability to ETT by transferring the loan to it. By unwinding this assignment, without requiring the debtor to fund the loan, the court gave the debtor a windfall that the debtor itself had already acknowledged it should not receive.

---

[462] In re Union Security Mortgage Co., 25 F.3d 338, 342 (6th Cir. 1994).

In a case resulting from the demise of Abbey Financial, the escrowee was not permitted to recover from the bank that purchased the loans on a claim for unjust enrichment. In Greenwald v. Chase Manhattan Mortgage Corp.,[463] the Greenwald law firm closed a series of loans for Abbey. Chase Manhattan bought a block of loans from Abbey just before it went out of business, including two funded by the Greenwald firm. The trial court granted summary judgment to Chase, saying that, while Chase did hold the loans, "[Chase] paid for them" and, consequently, "[a]lthough defendant may be seen to have benefitted from plaintiffs' mistake, it was not enriched thereby and certainly not unjustly enriched." The appellate court focused on the timing of events. If Chase bought the loans after Greenwald had funded them, it "paid value for notes which had full value," and the bank would be a purchaser for value with "very strong" equity on its side. However, if Chase bought the loans before Greenwald funded them, as Greenwald argued was the case, > Chase had already paid its funds to an insolvent recipient (Abbey) and held worthless (or at least less valuable) paper until the Greenwald firm paid off the first mortgages. So viewed, the case looks more like one in which Chase was enriched (whether or not unjustly is a different matter).

If the bank bought the loans before they were funded, > this puts Chase in the position (or nearly so) of one who receives a third party's payment on a valid debt--but a debt on which the lender would otherwise not be able to collect from the insolvent debtor. The only difference is that the payments that benefitted Chase were made to a third party (the prior mortgagees) rather than directly to Chase. If the person who had paid off the loan had acted on a mistake of fact, he might seek restitution from the lender. Would he win?

The answer in Massachusetts, the federal court decided, was no. The court cited the Restatement of Restitution (1936) as its sole authority. It held that Greenwald had paid Abbey's debt under the mistaken belief that it had a right to be repaid by Abbey, but the restatement does not require Chase to repay Greenwald because it was not aware of "the circumstances" when it bought the loans.

In a series of cases stemming from the failure of Island Mortgage, title agents' claims to own the loans they funded were denied, in several cases because the agent failed to follow a good funds law.[464] For example, in Guardian Title Agency, LLC v. Matrix Capital Bank,[465] Island Mortgage filed bankruptcy shortly after Guardian Title Agency closed an Island loan with Island's ordinary check, on which payment was stopped. Matrix Capital Bank got an assignment of the loan from Island. When the check bounced, Guardian sued Matrix for unjust enrichment, to get the note back (replevin), to reform the deed of trust to put Guardian as the lienholder, and other claims. Guardian alleged that, about two weeks before the Sheck closing, Matrix officers went to see Island because it had refused to turn over promissory notes on loans bought by Matrix. Matrix reported Island to the New York State Banking Commission and the FBI. Island wired $2 million back to Matrix, then folded. Guardian alleged that the money returned to Matrix may have included the purchase price for the Sheck loan. Matrix asked the court to dismiss Guardian's complaint because the title agent had failed to get good funds as required by Colorado law. The Colorado law was passed in 1987 in response to the failure of Reliance Equities, which also left title companies and consumers holding bad checks.

---

[463] 241 F.3d 76 (1st Cir. 2001).

[464] A Georgia title agent was denied recovery in part because the agent violated that state's good funds law, and therefore had no legal right on which to claim the loans. Prudential Securities Credit Corp., LLC v. Stewart Title Guar.

The Colorado law apparently contains a flaw in that it regulates closers, not lenders. The court analyzed the issue this way:

> Title insurance agencies that engage in closing and settlement services are governed by C.R.S. § 38-35-125. This statute, known as the "Good Funds" law, provides that: "No person or entity that provides closing and settlement services for a real estate transaction shall disburse funds as a part of such services until those funds have been received and are ... available for immediate withdrawal." ... [F]ailure to comply with the Good Funds statute violates Colorado Insurance Regulation 3-5-1, which provides that "[t]he disbursement of funds prior to the actual delivery of 'GOOD FUNDS' to the closing and settlement services agent' is defined as an 'unlawful inducement.'"
>
> The face of the Complaint in this case reveals that Plaintiff failed to obtain good funds in the Scheck transaction. ... The Good Funds law was developed as a solution to "the need to insure that the title company or other party responsible for real estate closings has 'good funds' in hand before closing real estate transactions." ... In the event that the responsible party does not have good funds in hand before closing, the statute helps resolve the situation 'without causing undue expense, burden or delay to the consumer or any of the affected industries' by placing the burden of obtaining good funds, and the concomitant risks associated with a failure to obtain good funds, on the responsible party. ...

The court agreed with the lender, Matrix, that Guardian could not sue on breach of contract or unjust enrichment, because Guardian's violation of the good funds law made the loan transaction illegal, saying:

Co. (In re Apponline.com, Inc.), 284 B.R. 181 (Bkcy.E.D.N.Y. 2002). The Island Mortgage court also found that the title company closer lost a contest over the loan to a purchaser of the loan that was a holder in due course. Broward Title Co. v. Jacobs (In re AppOnline.com., Inc.), 285 B.R. 805 (Bkcy.E.D.N.Y. 2002).

[465] 141 F.Supp.2d 1277 (D.Colo. 2001).

> The "bargain" (real estate transaction), was clearly not illegal per se. Had the parties complied with all applicable statutes, no illegality would have occurred. However, by failing to require "good funds" ... I find that Plaintiff injected an 'illegal purpose' into the situation and the 'bargain' became illegal.

Second, the court rejected the claim that Matrix had to give the note back to Guardian. A person may not sue for the equitable help of replevin and reformation if he does not have clean hands. Guardian's hands were dirty:

> The undisputed facts and [Guardian's] admission demonstrate that [Guardian] did, in fact, violate Colorado statutes by failing to require good funds at the Closing. As a result, I find that [Guardian] did not have clean hands and is barred from obtaining equitable relief.

Finally, Guardian could not sue Matrix for misrepresentation, because it was the party at fault under the law. The same court has handled several other similar claims by closers. It rejected a claim by a Georgia title agent, again holding that the agent violated that state's good funds law, and therefore had no legal right on which to claim the loans.[466] In a third decision, the Island Mortgage court ruled that the title company closer lost a contest over the loan because Matrix was a holder in due course.[467]

Other state good funds laws may be vulnerable to this type of challenge. For example, some have adopted versions of the NAIC Model Title Insurance Act which includes good funds regulation of the title industry, not lenders. By contrast, the Wisconsin good funds law makes the lender liable to the settlement agent if it fails to deliver good funds, rather than placing the burden of compliance on the settlement agent.[468] The Wisconsin law is administered by the Department of Financial Institutions, not the insurance commissioner.

The settlement agent took a different and more successful tack in Lanco Title Agency, Inc. v. Mortgage Plus, Inc.[469] In that case, as in the cases discussed above, a warehouse lender refused to honor a loan funding check, forcing the title company to take out a loan to cover its disbursement checks. Rather than seek to own the loan, however, the title company obtained an order voiding the mortgage for lack of consideration. It then obtained a voluntary equitable lien in its favor from the borrowers. The appeals court affirmed the order voiding the mortgage:

---

[466] Prudential Securities Credit Corp., LLC v. Stewart Title Guar. Co. (In re Apponline.com, Inc.), 284 B.R. 181 (Bkcy.E.D.N.Y. 2002).

[467] Broward Title Co. v. Jacobs (In re AppOnline.com., Inc.), 285 B.R. 805 (Bkcy.E.D.N.Y. 2002).

[468] 708.10, Wis.Stats.

[469] 2004-Ohio-2267, 2004 WL 979827 (Ohio App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished).

> Flagstar argues that the Taylors received consideration for the mortgage. However, that is of no significance for the dispute between Lanco and Flagstar. While the Taylors' debts were paid off as they expected, neither Mortgage Plus nor Flagstar advanced any money that went to pay those debts. The sole source of the funds that paid off the Taylors' debts was Lanco. Flagstar has presented no facts that would raise a genuine issue on this fact for trial.

The court rejected the lender's argument that the title company should lose because it violated the Ohio good funds law. It also refused the argument that the equitable lien in favor of the title agent should be struck because the agent had "unclean hands."

13.14 Recovery Against Third Parties For Escrow Losses

When an escrowee has been compelled to reimburse a party to the escrow, it is in most cases entitled to recover the money from the party who received it in error.[470] Courts have rejected a variety of defenses raised by the recipients of the money that, if accepted, would merely allow the recipient to be unjustly enriched by the escrowee's mistaken payment or overpayment.[471] However, certain defenses can apply to prevent or limit the escrowee's right to recover the money, including the passage of time before the escrowee seeks the return of the money.[472]

---

[470] In Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Mundelius, 887 S.W.2d 726 (Mo.App. 1994), for example, when the escrowee prepared the closing statement and listed the sale price as $2,000 too little, the escrowee reimbursed the seller for the mistake. The buyer was then obligated to pay the escrowee. In In re Demarest, 176 B.R. 917 (Bkcy.W.D.Wash. 1995), the insurer-escrowee missed a mortgage in its title search, the seller was found to have a duty to advise the escrowee that the closing statement was wrong. Because it did not, and thus received $65,000 too much from closing, the insurer had a cause of action against the seller for fraudulent concealment. The debt was nondischargeable in bankruptcy, because the money was obtained under "false pretenses" per §523(a)(2)(A) of the Code. In Absure, Inc. v. Huffman, 213 W.Va. 651, 584 S.E.2d 507 (W.Va. 2003), the buyers received an improper credit at closing. The title company reimbursed the sellers who were shorted. The court found the buyers liable to the escrowee. In Poling v. Palm Coast Title & Abstract Co., Inc., 882 So.2d 483 (Fla.App. 5 Dist. 2004), sellers who were overpaid at closing were required to return the extra cash. In Hill v. Cross Country Settlements, LLC, 172 Md.App 350, 914 A.2d 231 (Md.App. 2007), a seller who received too much money at closing due to the fact that her mortgage was missed in the title search was required to pay the money back to the settlement agent, despite the searching error.

[471] In Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Mundelius, 887 S.W.2d 726 (Mo.App. 1994), for example, the court rejected the payee's argument that the money it received by mistake was a "compromise settlement" or a "voluntary payment," saying: "[t]he payor should be allowed to recover for payments made for others in good faith where, because of the relationship, he had reason to believe it would be reimbursed [and escrowee] had reason to believe that defendant would reimburse it for costs associated with the purchase." 887 S.W.2d at 728. In Absure, Inc. v. Huffman, 213 W.Va. 651, 584 S.E.2d 507 (W.Va. 2003), the court held that the fact that the title company made a mistake did not bar its recovery of the money, which would be unjust enrichment if left in the buyers' hands. In Trahan v. Lone Star Title Co. of El Paso, Inc., 247 S.W.3d 269 (Tex.App.-El Paso 2007), the court held that an escrowee that stopped payment on a check which would have incorrectly refunded closing proceeds was not guilty of "theft." In Arch Escrow Corp. v. KTW, LLC, 2003 WL 22451727 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court found that the party who caused the escrowee to pay money improperly may not assert the breach of instructions as a defense to the escrowee's demand for the return of the money improperly paid.

[472] In Lawson v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 69 Md.App. 476, 518 A.2d 174 (1986), the seller received too

An escrowee seeking to recover money paid to the wrong party by accident may support that claim with an agreement signed by the escrow principal in which he or she agreed to correct errors and to repay any excess money paid to them by mistake from closing.[473] Another doctrine that can support a claim for reimbursement is the principle of equitable subrogation.[474] The escrowee may much money from closing but the court denied the insurer's suit to recover the money based on a statute of limitations. The court noted the fact that the "sophisticated national company" had failed to act on its error for a considerable length of time. In McKinley Title Agency, Inc. v. Cheyney, 2002-Ohio-4072, 2002 WL 1823002 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), the closer made an error in pro-rating taxes. The trial court split the difference between the seller and the title company, and the judgment was affirmed, although the appellate court acknowledged that the seller thus received a windfall. In St. Paul Title Co. v. Meier, 181 Cal.App.3d 948, 226 Cal.Rptr. 538 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1986), an escrowee that was sued for having disbursed money incorrectly was found not to have a cause of action against the attorney who drafted the confusing instructions. The court invented a less than overwhelming public policy concern, saying that to impose such a duty on an attorney "would be both 'an undue burden on the profession'... and a diminution in the quality of the legal services received by the client." In Guaranty Nat'l Title Co., Inc. v. J.E.G. Associates, 1995 WL 708667 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished), an escrowee's claim for recoupment of excess funds paid out was denied as time-barred. The insurer held $9,650.00 in escrow, to be returned on occurrence of an event. When it returned the funds, it issued a check for $96,500.00. The error was not discovered for more than five years. The court held that the escrowee should have known of the error within 60 days of the issuance of the check, since the check would be shown on its next statement. The court rejected the argument that the escrow party was obliged to return the funds under the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing, which duty the court refused to find applicable. In any event, the court ruled, that duty does not "impose an unlimited duty of honesty and righteousness." Further, the court refused to nullify the statute of limitations in order to prevent unjust enrichment. The court cited a treatise to the effect that unjust enrichment is not an equitable remedy, but merely "refers to the way in which a claim should be approached 'since it is clear that the action is at law and the relief is a simple money judgment.'"[472] Similarly, a party to an escrow lost the right to an accounting by waiting more than six years to sue. Temple v. AmSouth Bank, 40 Fed.Appx. 943, 2002 WL 1608337 (6th Cir. (Tenn.) 2002). In District Title v. Warren, 118 F.Supp.3d 249 (D.D.C. 2015), affirmed by District Title v. Warren, 612 Fed.Appx. 5 (D.C.App. 2015) (unpublished), the court held that a home seller who mistakenly received her lender's payoff money in a wire transfer made by the title company closer was not entitled to dismissal of the title agent's suit to recover the money, on the theory that the money belonged to the lender and the agent had no "standing" to sue for its return.

---

[473] See Guaranty Title Agency of Arizona, Inc. v. 402 Property Wholesalers, L.L.C., 2007 WL 5463558 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (when loan payoff was short, seller owed the shortage amount and fact that title agent made mistake on closing statement was offset by seller's agreement to refund money for closing errors). In Givens v. Ward, 272 S.W.3d 63 (Tex.App.-Waco 2009), because there was a genuine dispute over whether or not a deed should be reformed, the seller was not (yet) guilty of breaching a closing agreement requiring him to correct errors on request. In Charter Title Agency, Inc. v. Hosfelt Investment Co., 1999 WL 1221527 (Ohio App. 10 Dist.) (unpublished), the seller signed an agreement "to fully cooperate and adjust for clerical errors on any or all documents deemed necessary in the reasonable discretion of" the settlement agent. The court found that this obligated the seller to reimburse the closer for taxes that were incorrectly prorated on the closing statement. Charter Title Agency, Inc. of Ohio issued a title commitment which showed the proper amount of taxes owed. The court found that the seller would be unjustly enriched if it did not have to pay the taxes. It also emphasized that the title commitment showed the correct amount, and that the seller had signed the compliance agreement.

[474] In Tower City Title Agency, LLC v. Flaisman, 2001 WL 409528 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished), the court used equitable subrogation to order borrowers to pay back a title agency for a shortage on a loan payoff. The court noted that the twin purposes of equitable subrogation are "the prevention of frauds and relief against mistakes… ." The court held that the borrowers had, "in effect, received a $1,000 interest-free loan from" the title agent, and thus both equitable subrogation and unjust enrichment applied. The Flaismans argued that Tower City's negligence should keep it from being repaid. The court noted that the Flaismans were not "innocent" parties who would be harmed by having to return a

also have the right to be indemnified or reimbursed by a party to the escrow if that party falsely accuses the escrowee of wrongdoing.[475]

However, the escrowee's right to recover money paid from escrow to a creditor or other third party is different from its rights against the principals to the escrow, who are in privity with the escrowee. Thus, an escrowee may be prevented from recovering money it paid to a third party contrary to its instructions, if the full amount paid was actually owed to that third party and the circumstances would not indicate that the recipient was unjustly enriched by the receipt of the money.[476] An escrowee may pursue all legal remedies for collection of funds that third parties refuse to return. In some circumstances, criminal prosecution and other extreme measures are required or prudent.[477]

The escrowee also has the right to recover money stolen from its escrow account from the parties who received the money, including third parties, especially if the third parties had reason to understand that the money they received was not the property of the thief who gave it to them.[478] The windfall payment. Rather, it said, they "received an extra $1,000 to which they were not contractually entitled, and [Tower City] is $1,000 short."

---

[475] In Yan v. Burnet Title, Inc., 2012 IL App (1st) 111747-U, 2012 WL 6962163 (Ill.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished), a buyer was ordered to pay a title company's entire defense costs as a sanction, in an action in which the buyer falsely asserted that the escrow officer forged her name on the HUD-1 and other closing documents, as she tried to weasel out of the auction purchase of a HUD-foreclosed property.

[476] In Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc., 1996 WL 523815 (Minn.App.) (unpublished), an escrowee disbursed funds under a bankruptcy court order for sale free and clear, but failed to deduct from the secured creditor's proceeds the amount of a special assessment discovered when the tax search was updated. The insurer was not permitted to recover the money from the creditor. The court found no unjust enrichment, since the funds received by the lender were still less than the full debt owed. The court held that the insurer-escrowee should bear the ultimate loss because it violated its instructions. "This is just another version of the classic case where a land title insurance company or an abstractor who legitimately charges a fee for such services misses a recorded document of title, and becomes liable for the resulting pecuniary loss." Id. at p. 3.

[477] An escrowee that went to the police after being rebuffed by a person overpaid at closing was not guilty of malicious prosecution. Weststar Mortg. Corp. v. Jackson, 133 N.M. 114, 61 P.3d 823 (2002). The escrowee, Weststar, sent too much money to a person who sold his installment real estate contract to the escrowee. His lawyer told him that "the money was theirs to keep and that Jackson could not be arrested for keeping the money." When Weststar talked to the lawyer, he said he viewed the error as a "golden opportunity" for his clients, and laughed when they asked for the money back. Weststar went to the police, and the person was prosecuted. Weststar also sued for unjust enrichment, fraud and other claims, and was countersued for malicious abuse of process. The jury awarded damages on the claim, but the Supreme Court reversed. Similarly, in Courtman v. Hudson Valley Bank, 37 A.D.3d 181, 829 N.Y.S.2d 67, 2007 N.Y. Slip Op. 00996 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2007), when an escrow account was set up at a bank to pay off a man's judgments, and the bank mistakenly handed the money over to the debtor and called the sheriff when he refused to return the cash, the debtor had no right to sue the bank for false arrest or emotional distress.

[478] In Proctor v. Whitlark & Whitlark, Inc., 406 S.C. 225, 750 S.E.2d 93 (S.C.App. 2013), a title insurer paid out over $500,000 due to theft of escrow money by a title agent employee to feed her gambling habit. The court held that the employee may recover from the owners of the illegal video poker machines into which she dumped the money, so that she can make restitution. A 1997 South Carolina decision had held that a gambler could sue the operator of a video poker machine under a state law if the machine was not run according to state regulation. The Proctor court recognized that the escrowee may also have a right to recover from a sub-escrowee, mobile closer, closing attorney or other party who performed services related to the escrow that caused liability to the escrowee.[479]

The escrowee may seek to recover, from its bank or others, money stolen from its escrow account by unknown outsiders who hack into the escrow account, or by a check kiter.[480] The escrowee should continuously monitor its escrow account activity to make sure that checks, wires and account transfers are processed correctly. A bank may successfully assert a short statute of limitations in an action by the escrowee seeking to recover money improperly paid by the bank.[481]

The escrowee may also recover from a bank when it honors a fraudulent wire transfer request, sending closing money to the account of a person who is not a party to the transaction, under a wire transfer fraud scheme.[482]

The escrowee may also have a right of subrogation or indemnification from a surety that has issued a notary, employee theft or blanket bond. See §5.7 for a discussion of the cases regarding recovery on a notary's bond, subrogation against sureties on other types of bonds, and subrogation rights against other classes of parties. The escrowee's rights against a taxpayer on payment of a federal tax lien are discussed in §3.4.7.9. A title insurer's rights against a negligent or defalcating policy-issuing agent are discussed in §17.8.

When a bank that is serving as an escrowee fails and is taken over by the Federal Deposit laws should be read to "promote a policy which prevents a gambler from allowing his vice to overcome his ability to pay" and "protect a citizen and his family from the gambler's uncontrollable impulses." In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Sinikovic, 125 F.Supp.3d 769 (N.D.Ill. 2015), a title insurer's escrow department employee stole about $1.6 million through real estate closings and "invested" it in various ventures with third parties, including relatives, in order to shield the money from recovery by the company. The court held that the title insurer was entitled to take a judgment against the third parties and to impose a constructive trust on the real estate that they had bought with its money.

---

[479] In Villanueva v. First American Title Ins. Co., 292 Ga. 630, 740 S.E.2d 108 (Ga. 2013), a title insurer that paid a lender whose money was stolen from a closing attorney's trust account was found to be entitled to pursue a legal malpractice claim against the closing attorney, despite the lawyer's plea to the Georgia Supreme Court that such claims should not be assignable. See §5.7 for a complete discussion of decisions concerning suits by title insurers and escrowees to recover from banks for improper payments on company accounts.

[480] In Choice Escrow and Land Title, LLC v. BancorpSouth Bank, 2013 WL 1121339 (W.D.Mo.) (unpublished), a hacker planted a Trojan horse that captured a title company's escrow account and wire transfer password, and used that information to initiate a wire to Cypress. The title company and not the bank bore the loss, because the title agent had declined a safer wire transfer option offered by the bank.

[481] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. California Canadian Bank, 1 Cal.App. 4th 798, 2 Cal.Rptr.2d 422 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1991); affirming Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 174 Cal.App.3d 1142, 220 Cal.Rptr. 507 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1985); (discussed in Current Developments In Title Insurance 1992, Practicing Law Institute N-384 1992, Recent Developments and Decisions, John L. Hosack, at p. 643). Prior related opinions in the case are: United States v. Benny, 559 F.Supp. 264 (N.D.Cal. 1983); aff'd 786 F.2d 1410 (9th Cir. 1986).

[482] In Thuney v. Lawyers Title of Arizona, Inc., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 467653 (D.Ariz. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), a bank that had been warned that fraudsters were trying to misdirect a wire transfer for purchase money, but that wired the money to the fraudsters' account anyway, was not entitled to dismissal of the buyers' claims.

Insurance Corporation, neither the FDIC nor the bank to whom it sells the failed bank's assets is accountable to the escrow principals for the money formerly held in escrow.[483]

13.15 Tax-Deferred Exchange Intermediary And Accommodation Party Role

The Internal Revenue Service acknowledges the deferral of capital gain on the sale of real estate and other property when the taxpayer performs a deferred exchange of one property for another.[484] The IRS rules create a safe harbor for taxpayers who use a qualified intermediary to sell the relinquished property and purchase the replacement property.

The role of "qualified intermediary" is essentially a creature of regulation. The IRS definition requires that the intermediary not be the agent of the taxpayer. Title insurers, title agencies and escrow companies qualify, barring a special relationship with a particular taxpayer. The attorney for the taxpayer is not permitted to serve as intermediary.[485] Thus, a title agent or approved attorney who also serves as counsel for the taxpayer is presumably not a qualified intermediary. The company serving as intermediary is not a tax advisor, and does not breach a duty to the taxpayer if the exchange fails to qualify for tax deferral under Section 1031.[486] However, a court may find that the intermediary is liable to the taxpayer if it prepared exchange documents and fails to confirm that those documents set up the type of exchange that the taxpayer seeks.[487]

One of the essential elements of the original safe harbor was that the taxpayer had to sell the relinquished property before purchasing the replacement property. The IRS has issued a guidance creating a safe harbor mechanism for "reverse" exchanges in which one of the properties is "parked" with an "accommodation title holder."[488] Under this arrangement, the accommodation title holder

---

[483] When a bank failed while it was holding $1,250,000 in escrow, and the FDIC took over the bank and sold at least certain of its assets to Centennial Bank, the federal court held that the company whose money was being held in escrow was not entitled to its return, and did not even have standing to sue either the FDIC or Centennial Bank to get the money back. The court acted as though the money had simply evaporated. The court did not say that the FDIC owed anyone an accounting, or suggest any recourse to the escrow principal for the loss of its money. RPM National Foundation, Inc. v. Centennial Bank, 603 Fed.Appx. 836 (11th Cir. (Fla.)) (unpublished).

[484] 26 U.S.C. § 1031.

[485] 26 U.S.C. § 1031.

[486] Cheney v. Hinton Burdick Hall & Spilker, PLLC, 366 P.3d 1220, 2015 UT App 242 (Utah App. 2015) (taxpayers who chose as replacement properties to make non-qualifying investments in a mortgage company were not entitled to sue intermediary for their failure to get deeds to real estate as the replacement legs for their "exchanges").

[487] In Kreisers Inc. v. First Dakota Title Ltd. Ptnshp., 2014 S.D. 56, 852 N.W.2d 413 (S.D. 2014), a title agent that served as intermediary in a tax-deferred exchange and that did not ask if the customer intended a forward or reverse parking exchange arrangement was found liable to the customer for the taxes it did not defer. The intermediary set up the documents for a standard forward exchange when the customer needed to do a reverse parking exchange instead. The taxpayer had a tax advisor, but the tax advisor relayed its advice through the taxpayer, who either did not send the information to the intermediary or got the message garbled.

[488] Bulletin 2000-40, Rev.Proc. 2000-37, published on October 2, 2000.

takes title to one of the properties and holds it until the taxpayer is in a position to convey the relinquished property before taking title to the replacement. The accommodation title holder need not be qualified intermediary, but there is no prohibition against one company performing both functions.

A central tenet of the deferred exchange rules is that the qualified intermediary and accommodation title holder have the benefits and burdens of ownership of the real estate. Thus, although the IRS permits the taxpayer to fund the purchase of real estate and guaranty a loan obtained by the accommodation party, for example, the accommodation party must have the risks and rewards of being the "real" owner.

The intermediary's unique legal status is different from the role of an escrowee, which is a limited agent of the principals. Escrowed property is not an asset of the escrowee. Nonetheless, in several contexts, courts have found that funds and property held by an intermediary is not a real asset of the exchange company.

When a tax-deferred exchange intermediary becomes a bankruptcy debtor, difficult issues arise as to whether the money and real estate held by the intermediary is property of the estate, and if not how to allocate the property between the creditors.[489] An intermediary who invests the money it

---

[489] When LandAmerica's exchange company failed, the court put exchange principals into several classes, then made rulings on their entitlement to the funds in the company by class. In Millard Refrigerated Services, Inc. v. LandAmerica 1031 Exchange Services, Inc., 412 B.R. 800 (Bkcy.E.D.Va. 2009), the court held that even exchange money held in a segregated account was property of the estate, and thus the taxpayers were not entitled to retrieve it. The court later ruled that money that was not in segregated accounts also was property of the estate. Frontier Pepper's Ferry, LLC Howard Finkelstein and Matthew B. Luxenberg, Trustee v. LandAmerica Financial Group, Inc., 2009 WL 1269578 (Bkcy.E.D.Va.) (unpublished). In Rechtzigel Trust v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. of New York, 748 N.W.2d 312 (Minn.App. 2008), the trustee sought to recover sale proceeds delivered by the intermediary. The court found taxpayer funds not to be property of the estate, in In re Sale Guaranty Corp., 220 B.R. 660, 2 Cal.Bkcy.Ct.Rep. 80 (1998). Also, in In re Exchanged Titles, Inc., 159 B.R. 303 (Bkcy.C.D.Cal.1993), the court said: "For the purpose of the exchange ... there was no need for [the accommodator] to acquire a 'real' interest in the ... property by assuming the benefits and burdens of ownership to make the exchange qualify under the statute ... . [One] need not assume the benefits and burdens of ownership in property before exchanging it but may properly acquire title solely for the purpose of exchange and accept title and transfer it in exchange for other like property... ." The intermediary in Deer Creek, Inc. v. Section 1031 Services, Inc., 235 Ga.App. 891, 510 S.E.2d 853 (1999) was a man who assumed the identity of a dead person. He withdrew more than $2 million from the account and left the country. Two exchange parties got orders directing the bank to turn over their deposits from the money remaining in the account. Other exchange parties were not permitted to force them to return the funds and accept a pro rata division. The court characterized the account as an escrow account. There are lengthy discussions of the principles concerning distribution of money to numerous defrauded people when the money was in a commingled bank account maintained by the debtor in three decisions emanating from the downfall of exchange intermediary companies controlled by Edward Okun, in In re 1031 Tax Group, LLC, 439 B.R. 47 (Bkcy. S.D.N.Y. 2010); 439 B.R. 78 (Bkcy.S.D. N.Y. 2010); and 439 B.R. 84 (Bkcy. S.D.N.Y. 2010). In a case stemming from the LandAmerica 1031 Exchange Services bankruptcy, In re § 1031 Exchange Litigation, 716 F.Supp.2d 415 (D.S.C. 2010), two lawsuits brought by LandAmerica 1031 customers against SunTrust Bank for its multiple roles in the company's meltdown were dismissed. The interesting premise was that the bank did not actually know that LES would use later exchange deposits to cash out earlier exchanges when they became due, and therefore owed no duty to the taxpayers, even though SunTrust handled all of the LandAm 1031 accounts and had arranged for the short-term purchase of $200 million in auction-rate securities with the money in the commingled exchange account.

holds for exchanges is as if it was the intermediary's own property is guilty of stealing.[490]

The accommodation title holder faces several significant risks. As the owner of the exchange property, the accommodation party may enter into a number of contracts and loan documents. The accommodation party may have significant liabilities if those obligations are not unwound when the exchange is completed or aborted.[491]

---

[490] State v. Grimes, 110 Wash.App. 272 (Wash.App. Div. 1 2002), amended 111 Wash.App. 544, 46 P.3d 801 (Wash.App. 1 Div. 2002). Ted Grimes was president of Pacific Coast Escrow, Inc (PCE) and Pacific Coast Financial Services (PCFS). PCE served as an intermediary. Grimes handed the exchange money over to PCFS, which made commercial loans with it. Grimes kept the earnings. Grimes was removed, the company audited, and it filed bankruptcy. A surety and the customers were the victims. Grimes was convicted of theft. He appealed, arguing that an intermediary has title to the money, and that exchange money is not held in escrow. The court affirmed his conviction, saying: "Grimes' argument that state escrow law does not apply to section 1031 funds fails because he failed to deposit the funds in separate escrow accounts, did not hold the funds in trust for the purpose of the transactions, used the funds for his benefit or the benefit of unentitled persons, and the [escrow law] in effect when he committed these offenses explicitly included exchange transactions... ."

[491] In Tark Associates v. SSI Properties, Inc., 2001 WL 320909 (Wash.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), an accommodation titleholder was found liable on a promissory note that was not cancelled when the taxpayer cancelled the exchange. E. Ray Holden hired SSI Properties, Inc. to serve as accommodation title holder on a reverse exchange. SSI bought the replacement property from Tark Associates, and executed a note to Tark guaranteed by Holden. Holden decided not to go through with the exchange, and had SSI deed the property to a corporation he controlled. However, SSI did not get Five Star's substitution on the note back to Tark. Holden and Tark had a disagreement over an environmental cleanup on the property. Final payment under the note was apparently tied to certification that the remediation was done. Holden stopped making payments on his guaranty. Tark sued SSI on the note and won. SSI argued on appeal that "the parties did not intend that [SSI] be liable on the note because of its status as a sec. 1031 exchange facilitator." The court refused to consider the argument because it was raised too late. It affirmed the judgment against SSI on the note.

14 Closing Protection Letters

14.1 Nature Of The Letter's Assurances

The ALTA Closing Protection Letter (the Letter) provides certain additional assurances incident to the duties undertaken in the policy.[1] The Letter was invented because mortgage lenders and certain other customer groups wanted the underwriter's financial backing when a title agent or approved attorney was to handle real estate settlements.[2] The primary protection of the Letter remains as to the risk that the title agent or approved attorney will steal the money delivered to closing:

> The purpose of the closing service letter is to provide indemnity against loss due to a closing attorney's defalcation or failure to follow a lender's closing instructions.[3]

The risk of the loss of closing funds is inherent in a lender's appointment of a title agent or approved

---

[1] Excellent commentary on closing protection letters may be found in the following: John C. Murray, Closing Protection Letters: What Is (And Is Not) Covered?, which is available at First American Title's online reference library at http://www.firstam.com; Shawn G. Rader, Real Property, Probate and Trust Law: Closing Protection Letters, 70 Fla. Bar. J. 38 (1996); Solomon Genet and Laurie Beneralli, Closing Protection Letters in Florida: A Title Underwriter's Liability to the Commercial Lender, Florida Bar's RPP&T Law section ActionLine, Volume XXVIII, No. 2 (Winter 2006), p. 7; and James Bruce Davis' articles: The New ALTA Closing Protection Letter, The Title Insurance Law Newsletter (April 2007); Are Closing Protection Letters Insurance?, ABA TIPS Title Insurance Litigation Committee News (Summer 2000); and The Law of Closing Protection Letters, 36 Tort & Insurance Law Journal 845 (Spring 2001).

[2] See Title Insurance: The New Policy Changes, Practicing Law Institute Real Estate Law and Practice Number 300, 1987, at p. 21 and Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 607 A.2d 1327 (N.J. Super. 1992), order reversed in 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993). "Title-insurance companies regularly offer protection to institutional lenders against attorney theft of closing funds intended to pay off a preexisting mortgage... . The protection [in the Letter] against the risk of loss caused by attorney defalcation under the circumstances clearly is an incident to the issuance of title insurance." Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74, 86 (N.J. 1993).

[3] Metmor Financial, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 645 So.2d 295, 297 (Ala. 1993), citing Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Edmar Construction Co., 294 A.2d 865 (D.C.App. 1972).

attorney as its contract closer.[4] Unless the insurer issues a closing protection letter, it is not responsible for any losses incurred by the lender for an agent or approved attorney's closing acts.[5] An alternate rationale for the development of the Letter was recited in a Florida decision. The court reported that members of the title industry had asserted that closing protection letters came about to protect against the recording gap.[6] However, no case holds squarely that the Letter provides such protection, much less that the Letter was promulgated in order to give that assurance.

A form of the Letter was promulgated by the American Land Title Association in 1987 in an effort to standardize the language of the closing protection letters then in use in the industry. In October, 1998, the ALTA adopted three forms of the Letter, denoted the Regulatory version (with more restrictive assurances designed to comply with stricter standards in certain states), the Non-Residential Limitations version (for use in commercial transactions) and the Single Transaction Limited Liability version. The Letters were revised in 2006, and again in 2007 (adopted as of January 1, 2008). In the 2008 versions, the Regulatory Letter was renamed the Limitations version. ALTA promulgated two new versions of the Letter on December 1, 2011, called the Single Transaction and Multiple Transactions versions. As the names imply, the Single Transaction Letter is issued for only one transaction, and references a transaction or file number. The Multiple Transactions version is effective as to all transactions closed by the title agent or approved attorney from its effective date until the Letter is cancelled. ALTA revised the 2011 Letter on April 2, 2014, and again on December 1, 2015. The current version of the Letter is known as the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter. Its two variants are known as the Single Transaction and Multiple Transactions versions. In this chapter, a reference to the Letter makes a statement that is true for all or most versions of the closing protection letter, but a reference to the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter discusses the terms of that version only.

The Letter is unique because of its unusual purpose, the lack of separate consideration for its issuance, and the relationship it creates between insurer, agent and addressee. The party to whom the Letter is issued is referred to as the addressee. The addressee is the only party which is benefited by and may make a claim under the Letter. The addressee is most often a lender, but also may be a buyer. Most commonly, a Letter is issued by an underwriter on behalf of a title agent or approved attorney.[7] In most cases, the insurer has some sort of contract with the party for whom it issues the Letter, but not always.[8] [4] See Anchor Equities, Ltd. v. Pacific Coast American, 737 P.2d 532, 105 N.M. 751 (1987); Shaw v. North American Title Co., 76 Hawaii 323, 876 P.2d 1291 (Hawaii 1994); and American Title Ins. Co. v. Burke & Herbert Bank & Trust Co., 813 F.Supp. 423 (E.D.Va. 1993) (title agency principal theft from escrow account covered by Letters).

---

[5] Cameron County Savings Ass'n v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 819 S.W.2d 600 (Tex.App. 1991).

[6] Escrow Disbursement Ins. Agency, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., Inc., 550 F.Supp. 1192 (S.D.Fla. 1982). Not surprisingly, this case involved a complaint against a company that created an insurance policy which protected against matters recorded in the gap.

[7] See Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993), reversing 607 A.2d 1327 (N.J. Super. 1992).

[8] See Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993) and Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993). In both cases, the insurer issued a Letter to allow the borrower's

The Letter is an indemnity contract, and is contractual in nature.[9] It is not an insurance policy.[10] In Metmor Financial, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., the Alabama Supreme Court found that no bad faith action could be brought as to a Letter, because the normal indicia of an insurance policy are missing:

> "... [T]he only breach of contract which gives rise to a tort cause of action for 'bad faith' is [a] breach of a contract of insurance." Peninsular Life Ins. Co. v. Blackmon, 476 So.2d 87, 89 (Ala. 1985). An insurer-insured relationship must exist. An insurance contract would be evidenced by one party's entering into a written contract of insurance with the other, by the one's paying premiums to the other, and by the other's placing the premiums into a central fund out of which claims would be paid. Peninsular Life, supra, at 89. ... It is clear from a reading of the closing service letter that it states Commonwealth's responsibility for the acts of its approved attorney. It is also clear that the closing service letter is not a title insurance policy.[11]

Most other courts have agreed that bad faith damages cannot be sought under a Letter, because it is an indemnity contract and not insurance.[12]

---

attorney to close a loan. There was no contractual relationship between the insurer and the closing attorney who absconded. The court found that the insurer had made the closing attorneys their agents by issuing the Letters. A similar practice exists in Wisconsin. In that state, at least one underwriter insists that each attorney act under a retainer agreement in which the attorney acknowledges a professional duty to the underwriter.

[9] Lehman Brothers Holdings, Inc. v. Hirota, 2007 WL 1471690 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. New Freedom Mortgage Corp., 288 Ga.App. 642, 655 S.E.2d 269 (Ga.App. 2007).

[10] Mandor v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 28 N.Y.2d 739, 269 N.E.2d 828, 321 N.Y.S.2d 120 (N.Y.App. 1971). This issue is thoroughly examined in James Bruce Davis' articles The New ALTA Closing Protection Letter, The Title Insurance Law Newsletter (April 2007); Are Closing Protection Letters Insurance?, ABA TIPS Title Insurance Litigation Committee News (Summer 2000); and The Law of Closing Protection Letters, 36 Tort & Insurance Law Journal, 845 (Spring 2001). However, in Horvath v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2013 WL 1294677, 2013-Ohio-1295 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished), the court ruled very obliquely that a Letter is insurance because Ohio Rev. Code §3953.32 says that the issuance of a CPL "is part of the business of title insurance for purposes of Chapter 3953 of the Revised Code."

[11] 645 So.2d 295, 297 (Ala. 1992).

[12] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. New Freedom Mortgage Corp., 288 Ga.App. 642, 655 S.E.2d 269 (Ga.App. 2007). The court said: "The issue here is whether the CPL qualifies as an insurance policy, and we find that it does not. In our law, "'[i]nsurance' means a contract which is an integral part of a plan for distributing individual losses whereby one undertakes to indemnify another or to pay a specified amount or benefits upon determinable contingencies." (Emphasis supplied.) OCGA § 33-1-2(2). … Under Lawyers Title's CPL, however, no second party assumes the risk and significantly no distribution of risk is accomplished. Therefore, the CPL is not an insurance policy within the meaning of OCGA § 33-4-6, and the trial court did not err by so ruling." However, in Horvath v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2013 WL 1294677, 2013-Ohio-1295 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished), the court ruled very obliquely that a Letter is insurance, and that a bad faith claim may be brought. However, the court found no bad faith in the case before it, which may make the ruling dictum.

The ALTA Letters plainly state that the issuance of a Letter does not create an agency between the insurer and the title agent or approved attorney for closing acts.[13] When a state bar association's committee on professional conduct audited a closing attorney, it was given the right to also audit the books of a title agency partly owned by the attorney, including the accounts used for closing funds. The court noted that the insurer audited the agency's books, in part it presumed because the insurer had issued the Letters.[14] However, New Jersey courts have held that the issuance of a Letter makes the closing attorney the agent of the insurer.[15] One decision even held that the Letter was the key that allowed a closing attorney to conduct loan fraud:

> By making Levenson an Approved Attorney [that is, issuing a Letter on his behalf], First American put him in the position to steal from Vision [the lender] by creating this sham transaction. ... [T]he title insurance company was in the best position to prevent the loss created by the fraud and defalcation of the Approved Attorney.[16]

The New Jersey decision places too much causal blame on the Letter. The Letter is not the insurer's imprimatur. By issuing a Letter, the insurer does not absolve the other parties from dealing prudently with the approved attorney or agent. The Letter is not a guarantee or certification that the attorney or agent is honest. Rather, just as the title insurance policy is a contract of indemnity, the Letter indemnifies the assured in the event of a loss covered by the Letter.[17]

A major concern about the Letter is that, in many states, it is issued without charge or premium,[18] but insurers have incurred significant losses on closing protection claims, particularly

---

[13] See Conditions and Exclusions 6 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter. Despite such a disclaimer, however in American Home Mortgage Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2007 WL 3349320 (D.N.J.) (unpublished), the court found that the allegation that the Letter created a principal-agent relationship between approved attorneys and the insurer could at least survive a motion to dismiss. The insurer argued that the approved attorneys were not its agents, because the closing service letters at issue contained explicit disclaimers of agency. The court resorted to general law holding that written disclaimers of agency "do not necessarily negate the existence of the agency relationship." The court ruled that "[t]he key to determining the agency relationship is the principal's consent to the agent acting on its behalf and the principal's control of the agent," citing Restatement (Second) of Agency § 1. The court went on to find that the complaint sufficiently alleged an agency relationship, and that the wording of the CSL itself created a suggestion of agency notwithstanding the disclaimer.

[14] In the Matter of Unnamed Attorney, 645 A.2d 69 (N.H.1994).

[15] Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993) and Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993).

[16] First American Title Ins. Co. v. Vision Mortgage Corporation, Inc., 689 A.2d 154, 157; 298 N.J.Super. 138, 144 (A.D. 1997).

[17] The Vision decision is contrasted with Fleet Mortgage Corp. v. Lynts, 885 F.Supp. 1187 (E.D.Wis. 1995) and other cases in Comment, Title Insurance Law Newsletter, February-March 1997, p. 5. See the introduction to this text for further information about this periodical.

[18] One court has ruled that the "cost" of the Letter's protections is "built into the insurance premium." Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993). The court cited no authority for those involving theft of money. Those losses pose a legitimate threat to insurer solvency. In fact, closing protection letter liability has caused several of the country's oldest title insurers to go out of business.[19] This has caused many regulators, insurers and industry observers to carefully examine this risk.

Early court decisions gave unsatisfying explanations as to why insurers have assumed such significant liability without charge. In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Edmar Const. Co., Inc.,[20] for example, the court summarized the trial testimony as being "[i]n effect, Lawyers Title offered as a business gesture to indemnify the lender if a defalcation by an approved attorney occurred."[21] As a result, the court said, when the closing attorney stole closing money, the insurer paid the lender addressee in "an effort to continue the goodwill of the lender." The appellate court said that the loss due to the theft should thus fall on the insurer and not the lender who had appointed the closing agent, because "the title company loss admittedly followed its determination to 'save face' and issue a final title policy to District Building and Loan and pay the loss resulting from the defalcation… ."[22]

The closing protection letter is incidental to the policy or policies to be issued by the insurer that issues the Letter, and in some senses the two are integrated with each other.[23] The insurer is not liable under a Letter even if the title agent performs the closing, if no title insurance policy is issued this proposition. See also Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993), reversing 607 A.2d 1327 (N.J. Super. 1992).

---

[19] New Jersey Title Insurance Company, established in 1888, ceased to do business in 2011. See http://www.njtic.com/njtic.htm. Guaranty Title and Trust Company, domiciled in Ohio, was liquidated in 2008. See http://www.ohinsliq.com/Companies/companies.asp?comp_code=34. Ninety-year-old Southern Title Insurance Company shut down in September, 2011, and a moratorium on claim payments was ordered in July, 2012. See http://www.southerntitle.com/. Each company's failure was reportedly due largely to closing protection letter losses or liability.

[20] 294 A.2d 865 (D.C.App. 1972).

[21] 294 A.2d at 868.

[22] Id.

[23] In Fleet Mortgage Corp. v. Lynts, 885 F.Supp. 1187 (E.D.Wis. 1995), the court held that the Letter is incidental to the policy and, if it were not, it would fail for want of separate consideration. It said: "[i]f the closing letters were a 'separate contract' as Fleet urges, it would be very peculiar for Chicago Title to give such a promise without something in return. Furthermore, if the promise were considered a separate contract unsupported by consideration, Fleet would be in a worse position because such a gratuitous promise is unenforceable." 885 F.Supp. at 1190. In Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 134 N.J. 326, 634 A.2d 74, (N.J.1993), the court held that, while a Letter does not constitute a separate insurance contract, it is integrated into the insurance policy. In Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Bank of America, N.A., 2013 WL 372149 (S.D.N.Y.) (unpublished), involving Michigan property, a lender seeking to "reform" a policy to remove an exception for a $15 million mortgage based on its escrow instructions saying that the lender was to have a first lien survived a summary judgment motion on its theory that the closing protection letter and policy should be read as one integrated contract. In Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. MLD Mortgage, Inc., 2012 WL 6139366 (D.Minn.) (unpublished), the court held that claims under both the title insurance policy and the closing protection letter for the same problem in a transaction should be decided by the same court, because the "issue of defective title will be ruled on once, not twice, and claims for loss can be handled together rather than in a multiplicity of suits."

by the agent on the insurer's paper in connection with the closing.[24] The insurer is not liable on a fake Letter issued by a title company that has been cancelled as the insurer's policy-issuing agent.[25]

Insurance regulators have carefully scrutinized whether or not the Letter is insurance, the fidelity-like nature of the theft indemnification, and the threat posed to insurer solvency by the assumption of large theft risk. In many states, title insurers are monoline insurers. The Letter is not a title insurance policy, although it provides assurances closely related to the matters covered by the policy. Also, the indemnification for losses caused by the title agent's handling of closing funds bears some resemblance to fidelity bond or insurance coverage.

The concern that the Letter resembles fidelity insurance caused many insurance regulators to study the Letter and take action in the 1980s and 1990s. The New York Insurance Commissioner banned the issuance of a Letter containing the fraud or dishonesty indemnification in 1992:

> A CPL deals with failure to comply with instructions as well as fraud or dishonesty in the collection and payment of funds due to or advanced by the lender. As such, the CPL is in the nature of fidelity or surety coverage, or resembles professional liability insurance against legal malpractice on the part of the lender's attorney.[26]

The New York Commissioner ruled that the protection regarding fraud or dishonesty is:

> beyond the scope of the monoline title insurer's license and writing authority ... . Thus a CPL that attempts to address acts or omissions on the part of the lender's attorney is unauthorized, would give lenders no solace in the past, and should no

[24] National Mortgage Warehouse v. Bankers First Mortgage Co., 190 F.Supp.2d 774 (D.Md. 2002). The court said that a finding of liability would unhinge the Letter from this important limit on its scope: "[b]ecause Sovereign did not secure title insurance with Security Title, the liability coverage extended by the closing protection letter never went into effect. To hold otherwise would be to enforce a gratuitous promise by allowing Sovereign to benefit from a contract for which there was no consideration." 190 F.Supp.2d at 784. In Capital Mortgage Associates, LLC v. Hulton, 2009 WL 567057 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), reh.den. 2009 WL 3284241 (Conn.Super. Sep 08, 2009), the court held that the Letter was never invoked because the title agent wrote the lender's policy on another underwriter's paper. It rejected the lender's claim that the insurer should be bound by the Letter anyway because it was issued by the title agent, who was a policy issuing agent of the insurer. The court said that the issuance of a policy by the same insurer was an "overt condition precedent" to liability.

[25] See In re James, 405 S.C. 17, 747 S.E.2d 169 (S.C. 2013), in which a lawyer was disbarred for issuing fake closing protection letters, which allowed him to perform the closings for the people whose money he stole from his client trust account. The South Carolina Supreme Court acknowledged in its decision that the victims could not recover under the fake closing protection letters. However, when an agent was cancelled but the Letter was not, and the former agent continued to issue fake title insurance policies to the lender, the court refused to simply dismiss the claim based on the Letter due to the lack of valid title insurance policies. Mortgage Network, Inc. v. AmeriBanc Mortgage Lending, LLC, 177 Ohio App.3d 733, 895 N.E.2d 917 (Ohio App. 10 Dist. 2008).

[26] Circular Letter No. 18 (1992), of December 14, 1992, by the Honorable Salvatore R. Curiale, Superintendent of Insurance, State of New York.

longer be issued ... by New York licensed title insurers.[27]

The Washington Insurance Commissioner prohibited the issuance of Letters on behalf of parties who are not the policy-issuing agents of the underwriter.[28] Kansas issued a directive prohibiting the issuance of the Letter, as being beyond the charter of a title insurer, but later rescinded that ruling based on a decision that "suggests the exposure covered by closing protection letters is negligence liability rather than surety or fidelity coverage."[29]

Some insurance regulators took the approach of ordering insurers to remove the "fraud or dishonesty" indemnification from the Letter. The Wisconsin Insurance Commissioner said that the assurances in the Letter about the agent's fraud or dishonesty are in the nature of fidelity insurance, and required insurers to strike that assurance from the Letter.[30] The Nebraska Commissioner also instructed insurers to remove the fraud or dishonesty assurance, but the legislature rescinded that prohibition.[31]

In 1995, the Virginia Commissioner instructed title insurers that they were not permitted to issue closing protection letters that indemnified lenders for losses unrelated to the condition of title to the property or the status of any lien on the property.[32] A form of the Letter has been written that complies with that instruction, and which the regulator has approved. In addition, Virginia now [27] Id. The Circular Letter does permit a title insurer to issue a letter to a customer confirming that an appointed agent has authority to issue commitments and policies on behalf of the insurer.

[28] Letter of Ms. Melodie Bankers, Deputy Commissioner, Office of Insurance Commissioner, dated May 5, 1989, addressed to Mr. Dennis Sherman, President, Washington Land Title Association.

[29] Kansas Insurance Department Bulletin 1989-30, issued on December 1, 1989 by the Honorable Fletcher Bell, Commissioner of Insurance, rescinded by Bulletin No. 1996-6, issued on June 4, 1996. Bulletin No. 1996-6 stated its rationale as follows: "Ford v. Guaranty Abstract and Title Co., 220 Kan. 244, holds that failure to use due care in the process of disbursing funds by a real estate conveyor is negligence. Therefore, it is inappropriate to continue Bulletin 1989-30 in force because the case law suggests the exposure covered by closing protection letters is negligence liability rather than surety or fidelity coverage."

[30] Letter of Mr. Don Cleasby, Legislative Attorney, Office of the Commissioner of Insurance, State of Wisconsin, dated April 27, 1989, addressed to Mr. John R. Bethell, Chairperson, Wisconsin Land Title Association Underwriters Committee.

[31] A notice from the Department of Insurance dated January 3, 1990 stated that the "fraud or dishonesty" language "falls squarely within the definition of fidelity insurance," and therefore was not within the purview of title insurance. The notice also warned that the duty to reimburse for failure to follow instructions "may not be a valid subject of title insurance." The legislature later rescinded the ruling by adopting R.R.S. Neb. § 44-1984(2), which authorizes the issuance of closing protection letters that include the theft indemnification.

[32] Administrative Letter 1995-8 of the Honorable Steven T. Foster, Commissioner of Insurance, issued on September 4, 1995. The Commissioner ruled that "By issuing a closing protection letter that indemnifies lenders for losses which are unrelated to the condition so the title to property or the status of any lien on property, a title insurance company is exceeding its license authority." The Commissioner invited the insurers to draft a form of letter limited to assurances about the status of title, which was adopted in early 1996.

licenses settlement agents, requires them to maintain fidelity bonds, and the state audits their escrow accounts.[33]

Other states also promulgated forms of the closing protection letter or have given instructions about their permitted terms. The New Jersey Supreme Court said the Letter did not constitute fidelity coverage, and the "fraud or dishonesty" assurance was not beyond the scope of a title insurer's insurance license.[34] The New Jersey department has promulgated its own limited form of the Letter, for which there is a mandatory $25 fee.[35] California permits the issuance of the Letter and includes it within the definition of the business of title insurance.[36] Connecticut states that title insurers may "guarantee the obligations of their agents in the normal course of business by issuing closing protection letters."[37] The Florida Commissioner authorizes the issuance of a letter having form and content approved by the Department of Insurance.[38] Ohio law mandates the offer of closing protection coverage to all parties in the transaction, and describes the terms to be included in the Letter without promulgating a form of the Letter.[39] Texas has promulgated a closing service letter and regulations regarding its use.[40] New Mexico has also promulgated its own version of the Letter.[41] In Iowa, which does not permit the issuance of title insurance but does allow attorneys to issue title guarantees, the state Finance Authority issues closing protection letters on behalf of certain guarantee issuers.[42]

Some states have adopted statutes simply declaring that title insurers are strictly liable for [33] Virginia Consumer Real Estate Settlement Protection Act, Va. Code Ann. §§ 6.1-2.19 to 6.1-2.29.

[34] Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993).

[35] The form was approved for use effective June 1, 2004, according to John C. Murray in his excellent article, Closing Protection Letters: What Is (And Is Not) Covered?, which is available at First American Title's online reference library at firstam.com.

[36] Cal.Ins. Code § 12340.3.

[37] CGSA § 38a-404.

[38] § 627.786(3), Florida Stats. authorizes the issuance of closing protection letters. Rule 4-186.010 of the Florida Administrative Code (1993) promulgates the form of the letter.

[39] Ohio Rev. Code §3953.32 mandates the offer of closing protection insurance, and says that the issuance of a CPL "is part of the business of title insurance for purposes of Chapter 3953 of the Revised Code." The Ohio Department of Insurance has promulgated a form to be used in making the offer of coverage, as discussed in Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017).

[40] Texas Ins. Code §§ 2702.001-002.

[41] §§ 13.14.18.21 and 13.14.1.7(D)(2), New Mexico Admin. Code.

[42] Iowa Code § 16.93(1) states that the Iowa Finance Authority "through the title guaranty division may issue a closing protection letter to a person to whom a proposed title guaranty is to be issued, upon the request of the person, if the division issues a commitment for title guaranty or title guaranty certificate."

theft of money by their appointed agents. Florida law also makes a title insurer liable for the theft of closing funds by a licensed title insurance agent.[43] Nebraska also imposes strict liability on insurers for agent theft of closing funds.[44] Utah law makes a title insurance company directly and primarily liable to parties who deal with its appointed agents concerning the receipt and disbursement of funds deposited in escrows, closings, or settlements.[45] The strict liability statutes and the cases construing them are fully discussed at §17.8.3.

Some legislatures and regulators have taken the approach of requiring title insurers to charge for the Letter and imposing limitations on the scope of its assurances. North Carolina has taken this approach.[46] The Pennsylvania rating bureau has filed a limited-scope version of the Letter, which may only be issued to lenders.[47] The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter carefully limits the theft assurance to reimbursement of money that was delivered by the addressee. This indemnification is much more limited than the assurance contained in versions of the Letter that regulators scrutinized in the 1980s and 1990s, and clearly has been designed with the regulators' fidelity-coverage concern in mind.

Despite the issues about the efficacy of the Letter, the fact remains that title agents and approved attorneys sometimes steal closing money, and in many situations there is no avenue of recovery for the theft victims except through closing protection letters. To date, there is no other form of comprehensive insurance or bonding protection for theft by an owner of a title agency.

---

[43] Fla.Stat.Ann. § 627.792 provides that a title insurer is liable for the defalcation, conversion or misappropriation of settlement funds held in escrow by a licensed title insurance agent. However, that law does not apply to attorney title agents, who are regulated by the state Supreme Court rather than the legislature. Hechtman v. Nations Title Ins. of New York, 840 So.2d 993 (Fla. 2003).

[44] Neb. Rev. Stat. § 44-1993(8).

[45] Utah Code Ann. § 31A-23-308. However, Utah Code Ann. § 31A-23a-407, adopted in 2017, limits the insurer's liability to "the amount of money received and disbursed, not to exceed the amount of proposed insurance set forth in the commitment or title insurance policy described in Subsection (1) plus 10% of the amount of the proposed insurance," and states that this statutory liability "does not modify, mitigate, impair, or affect the contractual obligations between an individual title insurance producer or agency title insurance producer and the title insurer."

[46] North Carolina law authorizes title insurers to "insure the proper performance of services necessary to conduct a real estate closing performed by an approved attorney licensed to practice in North Carolina." N.C. Gen.Stat. § 28-26-1. The state says that the filed and approved per-thousand premium rate is an "undivided" fee covering both the policy and the Letter. Effective October 1, 2003, the North Carolina Department of Insurance approved a Letter filed by the North Carolina Title Insurance Rating Bureau that omits assurance 1(c) of the ALTA Letter, limits assurance 2 and creates a three-year statute of limitations. As reported by Mr. Murray, the North Carolina department acknowledged that "closing-protection liability claims have escalated to an alarming extent and become a major cause of losses for title companies." In GMAC Mortgage, LLC v. Flick Mortgage Investors, Inc., 2010 WL 2132184 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished), the court commented that "the law related to CPLs remains somewhat unclear," and the magistrate judge had observed that "whether a CPL constitutes insurance has yet to be answered definitively in North Carolina."

[47] Section 7.5, Pennsylvania Manual of Rates and Forms filed by the Title Insurance Rating Bureau of Pennsylvania. The $35 fee may not be waived, and must be remitted in its entirety by the agent or approved attorney to the title insurer, in recognition of the fact that the fee is entirely for the risk borne by the insurer.

However, sellers and refinancing borrowers are not insureds under policies issued in their transactions, and therefore are not entitled to obtain closing protection letters or to receive the benefit from the Letter unless mandated by law.[48]

As a result of a high number of large and very public escrow thefts, particularly after the real estate depression that began in 2007, some insurance regulators and legislatures began to encourage or mandate insurers to make the Letter available even to parties who are not insureds. Illinois now mandates the issuance of closing protection letters to all of the parties to a transaction, including sellers and refinancing borrowers.[49] Some laws require that a Letter be offered to all parties.[50] Other state laws adopted after 2007 do not require issuance of Letters, but solve the monoline issue by authorizing title insurers to issue a form of the Letter that protects against theft of closing money.[51]

---

[48] In Karpontinis v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 641, 2013 WL 1150722 (N.J.Super.A.D. 2013) (unpublished), rev.den 214 N.J. 119, 67 A.3d 1193 (Table), the court refused to extend New Jersey's expansive view of the Closing Service Letter, as it is termed by state law, to benefit a seller, because the seller is neither an insured nor an addressee of the CSL.

[49] An Illinois statute, 215 ILCS 155/et. seq., effective January 1, 2011, requires title insurers to issue closing protection letters issued to lenders, borrowers, buyers and sellers for all residential real estate transactions, and non-residential transactions under $2,000,000. See 215 ILCS 155/16.1. The companion regulation (50 Ill. Adm. Code 8100.2402) mandates that title insurers charge not less than $25 to buyers on purchases and lenders, and $50 to sellers and borrowers on refinances. In addition, title insurance agents must be registered with the state, and the regulator has the power to audit agents' escrow and closing activities. 215 ILCS 155/16.

[50] Alabama adopted a law in 2011 requiring agents to offer closing protection letters to buyers and sellers. Ala. Code § 27-3-6.1. The law also amended Alabama's monoline statute (Ala. Code § 27-3-6) to specifically authorize title insurers to issue closing protection letters and to collect fees for them. In Alabama, the charge is $25 for a lender or buyer/borrower and $50 for a seller who is not an insured under a loan policy. In Arizona, the law provides that, when the escrow agent is a title insurance agent employed by the buyer or seller, the agent shall disclose to the buyer and seller that "the title company may offer a CPL that provides protection for the loss of escrow monies due to fraud or dishonesty of the escrow agent." Ariz.Stat. § 6-841.0 The form of promulgated CPL issued in Arizona is virtually the same as the ALTA CPL except that there are three separate letters for lender, buyer and seller. Arkansas adopted a law in 2012 requiring title agents to offer closing protection letters. Ark. Code Ann. § 23-103-405. The District of Columbia has exempted the Letter from the District's monoline statute, and says a title insurer "may issue closing or settlement protection to a proposed insured upon request… ." In addition, the Letter may be offered in a residential transaction to a seller, refinancing borrower or buyer who does not purchase title insurance, for whom the charge "shall be not less than $50." D.C. Code § 31-5031.04. At the same time, the District imposed on title insurers the duty to set aside an additional, temporary loss reserve for title and closing protection letter liability. D.C. Code § 31-5031.08. In a 2012 law, Georgia explicitly permitted insurers to issue closing protection letters, mandated the filing of a premium charge, instructed insurer that they "shall maintain adequate reserves" for CPL liability, and stated that the Letter may be issued to "a buyer, lender, or seller." Ga. Code Ann., § 33-7-8.1. Louisiana adopted a law in 2012 that says a title insurer "may issue closing or settlement protection to a person who is a party to a transaction in which a title insurance policy is contemplated to be issued." La.R.S. § 22:2092.5. This includes sellers and refinancing borrowers. The customary charge in Louisiana is $25. Ohio requires that a title agent offer a closing protection letter to lenders, buyer-borrowers, refinance borrowers and sellers. Ohio Rev. Code § 3953.32. The charges are $35 for the lender, $15 for the buyer/borrower and $50 for the seller.

[51] Missouri regulates title agents, and states that a title agent may not close a transaction unless it has caused the insurer to issue a Letter "protecting the buyer's and the seller's interests, or the title agency or agent has given written notice to the affected person in a title insurance commitment or on a form approved by rule promulgated by the director

These laws and regulations also mandate that the insurer charge for the Letter. The imposition of a charge solves or ameliorates the risk that the insurer will be bankrupted by the increased risk that it assumes, and the legal problem that a Letter issued to a non-insured would fail for want of consideration.

14.2 Indemnification And Requirements

Most versions of the Letter were arranged so that there were two assurances, the first being an indemnification for loss caused by the failure of the issuing agent or approved attorney to comply with written closing instructions relating to title; and the second covering losses suffered due to the fraud or dishonesty of the issuing agent or approved attorney in handling the addressee's funds or documents in connection with the closing.

In the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter, the events that trigger the indemnification obligation of the Letter are recited at paragraph 4 of what is labeled the Requirements section of the Letter. In contrast to prior versions of the Letter, there is one overarching indemnification statement in the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter. It is found in the first sentence, which states that the insurer:

> ... agrees to indemnify You for actual loss of Funds incurred by You in connection with the closing of the Real Estate Transaction conducted by the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney on or after the Date of this letter, subject to the Requirements and Conditions and Exclusions set forth below.

That statement is followed by four Requirements.

Requirement 1 creates the threshold limitation that the Letter applies only when "the Company issues or is contractually obligated to issue title insurance for your protection in connection with the closing of the Real Estate Transaction… ." The Letter has been found to be incidental to the issuance of a title insurance policy.[52] Thus, its protections may not be invoked unless the insurer issues a title insurance policy in connection with the transaction.[53]

Requirement 2 states that the addressee must be a lender, buyer or lessee. That requirement is discussed in full in §14.3. Requirement 3 is new to the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter, and states that the aggregate of "all Funds You transmit" to the agent for the transaction must not exceed that the person's interest in the closing or settlement is not protected by the title insurer, title agency, or title agent." Missouri Stats. § 381.022(5). A 2010 Rhode Island law sanctions the issuance of a Letter that indemnifies against the "[t]heft of settlement funds." Rhode Island Gen. Law § 19-14.1-10. In 2012, South Carolina adopted a law that says a title insurer may issue a Letter that indemnifies against "theft or misappropriation of settlement funds… ." S. Carolina Code § 38-75-1010.

---

[52] National Mortgage Warehouse, LLC v. Bankers First Mtg. Co., Inc., 190 F.Supp.2d 774, 783 (D. Md. 2002) ("the issuance of a title insurance policy is generally necessary for liability to ensue under a closing protection letter"); Fleet Mortgage Corp. v. Lynts, 885 F. Supp. 1187, 1190 (E.D.Wis. 1995) ("the [closing protection] letters are generally only issued in connection with a title insurance policy or expected policy").

[53] See cases at §14.1.

the dollar amount that is inserted in the Letter.

Requirement 4 is the condition that "Your loss is solely caused by" one of the two events that are listed, which are numbered 4(a) and 4(b).

The net effect of this rearrangement of the Letter's format is to emphasize the fact that the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter indemnifies for the loss of money, and is not a compliance bond or the grant of agency authority for the conduct of real estate closings or escrows. The events listed in Requirement 4 must lead to the actual loss of Funds by the addressee. Further, by putting the four Requirements in the same list, the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter makes it clear that all four conditions must occur before the indemnity contract is invoked. The references in this chapter to the closing instruction violation and theft "assurances" of the Letter should be understood, in relation to the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter, as being references to the covered events listed in the Requirements section of that version of the Letter.

The covered event listed as Requirement 4(a) of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter concerns the issuing agent's violation of written closing instructions. To trigger coverage, the addressee's loss must be "solely caused by":

> ...any failure of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney to comply with Your written closing instructions that relate to:
>
> (i) (A) the disbursement of Funds necessary to establish the status of the Title to the Land; or
>
> (B) the validity, enforceability, or priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage; or
>
> (ii) obtaining any document, specifically required by You, but only to the extent that the failure to obtain the document affects the status of the Title to the Land or the validity, enforceability, or priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage on the Title to the Land... .[54]

This statement is carefully crafted to apply only to compliance with instructions that are incidental to the coverage of the policy.

Thus, the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter is not a blanket or far-reaching assurance in the nature of a bond or errors and omissions policy, as to any possible violation of closing instructions by the title agent. Many lenders' closing instructions now require title agents and approved attorneys to perform a number of duties unrelated to obtaining a valid debt instrument and

[54] The 2011 ALTA CPL was less precise in tying the land insured in the policy to the coverage of the Letter, and did not define Title, Insured Mortgage, Your or Funds. That version read: "1. Failure of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney to comply with your written closing instructions to the extent that they relate to (a) the status of the title to that interest in land or the validity, enforceability and priority of the lien of the mortgage on that interest in land, including the obtaining of documents and the disbursement of funds necessary to establish the status of title or lien, or (b) the obtaining of any other document, specifically required by you, but only to the extent the failure to obtain the other document affects the status of the title to that interest in land or the validity, enforceability and priority of the lien of the mortgage on that interest in land, and not to the extent that your instructions require a determination of the validity, enforceability or the effectiveness of the other document… ."

perfected lien. These can include the payment of personal unsecured debts from closing, obtaining various reports and inspections as to the property, securing the borrowers' signatures on a multitude of certificates and disclosure notices, and various chores that button up the lender's own loan underwriting. In addition, some lenders now also require title agents and approved attorneys to report various indicators of possible loan fraud. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter provides no coverage against loss caused by the issuing agent's violation of such loan closing instructions.

When a Letter's closing instruction protection is not limited to title-related violations, courts have held the insurer liable for losses caused by the violation of other types of loan closing instructions.[55] However, when the Letter limits the closing instruction violation event to title issues, most courts have found no coverage for the violation of other types of closing instructions.[56] The refinements in the wording of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter directly address those issues

---

[55] In Metmor Financial, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 857 F.Supp. 1507 (M.D.Ala. 1994), the court found the instruction assurance invoked because the agent closed a loan without proof of a home warranty.

[56] Thus, for example, in Federal Agricultural Mortg. Corp. v. It's a Jungle Out There, Inc., 2005 WL 3325051 (N.D.Cal. 2005) (unpublished), Vintage Capital withheld information from the loan investor of a federal tax lien and pending suit against the borrower. The loan investor sued Vintage, who brought in Stewart Title, which had issued a Letter for its agent, New Century Title. The court let Stewart out of the lawsuit, because Vintage had not pled a violation by New Century of any closing instruction related to the status of title, obtaining a document for the lender, or the handling of its funds: "In response, Vintage and the Howers posit that the insured closing letter encompasses losses caused by New Century's failure to perform obligations it undertook in addition to those set forth in the written escrow instructions. This theory fails simply by virtue of the language of the insured closing letter. … [None of the claimed violations of instructions] implicates the three discrete categories of failure to follow instructions against which the insured closing letter provides indemnification." 2005 WL 3325051 at *31. In ABN AMRO Mortgage Group, Inc. v. Promised Land Mortgage, LLC, 2005 WL 705338 (S.D.Ind.) (unpublished), a lender claimed that a title agent misrepresented various facts to the lender as part of a loan package presented to the lender by a mortgage broker which included false information about the borrowers and fraudulent appraisals. In ruling on motions to dismiss, the court did not decide whether or not such claimed representations could be covered by the Letter. In Lakeside National, LLC v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 3420431 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the fact that the building on the insured parcel had been razed after closing but before the insured mortgage was recorded was found not to trigger coverage under the closing protection letter, because the razing did not affect the validity of the mortgage or violate a closing instruction. In Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. MLD Mortgage, Inc., 2012 WL 6139366 (D.Minn.) (unpublished), the court said "MLD construes the CPL as obligating First American to search for title defects or inform it of a title defect. But, MLD pleads no facts in the Third-Party Complaint that could lead to holding First American responsible for the actions of its agent." In New Freedom Mortgage Corp. v. Globe Mortgage Corp., 281 Mich.App. 63, 761 N.W.2d 832 (Mich.App. 2008), the court ruled that the closer violated the lender's closing instructions by allowing the borrower to leave closing with significant cash rather than delivering a down payment in the amount specified by the lender. However, because that instruction did not relate to the title to the real estate or the mortgage, the court held that the insurer was not liable to the lender under the closing protection letter. The court also held that the fraud and dishonesty assurance did not apply, because that provision covered the handling of the lender's money, and any dishonesty of the title agent about money had to do with the borrower's money, not the loan money. In James B. Nutter & Co. v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 5792686 (N.D.Ga. 2016) (unpublished), the Letters issued to Nutter protected against the misconduct of the title agent only to the extent that such acts related to the status of title or the validity, enforceability or priority of the mortgage. The lender had not established that there was any defect in title. The court held that the Letters were not invoked, saying: "The clear and unambiguous message of the Closing Protection Letters is that Old Republic would only cover those losses that actually affected the status of title in some way. Old Republic was only insuring against any danger that would lead the Lender to actually lose title to the property."

and clarify that the Letter applies only to closing instructions having to do with payment of money to clear title of liens and the obtaining of documents required to clear title or to obtain a valid mortgage in favor of the lender insured.

The second protection of the Letter is against the fraud or dishonesty of the title agent or approved attorney in the handling of the addressee's money or documents. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter addresses this subject as the second covered event, recited in Requirement 4(b), which protects the addressee if "Your loss is solely caused by":

> ... fraud, theft, dishonesty, or misappropriation of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney in handling Your Funds or documents in connection with the closing, but only to the extent that the fraud, theft, dishonesty, or misappropriation adversely affects the status of the Title to the Land or to the validity, enforceability, or priority of the lien of the Insured Mortgage on the Title to the Land.[57]

This covered event is the fundamental reason why the Letter came into being and is still sought, because it provides protection against theft of the loan money delivered to the title agent or approved attorney.[58] Based on this covered event, the insurer is ordinarily bound to pay off a mortgage for the benefit of the addressee when the closing attorney or agent steals the payoff funds.[59]

Some courts have significantly stretched the indemnification for theft or dishonesty in the handling of "Your Funds or documents."[60] The 2014 and 2015 revisions to the Letter are clearly

---

[57] As with the closing instruction covered event, the most substantive changes to the theft and dishonesty covered event described in the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter result from the use of newly-defined terms. The 2011 ALTA CPL read: "2. Fraud, theft, dishonesty or negligence of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney in handling your funds or documents in connection with the closing to the extent that fraud, theft, dishonesty or negligence relates to the status of the title to that interest in land or to the validity, enforceability, and priority of the lien of the mortgage on that interest in land... ."

[58] As was stated in Metmor Financial, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 645 So.2d 295, 297 (Ala. 1992), "'The purpose of the closing service letter is to provide indemnity against loss due to a closing attorney's defalcation or failure to follow a lender's closing instructions.' See, Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Edmar Construction Co., 294 A.2d 865 (D.C.App. 1972)."

[59] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Edmar Construction Co., 294 A.2d 865 (D.C.App. 1972); Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993); Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993); American Title Ins. Co. v. Burke & Herbert Bank & Trust Co., 813 F.Supp. 423 (E.D.Va. 1993). In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Dearborn Title Corp., 993 F.Supp. 1159 (N.D.Ill. 1998), later decision 22 F.Supp.2d 820 (N.D.Ill. 1998), when an agent had stolen money from its escrow account, the insurer paid parties based on closing protection letters it had issued. The insurer then sought recovery from the bank at which the escrow account was located, under the Illinois Fiduciary Obligations Act, 760 I.L.C.S. 65/1, et seq. In the above decision, the court denied the bank summary judgment and remanded to the trial court.

[60] In Bank of America, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 499 Mich. 74, 878 N.W.2d 816 (Mich. 2016), the Michigan Supreme Court held that the CPL covered any fraud or dishonesty of the title agents, whether or not the claimed fraud or dishonesty related to the handling of the lender's funds or documents. It distinguished New Freedom Mortgage Corp. v. Globe Mortgage Corp., 281 Mich.App. 63, 761 N.W.2d 832 (Mich.App. 2008), which held that the Letter did not cover the closer's violation of the lender's closing instructions about receipt of the down payment from the intended to nullify some of the more absurd interpretations of the Letter, which have found actions to be covered by the Letter even when they bear only the slightest connection to the actual "fraud or dishonesty" coverage. However, Requirements 4(b) of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter continues to use the "Your Funds or documents" phrase. Thus, a key change was the addition of definitions for the two key words in that phrase. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter provides these definitions, in Conditions 2(b) and (d):

> b. "Funds" means the money received by the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney for the Real Estate Transaction.
>
> * * * *
>
> d. "You" or "Your" means:
> (i) the Addressee of this letter;
> (ii) the borrower, if the Land is improved solely by a one-to-four family residence; and > (iii) subject to all rights and defenses relating to a claim under this letter that the Company would have against the Addressee, borrower, because that instruction did not relate to the title to the real estate or the mortgage. The Letter at issue in New Freedom had protected against "Fraud or dishonesty of the Issuing Agent in handling your funds or documents in connection with such closings." In Bank of America, the court held that the critical difference was the omission of the word "in" from the fraud or dishonesty coverage in the Letters at issue in that case. Based solely on the omission of that one word, the court held that "the fraud or dishonesty by Westminster or Patriot need not be tied to their handling of Bank of America's funds or documents." Thus, the court ruled that the bank could collect under the closing protection letters if it could prove at trial that either title agent "engaged in fraud or dishonesty in the handling of the HUD-1 settlement statements at closing," even though the settlement statements were not the bank's documents. The high court also overturned the ruling of the appeals court that the CPL was not invoked by the actions of one of the two title agents, Westminster, because that company was a passive spectator to the loan fraud. In Fifth Third Mortgage—MI, L.L.C. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1069341 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), rev.den. 871 N.W.2d 200 (Memorandum), 2015 WL 7574211 (Nov. 24, 2015), the court held that the assurance against fraud or dishonesty in the title agent's handling of "your funds or documents" was invoked by the borrower's misrepresentations about his intent to reside at the property, income, assets and the like, because the loan closer handled the false documents, even though the closer did not make the false statements or steal closing money. The court said: "Consequently, any fraud or dishonesty by the issuing agent who handles 'your funds or documents' will give rise to liability as long as the issuing agent handles the funds or documents in 'connection with' the closing." In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Property Transfer Services, Inc., 2013 WL 5535561 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court held that the title agent's carelessness or concealment of fact from the lender invoked the assurance about "dishonesty" in the handling of money. In Primary Residential Mortgage, Inc. v. Guarantee Title Ins. Co., 2005 WL 2874663 (E.D.Mo. 2005) (unpublished), a lender claimed that this protection covered the alleged forgery of the HUD-1 by the closing officer. The underwriter argued that the phrase "your funds or documents" meant that a forgery on the HUD-1 was not within the scope of the Letter. The court refused to decide the issue, which was raised on a motion to dismiss. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1906139, 611 Fed.Appx. 522 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2015) (unpublished), The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals held that a Letter was invoked solely because the closer received the borrower's down payment from a third party. It concluded that the FDIC needed to prove "at least a minimal causal relationship" between the closing agent's act and the loan loss, but no more, saying: "Property Transfer's 'failure' and 'dishonesty' undoubtedly bore at least a 'minimal causal relationship' to Old Bank's 'actual loss.'"

---

(A) the assignee of the Insured Mortgage, provided such assignment was for value and the assignee was, at the time of the assignment, without Knowledge of facts that reveal a claim under this letter; and

(B) the warehouse lender in connection with the Insured Mortgage.

One issue these definitions may not remove is the assertion that the Letter is invoked by the borrower's failure to deliver the down payment to closing, as was found in Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co.[61] The definition of "Funds" is not limited to the loan money delivered by the addressee, and "You" includes the borrower if the property is improved with a one-to-four family residence.

Early on, New Jersey took the most expansive view of the fraud or dishonesty coverage in the Letter.[62] The New Jersey Commissioner of Banking and Insurance later adopted a law that states that an attorney is not the agent of the insurer, and providing the client a remedy against the insurer if he or she elects to purchase a closing protection letter.[63] A later New Jersey decision held that the issuance of a Letter to an agent gave it apparent authority to act on behalf of the insurer.[64] However, since that decision, title insurers have developed disclaimers to be signed by clients before title is ordered, which advise them that the attorney is not the agent of the insurer and that the only form of liability the insurer will assume is by the issuance of a closing protection or closing service letter. When an attorney stole money from his clients before title was ordered or the disclaimer form was given to the clients, the insurer was not the attorney's principal and thus not liable for the theft.[65]

---

[61] 2015 WL 1906139, 611 Fed.Appx. 522 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2015) (unpublished).

[62] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Vision Mortgage Corp., Inc., 689 A.2d 154, 298 N.J.Super. 138 (N.J.A.D. 1997), a New Jersey court found that the Letter also protects against loan fraud in which the attorney participated. In Vision, the lender accepted a loan application submitted in the name of a real person with good credit who was impersonated at closing. The attorney notarized the impersonated signature. The insurer argued that the loss was not the result of dishonesty in the handling of the documents. The court acknowledged that the impersonation alone did not cause the lender's loss, because it successfully foreclosed the mortgage and took title. Nonetheless, the court found that the attorney, by participating in the loan scam, "took money from Vision on the pretext that it was being borrowed by" the false borrower. By issuing the Letter to the attorney, the insurer "put him in the position to steal from Vision... ." 298 N.J.Super. at 143, 144; 689 A.2d at 156. Vision Mortgage also ratified a broad measure of loss payable under the Letter. The property was grossly overvalued. The lender had no right to a deficiency judgment against the impersonated borrower. The court approved recovery under the Letter in the amount of the principal and interest, less the price obtained by the lender on resale, saying "Vision's losses, even those related to the careless valuation of the property, fell well within the expansive coverage of the title insurance policy."

[63] N.J.S.A. 17:46B-9.

[64] Resolution Trust Co. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 58 F.Supp.2d 503 (D.N.J. 1999) held that the Letter gave at least apparent authority to an attorney title agent, who represented both buyer and seller, to close a loan for the buyer's lender, and that the insurer had a duty of care as to the title agent's negligence and legal malpractice.

[65] New Jersey Lawyers' Fund for Client Protection v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 203 N.J. 208, 1 A.3d 632 (N.J. 2010).

A striking comparison to the New Jersey approach is found in Security Union Title Ins. Co. v. Citibank (Florida), N.A.,[66] in which a Florida appellate court refused to impose vicarious liability on the insurer for loan fraud committed by an attorney-agent. The court specifically held that the insurer "did not put Turner in a position that enabled him to commit the frauds with regard to the loans." The Security Union case did not involve a closing protection letter, however. The case is further discussed at §17.3.

14.3 Parties Protected By Letter

Under some earlier versions of the Letter, the only party entitled to make a demand for payment was the addressee.[67] The 1987 ALTA Letter offered protection when the addressee was "the lessee or purchaser of an interest in land or a lender secured by a mortgage… ." Under some versions of the Letter, a remote loan assignee is not a beneficiary of the Letter and may not make a claim under it.[68]

In the 2008 ALTA Letter, the protections were expanded to say that the addressee would receive coverage when "you are to be the (i) lender secured by a mortgage (including any other security instrument) of an interest in land, its assignees or a warehouse lender, (ii) purchaser of an interest in land, or (iii) lessee of an interest in land… ." The only substantive change was to add loan assignees and warehouse lenders.[69]

Requirement 2 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter conditions the Letter's coverage by stating that addressee must be "(a) a lender secured by the Insured Mortgage on the Title to the Land or (b) a purchaser or lessee of the Title to the Land." Thus, if the addressee is neither the lender nor the purchaser or lessee in the Real Estate Transaction (also a described term), the Letter is simply not invoked as to that transaction. In addition, however, Condition 2(d) of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter goes on to define "You" or "Your" as meaning:

(i) the Addressee of this letter;
(ii) the borrower, if the Land is improved solely by a one-to-four family residence; and

[66] 715 So.2d 973 (Fla.App. 1 Dist. 1998).

[67] See James Bruce Davis, The Law of Closing Protection Letters, 36 Tort and Ins. L.J. 845, 853 (Spring 2001).

[68] See PennyMac Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 423 P.3d 608 (Table), 2018 WL 3689751 (Nev.) (unpublished), concerning a Letter issued in 2007 in Nevada. The only suggestion that the Letter could be intended to run in favor of an assignee was the use of the acronym ISAOA in the addressee's name, which stands for "its successors and/or assigns."

[69] In GMAC Mortgage, LLC v. Flick Mortgage Investors, Inc., 2010 WL 2132184 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished), Flick Mortgage made a claim against Chicago Title under a Letter after GMAC demanded that it buy back a loan but before it did so. The court rejected the insurer's argument that Flick's action was premature or moot. In a later decision, the court allowed GMAC to intervene in Flick's lawsuit, despite the insurer's protest that the assignee was not a beneficiary of the Letter but just a creditor of the originator. The court did not rule, however, that GMAC was a beneficiary of the Letter. GMAC Mortgage, LLC v. Flick Mortgage Investors, Inc., 2011 WL 841409 (W.D.N.C.) (unpublished).

(iii) subject to all rights and defenses relating to a claim under this letter that the Company would have against the Addressee,

(A) the assignee of the Insured Mortgage, provided such assignment was for value and the assignee was, at the time of the assignment, without Knowledge of facts that reveal a claim under this letter; and

(B) the warehouse lender in connection with the Insured Mortgage.

As a result, if the Letter is invoked because the addressee was the purchaser, lender or lessee in the Real Estate Transaction, the Letter continues in effect for the benefit of the addressee and the additional parties recited in Condition 2(d), which are the borrower and also the loan assignee and warehouse lender "in connection with the Insured Mortgage."[70]

Neither Requirement 2 nor Condition 2(d) of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter identifies the former holder of the Indebtedness as a party entitled to make a claim. In addition, to reinforce that silence, Condition 7 was added in 2014 to say that a lender claimant must have held the debt both when the claim was made and when it is paid:

> If You are not a purchaser, borrower, or lessee, You must hold the Indebtedness both at the time that the Company is notified of a claim pursuant to this letter and at the time that payment is made to make a claim for indemnification under this letter.

Condition 7 was modified in 2015 to read as follows:

> The Company will be liable only to the holder of the Indebtedness at the time that payment is made. This Section 7 does not apply to a purchaser, borrower, or lessee.

The only substantive change from 2014 to the 2015 version of Condition 7 is the elimination of the requirement that the same claimant own the loan both when the claim is made and when it is paid. The elimination of that requirement was apparently done to acknowledge that, if the loan is sold after a claim is made, that loan sale does not cut off the assignee's right to collect under that claim. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter clearly states that all successor owners of the loan become beneficiaries of the Letter. Thus, if a claim is made by the then-owner of the debt, and then the loan is sold, Condition 7 as rewritten in 2015 does not bar the assignee from being paid on the claim already submitted.

---

[70] The loan assignee and warehouse lender additions appear to have come about because of two court decisions. In First Financial Savings & Loan Ass'n. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota, 557 F.Supp. 654 (N.D.Ga. 1982), a loan assignee claimed to be a third party beneficiary of a Letter. The court, on summary judgment, did not reach the question, but held the insurer not liable because there was no breach of a duty under the Letter. In National Mortgage Warehouse v. Bankers First Mortgage Co., 190 F.Supp.2d 774 (D.Md. 2002), the court wrestled with but did not decide the question of whether or not the Letter benefits a warehouse lender that is not the addressee of the Letter. The court appeared inclined to rule that the warehouse lender was not a beneficiary of the Letter.

One issue that Condition 7 clarifies is that the loan originator cannot make a claim under a Letter after it assigns the loan.[71] However, Condition 7 is most clearly aimed at the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which has repeatedly asserted that it retained the right to make a claim under a Letter even after assigning the loan and all attendant agreements and insurance policies, including the title insurance policy, to another institution. In construing earlier versions of the Letter, some courts accepted the FDIC's argument that a claim under the Letter can be severed from the policy to which it is appended, while others have rejected that argument, or have found that the loan assignment contract did not actually state that the FDIC retained such a claim.[72] These claims have always been fraught with peril for the insurer because, in some such situations, the assignee lender has asserted a claim under the policy while the FDIC has asserted a claim under the Letter, as if they [71] In First American Title Ins. Co. v. Citizens Bank, 466 S.W.3d 776 (Tenn.App.-Knoxville 2015), app.den. (June 15, 2015), the originating lender assigned the loan before making a claim under the Letter. The court examined the loan assignment agreement, which said that the assignee received the note, mortgage, all insurance policies and "all other documentation and information collected by Seller in connection with the Mortgage Loan." The court held that the Letter was, without dispute, an "other document" included in the assignment. Contrast this ruling with the cases discussed in this section about assignments from the FDIC to other lenders, in which the FDIC claims to retain and carve out the CPL and further asserts that the insurer has no "standing" to even debate the terms of the assignment agreement. In Bank of America, N.A. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 892 N.W.2d 467, 316 Mich.App. 480 (Mich.App. 2016), the court held that Bank of America could pursue claims on the Letters at issue because, although it had sold the loans, it had also bought them back. The court made the interesting ruling that the Letter travels with the loan, whether or not there is a formal assignment of a right to make a claim under it. This reasoning actually undermines the FDIC's usual position that it can assign the loan but retain a claim under the Letter. The Bank of America decision was on appeal to the Michigan Supreme Court as of March 1, 2018, with ALTA having been given leave to file an amicus brief.

---

[72] The first such decision was JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 795 F.Supp.2d 624 (E.D.Mich. 2011), aff'd 750 F.3d 573 (6th Cir. (Mich.) 2014), in which the FDIC sold the loan to JP Morgan Chase. The lender collected under the policy and the court permitted the FDIC to collect the balance of the loan amount under its claim under the Letter. The court accepted the FDIC's argument that, because the policy and the Letter "protect a lender against different risks," they are "distinct" and thus the "documents" are not "inseparable." It ignored the fact that no separate consideration was paid for the Letter, and therefore it fails as a contractual obligation if severed from the policy, asserting that the consideration for the Letter was the inducement to place a title order with the insurer's agent. [This reasoning actually proves the insurer's point, that the premium is the only consideration and thus the Letter is incidental to the policy. See Fleet Mortgage Corp. v. Lynts, 885 F.Supp. 1187 (E.D.Wis. 1995), which so held.] First American asserted that the loan assignment contract did not say that the FDIC retained the right to make a claim under the Letter, because there was no carve-out from the assignment of the loan and all related documents. The court said that the insurer had no standing to seek an interpretation of the loan assignment agreement, because it was not a party to that contract. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2014 WL 4384270 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court rejected the insurer's argument that a Letter is ancillary to a policy and lacks separate consideration, parroting the reasoning of JPMorgan. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Property Transfer Services, Inc., 2013 WL 5535561 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court followed JP Morgan in holding that the insurer had no standing to debate the severing of the Letter claim from the policy, and went on to hold that the claim was retained although not specifically recited. However, in Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Floridian Title Group Inc., 2013 WL 5346435 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court disagreed with Property Transfer on both points, holding that the insurer had standing to seek an interpretation about whether or not the FDIC retained the claim under the Letter and ruling that the FDIC had not retained that claim. The language of the loan assignment contract was the same in both Property Transfer and Floridian Title. The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed Property Transfer in Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1906139, 611 Fed.Appx. 522 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2015) (unpublished), and rejected the reasoning of Floridian Title.

are separate and distinct.[73] Condition 7 ends that claim-splitting chicanery, by clearly stating that any claimant under the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter other than a purchaser, borrower or lessee must be the current holder of the Indebtedness.

The 2008, 2011, 2014 and 2015 versions of the ALTA Closing Protection Letter state that the borrower is protected by a Letter issued to his or her lender.[74] If the Letter does not contain such a specific assurance, however, a borrower is not protected by a Letter issued to the borrower's lender.[75] A Virginia court held that a Letter that ran in favor of an owner as "purchaser" did not protect the owner at a refinance closing.[76] When no letter was issued, the borrower had no protection under the policy from the lender's own failure to fund the mortgage loan.[77] In the companion cases of Clients' Security Fund and Sears Mortgage,[78] the New Jersey Supreme Court found the property purchaser and refinancing owner, respectively, to be beneficiaries of the Letter. The court found that a closing attorney hired by the owner/borrower was the agent of the insurer. It also found that the insurer has a duty to protect a purchaser against defalcation of the closing attorney as a matter of good faith and fair dealing. The Clients' Security Fund and Sears Mortgage Corp. decisions are largely the result of the court's scrutiny of New Jersey closing practice. The court seemed especially struck by the dichotomy between practices in the northern and southern parts of the state. In northern New Jersey, [73] In JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 795 F.Supp.2d 624 (E.D.Mich. 2011), the court held that the FDIC could sell the loan but keep its claim under a Letter, because the "additional assurances in a closing protection letter are separate and distinct from the coverage afforded under a title policy." The court admitted that no separate consideration had been paid for the Letter. The Sixth Circuit affirmed at 750 F.3d 573 (6th Cir. (Mich.) 2014).

---

[74] Condition 2(d) of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter defines "You" or "Your" to include "... the borrower if the Land is solely improved by a one-to-four family residence... ." In Johnson v. Schultz, 364 N.C. 90, 691 S.E.2d 701 (2010), the court held that the buyer ordinarily has more control over the selection of a closing attorney, and therefore must suffer the loss when he or she steals the purchase money. It based that ruling in part on a treatise that said that a borrower can obtain a closing protection letter.

[75] Thus, when an approved attorney properly closed the loan for which the Letter had been issued, but defalcated with the proceeds of that loan, the borrowers were not "inferential" beneficiaries of the Letter. Nappen v. Blanchard, 210 N.J. Super. 655, 510 A. 2d 324 (1986). Documents naming the insurer as "approved attorney" and "closing attorney" did not make it counsel to the borrowers. Carstensen v. Chrisland Corp., 442 S.E.2d 660 (Va. 1994).

[76] Cauthorne v. American Home Mortgage Corp., 2008 WL 4316123 (E.D.Va.) (unpublished). After noting that the letter does benefit a purchaser of real estate, the court said: "Although this Court finds it unusual, if not illogical and inequitable, that the CPL does not provide protection to the borrower in a refinance scenario, it appears that such is mandated by the language of the CPL."

[77] Gerrold v. Penn Title Ins. Co., 637 A.2d 1293 (N.J.Super.A.D. 1994), distinguishing Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993).

[78] Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993); Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993). Those decisions relied in part on the New York case of Meyerson v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 39 A.D.2d 190, 333 N.Y.S.2d 33 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1972), aff'd. 33 N.Y.2d 704, 349 N.Y.S.2d 675, 304 N.E.2d 371 (1973), in which the insurer referred the purchaser to an approved attorney in order to get a title policy. The approved attorney prepared a false title commitment on commitment forms provided him by the insurer. The court found that the approved attorney was the insurer's agent, making the insurer liable for the approved attorney's fraud.

attorneys represent the insurer, lender and purchaser at closing, doing all title clearance and payoff work. In southern New Jersey, title agents clear title and disburse funds, with the attorney representing only the buyer. The court decided that the cases before it were examples of the northern New Jersey system, and thus the attorneys were the insurers' agents.[79] New Jersey has since affirmed that the issuer is not liable under the Letter to the seller or a party merely paid from, rather than a party to, the transaction.[80]

14.4 Conditions And Exclusions

The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains 14 Conditions and Exclusions. The Exclusions are found in paragraph 3 of the Conditions and Exclusions section of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter.

14.4.1 Conditions

Condition 1 states that acceptance occurs when the lender transmits the Funds or documents to the agent. This provision is one of several that make it clear, under the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter, that the Letter must be issued to the lender before closing in order to be invoked. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter begins with the statement that the insurer has issued the Letter "in consideration of your acceptance of this letter." The indemnification statement of the Letter goes on to say that it covers the "actual loss of Funds incurred by You in connection with the closing of the Real Estate Transaction conducted by the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney on or after the date of this letter." Further, Requirement 1 states that liability can exist only if "the Company issues or is contractually obligated to issue a Policy for Your protection in connection with the closing of the Real Estate Transaction." All of these terms consistently state that the lender may not order the Letter after closing and then make a claim on it. This eliminates the issue created by a decision that found that a lender was not precluded from making claims on Letters that it only asked

---

[79] Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74 (N.J. 1993). See also Clients' Sec. Fund of the Bar of New Jersey v. Security Title & Guar. Co., 634 A.2d 90 (N.J. 1993).

[80] In Karpontinis v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 641, 2013 WL 1150722 (N.J.Super.A.D. 2013) (unpublished), rev.den. 214 N.J. 119, 67 A.3d 1193 (Table), the court refused to extend the Closing Service Letter to benefit a seller, because the seller is neither an insured nor an addressee of the CSL. In GE Capital Mortgage Services, Inc. v. Privetera, 346 N.J. Super. 424, 788 A.2d 324 (2002), a lender whose mortgage loan was not paid off because the closer stole the money was found to have no protection under a closing protection letter issued to the buyer's lender. The property had been sold under a bankruptcy court order, and the proceeds were placed in an escrow held by an attorney, Mr. Privetera, who absconded with the money. The court ruled that the Letter issued to New Jersey Mortgage did not protect the plaintiff, GE Capital, whose lien was to be paid from the proceeds of sale: "[T]he closing protection letter [does not] provide a basis for concluding that plaintiff was a third-party beneficiary … The closing protection letter protects N.J. Mortgage against Privetera's conduct. This is not the protection alluded to in either Sears or Client's Security that required payment of the outstanding first lien. … Plaintiff's 'benefit' is purely incidental to that transaction." It also found that GE Capital had the ability to protect itself against Mr. Privetera, further distinguishing the earlier cases: "Unlike the parties in Sears and Clients' Security, [GE Capital] was in the best position to protect itself. It was a party to the bankruptcy proceeding …, and had the ability to control the escrow created by the sale proceeds by urging that the funds be paid into the bankruptcy court or to another appropriate escrow agent. Failing to avail itself of these options, plaintiff can not now seek recompense from the title company."

to have issued after the closings had taken place and the lender had detected a pattern of loan fraud.[81]

Condition 2 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter defines a number of terms used in the Letter. Those definitions are discussed in various sections of this chapter. The Letter says that the terms "Indebtedness," "Insured Mortgage," "Knowledge" or "Known," "Land," and "Title" have the definitions found in the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy. The term "Real Estate Transaction" is capitalized in the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter and is used repeatedly. It is not a term defined in Condition 2, but Real Estate Transaction is described at the top of the letter by the names of the seller and buyer, the street address and the loan number.

Paragraph 3 of the Conditions and Exclusions is the Exclusions, which are discussed at §14.4.2.

Condition 4 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter states another predicate to coverage. It says that, "[i]f the closing is to be conducted by an Approved Attorney, a Commitment must have been received by You prior to the transmittal of Your final closing instructions to the Approved Attorney." (The Letter also now defines the term Commitment). An approved attorney is not a title insurance agent. Delivery of a title insurance commitment to the addressee by the insurer or its agent establishes that there is a contractual relationship between the addressee and the insurer, which is the essential consideration for the Letter.

Condition 5 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains a subrogation clause that is very similar to that found in the title insurance policy. It says that the insurer's "liability for indemnification shall be reduced to the extent that You have impaired the value of this right of subrogation." This type of provision in a Letter has been enforced.[82] See §2.3.3 for a complete discussion of prejudice caused by tardy tender, including the loss of subrogation rights.

Condition 6 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains perhaps its most important provision, and one not found in versions of the Letter issued before 2011—a limitation on the amount of the loss payable. The Letter states:

---

[81] In Fifth Third Mortgage-MI, L.L.C. v. Hance, 2011 WL 4501573 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), the court said that "the 'to be' clause only operates to further identify the property covered by the CPL." Also, it construed the Letter against First American as drafter. There was a dissenting opinion that accepted First American's interpretation of the Letter's syntax. The lender was not required to establish that it relied on the Letter in agreeing to close the loan with the title company, which cuts against the notion from Sears Mortgage and other cases that the insurer puts the title company in the position of being able to harm the lender by issuing a Letter on which the lender relies.

[82] U.S. Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 1080876 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished) (as to claims under both policy and closing protection letter containing a late notice prejudice statement, lender's tender one week before summary judgment was entered prevented insurer from asserting equitable subrogation, which would have reduced loss payable to lender; prejudice equal to amount of paid-off loan); Retained Realty, Inc. v. Michigan Pioneer Title Co., 2012 WL 1034638, 472 Fed.Appx. 361 (6th Cir. (Mich.)) (unpublished) (trial court ruling that lender forfeited coverage under closing protection letter by submitting claim too late reversed so trial court could take testimony about reasonableness of insured's "mitigation efforts"); Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 516824 (Cal.App. 1 Dist.) (unpublished) (lender that gave notice after deed of trust was wiped out by trustee's sale voided coverage). In Fifth Third Mortgage—MI, L.L.C. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1069341 (Mich.App.) (unpublished), rev.den. 871 N.W.2d 200 (Memorandum), 2015 WL 7574211 (Nov. 24, 2015), the court held that the lender's voluntary release of borrowers' personal liability impaired the insurer's subrogation rights and would reduce the lender's recovery under the Letters accordingly.

> The Company's liability for loss under this letter shall not exceed the least of:
> a. the amount of Your Funds;
> b. the Company's liability under the Policy at the time written notice of a claim is made under this letter;
> c. the value of the lien of the Insured Mortgage; or > d. the value of the Title insured or to be insured under the Policy at the time written notice of a claim is made under this letter.

The importance of such a provision was highlighted in JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co.,[83] in which the court held that the FDIC could sell the loan but keep its claim under the Letter, and was entitled to collect from the insurer the difference between what the insurer had paid to buy the parcel for the insured, JPMorgan Chase, and policy limits of $5 million. The real estate was worth about $2 million. The insurer thus paid about $3 million extra because the lender accepted a fraudulent appraisal. Loss under the policy is always limited to the actual value of the real estate. Since that decision, the FDIC has argued the JP Morgan holding repeatedly, in a number of jurisdictions, and some courts have bought its "book value" measure of "loss" for closing protection letter claims.[84] However, under the new Condition 6, the maximum liability of an insurer in a [83] 795 F.Supp.2d 624 (E.D.Mich. 2011).

[84] In JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 750 F.3d 573 (6th Cir. (Mich.) 2014), the title insurer had already paid several million dollars to deliver good title to the insured property to the loan purchaser-insured. Then the FDIC sued under a Letter it supposedly retained after selling the loan. The court affirmed its recovery of the difference between the loan amount and the "book value" of the loan (which the court never defined but which was apparently the true value of the real estate). It did so based solely on the FDIC's own internal spreadsheet, which was admitted as exhibit PX7. The court said "PX7 constitutes adequate proof of the FDIC's 'actual loss' based on Patriot's fraud. The parties do not dispute that WaMu wired $4,543,593.07 to Patriot in connection with the Truong transaction or that Patriot's owner, Saylor, diverted those funds for his own benefit. PX7 shows that at the time the FDIC took WaMu into receivership, the 'book value' of the loan from the Truong was $2,677,500. After the FDIC received 'book value' for the loan from Chase under the P & A Agreement, the FDIC was still $1,866,093.07 short of the amount Saylor fraudulently misappropriated. The district court therefore did not err when it found that 'Patriot Title's fraud was the most direct, natural, and foreseeable cause of WaMu's loss,' and that the jury's verdict was based on more than speculation." In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Property Transfer Services, Inc., 2013 WL 5535561 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court followed the same method. It said that the FDIC "need only establish a reasonable basis for calculating damages and it has done so." It provided two methods for calculating loss: "(1) the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 ("FIRREA"), 12 U.S.C. § 1821(1), method of principal losses and interest minus any funds its received through the foreclosure proceeding; or (2) the net realized after foreclosure and sale of the property securing the loan. In either formula, the FDIC asks the Court to consider the loss at the time the properties were sold. Calculating the loss applying either formula, the FDIC contends, results in the same loss amount." The court said that formula 1 was the one followed in JP Morgan and formula 2 matched that used in First American Title Ins. Co. v. Vision Mortgage Corp., 298 N.J.Super. 138, 689 A.2d 154 (N.J.Super.Ct.App.Div.1997), in which the New Jersey court found the loss equaled the outstanding loan balance less the proceeds on the sale of the property. The Property Transfer judge said "the net sale proceeds provides more certainty and a more reasonable calculation of damages where, as here, the FDIC, as receiver, transferred the Loans through a P & A Agreement with New Bank at book value." In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2014 WL 4384270 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court also measured loss using the "book value" method approved in JPMorgan. It gave the FDIC the difference between the loan principal amount and "book value," which the court described as the amount "the FDIC

JPMorgan situation would be the value of the insured real estate.

Also, in cases decided under earlier versions of the Letter that did not contain Condition 6, courts came to different conclusions about whether or not a lender could establish a loss payable under a Letter after having successfully foreclosed on the property and recovered the value of the loan collateral, or after having been paid the value of the property by the insurer.[85] Courts have also questioned whether or not liability under the Letter automatically terminates on payment of policy limits, or when the title insurer has cleared or tendered title to the insured.[86] Also, there was some recovered on the loans when it sold them to JP Morgan Chase in 2008." This mysterious "book value," the court said, "comes from Chase's loan files, which show the value of the loan as of the date of sale and the book value of each loan." Rather than explain and justify "book value," the court seemingly mocked ATIF for having "posed a litany of rhetorical questions about the basis of the amounts including how the book value was calculated and what fees or expenses were applied to unpaid principal balance." Then it shifted the burden of proof to ATIF, saying that, given "the undisputed record evidence," ATIF had not met its burden to show that there was a genuine issue of fact for trial. The simple but inconvenient explanation for "book value" is that it represents the actual fair market value of the real estate that served as security for the loan, as of the date of the loan sale. The difference between "book value" and the loan amount is thus made up of two factors: the excess amount lent based on an inflated appraisal and the later decline in the value of the property due to the market collapse that these lenders caused by their horrendous loan underwriting. Moreover, in Attorneys' Title, the court gave the FDIC a significant double dip by holding that it was entitled to prejudgment interest from the dates of the loans. The granting of prejudgment interest on the net loan amount completes the fantasy that the title insurer, by issuing a Letter, becomes a complete guarantor of the loan. In Regions Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 3753146 (N.D.Ala.) (unpublished), the title insurer obtained an equitable lien for the lender and then paid it the fair market value of the property, extinguishing its policy liability. The lender then demanded nearly policy limits, based on the closing protection letter. The court also refused to grant judgment based on the fact that the insurer had already paid the lender the value of the real estate, because Florida courts have accepted the FDIC "book value" theory of loss. Condition 6 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter supplies the statement that the Regions Bank court found lacking.

---

[85] No matter what closing instruction the closer might violate, or what fraud or dishonesty he or she may be guilty of in relation to the loan closing, the lender has already contracted to lend money to be secured by a lien on an identified parcel of real estate before the closing takes place. If it lends more than the property is worth, that decision is based on an appraisal or other valuation suggesting that the property is worth more than its true value. A recovery against the insurer under a Letter in an amount beyond the value of the real estate transforms the Letter into value insurance, or appraiser fraud insurance. In Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Kaufman, 2016 WL 2851554 (N.D.Ill. 2016) (unpublished), the court held that a borrower's representation in a loan application that he or she would live at the property triggered the closing instruction coverage of a closing protection letter, if the closer is proven to have known that statement to be false. The lender's closing instructions told the closer to suspend the closing if "the closing agent has knowledge that the borrower does not intend to occupy the property." The court said that this instruction invoked the Letter because the residency statement somehow had to do with "the collection and payment of funds due" the lender. In JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 795 F.Supp.2d 624 (E.D.Mich. 2011), the FDIC was permitted to make a claim under a closing protection letter even after selling the loan, and after the title insurer paid several million dollars to deliver good title to the insured property to the loan purchaser-insured. The court said "there is no risk of double recovery because First American's aggregate liability" under the policy and Letter would still be less than the loan money delivered to the title agent. It said the amount of the FDIC's loss would equal the loss suffered by the FDIC under some formula to be determined by the court, but was not as FDIC had posited simply the difference between the original loan amount and the book value of the loan that FDIC had set.

[86] In American Title Ins. Co. v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co., 1996 WL 54431 (Tex.App.-Houston (14 Dist.)) (unpublished), a payoff check sent by the title agency was returned NSF. The insurer tendered the loan balance to the lender. The old lender foreclosed and named Variable, the holder of the Letter, which demanded that the insurer defend uncertainty as to whether or not the lender's full credit bid at foreclosure sale barred recovery under the Letter.[87] Condition 6 resolves all of those issues, by eliminating any overlapping or double recovery in excess of the loan or property value. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter even goes the ALTA policies one better, by specifying that, if loss is based on the value of the real estate, that valuation is made as of the date the claim is made.

Condition 7 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter says that "[t]he Company will be liable only to the holder of the Indebtedness at the time that payment is made." That provision is fully discussed in §14.3.

The intentional dovetailing of policy liability with Letter indemnification liability is further reinforced by Condition 8 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter, which states that:

> Payment to You or to the owner of the Indebtedness under the Policy or Policies or from any other source shall reduce liability under this letter by the same amount. Payment in accordance with the terms of this letter shall constitute a payment pursuant to the Conditions of the Policy.

Condition 10 of the 2006 ALTA policies states that a payment under the policy reduces the policy amount. Thus, between Conditions 6 and 8, the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter states emphatically that the combined liability under the policy and Letter is no more than the policy amount, and any payment under either instrument reduces or extinguishes the liability it. The insurer refused, and the lender settled with the plaintiff. The court found the insurer liable for the settlement amount because Variable's exposure was caused "either through a breach of the insured closing letter or, derivatively, through Summit's defalcation."

---

[87] In New Freedom Mortgage Corp. v. Globe Mortgage Corp., 281 Mich.App. 63, 761 N.W.2d 832 (Mich.App. 2008), the loan assignee made a full credit bid at its foreclosure sale and then required the original lender to buy back the loans. The lender was found not to be entitled to make a demand under the Letter based on the fact that the property was worth less than the debt. Rather, it was bound by the full credit bid made by the assignee. The court reasoned that "[a]lthough [the addressee] did not actually receive the payments at the foreclosure sales, it assigned both mortgages to IFC for valuable consideration. Therefore, it has already received compensation for the loans." In Bank of America, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 499 Mich. 74, 878 N.W.2d 816 (Mich. 2016), after the trial court used the full credit bid holding of New Freedom and Michigan's anti-deficiency statute to dismiss the lender's action on one of two CPLs at issue in the case, the Michigan Supreme Court reversed the trial court ruling and New Freedom. It said that, if the anti-deficiency law and the full credit bid barred recovery under the Letter, that rule "would impinge on the parties' ability to contract as they see fit and would nullify the protections for which Bank of America contracted." It held that the anti-deficiency rule is limited to preventing the lender from pursuing the borrower for the debt after it makes a full credit bid. In Bank of America, N.A. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 892 N.W.2d 467, 316 Mich.App. 480 (Mich.App. 2016), the court reversed several trial court decisions in favor of the insurer based on New Freedom and the full credit bid rule. The appeal of that decision has been accepted by the Michigan Supreme Court and is pending as of March 1, 2018, with ALTA having been given leave to file an amicus brief. In Capital Mortgage Associates, LLC v. Hulton, 2009 WL 567057 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), reh.den. 2009 WL 3284241 (Conn.Super. Sept. 8, 2009), the court rejected the insurer's defense that the lender had accepted a deed in lieu of foreclosure from its borrower, which would bar it from suing the borrower on the note, akin to the full credit bid rule. However, this ruling is dicta. The court ruled that the letter was never activated, because the insurer did not issue a policy to the lender.

under the other.[88] There can be no double recovery by, for example, the splitting of the loan and policy from the Letter, as the FDIC did in the JPMorgan case. The loss payable under the Letter is fully discussed at §14.6.

Condition 9 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains the statement that the issuance of the Letter does not create an agency between the insurer and the title agent or approved attorney for escrow and closing services or acts, and that the Letter does not indemnify against escrow acts or services performed by the title agent other than in the closing of the Real Estate Transaction. The fact that the Letter does not create an agency relationship is fully discussed at §14.1.

Condition 10 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter requires prompt notice of a claim, stating that:

> In no event shall the Company be liable for a loss if the written notice of a claim is not received by the Company within one year from the date of the transmittal of Funds. The condition that the Company must be provided with written notice under this Section 10 shall not be excused by lack of prejudice to the Company.

Some earlier versions of the Letter contained similar notice deadlines, which have been found to be enforceable.[89] The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter provides two marked improvements on

---

[88] In Regions Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 2016 WL 3753146 (N.D.Ala.) (unpublished), the court construed Condition C of an earlier form of the CPL, which said in part that "liability hereunder as to any particular loan transaction shall be coextensive with liability under the policy issued to [Regions] in connection with such transaction. Payment in accordance with the terms of this letter shall reduce by the same amount the liability under such policy and payment under such policy shall reduce by the same amount of Commonwealth['s] liability under the terms of this letter." The title insurer obtained an equitable lien for the lender and then paid it the fair market value of the property, extinguishing its policy liability. The lender then demanded nearly policy limits, based on the closing protection letter. Commonwealth asserted that Condition C negated any liability under the CPL, because the entire policy liability had been paid. The court disagreed, stating that "Another reasonable interpretation of the statement that liability under the CPL shall be coextensive with liability under the Title Policy is that, as clarified by the next sentence in Paragraph C, the amount of Commonwealth's potential liability under the Title Policy for any particular loan transaction is reduced by any amount Commonwealth pays to Regions under the CPL in connection with that transaction, and vice versa." Because there was more than one interpretation of the language, the court refused to grant summary judgment in the insurer's favor. Conditions 6 and 8 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter should avoid the Regions Bank result. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 24872 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), recons.den. January 23, 2017 at 2017 WL 282210, the court rejected the insurer's argument based on this Condition that all liability under the title policies was extinguished by the release of the mortgages, and that there could be no residual liability under the CPLs after the policies were extinguished, based solely on the principle adopted by the Michigan courts that the policy and Letter are "separate contracts."

[89] Several courts have found that, when a claim was made under a Letter having a one-year bar date, no loss was payable when the insured submitted the notice after the deadline. See National Mortgage Warehouse v. Bankers First Mortgage Co., 190 F.Supp.2d 774 (D.Md. 2002); Federal Agricultural Mortg. Corp. v. It's a Jungle Out There, Inc., 2005 WL 3325051 (N.D.Cal. 2005) (unpublished). Similarly, in Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Lamey, 2013 WL 1976042 (D.Minn.) (unpublished), a Minnesota court ruled that the one-year claim bar provision is not automatic, and that the insurer must prove that it was prejudiced by the tardiness of notice given after the time had expired. Florida has produced a series of cases on the issue. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2013 WL 1891307 (S.D.Fla.)

earlier provisions. First, it creates a bright line period of one year from the date on which the loan money was transmitted. This avoids the argument made by the FDIC and others that there should be equitable tolling of the time period until the claimant finally figured out that some horror had occurred at the loan closing. Second, the provision clearly states that the insurer is excused from (unpublished), however, in which the Letter had a 90-day notice limitation, the court ruled that the claims on the Letters were not tardy because the FDIC learned of facts suggesting that the title agent was complicit in loan fraud less than 90 days before the claim was submitted. However, it said that coverage would be lost if the insurer proved that it was harmed by the fact that the FDIC took two years after the discovery of the loan fraud to investigate the facts and uncover the alleged complicity of the title agent in the fraud. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Floridian Title Group Inc., 2013 WL 5346435 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the Letter said that the insurer "shall not be liable hereunder unless notice of loss in writing is received by the company within ninety (90) days from the date of discovery of such loss." The court again rejected the FDIC's argument that a prejudice clause should be implied in the time limit provision, although the court said that the "better reading" of the clause had a prejudice element: that it "bars liability absent notice of loss within 90 days of its discovery; requires prompt notice within those 90 days; and reduces liability to the extent that the notice is not prompt and causes prejudice." In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Property Transfer Services, Inc., 2013 WL 5535561 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the Letter contained the same 90-day notice provision. Based on Floridian Title, the court held that the 90 days began to run when the FDIC obtained knowledge of the facts that triggered the Letter's assurances, and notice had been provided within that time. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2014 WL 4384270 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court barred claims under some of the Letters that were the subject of the suit because the FDIC had not given notice to the insurer within 90 days of "the date of discovery of such loss," as mandated by the Letters. It applied the ruling in Property Transfer that the clock begins running when the lender learns the facts that show that it has suffered a loss or that the agent did something that triggers the assurance of the Letter. Because Property Transfer had called the time limit a "bright line," the FDIC could not be saved from tardy notice by arguing a lack of prejudice. However, in the appeal of the Property Transfer decision, Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 1906139, 611 Fed.Appx. 522 (11th Cir. (Fla.) 2015) (unpublished), the Eleventh Circuit found that the FDIC had given timely notice. Although the FDIC submitted the claim three years after the properties were foreclosed, it said the notice was sent within 90 days of discovery of the facts that would trigger CPL coverage. The court said the key evidence was the testimony of the FDIC witness, who said that the fact that the borrower did not deliver the down payments was not discernible from the bank's records, and was learned from the closing agent's file. In Regions Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2015 WL 433486 (D.S.C.) (unpublished), the court held that the lender's failure to submit a claim within 90 days of discovery of the problem barred its recovery under the Letter. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 157 F.Supp.3d 1331 (S.D.Fla. 2015), the court held that the FDIC's failure to make a claim within 90 days of its discovery of the facts on which the claim was based meant that the claim was barred. In JP Morgan Chase Bank v. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 670871 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished), the court held that the lender had raised a question of fact as to whether or not there was an equitable tolling of a standard-form provision stating that a claim must be made within 90 days of discovery of the theft, with an absolute limit of one year from closing. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 2734092 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), a Florida court ruled that the FDIC submitted claims on two closing protection letters more than 90 days after it discovered the claimed losses, even using the liberal "delayed discovery" rule adopted by that court for the FDIC's benefit, barring its lawsuit on those letters. The court relied on the holdings in Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2014 WL 4384270 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished). In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2017 WL 24872 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), recons.den. January 23, 2017 at 2017 WL 282210, the court excused the FDIC's seven-year delay in bringing suit under the relaxed standard that court uses in deciding when the agency "discovered" the alleged violation of the Letter. In Bank of America, N.A. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 892 N.W.2d 467, 316 Mich.App. 480 (Mich.App. 2016), the court also held that private lender Bank of America was not barred from bringing suit on Letters seven years after the loans were made, finding that the insurer was required to but did not show that it was prejudiced by the delay. That decision was on appeal to the Michigan Supreme Court as of March 1, 2018, and ALTA has been given leave to file an amicus brief.

---

having to prove that it was harmed by tardy notice. Several courts had managed to weave a prejudice requirement into earlier notice provisions precisely because of the lack of this type of statement. Some earlier versions of the Letter contained no provision setting a claim bar date. When the Letter did not contain a bar date, or was not limited to a single transaction but continued until cancelled in writing, courts held that the Letter continued in effect until cancellation.[90]

When the Letter does not contain a bar date, a lawsuit brought to enforce the Letter is subject to the applicable statute of limitations.[91]

Condition 11 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter informs the claimant of the address to which the notice of claim is to be sent. This paragraph contains a prejudice statement that Condition 10 seems to make unnecessary, by stating that "[i]f the Company is prejudiced by Your failure to provide prompt notice, the Company's liability to You under this letter shall be reduced to the extent of the prejudice."

Condition 12, which was added in 2015, states that the claimant must provide "all reasonable aid" in the handling of a claim under the Letter. This provision is nearly identical to Condition 6(a) of the 2006 ALTA policies.

Condition 13 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter states that the Letter expires if the Real Estate Transaction does not close within one year after the date of the Letter or if, "at any time after the date of this letter, but before the Real Estate Transaction closes, the Company provides written notice of termination of this letter to the Addressee at the address set forth above."

Condition 14 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter states that it is effective only as to real estate in the state or states specified in the Letter. One court found that an earlier version of the Letter covered the violation of instructions about the recording of a deed of trust in another state, although the Letter contained a number of references to the title insurance policy to be issued on a certain parcel, "the land" and identified the property by street address.[92] This is also an important

---

[90] In Mortgage Network, Inc. v. AmeriBanc Mortgage Lending, LLC, 177 Ohio App.3d 733, 895 N.E.2d 917, 2008-Ohio-4112 (Ohio App. 10 Dist. 2008), the blanket Letter (not for a single transaction) continued until terminated, which was after the agent had been cancelled.

[91] In Heritage Pacific Financial, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 4401040 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the Letter did not contain a claim bar date. Because a closing protection letter is an indemnity contract, the Maryland indemnity contract statute of limitations applied. The court held that the time to sue under the CPL did not begin running until a loss had been suffered, which in that case was when the insured deed of trust was extinguished by the foreclosure of a senior lien that violated the closing instructions. In PennyMac Holdings, LLC v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 423 P.3d 608 (Table), 2018 WL 3689751 (Nev.) (unpublished), the court held that the Nevada six-year statute of limitations, NRS 11.190(1)(b), did not begin to run until the insurer denied the claim. In 21st Mortgage Corp. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2018 WL 6716081 (D.N.J. 2018) (permanent citation not yet available), a lawsuit brought by a lender under a New Jersey closing service letter was dismissed because it was filed after the New Jersey statutes of limitation had run. The court said the time began running when the insurer informed the lender that it would deny any claim based on the subject of the CPL claim.

[92] In Regions Bank v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2015 WL 433486 (D.S.C.) (unpublished), the title agent closer failed to properly record a mortgage on a second parcel in a different state, whose title was not insured in the policy issued by the insurer. The court held that the Letter covered that breach of instruction. Despite all of the careful references to the land in the Letter, the court found "persuasive" the argument by Regions, not based on any term in the Letter, that "the language of the CPL indicates it was intended to cover the transaction as a whole, rather than any one piece of property."

control for the insurer, so that it is not liable under a Letter for the acts of a title agent concerning property in a state in which it has not been appointed by the insurer.

Finally, Condition 15 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains an arbitration provision. That provision is fully discussed at §14.5.

14.4.2 Exclusions

The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains twelve exclusions, in Conditions 3(a) through (l). Two of those exclusions were added in 2015.

Exclusion A is for the title agent or approved attorney's failure "to comply with closing instructions that require title insurance protection in connection with the Real Estate Transaction inconsistent with that set forth in the Commitment." By this exclusion, the insurer avoids the conundrum of indemnifying the assured under the Letter for the title agent's failure to obtain better or cleaner title than the policy describes. If this exclusion were not enforced, the assured might be able to get better title coverage through the Letter than through the policy, without even reforming the policy.

Exclusion B explains that the insurer does not protect against loss of Funds due to the failure of the bank in which the addressee's money has been deposited by the title agent. This provision has been found in the Letter since at least the 1987 version. This includes the bank in which the settlement agent deposits closing funds and the bank on which the lender's funds are drawn to fund the closing. However, the Letter does not exclude liability caused by the settlement agent's failure to deposit the Funds in an institution named by the addressee in its written escrow instructions.

Exclusion C states that the issuer shall have no liability under the Letter for "constitutional or statutory lien or claim of lien that arises from services, labor, materials, or equipment, if any Funds are to be used for the purpose of construction, alteration, or renovation." (The exclusion goes on to say that it does not impair any coverage given by the policy). The bookend is Exclusion K, which states that there is no coverage for "the periodic disbursement of Funds to pay for construction, alteration, or renovation on the Land relating to the Real Estate Transaction." Together, these are more inclusive than the exclusions that have appeared since the 1987 ALTA Letter concerning the acts of the title agent in serving as a construction loan disburser.

Exclusion D is for a "defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter in connection with the Real Estate Transaction." The exclusion says it "does not affect the coverage afforded in the Policy." The purpose of the exclusion is to emphasize that the Letter does not provide any coverage that is already found in the Policy to which it is merely incidental.

Exclusion E is for the "[f]raud, theft, dishonesty or negligence by You or by Your employee, agent, attorney or broker." Paragraph 4 of the 2008 ALTA Letter also contained the following provision:

> Any liability of the Company for loss does not include liability for loss resulting from the negligence, fraud or bad faith of any party to a real estate transaction other than an Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney, the lack of creditworthiness of any borrower connected with a real estate transaction, or the failure of any collateral to adequately secure a loan connected with a real estate transaction.

The reference to the borrower's creditworthiness has been moved from Exclusion D to Condition 9 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter, which says that:

> Other than as expressly provided in this letter, the Company shall have no liability for loss resulting from the fraud, theft, dishonesty, misappropriation, or negligence of any party to the Real Estate Transaction other than an Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney, the lack of creditworthiness of any borrower connected with the Real Estate Transaction, or the failure of any collateral to adequately secure a loan connected with the Real Estate Transaction.

Many claims under the Letter are the result of loan fraud. These plainly-worded provisions should be found to bar any claim in which the lender's loss is actually the result of the fraud, dishonesty or negligence of its own employees or agents, including the mortgage broker. Under earlier versions of the Letter, most courts held that the lender's sloppy underwriting was not a defense to liability under a Letter.[93] However, even under those versions of the Letter, the courts found that a lender could not recover under a Letter when the lender's own officer perpetrated or was complicit in the loan fraud.[94]

[93] In two decisions, the insurer's evidence showed that the attorney did not collude with the wrongdoers and complied with New Freedom's written closing instructions in good faith as he understood them. New Freedom "presented evidence that the lawyer colluded by intentionally disregarded the written closing instructions in order to hide the fraud, and by misrepresenting information on the HUD-1." In both cases, the appeals court reversed and remanded on the narrow issue of the level of intent which the closer must demonstrate, as reflected in the jury instructions. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. New Freedom Mortgage Corp., 288 Ga.App. 350, 654 S.E.2d 190 (Ga.App. 2007); Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. New Freedom Mortgage Corp., 285 Ga.App. 22, 645 S.E.2d 536 (Ga.App. 2007). The decision at 285 Ga.App. 22 led to Exclusion D. In that case, the court said that the Letter did not permit a contributory negligence defense: "… where, as here, an indemnification clause requires indemnification of losses that 'arise out of' certain specified events but does not explicitly mention the indemnitee's negligence, the clause still requires full indemnification although the indemnitee's negligence may have partially caused the loss. … As such, even though the CPL did not explicitly mention coverage for the negligence of New Freedom, Lawyers Title was required to indemnify New Freedom even if the loss was partially caused by New Freedom's own negligence. … [T]he comparative negligence principle allowing for a proportional reduction in a plaintiff's damages has no application in this case, since, as explained above, Lawyers Title was required under Georgia indemnity law to fully reimburse New Freedom even if the loss was partly attributable to New Freedom's own negligence." New Freedom was cited and followed in JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 795 F.Supp.2d 624 (E.D.Mich. 2011), in which First American argued that, if "WaMu's underwriting been more stringent, it would have discovered the fraud." In response, the court cited cases on fraud, contract and indemnity. It cited a case saying that "one accused of fraud may not raise as a defense the carelessness of the party defrauded." [First American did not perpetrate a fraud.] Also, it said, "contributory negligence is not a valid defense in a breach of contract case." [The court consistently called the CPL an indemnity, not a contract.] Finally, it cited New Freedom's holding that contributory negligence was not a defense to a claim on an indemnity. After blending all of that together, the court held simply that "WaMu's failure to discover the fraud does not provide a basis for First American to avoid its indemnity duty under the CPL." Similarly, in Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 2237877 (E.D.Mich. 2015) (unpublished), a Michigan federal court ruled that Washington Mutual's failure to follow "objectively reasonable underwriting standards" in making its loans, on which assumption Fidelity National issued closing protection letters, was not a viable basis on which to seek to void the Letters. The court relied on the earlier Michigan decisions as precedent, as well as two Ohio decisions about title insurance policy coverage rather than a closing protection letter: Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 758 F.Supp.2d 476 (S.D. Ohio 2010) and 692 F.3d 507 (6th Cir. (Ohio) 2012). In Bank of America, N.A. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 892 N.W.2d 467, 316 Mich.App. 480 (Mich.App. 2016), the appeals court was even more vehement, holding that the lender's "underwriting practices are not material to the terms of the CPLs." The appeal of that decision has been accepted by the Michigan Supreme Court and is pending as of March 1,

Exclusion F, for "settlement or release of any claim by You without the Company's written consent," was also introduced in the 2008 version of the Letter. In many situations, there are a series of settlements made between loan originators, assignees, mortgage insurers, brokers and others before the addressee even submits a claim under the Letter. Those settlements fix the claimed damages under the Letter.[95] Exclusion E makes it clear that any such settlement made before the tender of a claim under the Letter, and without the written consent of the insurer, will bar the claim. This will prevent the insurer from being the last resort, and should also reduce the likelihood of collusive or careless settlements.

Exclusion G, which was added in the 2008 version of the Letter, grafts in Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b) of the title insurance policy, negating coverage for "matters created, suffered, assumed, agreed to, or Known by You." Condition 2 imports the definition of "Known" from the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy. Because the Letter is incident to the issuance of the title insurance policy for the transaction, it is reasonable to find corresponding exclusions under the Letter also. This use of the same terms that are found and defined in the policies suggests that this exclusion will be interpreted based on case law construing Exclusions 3(a) and 3(b) of the policies.

Exclusion H is for "failure of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney to determine the validity, enforceability, or the effectiveness of a document required by Your closing instructions."

2018, with ALTA having been given leave to file an amicus brief. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 2014 WL 4384270 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court held that the lender's negligent loan underwriting was not a defense to liability under the Letter. In Florida, a party cannot normally obtain an indemnity against its own negligence. However, the 2011 decision of Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 10–21197–PCH, slip op. at 6 (S.D.Fla. May 17, 2011) (not the same case, and known as the Indymac decision), rejected that argument, saying that a Letter is "sufficiently different" from a standard indemnity contract so that it is an exception to the general rule that a party cannot get an indemnity against his own negligence. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Property Transfer Services, Inc., 2013 WL 5535561 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court held that "[t]he FDIC does not have to prove that Old Bank would not have funded the Loans" if it had been told what the closer learned at the closing table. In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2015 WL 418122 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished), a Michigan federal court held that a title insurer may not raise the lender's underwriting negligence as a defense to liability under a Letter, and refused to distinguish the form of negligence asserted in this case from the type that the court refused to consider in JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 795 F.Supp.2d 624 (E.D.Mich. 2011). The court said that the "plain language" of the Letter did not suggest a negligence defense could be asserted. However, the Letter at issue did not contain an exclusion for the lender's negligence.

[94] In In re Taneja, 2010 WL 4882826 (Bkcy.E.D.Va.) (unpublished), the bankruptcy trustee for a mortgage banker whose president had convinced title agents not to record the insured mortgages or make payoffs of the existing loans tried pursuing claims on closing protection letters issued to the lender. In rejecting the trustee's claims, the court described the doctrine of in pari delicto as "an affirmative defense that bars a wrongdoer from recovering against his alleged coconspirators." The title insurer also raised the in pari delicto defense in Walsh Securities, Inc. v. Cristo Property Management, Ltd., 2012 WL 3629045 (D.N.J.) (unpublished), in which the officers of the lender either orchestrated or were complicit in the loan fraud. The court did not reach the issue.

[95] See, for example, New Freedom Mortgage Corp. v. Globe Mortgage Corp., 281 Mich.App. 63, 761 N.W.2d 832 (Mich.App. 2008), in which the loan assignee had foreclosed, made a full credit bid, and then sold the loan back to the addressee, all before the claim was submitted under the Letter.

The exclusion goes on to say that it "does not affect the coverage afforded in the Policy." This exclusion was added in 2015. It provides the counterpoint to the limitation in the closing instruction covered event described at Requirements 4(a), which limits the coverage of the Letter to closing instructions having to do with title and title documents, as discussed in §14.2.

Exclusion I negates coverage for:

> Federal consumer financial law, as defined in 12 U.S.C. § 5481(14), actions under 12 U.S.C. § 5531, or other federal or state laws relating to truth-in-lending, a borrower's ability to repay a loan, qualified mortgages, consumer protection, or predatory lending, including any failure of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney to comply with Your closing instructions relating to those laws... .

This exclusion is very similar to, but somewhat broader than, Exclusion 5 of the 2006 ALTA Loan Policy, and plainly carves off claims in which the title agent is accused of being complicit in the violation of state or federal lending laws. Exclusion J negates coverage for another type of issue having to do with loan underwriting and not loan closings:

> federal or state laws establishing the standards or requirements for asset-backed securitization including, but not limited to, exemption from credit risk retention, including any failure of the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney to comply with Your closing instructions relating to those laws;

Exclusions I and J were not found in the 2011 or earlier versions of the Letter, and were revised in 2015.

Exclusion K is discussed above, in connection with Exclusion C. Exclusion L negates coverage for:

> Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney acting in the capacity of a qualified intermediary or facilitator for tax deferred exchange transactions as provided in Section 1031 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Exclusion L should be unnecessary belt and suspenders, because a title company's services as a qualified intermediary are not closing services. See §13.15 for a complete discussion of tax-deferred exchange intermediary service issues.

14.5 Arbitration Of Letter Disputes

Condition 15 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter is an arbitration provision.[96] This provision is bracketed by ALTA in anticipation that it will not be used in all jurisdictions. Earlier versions of the Letter did not contain an arbitration provision. However, a claim under a Letter that does not contain an arbitration provision is arbitrable nonetheless, if the policy issued to the addressee contains an arbitration clause. The arbitration provision in the policy says that arbitrable matters include any controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to the policy.[97] The Letter is effective only when the issuing insurer has committed to issue a policy. Any obligation under the Letter is thus ancillary to the policy.[98]

Arbitration of a dispute under a Letter was permitted in Fleet Mortgage Corp. v. Lynts,[99] in which the court held:

> If the closing letters were a "separate contract" as Fleet urges, it would be very peculiar for Chicago Title to give such a promise without something in return. Furthermore, if the promise were considered a separate contract unsupported by consideration, Fleet would be in a worse position because such a gratuitous promise is unenforceable.[100]

The court said that the Letter is related to the policy:

> It is apparent that the general perception of closing protection letters within the industry is that they are related to the issuance of the title insurance policy and are not a separate, unrelated service.[101]

The addition of an arbitration provision to the Letter in 2011 erased any question of the parties' right to seek arbitration of a dispute concerning the Letter.

---

[96] Conditions and Exclusions 15 of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter contains an arbitration provision essentially identical to that found in the 2006 ALTA policies, making arbitration mandatory when the policy amount is $2 million or less.

[97] "Arbitrable matters may include, but are not limited to, any controversy or claim between the Company and the Insured arising out of or relating to this policy, any service in connection with its issuance or the breach of a policy provision, or to any other controversy or claim arising out of the transaction giving rise to this policy." Condition 14, 2006 ALTA policies. A similar provision is found in Conditions & Stipulations 14 and 13, respectively, of the 1992 ALTA Owner's and Loan policies.

[98] "The protection against the risk of loss caused by attorney defalcation under the circumstances clearly is an incident to the issuance of title insurance." Sears Mortgage Corp. v. Rose, 634 A.2d 74, 86 (N.J. 1993).

[99] 885 F.Supp. 1187 (E.D.Wis. 1995).

[100] 885 F.Supp. at 1190.

[101] 885 F.Supp. at 1190.

14.6 Defenses To Liability And Losses Payable Under Letter

The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter states that it indemnifies the addressee against "actual loss of Funds incurred by You in connection with" a closing conducted by the title agent or approved attorney. Loss is limited to the return of the Funds. The 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter now contains a blank space in Requirements 3, in which the insurer must insert the aggregate of the Funds to be transmitted to the issuing agent or approved attorney. Further, the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter defines "Funds" as "the money received by the Issuing Agent or Approved Attorney for the Real Estate Transaction." These provisions work together in harmony to both cap the amount of liability under the Letter and to define loss as that part of the money sent to the issuing agent that was lost due to the covered event. See §14.4.1 for a complete discussion of the measure of loss provision in Condition 6.

When the issuing agent or approved attorney steals the money sent to him or her, loss is typically measured as the amount that was stolen and not recovered by the claimant.[102] When the loan was never funded and, as a result, the mortgage not recorded, the insurer was found not to be liable under the Letter. The court agreed with the insurer that:

> …the letter's plain language clearly establishes as a matter of law that the insurance covers only loss of settlement funds and no other losses. Because Heritage never provided the closing attorneys with (good) settlement funds, defendant points out, there was clearly never any loss of such funds and thus no loss compensable under the insured closing service letter.[103]

Similarly, when money was paid contrary to the lender's instruction, the addressee's claim was limited to the amount of money given to the title agency for closing.[104]

When the basis for the claim under the Letter is that the closing agent violated instructions and aided the borrower in perpetrating loan fraud, the most the lender should recover is the amount

---

[102] For example, in Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Frontier Title Co., 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11917 (N.D. Ill., Sept. 27, 1989) (unpublished), the insurer was found liable for lender funds diverted by the title agent in the amount of $500,000, based on the Letter.

[103] First Financial Savings & Loan Ass'n. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota, 557 F. Supp. 654, 662 (DC N.D. Ga. 1982).

[104] The lender had incurred various consequential expenses because the title agent did not pay the permanent lender's loan fee, and substitute financing had to be arranged. Nonetheless, the lender's claim was limited to the "actual settlement funds transmitted [by the Banks] to the title company." Because the lender had recouped all of the "settlement funds," it had no claim under the Letter for its consequential expenses. The appellate court quoted the trial court that "'coverage against the loss of those funds does not include damages sustained by the payment of attorney's fees, expenses incurred in connection with bringing the loan to closing, or indirect losses, such as a loss of profits.' … Accordingly, the district court concluded that the Banks were entitled to recover from USLife only loss, due to fraud or dishonesty on the part of Bluegrass, of those funds which had been advanced to Bluegrass." Herget Nat'l Bank v. US Life Title Ins. Co., 809 F.2d 413, 416 (7th Cir. 1987).

of money it lent in excess of the value of the property.[105]

One commentator gave this overall statement as to the measure of damages available to a party protected by a Letter:

> [T]he measure of damages under a closing protection letter depends, at least in part, on how indemnity agreements are interpreted under the laws of different states. Other factors affecting the damages that a lender may recover under a closing protection letter include: (1) the language of the closing protection letter, which may vary from state to state; (2) whether the lender's loss arises from a title defect that would be covered by a title insurance policy; and (3) whether a closing protection letter constitutes insurance under applicable state law.[106]

Two key provisions of the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter create a potent defense to liability. Requirements 4 conditions recovery for a covered event on proof that "Your loss is solely caused by" the acts of the issuing agent or approved attorney. That sole-causation condition is further reinforced by Exclusion E, which excludes coverage for the "fraud, theft, misappropriation, dishonesty, or negligence" of the lender's employee, agent, attorney or broker. Most loan fraud is either orchestrated by the loan broker (who is also an agent of the lender) or the lender's employee, and merely not detected by the issuing agent who closes the loan. These provisions bar recovery under the 2015 ALTA Closing Protection Letter in such cases, and reverse the holdings of a number of courts that have refused to consider the comparative or contributory fault of the lender. See §14.4.2 for a complete discussion of those cases.

Most courts have said that the claimant under the Letter may not seek bad faith damages, because the Letter is not an insurance policy.[107] Also, the Letter is a contract, and thus the economic [105] In Aurora Loan Services, LLC v. Hirsch, 170 Conn.App. 439, 154 A.3d 1009 (Conn.App. 2017), the court held that the loss payable was the difference between the principal and interest owed on the note versus the appraised value of the property on the date the lender foreclosed. It rejected the lender's claim that the property should be valued as of the date the loan was made, or based on a later resale of the property for about a tenth of its appraised value.

---

[106] James Bruce Davis, The Law of Closing Protection Letters, 36 Tort & Ins. L.J. 845, 853 (2001).

[107] In Metmor Financial, Inc. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 645 So.2d 295 (Ala. 1992), the Alabama Supreme Court found that no bad faith action could be brought as to a Letter, because the normal indicia of an insurance policy are missing. In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. New Freedom Mortgage Corp., 288 Ga.App. 642, 655 S.E.2d 269 (Ga.App. 2007), the court said: "The issue here is whether the CPL qualifies as an insurance policy, and we find that it does not. In our law, '[i]nsurance' means a contract which is an integral part of a plan for distributing individual losses whereby one undertakes to indemnify another or to pay a specified amount or benefits upon determinable contingencies.' (Emphasis supplied.) OCGA § 33-1-2(2). … Under Lawyers Title's CPL, however, no second party assumes the risk and significantly no distribution of risk is accomplished. Therefore, the CPL is not an insurance policy within the meaning of OCGA § 33-4-6, and the trial court did not err by so ruling." In Bancorp Bank v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2014 WL 3325861 (E.D.Penn.) (unpublished), the court rejected the argument that the Letter is so closely related to the issuance of the policy that the Letter should be considered an endorsement to the policy. Because Pennsylvania permits a bad faith claim only in "an action arising under an insurance policy," 42 Pa. Cons.Stat. Ann. § 8371, the Letter does not support such a claim. However, in Horvath v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2013 WL 1294677, 2013-Ohio-1295 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.) (unpublished), the court observed that, by law, a Letter is part of the business of title insurance, so that a bad faith loss doctrine bars tort claims premised on the Letter.[108]

A number of other defenses to or limitations on liability are found in the Letter's exclusions, all of which are discussed at §14.4.2. Other defenses and limitations, such as the claim bar date provision, are found in the Letter's Conditions, which are discussed at §14.4.1.

---

claim may be brought. The court found no bad faith in that case, which may make the ruling dictum. In Johnson v. U.S. Title Agency, Inc., 91 N.E.3d 76, 2017 -Ohio- 2852 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2017), similarly, the court observed that the law makes the issuance of closing protection coverage "part of the business of title insurance for purposes of Chapter 3953 of the Revised Code." In Aurora Loan Services, LLC v. Hirsch, 170 Conn.App. 439, 154 A.3d 1009 (Conn.App. 2017), the court rejected a demand for punitive damages. The lender argued that such damages were payable because it sought recovery under the "fraud or dishonesty" coverage of the Letter, or that the insurer was vicariously liable for the title agent's fraud. The court responded that the insurer was merely a party to a contract, and was not guilty of fraud or dishonesty or vicariously liable for same.

[108] In Lehman Brothers Holdings, Inc. v. Hirota, 2007 WL 1471690 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the addressee sued the insurer for the claimed participation of a title agent in a loan fraud scheme, bringing counts for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, breach of fiduciary duty and civil conspiracy. The court ruled that all non-contract counts were barred by the economic loss doctrine. It rejected Lehman's argument that fraud has been carved out of the doctrine. It ruled instead that the fraud exception is limited to acts that induced the party to sign the contract, not bad acts in the performance of the contract. The court held that the fraudulent acts alleged by Lehman were the same ones it alleged breached the contract, all of which occurred at closing and not before. Thus, it held, the tort claims were barred. Similarly, in U.S. Bank, N.A. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 2119335 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court found a closing protection letter to be a contract, and thus the economic loss doctrine barred a suit by an assignee lender against the insurer for closing negligence. In Fifth Third Mortgage Co. v. Kaufman, 2016 WL 2851554 (N.D.Ill. 2016) (unpublished), the court refused to grant summary judgment to the insurer on its claim that the lender's losses were caused by the market collapse rather than the CPL. However, it said that Chicago Title could make that argument at trial.

15 "Duty to Search" and Title Searches

15.1 "Duty To Search" Theory Liability

This chapter discusses the various theories which some states have adopted creating extra-contractual duties to search and report the status of title. These theories of recovery are alternate to recovery under the policy. Also found in this chapter is the subject of liability under title searches, abstracts and guarantees, discussed at §15.13.

15.2 Search Duty Rationale

The so-called "duty to search" has been much discussed by scholars.[1] The stated justification for the search-duty theories is the proposition that the proposed insured should have a cause of action independent of the policy terms if the insurer allegedly fails to conduct a diligent examination of the

---

[1] See James Bruce Davis, More Than They Bargained For: Are Title Insurance Companies Liable in Tort for Undisclosed Title Defects?, 45 Cath. U.L.Rev. 71 (1995); Boyette, Title Insurance Liability Beyond the Policy, Florida Bar Journal, July/August 1995, p. 24; Annotation, Title Insurer's Negligent Failure to Discover and Disclose Defect as Basis for Liability in Tort, 19 A.L.R.5th 786; Sweat, Abstractor or Abstracter?, Practicing Law Institute, Real Estate Course Handbook No. 289 (1987); Palomar, Title Insurance Companies' Liability for Failure to Search Title and Disclose Record Title, 20 Creighton L.Rev. 455 (1987); Levinson, A Return to Policy Limits: Title Insurance Company Liability in California, in Title Insurance in Current Transactions 1983, p. 261 (P.L.I.1983); Rubin, Title Insurance Claims Developments in the 80's-Significant Case Law Developments Applicable to Title Insurance Claims, in Title Insurance in Current Transaction 1983, p. 307 (P.L.I.1983); Does A Title Insurer Owe A Duty to Any But Its Insured?, 7 Okla. City U.L.Rev. 293 (1982); Title Insurance: The Duty to Search, 71 Yale L.J. 1161 (1962); Johnstone, Title Insurance, 66 Yale L.J. 492 (1957); Birnbaum and Scheurich, The Duties of Title Insurers in the Non-Insurance Context, ABA TIPS Title Insurance Litigation Committee Committee News, Summer 1999 [focus on Arizona law since Luce v. State Title Agency, Inc., 190 Ariz. 500, 950 P.2d 159 (Ariz.App. Div. 1 1997)]; Gordon, Title Search Liability in Virginia, Virginia Land Title Association Examiner, Spring 1999; Jennings, The Evolving Nature of Title Insurance as a Contract: Removing the Notions of Panacea, 25 Real Estate Law J. 301 (Winter 1997); Hannigan and Albano, Tort Claims Against Title Insurers Will Likely Fail, The National Law Journal, Monday, October 12, 1998, p. B12; Liability on Non-policy Theories: the Risks That an Underwritten Title Company and Title Insurance Company Undertake in Performing Clerical Ministerial or Escrow Services and New Theories of Liability, by Wendy Y. Watanabe, in the 1998 edition of the Real Estate Law and Practice Course Handbook Series by Practicing Law Institute, PLI Order No. N0-001G.

public records before issuing its commitment to insure. In jurisdictions adopting the search duty, when the insurer makes a mistake, it is held responsible under both the terms of the insurance contract and for damages flowing from the failure to accurately search or report the status of title. As discussed below at §15.4, there are various theories of liability on which recovery is premised.

Most jurisdictions have rejected the proposition that a title insurer may be liable in tort under a title insurance policy.[2] Walker Rogge Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co.,[3] for example, recognized the insured's expectation of a reasonable search, but refused to create a separate tort cause of action:

> Although we recognize that an insured expects that a title company will conduct a reasonable title examination, the relationship between the company and the insured is essentially contractual. See Spring Motors Distribs., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 98 N.J. 555, 579-80, 489 A.2d 660 (1985). The end result of the relationship between the title company and the insured is the issuance of the policy. To this extent, the relationship differs from other relationships conceivably sounding in both tort and contract, such as the relationship between physician and patient, to which plaintiff alludes. Although the relationship between physician and patient is contractual in its origins, the purpose of the relationship is to obtain the services of the physician in treating the patient. The patient reasonably expects the physician to follow the appropriate standard of care when providing those services. By contrast, the title company is providing not services, but a policy of insurance. That policy appropriately limits the rights and duties of the parties.
>
> From this perspective, the insured expects that in consideration for payment of the premium, it will receive a policy of insurance. The insurer's expectation is that in exchange for that premium it will insure against certain risks subject to the terms of the Policy. If the title company fails to conduct a reasonable title examination or, having conducted such an examination, fails to disclose the results to the insured, then it runs the risk of liability under the policy. In many, if not most, cases conduct that would constitute the failure to make a reasonable title search would also result in a breach of the terms of the policy.
>
> The expectation of the insured that the insurer will conduct a reasonable search does not necessarily mean that the insurer may not limit its liability in the title commitment and policy. If the company may not so limit its liability, then it would be exposed to consequential damages resulting from its negligence. Under general contract principles, however, consequential damages are not recoverable unless they > were within the specific contemplation of the parties. Donovan v. Bachstadt, 91 N.J. 434, 444-45, 453 A.2d 160 (1982). Another difference is that in an action under the title policy, the insured may establish a cause of action for breach of contract without establishing that the title company breached the standard of care appropriate for a reasonable title search. In an action in tort for the failure to conduct such a search, the insured would be required to establish the appropriate standard of care applicable to title searching.[4]

[2] See Yorio, Negligence Ebbs as Basis for Title Insurer Liability, The National Law Journal, Monday, March 18, 1996, p. B8, examining Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Insurance Co., 992 F.2d 1231 (1st Cir. 1993); Somerset Savings Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 420 Mass. 422 (1995); and Citibank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 214 A.D.2d 212, 632 N.Y.S.2d 779 (A.D. 1 Dept. 1995). A state-by-state review is found in §15.12.

[3] 562 A.2d 208, 220-1 (N.J. 1989).

Some courts have based their rejection of the tort theories on the economic loss doctrine, which bars tort claims based on contracts in which the only claimed losses are economic.[5] Courts have also consistently rejected the alternate notion that a title insurer has a fiduciary duty to accurately report the state of record title.[6]

The actual title search performed in any given case depends on a number of factors. Ideally, every title search would begin at a patent or other original government grant. However, a search may reasonably be shortened based on a marketable title act or other curative statutes.[7] A company may also establish a standard that the search may also be shortened because there is reliable title evidence such as a prior abstract or policy from a reputable company. Finally, in some cases companies will take a limited risk even without a curative law or prior title evidence by shortening the search to 30, 40 or 60 years. The insurer's practice in a particular state is also shaped by any law regarding a duty to conduct a title search. Some states require that a title search be performed that covers a specified period of time.[8]

---

[4] 116 N.J. at 540, 562 A.2d at 220.

[5] See, for example, First Midwest Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 218 Ill.2d 326, 300 Ill.Dec. 69, 843 N.E.2d 327 (2006); First American Title Ins. Co. v. 273 Water Street, LLC, 2010 WL 6496185 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished) and Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 6101016 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 204 (unpublished).

[6] See Barstad v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 145 Wash.2d 528, 39 P.3d 984 (Wash. 2002); Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982); Williams v. Land Title Co. of Dallas, 1997 WL 196345 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished); Park v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2011 WL 1991651 (Cal.App. 4 Dist.) (unpublished); Gildea v. Guardian Title Co. of Utah, 970 P.2d 1265, 357 Utah Adv.Rep. 7 (1998); Eller Media Co. v. DGE, Ltd., 2004 WL 2002449, 2004 Ohio 4748 (Ohio App. 8 Dist. 2004) (unpublished); Fogg v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 89 A.3d 510 (D.C.App. 2014). The various bases for a party's assertion that a title insurer owes a fiduciary duty are discussed in §9.1.3.1.

[7] See §§3.4.7.4, 3.4.7.5 and 3.4.7.6 for a discussion of marketable title acts and title curative acts. For an extensive state-by-state discussion of these acts, see Basye, Clearing Land Titles, Thomson/Reuters. Also see chapter 1 of Roberts, et al., Public Regulation of Title Insurance Companies and Abstracters, Villanova University Press 1961.

[8] Statutes requiring insurers to perform title searches are discussed below at §§15.9 and 15.12. Those statutes requiring a "reasonable" title search are: Alaska Stat. § 21.66.170; Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. §§ 20-1567; Colo.Rev.Stat. §10-11-106; Fla.Stat. Sec. 627.7845; Haw.Rev.Stat. §431:20-113; Kan.Stat.Ann. §40-235; Mont. Code Ann. §33-25-214; Neb.Rev.Stat. §§44-1947; Nev.Rev. Stat. §692A.220; N.H.Rev.Stat.Ann. §416-a:6; N.J.Stat.Ann. §17:46B-1 to -62; N.C.Gen.Stat. §58-26-1; N.M.Stat.Ann. Sec. 59A-30-11; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §3953.07; Okla.Stat.Ann. title 36 §5001(C); Pa.Stat.Ann. title 40, §910-7; Tenn. Code Ann. Sec. 56-35-129; and Utah Code Ann. Sec. 31A-20-110. The following statutes require that a title search be done with each commitment, but do not impose the subjective qualitative

15.3 Abstractor Liability As A Supplement To Policy Loss

Despite the thin logic supporting the tort of a duty to search, this theory has been advocated for strategic reasons. The primary benefit to such a claim is that it may not be subject to the policy's terms, including its liability cap. One court found, for example, that the policy term permitting the insurer to clear title did not apply to an abstractor liability claim.[9] Another court held that a recovery for abstractor liability could be in excess of policy limits.[10] Also, insureds assert abstractor liability premised on damage claims that are inconsistent with the measure of loss under the policy, or that seek elements of loss not payable under the policy.

However, courts have recognized that an insured is not entitled to recover under the policy for the loss of title while also seeking damages for abstractor liability that are not only in addition to the policy measure of loss, but which are entirely inconsistent with the loss of property. For example, one court rejected abstractor liability as a basis for recovery of the costs of owning the property:

> ... Plaintiffs are fully compensated by the award of damages ... based on the difference in the fair market value of the properties with and without the defects established by the evidence. The damage awards on the negligence and breach of contract claims cannot be reconciled because they are based on two contrary assumptions. The contract award assumes that Plaintiffs retain the value of the property with the defects while the negligence award assumes Plaintiffs would never have purchased it if they had known of the defects. Because Plaintiffs retain their respective interests in the land, an award of their out-of-pocket costs associated with ownership of the units such as maintenance, mortgage interest, insurance and taxes would result in a windfall.[11]

The identical holding was made in Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Tri-Lakes Title Co., Inc.,[12] in which an insurer sued its policy-issuing agent for having negligently missed two easements. The court found the agent liable both on its contractual obligations and on negligent misrepresentation of title, in the form of the title insurance commitment, under §552 of the Restatement (2nd) of Torts. However, the court found awards of equal sums under both the contract and negligent misrepresentation claims were "duplicative damages arising from the same set of facts." One commentator has opined that the terms of the policy only apply when the insurer performs its obligations under the policy, but that when it breaches its duties, "the proper measure of contract standard of "reasonableness": Idaho Code §41-2708(1)(b); Mo.Ann.Stat. §381.071; and Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann. article 9.34.

---

[9] Bank of California v. First American Title Ins. Co., 826 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1992).

[10] White v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.3d 870, 221 Cal.Rptr. 509, 710 P.2d 309 (1985).

[11] Aboussie v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 949 S.W.2d 207 (Mo.App.E.D. 1997).

[12] 968 S.W.2d 727 (Mo.App.S.D. 1998).

damages is all damages that were foreseeable as a consequence of the insurer's breach." The commentator goes on to say that, under a tort theory, "the proper measure of tort damages is all damages proximately caused by the insurer's breach of duty."[13] The elements of damage for which recovery may be sought are discussed below in §15.10.

The second strategic effect of a search duty claim is that it turns every error in the commitment into a "misrepresentation" or a failure to disclose for which tort damages may be sought. This turns the contract of indemnity into one of guaranty. In rejecting this theory, one court reasoned that this is:

> ...tantamount to a buyer of life insurance claiming that his policy is a guarantee against death. [The insured's] claim that it relied on the insurance policies as evidence that no undisclosed superior liens existed simply flies in the face of the fact that the policies were issued to protect [the insured] against losses it may suffer from undisclosed superior liens.[14]

The adoption by a state court of the search-duty theory thus multiplies the insurer's potential to pay money on each existing policy, without warning and without any additional premium.[15]

15.4 Bases For Search Duty Cause Of Action

Those states which impose a duty to search do not agree on the basis for that duty. In fact, there are six separate theories:

1. That the title insurer also has the duties imposed by law on an abstractor of title, the primary duty being to perform a diligent search of the records and make an accurate report of same;

2. That there is an implied duty to search contained in the insurance contract;

3. That the insurer is liable for negligently misrepresenting title;

4. That an error in a commitment or policy violates a deceptive trade practice act;

---

[13] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 12:10, West/Thomson Reuters. That statement was rejected in Mattson Ridge, LLC v. Clear Rock Title, LLP, 824 N.W.2d 622 (Minn. 2012), as a basis for entry of a judgment against a title insurer in an amount greater than policy limits.

[14] Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., 992 F.2d 1231, 1237, n. 10 (1st Cir. 1993).

[15] A title insurance policy may remain in effect for decades. The policy continues as long as the insured has an insurable interest in the property, or liability on warranties, or the property is owned by a party who takes title from the named insured by operation of law. When a state adopts a search-duty theory of liability, that theory is ordinarily applied on all outstanding policies. The insurer has no right to assess any existing insured an additional premium based on the sudden imposition of additional liability on existing policies. Those insureds are given a significant additional coverage for which no premium has been paid.

5. That, "but for" the insurer's error, the lender would not have lent the money, and therefore the insurer owes the lender the amount it lent in reliance on the commitment; and

6. That statutes requiring an adequate search before the issuance of a commitment create a duty on which a private cause of action in tort may be premised.

The balance of this chapter summarizes these theories of recovery, followed by a state-by-state review of the status of the law.

15.5 Abstractor Liability

Several states have adopted the view that the insurer, in issuing the commitment to insure, is held to the same standard of care as is an abstractor of title.[16] This approach is based on the idea that the insured relies on the insurer to conduct a careful search of the records and disclosure of the search, just as does an abstractor.[17]

There is little to justify the abstractor liability cause of action. The fact that a title insurer performs many of the same tasks in its search and examination of title records as does a person preparing an abstract of title does not convert the product title insurance policy into an abstract of title. Certainly, the abstractor would have reason to complain if a court determined that he or she is a title insurer, based solely on the fact that he or she performs many of the same tasks that are performed in the issuance of a title insurance policy.

Further, the sole remedy against an abstractor is a suit in negligence, whereas recovery against the insurer is in contract, and is based on the terms of the title insurance policy. Calling the insurer an abstractor merely imposes a second form of liability for the same act, without the payment of a second type of consideration, and directly contrary to the terms of the insurance contract.

The abstractor liability theory has been rejected by the majority of jurisdictions that have considered it.[18] In addition, a number of states that formerly permitted tort actions against title insurers have since barred such claims.[19] These states find that the commitment and policy are

---

[16] See Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984); Ford v. Guarantee Abstract & Title Co., Inc., 220 Kan. 244, 553 P.2d 254 (1976) and cases collected at §15.12.

[17] Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984).

[18] See cases collected at §15.12, including Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co. of Idaho, 764 P.2d 423 (Idaho 1988); Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982); Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); Culp Constr. Co. v. Buildmart Mall, 795 P.2d 650 (Utah 1990); Greenberg v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 171 Wis.2d 485, 492 N.W.2d 147 (Wis. 1992); Mickam v. Joseph Louis Palace Trust, 849 F.Supp. 516 (E.D.Mich. 1993); Upton v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 469 So.2d 548 (Ala. 1985); Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Insurance Co., 992 F.2d 1231 (1st Cir. (R.I.) 1993).

[19] Those states include Arizona, California, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New Mexico, New York, Ohio and Washington. See §15.12 for a state-by-state review of the subject.

strictly insurance products.[20] As is concisely stated in one legal encyclopedia, "[t]he contract of title insurance, as distinguished from that of employment to examine the title to premises, does not involve liability for negligence."[21] The commitment to insure is an offer to issue a policy insuring title in the form as shown. The policy is solely a policy of indemnity insurance. The public records search that the insurer does in preparing the title insurance commitment is done solely for the insurer's own benefit, to reduce its claims liability.[22]

15.6 Policy as Exclusive Remedy; No Implied Contract To Search Title

The Conditions section of the ALTA title insurance policies contains a provision that covers three distinct subjects: (a) that the policy terms provide the exclusive remedy for a breach of the contract, (b) that the policy and all endorsements are one integrated contract, and (c) that the title insurance commitment merges into the policy and does not survive as a separate contract after the policy's issuance. These provisions are found at Conditions 15 of the 2006 ALTA policies, which says:

> 15. LIABILITY LIMITED TO THIS POLICY; POLICY ENTIRE CONTRACT
> (a) This policy together with all endorsements, if any, attached to it by the Company is the entire policy and contract between the Insured and the Company. In interpreting any provision of this policy, this policy shall be construed as a whole.
> (b) Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or by any action asserting such claim shall be restricted to this policy.
> (c) Any amendment of or endorsement to this policy must be in writing and authenticated by an authorized person, or expressly incorporated by Schedule A of this policy.
> (d) Each endorsement to this policy issued at any time is made a part of this policy and is subject to all of its terms and provisions. Except as the endorsement expressly states, it does not (i) modify any of the terms and provisions of the policy, (ii) modify any prior endorsement, (iii) extend the Date of Policy, or (iv) increase the Amount of Insurance.

The three subjects of Conditions 15 are discussed in three different chapters of this book. The merger of the title insurance commitment into the policy is discussed at §6.2. The ramifications of construing the policy and all endorsements as a whole are discussed at §9.1.3.5. This section [20] See, for example, Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co. of Idaho, 764 P.2d 423 (Idaho 1988); Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982); Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992); and Culp Constr. Co. v. Buildmart Mall, 795 P.2d 650 (Utah 1990), and other cases cited below in the state-by-state analysis.

---

[21] 45 C.J.S. Insurance § 884, at 950.

[22] Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (N.J.A.D. 1988); Greenberg v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 171 Wis.2d 485, 492 N.W.2d 147 (Wis. 1992).

discusses Conditions 15(b), which is often termed the "exclusive remedy" provision. Conditions 15(b) declares that the policy is not an abstract of title, and that there is no contract to search title implied in the issuance of the policy.

Several state courts now hold or formerly have held that a title insurer may be liable under a policy as if it were an abstract of title, premised on the notion that the title insurance policy contains an implied contract to accurately disclose all matters of record that affect the title. Those decisions have as their root the simple premise that prospective purchasers and lenders review the title insurance commitment to evaluate the state of title. However, as one commentator notes, it is difficult to imply a duty to search from the title insurance contract, because the exclusive remedy provision of the policy emphatically states that it is not a search contract or abstract of title:

> In the general case, finding an implied contract to fully search title seems difficult to justify in light of so many express assertions to the contrary in the title policy. It does not appear analytically sound to say that a title insurer impliedly agreed to search for types of defects for which the insurer expressly denies any liability under the policy.[23]

The commentator is correct that the commitment and policy expressly negate any such implied duty. To the contrary, as the commentator notes, the commitment:

> …simply notifies the applicant that after closing the insurer will issue a title policy insuring title in the applicant, subject to standard preprinted exclusions and general exceptions, and subject to the special exceptions that the insurer has typed and attached to the Commitment form.[24]

In addition to the exclusive remedy provision of Conditions 15, the policy takes pains to state that it is an indemnity contract, and not a representation of the status of title. Conditions 8 of the 2006 ALTA policies clearly states that the policy is a contract of indemnity only:

> This policy is a contract of indemnity against actual monetary loss or damage sustained or incurred by the Insured Claimant who has suffered loss or damage by reason of matters insured against by this policy.

Conditions 9(a) states that the insurer shall not be liable for any further damages if it establishes title or removes the defect, lien or encumbrance. These provisions have been found to be unambiguous in

---

[23] Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, §12.02[1], p. 12-15 (footnote omitted). In the current edition of the same book, the author makes a more limited statement. See Joyce D. Palomar, Title Insurance Law, 2013-2014 Edition, § 12:13, West/Thomson Reuters. The jurisdictions adopting and rejecting the implied contract theory are listed in the state-by-state review at §15.12.

[24] Palomar, Title Insurance Law, §12.02, p. 12-5.

limiting liability to the terms of the contract.[25]

15.7 Misrepresentation Of Title

Some courts adopt the view that, when the insurer mistakenly omits a title matter from its commitment, it makes a negligent misrepresentation of information. Section 552 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts capsulizes the cause of action for negligent misrepresentation of information supplied "for the guidance of others in their business transactions."

> TOPIC 3. NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION
> 552. Information Negligently Supplied for the Guidance of Others
> (1) One who, in the course of his business, profession or employment, or in any other transaction in which he has a pecuniary interest, supplies false information for the guidance of others in their business transactions, is subject to liability for pecuniary loss caused to them by their justifiable reliance upon the information, if he fails to exercise reasonable care or competence in obtaining or communicating the information.
> (2) Except as stated in Subsection (8), the liability stated in Subsection (1) is limited to loss suffered
>> (a) by the person or one of a limited group of persons for whose benefit and guidance he intends to supply the information or knows that the recipient intends to supply it; and
>> (b) through reliance upon it in a transaction that he intends the information to influence or knows that the recipient so intends or in a substantially similar transaction.
>
> (3) The liability of one who is under a public duty to give the information extends to loss suffered by any of the class of persons for whose benefit the duty is created, in any of the transactions in which it is intended to protect them.

This section of the Restatement has been adopted in several jurisdictions as the basis for a tort action against the title insurer.[26] The states that have adopted the §552 rationale are identified in the state-

---

[25] For example, "Nowhere in this policy does it appear that it is anything other than what it purports to be, an insurance policy." Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982). In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. The Huntington National Bank, 719 N.E.2d 955, 87 Ohio St.3d 270 (1999), the court held that the exclusive remedy provision negates a cause of action for abstractor negligence under the policy, saying: "Based on the merger clause in Section 14(b) of the policy's Conditions and Stipulations section that restricts any claim of loss or damage, including negligence claims, to the policy provisions, we find that HNB's negligence claim fails. The policy language explicitly precludes an independent tort action by HNB for negligence arising out of the status of its lien or of title to the secured property. Therefore, HNB is limited to the contractual remedies available in the policy, and its negligence claim fails." See also Reflection Townhomes, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2010 WL 445521 (Ariz.App. Div. 1) (unpublished) (search duty claim negated by exclusive remedy provision).

[26] See Moore v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 148 Ariz. 408, 714 P.2d 1303 (Ariz.App. 1985); Great American Mortgage Investors v. Louisville Title Ins. Co., 597 S.W.2d 425 (Tex. Civil App. 1980); and other cases cited in the state-by-state review at §15.12.

by-state review at §15.12. Section 552 is also applied to abstracts of title, as discussed at §15.12.

The misrepresentation of title is found to be the implied statement that a title matter does not exist, because it is not shown in the commitment to insure. As one court stated it:

> [The title commitment] actually represented that no deed restrictions were in existence. Having made the representation the title insurer is held to the standard of reasonable care and may under the proper circumstances be liable in tort for damages caused by a negligent misrepresentation. In other words, under the proper circumstances the tort of negligent misrepresentation can apply to title insurers.[27]

As the survey below shows, most states have rejected the §552 cause of action. In Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., the New Jersey Supreme Court rejected the theory as to the insurance contract, but recognized that the insurer may assume such a duty if it enters into a separate search contract:

> Both Chelsea and amicus, New Jersey Land Title Association, recognize that negligence principles provide an alternative basis for imposing liability on Chelsea. Notwithstanding the essentially contractual nature of the relationship between a title company and its insured, the company could be subject to a negligence action if the "act complained of was the direct result of duties voluntarily assumed by the insurer in addition to the mere contract to insure title." Brown's Tie, supra, 115 Idaho at 59, 764 P.2d at 426. As support for its negligence claim against Chelsea, Walker Rogge points to various facts. For example, Chelsea had twice insured the property in question and on four other occasions it had opened files on the property. In addition, Chelsea's own back title plant reflected that the tract comprised twelve, not eighteen, acres. One of Chelsea's employees, moreover, supervised the closing, at which time the purchase price was computed on that basis.
>
> Because it restricted plaintiff's claim to the policy, the trial court did not determine whether Chelsea knew or should have known of the difference in acreage and of its materiality to the transaction. The court did not, therefore, determine whether Chelsea assumed an independent duty to assure the quantity of acreage, whether it breached that duty, or whether the breach caused any damage to Walker Rogge. Consequently, we are obliged to remand the matter to the trial court for a determination of those issues.[28]

The Walker Rogge court thus adopted the reasoning of the Idaho court in Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co. of Idaho.[29] On later appeal in Walker Rogge, the Appellate Division court

---

[27] Great American Mortgage Investors v. Louisville Title Ins. Co., 597 S.W.2d 425, 430 (Tex. Civil App. 1980). Also see Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Ramsey, 507 P.2d 492 (Alaska 1973).

[28] 562 A.2d at 221.

[29] 764 P.2d 423 (Idaho 1988).

lamented that the trial judge had apparently not "considered or determined the paramount question presented on remand: Whether Chelsea voluntarily assumed any duties in addition to issuing the title policy." The court again remanded, to see if there was some "additional independent duty" assumed by the insurer, perhaps as closing agent.[30]

In jurisdictions adopting the §552 cause of action as to a title insurance policy or commitment, a common issue is whether or not the claimant is an intended beneficiary of the information. Comment (h) of the Restatement states, on this subject:

> it is enough that the maker of the representation intends it to reach and influence either a particular person or persons, known to him, or a group or class of person, distinct from the much larger class who might reasonably be expected sooner or later to have access to the information and foreseeably to take some action in reliance upon it. It is enough, likewise, that the maker of the representation knows that his recipient intends to transmit the information to a similar person, persons or group. It is sufficient, in other words, insofar as the plaintiff's identity is concerned, that the maker supplies the information for repetition to a certain group or class of persons and that the plaintiff proves to be one of them, even though the maker never had heard of him by name when the information was given. It is not enough that the maker merely knows of the ever present possibility of repetition to anyone, and the possibility of action in reliance upon it, on the part of anyone to whom it may be repeated.

The class of persons intended or expected to rely on a title insurance commitment is those persons for whom the commitment is prepared, and any others whom the insurer could identify at the time the commitment was prepared as being expected to purchase an interest in the property based on the information supplied. For example, a purchaser whose agreement to purchase came into being after a commitment was issued to insure a mortgage was not an intended beneficiary of the commitment. The fact that the insurer was not told to send a copy of the commitment to the claimant was found significant by the court:

> Warrington presented absolutely no evidence to suggest that Transamerica intended anyone to see the June 13, 1973, title report other than the parties to whom copies were sent. Further, Warrington presented no evidence that Transamerica knew that any of the parties to whom copies of the report were sent would supply the report to others. Therefore, even assuming that Transamerica was negligent in the preparation of the June 13, 1973, title report, Warrington was outside of the scope of Transamerica's liability here, under the legal standard recited in the Restatement.[31]

---

[30] 603 A.2d 557, 559.

[31] Warrington v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 40 Or.App. 841, 596 P.2d 627 (1979).

A seller must show not only that he or she was intended or expected to rely on a title insurance commitment, but also that he or she actually so relied. Colorado has held that there was no justifiable reliance on a faulty title commitment when the seller contracted to give clear title before reviewing the commitment.[32]

15.8 Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act

Texas has applied the state's Deceptive Trade Practices Act to the title insurance policy. The Texas cause of action is unique. A court rejected a similar action based on Colorado's Consumer Protection Act.[33] The DTPA is a consumer law and is not founded on common law or negligence principles.[34] The claimant must be a consumer.[35] A party may also be a consumer if the property is not the person's residence, but is bought as part of the insured's personal investment plan.[36]

The DTPA makes actionable the affirmative misrepresentation that a title defect does not exist.[37] This principle stands in apparent juxtaposition to the oft-repeated holding of Texas courts that the insurer has no duty to disclose title defects in the policy, but is strictly an indemnitor if its policy is in error.[38] However, the two rules can be rationalized.

The insurer is not responsible for a violation of the DTPA simply because the title insurance policy omits an easement, encumbrance or other matter. As an appeals court recognized,

> To hold otherwise would mean that every time there is a loss under the risks covered

---

[32] Jimerson v. First American Title Ins. Co., 989 P.2d 258 (Colo.App.Div. 1 1999).

[33] Callaham v. First American Title Ins. Co., 837 P.2d 769 (Colo.App. 1992).

[34] "The Deceptive Trade Practices Act is not a codification of the common law. Smith v. Baldwin, 611 S.W.2d 611, 616 (Tex. 1980). Claims under the DTPA are not based in negligence. D. Bragg, P. Maxwell, J. Langley, Texas Consumer Litigation, § 2.02 n. 90 at 34 (2d Ed. 1983). Nor is there any requirement of privity between the consumer and the defendant. 'The coverage of the Deceptive Trade Practice Act is not restricted to deceptive practices committed by parties furnishing goods or services, but rather extends to any deceptive practice made in connection with the purchase or lease of such goods or services.' Gibbs v. Main Bank of Houston, 666 S.W.2d 554, 559 (Tex. App.-Houston [1st Dist.] 1984, no writ) (citing Cameron v. Terrell & Garrett, Inc., 618 S.W.2d 535 [Tex. 1981])." Zimmerman v. First American Title Ins. Co., 790 S.W. 2d 690, 695 (Tex.App. 1990).

[35] "A plaintiff establishes his standing as a Consumer in terms of his relationship to a transaction, not by a contractual relationship with the defendant. The only requirement is that the goods or services sought or acquired by the consumer form the basis of his complaint." Flenniken v. Longview Bank & Trust Co., 661 S.W.2d 705, 707 (Tex. 1983). See also 3Z Corp. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 851 S.W.2d 933 (Tex.App.-Beaumont 1993).

[36] Gibbs v. Main Bank of Houston, 666 S.W.2d 554 (Tex.App. 1984).

[37] Gibbs v. Main Bank of Houston, 666 S.W.2d 554 (Tex.App. 1984).

[38] Gibbs v. Main Bank of Houston, 666 S.W.2d 554 (Tex.App. 1984); Martinka v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 836 S.W.2d 773 (Tex.App. 1992); Tamburine v. Center Savings Ass'n, 583 S.W.2d 942, 947 (Tex.App. 1979), writ ref'd n.r.e.; Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. McDaniel, 875 S.W.2d 310 (Tex. 1994); Tri-Legends Corp. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of California, 889 S.W.2d 432 (Tex.App. 1994).

by the policy, an insurance company commits an unfair trade practice.[39]

However, the lack of a duty to disclose title defects is not a complete bar to liability for a misrepresentation of title that constitutes a deceptive trade practice. The court rejected this argument in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Sterling:

> Stewart cites a number of cases it asserts establish it had no duty to disclose to Sterling the results of the title search. We disagree. The authorities cited involve negligence claims, and clearly state Stewart had no duty to discover and disclose the title defects, only to act as indemnitor against failure of title. However, those holdings cannot be stretched to support Stewart's position it can not be liable under article 21.21, § 16 for misrepresentations and nondisclosures of material facts. Cf., Gibbs v. Main Bank of Houston, 666 S.W.2d 554, 560 (Tex.App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1984, no writ) (holding the same negligence-related authorities to be inapplicable to DTPA claims for misrepresentation or nondisclosures by a title company).[40]

Thus, the DTPA may apply when an insurer intentionally or recklessly, and affirmatively, misrepresents the state of title. Thus, in Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Sterling, when the insurer had evidence in its file that the seller did not own some of the land, and the insured and surveyor raised the issue before closing, the insurer's affirmative representations that the insured would receive title were found actionable:

> The survey indicated that the three water district lots did not belong to the seller with whom Sterling had been negotiating. Sterling alerted Stewart to this discrepancy. Despite the existence of three recorded general warranty deeds establishing title in persons other than the seller, and the fact that proof of such ownership was actually in Stewart's files, Stewart assured Sterling the lots would be included in the deal.
>
> At the closing, Sterling was repeatedly assured by a Stewart employee, Cameron, that he would be receiving "good and indefeasible title" to all the property, including the critical water district lots. Following those assurances, Sterling proceeded with the closing.[41]

The verdict was apparently also influenced by the fact that the insurer denied the claim, based on a waiver of inspection, despite its employee's assurances. The DTPA was also applied to a State Board of Insurance rule that required insurers to affirmatively state, as to restrictions, that there were "None of Record." The rule was found to create "a duty on the insurer to discover and disclose restrictive

---

[39] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Cheatham, 764 S.W.2d 315, 318 (Tex.App. 1988).

[40] 772 S.W.2d 242, 246 (Tex.App. 1989).

[41] Id.

covenants, and creates an exception to the general rule of no duty to disclose."[42] The promulgated policy forms have since been changed so that an insurer is not required to state "None of Record" when no restrictions exist. Thus, no such duty to disclose can be implied from the current policy form. The DTPA has further been found to support a cause of action against the insurer when it has participated in an unconscionable scheme, whether or not that conduct includes misrepresentation of title.[43] A wrongful act by an escrowee may also be actionable under the DTPA.[44] However, an insurer acting as escrowee is not responsible under the DTPA when its conduct is not a producing cause of the alleged damages.[45]

The alleged failure to make a reasonable examination of title, without more, is not a deceptive trade practice.

> ... Stewart Title's alleged conduct, writing a title policy without making or causing to be made a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound title underwriting practices, is not one of the false, misleading, or deceptive acts or practices defined by Section 17.46 [of the DTPA].[46]

Thus, the failure of title to a portion of the insured land did not create a violation of the DTPA.

However, the insurer may not be liable under the DTPA for merely failing to report the existence of a recorded easement.[47] It is also not liable under the Act if an adverse party challenges the insured's title, particularly when the insurer successfully defends title.[48]

The insurer's clearing of title is permitted by the contract and its insistence on doing so rather than paying the insured is not a DTPA violation.[49] There is no liability under the DTPA unless the claimed misrepresentation is the proximate cause of damage.[50]

---

[42] First Title Co. of Waco v. Garrett, 802 S.W.2d 254 (Tex.App. 1990).

[43] Commercial Escrow Co. v. Rockport Rebel, Inc., 778 S.W.2d 532 (Tex.App. 1989).

[44] NRC, Inc. v. Huddleston, 886 S.W.2d 526 (Tex.App.-Austin 1994).

[45] In Williams v. Land Title Co. of Dallas, 1997 WL 196345 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished), the plaintiff lost his property by mortgage foreclosure. He sued the escrowee-closer on a refinance loan, alleging that the closer's failure to close the refinance in time caused him to lose the property. The court found that the borrower was aware of the pending foreclosure and his own default on that loan, and thus the closer's "failure to close the Loan could not have been the producing cause of Williams's loss of his interest in the Property."

[46] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Becker, 930 S.W.2d 748, 753 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 1996).

[47] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Cheatham, 764 S.W.2d 315, 318 (Tex.App. 1988).

[48] Tri-Legends Corp. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 889 S.W.2d 432, 440 (Tex.App.-Houston [14th Dist.] 1994).

[49] Martinka v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 836 S.W.2d 773 (Tex.App. 1992).

[50] First American Title Co. of El Paso v. Prata, 783 S.W.2d 697 (Tex.App.-El Paso 1989). In Peace v. ITCOA, LLC, 2018 WL 1633518 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi) (unpublished), the insured buyer's claim of a DTPA violation by the title

Closely related to the DTPA are the Texas insurance code sections regulating deceptive acts of insurers.[51] However, a misrepresentation in a title commitment is not actionable under this statute:

> Unlike section 17.46 of the DTPA, section 4 [of the insurance code deceptive act statute] does not use the phrase "includes, but is not limited to" in defining prohibited acts. Therefore, article 21.21, section 4 is an exclusive list of actionable statutory unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the business of insurance. Watson, 876 S.W.2d at 147. Section 4 does not define a misrepresentation in a title commitment as an unfair or deceptive act or practice... . Thus, the 21.21 claims alleged...are not actionable, as a matter of law... .[52]

A claimed misrepresentation in the commitment is also not actionable under 28 Tex.Admin. Code §21.112, which regulates insurance advertising.[53] A non-insured has no right to assert a cause of action against an insurer under article 21.21 for unfair claim settlement practices.[54]

Once an insured obtains a judgment against the insurer, the duty of good faith and fair dealing implicit in the contract terminates. An insurer cannot be guilty of bad faith conduct toward the insured after judgment is entered on the insurance claim. Therefore, the insured may not seek recovery under either the DTPA or article 21.21 of the Insurance Code for failing to pay the judgment amount to the insured when demanded.[55]

15.9 Other Consumer Protection Statutes

Several states other than Texas have found that title insurers may be liable under general consumer protection statutes for misrepresentation of title. Each state's law is discussed in the state-by-state analysis at §15.12.

---

agent in not disclosing an incipient condemnation for a road was dismissed because the buyer received the condemnation award, and had no damages.

[51] Tex.Ins. Code Ann.Art. 21.21.

[52] Tri-Legends Corp. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 889 S.W.2d 432, 440 (Tex.App.-Houston [14th Dist.] 1994).

[53] Id.

[54] First American Title Ins. Co. of Texas v. Willard, 949 S.W.2d 342 (Tex.App.-Tyler 1997). This is equally true as to a non-insured easement holder claiming that the purchaser built a house which trespassed onto the easement, and the purchaser who did not obtain an owner's policy. The fact that the purchaser paid for a loan policy did not grant him additional rights to claim under article 21.21.

[55] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Aiello, 40 Tex.Sup.Ct.J. 290, 941 S.W.2d 68 (1997).

15.10 Reasonable Search Statutes

Some statutes mandate a "reasonable" examination of title before issuance of a commitment to insure.[56] One commentator has urged that these statutes be used to justify a cause of action in tort for an error on a commitment to insure.[57]

Idaho has specifically rejected the argument that its statute formed a basis for a search duty.[58] The court's specific basis, however, was that the Idaho statute does not require a reasonable search, unlike many other statutes.[59]

Only one decision has found that a "reasonable search" statute is tied to a duty to search. A Florida decision stated simply that the negligence cause of action, already recognized by the state courts, "is codified by statute in Florida."[60] Several other courts have either accepted or rejected the tort theory without even mentioning their states' "reasonable search" statutes.[61]

The New Mexico Supreme Court found such a statute to support a duty of reasonable care.[62] A later case, Ruiz v. Garcia,[63] held that the statute created a cause of action for a seller for the failure

---

[56] Those statutes which require a "reasonable" title search are: Alaska Stat. § 21.66.170; Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 20-1567; Colo.Rev.Stat. §10-11-106; Fla.Stat. § 627.7845; Haw.Rev.Stat. §431:20-103; Kan.Stat.Ann. §40-235; Mont. Code Ann. §33-25-214; Neb.Rev.Stat. §44-1947; Nev.Rev. Stat. §692A.220; N.H.Rev.Stat.Ann. §416-a:6; N.J.Stat.Ann. §17:46B-1 to -62; N.C.Gen.Stat. §58-26-1; N.M.Stat.Ann. Sec. 59A-30-11; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §3953.07; Okla.Stat.Ann. title 36 §5001(C); Pa.Stat.Ann. title 40, §910-7; Tenn. Code Ann. Sec. 56-35-129; and Utah Code Ann. Sec. 31A-20-110. The following statutes require that a title search be done with each commitment, but do not impose the subjective qualitative standard of "reasonableness": Idaho Code §41-2708(1)(b); Mo.Ann.Stat. §381.071; and Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann. article 9.34.

[57] Joyce Palomar, Title Insurance Law, §12:6, 2014-2015 Edition, Thomson Reuters.

[58] Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co. of Idaho, 764 P. 2d 423 (Idaho 1988).

[59] "Unlike similar statutes of sister states, [footnote omitted] section 41-2708(1) of the Idaho Code does not mandate a 'reasonable search' of title. It provides only that 'a search and examination of the title' shall be made. We find it significant that the Idaho legislature, unlike other states, has chosen to omit the word 'reasonable.' It has long been the rule in Idaho that only abstractors of title may be found negligent, see Merrill v. Fremont Abstract Co., 39 Idaho 238, 227 P. 34 (1924), and this Court has never deviated from the rule. See e.g., Anderson, supra. A familiar rule of statutory construction provides that a statute will not be construed so as to overturn long-established principles of law 'unless an intention to do so plainly appears by express declaration or necessary or unmistakable implication, and the language employed admits of no other reasonable construction.' Doolittle v. Morley, 77 Idaho 366, 372, 292 P.2d 476, 481 (1956). "No such intention plainly appears from the face of I.C. Sec. 41-2708(1)." 764 P.2d at 427 (Idaho 1988).

[60] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Enterprises, 544 So.2d 1070, 1072 (Fla.App. 1989).

[61] See, for example, Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984) (adopting abstractor liability without mentioning the statute); Arapahoe Land Title, Inc. v. Contract Financing, Ltd., 28 Colo.App. 393, 472 P.2d 754 (1970); and Walker Rogge, Inc. v. Chelsea Title & Guar. Co., 222 N.J.Super. 363, 536 A. 2d 1309 (A.D. 1988), rev'd in part, aff'd in part, 116 N.J. 517, 562 A.2d 208 (1989); appeal after remand, 603 A.2d 557 (N.J. Super. 1992) (both rejecting the theory without addressing their states' statutes).

[62] Cottonwood Enterprises v. McAlpin, 781 P.2d 1156 (N.M. 1989), 810 P.2d 812 (N.M. 1991).

[63] 850 P.2d 972 (N.M. 1993).

to perform a reasonable title search. The statute was then amended to say that the law does not create a duty to parties other than the underwriter to conduct a reasonable search and examination of title. A decision issued after the law was amended correctly construed the revised law to mean that there is no statutory duty to conduct a reasonable search in preparing a policy, and that "Ruiz was superseded by statute."[64] Nonetheless, that court found that a title insurer may be sued for negligent statements about the search it conducted.

Indeed, the "reasonable search" statutes say nothing about imposing a non-policy form of liability on the insurer. Rather, they are part of the "practice and procedure" regulation of the insurance industry. The statutes are found in the title insurance section of the state insurance codes. Those statute chapters do not regulate abstractors. The statutes typically make a series of requirements in addition to the "reasonable search," all relating to the collection and retention of the evidence on which the policy was issued.[65]

Further, the "reasonable search" statutes do not need enforcement by imposition of tort liability. As with any other part of the statutes regulating the insurer, enforcement is by the insurance commissioner, not private tort suit. Insurance codes provide numerous penalties, including fines and license suspension or revocation.

Therefore, "reasonable search" statutes must be read strictly for their stated purpose: to require insurers to analyze the insurability of a title before committing to insure. The statutes instruct title insurers that they may not engage in so-called "casualty" underwriting, meaning the issuance of a policy without a search and examination of the title records.[66] The title insurance policy has always been underwritten as a risk elimination rather than risk assumption policy, with the largest share of the premium being spent on the laborious search and examination of title records. The title insurer would risk its claim reserves, hurting its existing insureds whose claims are to be paid from those reserves, if it were to issue policies without vetting risk by the search and examination of title.

In rejecting a private cause of action to enforce a "reasonable search" statute, a Texas appeals court found the consumer adequately protected by the state's powers to regulate insurer conduct:

---

[64] Barrington Reinsurance Ltd. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 143 N.M. 31, 172 P.3d 168, 2007-NMCA-147 (N.M. 2007).

[65] Montana's law is typical. It states:

"33-25-214. Underwriting standards--record retention. (1) A title insurer may not issue a title insurance policy unless it, its title insurance producer, or an approved attorney has conducted a reasonable search and examination of the title and made a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound underwriting practices. The title insurer or title insurance producer shall preserve and retain in its files evidence of the examination of title and determination of insurability. The title insurer or title insurance producer may keep original evidence or may establish in the regular course of business a system of recording, copying, or reproducing evidence by any process that accurately and legibly reproduces, or forms a durable medium for reproducing, the contents of the original.

* * * *

(4) An insurer issuing a policy in violation of this section is estopped, as a matter of law, to deny the validity of the policy as to any claim or demand of the insured arising under the policy.

[66] Professor Palomar acknowledges that the legislative history of these laws shows that they were intended "to prohibit the writing of title insurance on a casualty basis." Joyce Palomar, Title Insurance Law, §12:6, p. 1083, 2014-2015 Edition, Thomson Reuters.

> The legislature, by enacting these articles [enforcement powers of the state insurance commissioner], intended to protect every consumer and purchaser of a title insurance policy. It gave to the State the power to promulgate and enforce rules and regulations prescribing underwriting standards and practices upon which companies are to issue title insurance contracts. Article 9.28 allows the Board to punish a company that does not comply with any of the provisions or requirements of Chapter 9 [which includes the reasonable search statute, Article 9.34]. Since the enforcement scheme adequately protects the intended beneficiaries, we do not have a duty to imply a cause of action to effectuate the legislative purpose. [citation omitted] We hold that the legislature did not intend a private cause of action under Article 9.34.[67]

15.11 Damages Under Search Duty Theory

In those jurisdictions that have adopted the doctrine that a title insurer may be sued when the title insurance policy does not except a recorded instrument that affects title, the damages payable are those that were proximately caused by the breach.[68] While the causes of action for breach of policy and abstractor liability are separate, the insured may not recover the same damages twice by pleading two causes of action.[69] Further, the commitment loss provision covers costs incurred in reliance on the commitment. Many out-of-pocket expenses that the proposed insured might seek under a tort theory would be equally compensable under the commitment. The measure of loss under the title insurance commitment is discussed at §6.9.

Most decisions on abstractor liability focus on elements of damage that are not compensable under the commitment or policy. Note that some of the decision cited in this section were issued in states that have since repealed abstractor liability. They are cited as examples only, and not to suggest that they remain good law in their respective jurisdictions. See §15.12 for a state-by-state review of this doctrine.

One element of loss the insured sometimes claims is for expenses incurred while the title insurer was honoring the policy by taking action to clear title. No such damages are payable as policy loss, as is fully discussed in §§3.4.3, 3.4.5 and 3.4.9. Several courts have granted delay

---

[67] Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Becker, 930 S.W.2d 748, 755 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 1996).

[68] Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154, 158 (1984). As stated in Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Ramsey, 507 P.2d 492 (Alaska 1973): "[The insured] is entitled to be replaced as nearly as possible in the position she would have occupied had the Title Company advised her that the power of attorney had been rescinded. She is not, however, entitled to recover more than the loss actually suffered. Moreover, the loss must be proximately caused by the defendant's conduct." 507 P.2d at 497.

[69] Shada v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 457 So.2d 553, 556 (Fla. 1984): "The right of action on the contract, and the right to sue for the breach of the collateral duty are distinct, the only limitation on a suit for either or both being that the same party cannot be compensated twice over for the same wrong, once for the breach of contract and again for the tort. Flint & Walling Mfg. Co. v. Beckett, 167 Ind. 491, 79 N.E. 503, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 924, text 933." [quoting from Parrish v. Clark, 107 Fla. 598, 603, 145 So. 848, 850 (1933)].

damages under a theory of abstractor liability.[70] Carrying costs such as taxes, mortgage interest and similar expenses have been allowed when the insured established that they were foreseeable and proximately caused by the search error.[71]

However, even under an abstractor liability cause of action, expenses of delay are not payable when the insurer did not proximately cause such damages.[72] Claims for lost profits have been denied because evidence at trial has not established proximate cause.[73] However, lost profit may be an element of damage if properly pled and proven.[74] The cost to settle a lawsuit was found recoverable, on a finding that the suit would not have existed but for the failure to disclose the title defect. However, the settlement of a second lawsuit in the same claim was not compensable, because it did not involve the title matter.[75] The insured's time spent is not recoverable, or at least not at the insured's professional hourly rate.[76]

A rational absolute cap on abstractor liability damages is the amount paid for the property or the policy amount.[77] As one commentator put it:

> In this situation, should the terms of the title insurance contract limit contract damages but not tort damages? The insured did pay only a small premium for a finite amount of title insurance. For this reason some courts do hold that the amount of insurance stated in the policy absolutely limits the title's insurer's liability.[78]

When the insured purchased land that turned out to be valueless, the court found that he was adequately compensated by the return of his purchase price plus an inflation factor, although the [70] Bank of California v. First American Title Ins. Co., 826 P.2d 1126 (Alaska 1992); Red Lobster Inns of America, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 656 F.2d 381 (8th Cir. 1981); Chun v. Park, 51 Hawaii 462, amended by 51 Hawaii 501, 462 P.2d 905 (1969).

---

[71] Chun v. Park, 51 Hawaii 462, amended by 51 Hawaii 501, 462 P.2d 905 (1969); Barthels v. Santa Barbara Title Co., 28 Cal.App.4th 674, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 579 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994).

[72] Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 192 Cal.App. 3d 70, 237 Cal.Rptr. 264 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1987); Endruschat v. American Title Ins. Co., 377 So.2d 738 (Fla.App. 1979).

[73] Barthels v. Santa Barbara Title Co., 28 Cal.App.4th 674, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 579 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994); Chun v. Park, 51 Hawaii 462, amended by 51 Hawaii 501, 462 P.2d 905 (1969).

[74] Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 452 So.2d 45 (Fla.App. 1984).

[75] Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Ramsey, 507 P.2d 492 (Alaska 1973).

[76] Barthels v. Santa Barbara Title Co., 28 Cal.App.4th 674, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 579 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994). The insured, a dentist, sought to be paid at the rate of $66.66 per hour. The court noted that, in dealing with the title, he was not performing the services of a dentist, and therefore struck down the trial court's award.

[77] Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 Mont. 1, 655 P.2d 970 (1982).

[78] Palomar, Title Insurance Law, §12.05[1], pp. 12-46 to -47.

court commented that interest on the money would be more appropriate than inflation on the land value.[79]

15.12 State-By-State Review Of Abstractor Liability Law

This section provides a summary of each state's decisions and statutory law regarding what tort liability, if any, is imposed on the issuer of a title insurance policy.

Alabama

There is no statutory duty to search or examine title before the issuance of a title insurance policy. Under the title insurance code as revised in 2001, claims of negligent misrepresentation based on a title insurance policy or commitment are barred.[80] A title agent is not liable for having failed to make exception for a recorded instrument on a commitment or policy, because the search it conducts is solely for the benefit of its insurer according to the revised law.[81] Earlier decisions had found an implied duty in contract to perform a reasonable search as to the records covered by the policy.[82] An earlier case permitted recovery against an agent for the claimed intentional failure to disclose an IRS right of redemption to the purchaser.[83] Also, a 1986 decision found that a title agent that issued a policy had also been hired to search title, supporting a claim for fraud in the failure to report a recorded instrument on the commitment.[84]

---

[79] Barthels v. Santa Barbara Title Co., 28 Cal.App.4th 674, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 579 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994).

[80] In Metro Bank v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 2012 WL 4344600 (N.D.Ala.) (unpublished), the court said that, while the title insurance code adopted in 2001 requires a title insurer to perform a title search before issuing a commitment or policy, the law "is equally clear that searches [for title policies] shall be solely for the benefit of the title insurance company requested to issue its policy or policies of title insurance." Ala. Code § 27-25-3(10). The court said that the title agent searched title, but "he did so solely for the benefit of" the insurer. The court rejected Metro Bank's reliance on Alabama cases decided before 2001 that suggested that a title insurance policy contains a duty to search title. The court said the better reasoning was that the law eliminated any such duty. It noted that "[s]uch a construction is consistent with the majority view… ." In Upton v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 469 So.2d 548 (Ala. 1985), the court stated: "Mississippi Valley argues that, apart from the contract of insurance, it had no other duty to search circuit court records. We agree, and we find no authority in this state for imposing a common-law duty on title insurance companies that would require them to search circuit court records." 469 So.2d 548 at 557.

[81] In Boyce v. Cassese, 941 So.2d 932 (Ala. 2006), the court found that a title agent may not be liable on a policy it issues for the underwriter, saying: "The Boyces have not alleged or established that Birmingham Title issued the title policy in its own name or that Birmingham Title intended to bind itself to the contract of title insurance. 'The general rule in Alabama concerning liability of an agent for the breach of contract entered on behalf of a disclosed principal is that the agent binds either the principal or himself to the contract, but not both.'" (emphasis in original).

[82] Parker v. Ward, 614 So.2d 975 (Ala. 1992); Soutullo v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 646 So.2d 1352 (Ala. 1994) (implied duty sufficient basis for tort claim for failure to disclose lack of right of access); Steadman v. Central Alabama Title Company, Inc., 812 So.2d 290 (Ala. 2001), remand 2001 WL 1020981 (Ala.Civ.App.) (unpublished) (borrower permitted to sue title agency that issued title commitment for lender for having "breached their contract ... to perform a complete title search," treating commitment as an abstract of title).

[83] Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Vella, 570 So.2d 578 (Ala. 1990).

[84] Hopkins v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 514 So.2d 786 (Ala. 1986).

Alaska

A negligent misrepresentation action is permitted based on a faulty commitment. A misrepresentation action was also permitted against an insurer alleged to have given incorrect information to a seller about the validity of her power of attorney, when there was a recorded notice of revocation of same.[85] No merger of the commitment into the policy was found to have occurred based on the commitment's statement that "[t]his report and commitment shall have no force or effect except as a basis for the coverage specified herein." There is a statutory duty to conduct a "reasonable search" before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[86]

Arizona

Arizona has declared that a title insurer is not liable as an abstractor of title, based on a 1992 revision of the title insurance code that defines a "preliminary report," "commitment" or "binder" of insurance as not being an abstract of title.[87] A prior decision that approved abstractor liability has been reversed.[88] However, the insurer was not estopped from collecting by subrogation from a seller who was overpaid for the land because the commitment failed to note a deed out of part of the land. The seller could not show any reliance on the incorrect commitment when it was the seller himself who had previously conveyed the parcel. There is a statutory duty to conduct a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[89]

---

[85] Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Ramsey, 507 P.2d 492 (Alaska 1973). However, in Windel v. Mat-Su Title Ins. Agency, Inc., 305 P.3d 264 (Alaska 2013), the Supreme Court held that the title insurer and its agent had no duty to advise the insured about the possible invalidity of an easement excepted in the policy that encumbered the insured parcel.

[86] Alaska Stat. § 21.66.170. Bank of California v. First American Title Ins. Co. said that "Alaska Statute 21.66.170 requires title insurers to conduct a 'reasonable search and examination of title' before issuing a policy of title insurance.[footnote omitted] Thus, imposing tort liability does not require conduct on the part of title insurers which is not already required by statute." 826 P.2d 1126, 1130 (Alaska 1992).

[87] See Centennial Development Group, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 233 Ariz. 147, 310 P.3d 23 (Ariz.App. Div. 1 2013), which relied on Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 20–1562(1), (5). That law states: "'Preliminary report.' 'commitment' or 'binder' means a report that is furnished in connection with an application for title insurance and that offers to issue a title insurance policy subject to the stated exceptions set forth in the report.... The reports are not abstracts of title and the rights, duties and responsibilities relating to the preparation and issuance of an abstract of title do not apply to the issuance of a report. The report is not a representation as to the condition of title to real property but does constitute a statement of the terms and conditions on which the issuer is willing to issue its title insurance policy if the offer is accepted." The Centennial court noted that the Arizona law is based on the California code, and that the California courts likewise jettisoned abstractor liability when the new law was adopted. The court said that, "[u]nder the plain language of the amended statute, the title commitment that Lawyers Title issued in connection with its policy was not a representation of the condition of the title to the property." Edwards v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2014 WL 575953 (Ariz.App. 1 Div. 2014) (unpublished) (no tort action for failure to make exception for judgment, based on the statute and Centennial holding). In Marceaux v. Baker, 2019 WL 5701736 (Ariz.App. 1 Div.) (unpublished), the court dismissed the owner insured's abstractor negligence claim based on her policy because Arizona does not recognize that cause of action, citing Centennial Development.

[88] That decision was Moore v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 148 Ariz. 408, 714 P.2d 1303 (Ariz.App. 1985). Moore had relied on Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984) and § 552 of the Restatement (Second)

Arkansas

There is no cause of action in Arkansas against a title insurer for abstractor negligence premised on the failure to except a recorded encumbrance in a policy.[90] An older decision stated that an insurer has a duty to search before issuing its policy, but did not declare that this duty supports a private cause of action.[91] When an insurer entered into a national agreement with a customer to provide various title policies, do closings and advise specifically of recorded restrictions, the customer was permitted to sue in negligence for breach of contract when the insurer failed to disclose a recorded restriction.[92]

California

By statute,[93] a preliminary report is not an abstract of title, but merely an offer to issue a of Torts.

---

[89] Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 20-1567.

[90] In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Arkansas Riverview Development, LLC, 573 F.Supp.2d 1152 (E.D.Ark. 2008), the court rejected the abstractor negligence theory, because Arkansas law holds that an action against an abstractor sounds in contract, not tort. It also rejected the Restatement Section 552 theory, because Arkansas does not recognize a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation. It also found that there was no separate search contract on which the insurer could be sued. In an earlier decision, United States v. Mississippi Valley Title Ins. Co., 405 F.Supp. 1312 (W.D.Ark. 1975), the court stated that "doctrines of skill and negligence have no application" to title insurance contracts in Arkansas. In Friedeberg v. Bullard, 2019 WL 1416473 (unpublished), recommendations adopted in 2019 WL 1412106 (E.D.Ark. 2019) (unpublished), aff'd 783 Fed.Appx. 648 (8th Cir. (Ark.) 2019), the court said that "Arkansas law does not permit a negligence claim against title insurance companies "for lack of reasonable care in searching and disclosing the state of title to the property," under Ark. Code Ann. 23-103-408(e)(1). That law says that an insured's exclusive remedy "is to file a claim against the title insurance policy subject to the terms and conditions of the title insurance policy." Ark. Code Ann. 23-103-408(e)(2). The Friedeberg court also found that, even if a negligence claim were permitted, it would have been barred under the applicable three-year statute of limitations, Ark. Code Ann. 16-56-105.

[91] In Bourland v. Title Insurance Co. of Minnesota, 4 Ark.App. 68, 627 S.W.2d 567 (1982), the insureds sued under their policy, not for abstractor negligence. The court stated: "The issuance of the policy is predicated upon an examination of the public records as to the insured title for when a person seeks title insurance he expects to obtain a professional title search and opinion as to the condition of his title. Accordingly the insurer had a duty to search the records for clouds and other defects before issuing its policy." In Arkansas Riverview, the court said that Bourland did not support a negligence claims because the case was about policy liability.

[92] Red Lobster Inns of America Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 656 F.2d 381 (8th Cir. 1981).

[93] Insurance Code section 12340.1 defines "title insurance" as insuring, guaranteeing or indemnifying real property owners against loss or damage resulting from encumbrances on the property or the incorrectness of searches relating to property's title. Insurance Code section 12340.2 defines "title policy" as "any written instrument or contract by means of which title insurance liability is assumed." Insurance Code section 12340.10 defines "abstract of title" as "a written representation, provided pursuant to a contract, whether written or oral, intended to be relied upon by the person who has contracted for the receipt of such representation, listing all recorded conveyances, instruments or documents which, under the laws of this state, impart constructive notice with respect to the chain of title to the real property described therein. An abstract of title is not a title policy as defined in Section 12340.2." Insurance Code section 12340.11 defines preliminary reports as "reports furnished in connection with an application for title insurance and are offers to issue a policy.[94] No action based on negligent misrepresentation may be brought based on a commitment issued after the law's effective date, January 1, 1982.[95] The insurance contract is a contract of indemnity only.[96] The statute limits earlier decisions permitting a cause of action for negligent title policy subject to the stated exceptions set forth in the reports and such other matters as may be incorporated by reference therein. The reports are not abstracts of title, nor are any of the rights, duties or responsibilities applicable to the preparation and issuance of an abstract of title applicable to the issuance of any report. Any such report shall not be construed as, nor constitute, a representation as to the condition of title to real property, but shall constitute a statement of the terms and conditions upon which the issuer is willing to issue its title policy, if such offer is accepted."

---

[94] See Southland Title Corp. v. Superior Ct. of California, 231 Cal.App.3d 530, 282 Cal.Rptr 425 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1991). In Lewis v. Superior Court, 30 Cal.App.4th 1850, 37 Cal.Rptr.2d 63 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994), rev.den. March 16, 1995, the court said this about the statutory framework recited above: "These statutory changes recognize a fundamental truth about title insurance as contrasted with the practice of abstracting and representing the status of title to property. Title insurance is a contract for indemnity under which the insurer is obligated to indemnify the insured against losses sustained in the event that a specific contingency, e.g., the discovery of a lien or encumbrance affecting title, occurs. [Citations.] The policy of title insurance, however, does not constitute a representation that the contingency insured against will not occur. [Citations.] Accordingly, when such contingency occurs, no action for negligence or negligent misrepresentation will lie against the insurer based upon the policy of title insurance alone. Given Insurance Code sections 12340.10 and 12340.11, it is clear that 'any title search or examination is performed by the insurer solely for the purpose of seeking to evaluate its underwriting decision in issuing the policy, not for the benefit of the insured." 37 Cal.Rptr.2d at 76.

[95] Ins. Code §§12340.10, -.11. See Crocker & Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 27 Cal.App.4th 1722, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 313, 316 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1994) and Somerset South Properties, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., 873 F.Supp. 355, 357 (S.D.Cal. 1994).

[96] "Title insurance is a contract for indemnity under which the insurer is obligated to indemnify the insured against losses sustained in the event that a specific contingency, e.g., the discovery of a lien or encumbrance affecting title, occurs. [citations omitted] The policy of tile insurance, however, does not constitute a representation that the contingency insured against will not occur. [citations omitted] Accordingly, when such contingency occurs, no action for negligence or negligent misrepresentation will lie against the insurer based upon the policy of title insurance alone." Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.3d 870, 884, 192 Cal.App.3d 70, 237 Cal.Rptr. 264 (1987); cited in Crocker & Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 313, n. 6, (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1994). Lawrence was distinguished in Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, 32 Cal.Rptr.2d 592 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1994). In Alliance, the matter at issue was a California Land Title 116 endorsement (elsewhere commonly known as a "location" endorsement), rather than a title insurance policy or commitment. The court held that a lawsuit for intentional and negligent misrepresentation was not barred by Lawrence. The endorsements assured that the properties each contained a "4-unit Residence," when in fact two were single-family dwellings and one a duplex. The borrowers had conducted an elaborate fraud on the lender by misrepresenting the nature of the improvements and falsifying all loan documents. The lender realized after default that its collateral was significantly less than the debt. The court found that the endorsement and policy together "amount to a guarantee, not merely a promise to indemnify, as in the conventional title policy... . The specificity of this false description of the property, and the guarantee, together with the alleged reliance thereon, differentiates this case from the routine situation discussed in Lawrence." Id. at 605. Alliance was reversed on appeal [10 Cal.4th 1226, 900 P.2d 601, 44 Cal.Rptr.2d 352 (1995)], but the misrepresentation holding was not directly modified. A cause of action for negligent misrepresentation on a CLTA endorsement was found to fail as a matter of law in Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co., 53 Cal.App.4th 250, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 442 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1997). The court reiterated that "[t]he policy of title insurance ... does not constitute a representation that the contingency insured against will not occur." Id. at 447. Similarly, in Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 73 Cal.App.4th 668, 86 Cal.Rptr.2d 490 (Cal.App. 4 Dist. 1999), the court found the insurer not liable for negligence or misrepresentation based when it allegedly failed to follow misrepresentation to commitments before the statutory cutoff.[97] Damages under the now-prohibited negligent misrepresentation cause of action, for investment in valueless property, were limited to the investment plus inflation factor.[98] The statute of limitations for bringing an action in tort was two years from the date of discovery.[99] underwriting rules set out in the CLTA manual. It said: "[T]he procedures outlined in the CLTA manual appear intended to affect or benefit the title insurer. These are guidelines used by Fidelity to make its underwriting decision on whether to issue a title policy, and are designed to guide its employees on steps to take before issuing a policy. Because these steps are designed to reduce the risk to Fidelity that it will be required to pay a claim on a title policy it issues, the CLTA manual outlines duties intended to affect and benefit Fidelity rather than third parties." The court also found that Seeley v. Seymour, 190 Cal.App.3d 844, 237 Cal.Rptr. 282 (1987), did not support a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation: "The legislature has eliminated any duty to investigate, and we decline to undercut that legislative determination by a judicial rule that imposes on Fidelity a duty to police the activities of Skouras merely because Fidelity sold a lender's title insurance policy to Skouras." In 1500 Viewsite Terrace, LLC v. Pickford Escrow, Inc., 2017 WL 4309755 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the insured cited Rothwell to support its argument that title insurance commitments made representations of fact. The court responded that the commitments "as a matter of law, those reports did not constitute representations, or conceal anything, about liens or clouds on title." In Carr v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 6521029 (Cal.App. 2 Dist.) (unpublished), the court dismissed claims against a title insurer and its subsidiary based on the California Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act, because the title insurance code does not permit tort claims of any type premised on a title report or policy.

---

[97] See Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 48 Cal. App.3d 917, 941, 122 Cal.Rptr. 470 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1975); Banville v. Schmidt, 37 Cal.App.3d 92, 112 Cal.Rptr. 126 (1974); Stagen v. Stewart-West Coast Title Co., 149 Cal. App.3d 114, 196 Cal.Rptr. 732 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1983) (finding no misrepresentation liability to a seller); Smith v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 177 Cal.App.3d 625, 223 Cal.Rptr. 339 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1986) (finding no liability to a prior deed of trust holder); and White v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal.3d 870, 221 Cal.Rptr. 509, 710 P. 2d 309 (1985).

[98] Barthels v. Santa Barbara Title Co., 28 Cal.App.4th 674, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 579 (Cal.App. 2 Dist. 1994). The measure of policy loss adopted in Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co., 116 Cal.App.2d 113, 253 P.2d 116 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1953) was rejected as being "not relevant" to a negligence action. The negligence action is based on Civil Code 3333, which limits damages "to the detriment proximately caused by the Title Company's act or omission." 33 Cal.Rptr.2d at 581. For further discussion of this case, see §15.10.

[99] Crocker & Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 27 Cal.App.4th 1722, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 313, 316 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1994)

Colorado

There is a statutory duty to conduct a "reasonable examination of the title" before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[100] A title insurer may be sued for negligent misrepresentation when the policy fails to disclose a matter not excluded from coverage.[101] The Colorado Court of Appeals acknowledged that there can be liability to third parties such as sellers, if the insurer knows that the third party will rely on the information. However, the court declined to decide if a seller could bring a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation. It found that the seller had not justifiably relied on any misrepresentation because it was contractually obligated to deliver good title before reviewing the defective title commitment.[102] There is no implied duty in contract to disclose matters excluded from the coverage of the policy, such as building code violations. There also is no cause of action to sue in tort for matters excepted or excluded.[103]

Connecticut

The economic loss doctrine bars a claim of searching negligence premised on a title insurance policy.[104]

---

[100] Colo.Rev.Stat. §10-11-106.

[101] Callaham v. First American Title Ins. Co., 837 P.2d 769 (Colo.App. Div. 1 1992) (holding that cause of action arose when insureds discovered title defect and their injuries therefrom); Jimerson v. First American Title Ins. Co., 989 P.2d 258 (Colo.App.Div. 1 1999) (applying §552 of the Restatement of Torts).

[102] Jimerson v. First American Title Ins. Co., 989 P.2d 258 (Colo.App.Div. 1 1999).

[103] In Arapahoe Land Title, Inc. v. Contract Financing, Ltd., 28 Colo.App. 393, 472 P.2d 754, 756-7 (Colo.App. 1970), the court said: "... Arapahoe Title excepted from its contract any coverage of building ordinances and compliance or noncompliance therewith. It assumed no obligation relative thereto. ... Here there was no duty and therefore no negligence. …Any liability of Arapahoe Title to Contract Financing must rest upon Arapahoe Title's express or implied contractual obligations to Contract Financing. … Viewed from such perspective, we do not find any basis for liability on the part of Arapahoe Title. Contractually, it agreed only to deliver a title insurance policy in its usual form. It was clearly established here that its usual form of policy did not insure against losses or damages arising from the consequences of governmental action and did not insure that the building complied with the ordinance. There was no express contractual basis for liability. … Further, Arapahoe Title had no implied contractual obligation to notify Contract Financing of the building code violations relating to the property described in the title insurance commitment. The obligation Arapahoe Title assumed was to insure title subject to certain exclusions and conditions. Nothing in the record discloses an express or implied undertaking on its part to warrant beyond the terms of its written contract the title Contract Financing might acquire." In Fatell v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2009 WL 3158166 (D.Colo.) (unpublished), citing Arapahoe, the court found no valid cause of action in negligence as to a mining claim that was excepted from policy coverage by a general exception, and that the insured "may not circumvent [the policy exception] by asserting a claim in negligence… . "

[104] First American Title Ins. Co. v. 273 Water Street, LLC, 2010 WL 6496185 (Conn.Super.) (unpublished). The court relied on several cases that have held that permitting tort claims on insurance contracts could frustrate a fundamental tenet of insurance, the ability to write contracts to rationally allocate and spread risk, while making a reasonable profit. An early case held that the issuer of a certificate of title, which is not a title insurance policy, may be liable for misrepresentation of title. Bridgeport Airport Inc. v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 111 Conn. 537, 150 A. 509 (Conn. 1930).

Delaware

A Delaware court has rejected the abstractor liability cause of action.[105]

District of Columbia

The author finds no reported decision creating a claimed duty to search.[106] The insurer has no implied contractual or tort duty to inform purchasers of the legal effect of future tax assessments, when such assessments were not liens on the date of the title certificate.[107]

Florida

In the 2007 decision of Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Forest Investments, Inc.,[108] a federal court applying Florida law held that the economic loss doctrine bars all or most tort claims under the title insurance policy, overturning earlier decisions to the contrary. That decision has been followed.[109] Commonwealth Forest deemed the economic loss doctrine to supplant a 1984 opinion that recognized a cause of action based on abstractor liability under a title insurance commitment.[110]

---

[105] Ruger v. Funk, 1996 WL 110072, 1996 Del.Super. LEXIS 34 (Del.Super.Ct. Jan. 22, 1996) (following Walker Rogge and rejecting decisions imposing a tort duty on a title insurance contract).

[106] In 3307 M Street Partners v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 782 F.Supp. 4 (D.D.C. 1992), the District Court observed that the District of Columbia does not recognize a cause of action in tort for negligent breach of contractual duties. Nonetheless, the court was urged to recognize "a claim in contract for 'negligently confirm[ing] to Plaintiff that the title to the estate described in [the policy] was vested as stated therein.'" The court found that the D.C. Court of Appeals had not yet decided the issue. Rather than certify the question for further appeal, however, the District Court remanded to the trial court without decision.

[107] Union Realty Co. v. Ahern, 93 A.2d 84 (D.C. 1952). The Union Realty case was decided by the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, relying on District of Columbia law, but involved property in Montgomery County, Maryland. District of Columbia law was apparently applied because it involved an assessment by the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission.

[108] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth Forest Investments, Inc., 494 F.Supp.2d 1332 (M.D.Fla. 2007).

[109] Ziemniak v. Goede & Adamczyk, PLLC, 2012 WL 5868385 (S.D.Fla.) (unpublished). In Kahama VI, LLC v. HJH, LLC, 2016 WL 7104175 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), although the court accepted without criticism Kahama's assertion that Florida's reasonable search statute translates into a cause of action for abstractor negligence in the issuance of a title insurance commitment, the court said that Old Republic had not failed to conduct a reasonable title search. It noted that the two instruments at issue were recorded prior to the root of the marketable title held by the insured, and that a court had already quieted the title based on the Florida Marketable Record Title to Real Property Act. The court ruled that "Old Republic had no obligation to research the public records before" the date of the root of title. Therefore, the insurer "did not breach its duty to conduct a reasonable title search." However, in La Minnesota Riviera, LLC v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 2007 WL 3024242 (M.D.Fla.) (unpublished), the court applied the economic loss doctrine to dismiss a misrepresentation claim based on the policy, but refused to dismiss abstractor liability claims premised on the title insurance commitment.

[110] Shada v. Title & Trust Co. of Florida, 457 So.2d 553 (Fla. 1984). "We see no reason why the principles applicable to an abstracter should not be applied to a title insurance company where it undertakes the duty to schedule record title defects. The use of a title insurance binder or commitment instead of an abstract and an attorney's opinion of title has become commonplace. A title insurance company has a duty to exercise reasonable care when it issues a title binder or commitment and its failure to do so may subject it to liability in either contract or tort." Shada relied in part on First

Another decision which the Commonwealth Forest court considered out of date had held that special damages such as lost profit may be recovered under the abstractor liability theory.[111] Liability extends only to those third persons whom the insurer could reasonably expect to rely on the commitment or policy.[112] There is a statutory duty not to issue a title insurance policy without due regard for matters affecting the title.[113] However, recent decisions have declared that the law does not support a private cause of action.[114]

Georgia

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no "reasonable search" statute, in the State of Georgia.

American Title Ins. Co., Inc. v. First Title Service Co. of the Florida Keys, Inc., 457 So.2d 467 (Fla. 1984) and earlier decisions involving true abstractor liability. First Title Service did not involve liability on a commitment for abstractor negligence.

[111] Safeco Title Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 452 So.2d 45 (Fla.App. 1984).

[112] Goldberg, et al. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 517 So.2d 43 (Fla.App. 1987); First American Title Ins. Co. v. First Title Service Co. of the Florida Keys, Inc., 457 So.2d 467 (Fla. 1984).

[113] Section 627.784 of the Florida Statutes says that "[a] title insurance policy ... may not be issued without regard to the possible existence of adverse matters or defects of title." In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. D.S.C. of Newark Ent., 544 So. 2d 1070 (Fla. App. 1989), the court held: "Examination of record title or an abstract of the record title of real property is both an esoteric and a painstaking process. Evaluation of the status of title requires considerable expertise. L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guarantee Company, 52 N.Y.2d 179, 418 N.E.2d 650, 437 N.Y.S.2d 57 (1981), aff'd, 63 N.Y.2d 955, 473 N.E.2d 234, 483 N.Y.S.2d 984 (1984). It was for these reasons that the concept of title insurance was developed and similar reasoning has made the furnishing of title insurance a successful business. It is also appropriate to note that title insurance is not casualty insurance. § 627.784, Fla. Stat. (1987). A policy issues based upon the informed opinion of title examining experts employed by the company that title is in the condition expressed in the policy. Krause v. Title & Trust Company of Florida, 390 So.2d 805 (Fla. 5th DCA 1980); § 627.7845, Fla.Stat. (1987). As a matter of public policy, a duty is imposed upon the title company to make a thorough and competent search of the record title. Shada v. Title & Trust Company of Florida, 457 So.2d 553, 557 (Fla. 4th DCA 1984), rev. denied, 464 So.2d 556 (Fla.1985); McDaniel v. Lawyers Title Guaranty Fund, 327 So.2d 852, 855 (Fla.2d DCA 1976). This duty is codified by statute in Florida. § 627.784, Fla.Stat. (1987)."

[114] Regions Bank v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 977 F.Supp.2d 1237, 24 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. D 192 (S.D.Fla. 2013); Lennen v. Marriott Ownership Resorts, Inc., ___ F.Supp.3d ___, 2019 WL 1440092 (M.D.Fla. 2019) (permanent citation not yet available), appeal filed August 21, 2019.

Hawaii

Hawaii requires that a title insurer conduct a "reasonable" title search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[115] The purpose of the law has been held to be to discourage title insurers from issuing policies based on indemnification and not on the results of a valid title search.[116] As to a certificate of title search, the state recognizes a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation of information, under § 552 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts.[117] The author finds no reported case involving a commitment or policy. Hawaii has both a general deceptive trade practices act[118] and a portion of the insurance code dedicated to deceptive or unfair insurance practices.[119] An insured may bring an action against an insurer under either statute.[120]

Idaho

Abstractor liability and negligence have been rejected, when the claim is based solely on a commitment or policy.[121] Relying on Ford v. Guarantee Abstract and Title Company, Inc.,[122] the Supreme Court has said that a negligence action may lie only for "duties voluntarily assumed by the insurer in addition to the mere contract to insure title."[123] However, neither an oral update of title nor an amended commitment assume any such duty.[124]

---

[115] Haw.Rev.Stat. §431:20-113.

[116] Amfac, Inc. v. Waikiki Beachcomber Inv. Co., 74 Haw. 85, 839 P.2d 10, recons.den., 74 Haw. 650, 843 P.2d 144 (Hawaii 1992); Schmidt v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2008 WL 2511773 (D. Hawaii) (unpublished).

[117] Chun v. Park, 51 Hawaii 462, amended by 51 Hawaii 501, 462 P.2d 905 (1969).

[118] §480-2, Hawaii Rev.Stat.

[119] §431:1-104, Hawaii Rev. Stat.

[120] Jenkins v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 95 F.3d 791 (9th Cir. 1996).

[121] In Anderson v. Title Insurance Company, 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982), the court held: "Nowhere in this policy does it appear that it is anything other than what it purports to be, an insurance policy.[footnote omitted] The fee charged was for an insurance policy, it does not appear to be for examination of title. Where title to a portion of insured property fails, the insured is entitled to recover upon the loss up to the amount of insurance coverage under the policy. [citations omitted] The full amount of the policy, $1,200 has been tendered to the insureds and deposited to the court. …[W]e decline to hold that the title insurance company was impliedly acting as an abstractor and we refuse to impose the liabilities of an abstractor upon a title insurance company merely because it issued a preliminary title report." Id. at 85-6. In Cummings v. Stephens, 157 Idaho 348, 336 P.3d 281 (Idaho 2014), reh.den. Nov. 5, 2014, the court held that Idaho's search statute does not transform a title commitment into an abstract of title, and thus a title agent may not be sued for faulty abstracting of title for having included in a title commitment parcels not owned by the sellers and one they did own but did not intend to sell.

[122] 220 Kan. 244, 553 P.2d 254 (1976).

[123] Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co. of Idaho, 764 P.2d 423, 426 (Idaho 1988). The negligence action in the Ford case was found to rest on the insurer's role as escrowee, not in the issuance of the commitment.

[124] Brown's Tie & Lumber Company v. Chicago Title Company of Idaho, 764 P. 2d 423 (Idaho 1988). The oral update was found to have been done without any additional consideration, thus negating any additional duty. The amended

A statute requires that the insurer conduct a search before issuing a commitment. This statute has been held not to require a "reasonable" search, and thus no separate duty in negligence is supported by the statute.[125]

Illinois

The Illinois Supreme Court has held that there is no cause of action for abstractor liability for errors in a title insurance commitment or policy.[126] The court premised its decision on the economic loss doctrine. The court found that a title insurer is not primarily in the business of supplying information, and therefore not within that exception to the application of the economic loss doctrine. The court thus reversed earlier decisions that had found an implied duty in contract to conduct a reasonable search before issuing a commitment.[127] Likewise, an escrowee has no duty to search title and report all encumbrances on title, which the court said would be merely an end-run on the commitment was merely incident to the issuance of the policy.

---

[125] I.C. Section 41-2708(l)(b) provides: "41-2708. Determination of insurability--Prohibited risks--Rebates.-(1) Insurability. No title insurance on real property in the state of Idaho shall be issued unless and until the title insurer or its agent: ... (b) Has caused to be made a search and examination of the title and a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound title underwriting practices." The Brown's Tie court found that the statute had intentional been written so as not to require a "reasonable" search which would create a duty separate from the policy: "Unlike similar statutes of sister states [footnote omitted], section 41-2708(1) of the Idaho Code does not mandate a 'reasonable search' of title. It provides only that 'a search and examination of the title' shall be made. We find it significant that the Idaho legislature, unlike other states, has chosen to omit the word 'reasonable.' It has long been the rule in Idaho that only abstractors of title may be found negligent, see Merrill v. Fremont Abstract Co., 39 Idaho 238, 227 P. 34 (1924), and this Court has never deviated from the rule. ... [A]s the trial court below wrote in its well-reasoned memorandum decision: '[A]llegations of negligent performance of duties under I.C. Sec. 41-2708 simply characterize a form of breach. Theories of malpractice sounding in negligence may be necessary where there is no contractual duty or contractual standard existent upon which to measure performance. Here, however, the duty or standard of performance is set forth by contract--the foreclosure reports and title insurance commitments--and measurement of performance can be fully accomplished by reference to the contracts. Any malpractice becomes a form of breach, rather than a separate claim for relief or cause of action.' We hold that I.C. Sec. 41-2708 does not create a duty in tort upon the part of title insurers to conduct a reasonable search and inspection of title. Further, we hold that Brown's Tie has not averred circumstances which would avoid the rule of Anderson ... ." 764 P. 2d at 426-7.

[126] First Midwest Bank, N.A. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 218 Ill.2d 326, 300 Ill.Dec. 69, 843 N.E.2d 327 (2006); followed in Midfirst Bank v. Abney, 365 Ill.App.3d 636, 850 N.E.2d 373, 302 Ill.Dec. 936 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2006); First Magnus Financial Corp. v. Dobrowski, 387 F.Supp.2d 786 (N.D.Ill. 2005); and Warczak v. Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund, Inc., 2015 WL 3884451, 2015 IL App (2d) 140677-U (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 2015) (unpublished). The First Midwest decision overturned Notaro Homes, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 309 Ill.App.3d 246, 722 N.E.2d 208, 242 Ill.Dec. 719 (Ill.App. 2 Dist. 1999), which had adopted the theory of abstractor liability. See also W.E. Erickson Const., Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 641 N.E.2d 861 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1994) (exclusive remedy provision of the commitment prohibited abstractor liability on commitment); Wheaton Theatre, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 354 F.Supp.3d 904 (N.D.Ill. 2018) (Illinois rule that title insurer cannot be sued for negligent misrepresentation of title not evaded by argument that rule applies only to Schedule B exceptions and not mistaken inclusion of land in Schedule A).

[127] McLaughlin v. Attorneys' Title Guaranty Fund, Inc., 61 Ill.App.3d 911, 18 Ill.Dec. 891, 378 N.E.2d 355 (Ill.App. 3 Dist. 1978); Dinges v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 106 Ill.App.3d 188, 435 N.E.2d 944 (Ill.App. 5 Dist. 1982); W.E. Erickson Const., Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 266 Ill.App.3d 905, 641 N.E.2d 861 (Ill.App. 1 Dist. 1994).

abstractor liability prohibition and "would be an extraordinary undertaking, tantamount to a second layer of title insurance."[128]

Indiana

The Indiana Supreme Court held, in U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Integrity Land Title Corp.,[129] that a title agent may be directly liable to a lender insured for failing to disclose a title defect in the commitment and policy, under the Restatement (Second) of Torts Section 552. The agent was sued after the insurer failed, rendering the insurance contract worthless or void. The court agreed that the economic loss doctrine ordinarily precludes tort claims based on contracts. It held that title agents are in the business of supplying information, which is an exception to that rule. Further, the title agent was not a party to the insurance contract. The court used the lack of privity to hold that "a claim of negligent misrepresentation as an exception to the general economic loss rule where a mortgage lender not in privity of contract with a title company seeks to recover for the title company's negligence in issuing a title commitment that failed to disclose an encumbrance." Later decisions have applied this decision to permit negligent misrepresentation claims against title insurers or agents when the claimant was not in privity of contract with the insurer as to the title commitment on which the claim was based.[130] An insured is not permitted to sue its insurer for negligent misrepresentation, because insurer and insured are in privity of contract.[131]

Iowa

The author finds no Iowa appellate court decisions on the subject. The Iowa statutes do not authorize the issuance of title insurance policies in that state.

---

[128] Bridgeview Bank Group v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 3022307 (N.D.Ill.) (unpublished).

[129] U.S. Bank, N.A. v. Integrity Land Title Corp., 929 N.E.2d 742 (Ind. 2010). The court further said: "Integrity has argued at every stage of this litigation that it was not in contractual privity with U.S. Bank. This is a critical point. Were there to be a contract between Integrity and U.S. Bank, the parties in all likelihood would be relegated to their contractual remedies." 929 N.E.2d at 745.

[130] In Izynski v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 963 N.E.2d 592 (Ind.App. 2012), a title insurance commitment had been issued to a prospective buyer who did not purchase. The broker showed it to the Izynskis when they made a later offer. The day before closing, the Izynskis learned of a dam easement not shown in the commitment. The commitment was amended, and the policy excepted the easement. The appeals court reversed the dismissal of the Izynskis' tort claims against the insurer based on the commitment. Based on Integrity Land, it admitted the insureds would have no tort claims based on their policy. However, it said, they might have such claims based on the first commitment, because it was not issued to them. KSM, LLC v. Lighthouse Storage, LLC, 2012 WL 892320 (Ind.App.) (unpublished) held that a seller may sue the insurer for negligent misrepresentation of title in a commitment, because the seller was not in privity of contract with the insurer. In Rodriguez v. Lakeview Title, LLC, 951 N.E.2d 310, 2011 WL 3198157 (Ind.App.) (unpublished), the court found that a seller may assert negligent misrepresentation, but that the seller in that instance had no such claim because the title agent had represented that taxes were paid, but the seller owed the taxes and had received notice of them.

[131] Pearman v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 108 N.E.3d 342 (Ind.App. 2018) (dismissing negligence claim against insurer brought by insured).

Kansas

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[132] An insurer or agent that acts as escrowee may be sued in tort.[133] In so holding, the court also adopted the statement in Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co.[134] that the insurer assumes a separate duty as abstractor when it issues a commitment.[135] However, the latter holding was found by another court to be dictum, since the case concerned an escrow.[136] The measure of damages is based on tort theory and is not interpreted in light of the policy measure of loss. [137] The title standards promulgated by the state bar may be treated as a guide to the insurer's "reasonable performance" of its duties.[138]

Kentucky

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no "reasonable search" statute.

Louisiana

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no "reasonable search" statute.

Maine

The abstractor liability theory has been rejected by the Supreme Court of Maine.[139]

---

[132] Kan.Stat.Ann. §40-235.

[133] Ford v. Guarantee Abstract & Title Co., Inc., 220 Kan. 244, 553 P.2d 254 (1976), later proceeding Guarantee Abstract & Title Co. v. Interstate Fire & Casualty Co., 228 Kan. 532, 618 P.2d 1195 (1980), later app. 232 Kan. 76, 652 P.2d 665 (1982); Bender v. Kansas Secured Title and Abstract Co., Inc., 34 Kan.App.2d 399, 119 P.3d 670 (Kan.App. 2005).

[134] 48 Cal.App.3d 917, 122 Cal.Rptr. 470 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1975). Jarchow has since been nullified by statute in California.

[135] "Where a title insurer presents a buyer with both a preliminary title report and a policy of title insurance two distinct responsibilities are assumed; in rendering the first service, the insurer serves as an abstractor of title and must list all matters of public record regarding the subject property in its preliminary report." 553 P.2d at 266.

[136] Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982); Brown's Tie & Lumber Co. v. Chicago Title Co. of Idaho, 764 P.2d 423 (Idaho 1988).

[137] Bender v. Kansas Secured Title and Abstract Co., Inc., 34 Kan.App.2d 399, 119 P.3d 670 (Kan.App. 2005).

[138] In re Lisa, Inc., 224 B.R. 173 (D.C.D.Kan. 1998).

[139] N E Properties, Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 660 A.2d 926 (Me. 1995).

Maryland

A title insurer may not be sued for negligent misrepresentation under a title insurance policy.[140] A title agent or examiner may be liable for a search error if it contracts to discover and disclose matters of record.[141]

Massachusetts

A title insurer may not be sued for negligent misrepresentation under a title insurance policy. A negligence claim must be based on evidence "that the insurer voluntarily assumed duties in addition to issuance of a title policy."[142] The state Supreme Judicial Court ruled that there is no separate liability in tort for negligent searching of title.[143] An earlier case had held that, when an applicant never received a commitment because he told the insurer he did not need one "if the title was clear," the insurer was liable for not reporting to the applicant that the property was encumbered by an easement. The insurer was not permitted to deny liability on the basis that the policy accurately reflected all recorded matters.[144]

---

[140] Columbia Town Center Title Co. v. 100 Investment Limited Partnership, 203 Md.App. 61, 36 A.3d 985 (Md.App. 2012). The court based its decision on case law from other states, the title insurance statute (which says that a policy is not an abstract of title), and the principle that an insurer should not be subjected to a form of liability that it did not envision and for which it was not paid. For the latter principle the court relied heavily on James Bruce Davis, More Than They Bargained For: Are Title Insurance Companies Liable in Tort for Undisclosed Title Defects?, 45 Cath. U.L.Rev. 71 (1995).

[141] Lewis v. Long & Foster Real Estate, Inc., 584 A.2d 1325 (Md.App. 1991). In 100 Investment Limited Partnership v. Columbia Town Center Title Co., 430 Md. 197, 60 A.3d 1 (Md. 2013), the Maryland Supreme Court determined that a title agent may be sued for title search negligence in the search performed in connection with the issuance of a title insurance policy, but that the insurer is not vicariously liable for the title company's search error.

[142] Private Lending & Purchasing, Inc. v. First American Title Ins. Co., 54 Mass.App.Ct. 532, 766 N.E.2d 532 (Mass.App. 2002).

[143] Somerset Savings Bank v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 420 Mass. 422, 649 N.E.2d 1120 (Mass. 1995), held: "A title company's duty to defend the insured is governed by the terms of the policy. ... Its liability is limited to the policy, and it will not be liable for negligence in searching the records." 420 Mass. at 430.

[144] Dorr v. Massachusetts Title Ins. Co., 238 Mass. 490, 131 N.E. 191 (1921) states: "The defendant contends that its sole liability is as an insurer of title, and that its obligation to the plaintiff is measured by the terms of the policy. This contention is without merit. The judge was well warranted in finding that the defendant acted not merely as insurer but as the plaintiff's paid agent in examining the title, and that although those who acted in its behalf knew that there was a right of way over the property, they negligently failed to disclose its existence to the plaintiff, who relied solely on the defendant to protect his interests and was ignorant of the existence of any incumbrance until after he had paid his money and received the deed, which was silent as to any easement in the premises conveyed. The defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the injury caused by this negligence of its authorized representatives." 131 N.E. at 192-3.

Michigan

Michigan has rejected abstractor liability on a policy or commitment,[145] a ruling affirmed by several later decisions.[146] An earlier case, sometimes cited as authority for a duty to search, involved an abstract and not a title insurance policy.[147]

Minnesota

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no applicable statute. Quigley v. St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co.[148] is sometimes cited as having established a duty to search. However, the case actually held that an insurer has a duty to keep its "policyholder" informed of events and the company's intended course of action while the insurer is defending the insured's title.[149]

Mississippi

A federal court refused to dismiss a claim for negligent misrepresentation of title under a title insurance policy because there has been no precedential decision on the issue by a Mississippi state court.[150]

---

[145] Mickam v. Joseph Louis Palace Trust, 849 F.Supp. 516 (E.D. Mich. 1993). The court noted a split of jurisdictions, but found an Idaho decision persuasive. The court gave its rationale as follows: "As in other states, parties in Michigan generally purchase title insurance, rather than relying on an abstract, because they prefer the certainty of insurance. In purchasing insurance, a buyer acquires a contractual right against the insurer for coverage of title defects. In purchasing an abstract, a buyer merely obtains an examination of title. With an abstract, a real estate buyer can obtain damages for title defects only through tort litigation. To protect the rights and expectations of the parties, a title insurer should be liable in accordance with the terms of the title policy only and should not be liable in tort. To hold otherwise does violence to the whole concept of insurance." 849 F.Supp. at 521-2.

[146] Wormsbacher v. Phillip R. Seaver Title Co., Inc., 284 Mich.App. 1, 772 N.W.2d 827 (Mich.App. 2009), rev.den. 773 N.W.2d 721; Carter v. Carter, 2008 WL 5662081 (E.D.Mich) (unpublished), report accepted in part, 2009 WL 440968 (E.D.Mich.) (unpublished). Both decisions relied on Mickam. Also, Awad v. Duke, 1998 WL 1991731 (Mich.App.) (unpublished) (tort claim on title insurance policy dismissed, citing 1 Cameron, Michigan Real Property Law (2d Ed), §12.14, p 425 that a title insurance policy is merely "a statement by a title insurance company that, in exchange for a premium paid, it is willing to take the risk that title is as stated in the title insurance policy.").

[147] Williams v. Polgar, 43 Mich.App. 95, 204 N.W.2d 57 (1972). The important ruling in that case was to expand an abstractor's liability to foreseeable third party beneficiaries of the abstract.

[148] 60 Minn. 275, 62 N.W. 287 (1895), appeal after remand, 66 N.W. 364 (Minn. 1896).

[149] Id. at 366.

[150] In re Evans, 2011 WL 609377 (Bkcy.S.D.Miss.) (unpublished).

Missouri

There is a statutory duty to perform a title search before the issuance of a title insurance policy, but the statute does not say that the search must be "reasonable."[151] A title insurance commitment has been held to create an implied duty to search and report the status of title.[152] However, an insured is not entitled to recover separate and inconsistent damages under a tort theory as well as diminution in value under a policy claim.[153]

Montana

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[154] The party performing the title search owes a duty to conduct the search with reasonable care.[155] The insured may bring a separate cause of action in negligence.[156]

---

[151] Mo.Ann.Stat. §381.071.

[152] Evinger v. McDaniel Title Co., 726 S.W.2d 468, 472 (Mo.App. 1987), found the duty to make an accurate search could be "implied by entering into a contractual relationship." In Rosenberg v. Missouri Title Guar. Co., 764 S.W.2d 684 (Mo.App. 1988), the court cited Evinger and further stated that: "While we agree that a commitment of insurance does not purpose to be an abstract title, it is for the trier of fact to determine whether the drafters of the commitment owe a contractual duty to report matters that may constitute a defect in title… . Such a duty is evidenced in the commitment itself. Under the heading "Conditions and Stipulations," the commitment states: 'Liability of the [Title Insurance Company of Minnesota] under this Commitment shall be ... for actual loss incurred in reliance hereon in undertaking in good faith ... to acquire ... the estate ... covered by this Commitment.' Also, plaintiffs' expert testified that a title insurance company in its commitment 'has an obligation, independent of this insurance, to make sure that his client is going to get a piece of property that is free of problems, claims [and defects],' so that the buyer can make 'his own independent determination of the status of the property' in deciding whether or not to purchase it."

[153] Aboussie v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 949 S.W.2d 207 (Mo.App.E.D. 1997).

[154] Mont. Code Ann. § 33-25-214.

[155] "Although title insurance applicants are interested in obtaining insurance coverage, their primary interest is in what the examination discloses. For this they rely on the title companies to tell them of any risks. Risks usually covered by title insurance policies include errors in the title examination, including the negligent failure to note a title defect. A title company, as insurer, owes its clients the duty of conducting a title search with reasonable care. Although liability does not attach for failure to discover defects which cannot be discovered with reasonable care, here a title examiner conducting a title search should have been alerted to the possible consequences of the recital in the 1944 warranty deed. … A title insurer cannot simply ignore a recital that puts it on notice of a possible defect in the title." Lipinski v. The Title Ins. Co., 202 Mont. 1, 655 P.2d 970, 974 (1982).

[156] Relying on Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 48 Cal.App.3d 917, 122 Cal.Rptr. 470 (Cal.App. 1 Dist. 1975), Chun v. Park, 51 Hawaii 462, 462 P.2d 905 (Hawaii 1970) and Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Ramsey, 507 P.2d 492 (Alaska 1973), the court found a duty to conduct a reasonable title search in Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. of Idaho, 661 P.2d 12 (Mont. 1983). The court said: "It is within the expectations of the parties, the seller ordering the title commitment and the title insurer inspecting the public records, that the title commitment will accurately reflect the insurability of the title, or the condition of the public record, as the case may be, with respect to that title. We find a duty on the part of the title insurer when it issues a title commitment which later forms the basis for a title insurance policy, particularly where the seller relies on the title commitment, to base its title commitment and report upon a reasonably diligent title search of the public records. A breach of that duty would constitute negligence." 661 P.2d at 15-16. Malinak was followed by Doble v. Lincoln County Title Co., 692 P.2d 1267 (Mont. 1985), which found that expert testimony is

Nebraska

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[157] An insurer may be liable as an abstractor of title for erroneous reporting of information on a commitment.[158]

Nevada

A title insurance policy is not an abstract of title and a title insurer is not required to disclose every recorded instrument in a policy it issues.[159] Nevada has adopted the definition of "title insurance" found in the California title insurance code,[160] and has adopted the construction of that definition as provided by the California courts. There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search.[161] required in order to establish the standard of care for title examination, due to the fact that it is "complex and intricate and beyond the common understanding of lay persons." However, in Harpole v. Powell County Title Co., 371 Mont. 543, 309 P.3d 34, 2013 MT 257 (Mont. 2013), the court held that the statute did not require that the title company find a 1903 municipal record suggesting that a road had been dedicated to the public. The 1903 road record had never been recorded. Also, it did not conclusively establish the status of the road, because it contained no survey or legal description, but only "vague references to landmarks that have long since disappeared."

---

[157] Neb.Rev.Stat. §§44-1901-1905.

[158] Heyd v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 218 Neb. 296, 354 N.W.2d 154 (1984) held that tort liability existed on a commitment: "We now hold that a title insurance company which renders a title report and also issues a policy of title insurance has assumed two distinct duties. In rendering the title report the title insurance company serves as an abstractor of title and must list all matters of public record adversely affecting title to the real estate which is the subject of the title report. When a title insurance company fails to perform its duty to abstract title accurately, the title insurance company may be liable in tort for all damages proximately caused by such breach of duty. A title insurance company's responsibility for its tortious conduct is distinct from the insurance company's responsibility existing on account of its policy of insurance. Different duties and responsibilities imposed on the title insurance company, therefore, can be the basis for separate causes of action--one cause of action in tort and another in contract." 354 N.W.2d at 158. In 1985, after Heyd, Nebraska passed the Abstracters Act, Neb.Rev.Stat. §§76-535-58. The Act's definition of "report of title" does not include a title insurance commitment or policy. Thus, a commitment is not an abstract. However, In Tess v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 251 Neb. 501, 557 N.W.2d 696 (1997), the Supreme Court created a new duty of reasonable care based on §552 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts. The court formulated the duty as follows: "We therefore hold that title insurance companies and their agents are required to exercise the degree of skill and knowledge normally possessed by members of the profession in good standing in the locality concerning preliminary title information which is transmitted to their customers." 251 Neb. at 513, 557 N.W.2d at 704-5. In Tess, the insurer was also found to have a duty to disclose a restriction recorded after the effective date of the commitment, because it was notarized by an officer of the title agency and disclosed by other commitments to insure issued the same date. However, because the proposed insured did not see the title commitment before purchasing, he did not rely on any representations in the commitment. Therefore, any misrepresentation in the commitment was not the proximate cause of the purchaser's damage, and not recoverable.

[159] In Huntington v. MILA, Inc., 119 Nev. 355, 75 P.3d 354 (Nev. 2003), the court said: "We conclude that a title insurance company is not required to disclose every encumbrance in a title policy because a title policy, unlike an abstract of title, does not impart constructive notice of encumbrances. Instead, a title company must disclose the encumbrances it is not willing to insure or indemnify against in a title policy." Earlier, in Pioneer Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cantrell, 71 Nev. 243, 286 P.2d 261 (1955), the court had held that an exception was not a representation, but merely a term of the insurance contract, saying: "In our view the proper interpretation of the expressed exception is that it

New Hampshire

The economic loss doctrine bars a claim of searching negligence premised on a title insurance policy.[162] There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[163]

New Jersey

The insurer has no tort liability for a failure to conduct an adequate search, or to report all matters found in its title search.[164] The insurer may be liable for negligent misrepresentation if it took purported to be only a paraphrase for purposes of identity of the defect to which it expressly referred; that it was not intended to constitute a representation or a binding expression or opinion as to the legal nature or extent of that defect."

---

[160] NRS § 681A.080 defines "title insurance" as a policy "insuring, guaranteeing or indemnifying owners of property or holders of liens, encumbrances or security interests on the property, and others interested therein, against loss or damage suffered by reason of: 1. Liens, encumbrances, security interests and defects in, or the unmarketability of, the title to the property; or 2. Invalidity or unenforceability of liens, encumbrances or security interests on the property, and any other activity substantially equivalent to these activities." In Huntington v. MILA, Inc., 119 Nev. 355, 75 P.3d 354 (Nev. 2003), the court noted that this definition is identical to that found in Cal.Ins. Code § 12340.10. It said: "Although there is no legislative history indicating that NRS 692A.023 is based on California Insurance Code § 12340.10, California's statutory distinction between an abstract of title and title insurance is identical to Nevada's. We are persuaded that the Rice opinion's analysis [Rice v. Taylor, 220 Cal. 629, 32 P.2d 381, 383 (1934), which held that a title insurance policy is not an abstract of title] is correct. Because a clear statutory distinction exists between an abstract of title and title insurance, we conclude that a title insurance company, conducting a title search on behalf of a lender, is not the lender's agent. Therefore, a title company's constructive notice may not be imputed to the lender."

[161] Nev.Rev. Stat. §692A.220.

[162] A federal court so held in Bourne v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 2011 WL 635304 (D.N.H.), 2011 DNH 29 (unpublished), citing a decision of the New Hampshire Supreme Court, Plourde Sand & Gravel v. JGI E., Inc., 917 A.2d 1250, 1255 (N.H.2007). However, a second federal judge held that, "in line with Section 552 of the Restatement, …a title insurer has a common law duty to the insured… ." That judge rejected the economic loss doctrine as a bar. However, he said that, since this decision was issued on a motion to dismiss only, before he entered judgment he would certify the question of the validity of such a cause of action in New Hampshire to the state supreme court. MacDonald v. Old Republic Nat. Title Ins. Co., 882 F.Supp.2d 236 (D.Mass. 2012).

[163] N.H.Rev.Stat.Ann. §416-a:6.

[164] Walker Rogge Inc v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co., 562 A.2d 208 (N.J. 1989), subsequent appeal 603 A. 2d 557 (N.J.Super.A.D. 1992). The 1989 Walker Rogge decision contains one of the most lucid analyses of the cases on this subject. The court rejected the abstractor liability theory, siding instead with the rationale of Anderson v. Title Ins. Co., 103 Idaho 875, 655 P.2d 82 (1982). In Walker Rogge, the New Jersey Supreme Court concluded: "Thus, in New Jersey, as elsewhere, courts are disinclined to impose liability on the basis of tort, as distinguished from contract, principles. Although we recognize that an insured expects that a title company will conduct a reasonable title examination, the relationship between the company and the insured is essentially contractual. … The end result of the relationship between the title company and the insured is the issuance of the policy. To this extent, the relationship differs from other relationships conceivably sounding in both tort and contract, such as the relationship between physician and patient, to which plaintiff alludes. Although the relationship between physician and patient is contractual in its origins, the purpose of the relationship is to obtain the services of the physician in treating the patient. The patient reasonably expects the physician to follow the appropriate standard of care when providing those services. By contrast, the title company is on a "special relationship" beyond the policy.[165]

New Mexico

Early decisions held that there was no duty to report matters excluded under the policy.[166] Then a reasonable-search statute was adopted.[167] The statute was found to create a duty of care in the searching of title which ran to both buyer[168] and seller.[169] However, the statute was found not to create a duty to disclose information.[170] In addition, an insurer which acts as escrowee has been providing not services, but a policy of insurance. That policy appropriately limits the rights and duties of the parties. From this perspective, the insured expects that in consideration for payment of the premium, it will receive a policy of insurance. The insurer's expectation is that in exchange for that premium it will insure against certain risks subject to the terms of the Policy. If the title company fails to conduct a reasonable title examination or, having conducted such an examination, fails to disclose the results to the insured, then it runs the risk of liability under the policy. In many, if not most, cases conduct that would constitute the failure to make a reasonable title search would also result in a breach of the terms of the policy." 562 A.2d at 220. Walker Rogge was followed in Hawkins v. Weichert Title Agency, 2011 WL 4466883 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) and Nuzzo v. Horvath, 2011 WL 3795035 (N.J.Super.A.D.) (unpublished) to defeat negligence and tort claims based on title insurance policies. See also Booth v. New Jersey Highway Auth., 60 N.J. Super. 534, 159 A.2d 460, 461-62, (1960) (title insurer not liable in negligence for failure to discover and disclose title defects); Caravan Products Co. v. Ritchie, 55 N.J. 71, 74, 259 A.2d 223 (1969) (under title policy, "the liability to [the insured] is contractual and does not depend on negligence"); Enright v. Lubow, 202 N.J.Super. 58, 67, 493 A.2d 1288 (App.Div.1985) (contractual "nature of a title insurance policy and a title report" precludes negligence liability); Russo v. PPN Title Agency, LLC, 2017 WL 3081709 (N.J.A.D.) (unpublished)(agent not liable to insured for title search error because commitment is strictly binder of insurance, not search product).

---

[165] Walker Rogge Inc v. Chelsea Title & Guaranty Co., 562 A.2d 208 (N.J. 1989), subsequent appeal 603 A.2d 557 (N.J.Super.A.D. 1992).

[166] Horn v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 89 N.M. 709 557 P.2d 206 (1976); Devlin v. Bowden, 97 N.M. 547, 641 P.2d 1094 (1982); Roscoe v. U.S. Life Title Ins. Co. of Dallas, 105 N.M. 589, 734 P.2d 1272 (1987).

[167] N.M.S.A. 1978, Section 59A s. 30ll(A), states: "No title insurance policy may be written unless the title insurer or its title insurance agent has caused to be conducted a reasonable search and examination of the title using an abstract plant meeting the requirements of Section 59A-12-13 NMSA 1978 and has caused to be made a determination of insurability of title in accordance with sound underwriting practices."

[168] In Cottonwood Enterprises v. McAlpin, 781 P.2d 1156 (N.M. 1989), later decision 810 P.2d 812 (N.M. 1991), the court found that, because of the statute, "a duty of reasonable care is imposed upon title insurance agents that is independent of any duties or obligations arising out of the contract of insurance."

[169] Ruiz v. Garcia, 850 P.2d 972 (N.M. 1993). The Ruiz case extended the Cottonwood duty to sellers, because the New Mexico Title Insurance Law's purpose is to "provide for the protection of consumers and purchasers of title insurance policies... ." NMSA §59A-30-2(B) (emphasis added). It went even further, holding that the insurer/escrowee had the statutory duty to conduct a title search even though it acted solely as an escrowee. "So, even though New Mexico Title had no express contractual duty to perform a title search for Garcia [the seller] and did not undertake to act in any capacity for Garcia other than as a closing agent in a real estate transaction, it nevertheless had a statutory duty to Garcia independent of any contract. ... We hold that New Mexico Title owed a duty of reasonable care to Garcia under Section 59A-30-11(A) and that its failure to discover a defect of title is actionable for her."

[170] Ruiz v. Garcia, 850 P.2d 972 (N.M. 1993).

found to have a duty to disclose information acquired in its title search which it knows may affect the outcome of the transaction.[171] The statute was then amended to say that the law does not create a duty to parties other than the underwriter to conduct a reasonable search and examination of title.[172] A later case correctly construed the revised law to mean that there is no statutory duty to conduct a reasonable search in preparing a policy, and that "Ruiz was superseded by statute."[173] Nonetheless, that court found that a title insurer may be sued for alleged misstatements by a closer about the title search.

New York

New York has rejected negligent misrepresentation claims on title insurance policies.[174] Prior New York cases also made a clear demarcation between abstract and title insurance liabilities.[175] L. Smirlock Realty Corp. v. Title Guaranty Co. stated that there is an implied duty of title insurers to conduct "a reasonably diligent search." However, the Smirlock court emphasized that its statement did not create a separate duty in negligence.[176]

---

[171] Cano v. Lovato, 105 N.M. 522, 734 P.2d 762 (N.M.App. 1986), cert.den. 104 N.M. 246, 719 P.2d 1267 (1986).

[172] The following was added to the law: "The duty to search and examine imposed by this section is solely for the purpose of enhancing the financial stability of title insurers for the benefit of insureds under title insurance policies. The New Mexico Title Insurance Law is not intended and should not be construed to create any duty to search and examine that runs to the benefit of, or to create any right or cause of action in favor of, any person other than a title insurer."

[173] Barrington Reinsurance Ltd. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 143 N.M. 31, 172 P.3d 168, 2007-NMCA-147 (N.M. 2007).

[174] Citibank, N.A. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 214 A.D.2d 212, 632 N.Y.S.2d 779 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 1995), reversing 620 N.Y.S.2d 717 (S.Ct. 1994). The court held: "Under the contract of insurance no question of negligence in searching can arise... . In the case of a title insurance policy, the insurer undertakes to indemnify the insured if the title turns out to be defective. ...The doctrine of skill or negligence has no application to a contract of title insurance." 632 N.Y.S.2d at 781. See also Sabbagh v. Pizzuro, 2004 WL 2295824 (N.Y.Sup.Ct. July 13, 2004) (unpublished). The Citibank decision and other decisions in the Northeast on the so-called search duty are well analyzed in Yorio, Negligence Ebbs as Basis for Title Insurer Liability, The National Law Journal, Monday, March 18, 1996, p. B8. In Washington Temple Church of God in Christ, Inc. v. Global Properties and Associates, Inc., 37 Misc.3d 1211(A), 2012 WL 5187556, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 51997(U) (N.Y.Sup. 2012), the court rejected a search negligence claim based on Smirlock and Conditions 15(b) of the 2006 policy, which states that "[a]ny Any claim of loss or damage that arises out of the status of the Title or by any action asserting such claim shall be restricted to this policy." In Emigrant Mortgage Co. v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 126 A.D.3d 636, 4 N.Y.S.3d 491, 2015 N.Y. Slip Op. 02684 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2015), the court reversed a judgment based on abstractor liability, because such claims were barred in New York under Citibank. However, in Sher v. Luxury Mortg. Corp., 2012 WL 5869303 (D.Md.) (unpublished), the court said that, because the insurer "has disclaimed the validity of the title insurance policy while simultaneously relying upon it to disallow the claims in negligence," it would not dismiss the negligence claim. It said that at some point "a determination as to the validity of the Title Policy will presumably require dismissal of one set of claims or the other… ."

[175] Trenton Potteries Co. v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 176 N.Y. 65, 68 N.E. 132 (1903) held that "[u]nder the contract of insurance no question of negligence in searching can arise. 176 N.Y. at 75. The court distinguished a search from a policy, in that a search "is not an instrument similar in nature to a policy of title insurance and ... the obligations of one differ from the obligations of the other. ... The doctrine of skill or negligence has no application to a contract of title insurance." Maggio v. Abstract Title & Mortgage Corp., 277 App. Div. 940, 98 N.Y.S.2d 1011, 1013 (1950). The Smirlock decision reaffirmed these earlier decisions, holding: "The contract for a title search is separate and distinct from

North Carolina

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[177]

North Dakota

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no "reasonable search" statute.

Ohio

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[178] In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. The Huntington National Bank,[179] the Fifth District court of appeals construed that statute as creating a tort cause of action. Nonetheless, the court found that the "exclusive remedy" provision of the policy precluded a tort action premised on a claimed error in the policy. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the appellate court's conclusion, but did not directly overturn the appeals court's interpretation of the statute. It said:

> With respect to HNB's tort claims for failure to discover the lien, the parties' rights and remedies are exclusively contractual in nature. HNB is limited to the contractual the contract for insurance; liability for a negligent search arises from the former. ... Where, as here, the certificate of title has merged in the subsequently issued title insurance policy, any action for damages arising out of the search--whether sounding in tort or contract---is foreclosed." 70 A.D.2d at 465-6, 421 N.Y.S.2d at 239. New York insurers do issue various forms of searches, including "guaranteed" searches or guarantees. Negligence actions are permitted as to searches and guarantees. See Goodman v. Title Guar. & Trust Co., 11 App. Div.2d 1003, 206 N.Y.S. 2d 32 (A.D. 1960) and Udell v. City Title Ins. Co., 12 App.Div.2d 78, 208 N.Y.S.2d 504 (1960). The privity rule has been relaxed as to abstracts to allow those with the "functional equivalent" of privity to sue the abstractor of title. Kidd v. Havens, 577 N.Y.S.2d 989 (A.D.4 Dept. 1991).

---

[176] 52 N.Y.S.2d at 190, 437 N.Y.S. at 62, 418 N.E.2d at 655. In Walker Rogge, the New Jersey Supreme Court said this about the statement in the Smirlock opinion: "[T]he New York Court of Appeals refused to invalidate a title policy for misrepresentation absent a showing of intentional concealment by the insured. Because no such showing had been made, the court held the company liable under its policy for failure to discover records showing the condemnation of access from the property to a public street. In reaching this result, the court wrote, "because title insurance companies combine their search and disclosure expertise with insurance protection [] an implied duty arises out of the title insurance agreement that the insurer has conducted a reasonably diligent search." Id. at 190, 437 N.Y.S. at 62, 418 N.E.2d at 655. Notwithstanding that statement, the court carefully pointed out that the basis for the imposition of liability on the company was the title policy, and the court was not reaching the question whether the company was liable in negligence. Id. 418 N.E.2d at 652." 562 A.2d 208, 219 (N.J. 1989).

[177] N.C.Gen.Stat. §58-26-1.

[178] Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §3953.07.

[179] 1998 WL 548959 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished).

remedies in the policy.[180]

That decision was followed in First Merit Bank, NA v. Guarantee Title & Trust Co.[181]

Also, a number of decisions have refused to relax the privity of contract rule employed as to abstractors of title. In Kenney v. Henry Fischer Builder, Inc.,[182] the First District Court of Appeals concluded that a buyer had no claim against a title company because he declined to purchase a policy, although the court said "we invite our supreme court to revisit this area of the law and urge the adoption of 3 Restatement of the Law 2d, Torts, Section 552, in this context ... " In Shearer v. Echelberger,[183] the Fifth District Court of Appeals cited Kenney and also held that the borrower was not a third party beneficiary of a loan policy. Three other courts have also ruled that parties not in privity may not sue for alleged search negligence.[184]

The economic loss doctrine has been found to bar tort claims on title insurance contracts. The appeals courts have rejected the argument that title insurers fall under the exception to that rule for companies that are in the business of providing information.[185] In McMullian v. Borean,[186] however, an appellate court said that a title agent "may be liable for failing to disclose an encumbrance where there is privity of contract between the title examiner" and the insured. It found such privity by the agent's issuance of the title insurance policy to the claimant.

---

[180] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. The Huntington National Bank, 719 N.E.2d 955, 87 Ohio St.3d 270 (1999).

[181] 2006 WL 1791148, 2006-Ohio-3333 (Ohio App. 9 Dist. 2006) (unpublished) (no tort liability under title insurance policy because of exclusive remedy policy term).

[182] 129 Ohio App.3d 27, 716 N.E.2d 1189 (Ohio App. 1 Dist. 1988).

[183] 2000 WL 1663626 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished).

[184] "The mere fact that the homeowner was required to pay for the title examination and title insurance commitment is insufficient to establish privity of contract between the homeowner and the title insurance company." Valentine v. Willard & Assoc. Title Search Services, 2001 WL 733414 (Ohio App. 5 Dist.) (unpublished), app. allowed, 93 Ohio St.3d 1476, 757 N.E.2d 773 (Ohio Nov. 7, 2001). See also Cedar Dev., Inc. v. Exchange Place Title Agency, Inc., 149 Ohio App.3d 588, 778 N.E.2d 136 (2002); and Campbell v. Krupp, 195 Ohio App.3d 573, 961 N.E.2d 205, 2011 -Ohio-2694 (Ohio App. 6 Dist. 2011). The Campbell court expressly refused to apply Restatement § 552 to a claim by a non-insured against an insurer under a policy.

[185] Campbell v. Krupp, 195 Ohio App.3d 573, 961 N.E.2d 205, 2011-Ohio-2694 (Ohio App. 6 Dist. 2011); Hoffman v. Fraser, 2011 WL 1782099 (Ohio App. 11 Dist.), 2011-Ohio-2200 (unpublished) (holding that the title commitment expressly stated that the agent and underwriter from liability except under a policy to be issued; plaintiff did not pay a premium or buy a policy).

[186] 167 Ohio App.3d 777, 857 N.E.2d 180, 2006-Ohio-3867 (Ohio App. 6 Dist. 2006).

Oklahoma

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[187] That statute was found by one court to mandate that the insurer examine title records in issuing a policy, but a later decision found that Oklahoma does not permit an insurer to be sued for negligence.[188]

Oregon

An insurer/escrowee may be sued for negligent misrepresentation in supplying information, such as a legal description to be used in a deed or advice as to construction lien claims.[189] The plaintiff must show a special relationship beyond the insurance contract as the basis for the duty.[190] Even if such an extra-contractual duty is found to exist, however, an insurer/escrowee is not responsible for not disclosing a matter that is unrecorded and thus not covered by the policy.[191]

---

[187] Okla.Stat.Ann. title 36 §5001(C).

[188] "The contention that no duty was imposed upon American-First to check the records in Washington County or to file First Federal's mortgage there is without merit. Under the circumstances presented here, the obviousness of it being to American-First's advantage to check the records of Washington County before undertaking to insure against defects a mortgage covering property situated in such county is patent. But necessity for an insured to prove such a duty is not seen." American-First Title & Trust Co. v. First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 415 P.2d 930 (Okla. 1965). In Riverbend Land, LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co., 2018 WL 4905353 (W.D.Okla. 2018) (unpublished), a federal court in Oklahoma dismissed a claim that a title insurer was negligent or grossly negligent in its title search, for allegedly not having found recorded evidence of a claim by the state highway department limiting access onto the adjoining state highway. Riverbend argued that First American had failed to locate an access restriction in its title examination, and that it had justifiably relied "on First American's statutorily-required title examination and disclosure." Riverbend premised its claim on Okla.Stat. tit. 36 § 5001(C)(1), and also relied on Choate v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 385 P.3d 670, 683 (Okla.Civ.App. 2016), for its statement that an insurer has a statutory duty to get an attorney's title opinion, and American Title Ins. Co. v. M-H Enterprises, 815 P.2d 1219 (Okla.Civ.App. 1991), for the assertion that a title insurer can be liable for failing to except a title encumbrance. However, the court held that American Title is not binding precedent "and is distinguishable on the facts." First American asserted that the reasonable search statute does not create a private cause of action, an argument the court did not squarely address. The court concluded that a title insurer may not be sued for negligence. It observed that "Oklahoma law does not provide for a negligence claim against an insurer by its insured," quoting from Tolman v. Reassure America Life Ins. Co., 391 P.3d 120, 123 (Okla. Civ. App. 2017). Tolman, in turn, relied on Murchison v. Progressive Northern Ins. Co., 572 F.Supp.2d 1281 (E.D.Okla. 2008) and Burton v. Progressive Northern Ins. Co., 2010 WL 4167392, which stated that an insurer may not be sued for negligence in Oklahoma, because an insurance policy is a contract.

[189] Lindstrand v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 127 Or.App. 693, 874 P.2d 82 (1994); Ivy v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 90 Or. App. 511, 752 P.2d 1269 (1988), rev.den., 306 Or. 195, 759 P.2d 276 (1988); McDonald v. Title Ins. Co., 49 Or.App. 1055, 621 P.2d 654 (1980).

[190] Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 132 Or.App. 271, 888 P.2d 83 (Or.App. 1995).

[191] Warrington v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 40 Or.App. 841, 596 P.2d 627 (1979) (plaintiff had no right to sue of reliance on title commitment that said it became null and void unless policy was issued and premium was paid); Womer v. Melody Woods Homes Corp., 165 Or.App. 554, 997 P.2d 873 (Or.App. 2000) (no liability on title commitment, relying on Warrington); Gebrayel v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 132 Or.App. 271, 888 P.2d 83 (Or.App. 1995).

Pennsylvania

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search before the issuance of a title insurance policy.[192] There is a separate cause of action available for abstractor negligence on a policy defect.[193] A title insurer is not liable in tort for failure to disclose a defect in a title commitment, but an older case found that a "settlement certificate" issued in lieu of a commitment supported a cause of action for negligence.[194]

Puerto Rico

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no "reasonable search" statute.

Rhode Island

The insurer has abstractor liability in issuing a title insurance commitment, but no such cause of action exists when no commitment to insure has been requested or issued.[195]

South Carolina

The author finds no reported decision regarding a claimed duty to search, and no "reasonable search" statute.

---

[192] Pa.Stat.Ann. title 40, §910-7.

[193] Royston v. Berks Title Ins. Co., 85 Montg. Co. Law Rep. 56 (Pa. Comm. Pleas 1964); Baker v. Cambridge Chase, Inc., 725 A.2d 757 (Pa.Super. 1999) (insurer negligent as a matter of law in not disclosing to a purchaser the prior deed in lieu of foreclosure given by seller, when insurer closed both transactions).

[194] Henkels v. Philadelphia Title Ins. Co., 177 Pa.Super. 110, 110 A.2d 878, 879-80 (1955) (settlement certificate is not title insurance and may support a claim for title search error).

[195] In Focus Investment Associates, Inc. v. American Title Ins. Co., 992 F.2d 1231 (1st Cir. 1993), the loan was closed without any commitment to insure being issued. The lender received policies covering all real estate secured by its mortgages after closing. The court held that the lack of a commitment precluded an abstractor negligence claim. It reviewed the cases adopting abstractor negligence, and concluded: "In each of those cases, however, the title insurance company either had expressly agreed to provide a title report or had issued to the insured a preliminary title report which failed to disclose a title defect which was then excluded from coverage under the policy. 'In such situations, two distinct responsibilities are assumed [by the insurer]; in rendering the first service, the insurer serves as an abstractor of title and must list all matters of public record regarding the subject property in its preliminary report. When a title insurer breaches its duty to abstract title accurately it may be held liable in tort for all damages proximately caused by such breach.' "Ford, 553 P.2d at 266. (citations omitted) In the absence of an express contract or preliminary title report, however, courts have uniformly declined to hold a title insurance company liable for a negligent title search. Plaintiff's theories seek to convert the relationship of the parties to a guarantee relationship whereby the Title Company would assure that the insured would suffer no loss in the transaction. It is not only the overwhelming majority view but the eminently sensible position that title policies do not guarantee clear title. These policies only protect against loss if there is later found to be a title defect. It is the lender in this real estate mortgage transaction who undertook the responsibility of searching title. The lender in this instance did not pay for and did not receive an opinion of title. Under the circumstances, there is no rational basis for an award of damages to plaintiff for the lack of a title search. As a matter of law American Title owed no duty to Focus to conduct a title search before issuing it a title insurance policy." 992 F.2d at 1236.

South Dakota

Abstractor negligence was tacitly accepted as a valid theory of recovery against a title insurer under a title insurance policy or commitment, in Muhlenkort v. Union County Land Trust.[196] However, that decision denied recovery to a creditor of the seller who was attempting to enforce a lien. The creditor was unable to prove that she had relied on the title commitment, or that she was a party whom the insurer should reasonably have expected to rely on the commitment.

Tennessee

There is a statutory duty to perform a "reasonable" search.[197] In Whaley v. First American Title Co. of the Mid-West,[198] the court was invited to decide if a tort cause of action is valid, but elected not to decide the issue, ruling instead that the lawsuit was untimely in any event under Tennessee's three-year statute of limitation for actions involving injury to property.[199]

[196] 530 N.W.2d 658 (S.D. 1995).

[197] Tenn. Code Ann. § 56-35-129.

[198] 2004 WL 316978 (Tenn.App. 2004) (unpublished).

[199] Tenn. Code Ann. § 28-3-105 (2003).

Texas

A title insurer is not an abstractor of title, and has no duty to examine title.[200] The commitment is not an abstract; the policy is not a representation of the status of title.[201]

Texas courts have recognized that title insurance is "extensively regulated" by the insurance commissioner.[202] Because the title insurer's duties are so structured, the lack of a statutory obligation on a subject at least suggests that the legislature did not create a duty. For example, despite pervasive regulation of the title industry, "[t]here is no statutory requirement that the title insurance agent file the deed transferring title."[203] This fact buttressed the court's decision that no cause of action exists [200] Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. McDaniel, 875 S.W.2d 310 (Tex. 1994) held that "issuance of a policy did not constitute a representation regarding the status of the property's title; rather, it constituted an agreement to indemnify [the insured] against losses caused by any defects." An earlier appeals court decision, Martinka v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 836 S.W.2d 773 (Tex.App. 1992), had stated: "A title insurance company is not a title abstractor and owes no duty to examine title. … Further, the only duty a title insurance company has to its insured is to indemnify him against loss suffered by defects in title; the title insurance company owes no duty to point out any outstanding encumbrances. … In other words, the title insurance company is not employed to examine title, rather it is employed only to guarantee the status of title and to insure against existing defects." Also before McDaniel, Tamburine v. Center Savings Ass'n, 583 S.W.2d 942 (Tex.App. 1979) had stated that a title insurer, "before issuing a policy of title insurance, must necessarily take steps to inform itself of the status of the title to be insured. In the search for the information upon which must depend the decision to either issue or decline to commit itself to issue a policy, the insurance company obviously investigates the title for its own use and benefit to determine whether it will undertake the risk. The title information on which the company bases its decision relates to the condition of the title held by the grantor and is not made for the prospective grantee or lienholder to whom the policy will finally issue." McDaniel was also presaged by Houston Title Co. v. Ojeda de Toca, 733 S.W.2d 325, 327 (Tex.Civ.App. 1987), rev'd on other grounds, 748 S.W.2d 449 (1988). McDaniel was followed in First American Title Ins. Co. of Texas v. Willard, 949 S.W.2d 342 (Tex.App.-Tyler 1997); Williams v. Land Title Co. of Dallas, 1997 WL 196345 (Tex.App.-Dallas) (unpublished); Solano v. LandAmerica Commonwealth Title of Fort Worth, Inc., 2008 WL 5115294, at *8 (Tex.App.-Fort Worth 2008); and Palmer v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 2013 WL 3049343 (S.D.Tex.) (unpublished).

---

